

Prologue

Aerith returned to the lab with a sense of anticipation, her mind brimming with curiosity and excitement. The lab was her sanctuary, a place where she could delve into the mysteries of the Lifestream and uncover its secrets. She had spent countless hours studying its ethereal energies and honing her unique abilities as a Cetra.

As she entered the lab, the air crackled with an almost palpable energy. It felt different today, as if the very essence of the Lifestream was reaching out to her, beckoning her to uncover something extraordinary. Aerith couldn't help but smile; she had learned to trust her instincts, and they rarely led her astray.

Making her way to her workbench, Aerith began poring over her notes and diagrams, searching for any clues or patterns that might explain the current surge of energy. Suddenly, her eyes widened as she stumbled upon a passage she had previously overlooked. It spoke of an ancient spell, long forgotten and hidden within the depths of the Lifestream itself.

Eagerly, Aerith delved deeper into her research, following the breadcrumbs left by the Cetra who had come before her. The spell was unlike anything Aerith had ever encountered before, and her heart raced with anticipation at the thought of harnessing such power.

Days turned into nights as Aerith immersed herself in her studies, tirelessly deciphering the ancient text and experimenting with the Lifestream's energies. She combined her knowledge of materia and her innate Cetra abilities, seeking to unlock the secrets of this newfound spell.

Finally, after weeks of dedicated effort, Aerith felt a breakthrough. The lab was filled with a brilliant radiant light as she successfully cast the spell for the first time and an identical copy of her appeared in her front.

Overjoyed, Aerith knew that she had discovered something truly remarkable. This spell had the potential to change the course of battles, to save lives, and... perhaps she could also be a perfect companion in every way.

