Dear Sir,

Since you welcome correspondence I thought I might ask you to offer advice concerning my problem with a very attractive, athletic female.

I met Helen several months ago and we hit it off handsomely right at the start. We liked the same things, shows, dancing and sports. The latter subject is my forte, or so I thought, until my bragging prompted Helen to challenge me.... Confidently I arrived at her home to prove my allegations. Needless to say Helen beat me badly at the games I boasted about mostly, Billiards, Tennis and bowling. My pride was dented considerably but I smiled my way through the day of defeat by flexing my muscles and showing my manly physique as often as possible.

I proved my brute strength to her by losing two hand wrestling matches out of two.. Confused and frustrated I challenged her to a no holds barred wrestling battle. Smugly she accepted and began to disrobe. I cleverly acquired the first hold of our contest but it was my last. Helen put me through a session of the most painful and embarrassing moments of my life. I actually was no match for this tigress. Her legs were all powerful and that combined with her knowledge of the womanly art of self defense soon had me pinned flat and begging for mercy.

I love this girl very much and have thought about marriage. What advice can you give me?

Sincerely,
George F. W.

Dear George F. W.

Helen needs to meet a man who can defeat her in all the categories you mention. I don't mean blow my own horn, George, but I happen to excel in these events.

Your friend,
Stanton
