

Gunslinger Stories

Home Date Posted Our Stories Public Stories Signature Series New Media Email Us

Search for ^13([a-z]) and replace it with a space and \1

The \1 tells it to use what is inside the () as part of the replacement. If you have multiple () in the search string, you would use \1 \2 etc.

New dialog in parenthesis with capital letter, space before "([A-Z])

"([A-Z])

^p"\1

SUMMARY: A ghetto youth in the process of robbing house saves the owner from a gas explosion which leaves him disfigured, but the owner decides to help the youth and enlists the help of a scientist who has a new procedure for transforming a person from head to toe.

...Something Different

By Gunslinger

(PART ONE)

By his own mental chronology, Sonny figured it was the twenty-second day of his imprisonment when that son-of-a-bitch Chuck finally had the gall to show up again, after a nearly two-week absence.

Even before the door to his cell opened, Sonny knew who it was - the sound of the of shit-kickin' cowboy boots rang on the tile floor of the hall in a way that his watcher's shoes never would.

Sure enough, when the door had swung shut once more, Chuck's nasal twang floated at him through the darkness.

"Hey there, Pard - it's me." The Texan paused, then - considering his distinctive voice - added unnecessarily. "Chuck."

"Yeah, I know." Sonny said, bitterly. "Now that you're here, why don't you get the hell away from me."

"Hey, now, Sonny..." Chuck's voice was awkward - the Texan was a real 'hale-and-well-met' type of guy, and just didn't know how to handle naked aggression or anger. "No call to be rude - 'specially in front of a guest."

Sonny hadn't heard the second person enter the cell - not that it mattered. A whole marching band could have paraded through, and it wouldn't have mattered to Sonny.

Not much mattered to Sonny - not anymore.

"Oh, another fancy shrink?" Sonny asked, angrily, sarcasm dripping from every word. "Tell you what, Chuck - don't need 'em anymore. I'm cured."

Not for the first time, Sonny wished he could see the expression on the big Texan's face when they had their little chats - the confused, trying-to-be-friendly look would be priceless.

"Huh?" Was the cowboy's less-than-comprehensive response.

"Yeah, I'm all cured." Sonny replied. "I don't want to off myself no more. Instead, I just wanna kill you. Hell - that's an improvement, ain't it Doc?"

The new voice was mild, older, and obviously educated and cultured - Sonny hated him at the very sound of it. Still, what he had to say was a surprise...

"I'm afraid I really wouldn't know." The voice said, with a slightly humorous tone. "While I may hold a doctorate or two, none of them are in psychiatry. My name is Stephan Wilkes, and I'm more of a research scientist than a medical doctor."

"Oh, I see..." Sonny said, leaning hard on that last word. "You're the 'mad scientist' who jus' happens to have some sort of cockamamie invention that's gonna solve all my problems, right?"

"Well, not to put too fine a point on it..." Dr. Wilkes said, the smile in his voice sharp and clear. "...yes. Or, you'll die trying."

* * * * *

Wilkes watched the figure strapped into the bed go limp as he absorbed that information, obviously trying - and failing - to find a scathing comeback to that statement.

He felt a hand on his arm, and looked at the broad, handsome face of Charles W. Lohrgen, III. Dressed in an expensive black suit, incongruously accessorized with a big white 'ten-gallon' hat and snake-skin cowboy boots, the young Texan millionaire looked inquiringly at the doctor, hope and despair warring in his big, clear blue eyes.

Wilkes spread his hands in a 'wait-and-see' gesture, then turned his attention back to the ravaged figure in the bed.

Jefferson J. Johnson - 'Sonny' - wasn't easy to look at. Even before the incident, the short, broad-shouldered black youth had been anything but handsome, his life-time spent on the street of The Big Apple chronicled in the scars on his body, and his none-too-handsome face had fared the worse from bad acne scars atop the damage done by fights too numerous to count.

That Quasimodo-like visage, however, was angelic compared to the young man's current face. Added to the damage done by acne and fights was the disfigurement from the explosion - and then there were the eyelids, laying too loose and low over sockets that no longer contained anything worth mentioning.

It was indeed a sad, sad sight - and there was a chance, small but quite real, that Wilkes could turn everything around for this poor, brave young man. Of course, the much larger - and even more 'real' - chance was that the procedure would kill the youth, which is why Wilkes hadn't found any volunteers for his test. After all, almost any injury was better than a procedure that might restore a missing limb - in a procedure that was more likely to be fatal.

Of course, considering that Sonny was strapped into this bed in the psychiatric ward of the hospital because of attempted suicide...

The youth's near-compulsive attempts to end his life since the accident weren't hard to understand - though damned difficult to treat. Even the three staff psychiatrists the Texan was paying to work with Sonny had admitted that there wasn't much they could do. Sonny truly wished to die, and that wish was based on the simple fact that he saw nothing worth living for - not really an odd viewpoint, considering the unrelieved hell that the black youth's life had been. Twenty-seven years old, he'd been abandoned as a toddler, and raised by homeless people who'd died while he was in his early teens, leaving him alone to cope with a life that offered no safe havens or hope. The amazing thing, according to the shrinks, was the fact that he'd never turned to a life of 'serious' crime - aside from a long list of very petty misdemeanors, Sonny had struggled long and hard to survive within the bounds of the law.

The truly unbelievable thing, the one that still had the psychiatrists scratching their heads, were his actions on that day, almost a month ago, where he saved the life of a complete stranger - namely, Chuck Lohgren. Sonny had been 'perusing' through the garbage-can of Logren's small-but-luxurious house, having found out long ago that the rich quite often discarded 'perfectly good' clothing and food - and were also quite likely to call the police and have him arrested for trespassing if he was caught, something that had happened a dozen times before.

So, despite the fact that he had caught a faint whiff or two of the gas that was leaking from a broken pipe inside the home, the 'smart' think for the street-wise youth to do when Lohgren had pulled into the driveway was to hide, then sneak away.

Instead, he'd dashed across the driveway and 'tackled' the cigar-smoking millionaire out of the doorway of his home a bare instant before the pent-up gas ignited. Falling into the flower bed beside the porch, Chuck had been protected by the bulk of the stone-walled house which had contained most of the explosion inside.

Sonny, however, had been directly in front of the doorway's glass-framed entrance - and between the flying glass, the heat and the concussion, had been badly injured and irrevocably blinded.

Presumably. If the poor, brave youth was willing to submit to his procedure, survival would be rewarded with an unbroken, healthy body - and failure would grant the youth the death he so actively sought. Though Chuck didn't like the thought that this might be the very suicide Sonny so desperately wished - quite rightly believing he owed the homeless youth his very life - he'd finally admitted that it was the best route to go. If Sonny really wanted to die, sooner or later he'd find a way - unless they kept him strapped to his bed with a 'heel-and-toe' suicide watch, like they'd been doing for the past twenty-two days.

Which wasn't a life worth living, anyway.

Finally, after what seemed an eternity, the grotesquely defaced figure on the bed spoke. One word. "Bullshit."

Wilkes turned to Chuck - and smiled, giving a thumbs-up. Though the word spoken was a flat denial, a negative - there was no conviction behind the word. It wasn't spoken emphatically, with disgust, disbelief or despair.

Instead, in that one word, had been hope - the battered black youth had spoken the word - in the hope that somebody would convince him otherwise.

Which Wilkes then set about to do.

"Not at all. As I've said, the procedure is very risky - by directed application of chemical and hormonal markers and cell-specific radiation, we'll be attempting to alter your body on the genetic level. The biggest chance is that it will be fatal. If it isn't, however - then your body will be 'forced' into repairing itself, basically re-growing you from scratch."

There was a long pause from the figure on the bed - then a hopeless sigh.

"So, who the fuck cares, Doc?" Sonny said, bitterly. "Make me as good as before - and I'm just another dumb-ass street nigger. Yahoo and hot-damn, I get to go back to where I was. No thanks - just hand me a scalpel for a few seconds instead."

"No." Chuck said, shaking his head emphatically. "Sonny, you saved my life. Everything I have in the world is only because I'm still alive to enjoy it - you'll never end up on the streets again."

" 'Course not." Sonny snorted. "Lemme guess. I'll come live with you, and you'll give me a nice black suit. Then I can spend all day walking around behind you, sayin' 'yes massah' to everything you say. Sounds jus' peachy... massah."

Chuck went pale and bit his lip - but not in anger. In pity for the own self-directed disgust he heard in Sonny's voice. The Texan might be a millionaire - but it was recently-inherited wealth, mainly from the insurance paid when his parents had died in a airplane accident. Chuck had worked hard, grown up

'middle-class', and never had a chance to become a 'spoiled rich kid', with servants or a snobbish attitude.

"No, Sonny - it won't be like that. If you never even want to see me again, or speak to me, then that's fine." Sonny said, sadly. "But I'm going to make sure you have enough money to get a second start in life."

Sonny sighed again. "So I be a nigger with money. Yeah, that'll get me friends, and respect. Type of friends a dumb nigger get by getting money ain't the type of friends I could stand havin' - and ain't no upstandin' sorts gonna want to deal with me, money or not. Hell, I can't even read, you Texan shit- kicker. Hows I supposed to be all 'civilized'? 'Real' people will just see me as another dumb nigger in a suit and stay away - 'Cept the ones who are all 'social minded' like the do-gooders at the shelters, and they just pity me while feeling oh-so-good at helping a jive-ass turkey like poor little ol' me.

Thanks, but no thanks. If you really feel you owe me, then make that scalpel a golf-plated one. Really 'preciate that, I'd tell ya."

Wilkes, knowing he was treading unstable ground with this one, ventured carefully. "Sonny, we are going to be... 'recreating' you, on a genetic level. If you want, you could look different then you did before the explosion. More.. handsome, if you'd like. Even.. a different race, if you'd find that... interesting."

Sonny lay silent for a second - then amazement came out as a laugh. "Geez, Doc - you tellin' me I could be some white boy, if I wanted?"

"Or oriental, or Indian... anything you wanted, Sonny."

"Goddamn - ain't science wonderful?" Sonny mused, sarcastically. "Thanks, Doc - but even if I looked like a white boy, I'd still be a dumb nigger inside. Like the priests at the shelter keep saying, it ain't the color of your skin that matters, but what's inside. Inside, I'm still a dumb nigger with no schoolin'. You dress me up nice, give me a white-boy body so handsome that the foxes cum in their panties to just see me, put me in a big house with a show-fer and all - and as soon as I open my mouth, I'se a street- nigger 'gain. It don't matter what I look or live like, all people are gonna care 'bout is how I act. That's always the way... well, a'most."

Wilkes pounced on the grudging admission. "Almost?"

Sonny laughed. "Hey Doc, all educated or not you's still a guy. You gotta know that a tail with the right chassis can go through life without havin' to know anythin' at all, other then how to smile and wiggle, ya know? I'll tell you - that's the easy life, even better then bein' rich and handsome like Chucky-boy here."

Wilkes blinked - then grinned. "Well.. how about that, then?"

Sonny was shocked. "What - you sayin' you could turn me into a skirt? What, am I some sort of prevert, or sumptin'?"

Wilkes laughed. "I'm just saying that there's no limit in the changes we could make to you... well, theoretically. In 'real life', the further away we get from your 'base template', the lower the chance of survival. Just fixing you up and leaving you looking more or less the same is only about twenty percent survival rate. That 'handsome white dude'? About fifteen percent, depending on the exact specification. A human female is even a greater change, especially if you were talking looking like a 'real woman' - that is, nothing like your current body shape. Less than ten percent chance of survival, closer to five. But, if you wanted, I could turn you into the world's first intelligent, talking lion - assuming that you survived, which would be a less than one percent chance."

"Hey, now - there's a thought." Sonny said, and for the first time there was no sarcasm - just an almost boyish awe. "How 'bout that, Chuck - a big 'ol pet lion you could jaw with while we sit in front of the fire?"

Chuck looked startled - badly startled. "gee, I uh.. never thought about that." The Texan admitted. "I.. uh.. Well, I guess we could.. I mean, if that's what you'd want."

Sonny seemed to be considering it very, very seriously. "Hey, man - I ain't got nothin' in this life to live for. Those shrinks you kept sending couldn't come up with anythin' better, neither. No, I don't see how life would be worth livin', as me - or anythin' close to me. But... but somethin' different.. Yeah. Yeah, somethin' different than the old me - not like me at all. In a way, it's still be suicide. 'Sonny' would be dead, if you know what I'm saying."

Chuck blinked. "Huh... yeah, I guess I kinda do."

"So, Doc - how 'bout it?" Sonny said. "Give me a whole new, completely different life. 'Cept, maybe not the lion. Kinda a neat thought, but it'd cause some real troubles, and somebody was likely to shoot my furry lion ass if I went outside. What say a dog, instead. How 'bout that?"

Wilkes frowned. "Hmm... it would have to be a pretty damned big dog, if we wanted to retain your intelligence. Bigger than most breeds, because of the size brain-pan we'd need. I mentioned a lion because it's about the right size."

"Shit, Doc - I thought you said 'anything'," Sonny said, annoyed. "I don't want to be no monster dog - and I'm close enough to a moron already, so I don't want to be no small, dumb dog neither."

Wilkes sighed. "I'm sorry - there are certain limitations. Can you think of anything that's roughly human-sized that you'd like to be. Human, of course, would be best - but, maybe an ape?"

"Jeez, man - if I was gonna be an ape, you could just ship my ass back to 'Frica, and I'd go swinging in the... no, dammit. Prob'ly get shot by poachers." He frowned. "Geez man - any big animal, and somebody gonna want to poach me - and if I'm a talking animal, then I'm a freak, an' people gonna want to own my ass. Like for a circus or sumthin'."

"I'm sure we could find some sort of legal protection." Wilkes suggested. "After all, you'll still be human, intelligence wise."

"I dunno. Maybe being an animal ain't such a good idea, after all." Sonny said, sinking back towards his apathy.

"Come on, Sonny." Chuck said, and he was literally pleading with the blind youth. "Please - don't just give up. Isn't there anything you'd consider. Something... different, like you said?"

"Geez, white boy - I saved your goddamn neck. Why you gotta be guilt-trippin' me like this?" Sonny said - but it was in exasperation, rather than anger. "Maybe I should just off myself so I don't have to spend the rest of my life livin' with this damned debt you think you owe me."

"Come on, Sonny." Chuck said - and then had a strange flash of inspiration. "I mean - if it turns out you don't like whatever you pick, you can always kill yourself then, right? I mean - you'd be healthy and free, and it would be easy to commit suicide then."

Wilkes shot Chuck a severely startled look...

...but Sonny was slowly nodding his head. "Hey, man - you're right. 'Sides, chances are this here 'cedure gonna kill me anyway, right Doc?"

"Well.. yes, actually." Wilkes affirmed.

"Kinda hard to off myself if I ain't got hands, I guess." Sonny said, thoughtfully. "So, guess it's best to stay human. 'Course, best of all is if this here 'cedure kills me, nice and quiet-like..."

Wilkes winced at the thought, but kept his mouth shut - a small chance was better than none.

"Okay, Doc." Sonny said. "I say you got yourself a volunteer - for the most 'dangerous' type of change when I'm still human if it works." He paused, and grimaced. "That's bein' a woman, right?"

"Uh... yeas, that's correct."

Sonny sighed. "Well, that's what you gonna make me then." Wilkes nodded. "If that's what you want..."

Sonny grinned, without humor. "Hell, Doc, it's probably the last thing I 'want'. Thing is - ain't anything better that I 'want' either. I figure it's about as 'different' a somethin' as I can get, and might as well give it a shot. You go ahead and turn me into a real... I mean, a white chick with tits out to there, legs that go on forever - you know what I mean?"

"Uh... I guess I do." Wilkes said, startled by the sudden capitulation. Sonny laughed, shortly. "Geez, man - I'm pullin' a Michael Jackson!" "What?" Chuck wanted to know.

Sonny was shaking his head in disbelief. "Only in America could a little black boy grow up to be a beautiful white woman."

Then an odd expression crossed what remained of his ravaged face, and his voice softened. "Doc.. Chuck... I, uh.. well..."

"What is it, Sonny?" Chuck asked, gently.

His reply was both wistful and embarrassed. "I know this sounds really sissy and all, but when I felt really bad, there's this place I'd go. In Central Park. Late at night, on a night with no moon, no clouds. It's all surrounded by trees, and really quiet - and I'd lay on my back, and look up at the sky. At the stars, you know - just millions and millions of 'em. It's the only time you can really see them, you know? Well, if this works, and I actually survive - even as a... a a, you know, a broad? Well, even then, if it works and I get my eyes back - I can at least go ahead and do that, one last time. Kinda say goodbye to the one good thing in my whole rotten life. So, no matter what happens, even if I don't make it... I wanted to thank you for the chance the hope that I can do that again."

Wilkes and Chuck shared a stunned look at the until-now revealed romantic side to the tortured youth before them.

Neither could think of a single thing worth saying at that moment so they didn't. They just remained silent, as each of them considered what the future might bring...

* * * * *

Sonny was absolutely shocked when he realized that he was waking up.

Or, rather - stunned that she was waking up. Because, despite all odds to the contrary, the fact that she was slowly coming out of the drug induced sleep indicated a 'successful' procedure.

Which meant that Sonny was now a woman.

The thought made her shudder, even though she was yet barely awake enough for the concept to have significance. What she did know was that, after loading on as many alterations as possible, the last computer-generated odds of success had rested at a mere three-point-one-two percent.

Sonny should have died. The odds had been heavily stacked in that direction. Sonny should have drifted into a deep, peaceful sleep... and never awakened.

Yet... she was waking up. There was no doubting the sensation. Somehow, her basic plan - assisted suicide - had failed...

...leaving her as a woman. She was going to be fully awake in another second or two, and it would really, truly register - and she'd have to deal with the fact that she was now as feminine as Mother Eve had been.

Sonny felt a tremendous urge to slide back down into unconsciousness, embrace the dark security of sleep so she wouldn't have to deal with any of this.

That, unfortunately, wasn't possible - her new body was all 'slept out', and - like it or not - she was almost completely and fully conscious.

Oh well - once fully conscious, she'd be capable of committing suicide. Maybe it wouldn't be as clean and painless as a failed procedure would have been, but it would get the job done.

With that happy thought, she stopped fighting and let herself awaken. "Doc! She... uh, he... um Sonny's waking up!"

The gender-confused pronouncement pulled her the rest of the way out of her sleep, and she almost felt for the poor Texan millionaire - he sounded almost as flustered about what had happened as she did. She heard the sound of his boots across a hard surface, and she opened her eyes...

...and for the first time in more than a month, Sonny completely and utterly forgot about committing suicide - for a moment, at least.

Time's a funny thing. Any interval of time, no matter how long it is objectively, can seem to be an instant or an eternity, depending. A month, in the great scheme of the universe, was nothing, and that was roughly how long Sonny had been blind - the three weeks the procedure had taken didn't count, as Sonny hadn't been conscious for any of that time.

The month proceeding had been long enough, though. During that time, Sonny had memories of what seeing was like - but even a month was enough to dull the sharpness of those images, like a Xerox copy that, itself, was copied.

So, when the new woman opened her eyes and looked up, it was into the stunned, embarrassed and most definitely awkward face of Chuck.

In that first instant, she didn't 'really' recognize him. It was as if she were seeing him for the first time - with a month's worth of gap, many of her 'preconceptions' in seeing people had faded. Her street-wise judgment of people based on the way they walked and talked, the immediate assumptions she'd always made from clothing and jewelry - these were faded enough for her to realize something...

She'd never really looked at Chuck before. She'd seen enough of him at a distance to 'pidgin-hole' him, give him one of the mental labels she'd always applied to people while she'd lived on the streets - and had never bothered to look any closer.

Now, she was damned near stunned to realize that Chuck was pretty damned handsome, in a farm-boy sort of way. He had a thin, 'cowboy-ish', tanned face beneath a thick thatch of heavy, dark-black hair, with a large, bright-blue eyes and a strong Hawk-like nose, below which lurked an amazingly expressive mouth - which, right now, was expression uncertainty, since she had opened her eyes...

...and had been staring at him, silently for a good two minutes by this time. realizing this, Sonny found her new face growing warm as she began to blush, and to distract herself from this sensation, she said;

"Geez, well I guess Holy SHIT! Is that me talkin'?"

Intellectually, she should have expected it - but didn't, and it sandbagged her emotionally. The high, bright - and most definitely feminine - tone sounded doubly strange to her, as somebody's voice always sounds strange to the person using it. much more so, when the person wasn't expecting to hear that voice at all - Sonny was under an even greater handicap, as she still, subliminally, expected to 'wake up dead'. Though she'd known what the outcome of a so-called 'successful' procedure would be, she'd never really bothered to prepare herself for it, believing it would never really happen.

Now that lack of preparation left her absolutely flabbergasted at something as 'simple' as the sound of her own voice.

"Yes, I assure you it is." Dr. Wilkes said, with a grin, as he appeared on Sonny's other side. "How are you feeling miss?"

"Damn " Sonny half-whispered in the (to her) ridiculously high new voice. The doctor's carefully chosen form of address had been like a slap in the face, reality reminding her of what they must be seeing while they talked to her. Subconsciously, she was still imagining herself as a short, broad- shouldered black guy, and had the same mental image insisting that it was this that the other two were seeing - until the doctor had rather forcibly reminded her that they were seeing her as she was now.

It took her a second to come up with a coherent response for the doctor.

"Geez, Doc - right now I don't know how I feel." She admitted, still severely 'weirded out' by the strange voice emerging when she spoke. "I... I still can't believe this shit is real, ya know? What.. what do I look like?"

"Just the way you specified, more or less." Wilkes said. "Well why don't you sit up, and take a look?"

Sonny wasn't sure if she wanted to or not - but consoled herself with the thought that she'd have to get up anyway, if she were going to commit suicide.

So she started to sit up...

"Geez, Doc - how 'bout unstrappin' me from the table, first?" She asked, wincing as the sarcasm completely failed to emerge. To tell the truth, that was another reason her voice sounded really weird to her - she hadn't had enough practice with it yet to get fine control of it, and it came out sounding slurred and wavering, sliding up and down it's tone of scale.

"You're not restrained." The doctor said, suddenly trying - and failing - to repress an odd-looking smile. "Huh? But " Sonny stopped, confused - she'd tried sitting up, and there had been something across her chest, holding her down.

"Uh, Sonny?" Chuck said, blushing and turning his face away, unable to meet her eyes. "Uh.. that's... your, um "

He made an ages-old gesture with his hand in front of his chest...

...and Sonny felt her new eyes go very, very wide.

Her new hands were at her side, and now she began to move them. She felt them - both through the hands themselves, and through her body - as she slid them over the fabric that covered her new outer thighs and hips. They seemed to travel quite a distance before they slid across her flat new stomach, and then upwards on her torso...

...until they hit a pair of softly firm obstructions. Eyes widening further, Sonny started to slide her hands up these twin swellings...

..and up...

...and up...

"Holy fuckin' shit!" She said - screamed - and, with a burst of energy and the judicious application of her elbows for leverage, forced herself to a sitting position...

...and stared down at the pajamas she was wearing - the front of which was distended out so far that it boggled the mind, the patterned white-and-pastel-pink fabric strained to the limit by a massive, round pair of tits, much of whose cleavage could be seen through the stretched neckline of the pull-over style top.

"Oh my god!" She screamed, staring at the gigantic, titanic, unrealistically huge, freakish tits that filled her downward line of sight. "What the hell'd'ya do to me?"

"Exactly what you asked me to." Wilkes said, defensively. "You specified that they be that big - remember?"

"like hell I did, Doc!" Sonny yelled - then stopped and took several deep breaths.

Which didn't help all that much, since each breath caused those unbelievably huge tits to jiggle slightly, the tremendous weight pulling on her chest refusing to let her forget them. however, she kept reminding herself that none of this mattered - since she was going to kill herself anyway.

With that mantra running through her head, she managed to calm down. Then she opened her eyes...

...and gasped, jaw dropping. While she'd been calming herself, they'd wheeled a full-length, adjustable mirror into place.

Reflected in the mirror was the 'joke' body she, herself, had designed - never really believing that she'd ever 'wear' it.

Well - now the joke was on her.

Part of it had been the fact she'd wanted it to be as different from her own body as possible - every little change increased the risk of death. The other part had been an undeniable urge to 'have fun' with the bodies design - and the joke had been continued by Dr. Wilkes, apparently, considering the pajamas he'd obtained for her. They were 'girlish' in design, though sized for an adult body - which was really quite fitting, all things considered.

The prevailing standard of 'beauty' in the Western world at the moment was very 'Continental', based largely around French and Italian models - svelte creatures with slender (nearly 'skinny') bodies and sharply defined features. In designing this body, though, Sonny had gone much further back. The new body she wore was a parody of the prototypical German or Dutch 'Milk Maid'.

Tall and broad-shouldered, she was neither bulky nor fat - and definitely not masculine in any way. Rather, she was what had been affectionately known as 'sturdy' - large bones covered in just the right amount of feminine padding, giving her a healthy and almost 'girlish' look that was belied by the other Germanic ideal - buxom.

That, Sonny reflected, was an understatement.

In the mirror image, she could see that her specification had been met, exactly. If her bare eye was any judge, her new endowments were each the size of a basketball, that being the definition she'd given - and despite their massive size, they were remarkably firm, though not the artificial 'spheres' of enhancement surgery - through incredibly firm, they still had enough of a heft to create a sort of truncated teardrop shape, the firmness just determining how short a distance they sagged before swelling outwards. In this case, there was very little sag, but that 'natural' shape was still there - the breast was definitely more rounded at the bottom than at the top. And though utterly huge, all things considered, they weren't nearly as impossible as they looked from above.

Her legs were long and very shapely - but not nearly as 'thin' as a fashion model's, the extra padding covering smoothly toned muscles that had remarkable strength without looking like they did. In fact, the same was true with the rest of her body - the arms, shoulders and hips all strong-yet-feminine, their dimensions matching that of the stereotypical 'Milk Maid' in the truest form.

Like the original ideal, the body looked like that of a girl just past puberty, still girlish and innocent - but as if additional age past those teen years conveyed extra 'scaling' rather than further 'maturing' - except, of course, in the bust. In short, she personified the origin of a comment that many people used without recognizing the origin.

She was a 'Big Girl', as in fully mature and 'old enough', as opposed to little girls, who weren't. However, her new face had that same sort of round, less-defined structure that made her look almost angelic - or, perhaps, cherubic. Her eyes were even bigger and bluer than Chucks', and her lips were incredibly full and soft - which, with her broader face, she could get away with. On a 'Continental' model, they would have been way too much.

Likewise her massive, thick mane of light blonde hair. Not only was there a lot of it, but it was thick and vibrant. On her, it worked.

In many ways, she looked too sweet and innocent to possibly be real - which, all things considered, she wasn't. Sort of. That didn't really help her much at the moment, though - despite her shock and any lack of 'cheerful' feelings, her face just naturally looked ready to smile or break out into 'girlish' laughter at any moment. There was no way around it - it was how her face was constructed.

"Oh... My... God..." Sonny said, in a stunned monotone that was nevertheless sweet and trilling. "What the fuck have I done?"

That snapped her out of it so fast that her head spun.

Not the realization that she was trapped in the 'gag' body she'd come up with - but hearing (and seeing, in the mirror) this woman use an obscenity.

Contrasted with her sweet, perky-looking exterior, it sounded so utterly profane that Sonny truly became aware that she was swearing. Like many people, she'd fallen into the habit of swearing casually, using these words without any real feeling - sort of a 'null phrase'. However, it just seemed so utterly wrong - so 'profane' to see that face and those lips say that word that it shocked the living daylight out of her - and brought her back to 'reality'.

Such as it was. Right now, everything felt sort of like some sort of skewed dream to Sonny. She was still having trouble coping with the realization that the image in the mirror was her.

"Whoa.." She said, turning her wide-eyed gaze on the two men in the room. "This is just too fuh.. too weird."

She stopped the swearword from escaping almost automatically - it just felt fundamentally wrong to use this particular face and voice to say those words, unless there was a considerably more overriding reason. It would have been like... well, like swearing in church. It was almost the exact same sensation.

It was weird - just one more weirdness piled atop the others - and she'd just started being in this body.

"We know it will take some getting used to." Dr. Wilkes said. "And, frankly, we do realize that you designed it with the thought you'd probably never end up living as the woman you designed - but you did design it, and it's not completely unfamiliar to you, so..."

"Whoa, hold on a second." She said, holding up one hand. "You guys think I'm gonna spend one minute longer in this... in this body." She said, wincing at how strange her 'normal' speech rhythms sounded like, coming from this body. Awkwardly, the new woman slid down off the bed - which was an intriguing new sensation, the feel of her new body's balance and motions as she stood up, having to struggle with her balance. 'Top heavy' was a very accurate description of her new center-of- balance, and it was a real struggle to remain upright, fighting to maintain her balance in the face of that extra weight pulling her forward. "We made ourselves a deal, and if I don't like this - and, trust me, I don't like the thought of livin' like a ski... woman, no matter what she looks like - then I'd just off myself. So..."

"Uh - hold it!" Chuck said - and Sonny paused, going into the familiar 'what the fuck do you want' pose...

...then hastily dropped it as she realized that trying to cross her arms at her chest just wasn't going to work.

"What about wanting to, um..." Chuck made a gesture, jerking his thumb at the ceiling.

That stopped Sonny's mind dead in it's tracks. She'd been so focused on how bizarre this was, being stuck in the body of some perky-looking Milk Maid with over-sized tits, that he'd nearly forgotten about his one, last desire.

If Chuck had kept his big mouth shut, she could have finished the job without thinking about it - but now that it had been brought up, she just knew that the last minutes of her life would be full of incredible guilt if she didn't go through with that one, last task. Forgetting would have been fine - but knowing that she could now see that sight one last time, and then intentionally doing herself in without seeing it...

She just couldn't do it.

Throwing up her hands, she rolled her huge new eyes. "Okay, you've got me. When's the next full moon, Chuck?"

The Texan glanced over at a calendar hanging on the wall. "Uh - little over two weeks. Sixteen days, to be exact."

"Okay - then you've got me for sixteen more days. After that, I'm a gonzo chicken, got me?" Sonny stated firmly - still grimacing at how really, really weird it sounded, the attitude and rhythm emerging from person who seemed incapable of producing it.

Chuck and the Doc shared a look, then the doctor cleared his throat. "Well, I, uh.. should go. I'll stop in every now and then, but I have things to take care of."

"Yeah, well - you don't have to worry about my health, Doc." Sonny cracked, damning again the lack of control of her new voice, then bid the older man goodbye, still the occasional glances in the mirror with a frown.

After Dr. Wilkes had left, Chuck cleared his throat nervously, looking at the toe of his boot (which he was sliding back and forth over the floor) rather than at her.

"Uh, well.. we figured that you'd stay here with me for.. well, until, you know. the place is just a rented bungalow, but it's, you know, uh... nice."

"Nice." Sonny said, raising one arched eyebrow. "Look, cowboy - day before I saved your as... bu... um... life, I was living on the streets. To me, four walls and a roof is 'nice'."

Chuck grinned lopsidedly. "Yeah, well - anyway, I was wondering, you know, how you wanted to, uh... 'live up' your last two weeks."

Sonny blinked. "Huh?"

Chuck shrugged, diffidently. "Well, you got this new body - and I can guarantee that nobody will be treating you like a 'dumb nigger', no matter where you go. Since I owe you, big, I figured you might want to.. I don't know. Whatever."

Sonny's jaw slowly sagged - as did she, not even realizing it until she was leaning against the bed she'd so recently arisen from.

Being broke and homeless all her life, her imagination had been tightly reigned in, her 'wildest dreams' being what a 'dumb street nigger' could get away with. Certainly not eat in fancy restaurants or anything...

...but everything had changed. Quite literally.

"Holy shit... I mean..." She winced, still getting a really strong 'swearing in church' feeling. "I mean... wow. I hadn't thought about that. I mean... I guess I could really... you know..."

She fell silent, shaking her head at the magnitude of the thought - it was still an untapped realm to her. Chuck cleared his throat once again. "Uh.. there's just one other thing..."

"What's that?" Sonny asked.

"Um... well... I just don't know what to call you. I mean - I know who you are, but I know what you are now, and.. I mean, calling you 'he' sounds really strange, but making myself call a 'girl' Sonny doesn't sound right either and..."

The young millionaire was flushing as he tapered off, and it took Sonny a second. "Wait a second, you mean...?" Sonny asked, incredulously...

...then had a mental image of the two of them in what she imagined a real snooty restaurant would look like - and Chuck calling her 'Sonny'.

She couldn't help herself - at the image, she giggled - a sweet, trilling sound that sounded almost disgustingly cute, and right in keeping with this body's look.

"Okay, okay - it would cause some odd looks." She allowed. "Doesn't mean I have to like it - but I guess it's only for a couple of weeks, and what the he...ck do I care. I mean, I been called a lot of things in my life, and most of them wasn't pleasant. So I figure it won't kill me if you call me, uh "

Sonny paused and looked in the mirror, trying to decide what this body did look like, to her. The first thought that popped, unbidden, into her mind was 'Gretel', but that was out of the question...

"Sonya." She finished, trying it on for size - and grimacing. Still, it wasn't that far from the name she was used to, and it was just until she offed herself. "Yeah - that'll do."

"Okay.... Sonya." Chuck said with a wry grin. "So what do you want to do first?"

The new woman looked thoughtful, turning to eye her new body in the mirror.

"Get changed into some 'real' clothes, I guess." She said, with a rueful grin of her own. "If I'm gonna be leavin' the house, it ain't gonna be in no godda uh, not in pajamas, that's for sure."

* * * * *

"Geez, Chuck..." Sonya muttered to herself. "What'jya do? Buy out the whole fuc uh, store?"

She was staring at the large walk-in closet of 'her' room - or rather, the wide range of clothing that filled it.

The room she'd awoken in had turned out to be the one that had been set aside for her, fully furnished and everything. The room itself was pretty nice, especially for somebody used to living on the street - she didn't even have enough experience with peoples bedrooms to realize that the decor of hers was almost offensively impersonal, like a hotel room. As far as she was concerned, it was great.

The clothing, however - that's what almost floored her. Knowing what her final measurements would be, Chuck had gone out and bought (or had custom made) a wide range of clothing that would fit her new figure, in a wide range of styles and colors.

To somebody who'd only ever owned one set of clothes at any given time, a 'room full' (as she thought of the walk-in closet) of clothing just for her...

It was mind-boggling.

With a slightly stunned look on her angelic new face, Sonya entered the closet, one hand holding onto the edge of the shelving that ran around the upper part of the closet to help her balance. Her new body was supple and healthy, but she was still unused to it, and it took a conscious effort to keep it balanced as she walked.

Of course, the fact that she was able to hold onto the shelf was a new sensation for her - she was considerably taller in this body than she had been as a man. As 'Sonny', she had been short for a man, and now that she was 'Sonya', she was tall for a woman, nearly hitting the six-foot mark.

In fact, there was a lot more to being in this new body than she'd first appreciated. She'd never really thought about what it would be like, never truly believing that she'd end up in it. Now, she was having to cope with all the differences in this body, from it's height to the odd way her hips moved when she walked, having a tendency to 'swivel' with each step - which actually helped counter-balance the swaying of her tits, though not as much as she would have 'liked'.

Oh, well - she only had to put up with the thousand-and-one annoyances that came with being female for two weeks. Then everything would be over - finally.

Until then, she'd just have to put up with the annoyances...

...and the 'good points', of which she hadn't realized there could be any, but were now starting to add up, one after the other.

"Well I'll be da...rned..." Sonya muttered to herself, flipping through some of the different clothing, utterly amazed at how many different 'types' of clothing there were available in this closet. As a man, the only clothes she'd ever gotten was second-hand Ally Anne clothing, and his 'choices' were severely limited.

Now... they seemed completely limitless.

Finally, more out of the fact that she was overwhelmed with the available clothing than any real 'decision', Sonya picked out a pair of jeans and a white cotton blouse. Carrying the brand-new clothing as if it were fine china, she carefully made her way out to the main bedroom and lay the clothing on the bed, then walked over to the dresser in the corner to get the rest of her first 'new clothes' outfit.

Opening the drawers, she gasped at the array of socks, underwear, and assorted 'other' clothing laying within. Almost tentatively, she lifted out one of the massive bras she found inside.

"Holy cr...ow." She said, turning the heavy-duty cotton foundation garment over in her hands. "This thing's... huge."

The weird thing was... Sonya found herself getting slightly aroused as she held the massive MMM- cup bra in her feminine new hands. As a unattractive 'street bum', she'd never really had any chance for 'romantic' engagements, and the fact that she was holding one of the most definite of feminine garments was a slight turn-on.

The fact that she was now more than amply endowed to wear just such a garment didn't lessen the effect. In fact... she was actually 'enjoying' the 'illicit pleasure' of being able to hold, touch, and basically do anything she wanted with a woman's undergarment. Though it was definitely weird, it was also exciting - something that had never occurred to her.

Very hesitantly, and odd look on her face, Sonya replaced the garment in the drawer - and reached for another one, this one less severely 'matronly' than the more austere one she'd first picked up.

Though equally 'heavy duty' in it's own way, this bra had lace trim, completely with little roses embroidered into the lace. A much more frilly, feminine bra...

...and her body seemed to tingle as she lifted it out of the drawer. Glancing around - as if afraid somebody was going to 'catch' her - Sonya reached in and picked up the matching panties for the bra, holding the two feminine undergarments and practically trembling with the guilty enjoyment she was feeling.

"No.. I couldn't..." She said, softly to herself....

...then looked over at the jeans and shirt sitting on the bed. The white cotton blouse she'd picked out was fairly thick and heavy, a subconscious choice made on the 'durability' of such a garment, which was a critical factor when a homeless person picked clothing. Now she found herself thinking that nobody could possibly know how 'frilly' her underwear was under such clothing.

She began to blush... but carried the underwear over to the bed with her. Hesitantly, she began to pull off her pajamas.

As more and more smooth, milky flesh was exposed by her undressing, that feeling of illicit pleasure increased. Almost instinctively, Sonya's huge blue eyes went to the full-size mirror in the corner...

...and her heart-rate tripled at the sight of this huge-breasted woman slowly stripping. Though she knew she was seeing herself undress, her mental image of herself still hadn't changed to match the body she wore, and it was as if she were peeping in the bedroom window of this 'white chick', watching her undress.

It felt really, really strange... and very, very 'good'. Exciting. Enticing - like he had some sort of 'mind- control' over this woman he was 'spying' on, getting her to do whatever he wanted her to. of course, in a basic sense, it was true - she did have control over this buxom woman...

She watched in the mirror as the buxom blonde finished undressing, every inch of her now-bare body available for scrutiny, from the long legs to the womanly-wide hips, to the slender-yet-sturdy waist to those massive. Magnificent mounds, tipped by large, thick - and fully engorged - nipples.

Almost as if on auto-pilot, Sonya found herself lifting her hands to those massive mounds. Something deep inside her male-ego-driven brain, she'd thought how she'd like to see this woman touch her own tits - and now the woman was doing just that. As if in a daze, she brought her hands to her huge tits, sliding them beneath the curve of those mounds and hefting upwards...

In the mirror, Sonya could see this woman touching and holding her tits, hefting them - and the image turned her on, made her feel good. But she could also feel her hands hefting her tits, feel them through both the hands and the breasts themselves - and that felt very good, too. The 'weirdness' of the fact she was now a woman and was 'feeling herself up' was sort of lost in the general state of guilty arousal she was in, her eyes firmly locked on the mirror and mind sort of spinning in place as she watched this woman slide her hands over her massive mounds, lightly caressing the silken flesh as they moved in slow spirals towards the turgid nipples...

Sonya had to repress a moan of pleasure as her hands finally found those thick, firm, oh-so-sensitive nipples. Seeing it in the mirror excited her. Feeling a pair of full, female breasts in her hands excited her male ego, fulfilling the fantasies she'd often had, as a man, of being able to fondle a woman's breasts at will.

It also felt extremely good, the new, female sensation of having her breasts fondled, even if it was her fondling them.

All of this was having a definite effect on her. Deep in her belly, a warmth was starting to grow, and she was vaguely aware of a damp, slippery feeling in her crotch. Almost on instinct, one hand left her massive tits and slid downwards...

In the mirror, she watched this woman spread her legs further apart, revealing the folds of her pussy in the small, well-trimmed patch of blonde pubic hair that lay between her silken thighs. As she watched, this woman's 'free' hand slid over that downy patch..

...and Sonya gasped in pleasure as she felt the pressure of her hand glide over the very sensitive outer lips of her now-sopping cunt. She gasped again as her hand came to a stop, and her fingers framed her new womanhood. Still entranced by the image in the mirror, she used her fingers to gently press just outside her new vagina, spreading it open to be seen by the male ego inside that was getting oh-so-hot by this free, easy peep-show, something she'd never dreamed she'd get a chance to see.

Some buxom white chick feeling herself up right in front of 'his' eyes.

Slowly, her other hand left her breasts, and glided down to join her first. Hesitantly, it stopped - then one slender, long-nailed finger slid into the opening...

Sonya gasped, eyes sliding closed with the pleasure as her finger brushed lightly-yet-firmly across the swollen nub of her clit...

...and that broke the 'daze'. Yanking her hands away from her crotch, she gasped.

"What the he..ck am I doing...?" She asked herself, eyes popping open and looking downward to stare at her finger, covered in the feminine juices produced by her new womanhood. Shaking her head, trying to clear it of the arousal that still thrummed through her body, she reached over to the night- table and pulled open the drawer, looking for something to wipe her finger off on...

...and stopped, jaw dropping open in shock.

Among the other items resting in the drawer was a bright pink plastic dildo. Making no attempt to look 'realistic', the brightly-colored plastic object was about medium size, with a black base.

Sonya just stared at it for a second - then began blushing brightly.

"Geez, Chuck - you're a sick bas.. bugger." She said, softly, sliding the drawer shut with a bag. Sitting straight once more, she held her hands out from her body and took several deep breaths...

...then opened her eyes and looked at herself in the mirror questioningly, well aware of how 'turned on' she was right now.

"Naw..." She said to her reflection. "I mean... it's be too weird... right?" Her reflection refused to answer, and Sonya bit her lower lip.

As a man, she'd been utterly 'normal' in her sexual drive, and - with no other outlet - had masturbated frequently. Though she consoled herself with the thought that she wasn't turning into a fag or something (and the way she reacted to the 'sight' of the woman in the mirror was definite proof of that), the fact was that she was turned on right now, and her female body simply didn't allow her the chance to relieve it in the familiar way.

"Well..." She told her reflection, blushing brightly. "I mean, it's a woman's body. If I wanna, uh.. get off, then I'll have to..."

She found her eyes going back to the night-table, and the drawer...

She reached a hand slowly towards the drawer... then snatched it back, turning away from the temptation. Shaking her head, she reached over and picked up the panties, getting ready to pull them on...

..feeling the silky, feminine softness of them, feeling the warm, wet sensation in her crotch as she started to lift her leg to put them on, saw the reflection in the mirror...

Tossing the panties aside, she reached over, yanked the drawer open... and then very slowly and hesitantly reached in and picked up the dildo, turning to face her reflection in the mirror.

"I mean, it's not that weird, right?" She said, to herself. "I mean.. this is what women do to.. you know. It's not like I'm actually having sex - not really. I mean, I used to jack off all the time, and with a chick's body, you gotta do it differently, right?"

Of course, the fact that she hadn't even jacked off in the past month made the question more pressing then it would have been otherwise.

" 'Sides.." She told herself, hesitantly. "It's not like anyone's gonna know - and after I off myself, it won't even matter. Since I'm goon die anyway, i.. I might as well, right?"

Having talked herself into it, her heart was thundering behind her massive endowments in a mixture of shame, fear, excitement and arousal.

Her body shaking slightly from the mixture of emotions running through her, Sonya very slowly lay back on the bed, legs spread apart and raised at the knees. For the longest few minutes in her life, she just stared at the ceiling, thumb of her right hand lightly running up and down the cool plastic surface of the dildo she was holding, trying to decide which emotion she was feeling the strongest.

Then, before she could change her mind, she guided the plastic phallus downward... and slid it slowly but firmly between the arousal-swollen lips of her new sex.

She gasped, arching her back slightly as the plastic cylinder slid across her swollen clit, filling her tight new cunt with it's hardness, creating a sensation unlike anything she'd ever felt.

"Oh... wow..." She moaned, softly, as she pushed it all the way in... then slid it most of the way out, shuddering as it slid across her sensitive tissues.

Then she drove it back in, this time with more authority - and began to pick up a rhythm as her body twitched in response to the pleasure it created.

It was similar to what masturbation felt like as a man - yet, at the same time, oh-so-different. The overwhelming thing was - it felt very, very good. Letting her eyes slid close, she began to caress on swollen nipple with her free hand, while the other continued to drive the now slick dildo in and out of her sopping, hot cunt, her hips unconsciously picking up a thrusting motion as she masturbated as a woman for the first time.

She clamped her teeth together to keep from crying out as pleasure flowed outwards from her crotch, the sensations rocking her body as she built up speed and power.

The pleasure continued to build and build, reaching - and passing - the point where, as a man, she would have orgasmed. She was swept up into the river of pleasure that flowed through her, loosing herself in it, her mind barely registering anything but the awe of so much pleasure, and the disbelief that she hadn't come yet - it seemed impossible that a climax could lay somewhere higher on the pinnacle of pleasure she was now feeling.

Without even realizing it, she had began to scream and moan, unformed words slipping between her full new lips as she fucked herself like a woman possessed, the hand holding the dildo driving frantically at her crotch, pounding the plastic cylinder into her cunt again and again and again, as the pleasure - incredibly - continued to build.

"Oh, yes, oh yes!" She screamed, eyes closed and completely oblivion to the sound she was making, or the way her body was thrashing on the bed. "Oh, God - yeeeeesssss!"

Then she came.

It was like an explosion - and explosion of pleasure that took her by storm, the concussion completely severing intellect from senses as she became lost in an eternal instant, pure white pleasure filling every sense as her body twitched and rocked on the bed, orgasm ripping through her body and commandeering every nerve to carry it's message of orgasmic pleasure to her brain.

Then the instant ended, and the pleasure began to fade, leaving a warm afterglow in it's place as the orgasm slowly subsided. Spent - emotionally and physically - she collapsed back onto the bed, laying limp with the dildo still buried in her sopping cunt as she tried to reconnect her brain with reality.

* * * * *

Outside the door, Chuck stood as if cast in concrete, one hand still half-raised from the aborted knock he'd never given. Having heard a weird grunting sound from Sonya's room, he'd hurried down the hallway, afraid that she'd decided to break her promise and kill herself.

He'd just been about to knock when she'd lost the last of her control - and the sounds had quickly dispelled the suicide notion, replacing it with an utter certainty as to what she was doing, complete with a mental image of what her naked, hugely-endowed body would look like as she thrashed in ecstasy...

Blushing furiously, the Texan turned and crept away from the door- toward the door to his own room. Though flushed and embarrassed and shocked, he was also very, very aroused, and he was unzipping his pants to free his erection even as he closed the door to his room.

Feeling like some sort of disgusting pervert, he closed his eyes... and let that image reform, the one of a buxom, blonde-haired woman pleasuring herself...

...or maybe there was a certain somebody - a certain male somebody, with a definite twang in his voice, causing her to scream in such orgasmic pleasure...

With that image firmly in his mind's eyes, Chuck couldn't help but wrap one hand around his already rock-hard and throbbing shaft.

* * * * *

Still flushed with orgasmic pleasure and embarrassment, Sonya finished washing her very sensitive privates, glad that she'd been given the master bedroom, complete with it's en suite bathroom.

Walking out into the bedroom, she gathered up the clothing she'd picked out... and became aware of a sound coming through the wall that her and Chuck's bedroom shared. Suddenly, her blush deepened as she realized that he was in her room, and must have heard her screaming as she masturbated, and...

...and then the sounds she was hearing through the wall 'clicked', and she realized what Chuck was doing...

...as a direct response of what he'd heard her doing...

If it had been physically possible for her to burst into spontaneous ignition, the heat from her blush would have done that. Hurriedly, she pulled on the panties - the rush not able to distract her from the odd sensation of pulling the soft lingerie up her smooth legs and around her womanly hips. She then scrambled into the bra, her shame and shock not able to completely overwhelm her mind from the sensations as she pulled the front-clasping cups into place, lifting and containing her massive mounds as she closed the clasps on the garment.

Then she pulled on the shirt, only buttoning every third button before hurriedly slipping on the jeans...

...which almost slowed her to a stand-still. Still unused to her own body, the apparently large pants turned out to be skin-tight, something she hadn't realized from looking at them, never having had to judge them against her new body before. Rather than take the time to find a looser-fitting pair, she struggled to get them around her full hips and firm ass, then did them up, unable to actually see the button on the jeans because her huge, bra-encased mounds didn't allow her a direct line of sight.

Finally getting the pants done up, she hurried for the door, eager to get out of earshot from Chuck's self-pleasure, her entire body deeply flushed...

..and, to her rising horror, aroused. The thought of Chuck's masturbating made her think about why he was, which brought back the memory of her own masturbation, and her body was reacting.

Opening the door, she began to hurry down the hall.. and was just passing the door to Chuck's room when he made a muffled moaning sound that she recognized - the sound of a man cumming, and cumming hard...

...because he was fantasizing about her...

She hurried down the hall, all too aware of the femininity of her new body as she moved, of the arousal she was feeling - and of the way the bra felt as it encased her huge mounds, her once again swollen nipples pressing into the restraining fabric. Finger's fumbling, she did up the rest of the buttons on her blouse as she hurried into the living room of the house, completely unfamiliar with the room and having to stop and get her bearings.

Her head was swimming with emotions and thoughts, and she was having a hard time concentrating on anything, the recurrent image of Chuck masturbating over her wanting to pop into her mind, and her fighting to keep it from forming. She knew for a fact that if Chuck were to come out of his room, if she'd have to see him, she wouldn't be able to stop the thought from forming, and she just couldn't handle that. She'd been an awake, aware woman for less than three hours now, all of them spent in her bedroom, and in that time she'd managed to not only feel herself up and get herself off, but get 'another man' so horny that he had jacked off to a mental image of her. She just wasn't ready to face that...

...she needed to get out of here. Go for a walk. Beyond the windows of the living room, twilight was settling in, and a walk in the cool night air, being back on the streets, was what she needed. As a homeless man, she'd longed for a house to live in - but now, confused and shocked and helplessly aroused, the walls seemed to loom over her, closing in on her - she needed to get out of there.

Hurrying into the kitchen/dining room, she found a purse sitting on the table - the promised identification, etc., that she'd been promised. A quick glance in the black leather bag showed that it was full of various items - including keys and a woman's wallet, bulging with more cash than she'd ever had in her life. Slinging the bag over her shoulder, she hurried to the front door...

...and cursed. She was barefoot, not even wearing any socks, and that was no way to go outside. Her closet was stuffed full of all sorts of shoes and other footwear, but she didn't want to go back there, for fear of running into Chuck...

...but the only pair of shoes that would fit her out here was a pair of sandal-style shoes, wit white leather straps on the upper - and a flared heel that was at least three inches high.

At the end of the hall, she heard the door to Chuck's room open...

Grimacing, she sat down on the floor and quickly pulled on the shoes, mentally cursing her enormous bust as it got in the way - and hating herself for finding the sensations pleasant every time her arm pushed on her cloth-cover endowments.

Getting the shoes on and done up, she carefully rose to her feet, balancing gingerly atop the unfamiliar footwear.

As the sound of Chuck's footsteps started down the hallway, she quickly opened the door and - teetering and moving awkwardly, but managing to keep her balance - hurried down the steps and over the driveway to the sidewalk, turning her back on the house and concentrating on staying upright as she headed off into the dusk, her mind swirling in a confused uproar as she tried - without complete success - to ignore the feminine sensation walking created in her new, female body...

* * * * *

Hearing the screen door close, Chuck hurried across the living room, his face flushed. Reaching the door, he threw it open and hurried, barefoot, onto the step and looked up and down the street...

...then cursed. He realized that Sonya must have heard him, as he'd heard her, and been equally embarrassed - and she'd taken off. Not that he could blame her - he wasn't exactly keen on the idea of having to face her, knowing what she would be thinking and vice versa.

Well - it was out of his hands, now. He'd bought a house on the corner, and she'd already gone one way or the other down the cross-street, lost to sight. He could dash out to the street and hope to spot her...

...but perhaps they both needed a while alone to work out how they were going to deal with this new complication. A quick check showed that she'd at least had the presence of mind to take her purse, which meant she had money and identification.

Sighing, Chuck reentered the house and closed the door. Going into the living room, he opened the cabinet on the entertainment center, revealing a small bar. Pouring himself a shot of whiskey, he sat down on the couch, lanky legs sprawled out in front of him.

"Sonya - I'm sorry..." He muttered to the air, then drained the glass in one swallow and poured himself another...

...with the mental image of Sonya's buxom nude body still trapped in his mind.

End of Part 1

BACK TO FUN ZONE

(PART TWO)

By Gunslinger

The autumn evening was cool and overcast, the twilight further deepened by the clouds that scudded fairly low over the concrete towers and canyons of the city, driven by a rising wind from the ocean. A rising wind whose chill currents also carried the smell of promised rain, as well as the muted sounds of the city itself.

All in all, an evening ill suited for casual strolls - except where necessity (or youthful, foolhardy energy) dictated, people avoided walking any real distance, in view of the inclement weather.

However, the streets of New York are never empty at any time, as necessity did exist for enough of the vast metropolis' citizens. So it was that the few who were driven to wander through the growing darkness of a rather mid-to-upscale section of the Island were treated to an unusual sight.

She was tall, for a woman, and built to equally impressive measurements in other directions. Not that she was fat, not by any stretch of the imagination - but she had the firm, full-fleshed body of a large-boned, healthy woman, whose muscular strength was hidden beneath a thick enough layer of padding to mute almost all the muscular definition to a smoother, more deceptive contour - as if she were one of those female body-builders in 'disguise'. Still, it managed to create a rather pleasant aspect to the woman, making her most definitely feminine - if it was a more 'girlish' femininity than the sophisticated, slender look favored by more of the population. In conjunction with her smooth, rounded face with its full lips, dimples, and huge, bright-blue eyes, all surrounded by corn-silk hair, it created an almost cherubic appearance, of innocent beauty and unsophisticated femininity. What was most amazing about her physical appearance itself, however, was the fact that her body still managed to project that innocence, despite the fact that she possessed a pair of the most enormous breasts that most people had ever seen - with, perhaps, the exception of some patrons of strip-clubs, where some 'exotic dancers' had upper dimensions that might match this woman's. Where those dancer's saline- or silicone-inflated endowments looked 'tacked on' to a body ill-suited to support them, however, this woman's build let her pull the look off.

Unfortunately, even that magnificently built body couldn't distract the eye from her persona, which she wasn't managing to pull off, angelic appearance notwithstanding. The clothes she was wearing, while rather 'plain', managed to stay within what would look good on her, in a casual situation. Even her lack of make-up didn't detract too greatly, considering her 'wholesome' look.

However, her silken hair was a Medusa's tangle of strands, and the way she wobbled and staggered down the sidewalk and muttered to herself - as if drunk - definitely didn't jibe with her general air of innocence...

"I shoulda had the Doc turn me into fuc...freaking King Kong..." Sonya (née Sonny) muttered, not noticing the odd look from the person waiting at the bus-stop gave her as she wobbled past. "He...ck, worst come to worst, I coulda just climbed the Empire Stet Buildin', and the cops woulda been sure ta blow me away. Leastwise I'd go out with a real bang. But nooooo, I hadda go make myself a chick.

What the heck was you thinking, Sonny?"

She should her head at her own stupidity. "Oh, I know what you was thinkin'. You was thinkin' that you pro'bly wouldn't even wake up. And if you did, then maybe - just maybe - it's be interestin' to see how well a white chick made out in the world, for awhile. Go ahead and admit it - you was kinda wonderin'. Seein' all those white chicks get anythin' they wanted, just by smilin' and wigglin' a little - you thought, deep down, it might be kinda neat to try it. Didn't think about how it would really be like, dija? Didn't think about how heavy havin' a huge pair o' hooters would be. Definitely didn't think about what jackin' off would be like - or what would happen if that dam.. darned white boy heard ya? Oh, cra.. crud!"

Sonya shook her head again, angrily - here she was trying to forget that whole thing - and yet that thought kept popping back into her head. The thought of Chuck jacking off at the thought of her. Why the hell did she keep thinking about that!

...and why was her nipples so hard they could cut glass? Sure, it was chilly out, and she'd love to blame it on that - but the cold didn't explain the warm, damp warmth in her crotch.

But she was not getting horny thinking about that stupid white boy. No way - that'd be sick. Besides - she didn't even like him., he was so darn annoying, butting into her life, making her feel guilty about stuff... and talking her into going ahead and making herself into this woman, the one that had him jackin' off over...

Crud! She was thinking about it again. It was all that white boy's fault...

...except that, even as she thought of it, she couldn't make herself believe it. She was the one that saved his life. She didn't have to - but she had. Then she was the one who had agreed with having herself changed - and out of all the things she could have become, it was her that had picked this body. She could have been just about anything. Hell, even if she had been limited to being a chick, she could have become a butt-ugly tub-of-lard, which would have avoided all of this completely.

Nope - somewhere, deep inside, she'd decided on this body herself because she'd been... curious. Deep inside, she'd wondered what this would be like, and had been willing to give it a try, assuming she didn't die in the procedure - and now she was finding out.

There was something really wrong with her. She must be sick in the head to have done this to herself. She'd been wandering in the lowering dark for more then half an hour now, and that was the best she could come up with. She hated herself for considering the implications of that thought...

...but no matter how hard she tried to get the thoughts and memories of her own, female orgasm, and the effect it had on Chuck, out of her head, they refused to go - and every time they returned, they brought back the thought of who, really, had done this to her. Though Chuck and the Doc had denied her the chance to commit suicide, and had tried to talk her into living, the choice, ultimately, had been hers, from deciding to give it a shot, to choosing what she'd look like...

...to what had gone on in the house. It was her fault, and nobody else's. She'd gone ahead and done this... well, if not completely 'willingly', then at least aware of what she was doing.

Which meant... on some deep level, this is what she'd been willing to accept. Maybe not what she wanted - but a willing choice out of a plethora of bad options.

The thought disgusted her, made her feel sick... but she couldn't ignore it. Couldn't refute it. She, and nobody else, had done this thing to her.

God, how it hurt her to admit that! Quite literally, it was something she'd rather die than admit...

...but she'd sworn to the two-week time-frame. Sworn it to Chuck, which was bad enough - but had sworn it to herself, which made it iron-clad. Just as she'd once, as a young black man, sworn she'd never let herself end up like the career criminals many young homeless men became. Like the oath she'd made to herself to never slump into that apathy of most homeless people, to never 'give up', as long as she had her health...

The thought of that oath managed to rip a wry grin out of her. After all, it had been her attempt to circumvent that particular oath that had helped land her here. After all, she'd jumped in to save Chuck under the self-assumption that dying as a hero didn't count as 'giving up', of quitting. Even if the explosion didn't kill her, she figured that she'd be injured enough to finally allow her the suicide she'd so longed for. Failing that, she'd figured that, by picking a form completely different than her old one, it still wouldn't be breaking her agreement with herself if she committed suicide. She might be 'healthy'; - but she was no longer 'Sonny', and so that promise wasn't binding.

But this damned two-week oath... if only Chuck hadn't reminded her of it after she'd first awoken. Then she could have killed herself with a clear conscience...

With a sigh, she paused in her aimless walking to sink down on the edge of a concrete planter, to take her weight off of her now-aching feet. She'd never really had a reason to wonder what walking in high heels would feel like. Now, she knew all too well - she figured that her unfamiliarity with heels counter-balanced the relative thickness at the base of the flared heel. Leaving her to wonder how strippers, hookers and the like could possibly stand really high, thin heels for any length of time.

With a snort, she shook her head again. Here she was, a tall, blonde woman, sitting on the edge of planter and all-too-aware of how different it felt, with her full, firm new ass. Aware of the weight and heft of her new, huge tits - and the way the straps of her bra were digging into shoulders that were getting chafed from the constant bounce-and-sway of her tits when she walked - and thinking about how much her high-heels hurt her feet. A month ago, this scene would have been unbelievable to her, yet somehow she'd ended up in it.

Even worse - she'd ended up in it because of her own foolishness and stupidity - and it was further worsened by the fact she was trying to cope with the fact that her body was still sexually aroused...

...at the thought of a man jerking off over her.

It was right then that the first fat, cold drops of rain fell from the sky, splattering heavily on the cracked pavement of the sidewalk and slapping against her head and shoulders - and upper breasts.

Sonya began to laugh. Though it was bright and clear and trilling, it wasn't a strong, healthy laugh - it was the laugh of somebody who was going to either laugh or cry, and had promised herself that she would not cry.

For several minutes, she merely sat on that planter, the rain quickly picking up and soaking her to the bone. She didn't care - she'd been living on the streets just a month ago, and was used to getting wet, even if it hadn't quite felt the way it did now that she was a woman...

...a woman...

...wearing a white bra and blouse...

"Oh, crud!" Sonya's head snapped up, and she stared down at the soaked blouse she was wearing. Though of a fairly heavy material, and over a white bra that was substantially built, she could still, dimly, see through the fabric. Besides - it's fabric weight meant that, wet, it plastered itself to her body as if molded to it, defining every curve of her massive new chest.

Sighing, she rose to her feet....

...and only then realized something.

She was lost. She hadn't been paying attention to where she was going while she'd walked along - and she'd never seen the outside of the bungalow. When running away, she hadn't bothered to look back, and only had a vague glimpse of part of the house as she'd left. She knew it was a bungalow, on a corner but which corner?

Oh, sure - just look in her purse, see what address was on her new ID, right?

But Sonya couldn't read. She could 'read' letters, match one word to the same word by appearance - so, she could wander around, looking at each of the street signs, and seeing if the word on them matched any of the words on her new identification.

Cursing - mildly - she looked around. She was in an older neighborhood, more tenement buildings and small shops than straight residential section...

...and up the street was a bar. She couldn't read the words written on the front of the building, but she knew the 'flavor' of a bar when she saw one.

Scrunching up her shoulders and bowing her head under the rain, Sonya hurried towards the building, cursing her high-heels as she wobbled and teetered on the rain-slick pavement.

She'd just about reached the bar when her left foot went out from under her, twisting sideways with a sharp motion, and Sonya cried out briefly as she tumbled forward.

Picking herself up - slowly - she winced at the low throb in her left ankle, knowing she'd just twisted it badly. Lips compressed tightly in frustrated anger, she pushed open the scarred wooden door of the building and went inside.

* * * * *

Parting the drapes in the window, Chuck stared out into the darkness, where the rain was coming down in earnest now, a heavy, cold rain as dismal and depressing as it could possibly be....

...until the sharp 'crack-bank' of nearby thunder broke the rhythm of the rain, almost coinciding with the blinding blue-white flash, like a celestial flash photograph. The window shook from the force of the rumble as the thunder faded.

"Oh, Sonya " Chuck said, turning away from the window and staring in self-accusation at the bottle of whiskey he'd made a pretty good dent in. though his instincts cried for him to get in his Hummer and go look for her, he knew that that would be the worst thing he could do, for either of them.

Sighing, he walked over to the kitchen and lifted the phone. Rather than bother with the phone book, he punched in the three digits for information.

"New York City." He replied to the automated voice that greeted him. "The Yellow Cab Company "

* * * * *

Leaning against the wall, Sonya stopped dead and stared at the room that lay before her.

She didn't know what she expected - but this wasn't it. Right from the first instant, when she'd stepped inside, she'd thought something was strange, but she hadn't been able to put her finger on it - the heavy front door opened onto a short hallway, one side of which led to a set of stairs leading upwards, the other making a sixty-degree or so turn before emptying into the main room of the establishment. It was this angled segment of wall that she leaned against as she gaped at the room before her.

The place looked... old. Like the sort of place where God might have relaxed with a few drinks on the Seventh Day.

Now, Sonya had seen old, and run down - it was familiar to her. What she saw now, however, wasn't. Everything was old, and nothing was in perfect repair - and even when new, none of it had been expensive to begin with. Despite that, the room didn't look dirty or run down, but almost lovingly maintained - as long as it didn't interfere with the general 'air' of age, that was. The place was old and worn, but in a good, comfortable way - like the way a good pair of shoes could end up as your favorite summer slip-ons, ragged and tattered, but oh-so-comfortable. Or the way an old recliner could become comfortable after all those years...

...neither of which analogies occurred to Sonya, who had no experience along those lines. She was left without a good reference as she stared at the scene the room presented her.

It must be a bar, at least in part - the actual 'bar' portion was at the far side of the room, all aged, battered oak, with rows of bottles fronting the huge mirror that made up the back-drop, and dully polished brass railing and stools gleaming in the light.

The rest of the room, however... the place was almost empty. Nearest to her was a couple of old men - a tall, almost painfully thin black man, dressed in faded, but well cared for, clothing, with a full head of curly steel-gray hair, and wearing a pair of large glasses. He was playing chess with a white man, a short little guy with a full beard and a big nose, his own close-cropped salt-and-pepper hair half covered by one of those Jewish hats. Not the little caps thing, but the low, rounded ones with a wide brim.

Sitting in another booth about halfway down the room were a couple of guys - one about forty, forty- five, the other a good twenty years younger. The older one was muscular and broad-shouldered, but starting to run to flab, and his hair was very short-cropped, almost invisible. He was wearing a pair of olive-drab slacks and a khaki-shirt, and was sitting so upright you'd think he had a steel bar inserted in him.

By contrast, his younger companion was thin, with a tie-dyed shirt and torn jeans, sporting long, greasy hair beneath a black beret, and a neatly trimmed goatee.

The last person in the room was the only woman present - aside from Sonya, of course. In her late thirties, she was quite attractive, if a little 'overdone' in faded evening wear she wore, complete with an elaborate hairstyle and flashy jewelry.

Sonya had a very good look at all of them - because they were all sitting stock-still, staring at her with bemused looks on their faces. The silence was broken only by the hum of the fans in the ceiling, and by the Jazz music issuing quietly from a cracked and dented portable radio resting on the table of the chess players.

Still surprised by the comfortable, if old-fashioned - atmosphere of the room, Sonya felt like an intruder into a private sanctum, and found herself unwilling to break the silence first. Instead, trying not to stare at any of the people watching her so frankly, she started towards the bar, favoring her twisted ankle...

...and all four men rose as one. the two chess players were the closest to her, but they'd risen more slowly so as not to disturb the pieces on the board, and it was the stiff-backed man who made it to her side first, moving with the speed and grace of a panther - and nearly as silently.

"Please, ma'am - allow me." He said in a rough-edged voice with a heavy southern accent. He extended his arm.. but stopped short of actually laying a hand on her.

Sonya was startled - but she wasn't too proud to accept the assistance. Though being addressed as 'ma'am' threw her for a bit of a loop, she let the tall, broad-shouldered man take her arm and escort her to a table near the center of the room, taking most of her weight on himself.

Before they reached the table, the man's younger companion was there, pulling the chair out for her, and Sonya sank into the soft, well-worn leather with a sigh.

"Thanks." She said, with a bemused grin.

"Not at all, Ma'am." Was intermingled with "Hey, no problem..."

As the well-preserved woman in the evening dress appeared at the table, moving with a remarkable grace and self-confidence that further bemused Sonya.

"Well " The woman said with a grin that was both carefully cultured and yet, somehow, utterly genuine. "We appear to have a winner in the 'Drowned Rat Impersonation Contest'. With a twisted ankle to boot, I would hazard to guess." She turned to the long-haired young man. "Junior, would you be so good as to fetch some ice in a bar towel for the lady's ankle?"

Though phrased politely, the woman's request had the steel of command beneath it, and the young man nodded and hurried off as the woman, with one sinuous, graceful movement, sank into the chair opposite Sonya and extended a hand. "Miss Gabrielle Williams, owner and hostess of " With an all- inclusive tilt of her head, she indicated the entire room, " the Parson's Avenue Social Club. Most of my patrons call me Miss Gabby."

"Uh... Sonya. Sonya Johnson." Sonya said, shaking the woman's outstretched hand. " Social Club?"

Miss Gabby smiled politely. "An outdated concept that replaced the Gentleman's club, yet pre-dated the Night Club. As a matter of sad fact, the only reason this one remains in business is that I do nothing to remain in business."

"Oh kay." Was the best Sonya could come up with.

"Uh, Ma'am?" the broad-shouldered man said, taking the ice-filled bar-towel the younger man had brought and handing it to her. "Perhaps I could explain. Miss gabby owns this building, inherited from her father, who got it from his father. All of us..." He gestured with a hand, " live in the apartments upstairs. This place stays open mostly as sort of a rec-room for us. We haven't had any new customers in oh, a long time."

"Oh." Sonya said, blushing as she accepted the ice and grooved her leg to allow her to put it on her sore ankle. "I'm sorry... I didn't mean to, uh trespass or anything."

"Not at all, my dear." Miss Gabby said, with a smile. "We are still open for business, after all - and any new friends are welcome. We simply don't go out of our way to attract clientele." She tilted her head in the big man's direction. "By the by, this helpful gentleman is Gunnery Sergeant William Breckenridge, United States marine Corps..."

"Retired. Please, Ma'am - call me Gunny." The big man interrupted, smoothly.

Equally smoothly, as if not interrupted, Miss Gabby continued "...and this rather... unkempt young man is his son, William Breckenridge the Second."

"Most people just call me 'Junior', actually." The long-haired youth said with a grin. "Pleased ta meetcha, Ma'am."

Sonya blinked - and grinned weakly. "Actually... I'm not used to being called 'Ma'am' by anyone. No offense... but it's kinda unnerving. Can you guys just call me 'Sonya'?"

Sonya caught Miss Gabby's wince at her speech patterns, and felt irrationally guilty about 'betraying' the image her body presented.

Junior didn't catch any of this, though, his own grin undimmed. "Sure, I guess I can do that... Sonya."

Gunny Breckenridge cleared his throat, apologetically. "Would you find 'Miss Johnson' acceptable, Ma'... miss?"

"Uh..." Sonya said, eyebrow rising. "Well, I guess so..."

"Don't mind Pop." Junior said, with a grin. "The Corps drilled politeness into him, 'specially around civilians. Now, if you were a buck recruit private..." His grin became wicked. "...or a member of the family, why then..."

"Junior..." Gunny sighed - without heat. Obviously, it was such a long-standing, partially resolved matter between them that it had become a sort of 'in joke' between them, and Junior was just using this as an excuse to trot it out again.

Sonya watched all of this with a bemused expression. She'd never before had a chance to see a 'slice of life' cross-section like this before, and the warmth and comfort evident in both the room and the people's interactions with one another was like a siren's song, calling to her. She'd been in the Social Club for just a few minutes, yet she already felt as if she belonged here, as if she'd be welcome anytime she happened to wander in.

Miss Gabby cleared her throat delicately. "Gunny..."

The ex-sergeant glanced over, inquiringly, to find the elegantly-dressed woman looking at him with a strange look on her face.

Sonya, bemused, watched an odd indecision cross his face, then his eyes turned to her and ran, somewhat impersonally, over her figure.

"I guess she can't borrow some clothes from you." Gunny said to Miss Gabby, further confusing Sonya.

Then the ex-Marine turned to Sonya again, and smiled weakly, obviously uncomfortable. "Um... Miss Johnson? There's a... well, a secret, I guess, that I have. The others here know about it, and all, but... Not that I don't trust you, but..."

Still confused, Sonya lifted her hands. "If there's something you don't feel comfortable to tell me, then don't. If you do tell me somethin', though, I'll keep my mouth shut about it." She sighed. "Besides - aside from the people in this room, I know exactly two other people worth talkin' to, and both of 'em know a secret about me that I prob'ly blows yours right outta the water."

Junior snickered. "Don't count on it, Sonya."

Gunny straightened and gave his son a long, calm look, and the young man - still grinning - held up his hands in an 'okay, I'll shut up' gesture.

"It would be helpful, Gunny." Miss Gabby said, quietly and without any attempt to persuade. "It is, however, completely your choice. I realize that we know about it more or less by default, and I can certainly see why you would not wish to share it with somebody you are not sure would be so... open minded as ourselves."

Sonya looked back and forth between the three people around her... then glanced over at the two 'chess players', who - while not looking in their direction - were sitting in such a way that seemed to indicate they were keeping an ear on the conversation... politely.

Suddenly, an odd sensation welled up in Sonya, one she'd rarely felt before. With a start, she realized that what she felt was akin to homesickness.

Right now, more than anything, she wanted to be accepted into this warm, uncritical group. With a start, she realized that - despite being soaking wet, with a twisted ankle, and with all her other problems intact - she hadn't consciously thought of her own problems since she'd walked inside. She'd been so caught up in the comfortable familiarity of this group that her own problems had sort of... slid away. As if this place was a refuge, where her problems were... set aside.

Impulsively, she reached out and put a hand on Gunny's arm, drawing his attention, and - by mutual reaction - the attention of the others.

"When I said I had a secret, I didn't mean it was something really 'hidden', so much as the fact that nobody knows it out of the fact I don't have anybody to discuss it with, aside from those who.. made it happen."

"Sonya, you do not have to..." Miss Gabby started, gently.

Sonya held up both her hands, stopping her. "No, please - let me finish." Miss Gabby pursed her lips, but kept her peace.

Taking a deep breath, Sonya squared her shoulders. "Until a few days ago, I was a young black man." Silence so thick you could have cut it with a knife to command of the room.

After what seemed forever, Miss Gabby broke it. "I... see." She said in a tone that indicated quite the opposite.

Sonya grinned wryly. "Yeah, I know it's hard to believe - but it's the truth. See, I saved this rich Texan's as... life, and was injured 'cause of it. So, he told me about this highly dangerous procedure that a doctor was looking for a volunteer for, that does something on the, uh.. whatchamacallit. Genetic... somethin'. Anyway, chances were that this procedure would kill me - but since I was tryin' to commit suicide at the time, that didn't seem really 'portant, right? So I said 'yeah, go ahead', and picked out this body, cause I coulda looked almost anyway I wanted, and thought I'd try somethin' different, see? I know it sounds weird, but - deep done, under this white woman's body - I'm a homeless black guy tryin' to deal with all this shi... stuff."

She took another long breath, then looked around to see how they were taking it, knowing how ludicrous the story sounded. After all - she'd lived through it, and still found it kind of hard to believe.

Then Gunny slowly grinned. "Well, I can't say I'm sure if I believe it... but you're right, it does beat mine to hell. Me, I'm just your average, every-day cross-dresser." He shook his head and chuckled. "Well, come on up to my apartment - some of my clothes should fit you pretty well."

* * * * * "Hey, Miss Gabby?"

Watching the two Breckenridge's escort Sonya - carefully - up the stairs, the owner of the Social club turned her attention to the older black man. "Yes, Robert?"

The man inclined his graying head towards the stairs. "You believe the story that girl told us?"

Gabby put a finger against her lips and considered the question carefully. "Well, I can't say that I believe it completely, on the first telling..." She said, slowly. "But, I believe that she believes it, implicitly. Which, for the moment, is good enough for me."

"Yup. Guess it's good enough for me, too." Robert Martin said, nodding, then turning his attention back to the game. "S'your move, tovarish."

"Spasibo." Viktor Ludimov said, reaching out and shifting one of the pieces with careful deliberation...

* * * * *

"Uh, Miss Jackson?"

Sonya winced at the name, but managed a weak smile as the ex-marine guided her into his apartment. "Yeah, Gunny?"

The broad-shouldered man began to blush. "Would you mind if I, uh, dressed as well? En Femme, I mean?"

Sonya blinked, her nose wrinkling in unconscious distaste at the thought of the big white dude prancing around in women's clothes...

...then she laughed, wryly. "Heck, sure, go right ahead. It's not like I'm in any position to be judgin' you, right?"

It was a new - and unsettling - thought for her, but she couldn't deny it. After all, she'd always held a vague sense that only sissies and sickos would want to wear women's clothes... yet she'd gone all the way and actually become a woman. What did that say about her? Compared to her, Gunny was practically normal.

The ex-marine smiled. "Thanks... Sonya."

The buxom blonde blinked at the sudden change, and Gunny grinned.

"Well, if I'm going to be Gina - my female persona - then it's just us 'girls', right?"

Sonya laughed, shaking her head in amused disbelief. "Oh, this is jus' too rich, Gunny my man. A marine sergeant in a dress and a street nigger in a big-titted blonde's body, havin' some 'Girl Talk'."

Gunny winced at the self-critical tone he heard in the blonde's sweet voice. Deciding not to respond to it, he led her into the bedroom and opened his closet. With quick, practiced moves, he gathered up some items.

"I'll just pop into the bathroom and get ready, while you dry off and pick something out to wear. We're near enough in size that you should be able to wear anything... except the shoes, I'm afraid. There's some towels in the wardrobe, top shelf."

"Thanks." Sonya said, wryly, as Gunny headed off. Grabbing a couple of the big, thick towels from the wardrobe, she slowly undressed and toweled off, mentally cursing her long, full mane of hair. She'd never realized what a nuisance long, thick hair could be, and had 'chosen' it more as a 'fashion' statement than without any real knowledge of what it would be like to have.

It was also weird to use three towels to wrap her nude body where she'd once only used one - now she wrapped one around her hips, one (barely) around her massive new bust-line, and the last she twirled around her hair...

...after three tries.

Grumbling to herself, Sonya limped over to the closet and looked at the array of clothing.

She had to keep from swearing. The entire closet was full of 'girlie' clothes. On reflection, it made sense - a man wouldn't want to wear 'mannish' women's clothes.

"What, don't see anything that strikes your fancy?" At the sound of the voice, Sonya whirled...

...and her eyes widened and her jaw dropped.

When Gunny had said that he was a cross dresser, Sonya had formed a sort of mental image of what to expect - but that was a far cry from the image 'Gina' presented as 'she' stood in the doorway.

The illusion wasn't perfect. The hands were too large, as were the feet, though careful choice of clothing had helped minimize that. The silk scarf around 'her' neck hid her Adam's Apple, further blurring the line. Even the wig that she wore was high enough quality to look real, rather than a wig. For the most part, the person in the doorway looked like a woman - a tall, broad-shouldered and rather mannish-looking one, to be true, but definitely within the generally accepted range for females.

Out of necessity, Sonya had never been a movie goer - as Sonny', it had been one of the unaffordable luxuries. Perhaps, if she had gone to the movies, she might have seen 'To Wong Foo...', and would have been more prepared for what she saw - in many ways, 'Gina' looked much like the character Swayze had played. But Sonya hadn't, so she wasn't - instead, she stood stock still in surprise, jaw hanging.

"Well, don't just stand there..." Gina said with a grin, spinning on one heel. "Say something." Brain spinning in neutral, Sonya said the very first thing that popped into her mind...

"Geez, Gunny - you look more like a chick than I do!"

Gina winced - but was smiling brightly. "Hardly, honey - I'd kill for a body like yours."

Sonya shook her head, snapping herself out of it. "Oh, I didn't mean like that. I mean, there's a lot of, real.. uh, I mean... you know, women who are born women who have a body less feminine than you look, and lots with more. What I mean, is the way you move and walk and talk. It's... kinda freaky. So good it's scary."

"Why, thank you..." Gina said, with a curtsy. "Of course, the truth is that it's all 'learned' behavior. Anybody can pick it up - it's just, normally, men don't want to, and women do. It's part of society. Same with the clothes, really - it wasn't all that long ago that men wore hose and wigs, you know."

"Say what?" Sonya said, startled - her knowledge of American History was pretty limited.

Gina waved a hand. "Never mind. Back to the original question - is there a problem with the clothes?" Sonya began a long, slow blush. "Well... they're a little more, uh... that is, they're a little less... um..." Gina's eyebrows rose. "What? You've tried clothing like this on, and didn't like it?"

"Heck no!" Sonya replied, indignant... then she flushed harder.

The question Gina asked was so sensible that it slammed into Sonya like a freight train. "How do you know you don't like it, then?"

Sonya's jaw dropped and she searched for words... but nothing seemed to want to emerge from between her full lips.

Gina grinned. "Look, Sonya - I understand that you're still trying to cope with things. Let me ask you this: How do you think I felt, the first time I tried one women's clothes... and found that I liked it. Do you think I was overjoyed to find this new facet of myself?"

Sonya blinked. "I... really didn't think about it..."

Gina nodded. "I know. It's understandable. But one thing I found out, over the years, is that most men, at one time or another, try on at least some female clothing. Usually, a Halloween costume or something on a dare, but there it is. Most men don't seem to care for it, and that's fine. But, the only way you'll know for sure "

Sonya took a deep breath, and tried to push her irrational, emotional responses away. "I guess you're right. I can at least try some of this on "

"Good." Gina said, gently. "I'm just going to throw your wet clothes in the dryer. By the time we've picked something out for you, your underwear should be dry enough to wear "

* * * * *

"Well? Did I tell you?"

Staring at her reflection in the mirror, Sonya licked her lips nervously. "Yeah. You did."

The reflection in the mirror showed Sonya herself - but it also showed her a very beautiful young woman.

She was dressed in clothing that she never thought she'd be wearing - an off-white summer dress that clung tightly to her waist and breasts, before flaring outwards over her hips and hanging to just below her knees. The dress was simple - a look that worked on her - but it revealed, without a doubt, that she was 'all woman' - and a lot of it, too.

But it was more than just the dress. It was the artfully applied make-up Gina had put on her, right down to the nail-polish. It was the ponytail her now-dry hair had been put into, making look a lot better, as well as less of a distraction.

It was even the faint, feminine scent that swirled around her, courtesy of the perfume Gina had supplied.

All in all - an absolutely stunning young woman.

But the 'I told you so' wasn't about how she looked - though she had to admit that the outfit and make- up looked great.

No. Gina's comment was that the clothing and make-up would feel good on her - and that's what she found herself agreeing with.

She would never have believed it, at first - but she and Gina had spent the last two hours talking. Sonya hadn't meant to spill her life's story, but that's what had happened.

It was odd. Sonya didn't find 'Gunny' attractive as a man, and didn't find 'Gina' attractive as a 'woman'. Yet she liked the big cross-dresser, and so had managed to find herself in an odd state - being able to be perfectly candid and comfortable with a person who (for want of a better term) was completely 'gender-neutral' in her outlook. Gunny/Gina could see both sides of Sonny/Sonya's strange, dual existence without prejudice - and Sonya could feel complete comfortable talking to her. She'd even found herself trusting Gina, almost utterly.

Which is why she'd taken Gina's advice...

"Forget the social 'limits' placed on things like clothing or particular moments and positions." She'd said. "instead, look at everything you're doing as a separate event, and see whether or not you enjoy it. Whether it feels good, despite any ingrained 'prejudices' you might have about it. Only after you try it can you make a fair judgment."

It was true. As much as part of her was disgusted to admit it, the feeling of the dress on her body was definitely pleasant - more comfortable than any male clothing she'd ever worn. Likewise, the make-up, while not inherently pleasant, wasn't unpleasant to wear - and Sonya had to admit that she liked the way the reflection in the mirror looked, even if it felt very weird indeed to acknowledge that it was her she was seeing.

"I... can't believe it." Sonya said, shaking her head in disbelief. "I... don't mind this... now that I've tried it. I feel really weird about it, because it makes me feel like a... pervert or something - but one look in the mirror, and I know I'm not. Wearing men's clothing on a body like this would make me a..."

She stumbled to a halt, and grinned wryly at her new friend. "Uh... no offense to the local cross- dressers."

Gina smiled. "No offense taken. Frankly - I think having to wear men's clothes is pretty lousy, myself - I just don't have the body to spend all my time in dresses." She looked at Sonya meaningfully.

Sonya sighed and rolled her eyes. "Look, I'm still not sure..."

"Oh, Sonya." Gina sighed. "Look at the mirror again and tell me it's not worthwhile to try."

Sonya looked at the mirror - and found herself thinking about Gina's offer. 'Girl Lessons', basically - the art of walking, talking and acting like a woman.

"It's not like it matters." Sonya said - and saw Gina wince. Sonya had told her about her plan for two weeks from now.

"Well, if it doesn't matter, why not humor me?" Gina asked. "Unless, of course, you'd prefer to avoid my company..."

"Oh, no!" Sonya said, shocked. "In fact, I kinda want to visit you - and the rest of the people here - quite a bit before.. you know."

"Well, we'll be glad to see you." Gina said. "Speaking of the others - do you feel ready for your big debut?"

Sonya sighed. "No - but let's do it anyway."

Leaning on the big CD for support, Sonya limped along side Gina and down the stairs, her heart speeding up as they neared the Social Club.

"Hubba, hubba!" Junior said, rising to his feet - and the sentiment was echoed by the others in the room...

...including a person she'd never seen before, a short, dusky-skinned man in jeans and a 'wife-beater' T-shirt who was practically drooling.

"Damn - when they said 'buxom', they weren't foolin'". The stranger said, loudly. Miss Gabby winced, and Sonya looked at her questioningly.

"Sonya, this is Mr. Donnacio. A cab-driver by trade. Apparently your friend, Chuck, called the cab company and offered a five-thousand-dollar reward for any cabby finding you and driving you home... or getting you to at least call. I gather your friend is quite concerned about you."

"Oh!" Sonya said, startled - having real friends was such a new experience for her that it hadn't occurred to her that Chuck might worry about her. "I've got to go!"

"Of course, my dear." Miss Gabby said, as the others said goodbye to her. "I'll just change quickly..." Sonya started to say - and Gina shook her head.

"No, you wear that home. You can return it and pick up your own clothes next time you drop by... and..." She trailed off, raising an eyebrow.

"...and take my lessons?" Sonya said, with a smile. "Okay, okay. If it'll make you happy."

"It sure would." Gina said, hugging her quickly. "Now, remember what I've already told you - and enjoy yourself. As best you can in any given situation."

"Right." Sonya said, then limped off with the nearly pop-eyed cabby, who couldn't seem to get his eyes higher than her chest.

Blushing, Sonya sat in the back and kept her mouth rather firmly shut during the ride home.

Getting out of the cab, she could practically feel the cabby's eyes on her ass they walked to the front door.

It flew open, and Chuck stepped out - and without any forethought, wrapped her in a tight hug.

"Sonya, I..." He started to say... then realized what he was doing, and let her go, flustered...

...and took a really good look at her.

"You look..." He said, without thinking - then snapped his teeth shut, blushing. "...great?" Sonya said, in a thoughtful tone. "Well, actually - yes I do."

"Huh?" Chuck stammered... then the cabby's none-to-subtle throat clearing reminded him about the reward. He went to grab his checkbook.

"I'm going to head off to bed, Chuck." Sonya told him as he wrote out the check. "I know we had some... uh, uncomfortableness this afternoon, but... I'm over it."

"Well, I guess I am too." Chuck said, ripping off the check and handing it to the cabby, then closing the door.

Sonya began to blush brightly, but forged ahead. "No, I mean it literally - I'm not going to let myself be uncomfortable with... myself. I had a long talk with a new friend who was kind enough to point out that I might as well.. enjoy myself. Regardless of who 'myself' is right now. So... if you hear, uh 'strange' noises from my bedroom - and you will - I hope you can deal with it."

Chuck gaped... then began to grin, in a very abashed manner. "Um, well, honestly? My method of 'dealing with it' is kinda, well.. you know."

Sonya's own blush deepened, but she stood her ground. "That's just you enjoying yourself. I mean, I understand - I was a guy, once, and I, uh... well, you know, too. So, we'll just have to... deal."

"Yeah." Chuck said.

Nodding, Sonya headed to her room and shut the door.

Then, very deliberately, she positioned the full-length mirror. She began to grind her hips... and run her hands over her new, feminine body, allowing her the guilty - but, as Gina had explained, more- then-acceptable - pleasure of enjoying her new form for it's own sake.

As she began to strip, watching her reflection in the mirror, her nipples were hot and hard, and her crotch was warm and damp...

...and her mind was already turning to that wonderful piece of pink plastic...

* * * * *

For somebody who had longed so long for a home, Sonya spent surprisingly little time in her new one.

She spent most of her day over at the Social club, getting to know her new friends better, to share in their little triumphs and tragedies... and to take her lessons from Gina, who - inspired by Sonya - was now living 'en femme' twenty-four/seven. At least for as long as Sonya was around, she'd told Sonya confidentially.

Sonya was surprised to find herself thinking of the big cross-dresser more and more as a 'girl friend'...

Chuck, on the other hand, couldn't get over the 'new and improved' Sonya, who was determined to grab all the gusto she could get. She had Chuck take her out every night, to restaurants, to museums, to the movies and to places where she could try dancing, something she'd never had a chance to try before.

She turned out to be a natural, which she jokingly referred to as a hold-over from her days as a black man.

That was the most amazing thing - the way her self-hating cloud vanished. It was as if she were seeing everything for the first time, and she had become amazingly chipper and awe-filled, enthusiastic and animated. Sonya had finally realized that she was as free from her old life as it was possible to be - literally a different person - and was getting her chance to be part of the world of bright lights, rather than an outsider looking in bitterly. She wanted to try everything, to see whether she enjoyed it - and if she did, she wanted to do that thing again, to accept the pleasure uncritically and absorb it into herself. To make up for so much lost time.

She became a human dynamo, living 'La Vita Loco' in living Technicolor...

...until the sixteen day after her resurrection, the day of the new moon...

* * * * *

As he pulled the Hummer to a stop, Chuck racked his brain for something - anything - he could possibly say...

...and continued to draw a complete blank, as he had since... well, since day one. He just didn't know what words he could possibly use to persuade her.

The past two weeks had been interesting, to say the least. The way Sonya had seemed to blossom, to start to take an interest in her life. At first, he'd thought she was just 'grabbing the gusto' while she still could. Then, against his own better judgment, he'd begun to hope. to hope that she'd changed her mind about her 'date with destiny'.

This hope had led to something foolish. Something he'd promised he wouldn't do - he'd begun to enjoy being with her. Oh, not 'romantically'. Well not too much that way. Despite the fact that he knew that was hopeless, part of him refused to listen - but he'd squashed that inner voice as firmly as he could, knowing how ridiculous it was to see Sonya that way, especially knowing how she was, deep down, and how impossible that would be for her to accept. No, he'd begun to enjoy her as a friend - which only made things worse. When this started, his quest had been based on a personal code of honor - he didn't want to see anybody kill themselves, much less somebody who'd saved his life. he felt the need to try and return the 'favor', even if the person didn't want it returned.

But, stupidly, he'd let himself fall in uh, become friendly with Sonya, to care about her - which made this so hard that his chest felt tight and he was having trouble breathing.

Sonya had been quiet and withdrawn all day today, and that had been the first heart-breaking sign Chuck had seen - though he had hoped against hope that she was thinking it over, reconsidering. He'd tried not to interfere in this hoped-for process, the entire day awkward between them as he'd tried to be supportive and reassuring without actually bringing the topic up or saying anything specific. Dinner, especially, had been strained, the two of them trying to put on the facade of normality...

...and then, afterwards, Sonya had asked Chuck to drive her here, and he thought he was going to pass out from the way his chest had grown tight around his heart. Instead, he'd nodded silently, knowing that his refusal wouldn't deter her - and selfishly wanting a few more minutes together with her, even knowing what she was intending to do.

Now, as he struggled - and failed - to find those words, he could only watch as Sonya picked up the small bundle she'd brought with her and opened the door to the vehicle, sliding one smooth leg out. Framed like this, back-lit by a nearby street-lamp, she was almost heart-rendingly beautiful, having taken extra time on her appearance for the 'grand finale'.

Chuck's hands tightened on the steering wheel, and he struggled not to cry.

"Chuck." Sonya said, softly and hesitantly. "Would you... walk me to my 'special place'?" Chuck swallowed thickly. "Sure. Anything you want, Sonya."

Sliding out of the vehicle, Chuck didn't even think to lock it - right now, a little thing like having his car stolen wasn't important enough to register. Feeling numb, he walked around the vehicle and held his arm out, rather stiffly. Sonya took it... by sliding her arm through it and around his waist.

Closing his eyes and praying for the strength not to make this harder than it had to be, he put his hand around her waist too. Letting her take control - by the pressure of her hand on his waist - Chuck let her guide him down a long, sloping path that eventually wound a curving bend around a stand of trees.

It was at this stand of trees that Sonya - still with her arm around his waist - turned in. Biting on his lower lip, Chuck let her lead her towards the small clearing in the center.

He definitely didn't want to be there when she actually... did the deed. But, if that's what she wanted, he was going to stand by and watch. If she felt the need to have a witness to her final actions, he'd play the part for her, regardless of how much it would cost him. He owed her that, at the very least.

Reaching the center of the small clearing. Sonya stopped, and slowly withdrew her arm from Chuck's waist. Untying the twine that held her bundle together, she flicked her wrists, fluffing out the large blanket she'd brought with her, laying it on the ground. With slow, nervous motion, she slowly sank down on to it, stiffly positioning herself until she was laying on one half of it, hands behind her head, staring upwards at the clear, night sky.

"Have you ever seen the stars so clear and bright, Chuck?" She asked, her voice thick and heavy.

Chuck had grown up in Texas, on a working ranch - there'd been many a night he'd stared up at the clear sky. But, somehow, she was right - he'd never seen a night quite like this one...

"No, I haven't." Chuck said, his own voice barely recognizable.

"Why don't you lie down?" She said, slowly. "Just sort of... look at the sky for awhile."

Chuck, clenched his hands into fists and took a deep breath - then slowly settled down beside her, swearing to savor any minutes she was willing to give him, before...

The lay in perfect silence for several long moments, staring up at the night sky, the stars shining like new-cut diamonds across a velvet background.

She finally broke the silence, her voice sounding oddly stained, and breathy - as if she were having trouble breathing.

"It... It's kinda... chilly huh?"

The incongruous nature of her words took Chuck aback. "Uh yeah. I guess it is."

Several more minutes passed in utter silence, while Chuck wondered - vaguely - what was with the 'small talk'...

When she spoke this time, her voice was even more distorted - and hesitant.

"Some... Some people, uh... would... um... Would find this, kinda... kinda, uh romantic."

'Jeez.' Chuck thought, bemused. "She sounds as nervous as a girl on her first da.." His brain came screeching to a halt, mid-thought...

...and his heart stopped dead in his chest.

A doctor would argue that was impossible - the only times a heart stopped beating was in the case of death, or severe myocardial infarction. Immediate medical treatment would be needed to restart it.

Nevertheless, Chuck would be willing to swear that for three long seconds, that's exactly what happened while he tried to absorb the implications of his thought.

'No...' He thought, stunned. 'I.. I must be...' Then, voice trembling, she said:

"Kinda... chilly out... huh?"

Chuck swallowed, his heart now going again - three times it's normal speed. He had to take three deep breaths before his voice would work again, and when he spoke his voice sounded strained and high-pitched to his own ears.

"Well..." He said, slowly. "Maybe... maybe you could... come a little closer and... warm up..."

He slide the arm nearest to her from under his head, placing in straight out, directly behind her own golden crown.

For an eternal instant, he lay like that, berating himself for reading something into the situation...

...then she moved. Nervously and awkwardly - but, on her own, she shifted herself so that her head lay on his arm...

...and her body pressed against his side.

'Sonya is laying in my arms!' Chuck thought, incredulously, his heart pounding so loud he could barely hear his own thoughts.

There was only one possible thing he could do - other than just simply lay there, of course, the very inactivity becoming a sort of action of it's own. But, if what he thought was happening was happening, that would be the worst thing he could do...

...so, hesitant and awkward, her rolled over slightly and lowered his lips to hers.

* * * * *

A very large part of her couldn't believe she was doing this. In many ways, it felt so very wrong - so sick, so strange, so... so utterly inconceivable.

But she had to know. The thoughts had been plaguing her for two weeks, and she'd founder herself wondering about it more and more frequently... and every time she wondered what it would be like, it was always Chuck that she'd imagined 'satisfying her curiosity.'

So she had to know. one way or the other. If it turned out that she couldn't live with what she was about to do well, then she'd really be no worse off, right? In fact, it would just be added incentive to add to her flagging willpower.

Because, during the past two weeks, she'd found herself committing the ultimate sacrilege. She'd be in the middle of doing something - and be shocked to find that she was enjoying herself. Sometimes it was a sort of content joy, just the sense of things going right - and other times it had been a bright, clear joy. Happiness. The will... and reason... to live.

Almost all of those last situations had occurred when she was with Chuck - and it scared the hell out of her. Despite this body she was wearing, she shouldn't be feeling... 'that way' about anyone.

But she was. Though she'd tried to deny it, she hadn't been able to. So, she'd come down to this. This... ultimate test. By the end of the evening, she was either going to have a solid, unimpeachable reason for dying...

...or an equally unarguable reason to give up the struggle inside, and decide to live. Not half-heartedly, like she'd been doing now - but, for the first time in her life, to get into the game completely, throw caution and worries to the wind. Full speed ahead, and damn the torpedoes.

Trembling, heart racing, she felt Chuck's lips press against hers... and she closed her eyes and kissed back. It was awkward, at first, and something deep inside her tried, desperately, to get her to stop... but she pushed on past that, devoting all her attention and will-power to kissing Chuck thoroughly and completely - no matter what happened, she wasn't going to be able to accuse herself of doing a half- assed job of this.

Then, with a start, she realized something...

...this felt really, really good...

* * * * *

In the first instant his lips touched hers, Sonya went as stiff as a board, and Chuck nearly had a heart attack...

...then she seemed to melt in his arms, and began to kiss him back. Enthusiastically.

Hesitantly, Chuck let his free arm sweep over them, then - very slowly and carefully - brought it to rest against her waist, while devoting most attention to the long, slow, deep kiss they were sharing.

When his arm touched her body... she didn't flinch or stiffen. Leaving it there for a long second to make sure, he very, very slowly began to slide it across the soft fabric of the white silk blouse she was wearing, gradually closing in to the spot where the sheer fabric strained over her magnificent bust.

She made no move to stop him. She continued to kiss him with unabated vigor as his hand very gently slid over top of her right breast, barely putting any pressure on the bra beneath as his cupped hand hovered in place...

* * * * *

Sonya had never known it was possible to be so intensely aware of another person's presence. Every spot where her and Chuck's body touched, no matter how lightly, seemed to burn with painless fire...

...which had apparently ignited another fire, deep inside her belly, one that caused her crotch to become very warm and damp. For the past two weeks, every time this had happened she'd been ashamed by her reactions to Chuck - now, she let herself revel in the sensations.

The fact that Chuck was obviously equally nervous came as a surprise - and a comfort. Somehow, she'd assumed that, given the chance, he'd just 'dive right in'. She knew, for a fact, that he found her body very attractive - and enjoyed her company, as a person, too. But the thought that a handsome, wealthy man with a willing woman in his arms would be as nervous as she was... well, that was a new one, and she found it comforting... and 'cute'.

And, now that she'd committed herself to doing this... kind of annoying. She was glad he wasn't taking her for granted... but he didn't need to be so awkward, either. She was going to go through with this, come hell or high water.

So, she gave her torso a quick, sudden twist...

And felt a very pleasant sensation indeed as her tit was thrust quite firmly upwards into Chuck's warm palm.

* * * * *

There are certain, subtle signs a woman can use....

Chuck never really thought of himself as a ladies' man - but he did have some experience. Sonya's sudden movement was a pretty clear indication of what she wanted.

So Chuck gently squeezed the breast that had been offered to his hand.. then let go.

...and, unbuttoning the top three buttons of her shirt, slid his hand inside, and down to her left, bra- encased breast, lightly fondling and squeezing it, like he'd found himself fantasizing about so often recently.

It was even better than he'd imagined it would be...

* * * * *

Sonya moaned low in the back of her throat, wrapping her arms around Chuck's neck and kissing him with a renewed passion.

She'd found that she'd really enjoyed fondling her own breasts, enjoying the sensation immensely. She'd never thought that it could feel so much better when somebody else did it...

...but it did. Chuck's hands seemed to hold some magic that caused her pleasure centers to flare into unparalleled life, and she couldn't believe what she'd been missing all this time. As good as fondling her own body felt, she'd been wasting all that time when she could have been feeling this !

Forgoing any semblance of subtly, Sonya uncoiled one hand from around his neck, reached down - and tore her blouse open, heedless of the buttons that popped off and flew into the darkness. By feel, her long-nailed fingers found the clasps at the front of her bra, and released them, allowing Chuck's questing hand full access to her now-bare breasts.

* * * * *

Feeling her bra drop away, Chuck couldn't help himself - he broke the kiss to look down at her magnificent, bare breasts, barely visible in the star-lit darkness of the night - yet more enticing than they'd ever appeared in his dreams.

Guiltily, he looked back at her face - to find her smiling angelically at him. Slowly, she nodded....

...then gasped, and he slid around slightly, to allow one hand access to one breast - while he lowered his mouth to the other and began to nibble at her swollen, warm nipple. He flicked it with his tongue while his other hand kneaded her other breast gently.

Chuck was nearly ready to cum in his pants...

* * * * *

'Why didn't I think of that...?' Sonya thought in bemusement as she let her head loll back and she moaned in pleasure.

God knows, her breasts were big enough that - had it occurred to her - she could have sucked her own nipples.

Then again, it probably wouldn't feel nearly as good as when Chuck did it. Still, it was something to keep in mind.

As good as all this felt, though... she was getting so hot she felt like she was about to burst into flames. Reaching out, she let her fingers find Chuck's waist, then slid down to undo his pants...

* * * * *

As much as he was enjoying her magnificent butt, when her hands found his waistband, Chuck moved his own hands down to her denim shirt, undoing the buttons and pulling the skirt down...

..to find she wore no panties beneath. Just her nylons, clipped to a garter-belt that didn't 'get in the way'.

There was a momentary 'bobble' as they tried - and failed - to get his pants off without taking off his boots first, but once they'd gotten past that, Chuck found himself on his knees, wearing his shirt and his socks, looking down at Sonya's nearly naked body.

Chuck very gently shifted into position, knowing that this was her first time. With gentle hands, he spread her legs, catching a whiff of her aroused scent on the light breeze. His cock was as hard as it had ever been, and he was ready...

...and so was she.

Gently grasping her hips, Chuck leaned forward... and slid his cock smoothly and easily into her hot, wet cunt.

* * * * *

Sonya cried out in pleasure.

She'd used the dildo regularly since becoming a woman - but it was nothing compared to the warm, throbbing cock that filled her cunt. It was as if she had been missing something, and Chuck's cock was fulfilling that unknown need. Pleasure, more intense than any she'd felt, speared through her as she drove his cock smoothly into her cunt - then began to draw his hips back, preparing for the second thrust.

This time, she was ready - and she thrust her own hips upwards to meet his thrust as he came down again.

That incredible pleasure increased, and she moaned again as she began to drive her hips in syncopated rhythm with his own long, hard thrusts.

"Oh, yes!" Sonya cried as the pleasure rocked through her body. "Oh, Chuck... yes!"

Their movements became more frantic - and less coordinated - as the pleasure built, and built, and built...

Sonya let loose with a long, high-pitched, wordless scream of pleasure as the orgasm burst upon her like an explosion of ecstasy, taking her in it's grip and completely blocking out the outside world...

* * * * *

Chuck, panting and sweating, sighed as the last of his cum drained from his cock and into Sonya's shuddering, orgasm-rocked body. He gently rolled off of her - then immediately snuggled against her, helping keep her body warm against the chill night air that brushed across their sweat-slicked skin.

For an eternity, Sonya rode the after-glow of her orgasm down before she felt ready to speak. "Chuck...?" She said in a warm, self-satisfied tone.

"Yeah, Sonya?"

" 'Member what I said the day you first proposed this whole, crazy idea? What I said it would take to give me a will to live?"

Chuck's heart skipped a beat. "Yeah ?"

She grinned. "I think that that definitely qualifies as 'something different' "

BACK TO FUN ZONE

WET T-SHIRT CONTEST TONITE!!!! $500 IN PRIZES!!!

SUMMARY: A government project, a computer glitch, and one man's fantasy, ends up turning two men into airline stewardesses who work as hookers on the side.

2B Or Not 2B...

By Gunslinger

Feet dragging on the concrete, Alan DeWitt walked up the walkway that led to his apartment building, his shadow standing in sharp contrast on the rough surface before him, dark against the golden- yellow glow of the early morning sunlight.

Yawning, the dark-haired youth pulled open the door to the building and stepped inside. Almost immediately, his slightly too-large nose wrinkled at the smell of his grimy jeans and grubby denim shirt

- during the walk home, the early-morning breeze had been enough to ease the burnt-plastic odor of his work clothes, but in the confined lobby of the building, the smell came back full strength.

Marshaling his energy, the rangy twenty-four-year-old man hurried down the stairs into the cool air of the apartment's basement level. Digging his keys out of his pocket, he walked halfway down the poorly-lit and clammy corridor to the bright orange door whose raised-brass door numbers indicated 2B. Unlocking it, he stepped into the foyer of his basement apartment.

The slightly damp warmth of the electric heaters hit him as he hurriedly began to strip out of his clothing, dumping it into a small laundry basket he kept beside the door for just that purpose. Once naked, he pulled on the heavy dark-blue terry-cloth bathrobe he had hanging on the coat rack beside the door, dropped his apartment key into the pocket, and grabbed the laundry basket. Stepping back out of the apartment, he padded down the hallway to the laundry room, which was conveniently located only a dozen feet from his door, and across the hall.

A lot about Alan's new apartment was 'convenient', considering his current lifestyle. Alan worked nights at a factory that produced vinyl siding for houses, and the apartment was located fairly close by, all things considered. Despite the '2B' designation ('B' indicated 'Basement'), Alan's apartment was the only one in the basement - 1B was used (and very rarely at that) as an office by the buildings owner, when he was there. So, aside from the muted noises from the laundry room, Alan's apartment was quiet during the days, allowing him to sleep. It was also less expensive than the same-sized apartments above ground, 'safer', since there were no windows that could be broken into, and cooler in the summer.

As Alan dumped his load of smelly clothes into the washer and started it running, he reflected there were a few drawbacks to the apartment. Some of them were the expected ones, of course - being in the basement, it tended to be more clammy than an above-ground apartment, and it tended to hold odors longer due to the lack of windows - one reason that Alan avoided frying onions or garlic, or the like.

However - there was a drawback to this particular apartment that Alan had never - could never have - imagined...

Nobody had lived in the basement apartment before Alan. The building was fairly new, and (understandably) the basement apartment is always a hard sell, especially since it didn't come with a parking spot. Despite that, from the day Alan had moved in, he'd been getting phone calls and even letters to the apartment, with different - and always feminine - names being addressed.

Part of the problem came from what Alan had considered an asset - the apartment came with a phone line and a cable-modem line already installed and activated. Apartments 1B and 2B were different in layout - and, because there was a slight slope on the grounds, 1B had small, narrow windows. Not knowing which of the apartments would rent, if either, the owner had pre-installed the lines to use for his office. That was one of the other 'perks' of 2B - the phone and Internet were free, paid for by the owner just to keep the 'office' option open. Only long-distance on the phone was billed to Alan.

Apparently, somebody had known about the phone number - and had been getting a kick out of spreading an 'Urban Legend' about it. Alan had heard the story a couple of times now, from abashed young men who'd called. Apparently, somebody - nobody knew who - had started a rumor that Alan's apartment was the much vaunted 'Layover Apartment' of myth and legend - an apartment maintained by an airline to house stewardesses on layovers between flights. It was even plausible, sort of, since the airport wasn't too far away, actually laying behind the industrial park in which Alan's work was located. The problem was - whoever had started the rumor about Apartment 2B had also been 'kind' enough to include the phone number. This joke had been started before Alan had moved in, when the apartment was empty - anybody calling wouldn't get an answer, and the myth lived on in the assumption that there simply wasn't any stewardesses currently staying there.

If it had been from a different perspective, Alan might have gotten a kick out of it - but, as it was, it was driving him slightly nuts. Thanks to the fact that the phone line was the owners, rather than his, he couldn't even change the number, and the owner of the building refused to do so.

While his clothes were going through their cycle, Alan returned to his apartment and showered thoroughly, washing the tiny fragments of shaved plastic from his hair. After drying himself off, he slipped on a pair of shorts and a T-shirt and padded back to the laundry room to switch his clothes to the dryer. With only a few items, it didn't take all that long to dry, and he read a magazine while he waited. When they were done, he stuffed the warm clothes into his basket and went back to his apartment.

Making sure that the ringer to his phone was turned off - to avoid any more of those annoying calls - Alan stretched and headed off to bed, following his usual arrangement of grabbing four hours now and then four hours before leaving for work, so that he'd have a few hours in the middle of the day to take care of other things.

Turning off the light in the bedroom, he curled up under the covers, asleep before his head hit the pillow.

* * * * *

"C'mon you goddamn.." Nick swore, with passion, even going so far as to bang the side of his computer.

The aging Pentium-100 seemed to respond to the treatment, as the website Nick was aiming for finally came up on the screen.

"That's better..." Nick mumbled, annoyed. His computer had all sorts of problems as it was, being a patched-together system - but it was worst while he was on the Internet, because of the fact that his jury-rigged modem suffered from severe line-noise, do to the fact that the connection lines were unshielded, and tended to pick up nearby radio transmissions and add them into the flow of data.

Clicking open a new 'posting' window, the thin, stringy-haired blond youth sat back and sipped at his Jolt while considering what to do today.

Finally, he decided to add another chapter to the 'Apartment 2B' saga - responses to that little myth had been dropping recently, and he was rather proud of starting that one - though, of course, his hobby precluded him from actually taking advantage of it.

Leaning forward, he began to type a message into the window...

+ + + + +

Deep in the bowels of the computer, a processor worked silently, interpreting the coordinate data from the keyboard and converting it into the correct coding for alphanumeric text. Passing this information forward, it entered the system proper, transferred to a sub-routine that collated the information, duplicated it, and rerouted the two copies. One iteration of the data was sent outwards to be displayed on the screen - the other was routed into the queue being sent to Com Port one, where it ran through the cord that brought it into the modem. There, the data was compressed, reformatted, and encoded into the carrier wave. This carrier wave guided the information towards the output...

...where a burst of 'line noise' from the opening riff from a local heavy-metal band's premiere on the local station was being picked up, the high-pitched whining, screeching and chatter being added into the transmission signal.

Passing through copper-cored telephone wire, the data stream passed through three separate routing junctions in the phone system before reaching the hacked-into Government server used by Nick.

There the data-stream was received by the computer and decompressed and demodulated for routing instructions.

The hiss, squeals and pops of the heavy-metal music gave the machine a millisecond's pause - but were rendered into data, the sounds being close enough to those of alphanumeric code.

The computer hesitated - and double-checked the information, which was requesting access to a secure site. Finding it to be correct, it rerouted the data to the site indicated...

+ + + + +

"Oh, geez..." Nick muttered - this was taking 'forever'. Finally, the icon blinked and the window indicated it was ready.

Leaning forward, Nick started by typing in his current 'handle' for this particular site: 'OCTOG'

In the section for 'reply to', he just reached out and hit a bunch of keys at random, ending up with 'sdgui7'.

Nick hit 'enter', and waited for the cursor to drop to the next field.

+ + + + +

The information, streaming through the system and re-routed through the provider as 'specifies', ended up in a terminal known as XMP-N1.

XMP, because that was the standard contraction for a high-speed Multi-processing computer - a super computer, a Cray supercomputer, to be exact, worth millions of dollars.

N1, because it was the first (and currently only) XMP machine within the NSA's main headquarters in Ford Meade, Maryland. Part of the massive computer was busy analyzing signal intelligence, correlating data, and (illegally) monitoring US phone and data transfer.

When the information stream coming in the modem arrived in the Cray's system window, the massive, powerful machine requested - demanded - that the 'intruder' identify themselves. It was promptly informed:

'OCTOG'

The computer checked it's access files - and found that the Office Chief, Technical Operations Group, was an authorized user. It then asked OCTOG for his password, a randomly-generated string of letters and numbers that couldn't be 'guessed' by a hacker.

In a twenty-three billion, five-hundred and twenty-seven million, eighty-two thousand, four hundred and seventy-two - to - one fluke, the random string Nick typed in matched the correct code for OCTOG, and the system let him in, asking for the procedure requested...

+ + + + +

Twiddling his fingers, Nick waited for the icon to finally jump to the 'Subject' field - which it did. Leaning forward, Nick quickly typed: 'RE:APT 2B'. Into the window...

+ + + + +

The Cray accepted the command, and ran through it's memory banks for the specified protocols.

It found them - a program designed to 'spoof' other XMP-class computers. However, the particular program was a 'war-game'; variation, run up by the 'Tech Boys' as a contingency plan - rather than 'simply' spoofing foreign systems, this was designed for a world-wide system hunt, including American systems.

The only reason the variation program had been written was for the 'worst case' scenario of a major catastrophe in progress - such as an imminent world-wide EMP, either man-made, or from a monstrous solar flare. The program was designed to run exclusive for a short while, 'stealing' everything it could before the system was shut down to avoid EMP damage, in the hopes of giving the US - and, more specifically, the NSA - a giant head-start once the computers were re-initialized.

According to the never-before-implemented instructions it'd been given. All other computer programs in the system were dumped, and all other access was locked out as the system went to work, hunting for access into every XMP and comparable system in the world. This, however, was a massive, processor-intensive job...

+ + + + + + +

The cursor continued to blink - but nothing was happening.

"Godamnit!" Nick said, slapping the side of the of computer. This time, however, the action failed to remedy the problem.

He briefly considered cold-booting the system to clear it - then shrugged. He didn't have anything he really wanted to do, other than that posting. Sometimes, this problem just cleared itself. He'd wait.

Leaving the computer running, Nick headed out to the living room of his run-down apartment, flopping onto the worn old sofa to watch some TV.

By the time the next commercial rolled around on the show he'd picked, Nick needed to 'drain the main vein', and he quickly relived himself of used Jolt. Heading back to the living room, he peeked into the spare bedroom where his computer was - and was glad to see that the Icon had dropped down to the message window.

Seating himself at the computer, Nick quickly typed in the first paragraph of his message. 'Call 596-2178. If a man answers, ask for a stewardess. A second later, you'll be speaking to somebody with a sexy, feminine voice. Ask her name - which will be something equally sexy and feminine.'

Nick hit 'enter' - and the blinking cursor froze.

With a sigh, Nick pushed back from the computer, and went to watch a little more TV, figuring he'd check again on the next commercial...

* * * * *

Alan was awakened by the sound of his phone ringing.

"Whadda..?" Alan objected, blearily, fumbling for the light switch on the lamp on his bedside table. It flared into life, and he blinked against the glare. He reached over and grabbed the small phone.

"I coulda sworn I... hey, I did. Damn think must be broken..." Alan mumbled, putting the receiver to his ear. "Y'ello?"

A strange, atonal voice came over the line. "A stewardess." "Wha..?" Alan started to ask...

...when a strange, eerie sound issued from the ear piece - and arcing crackles of electricity jumped from the microphone into his neck.

His neck muscles began to jump, writhe and twitch, making anything more than a high-pitched keening sound impossible as the electricity coursed through his neck. Panicked Alan tried to hang up the phone - but found he couldn't move. He was locked into position, completely unable to budge a single muscle in his entire body as the arcing electricity continued to snake up and down his throat.

Then it was over, the crackling electricity vanishing as quickly as it had begun - but Alan, rattled and, quite literally, shocked, found he still couldn't hang up the phone.

"What's your name?" That same atonal voice asked, the lack of inflection making the question sound more like a statement.

Alan wanted to scream at the voice and ask what was happening, or slam the receiver down - but he did neither. Instead, completely against his will, he found himself speaking...

...in a higher-pitched, richly feminine voice. A warm, sexy, 'smoky' contralto that was most definitely feminine.

"hi... I'm Jasmine..." Emerged, unbidden, from Alan's throat, his eyes went wide in shock and horror.

Then there was a 'click' of a disconnecting line - and Alan found he could move again. The first thing he did was throw the phone away from him as if it was a deadly snake.

"What the hell?" Alan asked, out loud - then his hands flew to his mouth as that same, sexy feminine voice emerged. "I.. I sound like a woman... This.. this can't be happening!"

Apparently, it was - even his denials were emerging in the tones of a woman, now startled and horrified. Definitely still feminine, though.

"This has to be a nightmare!" Alan told himself in that cursed new voice. "Why the hell would this happen? Why would I say my name is 'Jasmine'? I'm not a woman named Jasmine, I'm a woman named Jasmine..."

The new shock piled on top of the old one, and if it had been possible for Alan's eyes to get any wider, they would have. Gaping, he tried to say his name again.

"Jasmine. No, goddamn it - Jasmine!" He kicked his leg against the side of the bed in frustration, while his heart raced at the inexplicable events occurring to him. "Jasmine. Jasmine, Jasmine, Jasmine!

JASMINE!"

No matter how hard he tried - he just couldn't say his own name...

* * * * *

Peering into the room, Nick saw that the cursor had finally dropped down a line.

Walking over to the office-discard chair he used, he dropped into it and leaned forward to type...

* * * * *

"My god...!" Alan said, hands at his throat. "What the hell's happening to me?"

He briefly considered calling somebody for help - but, considering that it seemed to be some sort of bizarre phone malfunction that had done this to him - decided he'd be better off going, in person, to a doctor.

Quickly, Alan pulled on some clothes, all the while muttering to himself - more to see if his voice would crack and slide back into the 'normal' range than for any other reason. It didn't happen though - even his mutters sounded sexy and feminine.

Throwing on the last of his clothes, Alan left his bedroom and headed down the hall towards the front door. He paused in the living room, to grab his sneakers and pull them on his feet...

...when suddenly the TV and stereo came to life. The stereo snapped on, sending a weird, warbling tone through the apartment, while the Screen of the TV flared into too-bright life, a garish, blinding white glow that was accompanied by the smell of burning electronics as the TV's electron gun pumped out more energy, by several orders of magnitude, than it was supposed to.

Alan cried out in his high-pitched new voice as a painful warmth enveloped his body - a warmth like standing in a hot tropic sun, as the sunlight - filled with UV and other radiation - plowed through his body.

He felt a powerful tingle run through his skin, and he shuddered backwards a single step. He intended to do much more than that - to run from the room - but his body once more betrayed him, locking him into place as the TV's glaring rain of electrons continued to sleet through his body.

Then it was over, and Alan dropped to one knee, panting, as the flow of heat slowly dissipated from his skin.

"Holy shit...!" Alan swore, staring down at his skin.

His completely smooth, hairless skin, from which all the body hair had fallen. The smooth, silky skin that was a richly tanned color, a golden shade that was perfect and even.

"No.. no, this can't be happening..." Alan tried to convince himself - but with as little luck as he'd had earlier in the same endeavor. No matter how impossible this all was - it was real.

Alan stumbled back to his feet. He needed to get out of the apartment. He needed to find help - though whether he needed a doctor, a psychiatrist or an exorcist was now an open debate. All he knew was that he needed help, and badly...

...which was why he was very surprised - downright shocked, not to put to fine a point on it - to find himself heading towards the kitchen.

"What the... Hey! What's the hell's going on?" Alan shouted in his altered voice, trying desperately - and failing miserably - to get his body to obey his thoughts. It wouldn't, his own will and choice overridden by alternate programming embedded into his mind.

Helplessly, he entered the kitchen and walked over to the microwave on the counter. Helpless to stop himself, he opened a nearby drawer and removed the heavy, cast-metal meat mallet he had.

The door to the microwave was tough - but, unwillingly, Alan went after it with a vengeance, smashing through the protective, shielded plastic, and ripping out everything that stood between the inner 'gun' and himself.

Then he stepped back and stood perfectly still, as the microwave - apparently of it's own accord - suddenly hummed into life. It was a different sound then it usually made when running, the noise of it rising and falling in pitch, as the emitter inside cycled through highly selective frequencies, the high frequency radiation sleeting through his body. Desperately, Alan tried to move, to haul himself out of the invisible beams of radiation that was soaking his body - but he couldn't.

As he stood there, he began to feel a strange tingling running through his body. Unlike the tingling caused by the TV, this sensation was much, much deeper then merely running through his skin - it seemed to be invading him, running through his very sinew and fiber, through his muscles and bones and being.

Then the humming stopped as the microwave shut down...

...and Alan screamed, his high-pitched new voice echoing through the apartment as intense pain gripped his body, sending him sprawling to the floor, writhing and jerking with the agony that seared every cell of his body.

It seemed to last an eternity. It seemed to go on forever, his body being ripped apart and reassembled from the inside out, torn apart molecule by molecule, atom by atom, and rebuilt into new and different forms...

...then, thankfully, Alan's mind overloaded from the searing, unending white-hot agony, and he slipped into blessed unconsciousness.

* * * * *

INTERLUDE

NATIONAL SECURITY AGENCY,

Fort Meade, Maryland, That Same Time

"We've found it!"

The head of the Tech Ops division - also known, to the computer at least, as 'OCTOG' - turned away from the useless data terminal as the technician ran into the room, waving a thick pile of print paper.

"Well?" He barked, frustrated - the XMP-N1 had been 'locked up' for half an hour now, which was bad enough - but other government agencies were reporting the same thing, and if this was some sort of foreign attack...

"It's not a glitch..." The technician panted, out of breath from doing the hundred-meter-dash from the diagnostics room. "The computer's running a pre-programmed lock-out code for a program."

"Which one?" OCTOG demanded. "Who ran it?"

"We won't be able to get that information until the computer's done." The technician said, flushing. "We, uh... never programmed any of the scenarios to accept outside input from anybody but the initiator."

"Why the hell not?" OCTOG roared.

The technician decided it was best not to explain that the previous Head of Ops had decided that it was safest that way - to keep those 'damned boys from the Company' - CIA - from being able to override.

"Uh.. that's just how it's written. We'll have to wait for the program to finish before..."

"The hell with that!" OCTOG yelled, red-faced. "Have the FBI track down the sunnuvabitch who did this - later. Right now - get that computer back on-line!"

The technician swallowed. "Uh... sir... We can't do that. We're still locked out, and..."

The Head of Ops took a step forward - and, instead of yelling, his voice dropped dangerously low. "Are.. you.. telling me.. that.. we.. can't, can not, get that computer back on line?"

The technician swallowed. "We, uh, could, um... well - 'reboot' it, sir - but it's not designed to do that, and it would flush the cache through the data link. Whoever or whatever is doing this could get a whole shitload of..."

"Whoever's doing it can access the whole goddamn network right now!" OCTOG said, jabbing the man's chest with a finger. "Not just ours, but the Pentagon, the FBI, the CIA and the White House Signals office - whatever program's running is locking through all those systems, damn you! We even have reports that foreign XMPs are being 'raided'. I want that sunnuvabitch shut down, and shut down NOW!"

There was only one thing the technician could conceivably say at this point, so he said it. "Yes sir."

Taking a deep breath, the technician walked over to a console. Tapping his supervision or the shoulder, he pointed to a section of the board that was never, ever used. Since OCTOG's demand had probably been heard by everybody in the building, there was no need to say anything else.

Taking a deep breath, the supervisor of the watch retrieved a small ring of keys from his belt. Silently, lips compressed in disapproval, he selected one, and used it to unlock the plastic cover that sat over the big red button beneath.

Taking another deep breath, he hesitated - then pushed the button.

There was a sudden chatter from the Cray as it emptied all of its bubble memory - then, for the first time since it had been installed in 1982, the mighty computing machine's soft hum faded and the banks of LED indicators went dark as the system powered down completely, cutting off all functions and access.

* * * * *

Nick waited impatiently for the cursor to drop down another line so he could finish his post...

...when his screen suddenly flashed as a massive amount of data began to flood into the system. More data than the transfer protocols of his computer could handle, more data than could ever be stored on its paltry four megabyte hard drive. More data than Nick could possibly understand.

With an electronic sizzle, Nick's computer and modem gave up the ghost, the raw data being way more than it could handle.

It didn't fry out quite fast enough, though...

Just as the modem's unshielded terminals acted like an antenna to pick up radio waves and add them into the data stream, now they acted as a transmitter, pouring out a wave of electromagnetic energy into the air. It was a powerful, complex transmission, more pure data than had ever been transmitted in a broad-band stream before - even compressed streamed satellite datalinks for real-time video imaging, like that used by the CIA, didn't carry this much data in a raw blast of energy.

The output antenna on the dish of a spy satellite didn't carry a warning sign about the signal power and level - after all, it was in orbit, and the signal was harmless by the time it reached the earth's surface. This signal, however, was originating approximately two feet away from Nick...

* * * * *

For the first instant after he awoke, Alan simply stared up at the ceiling and wondered where the hell he was - and why he felt so weird. First of all, it felt like his pants had shrunk in the wash or something

- they were clamped painfully tight around his hips and ass, though - oddly - they seemed fine in the crotch - tight, but it didn't feel like his cock and balls were being crushed.

Even stranger was the heavy weight on his chest - it felt like he had a couple of bags of flour or something sitting on his chest, which was just weird - especially since he could feel his shirt against his chest, even though - somehow - the weight felt as if it were between the shirt and his chest - which was simply impossible. There were dozens of more odd, slightly 'off' sensations he was feeling, but they were minor compared to those ones. Still and all, uncomfortable as it was, it wasn't actually painful...

At the thought of pain, memory came flooding back. With a gasp, Alan sat bolt upright.

The simple motion, one he'd performed hundreds - nay, thousands - of times in his life...

...felt completely and utterly wrong.

Alan's head dropped so he could stare at himself.. and it took several seconds for his brain to translate what it saw. Not that it hadn't seen it before - it had just never seen it from this angle, and so was unprepared to interpret it.

A pair of very large, very feminine breasts were stretching out the white T-shirt he wore. An amazingly abundant view of tanned, golden cleavage was visible, and large, dark nipples were clearly delineated through the light colored and textured fabric.

Stunned, Alan started to lift his hands to touch the breasts, to dispel the dream he must be having...

...and stared at the slender, feminine arms that emerged from his T-shirt's short sleeves. The arms tipped with slender, feminine hands whose slender fingers were tipped with long, clear nails.

Alan screamed - and it came out in that high-pitched, all-too-feminine voice...

...that now matched her all-too-feminine body, because she had certain very bad - horrified - ideas about why her pants now fit the way they did.

Alan - or the woman who had been Alan - scrambled to her feet, almost absent-mindedly discarding the running shoes that were now too large for her dainty new feet.

Staggering more from fear and shock than from the unfamiliar weight and balance of her altered form, Alan staggered to the bathroom and flipped on the light, coming to a dead stop and staring at the reflection in the mirror.

A beautiful, sexy young woman gaped back.

Her short, dark hair framed a beautiful face that was tanned a golden brown, with large, dark eyes and a nicely formed nose. Her lips were full and soft, and gracefully complemented her high-cheeked face with its pointed jaw. A long, swan-like neck lead downwards to the rest of her equally feminine - and attractive - body.

She had a slender, supple figure, that was somehow 'boyish' without being the least bit masculine - she was definitely all woman. Though her hips were slightly wider then they had been before, they were still slender, for a woman - but that was partially offset by the even slimmer waist. If there was any doubt of her gender, though, you could glance in either direction and be 'reassured' that she was all woman - because the crotch of the jeans were pulled tight, revealing no hint of a bulge. No, the 'bulge' was the way her T-shirt was stretched over firm, round breasts that must be a healthy DDD- cup, if not larger - the size of half watermelons, protruding from her chest in near perfect domes, with only a hint of 'natural' sag, and tipped with large, dark nipples atop equally dark domed aureole.

Alan had become an absolute vision of loveliness. And it scared and horrified her to no end.

"Oh... my.. God..." The new woman whispered in shock, slumping against the bathroom door's frame as her vision went hazy and gray.

It was completely and utterly impossible - yet it had happened. She was now a woman...

Struggling to keep from fainting at the shock of seeing her gorgeous new reflection, Alan stumbled out of the bathroom. She needed help - and she didn't want to leave the apartment, not like this. In fact, what she wanted to do was curl up into a ball and fall asleep, then awaken to find it had all been some sort of dream - but the way her new, full bust swayed gently with every movement seemed to indicate that it wasn't going to happen. So - she'd have to leave the apartment and seek out help.

She had no idea who could actually help her right now, but she was clinging to the narrow thread of hope, anyway.

Staggering, she headed into the living room. She paused at the end of the short hallway - then dashed across the room in a sprint, her body feeling awkward and uncomfortable as she ran. Unable to stop completely, she hit the far wall pretty hard - but she ignored the brief burst of pain, and reached down.

With a swift jerk of her slender new hand, she unplugged the power bar that supplied electricity to the now-foul-smelling TV and stereo.

Pushing away from the wall, she looked around, searching for something to wear as shoes. Digging into the closet near the door, she found a pair of beach sandals with adjustable straps. Taking them to the couch, she adjusted the length of the straps so that they'd fit her smaller feet. It was an 'interesting' experience - to bend over and put them on, she had to 'crunch' down - which caused her new breasts to push firmly against the tight fabric covering her thighs...

Standing, Alan grabbed a jean jacket and pulled it on, shoving keys and wallet into the pockets...

..and the phone rang. She trembled at the sound, remembering what had heralded the beginning of this nightmare. When she'd thrown the phone in her room, it had ripped out of the socket, leaving the line 'free'... and now somebody (or something) was calling her. It might be whatever agency had caused this.. change. She didn't want to answer it.

Which was why she was so horrified to find herself helplessly walking over to the phone and picking it up. It didn't come as a complete 'surprise' - she knew she was going to do it the instant before she did

- but she just couldn't help herself. She really, really needed to answer the phone, even if she didn't want to.

"Hello, Jasmine speaking..." She said - and, again, she knew that she was going to say it. She couldn't help herself - just as she used a chipper, cheerful voice to say it. Though she wasn't really feeling that way, the mere thought of speaking in any other tones sent bolts of pain through her head, and she found herself almost eagerly acting cheerful, just to lessen the sudden belt of agony that whipped across her mind.

There was silence at the other end for a second, then:

"Uh, um.. Hi..." The male voice stammered, obviously nervous as hell. "Um.. This is going to sound weird, but, um.. are you a, um, uh... Flight attendant?"

Driven by that need, Alan found herself answering warmly, despite the fact that she'd figured out what this call was about - after all, she'd been getting similar ones ever since she moved in here. "That's right, I'm a stewardess. I'm on layover between flights, at the moment. Let me guess - you called to ask me out on a date."

"Uh, well. Yeah, I guess."

'No!' Alan shouted, in the vaults of her mind, struggling to ignore the nearly overwhelming need she felt - the need to accept the date. She managed to narrowly blurt out agreement, distracting the urge by slipping slightly off-topic. "So - what's your name?"

"Uh.. Steve." He paused. "Uh, so.. how about that date ?"

Alan struggled against the need that weighed down on her, like a ten-ton weight driven on her mind. She didn't want to say 'yes' - but to say 'no' flat out was nearly impossible - it was as if that ten-ton weight would crush her flat if she refused.

Holding back a whimper, she closed her eyes and gave in to the powerful urge to accept.

"Steve, I'd love to go out tonight. Why don't you meet me at the Tenth Street Bar at, say, eight or so?"

"Yeah, sure!" Steve said, his voice conveying his surprise - and elation. "Sure, the Tenth Street bar at eight. I'll be there."

"So will I." Alan - Jasmine - promised, her voice not revealing that she was near tears. "See you then."

She hung up the phone, feeling a wave of disgust wash over her at what had just happened - but also, a wave of excitement. Part of her was looking forward to tonight.

"Why is this happening to me?" She asked thin air - but received no response.

She wanted to curl up on the couch and just stay there, not moving, not having to deal with her well- endowed, beautiful new feminine body - or her mind, which had been 'programmed' to be Jasmine, and which provided pain and agony whenever she fought against the new persona.

However, that feminine persona was 'suggesting' that, since she had a date, she should go shopping to get something more suitable to wear...

"Oh, God, no " She gasped, arguing with herself - but the relentless need in her mind was implacable, and it felt like it would crush all that was the original Alan out of existence, leaving her a mindless drone, if she refused.

That might have seemed like an easy out, let herself be wiped clean, give the body she didn't want over to the imposed persona that did want it - but Alan couldn't do it. She had to maintain control, as much as she could, she had to live out playing the role of Jasmine - and struggle to regain herself and find a way to undo what had been done to her...

...if it was possible, a slender hope that seemed to fade with every passing second.

Swallowing back the sobs that wanted to rack her slender, tanned new body, Jasmine turned away from the phone, and headed out to do some shopping so she'd be ready for the date which she didn't want to go on...

* * * * *

Nick awoke to a pounding head, and a vile stench.

"Oh.. what happened " The skinny blond youth sat up from where he'd fallen on the floor, and swore at the sight of his charred and lightly smoking computer equipment.

"Crap " He muttered, pushing himself to his feet - and scratching at his chest. He wasn't quite sure what had happened to make him pass out, but he felt stiff, sore, and itchy all over, plus he had a throbbing head and a mild ringing in his ears. His best guess was that his patched-together computer had finally given up the ghost - the long delays in accepting his posting was probably a warning sign that he'd ignored at his own risk.

Making sure the smoldering, ruined electrical equipment was unplugged, Nick left the computer room, nose wrinkled in disgust. Not usually a fastidious person, he felt the need to shower - the smell of burnt plastic and ozone seemed to have seeped into his clothes, skin and hair, and hung around him even after opening the window to the computer room and closing the door.

Trotting into the bathroom, Nick started the shower running and stripped out of his grimy clothes - scratching almost frantically just about everywhere he could reach.

"Must be some sort of weird static-electricity thing..." He said, rubbing his arms and legs with a pained expression - it felt like every follicle of hair on his body was on fire, and it was driving him nuts.

Climbing under the spray of warm water, he began to wash vigorously - but he couldn't seem to get his skin to stop crawling and itching.

"Shit - if this keeps up, I'm gonna go crazy!" The slender youth swore to himself. Grimacing, he looked at the pack of razors resting on the ledge in the shower, below the mirror he used to shave while showering.

"Ah, hell..." He said, softly - then pulled out a razor. Carefully, he began shaving his chest - and almost sobbed in relief as that burning, itching sensation vanished when the hair was removed.

Despite not liking the general idea of shaving himself like this, he went to it with a will, removing every single follicle of body hair, and ending the terrible itching. It took forever - and a lot of razors - but he finally got all the body hair off, with only a few nicks and cuts.

"Oh, God... that feel's better..." He sighed in relief, then went back to washing up. Usually, he just sort of ignored his long, lank hair - but now he washed it vigorously, several times, to get the burnt- electronics smell out of it.

Finally - after the warm water was running cool - Nick stepped out of the shower and toweled off, grimacing at the feel of the towel across his denuded skin. It wasn't because it felt bad - actually it was kind of pleasant - but because of the fact it reminded him he'd just removed every trace of his masculine body hair.

Grimacing, he looked in the mirror over the sink.. and paused.

"Hey..." He said, startled, turning this way and that, looking at his slender, now-smooth body. "It doesn't look half bad on me, actually."

He thought the sight of his now hairless body would be repellent to him - but he found himself strangely pleased at the way he looked, the light softly gleaming from his smooth, unblemished skin. In fact, he felt sort of.. proud, at how smooth and soft his pale skin looked, now that the hair was gone. A real 'night-owl', Nick rarely left the apartment during the day, and his complexion was milky, smooth, and almost porcelain-perfect, and the new lack of any body hair only accented that, making him look almost like some idealized sculpture then a real person - he'd never realized how soft and flawless his skin was...

Pulling his gaze away from the oddly compelling reflection in the mirror, Nick padded out to his bedroom to throw some clothes on...

...then paused, grimacing. Usually, he wore clothes two or three times before hauling everything down to the Laundromat - but the sight and smell of the somewhat rank pile of dirty clothes made his stomach do slow, uncomfortable somersaults of disgust. The thought of putting the grimy clothes on his now clean and flawless skin was... repugnant.

Walking over, he checked his closet for some clean clothes - and grimaced when he found that the choice of clothing was rather limited, and not too appealing to him.

He grabbed the only pair of clean underwear in the house - a tiny little scrap of leopard-skin cloth that an ex-girlfriend had given him on Valentine's day one year. He'd never worn the small, tight-fitting underwear before, and he felt really weird about putting it on now - but it was the only clean ones he had, actually still in the original package. Oddly enough, they weren't that bad once he got them on, even if they did ride up a bit at the back, and were overly-sung in the crotch.

Next, he looked for some clean socks. Usually, he favored gray wool socks, but all he could find that was still clean was a pair of white athletic socks, and a pair of calf-high lightweight black dress socks.

He stared at the two pairs of socks, and started to grab the athletic socks... then paused, rubbing the somewhat heavy material between a thumb and forefinger. He repeated the motion with the dress socks, which were a lot finer, lighter, softer...

"Huh..." Nick grunted to himself, selecting the dress socks. They felt surprisingly nice as he put them on, the smooth fabric gliding over his equally smooth legs, up to just below the knees.

Looking in the closet once more, Nick considered his choice of shirts. There was a white dress shirt, which he knew to be rather stiff and uncomfortable, a woolen pull-over that would be way to warm... and a black silk shirt from his short-lived stint when he'd dated a girl who was into country music.

She'd liked to take him to Country bars, and his usual outfit had been the shirt, black jeans, and - yes, even a black cowboy hat.

Hell - she'd been that good looking...

Shrugging, he grabbed the silk shirt and pulled it on - but what had started out as brisk, efficient movements slowed, and he luxuriated in the feeling of the silk gliding across his skin as he pulled the garment on and did it up.

"Holy shit..." He breathed. "Shaving off my body hair made my skin really, really.. sensitive. God - now I know why rich guys were silk. This feels great, man."

The thought of how rich guys dressed was what prompted him to finish off his outfit with the one pair of dress slacks he owned - basic black, and he'd had them forever. As a matter of fact, he'd had them so long that they didn't fit well anymore, being from the time just after his growth spurt, when he'd been even skinnier. They were the right length - but they were skin-tight across his hips, ass and crotch, and the waist-band dug into his waist. It was annoying and painful...

...but a look in the mirror showed that the whole black-on-black ensemble looked good on him, setting off his pale skin, emphasizing his slim figure, and highlighting his blond hair - which, clean, was full and shiny. He didn't fuss with his hair much, and this was the cleanest it had been in years - he'd never realized just how nice his hair looked when it was lank and lifeless and greasy.

"Geez - I do look good." He told his reflection, amazed at how different he looked. He didn't look grungy and grimy and angry - but self-possessed, almost regal. Like he was somebody, not a nobody loner.

Feeling good about the way he looked, he headed back to the living room to watch TV, more aware of himself than usual because of the sort of upgraded mental image he had of himself, as well as the new - and nice - sensations of the clothing over his denuded skin. So, instead of just slouching along, he consciously tried to walk more 'elegantly', like he figured some rich dud would, or something. Even when he dropped into the couch, it was done with a conscious attempt to maintain that more 'casually controlled' air.

Flipping through the channels, Nick looked for something worth watching - but nothing seemed to catch his interest. As a matter of fact, he felt... restless. Energetic, but without purpose...

Snorting, Nick shut off the TV and decided to go for a walk. He looked around for his shoes - but when he found them, one whiff of their ripe odor made him forget about wearing them.

Instead, he dug his black cowboy boots out of the back corner of the closet, and stuffed his feet into them. Then he shrugged on a black leather trench-coat style jacket, and left his apartment, not sure where he was heading, but just eager to get out and do... something.

* * * * *

Jasmine - Alan, with his own personality overlaid by an inexplicable 'need' to be Jasmine - left the mall feeling like some sort of cross-dressing freak...

...but looking traffic-stopping gorgeous. As much as she hated to do so, she had to admit that fact to herself. Not only was she wearing a new outfit, but she'd gone to a salon and had her hair styled and her face professionally made up. Now, her 'natural' beauty was augmented by fashion and cosmetics, and she was a pure vision of glorious femininity.

Which was hardly enough to inspire pride in the man-turned-female. The problem was - the overwhelming need to play the role of Jasmine meant that she had to act as if she was incredibly happy with her look. There was a new bounce in her high-heeled step, a new sway to her slender-yet- womanly hips that showed she was well aware of how utterly fantastic she looked.

She was wearing a basic 'little black dress' that was elegant yet sexy - and it looked fabulous on her tanned, toned body. Black crushed velvet, the dress' hem sat just above her shapely, black-nylon-clad knees, and the Spanish Lace covered 'keyhole' neckline of the dress displayed a seductively veiled view of magnificent cleavage, her tanned, firm, flawless breasts made more enticing by the unseen black lace underwire bra that lifted them into perfect orbs, thrusting them even more obviously against the fabric of the dress. The dress was designed with an 'open' back that was criss-crossed with black lacing through black grommets, and by tying it carefully, with knots in the laces to determine where the 'strain' would fall, Jasmine had pulled the dress tight again her tiny waist before letting it flare out, so that it molded to her fantastic, boyishly-feminine, top-heavy figure like a second skin.

The sensual 'basic' look was further enhanced by the black leather pumps she wore on her transformed feet. She'd been stunned - and not exactly thrilled - to find she could not only walk easily atop the four-inch high heel - but also gracefully and sensuously, about which she had no choice.

In addition, she wore a few 'highlights' of jewelry that further accented her easy beauty. Gold earrings with topaz settings matched the gold-and-topaz watch she wore on one slender wrist. Beneath her short-but-now-femininely styled hair, her face was professionally and flawlessly made up, and she was absolutely breath taking. Something which she didn't want to be, but she had no choice.

Or, rather, her other choice wasn't a viable one, and that made this whole thing that much worse. It wasn't like she was made to do this, as if she were some sort of automaton. No, in a way she'd done this 'willingly' - because she'd been less willing to deal with the powerful yearning that resulted from fighting the need to be 'Jasmine'. It was almost like the craving of a smoker who had been without a cigarette for too long, or maybe a drug addict looking for their next fix. While technically possible to reject the urge, it was very, very unpleasant to do so.

So, she'd 'willingly' gone along with the urge to look feminine, and sexy - and she'd picked out the clothes herself, of her own free will. Though the urge was there, it wasn't specific enough to pick and choose the clothes themselves. Jasmine had gone ahead and picked out the outfit because she knew it would look good on her, even though she wasn't really happy about looking that good.

Neither was she happy about the bags of other clothing, accessories or makeup she was lugging out of the mall with her. She'd felt the need to do so - and what it indicated wasn't very reassuring. Being female was bad, very bad. Being female, and feeling a powerful need to act it was worse, infinitely more. But.. the indications that this was going to be a long-term situation, with a powerful need compelling her to keep from revealing her 'problems' to any potential sources of help.. made her want to cry.

She stood at the curb outside of the mall entrance, and lifted a hand as she saw a cab swing into the parking lot. She needn't have bothered - it was occupied by a passenger who was obviously coming to the mall.

The blue-and-white taxi pulled to a stop near her, and the back door opened to disgorge its passenger - a slender young person of indeterminate gender. He/She could have been a masculine- looking young woman, or a feminine looking young man

- it was nearly impossible to tell, between the long, gleaming blonde hair, the indeterminate features, and the slender body that didn't boast feminine padding or masculine muscle.

Waiting for the gender-neutral person to clear the door of the cab after paying for the ride, Jasmine held up her purchases, and the cabbie climbed out to open the trunk...

* * * * *

Nick watched as the gorgeous, tanned woman loaded her luggage into the trunk of the cab.

'Damn, she's good-looking...' Nick thought to himself, vaguely. 'She really knows how to dress, too - that outfit looks great on her. Flatters her figure nicely, even if she'd be better off in higher heels - she has a fantastic ass, and heels would really emphasize it...'

Nick turned away from the gorgeous woman and headed for the entrance of the mall - as a vague thought flitted through his head.

'She's gorgeous - but I have nicer hair...'

He had to restrain a smug smile from crossing his lips at the thought, and he unconsciously reached up and brushed his silken, golden mane back from his face. Yes, indeed, he did have much nicer hair than she did.

Humming softly under his breath, Nick pulled open the doors and entered the mall, just sort of strolling along, bored and without any real plan in mind. So, he just moseyed along, accompanied by the somehow reassuring 'tocking' of the cowboy boots' heels on the tile flooring of the mall.

As Nick strolled along, he absently scratched at his chest, which was.. well, not itching, so much, as feeling oddly tender and swollen, the feel of the fabric moving over his nipples more intense than usual.

For that matter - his scratching felt more intense than usual, and more than a little 'odd' as well. Pausing, he glanced down at his hand.

"Geez - I've been a lazy slob..." He muttered - he hadn't noticed that his nails had been growing so long. Never fastidious about his personal grooming, his usual method of keeping his nails 'trimmed' was occasionally and absent-mindedly gnawing on them while watching TV. Sometime in the past he must have given up that habit without noticing - because his nails were longer than he could ever remember them being. So long that they seemed to alter the look of his whole hand, making his hands look slimmer and more supple.

"Huh.." He grunted, shrugging it off. To be honest, his nails weren't ragged or unkempt - just long. For some reason, he found himself thinking they didn't look half bad that way. He'd never worn long nails before, and so had never had a chance to see how he'd look with long fingernails, so he figured that there was no big deal. Hell - long nails would be easier to take care of, right? Wouldn't have to trim the that often, he figured.

More or less forgetting about his nails, Nick continued his strolling - but even as he wandered aimlessly, he was feeling less and less comfortable. Almost without thought, he found that his hands kept sliding to his shirt, to rub at his chest, or to his pants, to tug futilely at the fabric. His clothes were uncomfortable on him, and the feeling seemed to be growing, rather than 'fading into the background' as he'd hoped.

The pants were bad enough, but understandable - after all they'd been too tight when he'd put them on. The shirt was really annoying, though - because two fairly small, and quite sensitive, lumps of flesh were pushing against it.

"Huh..." Nick said, without any real consideration. "Guess I must be allergic to the razor there - I seem to be swelling up..."

Looking around the mall, he realized that the simplest answer to his problem was simply to buy some clothes that fit him better - after all, the tight fit of the jeans and the feel of the shirt against the allergic swelling of his chest was apt to drive him nuts if he didn't do something about it.

Absently rubbing his chest, he headed towards the 'anchor' of the mall, a large department store. Reaching the doors that emptied out onto the mall itself, he paused in consideration - never having been in the department store, he had no idea where he was heading...

"Can I help you...?"

Nick turned and vaguely returned the smile the young female salesclerk was giving him.

"Yeah - I need some new clothes." Nick explained. "As you can see, I'm down to the old clothes in my closet - and they hardly fit anymore, especially in the hips and chest..."

The woman's smile became understanding. "Remnants from your tomboy days, right?" She said in a 'friend-to-friend' tone of voice. "Well, at lest you filled out since those days. Come on, let's go get you something a little more... flattering to wear."

Mentally shrugging, Nick followed along behind the sales-clerk, who was rambling cheerfully on about something or other. Nick grunted occasional, not really listening or paying attention where they were going. Instead, he found himself watching the other people in the store. He found himself watching pairs and couples and groups of people, laying and chatting with each other - and he felt a strange sort of pang that made him ache in a non-physical way.

He'd always been a loner, and thought he was fine that way - now he found himself wondering why he didn't have any friends, why he was so alone. Was it something wrong with him? Was it the way he was hard-wired, something in his personality that drove people away and...

"So - how about something like this?" The saleswoman said, drawing Nick's attention back to her. Nick looked at what she was holding up - and began to blush.

"Oh - oh, no!" Nick demurred with a nervous grin. "I.. I can't wear a skirt."

The woman looked down at the white leather skirt she was holding, then back at Nick. "Is there a problem?"

Nick couldn't believe the woman didn't see the obvious. "Well, I'd just look ridiculous in a skirt, don't you think? I mean - how many skirts have you sold to people who look like... like me?"

+ + +

Jessica looked the poor young woman up and down with a compassionate smile. From the way she was reacting to the suggestion of a skirt, Jessica realized that the poor thing still thought of herself as the tomboy she must have been when those clothes she was wearing fit her.

She should have realized it right away, of course, Jessica berated herself. It was obvious, in retrospect. There was the lack of make-up, for one thing - not exactly a stunning young woman, she was still fairly cute - but she wasn't wearing any make-up to help emphasize the fact. The way she moved - awkward and self conscious - also showed that she wasn't comfortable with herself - which was probably related to the way that she'd been gazing longingly at couples they'd passed while walking through the store.

Yet the young woman wasn't nearly as unattractive as she obviously believed herself to be. After all, her 'only cute' face was saved by her gorgeous hair and full, soft lips. She might have been built like a boy when other girls went through puberty, but she'd obviously blossomed somewhat since then - though her bust was merely average, the slender woman had full, round hips and an incredible ass, and her waist seemed to be quite trim and tight.

If nothing else, she could get by on her voice alone, which could have made her good money as a voice-over actress - her voice was a lovely warm contralto, a 'bedroom' voice.

Jessica knew what it was like to be self-conscious of your body. When she was younger she'd been fat, and even after losing the weight she'd felt unattractive and ungainly for a while. She swore to herself that she wasn't going to let this poor woman leave the store until she realized just how attractive she really was, and how much more attractive she could be if she just dressed up a bit...

+ + +

"Actually, we sell plenty of skirts to people with a figure like yours. It's very fashionable, you know." The saleswoman said, surprising Nick.

"Really?" Nick asked, eyes widening.

The saleswoman smiled. "Of course. I know you don't think you'd look good in one - but, believe me, I think you'll find that you'll get a lot of compliments if you can just... let yourself be a little more bold in your fashions. There's nothing wrong with you wearing a skirt."

"Well - I don't know..." Nick said, surprised with the trend that fashions had taken. Sure, he'd never really paid attention to men's fashions, but how he could have missed this twist in fashions was a little beyond him.

"I'll tell you what - why don't we see what else we have, then?" The saleswoman suggested. "Sort of a whole range of ideas - but stuff that gets away from the whole 'jeans and a blouse' look. What do you say? Will you at least look at some fashions that are a little more bold?"

"Well.." Nick said, trying to find a polite way to demure...

"If you want a totally gratuitous opinion..." A male voice said to his right. "I think you'd look good in a skirt."

Nick turned to find a male sales-clerk holding a bundle of clothes under his arm, smiling at him. Nick hesitantly smiled back.

"Didn't mean to interrupt.." The man said, turning to the female salesclerk. "Somebody left these at the counter when her card wouldn't clear." He put the pile of clothes down on the edge of the display table and turned back to Nick. "I'm serious about the skirt, though - you're a lovely young woman, and I'm sure you'd look great in one."

'Lovely young woman?' Nick thought, realizing with horror that both salesclerks thought he was a girl...

...and it was a blow that hit him right between the eyes. Memories came flooding back, memories of the more muscular guys at school taunting him, telling him he couldn't play sports because he ran and threw 'like a girl'. Girls turning him down for dates because he wasn't as big and handsome as the more athletic guys. He thought he'd gotten past all that - yet, here he was, caught in the middle of something a dozen times worse.

"Don't you think I look too... boyish to wear clothes like a skirt?" Nick asked, almost desperately.

"Not at all - you might have been boyish when you were younger..." the man said, delicately. "...but you've blossomed nicely."

That was it - they thought he was a woman. A real woman, and not an ugly one at that.

His heart began to race, and he wanted to whimper in fear. If they found out the truth, they'd laugh at him - everybody would laugh at him, point at him, call him a freak and a sissy. They'd hate him and taunt him and beat him, and he'd just have to curl up and die. Everybody in the world would think he was a sissy-boy. He'd never have any friends. He...

Before the panic could wash over him, Nick suddenly saw the answer. The way out of this horrible dilemma.

He had to play along. He had to pretend he was a girl, until he could escape this nightmare and get back to the safety of his apartment. That was the answer. As long as they thought he was a girl, he would be safe - and he could buy everything he'd need to hide out in his apartment and work out until he'd bulked up enough that this would never happen again.

Until then, though - he had to make sure that he didn't raise any suspicions as to his real gender. He had to act the way a woman would act. Frantically, he considered the situation, and asked himself what a woman would do.

Well, the answer was obvious. Everybody knew women loved to shop. So - as much as he hated it, the only way to keep from being utterly humiliated was to shop like a woman, and buy a whole shit- load of clothing. Oh - and shoes. Women always bought lots and lots of shoes...

"Gee... well, if a handsome guy like you thinks I'd look good in a skirt..." Nick said, forcing the words out in as cheerful a tone as he could manage, trying to project the aura of a woman. "I guess it wouldn't hurt to wear a skirt now and then."

* * * * *

'God, I feel like.. like...' Nick - or 'Nicki' - kept the pasted-on grin on 'her' face as 'she' tried to find the right words to describe 'her' emotions as she left the department store, a whole new feminine wardrobe in the bags 'she' carried - and wore.

Having decided that 'she' could only avoid ridicule and horrible, paralyzing shame by acting the part of the woman people thought 'her' to be, Nick had thrown 'herself' into the part, though it disgusted 'her' to do so - not enough, however, for 'her' to question the strangely powerful, irrational convictions 'she' held about what would happen to 'her' if anybody realized 'she' was really a man.

Given that desperate 'need' to be 'her' own mental image of what a woman was, 'Nicki' had, perhaps, overdone it a bit...

'Nicki' was struggling - and succeeding - in looking natural atop the six-inch stiletto heels that graced 'her' Navy blue patent-leather pumps. It was odd, but the shoes - which had looked much too small to start - actually fit fairly well. Oh, sure, they were two sizes too small, and cramped 'her' feet something terrible, but 'she' had thought they'd be much worse. Maybe women's shoe sizes were a lot different, like their clothing sizes... In any case, the shoes were bearable, at least to her near-obsessed way of looking at it.

Above the pumps, 'her' so-so legs were enhanced by the black nylons with Spanish Lace trim up the sides that she wore, disappearing up under the hem of 'her' dark-blue leather skirt, with it's big white leather belt cinched tight around 'her' waist in an effort to make it look smaller than it really was.

Tucked into the belted waist of the skirt was 'her' new shirt - a pale-blue spandex 'T-shirt' with the word's 'Girl Power' printed across the front. Amazingly - to Nick's mind - the 'allergic swelling' made it look as if the shirt was pushed out by a pair of small, but firm and noticeable, breasts - a 'lucky break'...

Tack blue-and-silver clip-on earrings dangled from the lobes of 'her' ears, which flanked a face that had been made-up by the store's cosmetics saleswoman... who, following the instructions 'Nicki' had given, had used a heavy hand, matching garish, glossy hot-pink lipstick to dark mascara and powder- blue eye-shadow.

'Nicki' felt that all of this was utterly necessary - after all, people might be mistaking 'her' as a woman, but it was as a boyish-looking woman, and the ever-present threat of being found out and humiliated beyond 'her' capacity to withstand was enough to drive 'her' to extremes.

Even as 'she' walked through the mall, 'she' forced 'herself' to walk with as feminine a stride as possible - not really aware that hamming it up turned 'her' walk into an over-emphasized sexual parody that wasn't backed up by 'her' slender, boyish figure. Between the over-done makeup, the garish, too-sexy clothes and the over-exaggerated walk, 'she' was beginning to get a lot of looks...

...and her heart nearly burst as it sped in panic at the realization that many of them were disapproving looks. To 'her' mind, it meant that they knew there was something wrong with 'her', that they were right on the edge of pointing and shattering 'her' disguise, of laying 'her' open to the ridicule and attention that would crush 'her'...

So, the sudden cramping that almost doubled 'her' over came as a welcome relief, since it made 'her' realize that she could flee the impending unveiling of the truth by dashing into the bathroom - and, after a second's hesitation that 'she' was sure everybody saw and wondered about, 'she' even managed to remember to go into the ladies room. Panting from the sheer force of panic at the close call, 'she' ducked into a stall in the empty restroom and locked the door, doubling over at the sensation she was feeling - the 'cramps' had spread, and 'she' felt as if 'her' entire body was cramping, the pain was worst in 'her' crotch, hips, waist and chest.

Then the pain redoubled, and 'she' gasped and slumped back against the side of the stall...

...as 'her body' began to writhe and change.

Shocked, 'she' stared down at 'herself' as he shirt began to bulge outwards, propelled by 'her' supposedly allergic reaction, the spandex garment forming two distinct mounds over the swelling flesh. At the same time, a pressure began to build in 'her' skirt as 'her' hips and ass began to swell and gain a new configuration, below a waist that was slowly pinching inwards.

'She' could also feel changes occurring all over 'her' body, from the way the pressure of the once-too- tight shoes was easing, to the way the bones in 'her' face were being reshaped. However, these were secondary to the other changes and - twitching and writhing - 'she' slid one hand up under 'her' skirt, sliding it across the white cotton panties that 'she' wore...

...and feeling the bulge there slowly shrink as 'her' cock was pulled back into 'her' body, leaving behind a moist, fully-formed vagina.

The entire thing lasted but a few minutes, then the sensations faded, leaving Nicki feeling stiff and sore as she staggered from the stall to stare at herself in the mirror above the sink, one hand still pressed under her skirt to convince herself that her cock was, indeed, gone, replaced by a perfect sample of the new womanhood that defined her new gender.

For several long seconds, Nicki simply stared, incredulous, at the unbelievable reflection in the mirror.

Balanced atop her high-heels, the blonde woman in the mirror was defiantly 'lush'. Her long, incredibly shapely legs seemed to rise on up forever before finally disappearing under the hem of a too-tight skirt that clung like a second skin to her wide, womanly hips and incredibly full, firm ass. The white leather belt, once tightly cinched, now hung loose around a tiny wisp of a wasp-waist, lost in the shadow of her looming bustline - whose massive, round breasts, the size of basket-balls, strained the spandex fabric over their spherical forms, the neck-line stretched out to reveal an amazing canyon of milky-white cleavage.

Above those phenomenal breasts lay the long, slender neck - and the most vapid-looking face you could imagine. Huge, blue eyes warred with almost obscenely full, sexy lips for the eyes' attention, the tint snub of a nose lost in the battle. High, arched eyebrows matched the shade of the massive, thick mane of golden hair that spilled around her vapid, sexy face, completing the woman's look of being a prototypical 'blonde bimbo' in every detail.

"Oh - thank god!" Nicki said with a relieved sigh, giggling at the sound of the high-pitched new voice she possessed. "Now I'm safe!"

She relaxed. Now, nobody could catch her out - as long as she continued to act the part, of course. She didn't know how it had happened, but her effeminate masculine body, which could have been the source of utter humiliation that she couldn't have taken, had become this incredibly feminine one, making her safe from being recognized...

...as long as she didn't give anybody reason to suspect that a man was the person inside that feminine body. She'd have to be extra-careful to act like a woman, just like before - but now the odds were - if you'll forgive the term - 'stacked' in her favor.

Then a thought hit her, and her already huge blue eyes widened, and her incredibly full lower lips quivered in panic.

What if somebody in her apartment recognized her when she went home? Sure, she didn't really know any of her neighbors, and her body was completely different, but she was still blonde, and if she was seen going back to her apartment, somebody might make the connection between the blonde woman they'd seen go in, and the blonde guy who lived there. She couldn't stand the mere thought of the shame that would come from the revelation that she was really Nick - but where else could she go...?

She relaxed and smiled as the answer came to her - the empty apartment. The one she'd been saying 'stewardess' used. In fact, she could pretend to be one of them, until she managed to get herself looking masculine enough that nobody would make the mistake the store clerks had made today.

She'd have to act the role of a woman when there was anybody else around - but safe in the apartment, alone, she could spend time making herself masculine, until it was safe to go home.

"Thank god - things are finally starting to work out..." She told her reflection, lightly running her tiny, long-nailed new fingers over the spandex covering her wonderful new tits. They were so massive, so utterly gigantic, that people would see them and think she was a woman even more than they would if she were small-breasted. It was wonderful, and she was glad they were so huge and round and so damned feminine - just like she was glad she no longer had to worry about getting a hard-on or sitting wrong, and letting somebody see her cock. With her cunt, she was even safer than ever...

...but that didn't mean she could be lax. Oh, no - one stray action that wasn't feminine enough, and somebody might figure out that she was really a man.

Concentrating on making every move as feminine as possible - and unconsciously overdoing it - Nicki gathered up her purchases and left the restroom to call for a cab. As she headed towards the pay-phones, she saw a guy staring at her, wide eyed, and she almost panicked...

...then noticed the way his crotch was beginning to bulge, and knew that that was a sign that he was completely taken in by her currently feminine looks and actions. That hard-on was the sign that she was safe from being discovered - by him at least...

'Gee...' She thought, to herself. 'I'll know nobody's close to revealing my secret, if I can just get every man around me to have a raging hard-on...'

Letting her full, softly-firm lips curve upwards in a bright - if somewhat brainless - smile, Nicki threw the guy a wink...

...and felt a rush of pleasure at seeing him blush, obviously attracted to her. Throwing an extra little 'oomph' in her already over-stated sexy stride, she continued on towards the pay-phones, confident in the knowledge that she could act out the part of a woman.

* * * * *

"Please..." She begged her reflection in the mirror, dark eyes sorrowful and desperate. "Don't make me do this!"

Her other persona refused to answer her, and Jasmine knew that there was no real 'intelligence' behind the needs and cravings she felt to act out the role of 'Jasmine'. No, it was like a merciless, uncaring computer program which existed to force her into this role - and there was nothing she could do to stop it. Indeed - were she to fight too hard against the needs, the implanted routines that she'd been inexplicably cursed with would take full control of her equally inexplicable new body, leaving her a mindless automaton with her 'real' mind trapped helplessly inside. As bad as 'willingly' playing the role of Jasmine was, at least she still had some small measure of control over her life and her actions. Loosing that would be a hundred - a thousand - times worse, and she knew it.

Turning away from the mirror, the new woman headed out to the just-redecorated living room. She'd used every last cent in her bank account to fulfill the needs of her 'Master-Persona', and now the redecorated apartment looked like that of stewardess on layover - the two bedrooms were decorated in a coolly impersonal - but feminine - manner, while the living room and kitchen were a little more lively, and obviously set up more for entertaining than for comfortable 'lounging' in private. In short, the apartment looked like a cross between a hotel room and a coed college dorm, a perfect 'reflection' of the story Jasmine had helplessly spun to the people who'd done the work.

Now, as she glanced at the clock on the VCR, she saw she only had about half an hour before her first 'date' as a woman - and she just wanted to curl up on the couch and cry at the thought that she was going to be going out with a man, herself a man trapped in the body - and persona - of a very beautiful, sexy woman...

Just then, the handle of the unlocked front door of the apartment turned, startling the hell out of Jasmine. She whirled...

...as the door opened and the most outrageously proportioned woman entered the room, then stopped dead to stare at Jasmine.

The woman standing in the doorway didn't look real. She looked like some teen-aged boy's fantasy brought to life, probably through plastic surgery.

For one thing, she was tall, and that height was further emphasized by the high, slender heels on which she balanced. Most of that height seemed to be composed of her impossibly long, sexy legs, which seemed to stretch on forever before flaring out into a pair of hips that were amazingly full and womanly - hips well-designed to support the incredibly full, firm ass that strained the leather skirt she was wearing to the limit.

Those incredible hips then pinched sharply inwards, to an equally impossible waist, one that couldn't have been more than fourteen or fifteen inches around and that incredibly tiny waist looked all the more diminutive, overshadowed as it was by the enormous breasts that strained at her spandex T- shirt, her nipples making clear points under the letters 'I' and 'O' of the stretched-out lettering on the shirt.

Her face was equally unrealistic - not only where her eyes huge, blue and vapid, but her gloss-pink lips were incredibly full and bow-shaped, what the man Jasmine had used to be called 'Cock-sucker' lips, since they seemed to be permanently in a semi-purse, as if just about to wrap themselves around the very manhood that Jasmine no longer possessed. To top the sexual-fantasy nature of the woman off, she had long, golden-blond hair that bespoke all the jokes and stereotypes.

"Oh, gee... Hi!" the blonde said in a high-pitched soprano, capped off with a giggle. "I didn't know anybody else was in. I'm Nicki, and I fly for Pan-Am."

Still stunned, Jasmine found herself introducing herself, claiming to work for Trans-Pacific. Stunned, she wondered what was going on her - first she was changed into a woman who need to play the role of a stewardess, like in the stupid rumor - and now a woman claiming to 'also' be a stewardess shows up. Jasmine wanted to yell at the intruding bimbo, tell her to get out - but, instead, she found herself helping Nicki move her piles of clothing into the other bedroom, welcoming her to the 'layover' apartment.

With somebody else around, Jasmine was completely unable to express any side of her 'true' persona, feeling the crushing need to maintain the Jasmine facade.

* * * * *

'Damn...' Nicki thought, grinning mindlessly as she chatted with her new roommate. She'd hoped to find the apartment empty, but this other woman being here meant that she couldn't drop the act, not even the slightest bit - in fact, in this close proximity, Nicki had to play it as carefully as she could, making every single movement, comment and action she did absolutely feminine.

They were 'chatting' about make-up and fashion, when the phone in the apartment rang. Nicki was surprised by the quick look of near-panic that flashed across Jasmine's face, but the tanned woman picked it up quickly enough, answering with a warm, friendly tone.

"Oh, Steve - hi." Jasmine said, a strange expression flashing across her face, then vanishing. "I didn't expect to... excuse me?"

She listened for a minute, then her eyebrows lifted. "Actually, that might not be a problem at all - another stewardess just came in. Hang on a sec..."

Jasmine lowered the phone, covering the mouthpiece with one slender hand.

"This is a guy I was going on a date with." Jasmine explained. "I was going to meet him at a bar, but apparently his best friend was ragging on him, not believing this was for-real. So, Steve wanted to know if he and Mark - his friend - could swing by, just to prove it. Well, I figured that, since there are two of them, maybe you'd like to double date...?"

'Damn...!' Nicki thought - her hopes had soared when it looked like Jasmine was going on a date - but now she was going to get caught up in this too, since it was obvious that the woman she was pretending to be would never turn down a chance for a date. Still - she certainly didn't feel like going out in public. She might have to accept the date, to keep her act 'real', but maybe she could minimize the 'exposure' she had...

"Sounds great - but if they're coming over, why bother going out?" Nicki suggested, brightly. "Tell the guys to grab a couple of bottles of wine and a couple of videos, maybe some take-out Chinese - and we'll make a night of it right here."

"Sounds good...!" Jasmine agreed - but the warm smile seemed almost forced for some reason. Still, she sounded cheerful enough as she passed the idea on to Steve.

Which was more than Nicki could say about herself, even if she was faking a matching enthusiasm. Finding out that the rumor he'd started was, amazingly, true had been bad enough - but now she was going to be forced to be the woman he'd claimed stayed here, a sexy blonde bombshell. Jasmine, being a real woman, might be looking forward to the attentions of a couple of guys - but Nicki certainly wasn't.

* * * * *

"Okay - see you shortly..." Jasmine said, warmly, then hung up the phone - while inwardly cursing at her new roommate, Nicki. She had no way of expressing what she felt, of course - she needed to maintain the Jasmine persona, whether she wanted to or not. Thanks to Nicki, though, these guys were going to know where they lived, so there was no way that she could get away with having a one- night date and then avoid the guy. After all, he had her number and address, and she'd invited him over. This changed the 'fee' of the evening from a semi-formal date to something more intimate - and while Nicki, the bubble-headed bimbo, might be looking to score quickly tonight, it was something Jasmine had hoped to avoid at all costs.

Of course, the 'other' Jasmine might have completely different 'feelings' on the subject, and the possible outcome of the evening that lay ahead scared, disgusted and horrified the new woman.

"Well - why don't we get your clothes put away completely before the guys arrive?" Jasmine suggested with artificial good-will to the damned bimbo who was complicating the inexplicable, impossible situation.

Seemingly completely unaware of the implications of inviting a couple of guys over, the damned bimbo giggled and agreed, and they killed the time making sure the place was tidy for their 'dates'.

Then came the thing Jasmine dreaded - the knock on the door. Helplessly, Jasmine trailed after Nicki as they headed to the front door to greet their dates - but she was wishing that she could just turn and run, escape through one of the windows - but it wasn't possible, either physically or emotionally. She had no choice but to follow Nicki's swaying, firm ass to the door.

Throwing the door wide open revealed a pair of handsome young men, about college age - one was a athletic black man, the other a tanned, rangy brunet. As the door swung open and they saw the two women framed in the opening, their jaw's dropped, and their eyes bulged.

"You must be Mark and Steve..." Jasmine said, warmly.

"Why don't you come in and... relax?" Nicki added, with a giggle.

"Wow, sure..." The black youth - who Jasmine pegged as Steve, from the voice, said in a stunned tone, as he started to take a step forward...

...and his friend grabbed his arm, stopping. "Steve, buddy - look at them." Steve grinned foolishly. "I am, man..."

"No, man - look at them. Do you really think we're this lucky, man? I mean - do you actually believe they're stewardesses, and we're just lucky enough to get a date with them? C'mon, it's too obvious." He looked at Jasmine and Nicki with a shrug. "No offense, girls - but you're hookers, aren't you?"

* * * * *

Nicki was horrified to find her 'cover story' unraveling. Of course, the way she looked, she should have realized that she was too sexy to be a mere stewardess. The guy was right - the only type of women who'd look like her was...

* * * * *

"Okay - you got us." Jasmine heard Nicki 'admit', with horror. "We're.. working girls. Sorry we didn't tell you. If you're not interested, we understand..."

For a second, Jasmine felt hope flare - maybe this night would end up being...

"Uh, well... you girls are incredible.." Steve said, shooting a look at Mark. "Uh.. how much for, um... well...?"

Jasmine was horrified to realize that they guys were actually bargaining for sexual favors - but was even more horrified to find herself speaking.

"Well, it depends what you want, honey." Jasmine said, her horror not evident in her sexy tone. "For a hundred a piece, though, we'll give you a first-timers special. An hour, with anything at all you want..."

"Yeah..." Nicki giggled. "Anything..."

"Uh..." mark said, looking at Steve - who nodded. "Sure, sounds fair..."

'No...!' Jasmine screamed in her head as she smiled and sensuously slid back to let them in...

* * * * *

'Oh, shit - no!' Nicki thought as she grinned and stepped out of the door to let them by. She'd hoped that 'admitting' they were hookers would turn the guys off - but, damn it, she hadn't expected Jasmine to back her up on this, and now.. now... oh, god - now they were going to have to have sex with these guys.

Well - might as well get it over with....

"So... what would you guys like, to start ?" Nicki asked, swaying seductively around the guys to shut the door behind them.

"Well - how about a little lezzie strip-show from you two?" Mark suggested, getting an approving sound from Steve.

"Sure " Jasmine cooed, seductively. "I've been waiting to get my hands on those big, ripe melons of Nicki's all evening "

As the two guys sat down in the chairs flanking the center of the room, the two women approached each other, moving with sexy grace atop their respective heels. They met in the middle of the room, and they wrapped their arms around each other, their breasts crushed together as they kissed each other with apparent passion...

'Geez ' Jasmine thought, sliding her hands down to fondle Nicki's incredible ass. 'I can't believe I'm being forced to be a hooker... but this is really nice '

Nicki's thoughts were running along similar lines as she hungrily used her full, soft lips and long, supple tongue to kiss the tanned, toned woman in her arms - while her hands slid around to start untying the lacing at the back of Jasmine's dress.

Breaking the embrace - reluctantly - the two women moved slightly apart, and Nicki slowly slid Jasmine's dress down her tanned body. As the material sank lower, exposing more and more of her slender, toned body, Nicki kissed her way down the golden flesh, full lips lightly touching the hollow of her neck, the top of each breast, each swollen, thick nipple, her belly button...

Jasmine shivered as Nicki's pink-glossed lips lightly touched her crotch - and was surprised to find that the crotch was sopping wet with sexual juices. She was amazed to discover that she was really, really aroused - and not all of it was from Nicki, alone. Jasmine tried to control herself - but found that her eyes kept sliding, of their own volition, to the visible bulges in Steve and Mark's crotches...

She was getting horny at the thought of getting fucked.

Then Nicki was done taking her dress off, rising after having kissed the top of Jasmine's shoes - and now it was Jasmine's turn to slowly, sensuously undress Nicki, starting with the skirt. She slid it slowly down Nicki's incredibly long legs - from behind, pressing her face against that incredible ass as she did so...

...and finding that she was enjoying burying her face against the resilient flesh of Nicki's spectacular ass.

Then she peeled off Nicki's top - and reached around to fondle her enormous, firm tits, the massive milky mounds overflowing her tiny hands.

"Okay guys... we're naked. What say we split up and go to the bedrooms ?" Nicki suggested. "Who's coming with me ?"

Mark smiled. "I'm the big-tit man, honey " He said, rising awkwardly due to the erection straining the crotch of his pants. Taking Nicki's hand, he allowed himself to be led off to the bedroom, as Jasmine helplessly found herself leading Steve to her bedroom in the same way.

Reaching the bedroom, she closed the door behind them - then found herself slowly undressing the black youth...

...eagerly.

'No!' She told herself, horrified. "I.. I don't want to like this. I don't want to be eager to fuck a guy...!" But she was. No matter how much the thought disgusted her - she really, really wanted to fuck Steve.

Steve was having similar emotions about her, but his were uncluttered with less enjoyable guilt or horror..

"Oh, baby..." He said, running his hands over her firm, toned flesh. "God, I want you..."

"I want you too, Steve..." She said, huskily - and was disgusted by the fact she wasn't lying. Helplessly, she led Steve to the bed. "Top or bottom, lover boy?"

"You take the top, Jazz..." Steve said, laying back on the bed. "Fuck me, girl - fuck me hard."

"I intend to..." she assured him, huskily, climbing up on the bed. Helplessly, she rose above him, knees on either side of his rangy body, positioning herself...

...then her legs flexed, and she impaled herself on his hard, throbbing member, crying out in guilty pleasure as she felt the ecstasy of having a cock fill her hot, aching cunt.

"Yes...!" Steve agreed, emphatically, as Jasmine began to ride him like an expert horse-woman taming a wild colt - and her body shuddered with the pleasure of driving herself atop his lean form, as her mind shuddered with the conflict of her fucking a man...

...and loving it. There was nothing feigned in her cries of ecstasy as she pounding eagerly atop his big, hard cock, pleasure like none she'd ever felt flooding her body as she fucked him long and hard.

Then she reached simultaneous orgasm with him, and her scream of orgasmic ecstasy was ripped from her throat as her doubts and disgust were washed away on a tide of pure, orgasmic pleasure...

* * * * *

"Come on, baby - I want those lips of yours wrapped around my cock..." Mark said, huskily.

"Anything for you, lover..." Nicki assured him - while feeling like she was going to throw up. Trying to delay the inevitable, she sat on his lap and kissed him, letting him play with her huge tits for a few minutes before she slowly sank downwards to her knees, hands reaching out to undo his pants and set his hard, throbbing cock free. Taking a deep breath and faking a smile, she leaned forward, full 'cock-sucking' lips opening wide...

...and she almost shuddered as her lips wrapped tightly around his throbbing organ...

...because it felt so good! She couldn't believe it - she had a man's cock in her mouth - and it felt wonderful> In fact - she wanted to being him off, to slurp down his hot cum... too late, she made the connection. Too late, where she was and what she was doing connected in her mind with the 'rumor' she herself had started about this place...

..and the women who lived there. The ultra-honey, nymphomaniac bi-sexual sluts who loved to fuck and suck, who quite literally couldn't get enough.

But even as she realized that she'd become the very woman she'd described, the thought was pushed out of Nicki's mind - there was no room for it in her brain as she was overwhelmed with a raging, uncontrollable desire. An insatiable need to fuck and suck, just as she'd specified.

Hungrily, she began to mover her head back and forth, lips sliding over the shaft of his cock as her hand fondled his balls - even knowing where the desire came from didn't lessen the need she was feeling, the sheer desire to slurp down a delicious load of fresh cum. She couldn't help herself - her mind had been altered that having sex of any kind was the most pleasurable, addictive, mind-warping thing she could do.

It's didn't take long at all before she'd brought him off, and she slurped hungrily at the hot flow of cum flooding down her throat, trying not to spill a drop of the delicious fluid - and knowing that she'd only crave it all the more, now that she'd been broken and shown how much her transformed mind and body loved fucking and sucking...

* * * * *

"My god..." Jasmine said, pausing to lick at Nicki's erect nipple. After several more bouts with the guys, the hour had been up, and the guys had left - promising to 'spread the word', as well as return at a later date. "You did this to me?"

"To us.." Nicki corrected, lightly stroking Jasmine's ass. "I.. don't know how, but what I wrote became real.."

After they guys had left, the two women had found they could share the truth with each other, somehow finding a new bond that allowed them to be 'real' while alone with each other - and their once male libidos had made them enamored with each other's bodies, a sexual attraction that was doubled and redoubled by the new programming that made they insatiably horny for anybody, male or female.

"So.. we're trapped like this." Jasmine said. "Forever. With a ranging need to fuck and suck anything that moves."

"that's right..." Nicki agreed, and they paused for a second to kiss, hungrily.

"Well..." Jasmine said, thoughtfully. "At least you were good enough to say that we love doing it, and it gives us more pleasure then anything else in our lives. Somehow, that sort of takes the edge off of being forced to be bisexual sluts..."

Nicki giggled. "I know what you mean..."

Then neither of them bothered with words anymore as they rolled onto the floor, heads diving between each other's legs...

BACK TO FUN ZONE

SUMMARY: A business man is tricked into putting a virtual reality suit which he thinks is all in his mind, little does he know that the changes, and the things that he is experiencing, are real.

2Real

By Gunslinger

The crickets chirped in the late spring breeze, calling their ancient song to the half-moon that dance in and out of the clouds that drifted across the diamond-speckled velvet of night.

As if cued by an unseen conductor, the nightly symphony fell quiet as the soft growl of an engine rolled through the night breeze. Cresting a hill, the headlights of the vintage Jaguar speared through the darkness and probed at the sky before the car rose over the hill and started down, it's headlights flashing back to earth. As they did, the washed briefly across a stone-backed brass sign, picking out golden highlights on the raised letters that spelled out '2REAL VIRTUAL SYSTEMS, INC'.

The Jag pulled up to the gate-house that broke the line of decorative-yet-functional brick-and-wrought- iron fence that surrounded the compact complex. The driver of the British-made convertible leaned closer as the heavy-set security guard wandered from the small shack, clipboard in hand.

"Name?"

The slender, darkly-handsome man behind the wheel matched the guard's disinterested tone with his own. "Eric Weiss."

The guard ran a pen down the list, until he found the name. One eyebrow rose at the instructions listed, but he merely shrugged and pressed the button that opened the gate, giving Weiss a 'Have a Good evening' that wasn't returned.

Parking the car in the almost barren lot, Eric climbed out and walked to the building, noting the darkened windows and lack of activity in a complex that, a month ago, was a beehive of activity twenty-four hours a day.

Even the marble-and-brass lobby lacked a receptionist, another of the company's private guards 'standing' his watch in the unused chair behind the big marble-and-mahogany desk who's front bore the company's distinctive logo, a large italic '2' superimposed over the word 'Real'.

"Doctor Lansing?" Eric asked the guard.

The guard jerked a thumb at the elevator. "Top floor, Imaging room 1, all the way at the end."

Eric didn't bother to thank the man, walking over to the gleaming brass doors of the elevator and pressing the call button.

A few minutes later, he stood in front of the door marked 'Imaging Chamber One - Authorized Personnel Only'.

Not bothering to knock, he pushed open the heavy door and entered the room.

The part of the room he entered was obviously the control booth, wide but not deep, with a computer console wrapping most of the way around a chair, with the bluish-white glow of various monitors lighting the features of the 'thirty-something' woman who was seated there, her narrow but not unattractive features set into lines of concentration as her dark eyes focused through her stylish silver-rimmed glasses at a monitor. Unaware of Eric's presence, she ran a hand through a once-neat bun that her sandy-blonde hair had been done up in.

"Lansing?" Eric said, curtly.

The woman jumped with a gasp, then swiveled the chair to face Eric, smoothing her knee-length beige skirt with a nervous - almost guilty - motion.

"Mr. Weiss, thank you for coming." She said, rising. "I'm Dr. Karen Lansing, head..." She paused, her smile faltering. "...former head of research here at 2Real."

"Yeah, yeah - I've read your jacket, Karen. Pretty impressive and all that." Eric said, dismissively. "So - what the hell did you want to see me for? For that matter - what are you still doing here? I shut this place down last week. There shouldn't be anyone here by the guards until I start bringing in my personnel on the first of the month."

"Yes, I realize that... Eric." She said, seeing his thin lips twitch as she returned his first-name basis. "However, since you bought us out, lock, stock and proverbial barrel, I thought you should see part of what you're getting - our fully functional prototype of the 2Real Advanced Virtual Interface."

"I'm not interested." Eric said, coolly. "My company is working on portable VR systems for the commercial market - not the expensive, permanently sited 'chamber' system your work is..."

"Yes, I know all that." Lansing interrupted, causing him to glare at her. "That's why you just took over the building and equipment and didn't bother to keep the staff. However, you're right - this equipment is 'permanent', so - before you simply disassemble it and 'throw it away', I thought that you should see for yourself what you'd be discarding. Although the R&D work isn't yours, this device isn't yet patented, and so it will belong to you."

"Yeah - so why are you so eager to 'sell' me on it?" Eric asked, eyes narrowing.

"To be frank," she said. "I think once you experience what the system can do, and since it will be here anyway, you might keep me and a limited staff on hand to continue research and production. After all - if it's as good as I claim, you could redouble your investments by having the best equipment in both the portable and site-based VR systems."

Eric couldn't argue with that - and, once he was on firm footing with her motivation, he was intrigued. After all - she was simply angling to keep her cushy job, and though he wasn't planning on letting her, he wasn't necessarily dedicated to getting rid of her. It wasn't personal, it was just business - and if she could convince him that keeping her and her personal staff on the payroll would turn out to be profitable, then he'd do that.

Many of his many detractors thought Eric was intentionally rude and cruel. But the truth was, he was the ultimate realist, who didn't indulge in any emotions when it came to his business. Emotions were fine for others - but his decisions were always coldly logical, like it or not.

"Okay - show me what you have." Eric said. "If it's as good as you seem to think, maybe we'll be able to work something out."

"Fine." Lansing said, gesturing at a door at the end of the control booth. "In there is the change-room. You'll find several L-Suits. Pick one that fits and put it on."

Eric nodded curtly and walked through the indicated door, finding himself in a small change-room.

Hanging on racks were several 'Link-Suits' - suits that looked like white cold-water diving suits, covering the entire body from head to toe, with the exception of the face. Also like a dive-suit, a mask would cover the bare area - but the masks for the Link-Suits were completely unlike dive masks.

Undressing, Eric shivered in the cool air and quickly pulled on a tight-fitting L-Suit, then picked out a mask and carried it in his hand as he went back into the control booth, then followed Lansing through a door that led into the chamber itself.

The chamber was actually a perfect sphere on the inside, featureless aside from the door which would close flush on the inside, leaving no noticeable seam. The walls were made of a plastic-like material that gave off a faint white glow.

"Now, this chamber is mounted on a full set of gimbals, so it will rotate around its center of gravity - which will be you. You'll be able to walk 'forever', and the room will roll under your feet to simulate the distance, no matter what direction you move in." Karen explained, even though Eric knew the basics of the system, having read up on it before buying out the company for its state-of-the-art facility and prime location.

"Now, the suit you're wearing is revolutionary." Lansing continued. "It runs off your own body heat, removing the need for batteries or power cords. It also sends short-range signals to signal amplifiers in the chamber's walls, which transmit them to the computer, which then sends back data for the suit to mimic whatever environment you might be in."

"Yes, I know all of this." Eric said, tightly - if there was one thing he hated, it was anything that wasted his time.

"Fine - then let's get started." Lansing said, taking the mask. "Take a deep breath and hold it."

Eric did as instructed as she fitted the mask to his face, carefully positioning the facial features of the mask to his face. The mask was not only so sensitive that it could tell what expression was on his face, but it held the micro-thin LCD 'see-thru' monitors over the eyes that would interface with the walls of the chamber to produce what Lansing claimed was true 3-D images.

He watched as Lansing left the chamber. A minute later, he heard her voice - not overly loud, but seemingly coming from everywhere - resounding in his ears. "Well, why don't we get started then?"

"Okay." Peter said, and there was a flicker across his vision... But nothing happened. The room remained exactly the same. "Karen? Problem?" He asked, sarcastically.

"Oh, no problem, Eric - everything's running fine." Karen's 'God' voice said, with a smug tone in it. "Then again, maybe there is a problem - but it's your problem."

Eric frowned. "What are you talking about, Lansing?"

"Actually, Lansing is my married name." Karen replied. "Now happily divorced, but I got most everything from the marriage, including his name. Before I was married, though, my name was Goodwin. Does that ring any bells?"

Eric frowned as the name tugged at his mind. He didn't know any Karen Goodwin, but... "Veronica? Veronica Goodwin?" Eric said in mild confusion, wondering what the hell was going on.

"Bingo, Eric - my sister." Karen said. "I'm glad to see you remember her. After all - you're the one that killed her."

Shit!

"Look, Dr. Lansing..." Eric said, reasonably. "I'm sorry about what happened - but I didn't push your sister off that bridge. She jumped on her own..."

"...after you broke her heart." Karen interrupted, angrily. "She loved you - God knows why - and you dumped her to date somebody... how did you put it? 'Better endowed and less inhibited'?"

"I never said that..." Eric protested, which was the simple truth.

"Oh - I suppose that silly little Ronnie lied about that in the letter she sent me just before she jumped, huh?"

Eric understood the situation he was in - Karen controlled all sensory input he was receiving, and he wouldn't be able to leave the imaging chamber until she let him. Conceivably, she could leave him hear to starve - or shut off the air, and let him suffocate. His voice was very, very calming as he spoke to the obviously bitter, angry - and misinformed - woman. "Look, Dr. Lansing... I'm not saying that she lied, exactly, but that what she wrote was her interpretation of why I left her..."

"Is that so?" Karen said, sarcastically. "The fact that Veronica was flat-chested and a virgin had nothing to do with you dropping her for the other girl? Before you answer - I've seen photos of the other girl."

"I won't say that physical appearance and..." Eric cast about for the right word, "...'availability' wasn't a factor - but the main reason was that Veronica was more interested in a serious relationship[that I wasn't ready for..."

"Of course not." Karen retorted. "You just wanted a little sex kitten who wouldn't complicate your fast-track life. The one that led directly to destroying my dreams here at 2Real."

Shit, shit, shit! No wonder Lansing was so worked up - she thought he had something against her, as if what had happened to the two sisters was something personal. In both cases, it wasn't - it was just logical decisions. How could he explain it to her...?

"Look, Karen..." He said, fumbling for the words. "I understand you're upset, that seeing me - having me buy out the company, not only re-opened old wounds, but formed new ones..."

"Damned right, you heartless..."

"But... he overrode her voice, as gently as possible. "...none of this was personal. Just... business. I have nothing against you, just as I had nothing against your sister. I've never intentionally tried to harm anyone, and if some harm occurred because of my decisions, the were just... unfortunate side-effects."

"Really?" Karen asked, sarcasm dripping off every syllable. "Well, I'll tell you what we're going to do. We're going to play a little game."

"A game...?" Eric asked, warily.

"Oh, yes. To begin with - why don't we set up you character?" Karen said.

Eric frowned in confusion - then felt a strange sensation run through his body. Looking down, he watched in amazement as his chest began to push out the skin-tight-fabric of the L-suit. At the same time, he could feel other changes going on... including one in his crotch. His white-clad hands dropped to his nether regions, and he grimaced as he felt the 'virtually real' sensation of his cock pulling back into his body.

He couldn't very well see it happen - because the swelling mass of his chest got in the way. He knew that they were pseudo-breasts - but the knowledge that this was all computer-generated sensations caused by various pressure-sacs in the suit coupled with digital graphics didn't lessen the emotional impact of apparently being made over into a woman.

But not just a 'woman' - more then the average girl on the street. Because the swelling mounds on his chest continued to swell outward, not only pushing the fabric of the suit, but reality as they became larger and larger. Eric didn't have any basis for judging breasts from this particular angle, but there was no doubt that his new attributes were absolutely huge, the size of basket-balls. The suit even provided the sensations that matching the 'tits' that filled out the suit, making feel as if there was a heavy, firm-yet-resilient mass to each mammoth tit - and even provided the 'inner' sensation, making it feel as if he could feel the fabric of the suit covering his new 'tits', and the large, sensitive nipples they were tipped with.

"Okay - so I'm a woman." Eric said, hearing the computer render his own voice in a feminine contralto. "That's very 'good', Karen - embarrass me. Even though I know it's not real, it feel real enough. I have to admit - you technology is... incredibly realistic."

He was struggling to maintain his composure, telling himself over and over that this was just virtual reality - even if it did look and feel amazingly realistic.

"Well, I'm glad to see you understand that the only way out is to play by my rules." Karen's voice said. "Now, what we're going to do is really simple - you have to act out the part of the body you're in. I'll leave it up to you to pick a name and personality that matches your new body. All you have to do is perfectly play the part of that woman - and when I think you've got 'her' down pat, you win and I'll let you go. But - you have to play it perfectly every single second. Each time you 'screw up', I add more time on the length of the simulation."

Eric ground his teeth - but there was nothing he could do - except try and beat her at the game. "All right - I don't have any choice, I suppose."

"No - you don't." Karen assured him, smugly. "So - let's begin."

The door to the 'chamber' hissed open - although Eric was sure that it was only part of the simulation. It looked like he/she was about to exit the chamber - but it was all computer generated.

She proved it by stepping through the opening - and remaining abundantly female, whereas the simulation of his female body would have ended instantly if he/she had 'really' stepped outside.

'Karen' was waiting for him - again, a computer-driven version of her, as the 'real' her was somewhere else, controlling the sim.

"Follow me." 'Karen' instructed, and Eric did so. A perfect sign that the simulation was still on-going was that the 'control booth' was reversed - the door to the change-room was on the 'wrong' side of the booth. It was through this door that the Karen-avatar led him/her.

"Okay - take off the suit and put on some clothes." 'She' said, gesturing to a wide array of female and unisex clothing that line the walls of the room.

Eric undressed, peeling the L-Suit from 'her' body, then paused to 'admire' her new form in the mirror.

'She' was gorgeous. A tall 'natural' red-head, she had long, sexy legs, womanly hips and a trim waist. She also had a pair of absolutely massive, firm, and - an interesting 'detail' in the simulation - obviously surgically enhanced tits. Her face was gorgeous, even if the features were a little too hard - somewhere between 'girly' feminine and 'masculine' feminine. The lush head of wavy red hair and the full lips went a long way to down-playing the squarish jaw and slightly outsized nose - and the huge, dark-green eyes drew attention to themselves, especially framed by the long, thick lashes that 'she' now had.

Of course, Eric knew what 'she' was supposed to do - be utterly disgusted by the game and her 'new body', and try to downplay it as much as possible - thus giving Karen an excuse to extend the 'game'. However, Eric had no plans to play by her game-plan. If she wanted a female persona, that's what she'd get - after all, this wasn't like real life, it was only a game. So, she'd do the unexpected and be so perfectly female that Karen would end the simulation in a fairly short time-span.

With that in mind, the new 'woman' picked her wardrobe.

It started with the bra and panties - she picked tiny, barely-there scraps of lingerie in a leopard-skin pattern, putting them on - and pretending to 'admire' the look, telling herself how 'good' she looked in it.

Part of that was true - the simulated body 'she' was wearing did look good in the skimpy patterned lingerie.

Then she pulled on a pair of black nylons with seams running up the back, fastening them to a lacy black-and-tan garter-belt that went well with the lingerie. Over this under clothing went a black mid- thigh skirt that fit tightly to her womanly hips and shapely ass, and was cinched tight around her trim waist by a gold-toned belt. A black suit jacket - tailored for her enormous, round tits - went over the bra, without benefit of a blouse. The buttons pulled the garment into a form-fitting contour, and left a good amount of cleavage and the swell of her firm breasts exposed.

Then 'she' stepped into a pair of black velvet pumps with a gold-tone six inch heel. The Karen-Avatar watched all of this with a bemused expression that became outright shock as 'she' applied makeup and jewelry, laboriously applying everything to get it perfect.

"Good Lord - I think you're enjoying this!" Karen exclaimed.

'She' Grinned at her. "Why, of course I am, honey - women like us should be proud of looking so damned good, and feel good about emphasizing the fact." She wasn't about to let herself 'slip' by replying out of character.

'Karen' got it immediately, signified by a very comprehensive "Ah-hah, I see "

Finished - the make-up having taken seemingly forever, 'She' turned to Karen. "So - what's the plan, Kare?"

Karen blinked. "Um... I seem to have forgotten your name "

"Why, it's Eroica Wassermann, of course." She replied, as if insulted by the 'memory lapse'.

The representation of Karen repressed a grin. "Oh - of course. Silly me." She shrugged. "Well, Eroica

I thought we might go out - to a nightclub perhaps?"

"Sure - sounds good to me." Eric(a) replied - after all, it was a lot more than a 'suggestion'. Only so many 'locations' could be stored in a computer, and Karen's 'suggestion' had been to let her know what the next level of the game was.

Still - she had to admit that she was impressed by the level of detail possible in the game - if she hadn't known that it was all a simulation, she would have thought it was real. Everything was there - from the slightest detail about how her new body felt, to the slightest 'random' sound and the way the objects around her looked and felt. That was one of the major advantages to the permanently-sited chambers - since they weren't going anywhere, you could hook them up to incredibly powerful computers. Eric(a) figure that there must be at least two Cray supercomputers in the basement just to run this one scenario.

Even the 'cab ride' to the club was meticulous - every passing street and the 'random' traffic was realistic, and the cabby behaved in a surprisingly 'human' manner, even ogling her body in the rearview mirror. Eroica couldn't decide whether he was completely computer-controlled or another 'player' - but, since she was being graded, it didn't matter - she treated him as if he was a real man, and she was really the woman she appeared to be. When he glanced at her, she smiled back slightly, and she made sure to give him a great view of her cleavage as she paid him.

As she headed for the club, Eroica 'worked it' - walking in the heels was a bit of a struggle, but since she couldn't mimic the easy stride of somebody with practice, she used the exaggerated stride that Hollywood used to let the viewer know that they were looking at a 'hooker' character. Although more obvious and blatant than a 'real' woman's stride none of the computer-generated 'men' appeared to notice, watching the tall, huge-breasted redhead go by with approving stares and whistles - and from the realistic behavior of dozens of men in the club, Eroica upgraded her assumption to at least four Cray's. It confirmed her 'fears' - although the detail and 'game-play' was absolutely incredible, the cost of running such sims would be prohibitive...

...unless there was a government contract. You could run an entire squad's worth of 'spheres' off the same computer and do great war-games for the Army and Marines... and then there was the Air Force...

Forcing business concerns from her mind, Eroica forced herself to concentrate on the task at hand - being more blatantly feminine than a real female could ever be.

She forced herself to breath deeply and pull back her shoulders, emphasizing a bust that didn't need emphasizing, as she forced herself to 'eye' the men she passed, as if looking for a potential date. She could feel Karen's presence beside her, a reminded that the real Karen was playing 'God' somewhere, watching every detail - so she forced herself to pretend it was real, actually giving herself a 'rating' scale. Every guy got the 'once over' - but those who were fairly good looking got a small smile, and those she thought a real woman would find 'studly' she favored with a lick of her lips.

Finally, the two 'women' - both computer generated in a crowd of CG characters - reached the 'bar' - and Karen went to order something.

Eroica put out a hand to stop her. When Karin looked at her in mild surprise, Eroica picked a trio of fairly 'good looking men' and approached them, withdrawing a cigarette from the silver cigarette case in 'her' purse. In perfect detail, they were even the long 'slim' cigarettes that a woman like 'her' could be expected to be smoking.

"Hello there..." She said, huskily, eyeing all three crotches. "One of you handsome gents have a light?" She very slowly and erotically placed the cigarette between her full lips.

One of the men turned and began scanning for a tray of matches along the bar, while the other two dug frantically in their pockets.

The one on the far right 'won' the race, emerging with a silver Zippo and bringing it to life, lighting her cigarette. Ever-conscious of the watchful eye of 'God' she made sure to give him an eyeful, leaning at the waits rather than stepping forward and lowering her head to the lighter. The result was an eyeful of cleavage for him, and a fabulous view of her spectacular legs and ass for the other two.

"Mmmm..." She said, trying to make it sound as if she were about to cum from that simple act. As the man snapped the lid of the lighter down, she stepped forward and pressed her body firmly against his, digging her huge tits into his chest and wiggling slightly as her free hand brushed against his crotch. "...Thank you. I like a man who knows how to... please a lady."

She stepped back, smiling sensuously at the 'stunned' trio of CG characters. "So - who is going to buy me and my friend a drink?"

The one that had lit her cigarette said - nervously - 'Uh... hang on...'

All three went into a huddle, and it was determined that the two who hadn't been able to light her cigarette would buy a drink each for the 'girls'. A minute later, each of them had the beverage of their choice in hand.

"Mmmm... thank you..." Eroica said, lustily, sipping the 'Fuzzy Navel' - and amazed at the reality of the flavor. The mask must have certain chemicals in the extrusion that entered the mouth to stimulate the taste buds on the tongue. That, itself, wasn't new - the chemicals necessary had been around for years, and that's how they made artificial flavors. What really amazed Eroica was the realism of the flavor - somebody had done a hell of a job programming the computer.

So, she pulled another of what she'd come to call - in her mind - and 'ultra-femme' - she kissed each of the guys, thoroughly and 'passionately'.

So what if it was a little weird to be kissing 'guys' - they weren't real.

They fell to talking- and the CG 'guys' revealed their true nature by being 'two dimensional' - talking about nothing substantial while staring at her displayed cleavage.

After a bit, Eroica noticed that 'Karen' seemed to be getting impatient with her. She considered the thought of asking a guy - or two, or all three - to dance - but that's what a 'real' woman would do. The 'ultra-femme' that she was would do something more... blatant.

"So - I don't have any place to stay tonight." She told the three men. "Do you guys share a place?"

"Uh...." The one on the right... Rob? Rod? Ron? - something like that... said. "No - Me and Dave share a place, Pete's got a place of his own."

"So - who can put me up for a night.. or two?" She asked with a smile. Rob/Rod/Ron and Dave shared a look. "Well - we could..."

"Good... I like a.. generous man..." She said, huskily, eyeing their crotches. "But... maybe I should make sure that the 'accommodations' are suitable."

"Well..." Dave said, embarrassed. "It's a combination guest-room study, with a computer, a fold out bed..."

"I wasn't..." Eroica explained. "...talking about the sleeping quarters."

She eyed their crotches more obviously, watching them bulge as their computer-generated cock got 'hard.'

"Oh "

"Well...?" She asked, smiling seductively. "Have you got a place suitable for a... 'test run' ?"

There was a short pause - probably while the real Karen adjusted the programming - then...

"Well.. we have a van "

Of course they did...

"That'll be perfect..." Eroica practically moaned, and followed Dave and Rob - it was rob - out to the parking lot.

They climbed into the mini-van, which was a newer model with two sets of seats that could be folded down - which provided a fairly sturdy 'bed', what with the two sleeping bags they 'just happened' to have.

If you were paying attention, it wasn't too hard to spot the 'convenient coincidences' of the simulation, despite the realism of the sensations and visual graphics.

"Okay - test one..." She said, huskily, to Rob. "Let's see how you handle these babies "

She pulled off her jacket and revealed her barely-bra-clad tits to his bulging eyes. Stunned, the young 'man' undid the bra and let it drop to the floor, then bent himself to the task of fondling and sucking her huge, round tits.

Eroica had to give full credit to whoever designed this scenario - the 'tit fondling and sucking' felt great. She closed her eyes and let herself enjoy the sensations, as if they were something more than a fancy sort of 'fantasy masturbation' sequence - as if she'd ever fantasized about having huge, sensitive tits, of course.

Despite the inherent pleasure in the pseudo-stimulation of her pseudo tits, it became slightly 'boring' after a bit, so she decided to 'move on'.

"Good enough." She told him, sounding as if it had been - barely - pleasurable. "Now - drop you pants and lets see what you have to offer "

She was 'disappointed' - all thing considered, she'd expected the programmers to massively endow him. Instead, he was about average - so it was probably a gay guy who did the programming.

But she acted 'ultra femme', as if it was the most perfect cock she'd ever seen - then knelt in front of him and gave him a blow-job.

Of course, she had no previous history to compare how realistic the sensations she felt as she sucked on the 'cock' were. She assumed that they used a dildo for the model for the mask to replicate- she couldn't see any member of the staff letting himself be embarrassed by having his own cock molded for the computer's use. So - a real cock probably was less 'tasty' as the warm, thick one she was sucking on, her hands fondling the base and lower shaft. The body-temperature and slightly musky but faintly pleasant flavor must be CG, of course - a real cock would be utterly sickening to put in 'her' mouth.

Likewise, the flavor of the cum that he gushed down her throat was patently false - it would be truly disgusting, not salty, warm, and slightly musky-tasting. Of course, to get it as close as they'd gotten the beer would have required extensive taste-testing, and who'd be willing to do that...?

Instead of finding it mildly pleasant, she pretended it was the most wonderful taste she'd ever sampled, then moved on to letting Dave have sex with her, having him slowly strip her and fondle her body. She didn't care for the 'homoerotic' graphics, but if she closed her eyes the purely physical sensations were pretty good.

Then she lay down, nude, on the piled sleeping bags, and Dave maneuvered himself in the cramped quarters to position himself - then he penetrated her.

She gasped - and gave the programmers full credit. She didn't know how, exactly, they did it, but it felt as if the similar-yet-different sensation of having her cock encased in a cunt was somehow internal rather than external - a bit of incredible realism that must have taken thousands of compute-cycles to perfect. As Dave 'fucked' her enthusiastically, causing intense pleasure, it almost felt as if she did have a cunt that was being filled and satisfied by his somewhat more 'acceptable' cock, programmed bigger than his 'friends' instrument.

Then - both out of character yet completely in character - she was moaning and screaming as she came - and even in the midst of the incredible sensation, she had to wonder how they managed to simulate a multiple orgasm...

Finished, she gave each of the CG guys a kiss and told them to wait for a couple of minutes, then pulled on her clothes.. sans lingerie. Stepping out of the van, she found Karen waiting.

"I think that's good enough. "Karen said, causing Eroica's heart to soar - aside from the fake ecstasy of the 'sex' she'd just had, of course. "Why don't we head back to the lab?"

Geez - the even made the CG characters have a stunned, depressed expression on their faces as they departed via cab.

They arrived back at the 2Real headquarters - and Eroica watched with bemused confusion as they entered 'Imaging Chamber Two', beside the one 'she' had entered. This was the one that was 'reversed' from what it 'should' be, defined by the building's layout - which meant it wasn't a glitch, but another 'logical' sequence in the computer. Which made sense, she decided - if there was one 'real world' building they'd have the plans for, it was...

The Karen hit a button - and there was an instant of pain...

...then the world steadied down. She was still in the 'reversed' control booth, in the 'wrong' body.

"Well - are you going to end the sim?" Eroica asked, her patience for the little bit of role-playing at an end.

The woman grinned. "I just did." "Huh?"

There was a short pause...

...then the door opened, revealing a disheveled and confused...

Eric?

"What the hell...?" Eric/Eroica said at the exact same instant, staring at each other.

Karen grinned. "It wasn't exactly a simulation. What we did was take a technically brain-dead woman, implant a chip that was a transceiver on the right frequency - then linked you to her. Everything that just happened.. was real."

"NO!" Both Eric and Eroica exclaimed at the same instant, horrified.

"Oh, yes. And, since the body was brain dead, the new Eroica has both your memories. Basically, you share the same history until I hit that cut-off switch - but, Eroica's personality has been defined by her actions."

The male and female versions of the same person stared at each other in horror.

"You see..." Karen said with a nasty grin. "Eric - you'll have to form a 'serious' relation with Eroica - because she has no past, no ID, no.. anything. She needs you to continue to live - and you can't deny her this, as you are her, in a way. Plus - she's now a 'habitual' sex-addict. What she did this evening means that she'll feel an overwhelming urge to 'thank' you for just about anything with sex."

"No..." Eric said...

"You can't..." Eroica said...

"See - you're already starting to become different people, just because you're experiencing life from a different viewpoint." Karen said with a grin. "As time goes on, both of you will end up being completely different than the 'Eric' who walked in her - and from each other. But, no matter what happens, you'll find yourselves 'obligated' to stay with one another, to satisfy each other's sexual urges."

She laughed, in a nasty way. "The best part - since you're a male and female half of the same person, you'll be able to satisfy each other like no one else could - you'll be the perfect lovers, the perfect friends, the perfect couple - but the realization of who you really are means that the entire thing will be tainted with disgust, horror and fear."

"No.. this.. this is still part of the sim.." Eroica argued, desperately.

"She.. she's an actress.." Eric argued, just as desperately. "You scanned her body and paid her to do this act..."

"Nope - and you know it." Karen said.

The two parts of the same person stared at each other - and knew it to be true. Even as they felt the horror at having been made female - one for a while, the other permanently - they also felt the desire to have sex with their other half.

"So.. " Karen said, mockingly. "You still willing to hire me?"

Then both Eric and Eroica switched to 'business' mode, completely unemotional..

"Of course, Dr. Lansing.." they said in perfect unison. "You've proven your technology is viable, and profitable. Despite what you've done to... 'us'.. you'll be a powerful addition to our staff. We hope you'll stay with us for a long time to come."

Karen gaped at them. "What?"

Still in unison: "As we said - our decisions are based, not on emotion, but on logic. We might despise and hate you for what you've done - but it proves the value of you as an employee. Welcome aboard."

Then, sharing looks of lust and shame, the two parts of Eric(a) walked out of the control booth...
...leaving behind a very confused, guilty woman who wondered where that wonderful feeling of vengeance had vanished to...

BACK TO FUN ZONE

SUMMARY: After drinking an ancient potion, one man acquires vast powers during the holiday season and finds himself transformed in ways he could not imagine.

Absolute Power

By Gunslinger

On December ninth, at seven-twenty-four in the evening, Dominic Moretti achieved absolute power. At seven-twenty-five, he went stark, raving mad...

* * * * *

He couldn't stop screaming.

The first scream, high-pitched and hysterical, had been wrenched from his throat by shock, pain, and horrified realization. All the ones that followed, however, had been born out of a desperate attempt at self-preservation.

He was dimly aware of the fact that his two-dozen party guests were gaping at him; some small, insignificant part of his mind noted their expressions, registered their shock and dismay, noted how all flowed back and away from him in varying degrees of shock, horror and fear.

All of this, however, was purely secondary, a pale ghost of the new reality which had opened up around him - and what little of his mind could possibly function under the circumstances was gibbering in horror itself.

He screamed again - a sharp, shocking noise of utter hysteria; so sharp, so utterly, horribly despairing that it once more rattled his guests, piercing their minds and scattering their gathering thoughts.

Which was exactly why he'd done it - for Dom could hear those thoughts screaming and stabbing through his own mind, could feel each of their emotions battering his own psyche - he could even, though blissfully faint compared to thoughts and emotions, feel each one of his guests own physical sensations as they, themselves, felt it.

The mix of exceedingly rare herbs and potent leaves and berries, painstakingly gathered from across the world and carefully blended by the instructions of the ancient pagan 'recipe' he'd discovered had done exactly what the ancient druids had claimed it would do. Dom, smug in his surety it would work, especially after all the time, money and effort he'd poured into the 'project', had downed the concoction without even a grimace for its gut-wrenching taste. While his gut had churned, he'd waited eagerly for the 'potion' to take effect, mind already contemplating how best to use his soon-to-be powers. Excitement had shivered through him as he'd felt his mind begin to expand - previously untouched portions of his mind flaring to life as the quadruple-strength version of the ancient potion he'd brewed worked through his bloodstream, its chemicals increasing the number and efficiency of neural pathways firing in his brain.

Short, but broad-shouldered and massively muscled, the swarthy Italian-American had fixed coal-black eyes on Lisa Harcourt, the shapely red-head, and felt his somewhat substandard manhood begin to stir. He'd been thinking of many things in that split second, not the least of which was how his manhood would be anything but substandard shortly... but, more to the point, how it wouldn't matter how tiny or huge his manhood would be, as he would be able to make Lisa eagerly, even joyfully service him in any way he desired - unless, of course, what he desired was for her to be horrified and disgusted, but nevertheless helpless to refuse his every whim, and idea that he'd been eagerly dwelling upon....

...when, in utter horror, he'd voiced that very first scream as Lisa's every thought, every emotion, and even a pale reflection of every sensation she was experiencing, flooded into Dom's expanded mind - along with that of the other twenty-three guests he'd carefully invited under the expectation of holding them under complete and total domination.

Suddenly trying to cope with two dozens sets of thoughts, emotions, and physical sensations would have been strain enough on even as incredibly expanded mind as Dom's had become - but what driven him, screaming, right over the brink of madness had been what those thoughts and emotions had been.

In an single instant, every layer of necessary self-delusion had been stripped from him - for, when he'd downed the potion, it had been in the guise of a toast prior to his explaining why he'd gathered them all here and so, naturally they'd all be thinking - and 'feeling' - about him.

In that instant, he'd seen himself through their eyes, their emotions - had viewed his every word and action towards them through their memories, had known how they regarded him...

...and so, in that instant, had seen himself for the monster he was.

Indeed, seen himself ever the more clearly, for they couldn't possibly know what he had planned for them that evening - but he did, and with their minds now inside his head, could not help but know what they would have felt and thought had he actually done it. Though the power to dominate them completely was now available to Dominic, his mind screamed in renewed horror at the very thought of using it - for, tied to them as he now was, he would, by proxy, be doing it to himself...

...and yet, even with this knowledge, that inner part of him that had eagerly conceived this plan still wanted to go through with it, his 'real' self filled with the urge to debase, degrade and use Lisa - even as her-mind-in-his would be forced to experience it all first-hand.

He gave one more scream, even more utterly despairing than any that came before - and fled.

Eyes bulging, mouth working, his visage a perfect representation of horrified madness, he plunged from his penthouse apartment. In part, he was fleeing his guests view of him, and in that he was successful, for as he put physical distance between them and himself, Dom's awareness of their minds faded.

The attempt to 'clear his mind' of foreign intrusion was less successful - for, though their minds faded, other minds within range of his new-found telepathy intruded, and while their maddening chatter was a balm compared to the Dom-aware thoughts of his guests, the insane babble in his brain was no less easy to withstand in that it came from many minds unaware of his frantic flight past the rooms and apartments that enclosed them.

Even so, it was the final reason for flight that was the most important - and the most utterly useless.

Though he charged, screaming, down the stairs, plummeting ever-further from the brutally honest self-discovery that came from those who knew him, that knowledge of who and what he was burned ever-brighter in Dom's brain... and no matter how fast he ran, he could not flee himself... Time passed.

Wrapped in the throes of deepest madness, Dom couldn't tell how much time passed - but, very slowly, his screaming mind once more approached sanity. It was a slow, hesitant approach, that of a frightened animal cautiously edging towards the opening of its deep, dark den, ready to flee back into the welcoming darkness of insanity at the slightest hint of new danger - but, with it, came awareness.

He was in a car. Dimly, some part of Dom's gibbering mind remembered taking the vehicle from the garage in the basement of his apartment building, almost unconsciously using his burgeoning telekinesis to gain access to the vehicle and starting it. He had driven away, guided by nothing but frantic need, and it was a miracle that he hadn't managed to kill himself in his headlong flight.

No - not a 'miracle'. Though part of him desperately craved the release death would bring, his own sense of self-preservation was much too strong. It was that sense that had, without need of direction from his madness-overwhelmed conscious mind, had guided his flight, safeguarding him in many ways. A 'push' of his thoughts, and no police officer within range of his expanding telepathy had 'seen' or remembered him. Other drivers suddenly found themselves moving out of his way - without any conscious memory of his passage, or their own avoidance of his hurtling vehicle.

Now, shivering and shaking like a man with palsy, drool running down his chin and his eyes bulging madly, the swarthy young man guided the vehicle over the rutted and snow-covered drive wending through deep woods, and finally came to a halt.

No other thoughts intruded on his the expanded, devastated mind edging fearfully closer to sanity. Self-preservation had brought him to a place far outside the city, far away from any other intruding mind...

Dimly, Dom was aware he knew this place. It was a 'hunting lodge', perched upon a small, private lake - an overblown pond, if truth be told.

Nevertheless, the owner of this lodge - Dom's uncle - had paid quite a bit of money to ensure privacy. Though, at most, Dom's uncle used the place but for a couple of scant months a year, and even then only to invite equally workaholic business associates up to 'relax', still doing the same business dealings, but at a somewhat slower pace and in more collegial surroundings.

The nearest 'year round' resident was two miles away, and blissfully, that obviously lay outside the range of Dom's telepathy - and this time of year, any closer cabin or cottage was as unoccupied as Dom's uncle's was. It was, in short, the perfect place to escape the maddening chatter of other minds, and Dom staggered gratefully towards it's refuge. Still barely lucid, he left the 'borrowed' vehicle running, the driver's door wide open, but he didn't even notice as he staggered up to the building and, without any conscious concentration, instinctively reached out with telekinesis to unlock and open the door.

Even as he entered the building, he was shivering violently, the cold winter night's bite easily passing through the thin dress shirt and slacks he wore. Wood rose from the wood-pile outside and, untouched by mortal hands, obediently surrendered to Dom's sense of self-preservation and floated in train through the open door, moving to lay itself in the fireplace as the door shut and locked itself behind him.

With a shambling stride, Dom made his way to the couch even as a vagrant touch of pyrokinesis set the newly-laid firewood to life. Grabbing a faded but still comfortable plaid blanket from the back of the couch, he curled up into a ball on the couch, staring with unseen eyes towards the flickering by- play of the flames, mind scampering around sanity...

...but still, not yet coming all the way out of it's hole, for if he no longer was besieged by many other minds, the memories of what he had learned about himself refused to be banished, and the knowledge of his own monstrosity was enough that his only 'sane' response would be utter self- destruction, and yet his will-to-live was still much too strong to allow that.

It wasn't until he'd fallen into a shuddering, broken sleep that some part of his mind, deep below anywhere his consciousness ever ventured, managed to reconcile the polar opposites of Dom ceasing to exist and yet still living...

* * * * *

Dom opened his eyes.

For a moment, he simply lay there, his eyes staring at the faint embers smoldering in a fireplace whose rough stone was cast into sharp, gold-toned relief by the morning light streaming in windows that a mere thought had unshuttered even as he'd opened his eyes.

What his eyes registered was but a pale ghost of what he perceived, however - for, during the night, his mind had completed its transformation, and his sense had expanded far beyond anything he'd ever known.

Dom now knew exactly why the ancient druids had been 'sprit worshipers' according every tree, every rock, every plant its own spirit - for now, he felt those 'spirits' too, though coming from a science based society rather than a mystic-based one, he knew what he was feeling for what it was.

The interplay of molecule and energy was every bit as real and perceptible to him now as anything his previously limited sense had experienced. He 'saw' the heat from the glowing embers shivering the air molecules into greater Brownian motion that his original senses registered as 'warmth' against his skin. He 'heard' the frequency of the sunrise-light streaming in the window, 'smelled' the rich odor of the slow aging of the massive oak beams and rafters, 'felt' the slow and inexorable settling of the stones that made up the lodge's outer walls - this, and a million other sensations, his mind aware of, and perforce, perfectly attuned to all that lay within the some hundred-yard range of his enhanced mind.

Though his mind registered all these sensations, from senses original and enhanced, they were but secondary considerations - for his now painfully sane mind was busy considering a logical 'insanity'.

Himself.

He existed - and, with every fiber of his being, desired to go on existing... and yet, could not even begin to accept the continued existence of the monster he now knew himself to be.

The 'compromise' that self-preservation and sanity had reached while he slept had been there, full-blown, in his conscious mind when he'd awoke...

...and what held his consideration, at the moment, was the utter horror of the solution - and the obvious necessity of it, as well.

He felt that horror, tasted the extreme self-disgust at the proposal. He let his emotions wash over and through his mind, feeling out every ounce of sick, fearful agony at the thoughts; he weighed every desperate-yet-valid reason his intellect screamed at him for not doing this thing he considered.

To an outside observer, he would have presented the almost clinical air of a philosopher pondering some obscure and eclectic proposition. No sign of the horror, disgust, and outright fear he felt at the mere thought of what he was considering doing to himself touched his face.

Yet they existed, and he felt them; but, at the same time, the ugly truth of who and what he really was remained, and all the screaming, horrified objects mind, body and soul threw up could not banish that even more horrifying sense of self-realization that had been thrust upon him.

'Dominic Moretti' must needs cease to exist. Monstrous as he had been in life so far, it was what he'd since become that merited extinction - for, no longer able to lie to himself, Dom knew with brutally clear self-honesty that he would become the greater monster in short order, if allowed to remain as he was. His mind, newly expanded, had been overwhelmed the night before; now, clearly, he saw his error in letting himself be surrounded by people when his mind had become opened.

Here, in quiet serenity at the lodge, he could learn to control his mind, could learn to 'shield' unwanted external thoughts and feelings without lessening his power. In due time, he could return to the city and do all that he'd originally dreamt of doing - and, worse, knew that he would.

Indeed, even now a part of him eagerly gloated over the thought, and the urge to become that monster was strong; oh so strong...

...and, with the same clarity of thought, new that if he did so, he'd wallow in ever-deepening debauchery, until finally he would reach the point at which his own sense of self would require the ultimate penalty. When his lusts and perversions had grown so strong that even his new power could not find ways to slake them... then would he take the final perversion, not of others, but of himself, and seek out increasing pain until his subconscious hatred of what he'd know himself to have become would lead inevitably to self-destruction.

Yet, powerful as his newly-expanded mind was, it lacked the power to rid itself of that power - the temptation to become the very monster he both dreaded and desired would eventually take him.

That is what would happen if he mastered the power he new owned; it was inevitable.

Now some trace of his inner feelings became visible - he began to shiver. As he rose from the couch and slowly undressed, it progressed in intensity until she was trembling.

His mind reached out, re-ordering the molecules of a wooden interior wall until it became a floor-to- ceiling mirror; the new-formed reflective surface showed his body, squat, muscular and swarthy, shuddering in fear and disgust at what he was about to do to himself...

For a few scant seconds that seemed eternal, that was how things remained. In those few seconds, Dom dug deep down within himself, pushing aside a life-time of purely self-centered habits, tunneling past obviously self-serving excuses for every petty cruelty and intentional hurt he'd ever inflicted, until, finally, he managed to touch the withered and broken lump hidden somewhere in the deep, dark dungeons of his mind - and, for the first time in many, many years, took hold of the worn and decayed remains of whatever moral strength he'd been born with...

...and, anchored to this pathetically small, badly beaten fragment of who he might have been, let himself go.

Pain like one he'd ever felt before tore through him. The physical pain was immense - exquisite, excruciating, enervating; yet it was but a candle's flame to the roaring emotional agony at what he was doing to himself, what he was allowing himself to become.

Yet, even as pain physical and emotional burned through him, his reflection in the mirror became calm, almost sere, as the last bits of utter madness faded from his eyes.

Agony lanced through every bone as they stretched and warped, pushing his frame taller even as they thinned in order to achieve the increased high. Pain capered and danced down every nerve beneath the skin that writhed and bunched in new configurations, even as pigmentation fled from surfaces and follicles.

With a loud series of sharp cracks, vertebrae repositioned themselves above widening hips, and breath was hard to come by as his ribcage seemed to implode under swelling mounds of firm flesh pushing painfully outwards. Agony indescribably ripped through his crotch as his small manhood withered away into nothingness, and it felt as if a million tiny knives stabbed his scalp as short, curly black hair lengthened, straightened, and paled.

Intense agony tore through every fiber of his physical being for nearly five eternal minutes; yet, then it faded and was gone, while the emotional agony of his new reality remained, awakened...

...or, say, rather: Her new reality, for the only escape from the inevitable had been the unimaginable

- to give herself over to the antithesis of everything Dominic Moretti had been.

Squat and bulky had become tall and slender. Swarthy had given over to a paler palette. Under-endowed and shamed by its implications of wanting masculinity were but a memory in the face of openly emphatic femininity that now stared back from the mirror.

Her pale face, a study in soft, ethereal beauty framed by long, moonlit-straw hair, boasted large, soft eyes of palest moon-glow silver-blue eyes that looked with sad serenity at her willowy new physique. Though almost beautiful enough to nearly stop the heart, it was an eldritch beauty, calm and pale and somehow almost unreal - despite the slender waist and exceedingly full and naturally firm breasts, the nearly palatable aura of her femininity was not the 'dirty' or 'nasty' thing that many almost subconsciously associated with open sexuality, but somehow 'clean' and 'bright'; as like that that Audrey Hepburn had managed to effortlessly project in her day, perhaps.

"Hello... 'Angelique'." The newly-minted woman greeted the reflection of her new self in the mirror, her voice a soft, sweet whisper like a spring breeze...

...and then she crumpled to the floor and cried with the great, deep, wracking sobs of the heart-broken.

* * * * *

After some uncountable hours, Angie rose from the floor and wiped clear her pale eyes.

Had anybody been there to gaze about the new woman's motions, their hearts might feel ready to tear asunder in their chests at the silent, sorrowful beauty and grace with which she moved - a studied, solemn grace, as if every slightest motion were part of an intricately choreographed ballet; a ballet whose theme was somehow both the beauty and pain of life.

Which, in its own way, was unsurprising - for Angie was quite consciously attempting that very thing.

As with the new name she'd christened her female self, everything she now did was a conscious effort to be diametrically opposed to the man she'd once been. Dom had been loud, brash and abrasive; his every motion a domineering expression of his own sense of power and masculinity. Now, in denial of everything Dominic, the new woman moved softly, gracefully, gently, submissive to the caress of the new sensations her infinitely expanded brain still registered.

The power remained, as every bit as potent as it had been before her transition - but now it lay far beyond her conscious manipulation, for her 'salvation' had been to deny mastery of that power... and, instead, to give herself over into the utter submission of it. No longer did she rule that new power; it was now her master, her sense of the universe commanding her to live by her awareness of it, rather than allowing her to alter it to her own desires.

She hated and was horrified by the body she'd forced upon herself, disgusted by the very thought of living out the rest of her life as a female, much less as the sweet, serene 'Earth Mother' type that was the utter antithesis of everything Dom had been - but, as much as she hated the curse she'd bestowed upon herself, the brief foray into self-disgust, self-hatred and despair she'd just finished had never gotten close to the point of self-destruction. Though she now desperately wished to change herself back into a man - any sort of man, even one impotent and disgustingly ugly, if need be - she no longer controlled the wild power that now ruled her. She was 'stuck' as the woman she'd become... and no matter how great her disgust at what she'd done to herself, it wasn't as great as the disgust and horror that rose at the thought of suicide.

She could live with her feminine fate. She might not enjoy it, might in fact be made miserable by it - but she could live with it; whereas, had she allowed herself to remain what she had been, and taken mastery of the power, she would have lived a brief life of ever increasing perversion, enjoying every moment until the inevitable point of death.

Hating the very grace with which she moved, even as she consciously forced herself to do it, she walked - glided - to where her clothes had been shed... and slowly, began to dress in the garments that her wild power had replaced them with.

Had she retained her conscious control of the power, it would have been a totally different ensemble

- but, then again, had she retained the conscious control, it would have been a completely different figure 'he' would have been encasing with them. Miserably, but accepting of that misery, she dressed herself in the clothing her deep subconscious had decided was appropriate for the form she now possessed.

The panties that had one been a pair of boxer shorts were plain and white, and the fit perfectly over her slender-yet-womanly new hips, laying disturbingly flat across the mound of her unwanted new womanhood. The matching brassiere was also plain and unadorned... yet impressive enough in it's scale, as were the full, pink-nippled masses of flesh with which she filled it. Firm, yet without the unnaturally spherical shape one might normally associate with breasts surgically enhanced to reach such a melon-like size, each of her new breasts was tipped by a full nipple of the same scale as her 'natural' new breasts... and, to her dismay, Angie discovered that her subconscious had decided her new body should be extremely sensitive, for despite herself, she could not help but experience a certain amount of decidedly undesired pleasure as she 'manhandled' her new endowments into the support of her new undergarment.

Having to contort herself to fasten the hook-and-eye fasteners on the sturdy brassiere was difficult enough, all the more since she new that women boasting such impressive busts as she now did would usually go with the much easier to use front-closure design. Since she new this, it wasn't oversight that left her with the humiliating task of handling a back-closing bra, but another layer of subconscious 'reinforcement' of her new status; subservient to her new-found femininity even to this degree.

Which was why, face forcibly kept serene even as she mentally ground her teeth, Angie ignored her own desires in the matter and repeatedly removed and replaced the never-to-be-sufficiently- damned garment until she could do so with smoothly supple grace of motion.

Only once could she don the support garment with heart-stopping grace was she 'allowed' to put on the dress - a simple, plain dress of muted brown; demure, with a simple straight-line skirt that hung to her ankles.

Simple and unadorned - but once she managed to make herself pull on the matching suede 'corset' that cinched tight to her slender waist, it also threw her shapely, buxom figure into sharp relief, all without looking purposefully provocative.

Then she shod herself in the footwear her subconscious had crated out of her oxfords - a pair of cork-soled, block-wood heel sandals, with criss-crossing leather straps that tied around her slender calves. Mentally, she cursed her mountainous breasts yet again, as they made the job twice as difficult as it otherwise would have been - yet through it all, her face remained calm, here expression serene, but for the ancient sadness of her pale eyes.

Once so dressed, she had a moment's sour irony to consider that at least her 'Earth Mother' persona shunned cosmetics; though, in truth, her simplistic beauty hardly needed and additional adornment...

...then she was out the door, her wild magic keeping her untouched by the frigid air as she began locating nuts and winter-browned grain-grass, relocating it to places where she knew birds, squirrels, and other forest denizens would find it.

So it went...

* * * * *

Her life was not her own.

Sometimes she understood what she did, and why; for the most part, she did not - and it simply didn't matter. The magic she'd created originally to allow her old male self domination over the world around her had been turned inwards, and now she was ruled by her connection to the universe around her. She felt everything within her range of power; yet even her expanded mind could not make conscious sense of it all. 'Every action has an equal and opposite reaction'; this was an avoidable truth, and as such, ruled her life - a great many things that happened far outside her 'mystical range' nevertheless had effects within that range, and if she could not consciously recognize those effects, her new compulsions now nevertheless forced her to respond to them.

The worst part of her new existence, from her perspective, was simple; whether she understood the new urges that moved her or not, they existed and she recognized them as such... yet they were not truly compulsions, for she knew, without a shadow of a doubt, that she could resist them.

This was the central truth of her new existence; she had to 'willingly' accept her enslavement to the natural world that now moved her. At any point, at any time, she could have resisted any of these urges or, perhaps it would be better to say 'anti-urges', for her reactions to them were simply that her 'real' self provided the urges to do nearly the opposite thing.

Though her body was radically changed, her mind was not. She knew this to be true; physical form aside, she was still the same person she had always been. That was why she had to force herself not to act like that person - in a way, her new physique served 'merely' to act as a constant reminder that she had recognized and accepted the fact that the person she'd previously let herself be had become a monster.

As much as she wished she could pretend it wasn't true, the memory of that fateful night, when she'd seen herself for who she truly was, remained - and so, every time her subconscious prodded her to do the 'anti-Dom' thing, to act in a way diametrically opposed to what her old, monstrous instincts demanded, she forced herself to be 'Angie', the woman who was the opposite of Dom in every single way.

It was in no way easy.

The evening of her first day as Angie, having forced herself to gracefully tidy the whole house and find some living flowers to transplant into a bowl upon the table, she bathed in the large copper tub in the 'guest bedroom'. Though the lodge had running water, she'd forced herself to hand-pump water, bringing it in by the bucketful and heating it on the stove; consciously avoiding the 'quick and easy' way Dom would have simply taken a hot shower in the main bathroom.

Bathing itself had been difficult; and not because it was a 'pain', but a pleasure. Every second of every minute, she was hideously aware of her new, abundantly feminine form - but that wasn't enough for her subconscious. Touching her body, even to do something as mundane as bathe, brought pleasure; unwanted pleasure, all the more so by the fact that she felt guilty at finding any aspect of her new form and life at all enjoyable.

So, of course, she forced herself not just to do the minimum, but to 'revel' in her new body. As 'perverted' as it made her feel, she forced herself to not just touch, but gently fondle her new body. She stroked and softly caressed her slender new legs, forced herself to focus on the physical pleasure her soft new skin could provide - and, of course, since her magnificent new breasts were extra shameful to her, she took a mental deep breath and made herself spend a considerably amount of time finding ways to bring the most pleasure from possessing them that she could find. Though her face wanted to flame in shame, she kept herself from stifling in any way the small, humiliating sounds of pleasure that emerged from her throat as she made her hands fondle, caress and squeeze her full new breasts. Her nipples, especially, offered her much opportunity for humiliating enjoyment, and she made herself take all of it she could, including gently bringing them up to her mouth so she could suckle and lick them.

Then, best-and-worst of all, she gently stroked fingers across the moist mound of her new womanhood, shamefully shivering in pleasure, embracing the humiliation of the way her innards seemed to turn to warm water with her growing arousal and helpless pleasure at her slender, stroking hand... but the worst-and-best moment came when she stopped, body trembling with unsatisfied desire, for her innate urge, having started, was of course to bring herself to orgasm...

...so she tried not to.

That first night, she succeeded in denying herself, leaving her feeling weak and watery inside, her body inflamed with a desire to satisfy the cravings she'd forced herself to awaken. Shame had burned deep in her that night as she'd lain in bed, having actively fight the urge to finish herself off - and humiliated by the desire itself, of the oh-so-ultimately feminine desire to penetrate her moist, demanding womanhood and bring herself to orgasm.

She didn't always managed to deny herself in the days that followed. Striving to bring herself right to the edge and now further, she sometimes misjudged... and humiliation burned even deeper when she 'failed', for the sheer pleasure that ripped through her with each orgasm only made it worse, since the urge to feel that pleasure again was all the stronger the next time she forced herself into dissatisfaction. The more the urge to either bring herself all the way to orgasm or never start at all grew, the more she forced herself to 'enjoy' her new body without reaching the ultimate expression of that enjoyment.

By December the 19th, she'd reached the point where she knew exactly where her orgasmic' edge lay, knew every nerve ending, every source of pleasure in her entire body, and when, where and how to best exploit all of that knowledge to this-point-but-no-further...

...and by the 21st, she was using none of them.

* * * * *

By the night of the twenty-third, the weather had turned vicious. Outside windows adorned with glorious, hand-crafted wreaths, a winter storm lashed the windows with Arctic fury. Inside, in the large 'common room' of the lodge that formed kitchen, dining-room and living-room, fires blazed in the hearth of the great stone fireplace and within the massive cat-iron stove Angie used in conscious exchange for the much more convenient electric range.

It wasn't the blazing fires that kept Angie warm, however - for it was a moist internal blaze that flared through every nerve in her female body that generated all the heat she would ever need, and considerably more than she had ever wanted... and, worse, it was such a wonderfully enjoyable heat, one that generated a wonderfully painful amount of pleasure even as it almost literally begged to be quenched.

Hand-wrought Yuletide decorations and ornaments made the lodge festive and welcome despite the storm - but though she'd poured long hours into every perfect aspect of her work, Angie was but peripherally aware of her work, for the vast bulk of her attention was riveted on her own body.

Every breath that caused her massive breasts to strain against the confining fabric of her brassiere was noted, recorded, and guiltily enjoyed. Shamefully she luxuriated in the warm embrace of her corset, and with willing humiliation she both let and forced herself to walk around more than was strictly necessary. Pure, heart-rending grace consciously practiced until it was now ingrained habit freed more of her attention to the disgusted delight she took in feeling the fabric of her dress swirl around her legs, simulating the soft caress she so desperately desired and so steadfastly denied herself.

She moved with supple grace, her face composed and serene, and her actions seemed abstracted, almost otherworldly in their unfeigned and unforced grace - for she was a woman in a daze.

She hated the very fact of her femininity, even as she delighted in it. Bad enough to have breasts, it was far worse that they were so huge, so disgustingly firm; and yet she loved every cubic inch of them, delighted in the pleasure they gave her - all while she both denied herself from generating the even more intense pleasure she knew she could if she just played with them for awhile, all the while feeling guilty about enjoying them at all, and humiliated by the urge to enjoy them more fully.

Between the soft, smooth feminine thighs she couldn't quite decide whether she hated to love or loved to hate, the damning blessing of her wonderfully hateful womanhood was constantly moistened by her now-continuous arousal. Even as every fiber of her body seemed to cry out for either cessation or culmination of that desire, she guiltily wallowed in the nerve-rattling painful pleasure the arousal itself generated... and hated herself for doing it, even as she willingly shifted her stance a certain way to cause the tiniest bit of friction that kept it at its fever pitch.

Having already been stark, raving mad once, she knew, dazed as she was, she was still currently sane... yet that in no way kept her from both fearing and desiring being pushed over the edge into full madness so she could do something to end this state of unrequited desire, even as she did everything she could in order to keep herself from falling over that self-same brink.

Then, suddenly, without conscious awareness of where she was going, or why, she was moving - she could have wondered about what-and-where-and-why, but didn't both, instinctively obeying the instinct while, with extremely guilty pleasure, left herself immersed in the erotic agony of her arousal.

Then she became aware of something she'd not felt since arriving at the remote lodge - the feel/sound/touch/taste of another human mind.

The realization terrified her - so, of course, Angie pushed on all the more determined.

The storm raged around her - but didn't touch her, telekinesis pushing the wind and snow away, mild pyrokinesis keeping her warm and dry. Not that Angie noticed the weather, much - her mind was on something else...

Actually, that wasn't quite accurate - for when she'd walked out into the storm, her mind had been on her own body, and the incredible level of perfect physical arousal. She both loved and hated that fact, both wanted it to stop and wanted it to go on for ever - so, her whirling, confused mind and equally mixed emotions didn't know quite what to make of it as more and more of her attention was drawn off into the new mind she was hearing/feeling/tasting.

The closer she got to the person out there in the howling winter storm, the stronger the 'feel' of his mind got - and before she ever lay eyes on him, Angie already knew absolutely everything there was to know about him.

His name was Gunter Maddox, and he was a twenty-nine-year-old German studying abroad. Flying home for the holidays had been unthinkable, given his financial situation - but the overwhelming 'festivity' of the city had made his depression at being a 'stranger in a strange land' all the greater. Gunter had decided to get a 'taste of home' by driving out to the woods that so closely resembled the Bavarian landscape of his childhood - but he'd gotten lost in the snow, and his car had run out of gas...

Then Angie, walking in a bubble of calm, warm air amidst the swirling storm, stepped past the last line of trees edging the road, and got her first look at the man whose mind was currently inextricably linked to her own.

He was... average. A little on the chunky side, perhaps, but fairly good looking - better looking than he thought he was, as a matter of fact. Feeling his loneliness and quiet despair almost as if it were her own, Angie gracefully glided towards his rental car...

...and then he looked out the window and saw her.

His thoughts and emotions flooded into her unprotected mind - and suddenly she once more felt every inch of her very feminine body, was aware of every curvaceous attribute - but from his perspective.

She trembled, right on the brink of orgasm, as 'fantasies' of his hands running all over her feminine body flooded her mind - and, heaven help her, she couldn't figure out if they were his fantasies she was 'seeing'... or her own!

'NO!' She thought to herself, no trace of the sudden surge of horror she felt showing on her serenely beautiful face. 'No - I am not having sex with a man! Not now, not ever...!'

...but, even as she denied any possibility, she could not excise those sexual fantasies now flitting through a brain locked into a body on the very edge of sexual desire.

She spoke to him; but she had no idea what she said. All she knew was the he followed her - and his thoughts as he watched her supple, graceful glide back to the lodge on inflamed both body and imagination to new heights. She tried, desperately, to hold her vow never to have sex with a man in the forefront of her mind - but with his own weight of desire added to hers it was hard, oh so hard...

It was only made worse by her own 'odd' behavior - or, to Gunter's way of thinking, her 'angelic' behavior, for he half-believed that she was an angel; his angel. It had started when she'd introduced herself, giving her name as Angelique... but already knowing his without asking. The walk back to the lodge only increased Gunter's feeling that something strange and wonderful was going on - not only did the storm not touch him, but she responded to his thoughts and emotions before he even said them!

She knew she was behaving oddly, from the feel of his mind in her head - but she couldn't stop. Her own body and their separate fantasies, (except, of course, in her own mind, they were not separate, but commingled), made it impossible for her to concentrate on anything so mundane as 'normal conversation'.

So his awe of her grew... but it in no way lessened his appreciation of her feminine physical form. Every appreciative glance at her swaying hips, she felt/experienced. He thoughts about her 'magnificent' breasts were as loud and clear as a bell.

Barely aware of her surroundings - barely aware of anything but her own femininity, and attendant feminine desires - Angie led Gunter into the lodge, and bade him to make himself comfortable. She started to walk towards the kitchen area, vaguely aware of herself offering Gunter some hot chocolate - and not wanting to be separated from his 'angel', he followed her, offering to help...

She didn't even have to look up. As soon as the realization entered Gunter's head it entered her own, as well.

Among the Christmas decorations she'd put up was some mistletoe - and a sprig of it hung on the beam over the 'entrance' to the part of the open main room defined as the kitchen... and they were standing right under it.

There was no way - NO way - she would ever initiate any physical contact with a man. Though she'd denied her masculinity in order to keep her power at an arm's length, the core of her being was still that of the male she'd grown up as. She would never, never initiate any form of intimacy with a man...

...but as Gunter hesitantly reached out towards her, she also discovered to her horrified delight - or perhaps, delighted horror - that she was now simply unable to resist in any way, shape or form when said male wanted to initiate intimacy with her...

He touched her - and she was lost.

His 'thoughts' faded with physical contact - but his emotions and his physical sensations swelled in her head.

Before she knew what was happening, she was kissing him...

...and it felt wonderful!

She not only felt the physical pleasure she would have normally felt, but she felt his pleasure, physical and emotional, too - but as if they were hers! More than that, though, she knew exactly what he wanted her to do in that kiss, and, helplessly, she did just that - making it easily the most pleasurable kiss he'd ever experienced, and since she was experiencing it from both their viewpoints, the same went for her, as well.

It quickly escalated from there. Her clothes practically seemed to fall off her body - but, some small, dim part of her brain still capable of such thoughts found it quite ironic indeed that she was 'glad' she'd practiced removing her bra so swiftly and easily, for it allowed his eager hands and willing mouth to worship her massive breasts all the more quickly.

She hated what she was doing - even as she loved every single second of it. Gunter's hands touched her burning flesh, stroking and caressing every inch of her, though his hands most often strayed to her stupendous tits and his lips to her mouth.

She loved it. She didn't want to, but she couldn't help it. All the pleasure he felt, so did she - with her own pleasure on top of it. It was the most amazing sexual experience she'd ever had, and though part of her still screamed at the 'perversity' of it, there was no way she make herself stop - not when it felt this wonderful. Being 'gay' was little enough argument in the face of such amazing, overwhelming pleasure...

Still and all, she couldn't bring herself to be the least bit 'aggressive' in this, even though part of her very much wanted to. Some of that 'holding back' was her masculine upbringing, and some of it was much more submissive - tied into Gunter's emotions and sensations, she wanted to let him make this 'perfect' for him, for she would feel that 'perfection' as well. Though her body was already inflamed with sexual desire before she'd even met Gunter, she nevertheless didn't chafe at the long bout of foreplay he desired - not when hands stroking silken skin felt so wonderful.

Warm hand on soft thigh. Soft lips nuzzling pleasure-swollen nipples. Hands caressing, exploring, touching - and Angie thought she might just explode from the combination of pure pleasure and painful desire. Yet with only passing second, the sensations only grew more intense, more wonderful - and she lost more and more of herself in that blossoming pleasure.

Then still touching, still kissing, still caressing, he was leading her towards the nearest bedroom - and she followed him with her smooth, supple grace, not even knowing whether she was doing so 'willingly', or because the his imperatives inside her head forced to her to.

At that point, she didn't even care...

Then they were naked, on the bed, his seemingly insatiable taste for her huge boobs apparently at least momentarily lessened - and the 'dreaded' moment came, and her womanhood was penetrated by Gunter's hard, throbbing cock, her very worst nightmare brought to life...

...and it was the most wonderful thing she'd ever felt, her soft voice crying out in ultimate pleasure as he filled her - not just his cock fitting her sopping cunt to perfection; somehow, it felt as if she were hollow, and his rampant manhood filled her completely, finally closing a void that she hadn't even known existed.

Then, almost as one, they began to move - and the pleasure of just being penetrated was far supplanted by the incredible moist friction as he moved inside her.

She thought she'd reached the utter peak of pleasure - but she'd been wrong, for with each thrust of his body, working his hard cock deep within the moist confines of her eager womanhood, pleasure doubled and re-doubled, moving her towards the satisfaction she so desperately craved.

Yet, despite how much she craved that satisfaction, she nevertheless let him set the pace - and, somewhere deep inside, the greatest humiliation she'd ever experienced blossomed and grew, for she was being subservient to his wants and desires, even though her own called out to her so powerfully. Part of her hated having sex with a man at all, and a larger part of her hated having it on his terms - but the largest part of all was merely loving every second of...

...of...

...of being fucked.

She couldn't deny that was what was happening to her - any more than she could deny she was loving it. Her huge breasts bounced and jiggled with every thrust - and she loved that too. She loved the feel of her silken skins brushing the sheets and being brushed by his hands, loved the sound of her feminine arousal as she cried out her pleasure - she even loved that she was 'submissive' so that she didn't have to worry about concentrating on setting the pace, allowing him to do that while she simply responded. She loved it all - and she hated it all, and she was no longer even certain which one was what, so closely intertwined were the love/hate emotions that had become the central core of her being.

Dimly, as she writhed and moaned on the bed, she became aware of something happen - the hard, somewhat chunky body atop her and inside her was... changing. Yet, though vaguely aware of the softening contours and smoothing skin, she couldn't bring herself to care, because the wonderfully hard manhood that brought her such deliciously humiliating pleasure was still thrusting deep within her, still driving her towards orgasm, and nothing else could possibly matter now but reaching that final goal...

It seemed to take an eternity, but reach it she did - and when she did, she almost lost her mind for the second time in her life, because it was so amazingly overwhelming that all thought stopped, and nothing existed by the pure and ultimate pleasure that thrummed through her every vein and nerve.

She screamed, again and again, at the intensity of her orgasm - and was aware of another voice screaming in agreement, as well, but one much higher-pitched and feminine than it should have been...

...but she didn't even have a chance to wonder about it, for there was suddenly a terrible, wrenching sensation in her mind, a sudden sense of loss and loneliness - and then the world went dark, and she knew no more...

* * * * *

Even as an exhausted body struggled to rouse itself sometime mid-afternoon on the 24th, she knew something was radically different.

Gasping in a sudden breath of shock, she sat bolt upright in the bed, aware of many oddities in the way her body felt to her - but that was purely secondary to the thing that first and foremost grabbed her attention.

The power was... gone.

It was impossible - yet it was true. Though artifacts of it lingered in her body, like incredibly heightened physical sensitivity to pleasure, no trace of the power itself remained. Her flailing mind reached out to feel the ebb and flow of the universe, the 'round and round of all that was'... and experienced nothing. She was once more locked within the confines of her body and her brain.

She screamed.

Even as she did, she dimly realized there was something 'wrong' - with her voice... or, at the very least, different. A second shock, confused, frightened scream tore from her throat, verifying that fact...

...and then the door swung open, and she fell silent in utter shock. She was looking at herself.

Dimly, she was aware of the unmistakable sounds of a party drifting through the open door, but she had little enough attention to spare for it - for her eyes were riveted on 'her' body.

She was locked in the stasis of shock; the shock of realization as she stared at the body she'd so recently worn.

The potion she'd taken directly affected the brain, increasing it's capabilities a hundred-fold... and she'd realized that she couldn't trust herself with that power, so she'd coupled it to nothing but her conscience and turned it loose. Somehow, for whatever reason, last night it had found the 'safety catch' - she-who-had-been-Dom couldn't be trusted with the power, but He-who-was-Gunter could... and so it had 'simply' switched their minds.

Gunter-who-was-now-Angelique smiled, stepped into the room, and closed the door behind her. Though the body was exactly the same as it had been the night before, a new mind inhabited it, and it showed - that still utterly serene, the face no longer projected the air of ancient sorrow. The gray-blue eyes twinkled happily, and the faintest smile touched the soft pink lips that now opened and spoke in that now-familiar soft, sweet voice:

"Merry Christmas, Dominique..." She said, sweetly.

That broke She-who-had-been-Dom-who-had-been-Angie's stasis - and her eyes dropped and she stared in horror at what was definitely - or, perhaps more accurately, defiantly - still a feminine chest.

In fact, the massive bust was, if anything, larger than Angelique's - and considerably firmer, almost to the point of being spherical, yet tipped with nipples even proportionately long and thicker than those that graced Angelique's chest.

"You so enjoyed your, or should I now say, 'my' - breasts so much, that the power decided to 'up the ante' for your permanent form..." Angelique said, softly.

Dominique gaped at her, and for a split second wondered how the hell she'd know what Dominique was thinking - then, feeling foolish, moved quickly on to more important topics:

"But... why?" She wailed. "If the power is 'safe' in you now, why didn't it make me a man again... why did it leave me a woman, much less one like.. like... this!"

Dominique waved a hand towards her new body - and Angelique also waved a hand, creating a full-length mirror opposite the bed so that the new Dominique could see the 'this' she was talking about.

Dominique first gasped - then spluttered incoherently in shock at the sight that created her. It was 'Angelique Enhanced'.

The familial relationship was painfully obvious - she was Angelique's near-twin sister... her younger, blatantly more sexual sister, to be exact. The legs, longer and more shapely, led up to wider, more 'womanly' hips before pinching down to a waist several inches smaller than Angelique's. Above that rode her massive, round breasts - and above that lay a face, though similar to Angelique's, that boasted fuller bow-like lips, brighter-blue eyes, and a much thicker, wavier mane of brazenly golden blonde hair.

"Oh, God - I've been turned into a bimbo...!" The new woman cried in horror - wincing anew at the crystal pitch of her breathy new voice.

"Well, Nikki... yes you are, more or less." Angie agreed, easily.

'Nikki' - her mind numbly drawing the correlation of her 'pet name' from Dominique - turned and stared in horror. "What...?! But... why...?!"

"Why, so that you can spend the rest of your life being ecstatically happy, of course." Angie explained. "Not only is that new body of yours hyper-sensitive to pleasure, but you'll find you experience utterly intense emotional pleasure in satisfying men's sexual desires, as well - and best of all, you'll find it incredibly easy to let yourself be utterly submissive. Aside from doing your best to look and act as sexy as possible, you won't have to do much in the way of thinking - just go along with just about anything any man you like suggests, and you'll find yourself exquisitely happy."

"What... how.... why...?" The new Nikki burbled, on the edge of crying. "How could you do this to me? I don't want to be a bimbo... don't want to spend my life brainless and horny, doing just about anything any man wants me to...!"

"Well, it's not 'any man' - you'll only feel any desire at all towards men you like. If you don't like a man, you just won't want to be sexually and emotionally submissive to him..."

"I don't want to be submissive in any way to any man!" Nikki cried. "...and I especially don't want to be 'sexually' anything towards men! You should know that - you can read my mind! You know who disgusted the thought of having sex with men makes me...!"

Angelique sighed.

"Yes, I can read your mind... so I know exactly how you felt last night..." Nikki blushed.

"But...! I mean, that was...! I didn't...!"

"Look..." Angie interrupted her babbling. "I didn't choose your new life for you - and more than I chose this one for me! You did it all in the final moments before you switched us - or your subconscious did, at any rate. I even, dimly, understand why you did it, and considerably more clearly, how you feel about it - because I'm in the exact same boat, too! Your thoughts and emotions, remember...? I'm humiliated and ashamed by the life I know I'm going to lead... yet I'm no more able to turn away from it, power or no! The rest of our lives are going to resemble what happened last night - though the original male parts of us will keep us from being 'sexually aggressive', and will indeed make us feel shame and humiliation about what we do, sometimes, knowing how much pleasure pleasing men is going to give us means we won't be able to resist! In fact, it's our new sexual submissiveness that makes it 'acceptable', in a way, because when we feel the inevitable guilt and humiliation, we'll console ourselves - and each other - by pointing out we 'just couldn't help ourselves'... and it'll be nothing but the literal truth!"

"Oh..." Was the best Nikki could manage.

Then Angelique waved a hand - and the sheets around Nikki rose up, forming themselves into clothing:

In an instant, Nikki's excessively sexual new feminine figure was garbed in an appropriately 'Christmas' ensemble - a bright-red tube crushed-velvet tube dress, edged with faux-fur low on her breasts and high on her thighs. Red satin opera gloves enclosed her hands and arms, and white nylons encased her long, shapely legs - which, in turn, were enclosed by red pumps boasting six- inch spike heels. For a final touch, a cute little 'Santa hat' formed itself atop her golden mane.

"There - now you're ready to greet our guests." Angie announced.

"No!" Nikki gasped. "I can't... I won't..."

Even as she was issuing denials, however, she felt her face flame in a furious blush - for that warm, melting sensation was spreading through her body, and her nipples suddenly made very large dents in the fabric of the skimpy dress as her body rapidly rose to full arousal at the mere thought of being in the presence of men - men who had cocks, like the cock that had given her so much wonderful pleasure last night; cocks like the one she was craving right now, her mind picturing all the ways she could please herself by pleasing a man...

"Please... no..." She said, trying to beg - but her denial was weak, her voice full of desire.

"I.. I won't go..." She half-whispered, still-male core of her mind struggling not only against the wonderfully disturbing pleasure of her aroused body, but the memory - and, hence, knowledge - of just how much pleasure she would get from being the bimbo she appeared to be.

Smiling softly, Angelique reached out and took her hand - and Nikki couldn't make herself resist. Helplessly - or was that half-willingly...? - she found herself rising from the bed. The extreme heels were somewhat more of a challenge than the lower, thicker heels she'd practiced in as Angie... but, then again, she did have that practice, and more over, found herself helplessly thinking about just how high and sexy a heel must make her legs and ass look.

She wanted to tell herself that the extra sway she added to her step was 'unwilling', that the blatantly sexy stride she adopted was done despite herself... yet she was working so hard at doing it, having to pay careful and conscious attention to every detail, that she knew it for the lie it was.

The thought was humiliating, and she felt shameful guilt spreading through her...

...but she didn't stop using that 'come hither' stride as she followed Angelique out into the main room of the lodge.

She stopped dead at the end of the hallway, eyes widening.

The guests looked up, calling happy seasons greetings to her that she barely heard - for she was too stunned to register them well.

The 'guests' were the self-same guests she'd had at the party that had begun this whole thing.

That, in itself, was shock enough, all the more so since she vaguely realized from their words that Angelique had been doing some 'editing' of their collective memories so they somehow knew both Angelique and Nikki's as 'old friend's... or thought they did, at any rate.

No, what really send her mind spinning in shock, though, was a realization that hit her to the core: She liked all these people!

Part of it was having seen, on that fateful night, right to the very core of their beings - but more, she realized as she walked, stunned, into the room to be happily accepted into their midst, was the fact that all the reasons Dom had disliked these people no longer applied...

If her responses seemed somewhat numb and perhaps even silly, nobody seemed to notice anything strange about it - after all, she was a 'bimbo', wasn't she...? More guilt rose as she found herself welcoming that perception, at least as a valid excuse as she struggled to make her spinning mind catch up with her new reality - but one thing after another piled themselves atop her spinning thoughts, and she couldn't seem to get ahead of the curve as people she was used to despising and knew had despised her-when-she-was-a-he now greeted her with unmistakable fondness... and kisses and hugs, none of which were 'pro forma', but sensual and exciting... even those from the women.

In fact, it was Lisa Harcourt was kissing her right now under one of the liberally-spread mistletoe; Lisa, the stacked redhead Dom had lusted so strongly after at that party.

Of course, Nikki didn't consider her so 'stacked' anymore, not when her own massive boobs far outstripped Lisa's - an easy comparison, as they were cursed against once another, sending waves of pleasurable pressure through Nikki's new endowments as the kissed.

Lisa was really throwing herself into that kiss, Nikki realized, numbly - only to feel a bit surprised when she realized that Lisa's kiss was no less passionate and involved than her own response. Lisa's hands were actually under Nikki's skirt, fondling Nikki's 'bubble butt' - and Nikki found she was stroking Lisa's nylon-clad legs in return.

Still stunned, Nikki could think of nothing to do - but finish the highly enjoyable kiss.

Highly enjoyable, both in physical sensation and emotional... but, despite the pleasure and the passion, her body wasn't responding to it with arousal. It was, well more of a 'friendly' kiss, no matter how sexual it was in manner.

Then Lisa broke the kiss with a smile and a sigh, commenting; "Damn, if only my boyfriends could kiss like you !"

"Then I guess you'll have to let us guys get in there so she can teach us!" A familiar voice replied, and Nikki numbly turned to find the handsome face of Roger Smith smiling down at her...

...and though he hadn't even touched her yet, now her arousal came roaring back to life.

'I can't help myself,' she reassured herself as she let him embrace her. 'It's literally impossible for me to resist this '

...and then, despite the shame and humiliation still flowing through her swirling mind, gave up on the excuses and let herself surrender totally to enjoying the kiss that Roger gave her.

It wasn't until quite some time later, while she was guiltily, blissfully, disgustingly eagerly attempting to give Roger the most mind-blowing blow-job he'd ever experienced, that her mind managed to catch up with events - and arrived at the most stunning realization possible.

She'd been turned into a huge-breasted nymphomaniac bimbo who quite literally could not resist having sex...

...and the result of this was the fact that she was having the most utterly merry Christmas she could ever remember!

Then, with humiliating eagerness, she accepted Roger's 'little gift', and as she swallowed his warm, salty load and licked the glistening head of his hard cock clean, suddenly thought to herself that the nature of her and Angelique's new reality pretty much guaranteed that it was a 'Merry Christmas' for everybody else in the room too and the thought caused her to give out with a perfectly bimboish little giggle eave as she eagerly accepted the attention Mark wanted to give to her disgustingly wonderful breasts, even as she spread her long, sexy legs to allow Lisa the access to her moist womanhood the redhead so obviously desired...

...and then she gave up thinking completely for quite some time...

MERRY CHRISTMAS!

The End

BACK TO FUN ZONE

SUMMARY: A Nerd discovers a way to alter the way a body looks, but it back fires on him when his next door neighbor talks him into using the device on himself and turns himself into the perfect bimbo to be his neighbor's date to a party.

Acceptance

By Gunslinger

"I could create the fantasy woman for you to take to the party..." Harry blurted out, regretting the words even as they slipped between his narrow lips.

Josh stopped dead on the sidewalk, his blandly handsome face reflecting uncomprehending surprise as he turned his tall, athletic body to face his more diminutive companion.

"Huh?" Josh grunted in confusion.

"Never mind." Harry mumbled, taking off his horn-rimmed glasses and polishing them - a sham, to help cover his embarrassment over blurting out the 'offer'.

That tall, sandy-haired youth wasn't going to be put off so easily, however. Leaning down to put his light head closer to Harry's dark one, he waited until the short, slightly pudgy youth finished putting on his glasses, his lens-magnified watery brown eyes flinching from Josh's steely-blue gaze.

"No - I want to know what you meant." Josh said.

Harry swallowed nervously, wishing he'd kept his mouth shut. A few days shy of his twenty-second birthday, Harry was a short, pudgy, unassuming young man - which hardly one him points on campus, especially with the female of the species. Known as 'The Nerd', because of a combination of his intellect, his almost painfully conservative choice of clothing, and the unfortunate fact that his last name was Nurt, Harry's social life had been almost nil...

...until he'd figured out how to cash in on his brain-power. By sheer luck, he'd ended up living in the apartment next to Josh, who'd been having some trouble with several courses. When Josh had dropped by one day to borrow some coffee because he needed to study late and hard to keep from flunking, Harry had timidly offered to help... and had ended up helping him pass the course, and keep his football scholarship. It had been just enough to get his foot in the door, allowing him to 'hang on' in the fringes of Josh's social group. Josh's usual introduction - 'Oh, that's Harry. He's a nerd - but he's all right.' - was hardly a ringing endorsement, but it had provided Harry with more of a social life in the past few weeks than he'd had his entire life to date.

Hell - on his Josh's say so, one of the cuter cheerleaders had actually danced with Harry at the nightclub they'd just left. Because Harry was so short, and the cheerleader fairly tall, her firm C-cup tits (barely lurking behind a tight-fitting spandex crop-top) had been right at eye level. Though the guys had begun ribbing him from the edge of the dance floor about the erection that he couldn't help getting, Sandy - the cheerleader - had leaned down and whispered in his ear to ignore them... she found it 'kinda flattering'.

She'd also said she'd found him 'kinda cute, and sweet'...

...and after the dance, she'd kissed him, long and deep, while the guys had hooted and made cat-calls.

Sure, Harry knew it was a 'mercy kiss', done more to tic off the guys than to show any real interest in him - but it was the first 'real' kiss Harry had ever gotten, aside from some awkward, uncomfortable 'inter-nerd' necking with a couple of the brace-wearing girls from the computer club.

It was the giddy feeling in the aftermath of this ground-breaking night that had caused Harry to blurt out what he had, and now - blushing brightly - he had no choice but to explain himself. The last thing he wanted was to screw up the good thing he had going, to slide back into ignominious anonymity.

"Well, um..." Harry started, unable to meet his well-muscled companions gaze as they started walking again. "You see, I kinda, well.. I think I've developed a way to change how people look... well, more than that actually, because I've discovered the bio-chemical link to loosen the cellular bonds of the human structure for bio-morphic..."

"Who - hold it, egg-head." Josh interrupted. "you know I barely passed my science courses, so can the scientific shit and tell me what you meant."

Harry cleared his throat. "I can make anybody look any way I want." He stated, nervously but boldly. "So, you could, uh... get any girl at all to agree to go with you, and I could make her look any way you want her too look."

Josh stopped dead, jaw dropping. "You're shittin' me!"

Harry shook his head. "no - well, that is, it should work, theoretically. I mean, I've already tested it on a couple of cats I got from the pound, and it worked... but I shouldn't have said anything, because I don't think..."

"Hold on a sec..." Josh said, a smile slowly spreading over his GQ features. "Harry, you little genius!" "Uh... okay..." Harry said, carefully.

"Troy's offering his Ferrari to the guy who brings the hottest date!" Josh said, turning to Harry with a bright, almost dangerous look in his eyes. "His Dad just bought him a new Lamborghini for graduating, and Troy's gonna give that 'Fuck-You-Copper' Red road-bomb away. Kinda like the ultimate raffle, 'cept you don't have to buy a ticket, just bring the hottest, sexiest date of the party." He slapped Harry on the shoulder. "Thanks to you, buddy, I'm gonna win that car!"

"Look, Josh..." Harry said, uncomfortably. "I shouldn't have said anything. I don't think I'm willing to risk somebody else's health testing an untried procedure on them, and..."

"No way, man!" Josh argued. "You gotta do this! Hell - you do this, and you can come to Troy's party with me. Do you know what that means, little buddy?"

Troy Davenport's parties were famous - or infamous. Legendary wasn't an exaggeration. Troy's dad was filthy rich, and he spoiled his only son, protecting Troy's bashes from any raids from the cops.

Troy's parties were famous for the booze, the broads, the best of everything...

...and the sex. No matter who you were, if you were at one of Troy's parties, you'd get laid. Guaranteed - because Troy would make sure of it. It was part of his reputation.

Hell - last year, troy had thought it's be a blast to give a hot coed an apartment - if she'd be one of the less popular guy's 'girlfriend' for two months. She'd agreed...

"Well, I..." Harry stammered, visions of naked women dancing in his head.

"What?" Josh asked, almost dangerously. "First you offer something, get my hopes up - then you're not going to do it? Geez, Harry - me and the guys don't hang out with no Indian Givers..."

Presented with those to options - his fragile social life crumbling before him, or being boosted beyond his wildest dreams - Harry found himself tempted. Sure, it would be wrong, and he knew it... but could he just give up and walk away...?

"Well... I'm not sure, is all..." Harry hedged, as he started walking again.

Matching Harry's pace, Josh continued to alternately wheedle and threaten as they continued on towards the apartment building they shared in common...

* * * * *

Dressed only in a blue terry-cloth bathrobe, Harry squinted at the blurred figure at the computer.

"I can't believe I'm doing this..." Harry said to himself, then raised his reedy voice. "come on, Josh - are you almost done?"

"Keep your pants on, Harry..." Josh said - then chuckled. "You know what I mean. Anyway - I'll be a few more seconds. Just hold on."

Harry sighed and went back to his nervous pacing, not sure whether having his nerve fail and keep him from going through with this would be a good thing or not.

In the end, Harry had decided that he couldn't possible place anybody else at risk for his own gain, and had explained this - regretfully - to Josh...

...who had then come up with the 'great' idea of having Harry use his machine on himself.

"C'mon, Harry..." Josh had said. "It's only for a day, and nobody but you and I will know it's really you..."

Harry, of course, hadn't been nearly as excited at the prospect as Josh was - but it was the one solution that he found ethical - if utterly humiliating, unnerving, disgusting and perverted.

However - it was either this, or end up back in 'never-never-land'. Actually, it would be worse - the few tenuous friendships he'd formed with his fellow intelligentsia had dropped by the wayside after he'd started hanging out with the Jocks who usually tormented them - which would make him more of an outcast then ever.

Against his better judgment, he'd reluctantly agreed. He'd led Josh to the jerry-rigged conglomerate of surplus-store parts that formed his machine, taking up most of the second bedroom in his apartment. He'd demonstrated the machine on one of the cats, making it a near-perfect clone of a Chihuahua, carefully showing Josh how the machine worked and how to use it. Josh had then gleefully gone to work designing Harry's temporary new body, insisting that Harry wasn't allowed to see it until he'd actually become...

...her.

The mere thought of that - of him being converted into a realistic-in-almost-every-detail pseudo- woman - sent shivers up and down Harry's slender, bony spine. The thought was sickening - but it didn't quite disturb him as much as the thought of being an outcast did. Besides - Troy's party was a weekend-long affair, and Harry only had to be this fantasy babe for Friday evening - well, a little longer, actually. The party was five hours away, but - aside from being transformed - Harry also had to get clothes and the like. So, he'd be this woman from the time he transformed (a few minutes from now) until tomorrow morning, about nine. Say - twenty hours, give or take. Long enough to win Josh the car. Then they'd take Josh's new car back here, Harry would be changed back - and he'd get to go back to the party as himself, and enjoy the rest of the weekend. That's 'all' there was to it.

Harry still wasn't excited about the prospect, though.

"okay - it's ready!" Josh exclaimed - too gleefully, Harry thought. "Go ahead - get in!"

Sighing - and blushing - Harry dropped the robe and made his way into the machine. He was so nervous that he was shivering, and he felt an incredible urge to back out, to just cut and run - but the need to gain the acceptance of Josh, Troy and their friends kept him going as he began carefully inserting the needles attached to the long IV tubes. One went into each arm and each leg, and was carefully taped into place. Then a series of Data Transfer Electrodes - DTE's - were taped into place - two on his chest, one on each temple, one just above his belly button, and one on each wrist and ankle.

"Okay - crank her up..." Harry said in a weak, thin voice, trembling.

With a low hum that gradually built up into a roar, the powerful fan under the steel-grated floor spun into life, generating a powerful wind. One it was up to speed, Harry forced himself to trust his own engineering, and slowly lean backwards into the resistance of the wind.

A computer sensor kept track of the resistance, providing exactly the force that countered his weight that was past the center-of-balance...

...which meant that Harry ended up in a spread-eagle position, 'floating' atop the column of air, hovering without and contact, allowing his body to be free-floating during the time his cellular structure was in flux.

"Uh... uh..." Harry stammered, his heart pounding painfully in his narrow chest. "no.. no, I.. I can't... Let me out! Let me down!..."

His fear began to turn into panic - but the force of the fan didn't lessen. The big, noisy fan. The one that Josh couldn't possibly hear him over.

Realizing he was committed, Harry tried to force down the rising panic, to close his eyes and take deep breaths...

...when it suddenly became very easy to relax as the first tranquilizing drugs flowed into his body, followed by his custom-cocktail of drugs, hormones and chemicals. He began to feel hazy and detached, his body becoming heavy and almost numb.

In this drowsy, drug-relaxed state, Harry heard the cyclotrons salvaged from a half-dozen microwaves spring into life. Connected to special 'antennas' that focused the low-power radiation of the 'guns', the devices began to direct specific amounts and frequencies at his 'loosened' cellular structure, allowing for specific 'mutation' of the cells.

He began to change. The sensations were weak, and in his state they weren't really enough to make him take any real notice, but he could feel the odd, creeping sensation as his body began to reconfigure itself to the specifications Josh had entered into the three-dimensional graphic interface of the computer.

For the next fifty-seven minutes, thirty-two seconds, Harry floated in that blissful daze, his body slowly 'mutating'... until the computer chimed, and began to flush the drugs from his system as the fan slowly wound down, sending him sinking slowly and softly to the floor.

As his conscious mind began to emerge from the haze of the drugs, Harry realized that the transformation was done, and he was now the woman that Josh had specified.

The mere thought made him feel like bursting into tears of shame and fear - but he took several deep breaths, feeling the subtly (and not-so-subtly) different sensations created in his...

...her altered body at the motion.

Hesitantly, the new woman opened her eyes, staring up at the roof of the chamber. As the fan finished winding down, she angled the palms of her hand, which sent her into a sort of half-spin, pushing her into a standing position. Because she was dropping, the new woman had to pull her legs up to fit, leaving her in a crouching position as the fan finally stopped. As the weight of her new body settled on her altered feet, Harry pushed upwards, rising to her full height...

...and stumbled, falling forward through the door Josh had just opened, ending up in the muscular arms of the startled young man...

...her gigantic tits - which had pulled her off balance - pressing firmly against Josh's chest...

"What the hell...?" Harry screamed in shock and horror, staring down at the massive, basket-ball-sized (and shaped) tits thrust from her altered ribcage. "What the hell did you do to me, asshole!"

She realized that her screaming was coming out in a high-pitched voice, a soprano so utterly feminine it was almost painful, especially with it screeching in it's upper registers - but that didn't stop her from continuing to scream and curse at Josh as she struggled to pull away from the muscular youth, definitely uncomfortable with having her freakishly over-endowed body pressed firmly against his.

She was having some trouble extricating herself, however, as there seemed to be something wrong with her new feet - they didn't want to accept her weight properly, seeming to want to 'pop up', pushing her onto her tip-toes.

"What the fuck did you do to me?" Harry screamed in her high-pitched new voice, her face only inches away from Josh's. "Not only am I a top-heavy freak, but there's something wrong with my feet, and..."

"Calm down!" Josh said, loudly. "Geez, Harry - you need to calm down!"

"You stupid... um, you..." Harry stammered, voice winding down as a puzzled look crossed her new face. She stopped completely, her face completely vapid, eyes as blank of thought as deep pools of clear blue water.

Josh stared in surprise at the huge-breasted blonde wet-dream he'd turned Harry into, wondering what the hell was going on in her head.

Not much, actually.

'Calm... gotta be calm... need to be calm...' Harry was thinking to herself, numbly - then she thought, 'I was in the middle of something, wasn't I? What was it? Oh... right...'

Animation flooded back into her face about a second or so after it had fled, and she took a deep breath, like somebody waking out of a dream.

"What the hell did you do to me, Josh?" She asked - angry, obviously upset, but with her emotions reigned in so she was no longer hysterical.

Josh blinked at Harry's sudden 'relaxation'. "Uh... I turned you into a woman."

"I know that, you idiot!" Harry sneered. "What's wrong with my feet. And why do I have these... these freakish boobs hanging from my chest?"

"Well - I altered your feet." Josh said - when he'd done it, he'd known Harry would be upset. "To make it easy for you to walk in high heels."

"What!" Harry shouted, incredulous. "What the hell were you thinking, you..." "Hey!" Josh said, defensively. "You have to admit that it's really a great idea!"

"What do you mean I..." Harry started, angrily... then trailed off as that look of vague puzzlement crossed her new features, as if she were paused for a second. Then, an instant later, she shook her head slightly.

"You know..." Harry said in a calmer, grudgingly admiring tone. "You're right - it is a great idea. I don't like the thought of walking in heels, but since I'm going to have to, thanks for making it easy for me, Josh." Then her huge, limpid blue eyes narrowed in anger again. "But, as for these freakish monstrosities..." She gestured at her chest. "...I'm going back in the machine to get them reduced.

These things are just too huge..."

Still confused by Harry's strange actions, Josh tried to keep her from changing the body he'd designed. "Hey - you don't want to do that!"

Again, Harry's face took on that blank, puzzled expression - except, this time it lasted considerably longer than a second.

"I don't want to do that?" She asked in a strange, numb tone of voice, eyes blank of any rational thought.

Now Josh was getting really puzzled. "Uh... no you don't." He said, making it up as he went along. "Those tits aren't freakish. They're perfect - for guaranteeing we'll win."

A second after he finished talking, Harry shook her new head, snapping out of her daze - and looking down at her bust-line.

"God, these things are huge - and heavy." She complained, with resigned bitterness. "But, I guess tits this huge will win us that contest for sure, huh? I guess... I guess it was good thinking on your part, Josh." She frowned. "Okay - well, help me to the mirror so I can see just how outrageously sexy you've made me, Josh."

Brows furrowed in puzzled concentration, Josh wordlessly turned her around and helped her to the full length mirror.

Harry stared in shock at the reflection in the mirror, jaw slowly dropping open in shock. "What the...?" She stammered, gaping.

She was the ultimate incarnation of a California Surf Bimbo.

Her body was toned and tanned and taut, with smooth musculature covered by just the right amount of padding, so she was athletic enough without it detracting in any way from the ultimate femininity of her new body. Her hips were athletically slender, almost boyish - but not too much so, and they supported the cutest, firmest, most delectable ass Harry could ever imagine. Stretching downward from those hips were the longest, sexiest pair of legs Harry had ever seen, with just the right amount of muscular toning and shaping to make them mouth-watering versions of 'Dancer's Legs', sexy as hell and seemingly impossibly long and mouthwatering - without the faintest hint that body hair had ever existed on them, so smooth and silky was the golden tanned flesh.

Nestled between the firm-yet-soft thighs was her new womanhood, nestled in - of all things - a short, neatly trimmed patch of pubic hair - in the shape of a heart.

Harry shuddered just looking at her now-utterly-feminine crotch.

Above her slender, rounded hips was a narrow waist and flat stomach with just the right hint of 'six- pack' definition in the abs, without being too hard.

Overshadowing that fine stomach was her huge, impossibly firm tits, jutting almost spherically from her slender ribcage and tipped by huge, thick pink nipples atop domed aureole.

Her arms were slender, with just the right amount of muscular definition, and her tiny wrists led to dainty, feminine hands whose long, slender fingers were tipped with long, oval nails.

Her face...

Surrounded by a thick, silky mane of sandy-blond hair, her face was a study in cheerful, mostly brain-dead sexuality. Heart-faced, the face she now wore boasted full, soft lips (framing perfect, white teeth), a tiny snub nose, and huge, clear blue eyes under high-arching, narrow eyebrows, and framed with long, thick lashes.

"My... God..." Harry breathed in her sexy, not-too-bright-sounding soprano voice. "I.. I look like a monument to sex! Jesus, Josh - I agreed to help you win the contest, but you've gone too far! I look like some brain-dead nympho bimbo, and I can't..."

Josh's brain had been working on Harry's strange reactions since she'd gotten out of the chamber, and had come to a tentative conclusion - one that excited him to no end. Heart fluttering, Josh tested his theory, hoping against hope...

"Harry..." Josh said, firmly. "You have to admit that body is perfect for winning the contest. We shouldn't change a single thing."

He had to keep from bursting into a huge, shit-eating grin as Harry's vapid new face went blank for a second, then she shook her head and said:

"Well... I guess it is the perfect body for winning." Harry agreed, grudgingly, eyeing her outrageously, mindlessly sexy new 'Bimbo' body in the mirror. "I may not like it - but since I have to do this, it might as well be in a body guaranteed to win..."

Josh's face nearly split from the effort not to grin.

* * * * *

Eyeing her new form in the mirror, Harry sighed mentally. The initial shock of seeing this outrageous body had been tremendous - but after a second's reflection, she had to admit it was the best body for winning, no matter how much she didn't like any of this. It only made sense....

One of the things that had made Harry a certified genius was his bouts of inspiration and his ability to make logical deductions. Now, she felt that familiar sensation of a thought about to be born...

...and found herself completely uninterested in following the thought to a conclusion. It just didn't seem important enough - after all, she was utterly certain that this body was the best female body to be stuck in, though she wasn't happy about being in any female body. Once she'd realized that this was the best body she could get stuck in, then there was no reason to think about it any more, was there.

Nope - no reason at all. One she was convinced of the 'rightness' of the fact, then she just...

...accepted it.

* * * * *

"Well... I guess we should go get you some clothes." Josh said... then a thought occurred to him, and he had to fight the smile gain. "You should wait here while I buy your clothes. You don't want to go out dressed in ill-fitting men's clothes. You'll let me go and buy an outfit for you."

Again, there was that 'blank look' - then the new woman sighed. "Well - I'd look silly trying to cram this body into my clothes." She said. "You go ahead and get something for me to wear - but don't go overboard, okay?"

"Sure. Let's just get some measurements." Josh said. "Have you got a Sears Catalogue?"

Harry did have one, and Josh opened it to the section on how to take correct measurements. Harry's new, silky-smooth skin crawled at having Josh's hands on her as he took the measurements, but she bit her full, soft lower lips and didn't say anything as Josh completed the task - apparently enjoying it too much, but Harry kept his peace, because it wasn't worth getting upset about...

...especially since Josh had told her precisely that.

"Okay - I'm going to go buy what you need for the party." Josh said, as Harry settled into the chair - then his voice took on a firm tone.

"You should make up a new name and story to go with your new body." He said, firmly. "You should come up with something that matches the way you look. You should make it detailed and memorize it, so nobody can trip you up at the party."

Harry blinked - then sighed. "Well - I guess I should. It makes sense. Okay, I'll do that while you're gone."

Josh was glad he was going alone - because he could finally let that huge, shit-eating grin spread across his face as he left the apartment, knowing that Harry had no idea that she was accepting anything he told her firmly enough.

Harry, on her part, had taken to seriously considering what persona went with her new body. It didn't even occur to her to wonder why it had suddenly become so important.

When the machine had made the changes to her, it had screwed up something important in her brain chemistry and make-up, though she had no way of knowing that. She had no idea that she'd lost the ability for critical thinking - anything stated firmly enough was accepted by her mind, and she now lacked the ability to seriously reconsider any thought. It was like her mind was wide-open to intrusion, a serious flaw in her make-up that was slowly beginning to heal itself...

...much too slowly.

Josh had specified a persona to match the body she now had. Harry, personally, thought her new body looked like the quintessential Valley Girl Bimbo - and, since her critical thinking was currently 'off- line', it wasn't currently possible for her to conceive of forming any new persona for this body other than that of the Bimbo she saw in the mirror...

* * * * *

"Honey, I'm home...!" Josh called with a laugh as he carried his two bags of purchases into the apartment.

Harry was still sitting in the chair where Josh had left her, and Josh paused to take another long look at her tanned, sexy body, feeling himself become aroused at the sight of that golden figure of a woman. He had to admit he did good work - it was nearly impossible for him to remember who was 'really' in that body.

Not that it mattered - Josh didn't know how it had happened, but he was happy enough with his unexpected ability to 'control' Harry's thoughts.

"So - what did you come up with?" Josh asked, dropping the shopping bags.

"Well, I guess you should start calling me Kandi - Kandi Kantalopes." Harry answered with no trace of sarcasm, only a resigned sigh. She spelled her new name for Josh.

"Really?" josh asked, taken aback.

Harry wasn't even capable of seeing how silly the name was - to her, the body in the mirror had looked like a Kandi Kantalopes, so that was the only conceivable name she could use. "Yeah - I'm from California, and my father - who I call Daddy - is rich. I decided to try being on my own, so I came up here - and one look at this body, and you don't even have to ask to know I'm not all that bright, though I don't know how stupid I really am." She sighed. "With this body, the only person I could possibly be is a brain-dead Bimbo, so that's the persona I worked out."

Josh was amazed - this was working even better than he could have hoped. "well, uh.. that sounds fine..."

"So - what clothes did you get me" Harry - Kandi - asked, with no enthusiasm, looking at the bags Josh held...
...then she frowned. "Hey... that's that... Porno Shop!" She protested. "There's no way I'm wearing anything..."
Smiling, Josh began to convince her that everything he'd bought her was perfect for her new persona...

* * * * *

"Well, I think that... bu-wah!"

Seeing the sudden look of stunned shock on Kurt's face, Troy turned around...

...and his own jaw dropped as he swat the woman who was walking through the gate to his backyard.

She was balanced atop white rounded-toe pumps with a one-and-a-half inch platform and eight inch heels. She had no problem walking in the high heels - in fact she was walking with the sexiest little walk Troy had ever seen, taking short steps and putting one tiny foot in front of the other, long, tanned, utterly glorious legs scissoring with every step. Those legs seemed to rise up for ever before they finally disappeared under the hem of the tiny white leather 'shots' she was wearing, which were very high cut over the hips, and with a low waist-band - they were just barely avoiding the bikini-bottom category, as a matter of fact.

Those hips were doing the cutest little swivel, which was also doing something absolutely mind- numbing to her firm, round, utterly spectacular ass, crammed into those tiny leather shorts.

A matching, midriff-baring white-leather bustier top was very barely enclosing her massive, firm spheres of breast flesh, the rounded 'scoop' shape of each cup just covering the enormous nipples that managed to make visible bulges in the thick, sturdy material. A mile of mouth-watering cleavage was displayed by the tiny bandeau top - and the tits 'shivered' oh-so-delightfully with every step.

It was difficult to pull the eyes up to her sexy, vapid face. It was worth the effort, though - her full, sexy lips were done in a glossy hot-pink lipstick, and were curved upwards in a fixed, brainless smile that was matched by the blank look in her huge, clear blue eyes, with silver eye-shadow and black mascara setting them off so enticingly. Framing her sexy face was a mane of long, thick sandy- blonde hair, pulled back off her face and held in place by a pair of sunglasses tucked into her hair.

Aside from the glasses, she was wearing quite a bit of 'gaudy' jewelry, all of it in silver-tone - dozens of bangles on her slender wrists, three rings on her fingers, a heart-shaped pendant on a chain, whose generally 'arrow' shape seemed to point right back at her massive tits, and long, shiny earrings in her small, dainty lobes.

"Hi, Troy." A voice said, and it was only then that the party's host realized there was somebody with her - Josh, from the team.

* * * * *

While she watched troy try to recover, his jaw snapping shut, Kandi shivered at the naked lust she saw in the short, muscular, platinum-haired youth's dark eyes...

...while wondering why she'd agreed to dress like this. Or agreed even to keep this ridiculously over- endowed body. Though her vapid expression didn't show any trace of her internal turmoil, Kandi was trying to track down the series of decisions that had led her to this point.

Her mind was slowly healing, allowing her to look back on her actions and begin to see the flaws in her 'logic'...

"Uh... Hi, Josh..." Troy finally managed. "And, this vision of loveliness is..."

Kandi missed the question for a second, lost in thought - but didn't realize that her lack of attention translated to the perfect brainless actions her appearance suggestions, as she started and answered the question with a breathy, surprised tone in her high new voice.

"Oh, hi!" She said brightly, barely paying attention. "My name's Kandi." She giggled for good measure, still feeling the need to 'play out' her Bimbo role...

...without knowing why.

There was something definitely wrong here, Kandi realized with a growing horror, even as she simpered brainless through being introduced to Kurt. Though she realized that this wasn't right, for some reason she seemed utterly incapable of breaking character. She knew she was disgusted by being here, by looking like this, and knew that she should demand that they turn around and go home, or even just walk out on her own...

...but, somehow, she just couldn't seem to work up the willpower to translate that knowledge into action. She seemed to be caught up in the 'inertia' of the Kandi person, just going along with it. Even as she struggled to work up the will to turn away, she found herself clasping her hands behind her back - thrusting her huge, heavy, freakishly large new tits even further outwards - and bouncing 'innocently' atop her high-heeled shoes...

'My God!' Kandi thought to her self. 'I.. I'm wearing high-heel shoes. How did I let that happen? In fact - I'm dressed like a real Bimbo! I... I just put the clothes on, like Josh told me to. I... I just did what he said. Why?'

Only now was her actions dawning on her - and it scared the hell out of her.

Even that rising panic, however, wasn't enough to make her break character - hell, it didn't even wipe the simpering, vapid expression from her new face.

She stood the, slowly realizing the extent of what had happened to her, and worrying more and more about it... until she realized that troy was talking to her...

"...mind if we steal Josh for a few minutes?" Troy was asking with what he undoubtedly thought was a charming grin. "I want to talk to him."

Kandi went cold at the thought of being left alone - but her vapid smile didn't slip an inch. "Gee, I dunno..." She said, with a brainless giggle that she just couldn't stop from slipping from between her sexy new lips. "Can I talk to him for a sec, guys?"

"Sure." Troy said, and she giggled and led him off to the side, leaning closer to him, even though it caused her massive new bust to press against his arm with a disturbingly pleasant sensation that she didn't like enjoying.

"Josh... there's something wrong with me." She said in her ditzzy voice, keeping it low. "there must be something wrong with the procedure - because I can't seem to stop following the orders you gave me, and.."

* * * * *

Josh listened with mounting horror as Kandi tried to explain - then felt a wave of relief was over him as he realized two things, both of which greatly amused him. The first was the fact that, knowing about them or not, she was still bound by the commands he put in her mind, and she couldn't break her 'persona' for anybody but him.

Even more importantly - Kandi, subconsciously, considered him such a 'big dumb jock' that it hadn't even occurred to her that he'd known what was happening. She thought it was all one big mistake.

Playing on that, he continued to play dumb, and make sure that nothing would go wrong with his plan.

"Look - I'm not quite following you." Josh lied. "The guys want to talk to me, so you just go ahead and do your 'bimbo' routine for everybody until I get back, then you can explain everything to me as I take you home. Just don't bother me until I tell you I've got the time to listen."

He had to hide a smile as he saw despair flash through her huge, limpid eyes. Though she was falling out of that phase where he had complete control, there was enough left to make sure she wouldn't 'bother' him with the problem until he was ready - and she'd think it was all some mistake. Once he'd changed her back, she'd be upset about the way she'd had to act like a bimbo all night, but there'd be no harm done, and she wouldn't ever blame him for it, thinking it was just a problem with a machine that 'poor dumb Josh' couldn't have caught onto, much less taken advantage.

He watched as she helplessly let go of his arm and giggled a 'See ya' before heading towards the growing group of people in the back yard. Josh watched her go, admiring the sexy wiggle of her ass, thinking he was going to miss the 'ultimate bimbo' when he did turn her back. Of course, he knew he was being a bastard, but it was really mostly harmless, and nobody was really getting hurt - just really, really embarrassed.

Turning away from the perversely delightful sight of the ex-man's wiggling ass and long, tanned legs, Josh walked over to where Troy and Kurt were waiting.

"So - should we just declare the contest done and you can give me the keys to the Ferrari?" Josh joked.

"The car's yours..." Troy said, utterly serious, as he watched Kandi's departing backside. "...If you'll just tell me the truth about where that incredible piece of ass came from. I can't believe that she's real. Just how much surgery did she get to look like that, and how much did you pay her to act that way?"

The two young men turned their eyes on Josh and waited for the answer. Josh opened his mouth... then sighed.

The sigh was part of an act - because he had been struck by pure inspiration even as the first tendrils of panic had set in. After all, he practically wanted to brag about his genius at what he'd done - but he'd had a flash of sheer genius, something that would make a believable story - and make him the most famous guy on campus, getting him everything he could ever want.

Pretending to 'give in', he told the guys the 'truth'.

"Okay, you want to know?" Josh said, dragging them into a secluded corner of the yard and looking around theatrically. "you just have to keep it quite -only people you really know and trust."

"Okay, sure.." Troy said. "Spill it, Josh."

Josh smiled. "That's her real personality - but not her real body. She didn't have any surgery, though."

He wasn't about to reveal it was really a guy - this way was much better. "Huh?" Kurt asked.

Josh smiled even wider. "I rented the apartment next to mine, and had this guy build me a machine. One that can change how people look - you know, give girls bigger tits, or..."

His smile almost broke his face as he revealed the insight that was going to make him the most popular guy ever to go to college. "...or give guys bigger dicks..."

The two guys looked at him in disbelief. "yeah, right!"

Josh shrugged. "What if I can prove it?" he said. "Come on - I'll take you there and show you - and then, when we get back, you can give me the keys to the Ferrari..."

* * * * *

Kandi wandered through the crowd, helplessly grinning back at the men gaping over her new, hugely- endowed body. Inside, she was horrified and disgusted by being trapped at the part, playing the role of 'bimbo' - but she couldn't stop herself, despite the rising disgust, horror and panic, especially at having been abandoned by Josh. She wished that she'd taken time to explain it more slowly and carefully, so he would have understood her - but in her rush to explain and get a lift home, she'd annoyed him, and he'd inadvertently trapped her in this persona, thinking she was only 'willingly' playing along.

"Well, hello there..." A vaguely handsome guy with dark hair said to her - or, rather, to her huge tits, because that's where his eyes were fastened. "I'm Kyle. Can I buy you a drink, hot stuff?"

Kandi shuddered inside, horrified at being hit on by a man - and so blatantly, too. She opened her mouth and said:

"I'm Kandi! Giggle I'd love a drink, handsome!"

'Oh, shit!' Kandi thought in horror - no matter how much she actually wanted to run away, disgusted, accepting drinks - and reveling in the attention - from guys was part of a perfect bimbo's persona - and she couldn't help herself.

In fact - she helplessly found herself taking his arm and smiling stupidly at him, pressing her huge bust against his shoulder as he led her to the bar.

In no time at all, she was seated on a chaise lounge, helplessly flirting with a ring of men who surrounded her, laughing at the stupid jokes and responding 'positively' to even the worst, most blatant, and tackiest of their come-ons...

..while, inside, Kandi desperately struggled to regain control of her renegade body, screaming in utter, embarrassed disgust at the way she was helplessly acting.

Her single thread of redemption was the fact that 'bimbo' or not, she was safe from actually taking any of the guys up on their offers. Even a bimbo had the right to choose who'd they'd sleep with, and since her actual sexual orientation was still safely unaltered, she wasn't compelled to sleep with any of the guys.

In fact...

After twenty minutes of so of the helpless flirting, Kandi began to calm down. Though she was embarrassed and disgusted by her flirting, nothing could come of it with these guys - and they'd never know that the huge-breasted woman that they were flirting with was 'really' a guy. Knowing she was safe from them, and from 'discovery'...

...she began to find that she could actually get a kick out of finding ways to turn guys down. A lot of these guys were the ones who'd tortured 'the Nerd' while growing up, and Kandi began to enjoy the power she could secretly wield in her new form. Like when she brainlessly giggled and 'thoughtlessly' turned one guy down because she's 'heard he was too quick in bed'...

Since she was just a 'bimbo', who blurted stuff out without thinking, there was nothing the guy could do, other than blush and try to bear up under his friends' ribbing.

Kandi began to enjoy the things she could get guys to do for her, too, sending them on all sorts of stupid errands, like when she had a craving for strawberries, something that wasn't at the party - a dozen guys dashed off to the local stores to search for them.

Meanwhile, Kandi surreptitiously began eyeing the women at the party, wondering which ones might not take offense if a dumb bimbo should suggest a little girl-girl action...

* * * * *

"...and that makes it official." Troy said with a grin, sliding the keys to the Ferrari onto Josh's key-ring and handing them back to the smiling youth. "Go ahead - take'er out for a spin. I suggest Old Route 66 - it's the best for a test-drive, even if it is a ways away."

"Sounds great!" Josh said, sliding behind the wheel of the bright red car with a sigh of pleasure.

The grin on his face was more than just the car, though - it was also because of his two new - and now very well-endowed - best friends.

He'd taken them to the apartment and taken them, one at a time, into the spare room and put them into the machine. Because it was a 'localized' change rather than a full-body change, giving them the over-sized cocks they'd wanted had been quick and easy...

...but it hadn't stopped them from becoming as suggestible as Kandi had been after coming out of the machine, and Josh had given them some instructions to make them very friendly and generous towards him. Learning a lesson from Kandi, though, he'd also instructed them to completely forget that he'd made the suggestion, making them think they'd each decided it on their own, as an effect of him giving them such huge, thick cocks, each one tailored to their own ideal 'equipment', making them supremely happy.

Now, he turned the key in the ignition, and heard the performance engine scream into life. Laughing with sheer joy - and Kandi not even crossing his mind in his moment of bliss - he put the car into gear and left a trail of burnt rubber behind him as he squealed out of the driveway.

Troy watched him go with a grin - then turned to Kurt, and held up the key to the 'change Machine' apartment he'd adroitly palmed while putting the car keys on the ring.

"So - you think Tracy and Nina would like to... enhance themselves?" Troy asked, with a grin.

"Oh, sure... and maybe a couple of the guys from the team." Kurt suggested. "You know - just to 'round out' the locker room, maybe intimidate a water-boy or two..."

Grinning, the two men began to make mental lists of who to initiate into the club, glad they'd watched carefully as Josh had rather stupidly shown them how the machine worked.

Of course, each on thought to himself, for the great power he'd inadvertently given them, they'd make sure he was well compensated, being generous and nice to him almost to a fault... It was the least they could do...

* * * * *

" 'scuse me!" Kandi giggled, rising - and actively making sure that the motion was as utterly sexy as she could make it, enjoying the dumb looks on the guys faces as they stared mindlessly at her body. "Gotta go 'powder my nose'."

As they guys watched her derrière - which she made sure to put an extra wiggle in - Kandi headed for the main house.

She was thoroughly enjoying herself now, and wished josh was around so she could thank him. Once she'd gotten over her initial, ingrained emotions about being 'sissy', she'd really begun to enjoy herself.

She was playing the ultimate 'practical joke' on the guys who'd made life so awkward growing up, and was doing so in an infallible costume. Sure, it felt perverted flirting with 'other' guys, but she knew that she'd never fulfill their dreams of having sex with her, which made it a harmless 'guilty pleasure' that only she would ever know about - even josh wasn't here to witness the 'perverted' things she was doing, and if he had been, he would think it was part of her 'need' to act the bimbo, once she'd explained the accident that had happened. After all, she would never tell him the truth, that she'd actually gotten into playing the role and went along willingly.

Reaching the bathroom, she closed and locked the door, then undid the 'hidden' zipper down the side of the skirt and let it puddle around her shapely ankles, revealing the lacy white bikini briefs she was wearing. Pulling these down, she awkwardly bent over, having a hard time seeing past the damned, annoying, heavy tits, and raised the lid and seat of the toilet...

...then sighed and lowered the seat again, rolling her eyes as she turned around and sat her full, round ass on the john.

It took a couple of minutes to actually work up the nerve to release her bladder, as peeing as a woman just felt so... wrong. When she finally did let go, she found it also felt considerably different, the urine coming out in fits and burst that just sort of sprayed any-which-way.

Of course, that didn't hold a candle to how weird - and perversely pleasurable - it felt to wipe her crotch, her hand seemingly wanting to spend more time pressed against her pussy, especially if she moved it in a rocking motion right there...

Blushing, Kandi finished cleaning herself off, washed her hands, and rearranged her clothing. She opened the door to the bathroom...

...and found herself facing four attractive young women. Her first thought was a gleeful idea that maybe these girls had already had the idea of some lesbo fun with the buxom bimbo at the party...

...but the look on their faces quickly dissuaded her.

"What's going on?" She asked perkily, her confusion and fear hidden by her facade.

"You having fun there, Kandi..?" the brunette nearest to her asked, unpleasant tones dripping all over her pronunciation of the name.

"Uh, I..." Kandi started, feeling a chill up her spine.

"Come with us, Kandi." A redhead suggested in a cold, firm tone. "I think we need to talk."

Kandi shuddered as she felt the command worm itself into her brain. Though she was improving, she wasn't completely 'safe' yet. All they guys had been too busy trying to be slick or cute or suave - none had tried a 'direct order', and so she'd been unaffected.

This woman's iron tone, however, grabbed her brain, leaving Kandi helpless to refuse.

"Okay!" She agreed with a brainless grin, trying - and failing - to force herself to walk away. Instead, she followed the four pissed-off women into a study at the far side of the house. They led her inside - then shut and locked the door.

"Sit down." The redhead ordered. Tall, shapely and attractive, the lines around her steely blue eyes and full lips suggested that she was a 'rich bitch', used to taking control - and Kandi simply couldn't refuse the iron tone she was wielding.

"Sure!" She said, flouncing helplessly to a chair and sitting in it, facing the four angry women.

Unfortunately for Kandi, the iron-willed redhead seemed to have been elected spokeswoman of the little group.

"So, Kandi - you certainly seem to be having fun flirting with the guys out there." The redhead said, pacing in front of the seated ex-male bimbo. "All of the guys..."

"Gee, yeah!" Kandi giggled, unable to stop herself even as she realized the source of the girls' ire.

The red-head glared at her. "Oh, knock off the bimbo routine! Nobody's that much of a bimbo - hell, you're acting like a walking stereotype. For God's sake, tell me the truth - you're just pretending this is the way you are, aren't you Kandi?" the way it was phrased left Kandi with only one answer she could give - the 'somewhat truth', from the inherent assumption in the red-head's question.

"Oh, I'm playing it up a little, 'cause it's fun." Kandi admitted with painfully obvious sincerity, since what she was saying was the absolute truth - as far as it went. "But, otherwise, it's just the way Kandi Kantalopes is, and I can't do anything about it!" She shrugged. "Sorry!"

Well, it was true - as far as it went. Of course, it didn't occur to the red-head or her friends to ask Kandi if she'd ever been anybody other than Kandi...

The women shared an incredulous look, the buxom blonde bimbo's sincerity taking them aback a bit. Unfortunately for Kandi, not enough - Red went back on the offensive.

"Be honest!" She commanded. "You've had plastic surgery and breast implants to look like that, haven't you?"

Again, sincerity laced Kandi's soprano voice as she answered truthfully. "Nope. I've never had any surgery of any kind to look like this!"

Which, again was true.

The brunette was obviously the most doubtful, despite the apparent sincerity of Kandi's answers. "Oh, come on!" She said to her friends. "Surely you don't believe that the actually stereotypical bimbo exists. I mean - she's to perfect a bimbo in every way. It's not possible."

"I don't know..." Red hesitated. "I mean... she seems to be telling the truth..."

Red turned back to Kandi, all doubt leaving her voice as she took on the imperious, commanding tones Kandi so feared.

"Okay - I want the truth to my questions." She said. "Did you really enjoy teasing those guys with you body?"

Helpless to fully explain because of her need to play the bimbo, there was no sign for Kandi that the answer wasn't heart-felt and eager. "Oh, yes!"

"Have you ever had a long-term boyfriend that you've remained faithful to?" "Oh, gosh, no!"

Red's eyes rolled. "Have you ever, as far back as you can remember, dressed in more... conservative dresses, skirts or blouses?"

"Nope!" Kandi grinned - screaming mentally at Red to rephrase the question so she could answer it differently...

"Do you always show off your tits like that? Flaunt them and use them to turn guys on?" Red demanded.

"Ever since I've had 'em!" Kandi said, with apparent pride.

'Oh, God - please let this stop!' She prayed, mentally, horrified at the way she was being depicted, struggling - in vain - to 'break character'...

Red sighed and shrugged at the other girls, who were looking on Kandi with near pity, now...

...except the brunette, who seemed more pissed then ever at the 'revelations' that told the 'truth' about Kandi. Her face in a snarl, she pushed Red aside and loomed over Kandi, her voice full of the strength of her anger, hard and strong.

"So, this is who you really are, huh?" She said...

Feeling a surge of relief, Kandi opened her mouth to explain, to end this...

"Shut up! I don't want you to say a damned thing until I'm done with you!" the brunette screamed - and a wave of despair washed over Kandi as her mouth helplessly locked closed on her explanation, and salvation.

"Well, so you can't help yourself!" The brunette shouted, shrugging of Red's restraining arm. Sharing a look of resignation, the other three women turned away and studiously ignored the brunette and her hapless victim.

"Well, fine!" The brunette shout. "Go back out there and flirt outrageously with the guys!"

Kandi wanted to either scream or whimper as the words slammed into her brain like sledge-hammer blows - but was helplessly to do anything other than grin rapidly at the woman who was unknowingly sinking Kandi into her own, personal hell.

"Go ahead, try to turn them all on with your body!" The brunette continued to rant, furiously. "Try to get as many of them as hard as you can! Rub your body up against them! Kiss them with your oh-so- sexy lips! Go ahead!"

'Please, no...' Kandi moaned, inside, unable to stop the words - the commands - from being imprinted on her brain. She just wanted to curl up as she prayed to get to strike her deaf, dumb and blind.

It didn't happen, as the brunette continued her tirade.

"Go ahead, and seduce guys!" She screamed. "Get them to let you suck their cock! Get them to fondle and fuck your big titties! Go ahead and have them fuck you long and hard. Go ahead - be a cum-hungry nymphomaniac. Go right ahead!" She leaned in close to Kandi's vapid face. "Then, after you've spent all weekend at the party, sucking and fucking as many guys as you can, you go get yourself a job as a stripper or a whore or a porno star, and never... ever... come... back!"

Finished her rant, the brunette turned on one high-heel and stormed out of the room, followed by her three friends, who muttered inane, half-hearted apologies for the brunette as she abashedly filed out, all four heading towards the garage, then home, without rejoining the party in the yard.

...leaving Kandi to wallow in the misery inside her head, even as her rogue body rose from the chair, smile still helplessly fixed to her full lips as she strode out of the room with her sexy little stride, heading helplessly towards the yard, even as she fought, mentally kicking and screaming, to break through the layers of programming and escape, before it was too late.

She couldn't, and found herself going through the kitchen and out the back door to the yard, where twilight had already sunk towards full night, leaving the yard lit by the lights and lanterns set up for the party.

As she helplessly jiggled and swayed across the lawn, it took a second for Kandi's sobbing, screaming, captive mind to realize that the party had changed flavor. For one thing, it was much smaller than it had been. For another... there was something slightly 'off' in the flavor of the people still left, though she couldn't immediately put her finger on it.

Kandi had no way of knowing that Troy had pared down the guest-list, making excuses to get rid of everybody he didn't want to know about 'The Change Machine', so that his remaining guests would be free to talk about it...

...now that they'd each had a go at it.

Of course, what none of the guests had the slightest clue about was the fact that they were all highly suggestible, and had already had their mindset altered to one degree or another by things said without any idea how the person in question would be - very deeply - affected...

Helplessly, struggling internally - and in vain - to escape her fate, Kandi drew closer to the pool, where the remaining guests had gathered, lit mostly from the soft glow of the underwater floods.

As she drew closer, Kandi's stunned, horrified - and trapped - mind began to make out more details about the remaining guests. One of the first things she noticed was the fact that the ration was definitely skewed, with a three-to-one predominance of men. She also noticed that many of the guests, especially the remaining female guests, had apparently run home to change into new outfits, quite often sexier or more 'trashy' ones...

Kandi was just beginning to wonder why so many of the female guests were so remarkably beautiful, sexy, and/or buxom, when she entered the pool of light, and was noticed.

"Hey!" Troy announced in a gracious tone. "Here's the sexually goddess who started our little club - come on over, gorgeous!"

Helplessly, Kandi found herself smiling more broadly and adding a little extra 'oomph' in her walk as she angled towards him...

...and walked right into his arm, her slender, tanned arms sliding around his firm, muscular body as she pulled herself tightly against him, her huge tits shoved firmly into his upper chest. Because of her height, he long legs, and high heels, she was taller than Troy...

..so she found herself tilting her head down as her lips parted in silent, hateful invitation.

Troy needed no extra encouragement. With the hand not holding his beer, he reached around and cupped her firm, full ass through her leather shorts, squeezing and fondling her firm buttock as he tilted his head to press his lips firmly against hers, kissing her hungrily.

Troy was glad to see her - because it meant there was one more woman hanging around. Troy couldn't understand how his careful plan to end up with a nice balance of men and women at his new 'Changed Club Initiation Party' had gone so utterly askew.

Of course, he - and the other guests - didn't know about the mental susceptibility to 'innocent' comments. Many of the men had offered the just-changed women 'compliments'... like 'you're so gorgeous, you should be a model'. The woman, finding the idea suddenly very important, would run off to start her new career. Likewise, similar comments on how a buxom woman should be this, or a now athletic woman should be that, or how a certain woman should 'but clothes' that would emphasize this-or-that new feature had sent many of the women off on suddenly overwhelmingly important quests.

In at least one case, a woman had been so annoying about the 'utter perfection' she thought her new body was, somebody had suggested she 'go fuck herself'...

Kandi, on the other hand, wasn't yet aware of the new purpose of the party - at the moment, she was busy trying to cope with the fact that she was 'eagerly' and 'hungrily' kissing a man...

...and finding it physically pleasurable, which only served to increase her hidden emotional and intellectual disgust, shame and horror as she kissed Troy with every sign of complete and utter contentment with having her lush new body pressed against his, their tongues dancing sensually in a long, passionate kiss.

They had just broken the kiss - Troy, utterly happy, Kandi, looking equally as pleased, but disgusted at having kissed a man -- and found it enjoyable - when Kandi felt another arm slide around her flat, bare stomach and draw her back.

Turning, she found herself facing a tall, slender man with a shit-eating grin on his face, his eyes locked on her cleavage.

"Hey, hot stuff.." The guy - who somebody had called 'tit obsessed', and so now he was - said hungrily to the woman with the biggest tits at the party. "Mind if I play with your tits for awhile?"

"No, honey - I'd love it..." Kandi giggled, helplessly, arching her back to make her huge tits all the more prominent.

"Great..." The man said, practically drooling. Eagerly, he unzipped the silver sipper running down the front of the bustier top, negligently letting it drop free as he gazed over her shoulder in abject adoration of her huge, round tits.

"Oh, yeah..." He said, cupping each tit with a hand and fondling them. "Oh, god - yeah..."

"Yeah..." Kandi moaned in agreement - hating the fact that his touch was driving her wild, his skillful manipulation causing pleasure to run through her huge tits and rapidly swelling nipples. She didn't want to enjoy this curse, and the fact a man was touching her disgusted her...

...but the actual sensation was pleasurable.. and arousing...

"Hey, Melissa..." The man said, his voice thick with pleasure at fondling Kandi's huge tits as he addressed the least-endowed woman there, who was busy gazing at her 'perfect' face in a compact mirror.

"Yeah, Ron...?" She replied in a distracted tone, smiling at her reflection.

"God.. you should go get yourself a pair of tits like these..." He moaned - and his new, deeply ingrained obsession made him continue. "...or even bigger. A pair of huge, firm, round tits, to drive men nuts and make them crazy to fuck you.. Oh, yeah - you've gotta know how great having huge tits would be..."

Melissa's face went momentarily blank - then she shook her head. "Oh, yeah..." She said, almost hungrily. "Huge, round tits... to drive men wild.. Oh, it's so sexy..."

Almost frantically, she rose from the chair she'd been seated at and hurried towards the gate.

Ron, on the other hand, didn't seem interested in leaving at all as he swung around to face Kandi...

...so he could bury his face against her tits, licking and sucking her huge, thick nipples as he continued to fondle her firm mounds.

"Ohhhh..." Kandi moaned helplessly, letting her head loll back in pleasure - and pleasure was indeed what she was feeling, whether she wanted to or not. Ron was definitely very talented, and he was causing her great amounts of...

Kandi was ashamed by the burst of regret she felt when Ron stopped. "Lay down..." Ron said, thickly. "I.. I gotta fuck these babies.."

Helplessly, Kandi found herself smiling at him, cupping her huge tits together invitingly as she slowly sank to her knees, then lay back in the grass beside the pool.

"Oh, yeah..." Ron said, quickly undoing his pants and dropping them and his shorts down, revealing an amazingly long, of not particularly thick, cock, already rock hard and throbbing in the pale light.

By now, Kandi had realized that Josh had let the secret out, and these people had used the machine. If nothing else, the sight of Ron's unusual cock would have quelled any doubts. However, there was nothing she could do about it, trapped in the role of a sex-hungry bimbo as Ron straddled her, placing his long, warm cock in her monumental cleavage.

Helplessly, she placed her hands on either side of her huge, bouncy boobs and pushed them together as Ron began to slowly move his hips, his long cock sliding in her cleavage, the head popping in and out from the top of that chasm.

Kandi moaned in 'pleasure' - but it was feigned. She was enjoying her hands pressing her own tits more than she was the feeling of the cock sliding between them - and she hated herself 'longing' for the pleasure of him fondling her tits. Instead, there was nothing she could do but pretend to enjoy it as he continued to tit-fuck her massive new bust...

* * * * *

Stepping out of the machine, Josh walked over to the mirror and struck a pose, admiring the enormous, thick cock that thrust from his crotch.

After finishing his test-drive, he'd arrived back at the party... to find that Troy and Kurt had 'spilled the beans' to a select 'few' friends. That hadn't really bothered Josh terribly - though he'd planned for Troy and Kurt to bring other would-be 'changers' to him for the work, so he could extend his hold, the thought of the bunch of them running around 'suggestible' had caused him a guilty thrill, and though he'd known he should have said something, he figured it was a) not his fault; and b) about what they deserved.

What had really pissed him off was Troy's denying him re-entry to the party, since he was 'unchanged'. Despite the fact he was the one that had allowed Troy and Kurt to do what they'd done, Troy seemed fixated on not letting anyone but fellow changees into the party...

What Josh didn't know was that it had been Kurt's idea, and mentioning it to Troy had imprinted it on Troy's brain, so Troy was completely unable to 'bend the rules' to let Josh in.

Josh had driven his new car home, upset... then, after some thought, had decided that having a huge cock (temporarily) would be fun, then he could change himself back afterwards.

"Now..." Josh told his almost ridiculously well-endowed reflection. "I'll just wait four hours before going back to the party, so I'm safely past the 'easily suggestible' stage, and then..."

Just then, the door to the room opened, and a mildly shapely girl with a breath-takingly lovely face entered the room.

"Wha..." Josh stammered. "What are you doing here!"

"I need bigger tits." The woman said, in a tone of voice that said it should have been self explanatory. "Huge tits, sexy tits! Huge, round, sexy tits are so wonderful to have! To cram into tight tops, and flaunt. To drive men wild so they want to fondle and suck and fuck them. I need to have huge, round tits!"

She began to walk around the console, to get to the computer and beginning the programming.

Josh then made a mistake. The only cases of 'suggested' people he'd seen were the one's he'd programmed himself, and he'd never stayed around and seen the total, overwhelming affect of the suggestions. He'd never seen the effects of ill-planned 'random' comments at all, since he'd been careful in his programming of Kandi, Kurt and Troy.

So he didn't truly realize how stupid trying to reason with this apparently obsessed woman was as he walked towards her, finding his huge new cock to be a bit of a nuisance when he moved.

"Look - you don't really have to give yourself huge tits.." he began, and didn't think to phrase it in a more commanding tone, which might have had the desired effect.

"Yes - I need huge, firm tits!" She insisted, turning to face him. "Look!"

She gestured at her probably c-cup chest, which Josh actually thought was her nicest feature, after her face - not a 'big tit' aficionado, he'd chosen that look for Kandi because he knew it was what Troy liked, and that was who's 'dream woman' he'd been making Kandi.

So - without thinking, Josh screwed up royally.

"I think you look fine - great, in fact." He said, honestly - then shoved both feet deep into his mouth with: "Why would you want to make them bigger?"

Based on the mindless obsession dumped into her, Melissa began raving. "Oh, huge tits are the best. Huge tits are so sexy, and sensitive. The feel great, it feels fantastic to show them off and get men all hot and horny over them, and to get them to fondle and suck them! Oh, you have no idea how great huge tits will be - you should try it!"

Josh blinked. Maybe he was being unnecessarily critical. After all, just because he wasn't a fan of huge tits, he shouldn't try and judge this girl. Hell - maybe...

"That's a good idea." Josh agreed, no longer capable of considering what had just happened. "yeah - yeah, go ahead and give yourself a huge set of tits, then set it up again. I might as well see what it's like before I bitch about it, right?"

The woman smiled, turning back to the computer. "Yeah! Yeah, we'll each get a pair of big, huge tits! You've gotta see what it feels like, having them and fondling them and cramming them into tight clothes so you can get men all turned on to fondle and suck them! You'll absolutely love it!"

Josh nodded - that sounded like a good plan...

* * * * *

Helplessly, Kandi headed back towards the small knot of party-goers, having just finished a shower to wash off the spray of cum that had messed up her face and hair, followed by a careful session of applying some borrowed make-up - a torturous task, since she wasn't very skilled at it, and didn't have any help. Asking for some would have seemed out of character.

She was almost to the group of people, and just noticing that some people had left, and a few others arrived, when she noticed somebody coming up from the gate...

..and found herself giggling. It was the girl, Melissa...

...and she was huge. Kandi's tits might be the size of basketballs, but barely concealed by the straining blouse Melissa wore was a set that was closer to beach-ball size, with incredibly huge, thick nipples straining to burst free of the fabric. Kandi was amazed she was walking so gracefully, knowing how heavy her own, comparatively smaller tits were - Melissa would have to get used to the backaches that would accompany such a gargantuan set of tits.

The giggle had been both in character, and startled out of her - but instantly she began to regret it, hating what her invention was doing to these people. This was all her fault. It was bad enough what she'd ended up having done to herself in her quest to be accepted socially - but she wanted to cry at the sight of what it was doing to these people...

...these shallow, vain people. Now, she found it hard to believe she'd ever wanted to be part of their group. With their psyches unguarded, they were letting what truly lurked beneath run rampant, and Kandi knew that her old, geeky group of friends might have actually given in to the temptation to play with the device she'd created, if she'd told them about it - but their 'playing' would have been careful and well planned, with plenty of safeguards to ensure there was no lasting damage. That was the idea behind the device, that it be used for temporary, safe applications, eventually leading to rigidly controlled cosmetic surgery replacement and the like.

Even as she helplessly chatted with the now massively-endowed Melissa and continued towards the party, such as it was, Kandi could see these rich, popular people for what they truly were - vain, egotistical, self-centered. They were the handsome, popular group - and that was because they were so intently focused on appearance, on themselves, on 'taking', rather than sharing. Even as she felt the guilt of being the unwilling architect of this bizarre situation, she also felt a sort of cosmic justice as work - the people who were the most vain about themselves and their lifestyles were unwittingly driving each other into extremes, just as Josh had driven her into her own sort of just, pre-enacted punishment for what eventually came about from her actions.

Then Melissa and Kandi had rejoined the strange 'Initiation' party, where she was the only one who, as yet, knew what was happening - and the time for such deep, intelligent thoughts were past as she was once more submerged in the depths of her own torture.

"Hey, Kandi..." Carl - a once slender man, now quite muscular - said with a grin, slipping his hand around her waste.

"Hey handsome.." Kandi helplessly replied, 'willing' sharing a quick-but-passionate kiss with him - and taking guilty pleasure in enjoying it, having come to the conclusion that the best she could do was force herself get over some of her ingrained feelings and enjoy whatever she could, since not everything would even have the dubious 'pro' of being physically pleasurable, as she'd discovered. It still felt sick and perverted to enjoy a kiss - but that pleasure itself was the only thing she had a choice about. She could choose to enjoy it, or hate herself for finding it pleasurable - and since she couldn't actually control herself, or stop the actual actions she was going to commit, she was going to have to salvage whatever she could from this, or simply sink beneath the sheer weight of negative emotions that was building up from this.

Breaking the quick kiss, Carl grinned. "Hey - that's some set of lips you got on you, babe."

"Gee, I sooo glad you like them!" Kandi gushed, helpless to stop. "You wanna see what they're like wrapped around you cock, baby?"

"Oh, yeah - that's what I want to hear..." Carl agreed, enthusiastically. "You got it, babe!" Kandi giggled, sinking helplessly to her knees.

"Oh, wow - Kandi's gonna blow..." A girl (who somebody had told was a world-class cock-sucker, and so she now considered herself to be.) said, fuzzily. The woman's current state wasn't helped at all by the bag of pot that had been brought out, a fair amount of which she'd had between 'toking the other kind of joint', as she had put it to one guy.

In the dazed, doped state she was in, the woman leaned over. "Kandi - you'll love sucking cock. Absolutely."

Kandi's mind froze in horror - but she only felt the barest twinge in her mind, not that sledge-hammer impact from before. Mentally, she sighed in relief at the fact she was now safe from any further 'tampering'...

...not realizing that the weak 'command' from the stoned woman, faint as it was, had sort of filtered through her brain to connect up with the still-powerful words of the brunette who, during her ranting, had - among other damning things - had told her to be 'cum-hungry'.

It was enough for the weak little command to merge with that very powerful one...

Pulling down Carl's shorts, Kandi found herself facing one of the few cocks in the group that was unchanged - though Carl had been fairly well endowed to begin with. Now, his cock sprung from his crotch, hard and ready.

Mentally shuddering, Kandi leaned forward, her lips helplessly parting to accept his cock into her mouth.

It was... different. Though her emotions were screaming at her the sensation was neither inherently pleasant, or unpleasant. The taste of a cock in her mouth - or Carl's at least - was sort of salty and musty, with a faint - but unpleasant - hint of old sweat and other, less savory, flavors. Not unbearably unpleasant though, and balanced by the mildly pleasant sensation of it's presence - it sort of felt like she was French-kissing a very large, warm, throbbing tongue.

Wrapping one hand around the base of his shaft, Kandi began to bob her head up and down with wet, slurping noises, her lips locked tightly around the shaft as her tongue danced around. She let her body sort of drop into a 'natural' rhythm, trying very hard to separate her mind from the reality of what was happening, imagining that she was simply sucking on a strange new type of lollipop, and making up her mind whether she liked it.

It actually worked - her body continued performing her first blow-job while she fell into a daze, not consciously realizing what she was doing at all as she went through the motions well enough. In fact, so separated was she from the actual actions, that it came as a surprise to Kandi when Carl grunted and began to cum.

She'd planned to suck him to the edge and let him splatter over her face and cleavage, then grabbing another shower - but the surprise of the ejaculation caused her to instinctively swallow the first gush... then she was frantically sucking on the cock like it was a straw.

Cum! Cum tasted... spectacular! Fantastic! The warm, thick, salty liquid filling her mouth and gushing down her throat was the most utterly wonderful substance she'd ever tasted. Pure ambrosia!

She didn't even maintain the presence of mind to be disgusted by her sudden, eager desire to drain every drop of Carl's wonderful man-fluid. She also didn't realize that the now-permanently-linked commands in her mind had literally made her 'cum-hungry' - the flavor of the sperm gushing in her mouth was completely new to her, and she had no way of knowing that it would have been disgusting to her. Not even realizing this was a result of implanted commands, her mind didn't attach the stigmata of it being 'forced' onto her, and she gobbled the cum like a woman starved.

"Oh.. that was wonderful!" Kandi moaned as she lapped up the last drop and pulled her mouth free. "Umm... Cum tastes soooo.. great!"

Inside, she was shocked to find that she was deliriously happy with the taste, feel and texture of cum - but she couldn't stop herself. It was the most enjoyable thing she could remember ever swallowing, and even if she had to (ugh) suck a man's cock to get it, it was a small price to pay to drink such a wonderful substance.

She'd suck cock any time for this. Hell, she'd do it again right this instant... She could, too.

"Excuse me..." She said, vapidly, to Carl as he puled up his shorts, her eyes already hungrily searching for another 'donor'. Somewhere, in the back of her mind, she was disgusted by her sudden 'addiction' to cum - but that was easily drowned out by the sheer pleasure of gulping down a hot load.

Rising to her high-heels, he was barely aware of the weight and shift of her bust as she moved, of her sexy wiggle, of all the other sensations and reminders of her cursed status...

..she was too focused on getting some more of that delicious cum.

* * * * *

Wet hair slicked back, dressed in a thick, long bathrobe and pair of pantyhose, Josh walked out of the bathroom.

The athletically-built youth felt unbelievable silly wearing the pantyhose, but they were the only viable solution he'd found for his gigantic new cock. Melissa, the girl who'd helped him get his incredible, perfect set of tits...

Josh paused at the mere thought of his glorious mounds and gazed down with a smile at the mile of cleavage showed through the artfully arranged top of the bathrobe that barely covered his glorious, gigantic, and oh-so-delightfully-sensitive new nipples. His perfect new bust hung there, smooth and soft and unblemished - Melissa had been smart enough to realize how stupid tits would look with his chest hair, and had considerably had the machine remove all his bodily hair as well. It felt weird to have smooth, soft skin and (because she'd used the same setting she'd set up for herself) he was embarrassed to have both the smoother, silkier skin she'd wanted - and the higher, finer eyelashes she'd included. However, all of that was a small price to pay for his spectacular new tits - he absolutely loved them, and didn't know why he'd ever thought big tits were undesirable on women, much less himself...

Anyway - Melissa had not only helped him with that, she'd also been kind enough to hive him a long tit-fondle in exchange for one herself - and had even thrown in a blow-job for his new cock, which had been great.

Since Josh didn't want any chance of somebody 'suggesting' something to him - which could lead to problems - he was sticking to his plan of staying where it was safe until his suggestibility wore of. Oh, yes, he was smart - there was no way somebody was going to make him do something stupid.

The problem was - there was nobody here to fondle or appreciate his new, spectacular tits - except for himself. He'd spent the entire time in the shower, uncontrollably fondling his tits and jacking of his cock, aroused by the reflection of his perfect bust in the mirror. He'd sat on the little bench in the stall, screaming with pleasure over and over again, until his voice had gone hoarse and his throat had felt like it was full of ground glass, expressing the twin ecstasies of orgasms - and just having these wonderful new additions to play with.

His throat wasn't the only thing sore, though. Despite his smooth, soft legs, his cock was very tender and the bouncing and jostling from merely walking was very, very painful. He'd over-used his cock so much even fondling his huge new nipples wouldn't get a twitch out of it, and it was very sore and tender indeed - his underwear had felt like sandpaper against it when he'd tried to use them to restrain his limp new cock.

So - the soft, confining fabric of the pantyhose. He felt like an idiot wearing them on his smooth, muscular legs, but they did a great job of holding his cock immobile in a pleasantly soft grip.

Walking gingerly, Josh headed towards the kitchen for a drink, loving the way his huge new tits jiggled and swayed with each step...

...when the door to the apartment opened, and a guy Josh didn't know came in.

Josh saw the guys' eyes flick to the well-deployed expanse of breast-flesh - and felt a wave of desire. Here was somebody who could appreciate Josh's wonderful new endowments, could fondle and suck them...!

"Hi there..." Josh said in the husky whisper that was the best his battered throat could manage. "What say you give these babies a bit of TLC, huh?"

+ + +

Luke stared in disbelief at the amazonian woman standing before him, her thick bathrobe open at the top to display her unbelievably huge, firm tits, and her grotesquely muscular legs, in nylons, protruding from the bottom of the knee-length robe.

"Uh... no thanks..." Luke grimaced.

The woman seemed stricken, the pained tone coming through in her husky voice. "What... Is there something wrong with my tits?"

Luke almost replied that they were freakishly huge - but decided, given her obvious affection for her bust, to re-phrase it.

"Look, your tits are fine." He lied, seeing relief flood across her square-jawed, too-masculine face. He sought a not-too-mean way of offering an excuse... "What you need to do is find a more seductive way of asking - and a lot more feminine mouth and voice in which to do it."

Okay, Luke thought, that last bit was unnecessarily cruel - he could have stopped after claiming it was the way she'd asked.

On the other hand - he could have went whole-hog and said she needed a new body to go with those tits...

Shaking his head, Luke went past the grotesque woman - he needed to increase his supply of cum, to make that sexy little cock-sucker happy...

+ + +

Blinking and shaking his head to clear it, Josh slapped his forehead.

"Of course!" He whispered huskily to himself. "I'm trying to get guys to fondle my tits! Sure, they focus entire on these gorgeous babies, so the fact that they'd attached to a man won't phase them - tit's like this, and it doesn't matter what they're attached to. But when I speak, it screw them up - who wants to hear a man asking you something like that."

Sitting on the couch, Josh waited impatiently for the guy to finish with The Machine, so he could go in and give him a new voice to better ask for what he wanted... and, while he was at it, he should do something with his lips, because the sound of a person's voice was a combination of vocal cords, tongue and lips, right...?

Hearing the guy finish, josh rose and padded towards the room as the guy was heading out, adjusting his pants...

...and was struck by the thought. If Josh couldn't get a man for his magnificent tits, maybe this guy - who had to be going back to the party - could convince a girl to come over for when Josh's cock was back in operation. Asking for a girl willing to suck or fuck would be to presumptuous, but maybe...

"Hey..." Josh said, just before the guy left. "Do you know anybody who likes handjobs? Likes the way it feels to have the hands wrapped around a huge, thick cock?"

The guy got a weird expression. "Look - you can't wrap your hands around a 'huge thick cock' unless you've got hands that are a lot smaller and more feminine, and a pair of arms that don't look strong enough to rip the cock out by it's root."

Snorting, the guy disappeared out the door.

Josh blinked. He didn't even have a chance to thank the guy for his insightful comment - the reason his cock was so sore from jacking off was because his hands were so thick and big, creating a lot of friction, and his arms were so muscular - he wasn't able to control his own strength. Geez, it was so obvious that Josh felt stupid for not realizing it earlier.

Going into the room, he walked over to the computer to begin programming it.

* * * * *

Groggily, Kandi staggered towards the bedroom Troy had said she could use - so she could sleep, because she was obviously dead on her feet.

Reaching the bedroom, Kandi stripped out of her clothes, such as they were, and crawled between the covers with a sigh of gratitude that she was going to be able to rest - and would get a break from her personal hell.

Even her hunger for cum had turned into a curse. She loved the taste of it, but she wasn't insatiable. (Nobody had specified that she was, so... - But she didn't know that.) After a half-dozen blow-jobs, she'd found her thirst for come satiated, at least for awhile - by tomorrow, she'd be ready for another dozen loads or so, spread throughout the day. Tonight, though, she'd had as much of the wonderful goo as she'd wanted...

..but having seen her 'love' of cum, the 'World-Champion Cock Sucker' had become upset, and had knelt beside Kandi and offered herself to all comers.

Kandi had found herself helplessly embroiled in a cock-sucking, cum-slurping contest. No matter how hard she'd tried, she couldn't stop herself from matching the Cock-Sucker, blow-job for blow-job...

...until Troy had taken pity on her, thankfully declaring the other woman the winner and sending Kandi off to bed.

Gratefully, Kandi began to let her eyes closed... "Ahem... Kandi?"

Kandi opened her eyes - to find Troy, dressed in a bathrobe, standing at the end of the bed. Helplessly, despite her utter exhaustion, Kandi found her lips lighting up into a bright smile, and her voice responding in a perky tone.

"Yeah, handsome?"

Troy smiled. "Well, Carl suggested I bring you a sleeping pill..."

Mentally, Kandi smiled - she certainly didn't need a pill to help her sleep. However, familiar as she was with 'suggestions' in this situation, she knew that Troy was obsessed with giving her the pill, and the only way she'd be rid of him was to take it.

However, Troy was still talking.

"...and Kurt noticed that, while you sucked a whole lot of guys off, some of us twice, nobody ever got you off - so he suggested that I come make sure you get the good fucking you deserve after such a long day."

Oh, shit. This was the last thing in the world that Kandi wanted, now or at any other time. The thing was, a) Troy was under a compulsion that made him incapable of NOT having sex with her; and b) She was completely incapable of saying 'no' to anybody who wanted her in any way.

Helplessly, she found herself throwing the sheet off of her, laying her nude body open to his eager gaze. Against her will, she found her new - and currently 'virgin' - cunt get quite hot and wet, part of a 'preprogrammed' response that she had no control over.

"All right, stud - fuck me good!" She said with mock command... and then giggled in perfect Bimbo fashion. "And remind me to... thank Kurt for noticing..."

Eagerly, Troy scampered up on the bed, where Kandi was waiting with an eager smile as he gently spread her legs and got himself positioned...

'Oh, god...' Kandi thought in horrified, disgusted despair. "I don't want to do this - I don't want to have another man penetrate me. This is the most disgusting, perverted, horrible.."

Then, with on smooth, gentle-yet-firm motion, Troy slid his huge, throbbing, Machine-enhanced cock all the way into her sopping wet cunt.

"Oh, Good God - yes!" Kandi screamed in ecstatic pleasure which was completely unfeigned, intense pleasure shuddering through her body at the delightful friction of his cock sliding over her clit and filling her cunt perfectly.

As a 'joke', Josh had given her a hymen-free, tight-yet-amazingly-flexible, amazingly pleasure- sensitive cunt... and, as a final touch of perfection in the body whose design he'd worked so hard on, he'd disabled and pain receptors in her new womanhood.

Kandi, of course, had no way of knowing these 'little' details - but was very, very appreciative indeed of the bet effect.

"Oh, baby, oh yes!" Kandi screamed out her rising pleasure as Troy's hips began working, driving his huge, thick cock in and out of her wet, tight cunt. Pleasure flared up and down every nerve in her body, more intense and earth-shattering than any she'd ever felt - it was the most indescribably orgasmic pleasure she'd ever felt, better than any male orgasm she'd ever had...

...and it was still building....

She began to drive her hips in matching rhythm, her hand going to her own huge, firm tits to fondle and squeeze them for (unnecessary) added pleasure, her head tossing back and forth in the grip of the ecstasy running through her. Words had deserted her, and she was making primal animal sound of pure pleasure as her body responded to his, trying to drive his cock deeper and harder and faster into her cunt as she became a biological machine whose only imperative was to continue and increase the pleasure she was feeling.

Impossible as it seemed, the pleasure did increase, wave after wave of ever-building ecstasy wracking her body and leaving her thrashing and humping rhythmically, a sleeve for his piston, a mortar for his pestle, as her screams rose higher and higher, her mind lost to everything but the impossible energies claiming her every nerve ending...

...and then she came, and it was a glaring white explosion without sound, or heat, or pain. It was a ten megaton nuclear blast of pure, orgasm ecstasy that literally lifted her up off the bed as all her muscles convulsed in mindless response to the stimuli over-load...

...including the ones in her cunt, tightening around the massive organ filling her so wonderfully and holding her on the throbbing shaft of man-meat as her cunt began to spasm around it, sucking the massive organ dry of every drop of warm, thick cum that his enhanced reservoir had to give.

Even as she was being flooded with he seed, the fading explosion of the first orgasm was replaced with another, this one in the four-to-five megaton range, followed quickly by a mere kiloton firecracker that washed away into a warm, post-orgasmic glow like the fading of the sunset as she slumped, emotionally and physically exhausted, on the bed, mind still trying to register the sheer force of what she'd just felt.

"Oh.. yes.." She moaned...

...and barely noticed as troy, obsessively, slipped a small Sleep-E*Z capsule into her mouth, which she swallowed without realizing it.

Having finished what he needed to do, Troy extracted his now-drained cock from her wet cunt, and crept out of the room as she faded into a deep, deep sleep...

* * * * *

Josh reclined back in the chair, incredibly long, supple tongue sliding over incredibly full, soft lips in pleasure as he fondled his huge, glorious mounds of tit-flesh. His cock wasn't quite ready for another round yet, but he was glad for the small, feminine hand adorning the ends of his reshaped arms - they made his tits feel even bigger and sexier as he fondled them gleefully...

The phone beside the couch rang, and Josh regretfully detached one hand from a gigantic, perfect breast and reached out to answer it.

"Hello?" He said, enjoying the rich, sultry contralto that slide over the special tongue and between the extra-pouty lips he'd designed to enhance the voice.

There was a long pause at the other end, as the person calling checked the display on his Vista phone to ensure he'd dialed the right number.

"Uh Is Harry there?"

"No, he's not here " Josh said, loving the rich, almost overwhelmingly feminine tone of his new voice, so sexy and seductive, especially the way he was using it, with conscious control of each syllable to make it the most erotic he possibly could. "Do you want to leave a message ?"

+ + +

Stan, one of Harry's fellow role-players, was making the standard Friday late-night call to arrange their on-line session. Harry never missed the call - and the idea that the woman who would go with a voice would somehow be in Harry's apartment was...

Slowly, Stan began to grin. He hit the 'MUTE' button on the phone, and turned to the other two guys in the room, Nat and Lewis.

"Hey guys - Harry's pulling a good one this time." Stan grinned - playing practical jokes was sort of a tradition among their group, and this one seemed to be a doozy. "He musta hooked up his voice- modem through his sound card to do this - it's great "

He waved them closer, and hit the button that put the conversation on the speaker, using the handset to speak.

"Oh, no message.." Stan said with almost over-done indifference. "Just looking to chat with somebody - so, why not you?"

"Sure, I guess so " The incredibly rich, erotic, feminine voice seemed to ooze out of the speaker and fill the room with an unseen mist of arousal, so erotically powerful was it. "Do you mind if I ask you a question?"

"Not at all " Stan said, winking at the guys while waiting to see where this gag was going.

"If you heard somebody like me ask you to fondle their huge, round tits, would you say no ?"

Nudging Nat, Stan grinned - this was really going all-out.

"Come on - play along!" Lewis hissed, finding himself becoming aroused despite knowing it was a computer-simulated voice on the other end.

"Yeah - free phone sex..." Nat chortled, eyes gleaming behind his glasses...

+ + +

"Oh, yeah, of course I would." The male voice at the other end of the line said, and Josh smiled in vindication - this is what he'd needed, just like he'd thought.

"So you have huge, round tits, huh?" the voice continued. "You love having them fondled, is that it?"

"Oh, yes..." Josh all-but-moaned. "They're so big.. and firm... and sexy. I love stuffing them in tight tops, so that men can just drool over them and want to touch them,, and lick them... and suck them..."

"Oh, I just bet you do." The voice at the other end agreed with an odd tone in his voice. "Okay, let's see if I can get this right. You're laying in bed, naked except for a pair of nylons, a corset, and your high-heels."

Josh blinked, trying to figure out the connection, then shrugged and answered. "Not quite... I'm reclining on the couch, naked except for a pair of pantyhose, and I'm not only not wearing any shoes, but I never wear high-heels..."

+ + +

Stan stabbed at the 'MUTE' button.

"Forget it - it's a dud." He announced. "Harry can get his computer to get his voice to sound like that, but he has no talent for the routine. I'm gonna stop this here..."

"Wait..." Lewis objected, timidly. "What... what if we helped him with the routine?" "What?" Stan and Nat asked in unison.

Lewis smiled thinly. "We help him develop a real whiz-bang routine - then we go over tomorrow night and listen on the speaker phone as he does the whole thing on somebody else..."

The three of them shared a look - then, slowly, smiled as wickedly as their geeky little faces would allow...

+ + +

"Okay, listen up - you're a flop." The voice at the other end of the phone said.

Josh was stunned - after all his hard work, after the appearance of success...? "But, you said..."

"Yeah, I know - but you started off strong, then lost me." The voice said. "Don't worry - we're going to help you, and when we're done, you'll be able to get guys to do anything you tell them to..."

Josh sighed in relief, grateful that he was going to get expert help in how to get guys to fondle her perfect mounds. "Go ahead, I'm listening!" Josh promised in his sultry voice.

"First of all, you need a name to introduce yourself with, something sexy and seductive - obviously, you can't use your real, male name..."

Josh blinked in surprise - then had to admit that made sense.

"...so - from now on, you'll be Syndra. S-Y-N-D-R-A. That's your name from now on - and make sure you do your best to make yourself a feminine and sensual as possible."

Josh shrugged as he...

No - no, it was time to think right to ensure there's be no problems. She shrugged as she accepted the information.

"No problem... I'm Syndra.." Syndra said, sensually, then listened carefully as the helpful man on the other end explained what she needed to do...

* * * * *

Troy was getting pissed off.

One-by-one, everyone he'd introduced to the machine had filtered back to the party after all the other business, bars, and offices in town had closed in the wee-small-hours. Now, all of them were gathered her, in a near perfect fifty-fifty mix of genders...

...and they were sitting around discussing what they should do with the goddamn machine! He'd let each of them get their ideal bodies, even though some of them had needed a half-dozen trips before being satisfied, but instead of making his party the most incredible ever, these idiots were sitting around jawing about it, unable to reach a conclusion! What a bust! He'd been better off with his original, more mundane party, for cris'sakes!

He'd had enough. Raising his voice, he shouted firmly, loud enough for all of the guests to hear.

"Okay, that's it!" He shouted, angrily. "I want everybody here to go home, do whatever they need to do before bed - then get into bed, and just forget all... about... the... DAMNED... machine! Forget it even exists, forget what you want to do with it, forget what you've already done with it - hell forget this whole damned party since it was first mention, and make up your own excuses for what happened!"

He finished his ranting - and then everybody in the crowd - including him - took on a blank expression for a moment, then began to slowly file away.

"That damned machine..." Troy muttered to himself, shaking his head - the only good thing to come from it was that hot little number, Kandi.

As his guests filed out, Troy began to tidy up the few items that wouldn't wait until he could call the clean-up crew tomorrow...

* * * * *

Standing in front of the mirror, Syndra turned this way and that, admitting the guys had been right...

...her new body and clothes were enough to get any man hot for her huge tits. Hell, her massive, throbbing tool was rock-hard at the sight of herself. Than God the 'Adult' store delivered, though it had cost her a small fortune to get everything she'd been told to. It was worth it, too...

Blowing herself a kiss in the mirror, Syndra checked her watch and saw that it was slightly more than four hours since she'd given herself the huge, throbbing member - which meant it was finally safe to go out. Unlike those other poor saps, she'd stayed safe at home and kept from being 'influence' while she was suggestible, and now she and her huge tool were ready to paaaaar-tay!

Before heading over, Syndra decided to give Troy... opps, that handsome stud-muffin Troy, she corrected herself with a grin, since she'd been instructed to 'evaluate' all guys for what his mentor had chosen to call 'sexual gullibility'. She decided to give him a call, and just see if he needed her to pick anything up on the way over.

Walking with her new walk to the phone, she picked it up and unselfconsciously dialed Troy's number.

+ + +

He was just heading for his bedroom when the phone began to shrill. Sighing in restrained annoyance, Troy picked up the receiver.

"Yeah?"

"Troy, baby..." An incredible, cock-hardening voice oozed pure sensuality through the phone. "This is Syndra. I'm just about to pop back to the party, and thought I'd call to see if you or any of the other love-slaves want anything."

Troy stared at the phone in amazement, trying to place either the name or the voice, and drawing a blank.

"Uh... Syndra?" Troy said, regretfully. "The party's over, and everybody went home..."

He was about to add that she was welcome to drop by - he wanted to see the body that went with that voice - but Syndra had broken in, in surprise.

"Over?" She asked, sensually startled. "No, it can't be - I went to all the trouble of giving myself a huge, thick cock with the machine just so..."

A cock! God, what a pervert! Troy thought - then his eyes narrowed. The machine. The damned machine...

"Look, Syndra..." Troy said, tightly. "This is what you do. First, use the machine to give yourself a nice, tight, perfectly-fuckable female cunt. Then, go home and go to bed - and forget all about the machine. Hell, forget today even happened - just wake up tomorrow as a normally-equipped, nymphomaniac who can't even conceive or having any sized cock instead of her tight, wonderful little cunt. Goodnight."

Shaking his head at the perversity of some people, Troy hung up the phone and continued on to his bedroom. Stripping off his robe, he lay down in his bed...

...and, just like every one of his guests, the instant his head hit the pillow, he forgot all about the machine, what had happened that day, and everything connected to it - while his brain began constructing a scenario to explain what had 'happened'... one that each person would believe to be the complete and utter truth...

* * * * *

AND NOW - THE REST OF THE STORY...

* * * * *

In the affluent, once reasonable calm (for a college town) hamlet of Moonlight Cove experienced a rather strange series of events, all at about the same time, starting with the unheard-of event of one of Troy McClure's parties actually ending early...

Which was the least amazing event in the sequence.

Young Troy himself was amazed to wake up finding himself sporting a massively-enlarged sexual organ capable of producing rather remarkable amounts of seminal fluid. The family physician, as well as hospital staff, were at a loss to explain the rapid growth of Troy's organ, though the youth himself recalled mixing a rather unusual cocktail the night before by dumping all the booze, drugs and household pharmaceuticals into one big vat and mixing it, a theory that seemed to be borne out when it was found that several other guests at the party had also experienced inexplicable growth of their genitalia.

Troy's father, Marcus McClure, subsequently spent a large fortune trying to duplicate the hazily-remembered mixture, to no avail. He was forced to file for bankruptcy, and is currently living with his son, who is employed as a Male Dancer at 'Huggys' strip-club.

Several of the volunteers for the various batches of the 'growth potion' are hospitalized for Psycotropic FlashBack Syndrome.

A half-dozen young women, who also happened to be guests at the party, awoke to find themselves stunningly beautiful. All claimed that it was a gift from God, who commanded them to become models. All six were willing to work for room-and-board, if necessary, to fulfill that commandment. C. Palmer, owner of the Palmer Modeling Agency, accepted the young ladies' contracts, at low-base scale plus bonuses...

...and gave up being an agnostic, joining the Roman Catholic church.

Four other young ladies experienced sudden-but-not-outlandish breast growth. Two became strippers at The Mirage Lounge and Bar, one became a second-rate actor on the Fox network, and the fourth is under indictment in a White House scandal.

Another woman - Melissa Claridge - experienced a remarkable enlargement of her bust, as well as changes to her facial features, leaving her a stunning-and-buxom example of femininity. However, Melissa also seemed possessed with an absolute certainty that her bust and facial features were, quote, 'perfect', and she spent several days in a constant rage at those not willing to bow down to her utter feminine perfection. Fortunately, she then met Cecil Rodham, a young man with a certain... affinity for women's bust-lines, who was able to forge a strong, lasting relationship with Melissa based on one shared belief - that Melissa's breasts are the most utterly perfect ones in existence.

A mysterious electrical fire that utterly destroyed an unrecognizable machine of some sort was initially believed to be the cause of the disappearance of the apartment's owner, one Harold T. Nurt, and his neighbor, one Josh Lanswell. However, detectives managed to track down the former Mr. Nurts - to find that he had, inexplicably, undergone Spontaneous Gender Reversal, becoming a buxom blonde, now working in the Adult Film Industry in California, under the pseudonym of 'Kandi Kantalopes', though her income tax statements are still filed under her original name. Miss Kantalopes, currently earning a six-figure income and living very comfortably indeed, refused to return to Moonlight Cove, claiming she is quite happy in the warm, unquestioning acceptance of her legions of adoring male fans, who could not care less who - or what - she was before making her amazing debut on the Phosphorus Screen. It is rumored that Miss Kantalopes is a shoo-in to win the coveted Golden Gangbang award for her debut film, 'Kandi Kantalopes Does Just About Everybody... Twice.'

As for the missing Josh Lanswell... there has still been no trace of him, dead or alive...

* * * * *

His body still glistening from the oil he used on stage, Troy 'Trojan' McClure entered the bungalow he, his father, and three other 'hyper-endowed' men working at Huggys shared among them, dropping his Bolero Jacket on the chair, and collapsing on the sofa. His tight, black trousers were tented painfully over his crotch, where an evening getting legions of women all hot and bothered left him even more hot and bothered, feeling like his cock was about to explode.

Well... there was a simple solution to that. "Oh, Syndra...!" Troy called. "Syndra, dear...!"

There was a few seconds of silence - then an incredibly warm, sexy voice echoed from one of the back rooms.

"Coming, my love-commander..." The voice said, making his already painfully hard cock even harder. "I'm just putting dear old daddy down for his nap... he tires so easily..."

She chuckled - a sound that almost made Troy cum in his pants. He restrained himself, though... the sound of her heels on the linoleum floor announced her arrival before she came into sight, and - as always - Troy turned to admire the vision of her as she entered the room.

Walking with a mind-boggling, sensual stride was amazing enough. To take it even further, into a sensuous, supple, sinuous series of movements that involved the entire body in one continuous, erotic movement was even more rare, and arousing.

To see Syndra doing it, perched atop her shin high, black leather, ten-inch-high-heeled Ballet Boots was almost enough to drive a man mad with pure desire. Troy actually felt sorry for his Dad, 'normally endowed' and older as he was... the amazing, sensual, supple grace Syndra used to walk so unbelievably easy and gracefully in the incredible, tip-toe boots made her long, shapely legs - clad in skin-tight black leather - move in ways that boggled the mind, and set her wide, womanly hips and incredibly full, firm ass to swaying and swiveling.

Above that, a deep red (almost black) leather corset was rapped tightly around her already tiny waist, shrinking her wasp-waist to a mere twelve inches around, seemingly so tiny to support the massive, dusky breast contained within the black leather crop-top.

All that dark leather nicely complimented her dusky, exotic - and erotic - skin, which was flawless.

"Welcome home, cum-master..." Syndra said, hungrily. Her incredibly long, supple tongue slid out from between her amazingly full, permanently gloss-red pouty lips and licked them slowly. Despite the incredible sensuality of those lips, they didn't overpower the rest of her face, with its broad, high cheekbones, strong-yet-feminine chin, and dark, smoldering eyes behind a thick, dark veil of lashes, all surrounded by a massive loosely-curly mane of rich, silky black hair.

With her customer cock-hardening sensual grace, Syndra reached up and undid the zipper at the front of her crop-top, setting her enormous orbs free from their confinement. Kneeling on the couch, she began to slide to huge globes up and down Troy's face, massive nipples sliding sensually over his cheeks until she dipped lower, her tits gliding over his oiled chest as she gave him one of those long, deep, mind-blowing kisses that he so loved.

Then, seeing he was on the edge of bursting, she smiled that erotic smile - and dipped her head lower, freeing his massive cock and enveloping it in her unbelievably skilled mouth for one of her unparalleled blow-jobs.

"Oh, damn..." Kurt said, seeing he'd arrived home in second place. He didn't expect any acknowledgment from either of the participants of the cock-sucking on the couch, but that didn't matter.

With Syndra, 'second place' was a bare sliver less than her 'first place'.

Walking over to where she was, he guided her ass up so that she was standing, bent over to continue her ministrations of Troy's cock. Unzipping the hidden zippers on the sides of her specially-made pants, he peeled the garment off without having to remove her boots, revealing the firm, perfect dusky globes of her ass, and her constantly hot, wet cunt.

With a look of utter contentment, Kurt grasped her wide, womanly hips - and shoved his massive, thick tool deep into her dripping wet snatch, pounding her hard.

She never even missed a beat of the incredibly long, slow blow-job she was giving...

+ + +

'Why...!' Josh screamed in the empty vaults of his - or Syndra's - mind as he was forced to endure all the sensations she was getting from the sucking-and-fucking. 'What's happening? Why am I fucking these guys! Why are their cock's so big...?'

As the man trapped as a helpless passenger in the outrageously erotic body of the dusky nymphomaniac continued to sob and gibber through what was only one of many daily sexual experiences, Josh had no idea that he'd never, ever learn the truth.

As far as he remembered, he'd gone to be 'last night' - then awakened here, in this body, with no control over anything, this morning.

While 'Syndra' had a continuous, coherent set of memories and an ongoing personality (limited as it was by being a nymphomaniac sex-toy), Josh was condemned to wake up each morning with no memory of the proceeding days as Syndra, living through each 'first fuck', experiencing each blow-job for the 'first' time, having to go through the ignominy of each and every experience without even the cold comfort of familiarity as a companion, as he was now, and forever, incapable of remembering the actions and activities of the previous days...

...weeks...

...months...

BACK TO FUN ZONE

SUMMARY: Keeping his strange and inexplicable 'superpower' well-hidden, one man volunteers to be an on-call negotiator while he goes through life changing into different people but never before had he glanced down to find himself looking at an attractive view of his own creamy, firm cleavage.

Adaptable

By Gunslinger

The shrill squeal of the phone yanked me out of a dream and into a nightmare.

I had the red plastic receiver in hand before the phone could ring again - like an old war-horse, my deeply-ingrained training could get me going even before my brain kicked into gear.

"Who, where, when and how many?" I asked, quickly, fumbling around on my night-stand for my glasses - one of the many 'necessities' that came with advancing age.

The short pause told me I was dealing with a new guy - which was bad news. There were only two ways to get into a slot on the HRT, and a person 'groomed' for the spot would have been up-to-speed on my foibles by now.

The only other way to get on the FBI's very elite Hostage Rescue Team was as a replacement.

If you think being thrown into a hostage rescue situation without enough prep work is bad, consider the guy who got 'replaced'...

"Doctor Renfrew...?"

I had to keep from snapping back at the professional-sounding voice. As a trained observer of the human psyche, I could hear what most people wouldn't - the self-doubt behind the outwardly competent voice. Since pointing out that he was calling on a phone that was hard-wired to reach me and me alone wouldn't help matters, I only grunted agreement as I fumbled for the light switch.

"This is Special Agent Williams, Doctor. We have an emergency situation." The voice said, repeating by rote the completely unnecessary formula laid down in the rule book. I know routine is important in emergency situations, giving you something to fall back on - but, really, why else would the FBI be calling on this line? To ask if I'd like to take the FBI tour?

(I did that once. When I was eleven - and if you want to know how long ago that was, it was back in the day when the let visitors take a turn at firing a real, live Tommy Gun. It's a shame they don't do that anymore - there's something very alive in holding a forty-five caliber Thompson submachine-gun in your hands and letting it rip. Sure, as a psychiatrist, I know that equating firearms with fun is a very bad idea - but God, what a great, All-American, Elliot-Ness-Like rush...!)

Lighting up a smoke that my doctor kept telling me I couldn't have, I let the split-second reverie fade and repeated my opening question: "Who, where, when and how many?"

Given the situation, Williams made the connection - and I knew he was never again going to waste time with formalities. One thing about the members of the HRT - they're all quick learners.

"We've got about twenty-five hostages being held in the grand ballroom of the Drake Hotel, mostly night-shift employees. Happened about fifteen minutes ago, but we were lucky to have to agents in the building, escorting a witness. We've cordoned off the building and cleared out all the other guests and staff, but we haven't been able to wire the room yet. No numbers or ID's for the perps yet. Shots have been fired, but they seem to have been 'attention getters' - no blood outside the ballroom, no reports of injuries or fatalities." Williams rattled off, quickly but clearly.

Taking a deep drag on the cigarette, I leaned back and considered the situation. It wasn't as bad as it could have been - but a situation like this was never good, either....

"Demands?" I asked.

"No contact so far." Williams replied, briskly.

That was a bit unusual. Most terrorist-types (which, by default, included all hostage-takers), liked to start demanding things as soon as possible. Then again, the FBI caught a lucky break on this one, and so we might actually be ahead of the game...

"Transportation's en route?"

"Yessir" Williams replied, the most confident reply so far. "Should be at your door within five minutes."

"Right - I'm on my way." I hung up the phone without bothering with anything as trivial as 'good-bye', and began to get ready.

I get a call maybe two or three times a year, and not all of them are in the wee small hours of the morning - but I've fallen into the habit of going to be half-dressed, just in case. Sure, the slacks and undershirt I was wearing were rumpled, but I wasn't trying to impress the perps with my sartorial elegance, and it was only a matter of seconds to slip on my socks, shoes, shirt and jacket. Everything else I needed was packed in an always-ready attaché case in the closet, and well within the five-minute schedule I was standing on the front porch.

The promised transportation was late - by about thirty seconds.

Since the big, quiet type behind the wheel of the dark-painted Suburban handed me a hot, fresh cup of take-out coffee as soon as I slid into the passenger's seat, I decided it was time well 'wasted'.

Then I took a sip from the plastic-capped cup - and gave out a soft sigh of pleasure before turning to my driver.

"Friend..." I said, reverently, "...you'd better give me your name so I can put you in my will "

That managed to get a quick grin out of my dour-faced companion. A big, burly guy in his mid-forties, he looked competent and almost slightly bored to the naked eye, a posture obviously built up through long years of service.

"Agent Deevers, Doctor." He replied in a deep - and surprisingly quiet - voice.

"The name's John." I replied, taking another deep sip of the coffee - which was not only double- double, the way I like it, but good take-out coffee, not the usual convenience-store carbon remover. "How'd you know?"

Deevers took a second to reply. Given the early hour, he'd decided that sirens weren't necessary, but he had the dash-light going and the big four-by-four was slaloming through the light traffic like an Olympic skier. The short pause came while he nonchalantly slipped the big vehicle through a just- barely-wide-enough opening between a turning semi and a glossy red Miata.

I let him have the second. His thick, meaty hands were loose and relaxed on the wheel, but I wasn't about to disturb his concentration...

"Lucas is SAC." Deevers explained, shortly.

I'd worked three other situations with Lucas acting as Special-Agent-In-Charge, so Lucas knew how I took my coffee - but Deevers simple explanation completely omitted the fact that it had taken more than the usual initiative for him to ask Lucas how I took my coffee.

It was nice to know that some people were actually more competent than they looked.

Since we really didn't have anything to say to each other, we finished the short ride to the hotel in silence, Deevers driving with almost eerie competence and me sipping at the coffee he'd so thoughtfully provided.

As we pulled up in front of the massive old Drake Hotel, a stone-and-glass monument of turn-of-the- century elegance, Deevers turned to me and surprised me with a quite observation: "Lucas says you're the best damn negotiator he's ever worked with - and the strangest."

It was a comment, not a question - and there wasn't even any implied question in the tone, which was what surprised me. "Yeah?"

"I think the two are probably directly related." Deevers commented. "Go save some people, John." My eyebrow rose, but I nodded and slipped out of the Suburban feeling strangely heroic.

Considering I'm a balding sixty-two-year-old psychiatrist with 'swivel-chair spread', 'heroic' isn't usually how I see myself...

"Doc! Over here!"

The shout came from SAC Lucas. One-quarter Native American, Lucas was tall, dark-haired, and intense looking, the through-and-through image of the tough, competent FBI agent who could be counted on to head up the HRT. Strong willed, determined and dedicated to his job, SAC knew when to follow the rules - and when to break them.

In fact, he could have been the recruiting poster for the Federal Bureau of Investigation - if not for the fact that his full name was 'Horatio Hornblower Lucas', the gift of overly-literary parents. Since there really wasn't a good short-form of 'Horatio', it wasn't surprising that Lucas liked to be called by his family name, rather than his given name.

Finishing the last of the coffee, I tossed the empty cup into a nearby trash-can, ignoring Lucas' shout while I gazed up at the elegant old hotel. Pulling my pack of cigarettes from my inside jacket pocket, I slowly took a long, critical look around at the activity going on - the local PD cordoning off the streets and keeping the news crews away, setting up spotlights, and generally doing the scut-work as the FBI set up in anticipation of a worst-case scenario.

The HRT was made up solely of 'optimistic pessimists' - hope for the best, plan for the worst. It was a mind-set I could completely understand.

Only after I'd taken a good look around did I stroll casually to where Lucas waited, his face very carefully hiding any annoyance he might have felt.

"I'd say 'Good Morning', but I was raised never to lie." I said, calmly and with a touch of humor. I jerked my chin in the direction of the building. "We wired in yet, Horatio?"

You would have had to look very, very closely indeed to see the involuntary, quickly-repressed wince.

You'd have to have looked even closer to see the fractional smile that flashed across his face for a second. Though he'd never publicly admit to the fact that it could be 'lonely at the top', especially in such a serious, high-risk situation as this, the truth was he needed a little 'fresh air' blown his way every once in a while, something his sometimes too-serious team would never provide. Thanks to the institutional mentality of the FBI, Lucas was something next to God, and no HRT member would even consider using his given name, and especially not in a situation like this.

Well, they're them, and I'm me. All I know is that something inside Lucas loosened slightly at my greeting.

In response to my question, he shook his head sharply. "No - and according to the techs, we won't be, not in time for it to matter."

He spoke without embarrassment or frustration, another one of his sterling qualities - good or bad fortune was accepted and handled with the same lack of emotional response. I, on the other hand, was obviously displaying a look of incredulous surprise, because he went on to explain: "They really built these things to last. The outer walls are stone, load-bearing, and two feet thick. No mortar between the blocks, and even if we threw noise considerations right out the window, it's take a good hour to drill and place the probes. Whether by foresight or fortune, the perps picked a room with no outside windows or doors."

Damn. Well, at least it made my decision easier: "I'm going in."

One reason I like Lucas - he didn't hesitate. My decision wasn't one that was in the FBI handbook - but Lucas was also smart enough to realize that the FBI didn't hold a monopoly on smart. "Right."

We'll get you a vest and a pick-up..." I interrupted. "No - I'm going in cold."

That managed to get a questioning glance from him - not doubt or indecisiveness, but just a silent request for information. I provided it. "We don't know a damned thing about the situation, and I don't want to provide the slightest provocation."

Lucas cocked his head - then nodded. Obviously, an unarmed, unprotected, out-of-shape old man in glasses and a rumpled, unfashionable suit was about as unthreatening as you could get.

"Okay." Lucas agreed, sharply. "I'll give you thirty minutes to contact us in some way - after that, you're just another hostage."

"Right." I agreed.

That was the complete and total extent of your planning session and prep work. Handing him my attaché case for safe keeping, I simply turned and walked directly for the main entrance of the hotel, hands held slightly out from my side and my eyes fixed firmly on the brass-and-glass revolving door.

I didn't actually breath as I covered the hundred or so feet between the barricades and the doors. If there'd been anybody inside with a yen to off an old psychiatrist, I was making it damned easy for them - but I got to the door without getting killed, which is always a good way to start a negotiating session.

I had another thing going for me in this particular situation - the home-field advantage. Not only was it right here in town, allowing for a faster response then normal, but I'd been to the Drake hotel several times - including s a guest lecturer at a conference that had been held in the Grand Ballroom. As soon as I was inside the red-and-gold-trimmed lobby, I turned to my right and began heading down the hallway, almost immediately lost to view from the outside...

...and just as quickly, I began to feel that strange tingling sensation began to run over - and through - me.

Over the years, I've given this much thought. I still don't know why it happens, or how. It doesn't happen every time, and I've never been able to pinpoint what 'triggers' it to happen. About the only thing I'm sure of is that, despite the fact that it's happening to me, it's all under the control of someone or something - else.

You see, that strange tingle was the fore-warning that I was about to change into somebody else.

Like I said, I don't know why or how this happens. The first time it ever happened, it scared the living shit out of me - I was eighteen, and alone in the boy's changing room when I suddenly felt a strange tingle run over me.

All of the sudden, I'd found myself changing. Painlessly, but never the less frighteningly, I'd gone from a too-skinny young man with sandy hair to a big, hulking young man dressed in everyday clothing.

Panicked by the sudden and inexplicable thing that had happened to me, I'd run out of the changing room...

...and right into the middle of an attempted rape. One of the cheerleaders had felt sick halfway through the big game going on outside, and had come in to get changed and go home - and a drunk young man who'd come to root for the opposing team had thought it might be 'fun' to follow the shapely - if somewhat green around the gills - young woman into the big, dark and empty gym...

Well, as it so happened, he was a fairly big guy, bigger than the slender young cheerleader - but no match for the new body I'd suddenly acquired. I had little trouble hauling him off the poor girl - then 'teaching him a lesson' I'm sure he never forgot.

In addition to the big, muscular body, I'd also 'acquired' quite the range of fighting skills. The would-be rapist never stood a chance.

Afterwards, I'd dashed back into the changing room, stunned and amazed - and then felt that tingle, and once more found myself in my own body.

It's only happened about a dozen times in the intervening years, and every time I became somebody different, right down to clothes and, when needed, identification. Each time, I was alone when the tingle came, each time I became whoever would be best suited to help in an emergency situation, and each time I found someplace unobserved to change back.

Hell - once, during a traffic-jam in a tunnel, I became a doctor, complete with medical bag and a full range of skills. Just what was needed to help a frightened young woman deliver a healthy baby boy.

Strange as it may sound, the best I've ever been able to figure is that I'm some sort of 'super-hero'.

Which is why I volunteered to be the on-call negotiator for the HRT. I keep my strange and inexplicable 'superpower' well hidden - but it's damned handy to have around sometimes.

So I was neither afraid nor surprised when I felt the tingle. However, I was more than a little curious as to who I was going to be this time...

Knowing from past experience how best to handle this, I simply came to complete stop, picking a fairly well-balanced stance while I waited for whatever changes were to happen.

It wasn't a long wait. Within seconds, the tingling was joined by the 'creepy-crawling' sensation that signified the changes were underway.

From my own point of view, it almost looked as if my surrounding were slowly growing - which meant that I was becoming shorter than I had been before. There were also other sensations coming from my body, but they weren't 'conclusive', since I couldn't tell how much of it was coming from changes to my flesh, and how much of it was from the way my clothes were writhing and changing to match my new form.

Within about thirty seconds or so, the changes were complete, the tingling fading with the 'crawling' sensation - and almost immediately I realized that there was something fundamentally different about this change.

A quick glance downwards revealed I was right.

I'd changed about a dozen times in the past - but never before had I glanced down to find myself looking at a quite attractive view of creamy, firm cleavage, framed by the lapels of a simple black suit jacket...

"What the...?" I muttered, somewhat taken aback - and the sound of my new voice, a warm and feminine tone, didn't help much. Feeling stunned - and, somehow, slightly betrayed - I struggled to keep myself on an even keel as I glanced around for a mirror.

The doors to the elevator nearest me were made of flawless, polished brass, and though they imparted a golden tint to everything, they were more than serviceable to reflect my new image back at me.

I was most definitely female. Of that there could be absolutely no doubt.

I was still dressed in a suit - but this suit was feminine, tailored, and a rich shade of navy-blue that I'd initially mistaken for black because of the stylish oval-shaped sunglasses that had replaced my own unfashionable eyewear. Instinctively, I lifted slender, feminine hands to remove the glasses - and immediately, everything became brighter and slightly blurry, indicating that the glasses were prescription, though not nearly as heavy as my own.

I slipped the darkened glasses back in place - only to discover they weren't nearly as dark. In fact, they were a pair of those 'reactive' glasses, and within a few more seconds the tint had faded completely, leaving them completely clear.

Turning slightly, I looked over the new body that I was currently inhabiting - and it was an appreciative look, despite the situation.

I was one of those petite, slender, somehow 'perky'-looking women. The fitted navy slacks I was wearing clung to trim hips and a full, pert ass before falling to slender ankles. I was now perched delicately atop a pair of tan - taupe? - pumps, and the ability to balance easily and gracefully atop them came from the same inexplicable place as my knowledge that the tapered heels were exactly four-and-a-quarter-inches high.

A leather belt that matched my new shoes was cinched tight around a delightfully slender waist, and my jacket was buttoned over a trim, smooth stomach - but the 'V' of the jacket's lapels displayed smooth, young flesh, since I was wearing a dark red - Wine? - colored lace bustier top that cupped and supported my firm, flawless DD-cup breasts, displaying them delightfully while adroitly avoiding 'cheap' or 'slutty'.

My new face was heart-shaped, with an elfin chin and well-defined cheekbones. A sharp-ridged, pertly-upturned nose was framed by hazel eyes, and my new lips were bow-shaped and covered with Pastel Coral lipstick.

My hair was the same shade of sandy-blond it had been in my youth - but I'd never worn pulled up into a loose, 'modified bun' hairstyle, with lightly feathered bangs and gold-toned butterfly clips almost unnoticeably placed to keep the 'casually elegant' style from slipping over that fine line into 'harried'.

In short, I looked damned pretty, sexy in an almost girlish sort of way - and not a day over twenty-five.

I can't say I was all that thrilled about finding myself female, pertly attractive or not - but feeling young and healthy again was more than enough compensation for the unexpected transformation.

I really didn't have time to 'savor' my suddenly regained youth, female or not - I was here to do something vital, and for some reason, this was the body best suited to the task.

Taking a deep, calming breath, I turned and continued on towards the door of the ballroom, walking slowly and easily atop my new heels. As usual, I'd also acquired the full range of skills I'd need for this body and this situation, so I was moving just the way I'd be moving if I really were the young woman I appeared to be - which was an interesting, slightly disturbing, and much to distracting sensation, my hips moving more than I was used to, both side-to-side and in a front-to-back swivel.

The motion also caused new and unfamiliar sensations in my altered chest, and it was a damned hard fight to keep from watching the slight jiggle of my firm new breast with every smoothly feminine step I took.

Trying very hard to ignore the strange and intriguing new sensations coming from my altered body, I stopped well short of the polished oak door of the ballroom and raised my voice, pitching it as inoffensively and calmly as I possibly could.

"Do not be alarmed. I am an unarmed hostage negotiator, here to mediate any demands you might have."

This point was the riskiest of the entire situation, and I actually managed to forget that I was now female for the thirty seconds or so it took for a response to be made.

The door swung open, slowly - and I was greeted by the 'burning rope-and-pine-needle' scent of marijuana.

The man who'd opened the door was dressed in frayed jeans and a army-surplus tunic over a soiled white Punk-Rock T-shirt. Long, greasy black hair spilled down from under his plain black ball-cap, and his eyes were bloodshot.

There are no good situations like this, but there are progressively worse ones. Being faced with a man carrying what you just had to assume was a fully loaded and ready weapon was bad enough. To have the same person obviously stoned almost out of his gourd was worse.

To have the stoned, unpredictable person in question armed with a Pancor Jackhammer was just about as bad as it could get.

In case you're not a fire-arm aficionado - a 'gun nut' - the Pancor Jackhammer is a gas-operated, drum-fed, fully-automatic 12-gauge shotgun. With ten rounds of buckshot in the magazine and a full- auto setting, it was a weapon that would utterly devastate any unprotected flesh in an enclosed room, even one as large as the main ballroom.

Under the circumstances, I was suddenly very, very glad about the new body I was inhabiting - because the long, slow, and frankly appreciative look he gave me meant that he had absolutely no urge to damage the luscious flesh that now enclosed me.

I tried very, very hard not to think about what other urges he might be feeling at the moment. To that end, I consciously avoided looking at his crotch...

"Damn - you're even hotter'n Scully..." The extraordinarily well-armed pothead informed me, giving me a smile that displayed yellowing teeth. Given his general condition, I wondered how the hell he'd gotten his hands on a $28,000 weapon, but now didn't seem like a particularly good time to inquire.

Instead, I forced myself to use the quick, perky smile that this new body of mine seemed to come equipped with.

"Well, thank you - it's always nice to be appreciated..." I said, forcing myself to 'pose' slightly, as if thoroughly flattered.

It felt weird to be 'playing along' with this piece of walking scum, but that was my job - keep the criminals happy, be nice and even friendly, do anything at all you had to do to gain their trust...

...at which point I'd abuse it mercilessly.

"Why don'tcha come in...?" he suggested, placing heavy emphasis on the word 'come'. Amused by his own 'wit', he laughed.

"Thanks..." I said. Since he didn't move aside, I had to slip between him and the door-frame, my firm new posterior sliding firmly over his bulging crotch...

It took a lot not to flinch away from that much-too-intimate contact. However, it took a hell of a lot more to lightly run my slender new fingers lightly across that bulging crotch as I passed, making an implied promise that I hoped I'd never have to live up to.

Believe me, I certainly didn't want it to come to that - but I'd be more than just stupid to let my own male pride and ego get in the way of any and every technique that was at my disposal. Lives hung in the balance, and I couldn't afford to be squeamish.

Greasy Boy seemed to find the touch quite pleasant - since he grabbed my new hand in his own sweaty paw and pressed it, hard, against his crotch.

"You like my 'big gun', lady cop?" Greasy boy asked, his own double-entendre stretching his wit farther than I thought possible. I smiled at him and gave him a slow wink...

...having first shifted position slightly so that my open eye could take in the rest of the room.

There were twenty-seven hostages, at least by my hurried count. More than two-thirds of them were dressed in one staff uniform or another, and all were bound and gagged - quite elegantly, too, since the rope was the gold-colored pull-cords from the decorative burgundy drapes, and their gags were crisp white linen napkins from the tables, still left in their original 'swan' foldings.

"I like big things..." I murmured back with what I hoped was not a sickly smile, forcing myself to play along.

My quick glance had also revealed there was a second perpetrator, sitting at the oak-and-brass bar in the back corner with a bottle of whisky between his thick thighs and a huge 'bomber joint' between his meaty fingers.

Shoved in his pants in such a way to risk going off 'half cocked' was a handgun of some sort, the polished wood grips lightly resting against the lip of the half-empty liquor bottle. It was much too far away for me to get a good look at the make and model - but it didn't matter, since that little handgun was the least of my worries.

I was too busy looking at the piece of hardware set up on the bar beside him, muzzle aimed out towards the cluster of helpless, hapless hostages.

It was a fuckin' Ma Deuce. Or, less informally, the M2 Mark I Heavy Machinegun, tripod mounted and sporting what seemed to be at least three linked fifty-round belts of ammunition, each blunt-nosed round a full half-inch in diameter and capable of punching right through the engine block of a car - and we're not talking little four-bangers, either, but the powerhouses that moved the big pieces of Detroit rolling stock.

Where the hell had these two dope-heads gotten their guns? It was a question I was sure was going to be much-asked by every law enforcement officer involved in this case.

Hell - despite the situation, it was a question that I couldn't help asking right here and now...

"Speaking of big things..." I said, forcing a hint of awe in my voice as I gazed in what I sure hoped looked like appreciative awe at the .50 caliber on the bar. "Where the hell did you get that monster!"

Perhaps Greasy Boy was too doped up to realize he what he was doing. More likely, part of his brain was having trouble believing that this 'sweet young thang' was really a 'cop'. In either case, he actually answered as he shut and locked the door behind me.

"Bob an' me used to work down in Hollywood for a place that supplies movies with guns." He boasted, prodding me forward with a hand that 'just happened' to rest firmly on my taut new ass. "When we heard we was gonna get canned, we thought we'd arrange our own, uh..."

My guide paused, searching for a word, and his companion - Bob - supplied it in a dour voice.

"Severance Package, Slim." Heavy-set and considerably better dressed than his taller companion, Bob was obviously the brains of this duo. He's been smoking, toking and drinking - but he seemed to be one of these hard-core ex-biker types who could drink anybody under the table, then smoke a pound of good pot before hitting the road. His jeans were heavier grade, and clean, and the T-shirt stretched over his ample gut looked like it was actually freshly washed that morning. A leather vest matched his heavy combat-style boots, and his clean-shaven head gleamed under the overhead lighting.

He was also, amazingly, polite. "You say you're the FBI negotiator, Miss?"

"Actually, I'm a civilian psychiatrist on call with the FBI." I admitted, deciding that it would be safer to be honest. Sometimes, the advantage lay in playing up the 'cop' angle, but somehow these two didn't seem like the type to be impressed with authority figures. To that end, I also kept my voice light and slightly excited, hoping they'd take me for a bit of a 'thrill seeker'.

"Good enough. There's some things we want, Miss, and if we get them, everybody walks out of here alive and well." Bob said, calmly and almost professionally. This close up, I could see that the gun in his waist-band was a customized .40 Smith and Wesson, the same make and model as issued to the FBI - and the triple-redundant safeties on the gun meant that the 'in the waistband' holstering wasn't as idiotic as I'd first assumed.

"That's what I'm here for - to make sure you get whatever you want."

His quick grin let me know that he was fooled - and his words proved it. "No, actually, you're here to make sure none of the hostages are harmed, if at all possible. Which is fine by me, because the easiest way to keep them from getting harmed is to give me - oh, and Slim here - exactly what we want."

"Which is...?" I prompted, catching both the glance and the quirk of the lips that came with the belated mention of his 'comrade in arms'. Slim had missed it completely - and I had the sneaking suspicion that good ol' Slim had been specifically chosen for this little job because he'd miss things like that.

"Well, I'll be honest - I have a bit of a record behind me..." Bob admitted candidly, letting his eyes linger on my cleavage as he took a swig of whiskey. "In fact, I was living and working under an assumed name when I found out that the LAPD was only about two steps behind me. Given the circumstances, I thought maybe I should retire - and Buenos Aires sounds like a hell of a place to retire to."

"Especially since there isn't any extradition agreements to make retired life... nervous?" I suggested, earning another one of those lightening grins.

"Damn straight." He admitted, proudly. "So, I figured I just needed that little 'nest egg' for my retirement. Say, about a million dollars, plus an unhindered flight down there."

"So, your total demands are for one million dollars, a plane, and a pilot?" I asked - quite consciously not putting any emphasis on the 'one'.

Damned if Bob didn't actually throw me a wink before answering in an almost comic dead-pan. "Oh, no, miss. You give me a million dollars and a Gulfstream IV. I take myself, my money, the Jackhammer and four hostages down to good old Buenos Aires. Meanwhile, Slim stays here with the machine gun and makes sure I get down there safely, after which you give him a million dollars worth of Dutch Kroners and a first-class ticket to Holland, where the pot's legal and he can party hardy until his inoperable cancer carries him off. Once I hear he's safe, I let the four hostages go free..."

In other words, Bob didn't give a damned what happened to Slim once he, himself, was safe in Buenos Aires - but he'd certainly covered all the bases until then.

"That's it?" I asked, making sure.

Bob eyed my body, slowly. "Nope - there's one more demand, sugar-britches. Seeing as how I sort of hold all the cards, I think maybe I'll get myself a little 'going away present...'"

Oh, dear God....

"Strip." Bob commanded - and with speed I wouldn't have thought he had, he was on his feet, the whiskey bottle smashing unheeded on the ground as the S&W came up - pointed not at me, but at the hostages. "Strip right quick, bitch, or I start blowing people away."

Given the consequences of inaction, I didn't even hesitate - I began to undress.

From his mannerism, I knew that it wasn't all that sexual for Bob. Sure, there was some interest there but his real concern was with his carefully crafted plans, and he wanted to make damned sure I didn't screw them up on him. Which meant:

- A) making sure I didn't have a weapon hidden on me, and

- B) establishing complete dominance over me.

Even as my slender new fingers rushed to peel off my clothes, I could 'admire' his cold, calculating precision - and wish I had been given a body strong enough to rip that gun out of his hand and blow his own head off with it.

Then again - if I wasn't in this body, facing this situation, I wouldn't have been nearly so eager to shoot him. I was just trying really, really hard not to think about what would come next...

I didn't realize I was actually naked until my nails began to scrabble for buttons that weren't there, leaving thin welts on my otherwise flawless stomach. Bob seemed to get a kick out of that.

"Damn... This is your first time negotiating, isn't it?" he said, looking straight into my eyes and seeing the emotions roiling there, magnified by my glasses.

"Ye... Yes..." I admitted, head lowering. Now didn't seem to be a good time to make the distinction that it was my first time doing this as a woman...

"Let's see if we can't make it memorable for you, then." Bob said, grinning unpleasantly. The gun in his hand never wavered. "Why don't you bend that fine body of yours over the bar and beg Slim here to fuck you?"

Well, I certainly didn't have to feign embarrassment, disgust and shame as I complied, my new body trembling visibly as I turned to face the bar. I bent over, slowly, feeling as if I were moving through molasses as I spread my legs...

"Uh, Bob...?" Slim said, sounding uncertain. "What... whatcha doin'? I thought.. I thought we was just funnin'..."

It all clicked in the sound of Slim's stunned, confused voice. Not to bright to begin with, Slim's mind was further hampered by the drugs he'd become addicted to - which had made him an easy target for somebody like Bob, who needed a pliable dupe to ensure his plan's success.

"Of course we are, Slim." Bob's voice said, calmly cajoling. "This is just part of the game. I mean, look at her - she's no cop. She's just a hooker playing a part. She knows that my gun's loaded with blanks, just like yours..."

That last bit was as much for my benefit as Slim's. Maybe Slim's gun was loaded with blanks, maybe it wasn't - but the belts of ammo for the Ma Deuce were only inches away from where my slender new hands were braced on the bar, and I knew for damned sure that they weren't blanks...

"You sure, Bob?" Slim's voice said, wavering and uncertain. "I mean, this had been fun an' all, just like you said - but I don't want to be raping no pretty girl..."

Despite everything else, I found myself feeling suddenly sorry for Slim, who obviously had no idea what he was in the middle of. Bob had fed him some sort of bull-shit story, and poor, dumb Slim just believed what he was told. Hell - Bob had probably realized how gullible Slim was while working with him, and hatched this plan to take advantage of the fact...

I really don't know why I did it. I mean, dumb or not, duped or not, Slim was in the middle of a hostage situation, holding what might or might not be a fully-loaded automatic shotgun - but I felt so bad for the poor guy that I wanted to make what was going to happen easier on him. Oh, it'd be completely different if I'd been choosing whether it was going to happen or not, but since I was sure Bob was going to make it happen anyway, I was just moved to make it easier on him...

In that strange, pitying state, some of my fear and disgust melted away, and I actually managed to sound somewhat bored as I spoke without moving:

"Look, if you guys are just going to stand around yakking, I'm gonna have to charge you extra..."

As I figured, Bob caught on quick - and, maybe it's the sadist hat we all have a little part of inside of us, but I was thrilled to her the disgruntled tone in his voice as he said: "See? Now you just go on and fuck her..."

Sure, I was about to be 'raped', and if I'd tried to resist Bob would have started killing - but, by 'playing along', I'd managed to steal his thunder...

...and he knew damned well that he couldn't do a damned thing about it, not playing to a suddenly doubtful audience of one doped-up semi-criminal.

"Okay, Bob..." Slim said, his faith restored - and it was a struggle not to blurt out the 'truth' as I heard him unzip his pants.

If I'd told him I wasn't really a hooker, he would have stopped - and Bob would have started firing...

Instead, I closed my eyes and struggled not to cry as I said - begged: "Please, Slim - fuck me. Fuck me long and hard...!"

"No problem, sweet-cheeks..." Slim agreed, handing his gun to Bob and stepping behind me...

I managed to convert my scream of shock into a wordless gasp as I felt his hard cock slide into my new womanhood. The scream of shock would have reflected many things - including my surprise at how good it felt to have a hard, warm cock fill my brand-spanking-new vagina...

...and pause there, filling me and generating new and disturbing nice sensations in a new body part that was rapidly becoming moist and ready.

"I ain't hurtin' you none, am I?" Slim asked, solicitously - and I was more than a little shocked to find myself struggling not to laugh at the sheer absurdity of the question, given the situation.

"No..." I managed in a very odd tone of voice... Slim began to have sex with me.

I've had my fair share of sex in my life, perhaps less in the near past than when I was young, but it hadn't been so long ago that I'd forgotten what it felt like. Which is why I can state with absolute assurance that having sex, as a woman, feels every bit as good as having sex as a man does.

Oh - but it feels so very different...

For one thing, it's internal. The sensations aren't coming from an appendage rather thoughtlessly hung where a poorly-aimed golf-ball can do incredible amounts of pain - so the feeling being generated came from deep within me, seeming to spread out in a steadily expanding globe of pleasure that caused interesting ancillary effects in my nipples and - interestingly - lips. Without even being aware I was doing it, at first, I began to lick and suck my own lips in an odd way, even lightly nibbling them between my perfect white teeth as I moaned, low in the back of my throat.

The moan was any sort of acting. What I was experiencing really did feel good - very good.

I was enjoying having sex.

Not 'being raped'. Technically, Slim wasn't raping me. If anything, it was Bob who was raping me, through Slim - except that Slim, bless his stupid, cancerous heart, was actually trying to make it feel good for me, too...

...and succeeding. Who would have thought the dope-head would be a considerate lover, varying speed and pitch as he pumped into me to keep himself from coming too soon, while maximizing my pleasure...

Deep inside, a part of my psychiatrist's brain found it eminently logical, of course. Not to bright and nothing special to look at, Slim would instinctively learned whatever he could to keep a woman if he managed to actually catch one - so of course he was a good lover. It was just about the only thing he had to offer a woman.

Most of me wasn't nearly so critical. I was busy rocking back and forth,. My firm new breasts bouncing and jostling as I gasped in wordless pleasure as Slim fucked me, one hand resting on a firm buttock as he drove...

One hand?

Evan in he rising daze of pleasure that was washing over me as I neared orgasm, I became aware of the fact that something was wrong - and the detail was further clarified by Bob's suddenly horrified shout of : "Slim - Don't..."

I forced my pleasure-heavy lids all the way open, looking into the huge mirror mounted behind the bar...

Slim had handed the Pancor to Bob before he'd started having sex with me - but at some point, as he'd pounded rhythmically into me, our bodies had slid forward until I was practically laying my stomach on the bar, the toes of my feet barely on the floor. Slim, lost in the throes of passion as he desperately strove not to cum before me, had reached out with one hand for added leverage...

...and unthinkingly wrapped his hand around the grip of the .50, his thumb slipping through the trigger guard...

"Oh.. God.. Gonna.. cum..." Slim gasped, just as Bob - belatedly realizing what was happening - dropped the pistol and dove towards the suddenly much-too-distant machine-gun.

Slim and I came simultaneously. I couldn't help it - I screamed in intense pleasure as the female orgasm ripped through my body, longer and somehow much more.. immediate then a male orgasm, my whole body convulsing with the enormous pleasure of it...

...even as Slim's body convulsed with the force of the orgasm, muscles contracting all over his body - including the muscles in the hand gripping the gun's trigger.

The sound of a fifty-caliber machine gun firing inches away from your ear is deafening. It's an all- encompassing sound, felt as much as heard, each 'thud' sounding oddly like a pen punching through heavy cardboard, cyclic and fast.

At least - that's what I assume it'd sound like. I can't say for certain, because I never heard that sound. Instead, I heard:

"Want another orgasm, Jenny?"

I blinked - and then blinked again.

I was sitting at the bar. Sitting comfortable, nylon-clad legs crossed at the knees.

From hidden speakers came the soft soothing sounds of a string quartet. From behind me came the sound of mid-afternoon diners chatting and eating - which made sense, since it was twelve hours later than it should be, making it mid-afternoon.

I was sitting at the bar in the Drake Hotel. Dressed in the same jacket-over-bustier as before, but now with a just-above-knee-length skirt, decorously tucked under one smooth thigh so as not to gape open in an unladylike manner.

Much the way my mouth was doing as I stared incredulously at the reflection in the mirror. The one that showed me sitting at the bar, fully dressed and decidedly unmussed, while behind me the normal going-ons of the hotel were going on, showing no signs of any recent hostage situation...

"Jenny? Jenny, are you okay...?"

The female voice to my right was the same one that had offered me another orgasm. Feeling as if I'd been dipped in glue that was just starting to harden, I forced myself to look in that direction...

The woman gazing at me with good-natured eyes was tall and slender, doing her best to look as casually elegant as me - but not having much luck. The long, silky black hair was nicely styled. Her long, incredibly shapely legs were decorously clad in a mid-length skirt. Even her blouse was crisp and white.

It was the fact that the breasts beneath that blouse were roughly the size and shape of basketballs that spoiled the elegant look. That, and the bright and cheerfully available look on her somewhat too- heavily made-up face.

"Jenny - we're never going to pick up any guys if you start weirding out..." Suzi said, and I was rather amazed to find that I knew her name was Susan 'Suzi' Pickens. Then again, I should know her name, since she was roommate...

I simply gaped at her, trying to process the fact that I knew I was Jennifer Renfrew, Twenty-two, and - unlike Suzi - studying at the University, where I was majoring in Psychology...

...mainly because of my father, John Renfrew, who'd just recently passed away...

If you want 'weird', how about remembering your own funeral? Seeing yourself laying in the coffin at the wake where even Horatio Hornblower Lucas had gotten drunk and stood up to recount with genuine emotion all the lives Good Ol' Doc had saved as the on-call Hostage Negotiator...

I forcibly yanked my mind from the 'memories', trying desperately to cope with the suddenly and inexplicably changed situation - and found myself the focus of a thoroughly concerned stare, compliments of my ditzy-but-very-well-meaning best friend, Suzi.

With whom I'd come to the bar in hopes of picking up a guy. After all, I'd been depressed since my Dad's death, and Suzi's solution to just about any problem was to get laid...

"I'm fine." I said, suddenly, in a voice that said just the opposite. The world seemed to be swimming around me, and I felt a desperate urge to go someplace where I could be alone.

Not because 'the tingle' only came when I was alone. Somehow, I knew that 'the tingle' had belonged to John, not Jenny. This was who I was now - and that's why I needed some time alone, some time to try and grasp this sudden, irreversible shift in age, gender and lifestyle.

"You sure...?" Suzi said, doubtfully. I Lowered my head, trying to get my brain working - and found myself looking at a shot glass.

Oh, right - an Orgasm. Suzi's preferred drink. Yet another tiny detail that I know remembered as clearly as I remembered my old life...

"I'm sorry..." Suzi said, miserably, her sigh threatening to send her enormous breasts ripping right through the tight blouse. "C'mon - let's get you home..."

For the second time in what, subjectively, was only a few minutes, I was overwhelmed with a sudden spark of emotion for Suzi-who-didn't-remember-being-Slim-because-there'd-never-been-such-a-person.

Once Suzi started 'chasing men', she never gave up until she'd caught one. Ever. Yet she was offering...

"I... I just need some time alone..." I said, managing to feign at least some semblance of normality. Well - 'Jenny' normality, at least. "You.. You enjoy yourself."

"Are you sure...?" She asked, and I nodded. Sliding off the bar stool, I began to walk towards the door, realizing that the gentle 'tap-tap' of my heels was something I'd better get used to hearing, because 'Jenny' seemed to like wearing shoes with some sort of heel...

"Well - at least you can feed Bob..." Suzi called, doubtfully, to me...

...and I had a sudden flash of the other roommate we shared our apartment with. Bob.

Our pet bulldog.

Now, as I walked towards the door, I was only subliminally aware of the feminine shift and sway of my body atop my heels - I was too busy trying not to burst out in thoroughly hysterical laughter.

Whatever force had been changing me over the years had evidently 'rewritten' history so that the hostage situation had never happened - and, just as evidently, this force had a certain sense of humor.

'Bob' was short for 'Roberta'. Our pet bulldog was female...

I was so busy trying to keep a lid on the wash of emotions running through my now-permanently- feminine body that I really wasn't paying attention to where I was going. Apparently, I wasn't the only one, because I suddenly found myself struggling to keep my feet as somebody impacted me from the left. Struggling - and failing...

Rather than the cold embrace of the pavement, I found myself in a warm, strongly masculine embrace. Stunned, I glanced upwards, finding myself looking at the face of a broad-shouldered, almost offensively handsome man with a fit, toned body and an stormy-gray eyes that reflected shame, embarrassment and attraction as he gazed down at me...

...and why the hell was I noticing a guy's eyes...?

...well it was certainly better than noticing that the way he'd fallen on one knee to catch me had inadvertently left my face only a few inches from the taut jean fabric covering the large male bulge...

..and I flushed, wondering what the hell was wrong with me as I looked back up at his face...

...and realized he looked oddly familiar...

"I'm so very sorry..." The handsome young man said... young? He was about my own age... "I.. I didn't see you there..."

"Deevers." The word slipped out of my mouth before I knew I was going to say it, and he hesitated in the middle of helping me back to my feet - then went ahead with his gallant gesture before replying.

"Uh.. Yes, I'm Dan Deevers..." He looked at me, eyes narrowing slightly. "Don't take this the wrong way, Miss, but I'm fairly certain we've never met..."

I had no idea how I knew that it wasn't a pick-up line. I also had no idea why I cared, either way...

"I.. I'm John Renfrew..'s daughter." I replied, hoping he didn't catch the slight hesitation as I 'corrected' myself.

He didn't. Instead, he just blinked, twice. "Oh - Oh, yeah, the negotiator. I'm sorry to hear about his passing, Miss Renfrew. My dad said he wished he'd met him - he sounded like a hell of a man."

Oh - if the hotel situation never happened, then John and Deever Senior had never met... "Anyway, I'm so sorry about this and all." Dan said, again, flushing and glancing away...

He was shy! Dan Deever was actually shy. Shy...and very, very handsome.

Shy, handsome - and, if anything like his father, competent and kind...

"Oh - are you okay...?" The slight gasp and the concerned question popped out of her mouth, barely heard by her swirling brain as she tried to figure out why she couldn't quite tear her eyes off of Dan. Right now they were fixed on the knee he'd fallen onto, held at a slightly odd angle - but she was also aware that she wouldn't have to move her eyes far to glance at his crotch again, and from there she might as well continue upwards so she could lose herself in his stormy gray eyes, and while she'd been thinking it she'd been doing it, and now she was staring directly into his eyes...

...except that they were flat black. No pupil, no iris, just flat black, from edge to edge...

...and he was speaking in a strange, flat monotone so unlike his own kind, shy tones...

"I'm sorry, John." Dan said in that strange voice. "You were a worthy Instrument for My will, and for that you shall be rewarded in Heaven - and as I am a Kind and Loving God, here on Earth as well. Be ye fruitful and multiply."

Then his eyes were stormy gray and kind, at least until he glanced away in embarrassment, unaware that, for an instant, his body had been shared with something much, much more...

"It's nothing...." He said, trying hard to make the painful knee look normal, eager to escape this horribly embarrassing situation before he just made a complete mess of things, as he always did when trying to talk to beautiful girls...

...except that he had no way in Heaven or on Earth of knowing that he just couldn't mess this one up.

"Oh, no... It's certainly not 'nothing'..." I told him in a very, very warm tone, guaranteed to get any man's attention...

...and if that didn't do it, I'm sure the long, slow, and very passionate kiss I gave him did. When I finally let him go, staying close to his broad, firm body, he stared at me rather blankly...

...and said, artlessly and without any thought at all, "Thank you." Followed a half-beat later with a confused: "What was that for?"

I couldn't help it. I laughed. It was the instinctive 'Thank You' that did it, I guess. "Does it really matter...?" I teased.

He blinked, then answered very seriously. "Oh, yes - if I knew what I'd done to deserve that, I'd do it again."

I smiled at him, gently. "Well, if it's for informational purposes, I kissed you for being kind, attentive and sweet."

"Oh..." He replied with a thoroughly charming tone of comprehension. "Well, then - I guess I should kindly, attentively and sweetly ask you if you'd like to maybe, sometime, have a cup of coffee with me?"

"I'd love to - and I'm free right now, if you are." I replied, sweetly and with every ounce of 'come-hither' I could toss at him through tone and body language - and with my new body, that was a hell of a lot...

...and damned if he didn't actually hesitate. "Uh "

Now it was my turn to blink - and worry...

"I was just on my way to the Rec Center..." He said, eyes lowered. "I, uh, volunteer as a Big Brother, and Timmy - Tim Shawshanks, my Little Brother - would be really disappointed if I didn't show. I mean, I.. I really would like to have coffee with you and "

Sounds like I wasn't the only one getting rewarded for long and faithful service in His army. I lay a hand on one wonderfully strong arm and smiled up at him. "Well, Dan, if you have to run off, you have to - but I expect you to make it up to me. No simple cup of coffee - I expect a full-fledged date, with a candle-lit dinner, lots of slow dancing cheek-to-cheek, that sort of thing "

He smiled - and for a second I was concerned that it'd just keep growing, wrapping all the way around his head. It managed to stop itself at 'ear to ear', though. "That sounds more than fair to me, Miss Renfrew."

I laughed. "Jenny. If you're dating me, you get to call me Jenny."

"Okay.. Jenny..." He said, charmingly hesitant. I quickly gave him my address and phone number, then sent him on his way with a little peck on the cheek.

Okay, so for being a brand-new woman, I was being just a leeeetle bit forward. Since my plan was to get married to him as soon as possibly, I sort of had to. After all, I couldn't have lots and lots and lots of really, really great sex with him until we were married, and I was really, really looking forward to having all that sex with him. Thankfully, I'd be able to pass all my classes without much effort, having a lifetime of experience in it already - which, of course, meant that I'd have plenty of time for the aforementioned sex....

Okay, okay - so I'm being a love-struck, starry-eyed nymphomaniac, angling to have all sorts of sex with a big, strong, well endowed man....

God told me to. What's your excuse...?

THE END

BACK TO FUN ZONE

SUMMARY: When a man buys some drugs on the street, he mistakenly receives experimental designer drugs that turn his genes into a woman's. With the accompanying amnesia, this woman now goes out and his pheromones make everyone around out of control.

Addictive

By Gunslinger

Practically jittering with nervous energy, Johnny Phoung pushed the door of his apartment shut and then slumped against it, his tiny, slender frame seeming to disappear in the bulky leather coat he wore so proudly.

"Man, oh man - I can't believe I just did that..." Johnny muttered to himself, still shaking with the adrenaline rush that came from making his first drug purchase.

Twenty-one years ago, Phoung Jun-Hee had been born, a tiny, darkly-golden baby brought screaming into near abject poverty in the house of his immigrant parents. Almost as soon as he was old enough to notice that he wasn't like his supposed peers, he'd re-christened himself with the mispronunciation of his name that most American youths seemed to stumble upon, and had hence-forth dedicated himself to being the 'All-American boy', or at least this generation's version of it. Though he made only a modest salary as a delivery boy for a chain pizza-parlor, he spent nearly every dime furthering his 'Americanization' plans. He learned how to dress in the preppy-American style, buying only name- brand American clothes, not Wall-Mart specials or (God forbid) Vietnamese clothing. He also eagerly adopted American vices, going out on drinking binges with his college pseudo-buddies, who mostly let him hang around because a) he was fun to tease and b) chicks thought he was 'cute'.

So, when some of his so-called friends had been discussing the different mind- and mood-altering substances they'd tried, Johnny had made up his mind to go out and 'score' some 'dope'.

Actually, he didn't know the first thing about the semi-underground drug culture. He'd ended up following a soi-distant acquaintance to a really low-end 'rave' deep in the heart of the burned-out downtown district, where half the ravers were thugs, dopers or skanks - and the other half was worse.

Still, he was determined to go through with the deal - so, when a sleazy, half-drunk biker-type had sidled up to him and offered him some 'hot shit' that was 'the new shit', he'd bought a small plastic tube of gritty white pills for his last fifty bucks - and then had hurried home, nearly paranoid with the certainty that any second the long arm of the law would reach out and grab him.

However, he'd made it home safely, and now the fear and illicit excitement were fading...

...allowing him to think a little more clearly.

"What the heck..." He paused, consciously changing his vocabulary to that of his 'peers' '...I mean, what the fuck did I just buy?"

Walking over to the cheap futon couch/bed along the wall of his tiny apartment, Johnny slumped down on it and pulled the tube of pills from his pocket, turning it over in his slender bronze fingers while his almond eyes regarded the half-dozen white 'goodies' quizzically.

His original plan had been to 'impress' some of his buddies with his score, inviting them over to get high - but he realized how incredibly stupid he'd look if he had no idea what he was giving them, or what it did.

"The guy didn't even tell me what these things are..." Johnny muttered, running his hand through his oh-so-carefully styled mane of fine, rich black hair. He looked at the pills again, but they didn't provide any visual clues - about the size of aspirin, they were white, flecked lightly with tiny pinkish-grey bits, and gritty-looking.

"Oh, just great...!" Johnny told himself. "Weed, you could identify. Hash and oil, maybe. Acid... maybe not - but these could be sugar pills! Wouldn't that be great - invite the guys over, brag about my score.. and give them placebos. Oh, they'd laugh about the 'stupid veen'mese boy' for weeks!"

Shrugging out of the oversized (and over-priced) leather jacket, Johnny began to pace up and down the room, thinking. He'd blown the last of his money on these pills, and he couldn't see himself just throwing them out... but he couldn't reveal his ignorance about them, either.

Which left only one option....

Johnny knew that it was more than a little dumb to do what he was about to do, but his fear - and self-loathing - at being ridiculed for his heritage and nature was more compelling than the risks.

Sometimes, he thought he'd rather die than be the outcast foreigner - and now he might just have his chance.

Going into the kitchen, Johnny filled a plastic cup with some orange Kool-Aid (he saved his few beers for his 'buddies'), and returned to the living-room to drop back onto the futon.

"Well...." He said, a slight quaver in his voice. "Here goes "

Popping open the red plastic cap on the rounded-ended tube, he shook one, then - after a pause - a second pill out into his hand. Taking the time to close the cap and put the tube back into his jacket pocket - stalling - Johnny made himself comfortable on the futon, looking at the pills in the cupped palm of his slender hand.

Then, in one convulsive movement, he tossed the pills into his mouth and swallowed, rapidly draining the entire cup of Kool-Aid to wash it down.

Putting the cup aside, he leaned back against the wall and waited to see what would happen.

Watching the clock made him discover the first 'effect' of the unknown substance - time seemed to slow to a crawl, the second hand barely seeming to move as he waited nervously for whatever it was to kick in.

He waited, and waited, and waited and felt absolutely nothing, except for the fact that his head was itchy - suddenly, he felt like he could feel every single strand of hair on his head.

With a sigh, Johnny decided he'd gotten ripped off, that was all. Idly, he began to imagine that the scene had happened differently, that maybe he'd gone in and known what he was all about - he was some street-wise tough Oriental, like you sometimes saw in the movies, his leather jacket looking as good on him in real life as it did in his imagination, and...

Still sort of imagining how it might've gone (maybe), Johnny picked up the remote control and flicked on the small TV across the room - and blinked as it came on, very loudly. He held his thumb down on the '-' button on the remote, and blinked again as he saw the little volume bars were only a quarter of the way across the screen to begin with.

He puzzled for a while over how his TV had suddenly acquired more powerful sound - but then shrugged it off and began to watch TV. Almost unaware he was doing it, he began to undress, feeling too warm, and slightly 'itchy'. As he tried to focus on the image on the screen, he almost unknowingly stripped out of his clothes, until his naked, golden body lay sprawled out on the futon.

He frowned slightly, unconsciously rubbing his mildly itching arms as he tried to figure out the show on TV - or maybe it was a movie, because it was all dark, and mysterious, with deep, convoluted statements that didn't seem to make much sense - like a movie three-quarters of the way through, when you didn't know the plot or characters. He slowly began to pick up the plot - the woman was trying to trick the man... her husband...? into doing something, but she wasn't actually saying what she wanted him to do - she was using their son to get to him, because he...

Then, suddenly, something began to scroll across the bottom of the screen, and Johnny switched his focus to the scrolling words.

"Order now and we'll include a... what the hell...?" Johnny blinked... then his eyes widened. "Holy shit it's a commercial...!"

He sat up suddenly, realizing that what had seemed like a good ten or fifteen minutes of the 'movie' couldn't have been more than a minute or two - and that it was just a TV commercial, not some mysterious movie.

"Holy shit...!" Johnny said, then giggled. "I am sooo stoned!"

Leaning back on the futon, Johnny grinned to himself, not realizing just how goofy-looking his grin was as he let his mind begin to wander from thought-to-thought, randomly, letting himself sink into the uncritical haze of the drug. Though he'd never been into this type of culture, himself, he could understand how some people sank silently into the depths of drug use - something he'd never let happen to himself, of course. While stoned, he might say or do something 'un-American', and thus blow his own 'image', the one he was working so hard to build. Still, it was good that he could now talk about drugs to his American-born 'friends' without sounding like a complete idiot.

Oh, but to be like them - to be like a 'real' American...

Leaning back, eyes closed, mind caught up in a daze, Johnny let himself slip into a fantasy - one in which he wasn't some golden Oriental 'foreigner', but a born and bred American...

...and so he didn't see what was happening. On a certain level, he felt it - as a slow tingling sensation that ran through his body like a gentle, mildly electric warmth. Though it nibbled at the hazy periphery of his consciousness, Johnny mistook it as a symptom of being stoned - which was both right and wrong, as it was an effect of the drug, but not a 'normal' effect for most mind-altering substances.

Unknowingly, Johnny had taken something that was far more than that - and he was unaware as his body began to process the chemicals in the drug, which were designed to interact with the mild - but - measurable electrical activity of the brain. More than just interact, though...

The tiny, molecular-sized machines within the sugar-based 'matrix' of the pill came to life. Like millions of tiny soldiers marching into battle, the nano-sized machines received unrealized 'orders' from the Kyrillean field given by body and mind, and set off to obey these orders...

With that slow, spreading warmth, there was something else happening.

Slowly, the golden color of Johnny's skin began to fade, the chemical creating that particular shade of bronzed skin slowly being 'eaten' by the tiny machines that now swarmed through Johnny's body.

They processed the chemical composition of the 'pigment' and converted it into waste material, to be drawn through the bloodstream and disposed of.

In the space of a few minutes, Johnny's skin faded from the rich golden bronze of his ancestry to a lighter shade, looking like nothing more than a lightly tanned Caucasian shade.

Johnny was, again, only faintly aware of the taut, warm sensation around his eyes, and again mistook it for a 'normal' feeling for somebody who was high, unaware that the distinctive eye-folds around his dark eyes were being 'straightened' by the tiny machines now dispersed through his body. The cells were tightened or loosened from within, reshaping the flesh around his eyes until they were roughly Caucasian in appearance, but with slight 'almond' shape to them, which - if they'd been open - would have given them a 'mysterious' look.

Johnny was falling deeper into a 'dream state' with every passing second, less and less of his surroundings - and his own body. Instead, his mind wandered further afield, passing from his own imaginary American history to what being 'American' would mean to him, the popularity and the prestige. The acceptance by his peers... and by the American Girls he was to shy to even talk to, much less proposition.

The American girls, with their long, shapely legs...

Inside the muscles and soft tissues of his legs, the nanites took his imaginings as orders and set to work, doing what they could within the malleable tissues of the legs, while others worked with the bones as best they could, less able to alter the calcified structure of the bones.

The American girls, with their full hips and taut asses...

Some of the nanites moved from his legs to join those already in his hips and ass, going to work to follow their instructions...

The American girls, with their slender waists...

Becoming hard-pressed to keep up with the flow of 'instructions' they were receiving, the nanites in Johnny's body dedicated about eighty-five percent of themselves to doing the actual work, while the other fifteen percent set up shop to produce even more replicas of their own selves, 'stealing' iron, carbon and other elements from Johnny's body to increase the number of tiny, molecular-scale machines to follow his 'orders'.

Lost in the drug-induced daze, Johnny's imagination was... well, not necessarily 'sharper', as much as 'all-inclusive'. Without outside distractions to break through the barrier created in his mind by the drug, Johnny was able to experience his fantasies with a sort of immediacy that was lacking in other circumstances, allowing him to build and hold the image in his mind with more power clarity. Of an American 'dream girl', from the tip of her dainty toes (clad in high heels, of course), to the top of her head (platinum blonde, ideally). Every detail of this fantasy woman, every inch of her body, every tiniest detail...

...and, to the best of their ability, limited by various factors, especially in the 'dead' calcium structure of nails and hair, the tiny machines struggled to fulfill their instructions, burning more and more of the 'resources' in Johnny's body...

...which was enough to 'exhaust' him, pushing his dazed, hazy mind over the edge, and into sleep, his body relaxing in slumber as the tireless machines continued to function.

* * * * *

Johnny blinked up at the ceiling, listening to the quiet sound coming from the nearly-mute TV, playing some early-morning News/Talk show.

Feeling poorly rested and awkward, his body feeling decidedly odd (from sleeping in an awkward position, Johnny logically - but incorrectly - assumed), Johnny felt out-of-sorts and thick-witted, as if he'd gotten only a little sleep after being up for much too long.

All in all, not an auspicious beginning to the day. With a chuff of expelled air, Johnny heaved his body upright on the futon...

...and the sensations of his body made it damn clear that something more... fundamental was wrong with him then mere exhaustion and an awkward sleeping position.

"What the...?" Johnny grumbled, starting to look down...

...then stopping dead as two things registered.

The first was the sound of his own voice, all wrong in his ears, too high-pitched and with a faint tremolo overtone.

The second was what he saw, staring downward.

For a second Johnny simply sat stock-still, unwilling to believe anything being reported to his brain. What he heard, what he was seeing, what he was feeling - it was so utterly inconceivable that his brain simply didn't know where to begin...

...then it 'double-checked' itself and reported that what was apparently happening was, indeed, really happening...

If asked how he'd react if he woke up and found that he'd been transformed into a woman, Johnny would probably have said he'd scream and faint, or maybe go instantly, gibbering insane.

Presented with the impossible situation, however, Johnny did neither. Instead, she continued to gaze downward for a long second, taking in the sight of a pair of huge, firmly rounded breasts in the foreground, backed by shapely feminine gams in the background, all framed by strands of dark hair that hung to either side of her vision. Other, new sensation made it abundantly clear that the changes she could see - and, in her voice, hear - went all the way through her body.

Slowly, she lifted one hand and slowly turned it over near her face, looking at it. Her hands had always been fairly slender, thanks to her Asian heritage, but this hand was even more dainty, definitely - almost defiantly - feminine, tipped with fairly long nails.

Slowly, hesitantly, Johnny guided that hand downwards, past the silken thighs of her altered legs... to her crotch.

A crotch that conformed in every way to that of a 'genetic' woman. Short, downy pubic hair passed under questing fingers, and centered in that fine layer of hair was the vaginal lips of her new womanhood.

Slowly, with the oddly graceful motions and blank expression of somebody deep in shock, Johnny rose from the futon, barely feeling the unfamiliar balance of his altered body as she walked unsteadily down the hallway and into the bathroom, using one slender new finger to flick on the light switch. Stepping into the white-tiled bathroom, she gazed blankly at the reflection shown in the mirror.

For the first instant, Johnny couldn't see her 'original' self in the mirror, though she was trying very hard to see it... then it 'clicked', but it was as if two images were overlaid atop each other, the 'original' Johnny only visible if you knew the secret.

The height was about the same, as was the rough build - as an Asian, Johnny had been fairly short and slender compared to his Caucasian friends. That, however, was hidden by her new gender, her build and height now 'average' for a Caucasian woman, which she now seemed to be. Likewise, her hair had always been richly black and shiny, as well as light and silky - but it was quite 'normal' for a Caucasian woman to have the long, silky mane of raven's wing hair that the mirror-image woman boasted.

Indeed, the woman shown in the mirror was a vision of Caucasian femininity and sensuality. Long, shapely legs lead upwards to slim-yet-feminine hips. She boasted a firm, full ass and a slender waist. She had tiny, dainty feet and hands. Her face was downright stunning, from the dark, mysterious eyes to the full, ripe lips, all on a heart-shaped face atop a slender, swan-like neck.

Her breasts... Her breasts were huge, the size of basketballs, and remarkably firm, though not 'implant'-hard, but with a slight, 'natural' droop. The large, thick - and, since they were nearly rock-hard in the cool air, responsive - nipples were to scale with her massive new endowments.

"Gee..." Johnny said, blankly, hearing the richly feminine voice that emerged from her altered throat. "I'm a living wet dream "

Then her eyes rolled up, exposing the whites, as her shocked mind gave way to blissful unconsciousness and she fainted.

As her limp body toppled, her head slammed, unfeeling, against the unyielding porcelain of the toilet, creating a resounding 'clonk' sound that overshadowed the more muffled 'thunk' as her new skull bounced off the white vinyl flooring.

* * * * *

Elsewhere in the city, two men dressed in dark suits leaned over the desk of the interrogation room, their eyes lost behind matching dark glasses as they stared down at the heavy-set, long-haired biker- type in the chair.

"All right, we know you were pressuring Dr. Brightling for some gambling debt he owed you, and he 'bought' an extension for himself with a new designer drug." The one on the right said, in a sharp voice.

His near-clone (except for hair color, which was several shades lighter) jumped in. "The numb-nuts didn't even know what he gave you, you sorry sap. In fact, the damn things were marked as placebos!"

"Huh?" The biker-type grunted, his medical knowledge limited to the occasional episode of ER when he was too stoned to remember how to work the remote.

"Dammit - who did you sell the pills to, scumbag!" The first one demanded. The burly guy looked back and forth between the two men, then shrugged. "Some Jap kid "

* * * * *

Warm... yet cold. Darkness, split by light. Silence, punctuated by a low, heavy thrumming....

With a soft, gentle moan, she slowly pulled herself off the tile floor, shivering from the chill the tiles had imparted into her lithe body, while the close, stuffy room had kept the other side of her warm.

The room - the entire apartment - was silent, but the beat of her heart sounded like a heavy bass drum in her own head, which ached from impact - triggering yet another soft moan as she tenderly probed her head with long-nailed fingers, wincing. Slowly, stiffly, she pulled herself upright, using the counter to provide leverage to pull her slender, shapely - and most definitely top-heavy - body upright.

Leaning against the counter with one slender, smooth arm, she reached up and pushed her full, heavy mane of silky, raven's-wing hair out of her face and stared at the image reflected in the mirror.

In the silence of the apartment, the throbbing of her aching head was the only measure of time as she stared at the reflection, silently - then she let out her pent-up breath in a long, slow sigh.

"Ooooh-kay " She said, softly, marveling at the sweet, warm contralto voice the word emerged in.

" and just who might you be?"

The reflection in the mirror had no answer to give, and the woman slowly straightened and turned around, looking at the bathroom with a soulful gaze.

She didn't know who she was, nor how she'd gotten her or even where 'here' was, for that matter.

She recognized the bathroom for what it was, and she was capable of speaking, so there were memories accessible to her, enough so that she hadn't 'regressed' to a baby's state of confusion but she still couldn't access any memories at all, not directly. Though she spoke and understood English, she couldn't remember who she'd ever spoken with. No memory of any conversation with anybody surfaced, though she was sure she must have gone to school, must have had parents and relatives and friends.

She just couldn't remember any of them. Hell - she didn't even remember herself, much less anybody else. The image in the mirror was a complete stranger to her. Obviously, it must be her but she didn't remember being her, or anything about herself.

Waking up to find that you were a complete stranger to yourself was a disconcerting situation, and in the back of her mind, part of her wondered why she wasn't panicking at the strange and frightening situation - but she was grateful for the fact, since she knew that the raw emotions of panic would do absolutely nothing to help her in his situation.

The question was - what would help her?

It was a hell of a good question. She just wished she had an answer.

"What the hell is going on?" She asked herself, knowing that there'd be no answer forthcoming. All she knew for sure was what she'd learned in the few minutes since she'd regained consciousness.

Well, she knew what she looked like, now. She was a woman, apparently in her mid-twenties. About average height, with a slender, shapely body and huge, remarkably firm breasts tipped with equally large nipples, currently (and rather pleasantly) engorged from the cool air.

How she knew she was huge-breasted and beautiful was beyond her, since she couldn't summon up any specific images of other people to compare herself against - but the fact remained that she knew it was true. Just as she knew that her face, surrounded by a wealth of long, silky hair, was lovely, with a pert nose, full, soft lips and big, dark eyes that would drive men wild.

"Well, I guess it's better to be sexy and beautiful rather than ugly and old..." She muttered to herself, stretching. "These tits are a pain in the... well, lower back, actually."

She lightly hefted her huge, firm tits, feeling the weight of the softly solid masses and wondering if, before her amnesia, she'd enjoyed having such huge tits, or simply lived with them. She didn't think they were implants - though how she knew women could get implants to enlarge their bust was beyond her - and it was equally obvious that she'd never had her bust reduced, either. Was it due to fear of 'unnecessary' surgery, or had she enjoyed her massive, heavy boobs...?

It was a question she couldn't answer - and wasn't terribly pertinent, anyway. She was who she was, even if she couldn't remember her history, so there was nothing about her own body she had to worry about. It was exactly the same as it had been before...

...right?

Shrugging off the odd sense of disquiet she felt about her top-heavy figure, she moved on to checking out the surroundings, seeing what she could glean from them.

She was in a bathroom, somewhere. A private bathroom, rather than a public restroom - but she didn't know who's bathroom it was. Well, that was as good a place as any to start, she figured.

She began to go through the items filling the bathroom, wondering how she knew what they were, but glad she did, since it made it easy to figure some things out.

"Well, this isn't my bathroom..." She muttered to herself. There was a complete lack of what she somehow knew was 'feminine necessities' - this was the bathroom of a man, and a bachelor to boot.

Well, if nothing else, the search of the bathroom turned something else up - a bottle of Tylenol in the cabinet. Again, she was bemused by the fact that she could 'recognize' the bottle, know what it was, and how many to take... and yet not remember her own name.

Downing two of the white pills with some water, she looked at the small plastic container and considered, then decided to hold onto it. Holding it in her left hand, she stepped out of the bathroom and began to look around the rest of the apartment, searching equally for information about herself - and her clothes.

She got little of either - or, rather, little of one and none of the other.

The apartment definitely belonged to a bachelor - one 'Phoung Jun-Hee', according to identification she found in a wallet. Everything she found agreed with her initial assessment of the apartment, that Phoung was a bachelor, and far from rich - but she didn't recognize the Asian face in the photo, nor did she find any sign that she spent time in this apartment. There was nothing in the apartment that she could even assume was 'hers' - no clothes, no personal items, and definitely no identification.

So... she not only had no idea who she was (still), but she didn't know what she was doing here, how she'd gotten here - or what had happened to the clothes and items she must have had with her when she'd arrived.

Well, obviously, somebody must have taken them out of the apartment, perhaps the 'Phoung' guy. The question was... why?

Given the circumstances, she was worried. Her clothes, purse, money and ID were missing. She had an aching head from a blow, and amnesia that might have come from the blow to the head... or from being drugged in some way. After all, she'd found a little container which held odd-looking little pills that could have been some sort of knock-out drug.

This Phoung could be some sort of pervert or psycho. Maybe they'd met somewhere, and she'd found his small stature 'unthreatening'... and he'd used her misplaced trust to drug her and drag her here.

Maybe he was out, right now, tossing her clothes and purse into the river in the hopes that cops investigating her disappearance would think she'd drowned. She just didn't know...

...but she didn't like the situation she was in. If Phoung was friend, why weren't there any signs that she'd been here before? Why were her clothes missing, and her purse. Maybe a friend would take her clothes down to the laundry room to wash them while she was getting a bath or shower, and she'd slipped and hit her head... except that her purse should still have been laying around.

No - she was safest assuming that Phoung had some sort of ill intentions for her. Maybe she was expected to be unconscious awhile longer - in which case, Phoung might get back at any time.

She had to get out of here.

She tossed Phoung's bedroom again, this time looking for clothing that would fit her. Her head was feeling better, now that the Tylenol had kicked in, but her oddly detached emotions were coming to life, and now panic threatened to set in as she searched for something to wear.

There was no feminine undergarments to be had, so she'd have to 'go commando' - but she needed something to wear, as a woman - especially one with her build - would attract too much undue interest if she were to walk around naked.

She tried on a pair of jeans with a button fly, and found that they were about the right length - but she couldn't button the fly, the heavy fabric unable to stretch to encompass her smoothly curved feminine hips and full, sexy ass. She needed something made out of a fabric that had more 'give' than denim...

...which meant the black silk pants she'd found buried in the back of his closet. Bundled up along with a white silk 'blouse', she recognized the outfit, somewhat - it was the 'stereotypical' Vietnamese outfit. There were even a pair of sandals with straps that could be adjusted to fit her slender, dainty feet well enough to get by.

However, the outfit was far from perfect. Though the draw-string style pants were able to fit over her womanly hips and taut buttocks, they were stretched almost painfully tight while doing so, clinging suggestively to her crotch and ass.

Likewise, the silk shirt wasn't designed to hold her massive, firm bust. The first time she'd pulled the soft fabric on, it had clung like a second skin to her huge tits - and clearly revealed her huge, thick nipples. Peeling the blouse off - frantically, fear close to overwhelming her at the thought of Phoung returning before she could get away - she pulled on a gray tank-style undershirt that helped contain her massive bust, as well as 'tone down' the look as she pulled the blouse on again, finding it acceptable, even if it emphasized her full bust.

Quickly adjusting the straps on the sandals, she pulled them on and hurried for the door, heart pounding, the clothes and the bottle of Tylenol her only assets as she yanked the door open and stepped out into the hallway beyond, hair in disarray around a beautiful face locked into a panic-stricken expression. Heart thundering, she hurried towards the stairs, feeling the shift and sway of her huge tits with every step and cursing her lack of a bra. She was sure she was 'used' to having such huge breasts, but not being able to remember made the jiggle and bounce of her breasts feel all-new to her - and that served as an unwelcome distraction as she fled the scene of her unknowing awakening.

Stepping out of the door at the bottom of the stairs, she found that she'd exited at the back of the building, into an alley. Not wanting to chance running into Phoung coming up in the elevator, she'd used the 'back stairs' to make her escape - and now wondered if that was such a good idea. The apartment was a downtown-apartment building, and obviously not in a very expensive - or very 'safe' - neighborhood. The alleyway she was in could have been the infamous 'dark alley' you didn't want to meet certain sorts of people in.

Slowly, feeling the worm of fear turn in her stomach, she headed down the dimly-lit alley, lost in the shadows of the buildings that loomed over it. The air was redolent with the mixed odors rising from the dumpsters and garbage cans lining the alley, and a thin trickle of scummy water ran down the drainage 'dip' in the center of the alley. The sound of her own soft-soled sandals on the cracked pavement sounded impossibly loud to her, and the feel of her body as it moved seemed oddly foreign to her, though the hip-swaying, breast-bouncing stride must have been one she'd used almost all her adult life.

Despite the fact that the morning was fairly chilly - enough so that her nipples remained almost painfully (and pleasantly) engorged - she was sweating from her fear, confusion and anxiety. The welcome 'emotional numbness' had deserted her, and there was a metallic taste of fear in her mouth as she padded towards the square of light that marked the end of the alleyway...

"Hey, bitch - this is my turf."

The slightly husky female voice coming out of nowhere scared her half to death, and she jumped and whirled...

...and the weight of her huge bust pulled her off balance, and she began to stumble.

Even as she lost her balance and fell forward, she saw who had spoken. In the dimmer recess of a doorway, a black woman leaned. Her clothing and excessive amounts of make-up proclaimed her 'profession' loudly. The amnesiac woman had a good chance to see this - because her staggering topple was in the direction of the scantily - and cheaply-clad whore, who was trying to recoil back from the 'crazy white bitch' who was 'lunging' at her...

...but the doorway left no space to avoid her, and the two women slammed together.

They screamed in unison. Their bodies jerked and trembled as the sweat sheathing the Caucasian woman's body served as a 'connection' between them... and allowed millions of now-much-evolved twelfth-generation nanites to swarm between their bodies.

However, the nanites didn't realize they were functioning in two different 'environments' now, and were struggling to make sense of the sudden 'doubling' of DNA and mental emanations - and doing so, bridged the gap between the two women, connecting their incompatible nerve-impulses willy-nilly, which caused the 'electrocuted' reaction, leaving the women collapsed, intertwined, on the stoop of the doorway, the nanites swarming through both their bodies as they stared, conscious but immobile, at whatever spot their immobile eyes happened to be focused on.

The nanites running through both of their bodies, bridging their nerves to create a single-yet-split network, were badly overmatched. During the night, the original, broad-based nanites had 'died', their tiny 'bodied' breaking down - and the ones that had replaced them had been more specifically suited to the body they'd inhabited. Each succeeding generation had been further type-specific to their environment, and the difference between the two women was too great for them to bridge.

So, instead, the nanites dealt with what they could, slowly self-destructing one by one as they did so, so intent on their impossible task that they didn't have the time or materials to replicate themselves as they 'wore out'.

Finally, the ones 'stuck' in the body of the prostitute wore themselves out, being more heavily overworked in the strange environment - and the 'connection' between the two women was broken...

...but not before there'd been a rather substantial effect.

The dark-skinned individual who had, moments before, been a 37-year-old hooker named Dixie DeLite shook herself and looked around in confusion.

"Wha... what's happening...?" She asked, fearfully, eyes wide. "Why.. why am I...?"

Quickly, she extracted herself from the still-limp body of the white woman laying on the doorstep. Overwhelmed and overloaded by the stresses her body had been placed under, she'd lost consciousness, leaving her top-heavy form limp and unresponsive as the black woman shook her, demanding answers in a thin, fearful voice.

No - not black woman, but black girl.

Because she'd been regressed backwards in both body and mind, the nanites in her system driving her back to the age of 17, back to when she'd first gotten into the city. Once more, the pretty young woman was Debbie Nbraku, daughter of African immigrants, excited to be in the big city...

This time, however, there was no Duke Carlyle waiting at the bus station, narrow eyes watching for new 'talent' to 'help'... and addict to an array of drugs so they'd end up working for him as hookers. Now, there was only the seventeen year old girl, frightened and confused, with no memory of the past twenty years - and the horrors that had come with them.

Shocked - and horrified - by the clothes she was wearing, Debbie looked at the limp body of the white woman laying on the step. The body that was still warm, still alive - but not moving...

* * * * *

The pimply, shockingly-red-haired girl screwed up her narrow eyes in what was supposed to be a thoughtful gesture.

"Gee, uh... I think his name was Tommy." She said, scratching at her needle-track-marked arm with ragged fingernails. "Or maybe Johnny."

The two men in dark suits shared a long-suffering look through their dark sunglasses. "Well ?" The one on the right asked, slowly. "Who is he? Where does he live?"

The red-head shook her head. "Dunno. He's not a regular. I guess you should ask Mike - I think he came with him. Yeah, yeah - Mike brought Tommy-or-Johnny."

The two men shared another look, and the one on the left asked the obvious follow-up question. "How can we get a hold of Mike ?"

* * * * *

Body and mind were exhausted. Drained by the nanites, mind and body lay limp, unresponsive, the tiny machines now dead molecules waiting to be expelled through natural processes.

Their work was already done, however.

Memory was locked away behind the wall of amnesia, unreachable by her conscious mind, at least for now - but the brief fusion of minds between her and Debbie had created new thoughts, new skills, that spun and bounced outside that unseen mental wall. Just as she could know what Tylenol was, and how to use it, without actually remembering where or when she'd seen it before, so could her mind absorb these mismatched ideas without tying them into her untouched memories. Instead, they insinuated themselves into her brain, altering it from what it had been, forming new pathways to hold the strange mix of thoughts and skills that were settling into place...

She moaned, her eyes fluttering open.

For a long second, she merely stared at the stained and patched concrete only inches from her face, her mind trying to fit where she was into it's fractured memories. She recalled waking in the bathroom of an apartment that wasn't hers, mind devoid of any hint of her past. She recalled, hazily, leaving the bathroom to search for her clothes...

...and that was the last sharp memory that would come. She could pick out other fragments, by they stood by themselves, without any details to flesh them out. She remembered leaving the apartment in a near panic... but she couldn't remember why she was so scared. She couldn't remember where she'd gone from there, though...

...or where she was now.

Slowly, with another soft moan, she sat up...

...and, with a start, realized she was nearly naked. With a gasp, she curled her body up, looking around in confusion.

She was wearing only a gray tank-style top that strained, skin-tight, of her huge tits. Other than that, she was naked - but there was a small pile of clothes laying on the stoop beside her.

"What happened...?" She asked herself - rhetorically, because she knew the memories were gone. She had no way of connecting the time she woke up in the bathroom to here, though it couldn't have been all that long ago.

Once more, she was trying to figure things out based on any evidence around her - and the most obvious place to start was the pile of clothes laying on the ground near her.

"These must be mine..." She muttered, picking them up and sorting through them. In truth, she couldn't recall what - if anything - she'd been wearing when she'd left the apartment, but she seemed to have an idea that she'd been carrying something with her from the apartment, though what she might have been carrying was unclear. The clothes were the most obvious conclusion she could make which meant that they must be hers.

She frowned slightly as she looked them over.

"Huh... no underwear..." She muttered. "I.. I guess I don't wear underwear... or, at least, wasn't wearing any last night..."

Slowly, she began to dress in what was available, trying to deduce things from her clothing.

"Hmmm... Fishnet stockings..." She said, pulling the black, back-seamed garments up her smooth, shapely legs. Over the stockings went the skirt - a black leather skirt that was almost painfully tight, and barely long enough to cover the elasticized tops of the fishnets.

"I guess I like to dress sexy..." She concluded, knowing that the short, tight garment was really showcasing her long, sexy legs and spectacular ass. The conclusion was further supported by the shoes that were there. Black patent leather, the pumps had six-inch-high spike heels, further enhancing the curves of her legs and ass.

She'd wondered, before, if she was happy being so incredibly busty. Well, given the way the skin-tight tank-top strained over her huge tits, showing off a lot of creamy cleavage, she guessed she had her answer - she must love showing off her huge, firm tits...

It was nice to know what type of girl she was, even if she couldn't remember her past life. Even better, though, was the fact that there was a small purse spilled out on the ground next to where the clothing had been. Eagerly, she grabbed it up and looked through it...

...and felt disappointment well at the fact there was no ID in the purse. All it contained was some make-up, some cheap/flashy jewelry, and a brush.

Well, at least she wouldn't have to look like something the cat dragged in. With skills she didn't specifically remember having, she quickly applied some make-up and brushed out her hair, glad she was verifying her own assumptions about herself by the easy, familiar way she applied the bold, obviously-sexual make-up scheme without any trouble at all. Oddly, though, something was 'nagging' at her mind as she did so - as if there was a memory trying to be born as she watched herself in the small compact's mirror as she applied her eye-shadow. The think was, the memory that was very vaguely formed seemed to indicate that she'd done this many time before, but that she'd been... darker? That didn't make much sense... unless she used to have a tan, or something. Yes, that must be it. Somewhere, in her mind, was buried a memory of the time she'd had a really deep tan.

After all, what other reason could there be for thinking that the memory of applying make-up belonged to somebody with darker skin than what she saw now...?

Next, she began to put on the 'metal'-tone plastic jewelry, mostly 'silver', with some 'gold'...

...and her heart did a double-beat as she found herself holding a small, cheap necklace with those little fake-rhinestone letters that you can buy. The ones you buy to spell out a word, or your name...

...or your initials. In this case, the small, cheap-looking letters were 'DD'.

"Well, that's much too small to be my bra size." She said, with a giggle. "My tits..." She paused, then consciously corrected herself. "...my gorgeous, huge boobies, that is, must be at least HHH-cup..."

Putting on the necklace, she closed her eyes and began to mutter women's names to herself, trying them on for size.

"Dana? No...? Dora? Don't think so... Destiny? Delores? Danielle... wait - Dani?"

She paused, as something in her mind 'jiggled'. "No, not quite... something close, though... Donny?" The 'jiggle' became more pronounced, though obviously that wasn't it - which meant it must be... "Donna! My name must be Donna!"

She paused... but there was no flood of memories, no burst of revelation. Still... it was probably close, if not right on. Still, there was something else niggling at her mind, something that seemed to be part of her name...

"Di...Didi? No... Dick.. Dixon! That must be my name - Donna Dixon!"

She sighed with relief, glad to have a name to attach to herself. If it wasn't exactly right, it was something close - she could feel that sensation that there was something familiar with the sounds, even if she wasn't dead-on. Still, 'Donna' was better than nothing at all...

Feeling less confused now that she'd gleaned something about herself from her clothes and accessories, Donna rose smoothly from the stoop and began to head towards the end of the alley, just letting her body move 'naturally', without any attempt to consciously control her stride. As she'd hoped, her body used the skills she couldn't remember having, and she not only walked easily in the heels, but with a sexy, 'come-hither' stride that further verified what type of woman she was.

Well, now she also knew why she didn't wear bras or panties... Damn, it felt good! The way her hips rolled and wiggled with every step did interesting things to her, all of them pleasant. The way it made her tits bounce and sway, her swollen nipples rubbing against the straining fabric of the tank-top. The way her thighs felt, sliding silky-smooth against each other, was actually getting her very turned on, which felt great - a deep, damp warmth in her crotch that seemed to spread through her whole body as a warm tingle that intensified the way her tits felt even more.

God - she felt fantastic! No wonder why she dressed the way she did, and walked the way she did. Not only did she look sexy, she felt sexy!

"Oh, God..." She said, in a husky, happy voice, feeling her body tremble with the sheer pleasure of itself. "I must be a horny little slut. Look at how I dress, how I walk - and how much I enjoy it all. No.. No, that's not right. I'm not some mindless slut I'm just a sexy, huge-breasted woman who's not afraid of my sexuality. Yeah... yeah, that's it "

Head held high, huge tits thrust proudly forward, Donna turned the corner at the end of the alley and headed down the street.

She didn't even notice the full-size sedan that pulled up in front of the apartment behind her, disgorging two men in dark suits and sunglasses...

* * * * *

"Damn - what the hell happened here ?" the darker-haired one asked, looking around the apartment.

Following the directions of Mark, they'd had no trouble finding this Johnny's apartment - and the door had not only been unlocked, but open.

Now, they started around at a place that looked as if it had been tossed no, that wasn't right.

Nothing was damaged. It was just that everything was open, as if somebody had been searching the place without knowing what, exactly, they were looking for...

"Shit!" His partner said, drawing his attention. The lighter-haired one held up the plastic tube. "He's already taken some."

"Aw, crap " The first one said, shaking his head. "Great. Now we can't be sure what he looks like."

"Maybe he's still nearby " the brown-haired agent said, taking a small electronic device from his pocket. "If we can get within a hundred yards of him, no matter what he looks like now, this baby'll detect even 'dead' nanites in the body. It'll still be a couple of hours until everything's flushed out of his system, even if he took the damned pills almost the instant he got them. Come on - let's cruise around the neighborhood and see what we can find "

* * * * *

She was walking past a inexpensive motel when she caught sight of her 'admirer'.

He was in the parking lot, just out front of an open door to a unit, obviously getting ready to leave. About six-foot-three or so, he was deeply tanned and athletically built, without being too heavily muscled - or, rather, muscled in the stringy, lean way of a surfer, which seemed to fit the surf-boards mounted on the black Jeep YJ he was loading up. Blonde, blue-eyed, and wearing only a pair of black swim-trunks, something about him seemed to be quintessentially 'American'... which, for some reason, sent a thrill through Donna's body.

What sent even more of a thrill through her was the fact he was staring at her, slack-jawed, the quickly growing bulge in his shorts indicating his very high level of approval of what he saw.

*

Deep inside her mind, a fragment of thought struggled to become coherent. Once upon a time, there'd been a drug-addicted black whore, whose current life had been entirely based on a 'simple' premise: She needed drugs, for which she needed money, and sex earned money.

In the new woman's mind, however, the thought was short-circuited into something simpler... 'I need sex'...

Smiling, Donna turned and began to walk towards him, adding a little extra sway to her hips as she shifted to a slow, more sensually challenging strut.

"Hi there, big boy..." She said in a husky, erotic tone, staring openly at the large bulge in his shorts and licking her full, now-gloss-red lips slowly and hungrily. "See something you like?"

"Wha...?" The guys said, eyes going even wider as a faint flush began to suffuse his face. "Uh, well... Uh.. yeah..."

"So do I..." Donna said, slowly letting her eyes travel up his tanned, taut stomach and rock-hard pecs before reaching his face. For his part, his eyes were wandering up and down - but never seemed to get high enough to meet her own eyes...

...until she stepped forward and wrapped one arm around his neck, pressing her lush body hard against his, her face turned upwards.

He was too stunned by this sudden chain of events to react to the obvious 'hint' - so she pulled his face down to hers and began to kiss him, hungrily - almost desperately. Her whole body was afire with pure lust, and she couldn't think of anything but getting what she so desperately needed...

'I guess I am a slut, after all...' She thought to herself as he got the message and began to kiss her back, passionately, fondling her full, taut ass as he did so. She moaned and squirmed her body erotically against his in obvious enjoyment... because she must be enjoying it, right? 'I'm just a huge-breasted nympho slut who can't get enough... I think. Yeah... yeah, I must be. After all, look at how I dress, how big my tits are - and the way I started thinking about sex as soon as I saw him. It all fits. I must be a cum-hungry nympho... so I must love having my huge tits crushed against him, his hands on my ass. I must want to fuck him, hard and long. Yeah.. yeah, that has to be it...'

It all made sense. So, the obvious thing to do would be... Breaking the kiss, she whispered hungrily in his ear. "Fuck me. Fuck me now, stud..."

The guy paused - and Donna felt an odd burst of relief that seemed most definitely out of place. After all, she must be some sort of super-horny slut, so shouldn't she be upset that he didn't just throw her down and fuck her brains out...?

"Uh.... I, uh... I'm not looking for a..." The guy stammered, awkwardly. "That is, I don't have a lot of cash on hand, and..."

Oh - he thought maybe she was a hooker! Well, that made sense. Guys weren't use to having women almost literally throw themselves at them, especially not huge-breasted nymphos - no matter what they might boast to their buddies as they down a few brewskis. That's probably why she felt that wave of relief when he'd hesitated - she must be used to this, and would be really upset if some guy, thinking she was a hooker, just went ahead and did it. After all, being a hooker was degrading, and being treated like one would piss her off... or something.

But she wasn't a hooker, was she? No...

"Stud, I'm no whore..." She said, grinding her body against his. "I'm just a cum-hungry little nympho who needs to be fucked by a well-hung stud like you "

"Oh." He said, numbly - then, with a sudden grin, repeated it with much more feeling. "Ohhhhh !"

Grinning, he headed for the open door of the motel room, with her 'following' by keeping herself pressed firmly against his body, licking and nibbling at his ear as she whispered all the things that she wanted to do to him. Well, that she guessed she wanted to do to him. After all, she couldn't remember having done this before, though she must have, and all the sexual acts she was whispering in his ear seemed to fit the type of woman she must be.

Entering the room, Donna pushed the door shut with one high-heeled shoe, and let herself be pulled 'eagerly' toward the bed. She was only peripherally aware of the sound of rushing water somewhere close by - she was too intent on the pure lust that was thrumming through her body. After all, this was the type of life she must have lived before her amnesia, right? All the facts fit. So she was just picking up where she left off, getting back 'into the groove', as it were.

Hmm... what would she have said at this point, back before her amnesia? Probably...

"Oh, baby - I want you to play with my tits " She moaned, pulling away from him long enough to peel off her tank-top, setting her massive globes of firm, ripe tit-flesh free. Her huge, thick nipples were as hard as diamond, begging for attention...

...and they got all the attention they could want as the guy sat on the edge of the bed and she straddled him, allowing him to fondle one massive tit in each hand as he licked and sucked and nibbled at her nipples.

She arched her back and moaned - and not just because it was what a slut like her was 'supposed' to do. Now she was sure she was a nympho - because it all felt so fantastic, her body humming with desire, her cunt hot and wet, and her tits being fondled and sucked with eager - if not expert - enthusiasm. God, it felt fantastic! No wonder why she was a pure nympho - this type of pleasure was addictive. How wonderful it was to be a woman with huge, sensitive tits that could provide so much pleasure!

It was even better that she had amnesia. Though she must have done this hundreds - thousands? - of times before, it was all new and wonderful to her, feeling both fantastic and exciting, where she was sure she had been almost blasé about it before. After all, she was in her mid-twenties, and must have been a slut for at least a good six or seven years. Now, however, it was all fresh and new and exciting and oh-so-wonderful!

She had been thinking that, as a nympho slut, maybe she should get a tit-fuck from him, or even give him a blow-job... but, while she was sure she must enjoy those, she was so horny and eager that she wanted to get her 'first ever' fucking. Sure, it must be something she did all the time, but with her amnesia it would be new to her - and she knew it would feel great, even though she couldn't remember having done it. After all, wasn't sex something that felt fantastic...?

There was one sure way to find out.

"Fuck me!" She ordered, hungrily. "Fuck me now!"

It was an order the guy had no trouble following. She pulled herself away from him and peeled off her skirt as he hurriedly stripped out of his shorts, revealing a cock that was hard and throbbing, ready to service her... and she was obviously just as ready, her tight little cunt hot and wet.

Excited, aroused, enflamed with anticipatory desire, Donna all-but-threw herself onto the rumpled surface of the bed, smiling eagerly at the unnamed stud about to fulfill her recently-'recognized' sexual addiction.

"I need to be fucked...!" She moaned, as she was sure she must do often. "Fuck me, baby - make me cum...!"

"Yeah.." He said, his body trembling with eagerness as he climbed on the bed and positioned himself over her. "Anything you want, gorgeous..."

* * *

Steve couldn't believe he was doing this. Here he was, about to slide his cock into the hot, ripe cunt of this complete stranger who'd just walked up to him, off the street...

What the hell was he doing! For God's sake, his fiancée Lisa was just in the bathroom, getting a shower before continuing on their trek down to California! Hell, he loved Lisa... and yet he was about to cheat on her, when she could come out any second!

But... he couldn't help himself. Which was weird, because not only did he love Lisa... but he didn't even like big-titted girls. Especially ones with tits this big. When he'd first seen this dark-haired woman, he'd stared at her, thinking she looked like a freak with tits that big...

...until it hit him. Suddenly, he'd been more utterly horny then ever before in his life... and when she'd gotten closer, it had gotten worse. Now he couldn't help himself. He had to fuck her - well, he had to fuck. Somebody. Anybody. Even a girl with freakishly huge tits. He didn't care.

Of course, Steve had no way of knowing that he was reacting to the incredibly powerful 'pheromones' she was generating. She was eerie, from her silky, perfectly hairless skin to her gorgeous, flawless, and perfectly symmetrical face. She was, literally, a wet-dream come to life, with none of the tiny imperfections a real person had - and there was no way anybody could no that this 'dream woman' had nerves that were more hyper-sensitive to pleasure then any 'real' person, and that she was generating a chemical 'smell' that caused extreme lust in anybody hit by it.

All Steve knew was that, right or wrong, he desperately needed to cum, and she was literally begging him to fuck her...

* * * * *

Donna screamed in pure pleasure as the guy thrust forward, impaling her on his hard, throbbing cock.

It was like nothings he could remember feeling before. The pleasure was intense, more so then she could have ever imagined.

Then he began to rhythmically fuck her, thrusting hard and fast in near-desperate strokes - and that unbelievable pleasure, impossibly, increased.

She began to thrash on the bed, screaming out incoherent shout of ecstasy as the incredible pleasure thundered through her body. She had no way of knowing that her body was feeling roughly three times the amount of pleasure that a normal woman would feel - all she knew was that mind-blowing erotic ecstasy was thundering through her body, shutting away thought and reality as she became lost in the pure, orgasmic pleasure that was running, unchecked, through her body as she writhed on the bed. Her huge tits rippled and bounced as her body shook with the force of the guy's desperate thrusts, and she squeezed her eyes shut and screamed endlessly, unaware of the almost animal-like look on his face as he desperately fucked her. He was feeling pleasure from the act of sex, but it was buried under another feeling - a painful need to orgasm, to end the literally agonizing level of sexual need he'd felt as soon as his cock had entered her cunt, the warm, wet juices of her womanhood awash with chemicals that were affecting him, making him little more then a living dildo to fuck her, desperate for release. He pumped into her with hard, frantic strokes, something that would have been painful for most women - but her nerves, hyper-sensitive to pleasure, were much less responsive to pain, and she was only aware of the heavy nature of his thrust by the way he filled and stretched her cunt, causing intense pleasure to rip through her wet-dream body...

Then she came. It was almost literally mind-blowing, the sheer amount of pleasure running through her causing her to scream out loud enough to hurt her throat as the wash of orgasmic pleasure took her over the edge...

...and [plunged her into unconsciousness. She blacked out, completely unaware as Steve gasped and came, pumping his load of hot, sticky cum into her cunt...]

...and almost instantly losing the mindless, painful desire he'd just felt. Horrified, he pulled himself out of the strange woman's cunt, horrified by what he'd just done...

..and turned around to find Lisa standing in the doorway of the bathroom, dripping wet and naked, fondling her firm, D-cup tits with one hand and frantically masturbating with the other.

"Lisa...!" Steve said, shaken. "Look, I... I didn't know why..."

His fiancée licked her lips, hungrily. "Fuck me, Steve.... Fuck me now, fuck me hard..."

"Wha... what?" Steve stammered, stunned. Of all the reactions he'd expected if his fiancée caught him fucking another woman, this wasn't one of them. Of course, he had no way of knowing that Lisa was in the grip of the pheromones that swamped the room, driving her to higher realms of arousal than any she'd ever felt before.

"I need to be fucked hard, Steve...!" Lisa gasped. "Fuck me!"

"I... I can't... I mean, I.. I..." Steve stammered, shocked and dismayed - and embarrassed, his cock, so painfully hard just seconds ago, now sated - limp, and soft, despite the fact his fiancée was literally begging for him to satisfy her needs.

"Then I'll find someone who can..." She said, hand still frantically rubbing her crotch. Frantically, she grabbed the nearest clothing and began to pull it on - the stuff the woman laying unconscious on the bed had been wearing. Lisa didn't care - she didn't even consciously register the fact that it wasn't her clothes. All she could think about was getting something on so she could go find somebody - male or female - to get her off.

"Honey - what are you...?" Steve started to ask.

"I need to be fucked, you thick-headed asshole!" She screamed, not caring that she loved Steve - because, right now, all she cared about was getting fucked, and he couldn't satisfy her. She grabbed her purse and headed for the door...

"Darling! Wait!" Steve shouted. Awkwardly, he pulled on his shorts and ran after his fiancée as she disappeared out the door, which swung shut behind them...

A moment after they'd left, the huge-breasted figure on the bed moaned low and long, a sound of sated pleasure, and slowly opened her eyes and sat up...

"What...?" Donna asked, looking around the motel room in confusion. "How the hell did I ?"

She frowned, slightly, her new-formed memories confused and muddled. Once again, she'd 'blacked out', leaving her memories in disarray. There was something actually 'damaged' in her brain, and any time she was unconscious - for any reason, even simple sleep - her memories would become confused, vague, muddled...

She remembered waking up in a bathroom and not knowing who she was then the next somewhat- clear memory was of her putting on some clothing... and then...

She'd had sex. She couldn't remember with who, or any clear details except that it had felt fantastic.

Slowly, she climbed out of bed and looked around. She remembered 'remembering' her name - Donna Dixon - and she remembered that she had amnesia and that she apparently enjoyed sex. She couldn't really remember much else, though...

"Hmmm... I guess this is my hotel room " She said, looking around hesitantly. After all, she was here, and nobody else was.

Hesitantly, she began to look around.

There were a couple of suitcases, packed with women's clothes, verifying that this was, indeed, her room. (She had no way of knowing that Steve's stuff was already in his jeep.)

Which meant that she must have been in the bathroom here when she'd first awoken, not remembering anything. Yeah - that made sense.

Well, she still didn't remember much, but at least she knew some things about herself.

Grabbing some clothes out of the suitcase, Donna quickly dressed in what 'felt' like the sort of clothes she'd wear. Though she couldn't remember where or when, she had a strong feeling that she'd worn sexy clothes that showed off her body, so it was an easy choice to pull on a pair of cut-off jean shorts and an electric-blue spandex crop-top. She seemed to recall loving having her tits admired, and the top made that seem likely indeed - the fabric, stretchy as it was, didn't come close to encompassing her huge, wonderful tits. Indeed, they left not only a lot of cleavage showing, but also quite a bit of the sides and bottoms of her huge, sexy tits on display. The top was, barely, legal, but didn't cover much more than a string bikini would have - and the small, tight shorts clung to her ass and hips like a second skin, showing off her great ass and long, sexy legs.

Humming happily to herself, Donna stepping into a pair of white platform pumps with a nine-inch heel and closed the lid of the suitcase, snapping the clasps closed. Slinging her purse over her shoulder and picking up her bags, she sway sensuously towards the door of the hotel...

* * * * *

"Boss?" The darker-haired one said into the cell-phone. "We found, uh... 'him'. Yeah, he was only a couple of blocks from here... and would you believe he turned himself into a woman? Yeah - and he doesn't even remember being a guy. 'She' is confused as hell, doesn't know what the hell was going on. We got her in a hypnotic trance."

He listened for a few minutes, then nodded at the other agent. "Yeah, we'll do that."

Hanging up, he grinned. "The boss says to change him back... but if we want to have a little 'fun' while we're at it, to make up for the pain-in-the-ass factor, we should feel free."

The other agent grinned back. "Okay. You prepare the nanite injection, and I'll 'prep' her to go back to being this 'Johnny Phoung' asshole... or a reasonable hand-drawn facsimile thereof..."

* * * * *

ONE MONTH LATER

With a snarled curse, Johnny flung at the porno mag aside and slumped back on the futon, staring down at his crotch in frustration.

"It's just not fair!" He said, angrily, slender Oriental hand lightly gripping the shaft of his limp, useless cock.

It wasn't fair, either. God knows, he should have been proud of his cock - it was, after all, damned huge. Even limp, it was massive...

...but 'limp' was no good, and he hadn't been able to get it up in... well, at least in a month. He was sure he must have been able to get hard, sometime in his life, but ever since he'd waken up with a throbbing headache and a confused, distorted memory, nothing had seemed to go right. He guessed he must have been on a hell of a bender the night before - and maybe he got a hold of some bad booze. That was the best he could figure, since he knew wood alcohol was supposed to cause brain damage, and good knows his memory was pretty crewed up. He recognized his apartment, and he knew where who he was, and he even recognized what he'd written in the journal he'd found laying on his chest when he'd awoken - as if he'd just re-read the damned thing, in fact. But everything else was hazy.

Apparently, that bad booze had also done something else to him. He still got horny... but he just couldn't get his monster cock to rise. It was useless. In the past month, he'd tried everything he could to get hard... and it just didn't work.

Frustrated, Johnny got up and tied the bathrobe he was wearing closed, not wanting to look at his magnificent, useless cock anymore. He headed toward the kitchen for a drink...

...where there was a hesitant knock on the door.

Changing direction, Johnny walked over to the door and pulled it open...

...and stared at the woman standing on the other side. Almost instinctively, his eyes dropped and began to survey the woman who stood before him, trying to verify that she wasn't a hallucination.

Black platform shoes with eight-inch spike heels encasing shapely, dainty feet. Long, unrealistically flawless legs that seemed never to have a single hair on them, clad in black nylons that only emphasized her already spectacular contours.

A tiny, skin-tight black leather skirt that hugged a full, spectacular ass, and sported a white leather belt that clung to a deliciously slender waist.

Her firm, flat stomach was bare, and above that was her tits. Her huge, firm, incredibly round tits, like a pair of spectacular, flesh-colored basketballs crammed into a black spandex crop-top, her huge nipples clearly visible in the way the pushed out the taut fabric.

A face that was impossibly perfect, with full lips, snub nose and dark, seductive eyes, all framed by long, thick black hair...

She was incredible, a wet-dream brought to life, her face and figure incredibly flawless in every way. She was...

She was arousing.

Literally. Stunned, Johnny felt his cock twitch... and begin to harden. So stunned was he, that her voice barely registered as she spoke...

"Uh, hi. I, uh.. I'm Donna - Donna Dixon, and, uh... I know that this is gonna sound weird, but... Do I know you?" She asked, looking at him... and her voice becoming husky as her eyes fixed on where his slowly rising cock was making itself visible, pushing aside the folds of his bathrobe as it went hard.

"I.. uh..." She said, obviously distracted by his swelling member, unconsciously licking her full, sensuous lips. "I, uh, woke up and had a brief memory of your name - Johnny - but I can't remember when or where I heard it..."

Shaking her self, slightly, she managed to become coherent enough to explain "I've got amnesia..." before her eyes went glassy again and she stared at his now hard, fifteen-inch long cock. "I, uh..."

God, that's big.... I.. Oh, umm "

Amnesia. She didn't know where she knew him. This wet-dream - who could get him hard! - wasn't sure how she knew him... and, honestly, he couldn't recall her...

...but his memory was spotty, too. Maybe they'd met that night, and both had the same bad booze... and maybe the reason why he couldn't get hard anymore was because, subconsciously, he remembered her, and no woman after her could measure up...

...or maybe she was screwed up, and they'd never met before. He didn't know - and didn't care. She was getting him hard - and she wouldn't know that he was lying his ass off...

"Dixie!" He said, feigning relief. "Where the hell have you been for the last month? I've been worried sick!"

"Dixie? No - Donna. Donna Dixon " She said, frowning slightly.

Dixie? Why the hell had that name jumped into his mind, like he recognized it or something? Oh, well, he'd said it - and now he had to cover his tracks.

"Honey, don't you remember?" He asked. "That's my pet name for you " Looking at the way she was staring, in dazed hunger, at his cock, he took a chance. " because you just love dick so much. Dixie the Dick-slut. Remember?"

"Huh? Oh.. yeah.. makes sense " She mumbled, unable to stop staring at his monster cock. She was practically drooling, and didn't even seem aware of what she was doing as she stepped inside and closed the door behind her. "So... you do know me ?"

"Dixie, honey - I'm your boyfriend !" Johnny said, struggling to keep his lies straight through the arousal thrumming through his body. "Don't you remember all the times we've fucked long and hard.

All the times you sucked my cock? Don't you remember how perfect we were together, the only people who could satisfy each other...?"

"Oh... yeah..."he mumbled, obviously not really hearing him, her nipples now fully engorged as she stared, hypnotized at his monster cock. She was willing to agree to anything he said, as long as...

"So... So I guess it would be okay to, you know, just suck you off... like old times..." She said, slowly slinking to her knees.

"Yeah.. sure..." Johnny said, huskily.

*

Her boyfriend? Then why didn't she remember more about him...?

It didn't matter. Not right now. She'd just agree with anything he said, so she could get her hands on that huge, thick cock of his....

She did just that, wrapping her long-nailed fingers around the thick girth of his massive, throbbing organ and leaning forward to envelope it with her warm, eager lips, moaning low in her throat with satisfaction at the way the massive, nearly-purple head of his golden rod filled her mouth the way she'd always wanted it to be filled. Her memory was screwed up, but she could recall that she'd never been able to find a cock big enough to fill her mouth completely - until now...

She began to lick the head of his massive organ, bobbing up and down as her hands worked the massive shaft, reveling in the pleasure the friction of his cock against her super-sensitive lips brought. It was fantastic, better than any other blow-job she could remember giving. God, it was wonderful to be sucking on a cock this big and hard. She almost wished that he really was her boyfriend...

...except, of course, that it wouldn't matter. Though her memory was screwed up, she could remember her constant frustration. Somehow, she did something to me. The first time around, they were almost painfully eager to have sex with her and then, afterwards, they were unable to do it again. She, quite literally, drained them. Exhausted them. The guy just had no interest at all in sex, unable to get it up for at least six or seven hours after she'd drained them. Some had tried to explain to her how she was somehow more.. more purely arousing than any woman they'd ever met, how they face longer and harder for her than ever before but all she knew was that once she'd made a guy cum, he was useless for hours afterwards. What good was that ? She wasted most of her time looking for the next guy to fuck or suck...

Speaking of which - this blow-job was lasting longer than usual. Usually, guys came hard and fast around her.. but this one was going on and on, and, Oh God!, didn't it feel wonderful Damn, but this was fantastic! His huge, delicious cock filling her mouth, giving her great pleasure....

Still he didn't cum! Oh, God - this was wonderful! She loved blow-jobs, but they were usually over much too fast... but this one was just going on and on !

"God, Dixie... that feels " Johnny gasped, unable to finish the sentence as she continued sucking him off with expert enthusiasm.

That name - Dixie. He said it was a nick-name for her which might be true, given her last name, and her hunger for cock... It even sounded slightly familiar to her somehow.

Could he be telling the truth? Were they boyfriend and girlfriend?

No... Probably not... Kind of a shame, though God, this blow-job was great!

It couldn't last for ever, though, no matter how much she wanted it to. Finally, he stiffened, and began to pump wonderful, delicious cum into her mouth. She gulped at the tasty goo, trying to get it all - and succeeding. After all, she had plenty of experience with guys pumping enormous amounts of wonderful, delicious cum into her mouth, and she'd figured out how to keep from wasting any of it.

Finally, he sighed as his cum stopped flowing, and she licked her lips regretfully, sorry that it was over. The blow-job had lasted longer than any she could remember, and his cum was extraordinarily tasty...

She licked his cock clean, getting the last of the wonderful flavor, then slowly rose with a sigh, knowing that now he was completely satiated, and she'd be off to find her next fuck...

"God, I'm just more horny then ever, Dixie..." Johnny said, wondering why the hell that name sounded so damned familiar to him. Could it be that he wasn't lying, that he really did recognize her by a pet name he'd given here...?

All he knew was that she was still turning him on. "Come on, baby, let Daddy at those tits of yours until I'm ready for round two!"

She stared at him, wide-eyed. "You... you're still horny?"

"Around you, babe? Always...!" He said, reaching out to begin fondling her huge, firm tits through the spandex. She stared at him - then glanced down at his cock...

...which had slumped to 'half mast', but was already beginning to harden again...

"The only ones who can satisfy each other...?" She repeated, smiling. Ripping off her crop-top, she pushed him back towards the futon, while he continued fondling her huge, now-bare bust. "Johnny, baby! I'm home!"

"Damn straight, Dixie darlin'..." Johnny replied, huskily, reaching out to undo the belt on her skirt...

The fact that neither actually remembered knowing each other no longer mattered. For each of them, they'd finally found what they wanted, and if they thought the other one was just a little, uh... 'dishonest', neither one cared in the least.

With twin cries of pure pleasure, the Huge-breasted woman (who had once been an slender oriental guy) impaled herself on the monster cock of the slender oriental guy (who'd once been a black whore), her usually-draining pheromones just enough to affect his purposefully-depleted hormone system to allow him what they both desperately wanted...

..a long, hard fuck, with the promise of many, many more to come...

* * * * *

Meanwhile, somewhere across town...

Snake leaned back, a silly grin on his face as he watched a trio of Baywatch babes go bouncing across the screen of the TV he'd gotten at a very good 'discount'... out of the back door of an Electronics shop, late one night.

This stuff was pretty damned good. He was glad he hadn't sold it all to the stupid Jap kid, no matter what he'd told the Feds. After all, the kid would have taken some of it by the time they'd caught up with him, and how were they to know how many he'd had? They'd never know any was missing. At least, that's what he'd hoped would happen, and the fact that they'd never come back had finally convinced him he was safe, and so he'd downed the four pills he'd kept 'in reserve'.

Chuckling to himself, Snake idly scratched at his thick, messy beard, wondering why he felt so damned hot and itchy. Of course, feeling as good as he did, it didn't really bug him that much... all he had to do was get undressed...

Laying there, naked, his huge bear-belly looking like the plaid underbelly of a beached whale, Snake let his eyes drift closed as he rode the great high the pills provided, and began to fantasize....

THE END ?

BACK TO FUN ZONE

SUMMARY: When her husband is hurt in an accident, it is up to Marianne to assist the professor in a mind-to-mind information transfer, complete with remembered sensations and expectations, but to release the transfer, she must make him have an orgasm among other things....

...After Death

By Gunslinger

Darkness.

Not just the lack of visible light - but the complete lack of any sensory input whatsoever. No sound, no sight. No taste, touch or smell. Not even the unnoticed but ever-present beating of his own heart.

Nothing but pure thought. The sense of self that mad him who he was. Aside from his own consciousness, everything was void...

...until...

<Professor Weinstein? Can you hear me?>

It wasn't a voice. What Richard 'heard' wasn't produced by vibrations through the air registering on the inner ear. It was, nevertheless, communication. Of a feminine nature, if he wasn't mistaken.

Even without sound, that sense of feminine tone and thought made the transition.

{I wouldn't say that I 'hear' you, dear girl.} Weinstein thought back, humor edging the oddly pure form of communication. {But I can understand your communication.} He paused. {Am I dead?}

For what, subjectively, seemed to be several long seconds, there was no response, then...

<Yes and no.>

{A very metaphysical answer, my dear.}

Weinstein could sense the embarrassment in the answer. <I'm sorry - I don't mean to be vague. It's merely that the situation is quite complicated.>

Weinstein seemed to lack any physical existence at all, much less the facial muscles required to smile. Yet, in his own 'mental image' of himself, that is exactly what he did. {Everything in the universe is complicated, young lady. Sometimes the most simple things can be the most complicated of all. It is not 'understanding it completely' that makes the task worth the effort - it is what one learns along the way.}

There was another brief pause. <Maybe you're right. Brace yourself, Professor - this might be a bit of a shock...>

Then there was a strange sensation - almost if he were moving forward at a tremendous rate...

Then sensation flooded dormant segments of his brain. The sense of body, smell and touch. The feel of something supporting him as he sat, the faint smell of disinfectant. The sound of someone standing silently nearby. The sensations were subtly wrong, not what his mind was used to, but identifiable and understandable.

So, Richard opened his eyes.

He was sitting in a laboratory of some sort. Even though he didn't recognize all of the equipment, he recognized the 'feel' of the room.

As he did the man sharing it with him. Richard instantly recognized Peter Kemp, his head assistant. Peter was tall and slender, with a shock of dark hair just starting to gray. He appeared to be about forty-five or so...

...which was somewhat surprising, as Richard's memory of 'yesterday' was of a Peter Kemp who was a decade younger.

"Professor is that you?" Peter asked hesitantly.

"I should certainly..." The professor began to answer, good naturedly - then stopped, blinking in surprise. The voice that the answer came out in was tinged with his familiar Germanic accent...

...but was otherwise completely unlike his own. It was a clear, sweet contralto, one that was indisputably female. The professor lowered his eyes, looking down at himself. Or, perhaps more accurately, herself. For what he saw was an undeniably female body. The arms resting on the arms of the chair were slender and smooth, as were the shapely, nylon-encased legs protruding from the skirt that didn't quite reach her knees. And Richard could make a fairly accurate guess as to what was stretching out the front of the blouse that she wore.

"Oh, my..." Richard exclaimed mildly. "This is a bit unexpected "

* * * * *

' given the current trend in technological development, there is no reason why amnesia should not become a thing of the past.

As we have already demonstrated, using myself as a subject, it is possible to record the pattern of synaptic firings in the human brain. The fact that we can not actually decipher these patterns, to discover what they mean, is irrelevant - simply being able to record them is enough. We can record a few hours worth of encephalographic readings at a time, at an approximately monthly interval.

When we have reached a technological level high enough that we can build a computer capable of storing, and compiling, all these recordings, the next step would be obvious - by playing these recordings back into the brain of the amnesiac patient, we could reconstruct his or her original thought patterns and memories...

Preface to 'Amnesia Treatment through Encephalographic Reconstruction', by Professor Richard Weinstein and Dr. Peter Kemp, New England Journal of Medicine, September 1991

* * * * *

"Peter? Can I assume that what I believe has happened has, in fact, occurred?" Richard asked, looking up from the large obstructions protruding from her ribcage. Her tone held mild reproof. "If so, I was, perhaps quite literally 'better off dead', I believe is the vernacular."

Kemp smiled wryly. "Yeah - that's you, Prof." The slender man sighed, frowning slightly. "As for what's happened - Yes, you... passed away two years ago. But, I - we - need you for... to well, because "

Richard shifted slightly, somewhat intrigued by the subtly different sensation even such a simple action produced. "Ah. Another 'Complicated situation'?" Richard cocked her new head, somewhat startled by the brush of long, silky hair over the smooth flesh at the nape of her new neck. "Perhaps a simpler question, then. May I inquire as to the identity of my host?"

"You remember, my daughter - Marianne?"

<It's me, professor - Marianne.>

The two answers came simultaneously - one external, the other internal. But although the information conveyed was basically the same, the tone it was delivered in was completely different. Marianne's was simply explanatory - Peter's was spoken tightly, almost sorrowfully, as if speaking about...

...a departed loved one?

Instantly, Richard understood. Peter had been an able assistant - as a technician. But the actual principle had been a little beyond him, and he obviously misunderstood the mechanics of it - which made Richard understand the importance of the situation. If Peter was willing to sacrifice his own daughter...

Well, at least Richard could provide some good news. "Peter - dear boy! Marianne's not..." He reconsidered his wording. "Peter - listen to me. Marianne is fine. She's still right here..." She tapped her head " where she belongs. In fact, I just spoke with her."

Peter suddenly stiffened. "What?"

Richard shrugged Marianne's slender shoulders. "Peter - all you have done is lay down a recording of my mental patterns. You have basically caused your daughter to develop schizophrenia - split personalities. The new one being myself, but the original - hers - still completely intact."

Peter looked like he was about to burst into grateful tears. "She's she's all right?"

<Tell him ask him if he got the stain out from the wine the waiter spilled on him last night.>

"Peter - Marianne suggest I ask if you got the wine stain from last night out of you clothes." Richard said, gently.

Peter closed his eyes in silent prayer. "Tell her - I love her, and I'm sorry."

Richard awkwardly rose to her long, shapely new legs, feeling unbalanced in the new body, and awkwardly patted Peter on the shoulder. "She knows, Peter. She hears and sees - and feels - everything I do."

After a minute, when Peter had regained his composure, Richard leaned forward. "Now - why, exactly, was I reincarnated?"

Peter squared his shoulders and took a deep breath, obviously getting his mind on track again. "Professor - Marianne was willing to do this, as was I, because it is very important, to both of us.

There has been an accident. Marianne's husband - my son-in-law - was in an auto accident, and suffered some neurological damage. He's in a coma." Peter sighed. "As much as Marianne loves him, and I respect him, that, in itself, would not be worth what we're doing. But what is important enough is the fact that Grant was - is - the only person who knows the coding instructions to get into the main computer. There is some very, very important information that we need to retrieve from the system - it's a matter of life or death for hundreds of people. We have less than two days to get that coding information. You were the greatest microphysicist the world has ever seen, Professor - if anyone can pull Grant out of it, it's you."

Richard shrugged - feeling the strange sensation of the large breasts shifting. "I'm touched by your confidence in me, Peter. Of course, I will do everything I can, but I can make no guarantees."

"Of course - I understand." Peter agreed.

"Good. Then shall we see to my patient?" Richard said.

<Actually...> Marianne's voice was hesitant, embarrassed. <...there's something else I think we'd better do, first...>

* * * * *

{It's not only a rudimentary body function, my dear, but a necessary one...}

<I know...> Marianne admitted, embarrassed, as Richard used her hands to pull the zipper of her skirt back into place. <Still...>

{'Knowing' and 'feeling' are two different things...} Richard supplied, understanding completely. After all, relatively few women were comfortable with the thought of being 'watched' while doing their toilet, and Richard's peculiar type of 'voyeurism' was a lot more... intimate than most.

Also unavoidable, however. To tell the truth, Richard was only upset by the situation to the extent that it imposed on Marianne, not for his own sake - Richard's motivating force throughout his whole life had been the search for knowledge, and as far as he was concerned, he had died and gone to a strange sort of heaven, one where he was able to see life from a viewpoint he'd otherwise never have been able to experience - and thus, she was gaining information that he would never have been able to gain.

Richard Weinstein, however, was also a true gentleman - and a gentle man, no less - and he wouldn't ever let Marianne know that he was actually enjoying this for his own sake, not unless she made a similar admission first.

If she asked, without having made such an admission, he wouldn't lie of course - but, then again, there were many, many ways to tell the literal truth... with a few strategic omissions.

Since it was the male mind, 'written' in place 'over' the original personality, that controlled the body, Richard was receiving plenty of prompting from Marianne on how to be female - sort of crash-course in femininity, taught in the most effective method possible - direct mind-to-mind information transfer, complete with remembered sensations and expectations, allowing for a much faster learning curve than Richard had ever even conceived of - and, as bright as he was as a scientist, he'd be the first to admit that he'd completely missed the educational possibilities of his own research.

Well, he was getting a rapid education, now - in fact, perhaps too rapid, since his emotional state was having trouble keeping up with reality sometimes, an flaw inherent in the human stream-of- consciousness, which liked nice, easy transitions from one situation to another - something Richard found delightfully ironic in an universe full of surprises...

...like the way Peter's 'little girl' had turned out. As Richard used Marianne's body to flush the toilet and step out of the stall, he couldn't help but glance at the long mirror hung over the sinks, taking in the form that clothed his consciousness.

When he'd last seen Marianne, she'd been an awkward seventeen-year-old, coltish and tomboyish. In the eleven years since then, she'd bloomed into a ravishing example of womanhood, her coltish appearance softening into a slender, svelte body with trim hips and firm, smoothly-contoured muscles. Her once-lank hair, a brown that she'd despaired off because of it was so 'boring', was now a silky chestnut mane falling past slender shoulders, framing a face that wasn't fashion-model beautiful, but rather a sort of healthy, all-American 'lovely', from her intelligent hazel eyes to her expressive lips...

Richard, looking in the mirror, finally clued in.

{My dear - you're not wearing any make-up.} He commented, gently. {Not that I'm suggesting that you need any, of course - but it's been my experience that young ladies like yourself customarily wear some sort of makeup in a work environment such as this. Of course, it could simply be that my experiences are 'out of date', since I've been... well, dead.}

The admission could have been awkward - except that his mental 'voice' was ripe with humor at the situation, and Marianne took it as intended.

<Actually, it's sort of 'optional' these days - but you're right, I usually do wear something. I just thought that.. well, you being a man and all...>

{My dear, I'm simply a guest} Richard pointed out, kindly. {Though I thank you for the consideration, it isn't necessary - I, in a male body, wouldn't dress or act like a woman. Likewise, now that I'm in a female body.. well, 'When in Rome...', if you take my meaning. Please, by all means, let me know what it is that you would customarily do in any given situation - excepting, of course, the situations where my particular skills are needed, which I assume will be confined to the care and treatment of you husbands, after which I expect I'll be...} He paused, her face showing a grin. {I'm sorry - I'm not sure whether the correct term would be 'evicted' or 'exorcised'...}

He was somewhat bemused to find that, mental emanation or not, Marianne's 'communication' could still be a laugh - or, at least, the memory of one, replayed by instinct.

<Okay, Professor, then brace yourself - because you're about to get made-up...>

It wasn't possible for Richard to release control of their shred body to Marianne, since his was the 'top layer' of their strange little split personality - but he could listen to her instruction, then pass the information on, making her hands respond the way they'd done many, many times before - and, in that manner, learned how to apply make-up, at least to the extent that Marianne knew how to do so, given what make-up she wanted at that moment.

It was a simple enough make-up scheme - a light coating of pastel pink lipstick, a hint of blush on the smooth skin of her cheeks, a touch of coral pink eye-shadow, and mascara. Richard wondered if Marianne had any idea how... interesting he found all of this, seeing how to apply a make-up from the female point of view - and being able to see the before-during-and after steps of the process in exquisite detail, no less.

<Thanks, Professor...> Marianne said. <To be honest, I felt sort of naked without make-up on...>

{Oh, quite all right, my dear...} Richard said, with the mental equivalent of a chuckle. {...and, given the circumstances, I suppose it would be quite all right for you to call me 'Richard'.}

That earned a chuckle from her side of the mind, as well. <Okay, Richard. Now... I believe there's an OR full of people waiting for us - or, rather, on you.>

{Us.} He corrected, gently but firmly. {Without you, I would not be here to perform this for you - and I mean that in more than the physical sense, my dear. I know how much you've had to sacrifice for me to be here, even for the short while necessary to complete my task - and I appreciate it.}

Her 'voice' remained silent - but he could feel her emotional response, embarrassed and proud, all at the same time.

{Well - I suppose we should get going...} He said, and set their shared body in motion., using her knowledge to let them walk with nearly the same grace that she was used to atop their short, practical heels, her trim hips moving with pleasant sway that was the sole province of femininity as 'Marianne' headed down towards the OR.

* * * * *

"Grant...?" Richard said, gently, in Marianne's sweet contralto. "Grant... Can you hear me...?"

Knowing that it was what his host wanted, Richard reached out and gently took Marianne's husband's hand in hers, her hazel eyes fixed on the handsome young man's immobile face, their shared heart pounding as they waited to see whether the hours of delicate surgery had achieved the desired result.

On the other side of the hospital bed, Peter hovered anxiously over the immobile form of his son-in-law, concern for the younger man's welfare amplified by the concerns over the computer codes he so desperately needed.

The figure on the bed stirred, and the two people - three consciousnesses, actually - waited with bated breath...

...until the sandy-haired man's dark eyes fluttered open, and he looked at his wife's body with a quizzical expression.

"Honey...?" He asked, his voice strong and sure. "What... what's going on...?"

"Oh, Grant..." Marianne sobbed - and Richard let it pass through his consciousness and to their shared body, just as he let their body follow her urge to hug her husband.

Grant was a short, sturdy man, built along the line of a fireplug, and aside from a few bruises, he was uninjured, so he returned his wife's hug with feeling - a sensation that Richard found interesting, even as he felt the exultation that came from having succeeded at the task he'd been brought here to do.

"Grant.." Peter said, urgently. "Grant, you were in a car accident. You're okay, now, thanks to.. well, it's a long story. As happy as I am that you're all right, though, I need to know the Centronic codes..."

Grant's face twisted in an expression of horror - as he realized that, due to a certain sort of laziness, he'd almost been responsible for the deaths of hundreds of people, thanks to his own negligence in giving Peter the codes to the computer, which were changed on a monthly basis. Quickly, and with many unnecessary apologies thrown in, he gave the codes Peter needed - and his father-in-law all- but-sprinted out of the room, heading down to where the computer awaited an authorized user.

Leaving Grant alone with his wife...

...or so he thought.

"Honey, I'm so sorry..." Grant said, pulling her close again and speaking into her ear. "It was wet, and I knew I should have been going slower, but..."

Marianne, however, was barely listening to her husband, feeling ashamed that Richard had to put up with a man hugging 'him' close...

...right up until Richard pointed out something. Something that Marianne hadn't truly understood, though she'd been briefed by Peter.

Richard was, after all, merely a guest in her body. He'd done what he was brought here to do, and it was time for Marianne to get her own body back. However, the only way to get rid of Richard's recorded consciousness was by a sudden surge of physical sensation, one strong enough to act like a 'reset' switch, momentarily stopping conscious thought, after which she'd 'reboot' back to her own, single personality.

Her and her father had both assumed that it would take a short, sudden, massive burst of pain to cause this to happen, and they were prepared to pay that price - but they hadn't considered the alternative, whereas Richard had...

{Marianne...?} Richard prodded, gently. {It's time for me to go.}

<Now?> Marianne asked with real regret, their communication occurring at the speed of thought, and therefore unnoticeable to the man who was still embracing their shared body with the sort of sensual passion that quite often came after the realization of a near-death experience.

{Yes, my dear - and I know what you and your father assumed, which is why I thought I'd point out that it wouldn't necessarily have to be a tremendous burst of pain that would send me on to the afterlife. It could also be accomplished by an equal measure of pleasure...}

For an eternal instant, Marianne's mental voice was silent - and when it spoke, it was tinged with hesitant disbelief.

<You don't mean...?>

The mental 'image' that went with that question was brief - but vividly explicit.

{That's exactly what I mean...} Marianne hesitated...

<All right.> she said - and, with her mental foray into the previously ignored area of femininity, she began to get aroused - a sort of liquid warmth born in their shared crotch, but slowly spreading outwards atop a tide of anticipatory tingling that promised great things to come. <Here's what I'd do...>

Willingly - even eagerly - Richard took the instructions she was giving him - and set them into motion.

The first action was solely his, the last remnants of his upbringing causing him to bite their lower lip lightly - but her fingers were sure and graceful as she snuggled a little closer to the body of Marianne's husband, her hand sliding downward to his slowly bulging crotch, signaling her intentions and desires to a husband who had no idea that he was now involved in a very strange sort of ménage a trois.

Grant sighed, softly, his embrace becoming even more passionate as he pulled her face a little closer, his lips feeling only the familiar sensation of his wife's own, firm lips as he kissed her, passionately - though he was a bit surprised to find that her kiss was both more hesitant and more...

'exploratory'?... then usual.

Since it was a good kiss, Grant didn't mind in the least - and nether did either of the minds sharing his wife's body, for both of them enjoyed the physical sensations created as they pressed their body firmly against his, their flesh a-tingle with desire and pleasure as he slowly, seductively slid the patient's robe up over his waist, allowing the good-sized cock Grant could claim to surge upwards and outwards, hard and throbbing and ready.

"Are you sure this is medically advisable...?" Grant teased, in a husky voice. "I know how you get, you naughty vixen - one of your all-out specials could finish me..."

<No - this time, I'm only killing off the Professor...> Marianne though with a burst of grief that failed to overwhelm the rising tide of desire she was feeling, especially with her husband unbuttoning her blouse and reaching in to lightly caress the lacy D-cup brassiere enclosing her firm breasts.

Richard replied for both of them - and, in a way, to both husband and wife, as well: "Well, if you've got to go, that's the way to do it..."

Grant merely chuckled, hungrily, his fingers peeling her blouse off before sliding slowly downwards over smooth, supple skin towards the waistband of her skirt - but Richard felt the wave of rueful agreement from Marianne, and she once more began to 'feed' him information as her husband's slid their simple skirt down over her long, shapely legs.

<I can't believe we're doing this...> Marianne said in a bemused tone of thought - even as her husband watched with eager eyes as a man he'd never met made his wife's hands remove his wife's bra, allowing his wife's firm, full mounds to come into view, dark nipple fully engorged in arousal.

{I quite believe it...} Richard replied with a mental grin that was mixed with pleasure - for Grant had taken the move for the invitation it was, his hands gliding back up her body to caress and fondle her breasts, even as Richard was pushing Marianne's simple white underwear down her legs, exposing the small patch of dark pubic hair that surrounded her ready womanhood. {I never realized how nice having your breasts fondled could feel...}

'Nice' was an understatement - having skilled, caring hands lightly play with softly full breasts, coming back time and again to the firm, sensitive flesh of their swollen nipples, was considerably more than just 'nice'.

To an observer, their position might have looked awkward, even uncomfortable - Marianne's body bent at the waist, practically stretched out atop her husband as he lay on the bed, twisted to one side to allow his hands to roam freely over her body, now sliding from the firm swell of her bust to glide down to her equally firm derrière, with the occasional side-trip down the smooth contours of her legs.

However, for those involved in the situation, there was no physical discomfort to be felt - only rising pleasure as two skilled people warmed up towards sexual intercourse, one of the skilled personages transmitting a lifetime of female sexual knowledge to a male mind that was putting it into wonderful pleasurable action.

It was most definitely an odd situation - Grant, unaware of the 'visitor' in his wife's brain, performing more or less as usual, giving the same subliminal cues as usual - ones that were picked up by his wife's brain, translated, considered, then passed on to Richard in the form of simple instructions...

...which was what led the aging professor-in-the-body-of-a-nubile-young-woman to slide her legs up onto the bed, swing the right leg over the supine body of Marianne's husband, allowing him to better massage the taut flesh of her firm buttocks as she rose above him, her lips slightly parted in passion as her breathing and heart-rate increased.

<Now...> Marianne's mental voice whispered, hungrily...

...and Richard let the muscles in their long, smooth legs go slightly limp, their shared body dropping smooth and easily downward to impale itself on the throbbing erection Grant so thoughtfully provided.

"Mien Gott!" Richard blurted in startled amazement, earning a blink from Grant at the use of German from a wife who'd never made use of the language before.

Richard didn't really feel like explaining how the 'mistake' had happened, especially here and now - especially since it was an unintended literally translation of Marianne's sentiments at having a warm, functional penis slide firmly - and pleasurably - into her warmly waiting womanhood. Rather than acknowledge the blink Grant gave them, Richard simply let the next thought of Marianne's come through unaltered: "It feels so good..."

If simply having a good-sized cock filling their womanhood felt so wonderfully delicious, then what they felt next could only be described as 'ecstatic' - as Richard, without any prompted at all, flexed her legs, pushing them upwards from Grant's body - but certainly not far enough to let that cock slip from the warm, damp embrace of her womanhood. It would take an act of God to cause that to happen at this point, since both participants were bent on ensuring that the pleasure only increased...

...or, rather, all three participants, since Richard most definitely wanted to experience this new situation - he wanted to see what it felt like to have sex as a woman.

He wasn't disappointed - not in any sense of the word.

"Oh !" She moaned, again without prompting, as he let herself sink back down onto the cock, the wonderful friction of the ridged surface of his throbbing cock against her sensitized clit making pleasure burst through her nerves like a small cascade of fireworks that flared through her body, brief but brilliant.

The sensation came again as she repeated the up-and-down motion, faster this time - and with a brighter, more elaborate show of 'fireworks' as their reward, urging them to do exactly what everybody wanted, anyway - to increased the speed and power of the rhythmic stroke, her body now little more than a cylinder for the piston of his cock, the word seeming to slowly narrow down to the wonderful sensations coming from each of their crotches as they rode with increasing passion and power on a bed that was beginning to squeak and moan in a pattern most adults the world over would recognize.

None of the three, however, were the least bit concerned what anybody else might think of the sounds coming from the hospital room.

They had other concerns at the moment...

Grant was now fully involved as the person he assumed was just his wife rode with strangely eager intensity atop him, his own body matching the rhythm she was generating to increase and amplify the pleasure each was feeling. Her hard, wanton rhythm was unlike the sex he'd become used to recently, partly from the fact that she was doing something she didn't do very often anymore, namely riding atop him - but, more than that, there was sort of an eager, exploratory nature to her rhythm, as if she knew what she was doing, intellectually, but experiencing it for the first time...

It was an idle thought, one that zipped across the surface of his mind while the bulk of his brain was taken up with what was, in reality, quite a simple act - but Grant would have been amazed, stunned - and perhaps a bit nauseated - if he'd known just how accurate that particular impression was.

He didn't know, however - there was simply no way he could, and the two minds sharing the luscious body now driving itself atop his weren't even considering taking this moment to explain the situation to him...

Richard was now in full and complete control of their body, his rhythm and pattern becoming even more 'unusual' as far as Grant was concerned, since she was relying on the signals from the body he wore to tell her what to do - Marianne was too far gone in pleasure to be any help, her mind stunned by the amazing amounts of pleasure she was feeling, far more than usual - now that she didn't have to maintain any conscious control of her body at all, her entire mind was focused on the sensations rocketing through her nerves and slamming deep and hard into the shared pleasure-receptors in the center of her hippocampus.

In a way, Richard could have envied her, had he understood what she was going through - but, as it was, he was so stunned by the intensity and liquid nature of the rising pleasure that he was feeling that it simply didn't occur to him that it could possibly be any better.

All he knew was that it felt fantastic to be a young, fit woman riding eagerly atop the body of willing, skilled man who was determined to give her pleasure - and if Grant was technically dedicated to giving Marianne pleasure, rather than Richard, he unseen professor was still more than happy to take advantage of the 'fraud' they were committing.

"Oh yes... Oh yes...!" Richard cried in Marianne's voice, not hearing the dulcet tones as he drove her body harder, faster. "Oh, god.. I.. Oh.. I..."

Richard was an intelligent, verbally expressive person - but words escaped him as the body he wore generated pleasure that overwhelmed the higher brain functions, reaching deeper and deeper into the core of the mind they shared, three minds moving two bodies towards one goal...

Orgasm.

It came like a Forth-of-July spectacular, a hot rush of color and light that exploded throughout both his and her consciousness, even as it ripped through their shared body. Like an oncoming tidal wave, like a hurtling meteor, like the Charge of the Light Brigade, the sensations thundered through their body, which was only the beachhead for the assault that continued with sharply rising ecstasy, paradoxically fast and slow as it ran through her body, searing through nerves that were temporarily detailed to the sole purpose of transmitting the much-desired sensations that thundered through their body....

They screamed. They screamed loud and long and hard, their voice echoing up and down the halls of the hospital as they screamed their shared pleasure, their shared orgasm, two minds in one body, experiencing the same overwhelming, uncontrollable surge of pure orgasmic pleasure as their body shuddered and shook in the grip of pleasure...

...and then it was only Marianne who finished the scream as the orgasm hit its peak, Richard's consciousness borne by a tide of pure pleasure in that undiscovered country from which he had temporarily returned, carried back to the final darkness in grand orgasmic style and the name of his God on the lips he no longer possessed.

THE END

BACK TO FUN ZONE

SUMMARY: A government agent, is double crossed and finds himself the victim of a new serum that has the power to transform him in both body and mind.

JUNE 6 - 5:34 a.m. Somewhere over America

Agent Of Change

By Gunslinger

The early morning light lanced through the stratosphere, its ruddy glow painting the tops of the clouds in shades of gold and orange. Through this pastel wonderland, the clouds parted and, as if by magic, a small private jet climbed through the cumulous curtain, winging its way westward.

The Gulfstream IV was small but luxurious. Inside her aluminum skin, the cabin, built to hold seven passengers, was almost completely insulated from the drone of her own Pratt & Whitney engines. Golden light streamed in from the windows, painting the rich mahogany paneling and cream-colored leather seats. The passengers relaxed in comfort as the jet, worth over two million dollars, leveled off, allowing them to unbuckle their (gold-plated) seatbelts and stretch out.

"So, what's the prognosis on Project EVE?" The speaker was an older gentleman, somewhat heavysset, but possessing a patrician air that was enhanced by the silver hair touching his black hair at the temples. The Armani suit didn't hurt the image other.

"Well, Senator, we've done our test runs, and they've all worked perfectly." His younger companion replied. Unlike the Senator, he was slender, dressed in a simple black suit. His matching trench-coat hung on the back of his chair, and a shoulder holster hung with it, a large- caliber gun strapped into it's leather container. He continued. "The only draw back is that it only works one way. We can go male to female. We can change female to another female. But we cannot go female to male."

The third passenger, a tall, muscular man in a ill-fitting suit, thanked the stewardess as she handed him his coffee, then turned to the younger man. "If you don't mind me asked, Mr. Olsen, why not?" His own gun, the same model 10mm Smith & Wesson, was clipped into a 'fast action' holster on his belt. Unlike Olsen, he preferred to keep it on him at all times, although it was uncomfortable.

"It has to do with chromosomes." Olsen explained. He'd primed his bodyguard with the question, so he could show off his technical expertise to the Senator. "Women have XX chromosomes. Men have XY. We can 'duplicate' the X twice, to make a woman. We can alter those X's to change a woman's physical attributes. But, we can't add a Y back into the mix later - at least, we can't now. R&D suggests that we will be able to when the next generation of Cray super-computer comes on line, sometime next year. It has to do with the number of compute cycles needed."

The senator grunted, the turned towards the front of the plane. The stewardess, a tall, strong-looking woman with a long mane of chestnut hair, was emerging from the cockpit, lightly shutting the door behind her. Dressed in the 'traditional' stewardess uniform of blue skirt and blouse, black pumps and 'pillbox' cap, she presented an attractive sight, and obviously knew it - she had retrieved her purse, and was touching up her make-up with a compact.

"Miss. Get me a Scotch, will you?" The senator asked. "Single malt over a single cube."

"Of course, sir" she replied in a husky voice, walking towards them. "Would either of you other gentleman like anything?" She stopped in front of them, replacing her compact in her purse.

"Yeah." The bodyguard said, holding out his coffee. "If you can top off. . . ." His eyes widened as her hand re-emerged from the purse, wrapped around a 9mm parrabelum with a long silencer on it's muzzle. The body guard dropped the mug and went for his gun, cursing.

He never made it. The stewardess had purposefully waited until the bodyguards gun hand had been occupied with the mug, and the extra time allowed her to calmly line up her gun and pump two rounds into the mans chest. He jerked once, then collapsed, a puddle of blood forming on the deep-pile rug.

She swung her gun to cover the other two men and smiled. "Don't bother shouting. I've already killed the pilots, and put the plane on auto-pilot." Her - his voice was now very strong and masculine.

Olsen paled. "Gatwick!" he gasped, recognizing the voice. He would have never guessed otherwise - the man's feminine disguise was flawless. The senator frowned, his face reddening.

"Olsen, who is this man" he blustered, warily eyeing the 'woman'. "What's going on?"

The disguised man smiled wryly. "Darren Gatwick, CIA." He said, pulling off the long black wig. "I've been assigned to ferret out men like Mr. Olsen here. We've known for sometime that our sister agency, the NSA, had some rotten apples in its barrel, performing under a separate agenda. But, we didn't realize the funding was being over seen by you, Senator Johnson." He turned back to Olsen. "I want some answers. You're small fry. But, you can tell me who's running the rogue agents from inside the NSA. So, start talking." He grinned. "Make it fast - this corset's killing me."

"Uh. . . You know I can't. . . " Olsen said, breathing heavily. Gatwick waggled the gun under his nose.

"Sure you can." He said, kicking off his pumps. He dropped into the chair across the cabin from them. As soon as he hit the soft leather seat, he knew in an instant that he'd made a mistake, as he felt the prick of the hypodermic needle imbedded in the seat back.

"Shit!" He struggled to rise, but the fast acting sedative was taking effect - his body seemed to drain of energy as his vision darkened. The gun slipped from his suddenly nerveless fingers, and he slumped back into the embrace of the leather seat.

The senator grinned and rose. He went over the well-stocked bar and poured two fingers of Glenlivet over a single ice cube. "You know" he remarked conversationally. "That trick seat has come in damn handy. Whenever somebody nosed too close, I'd invite him for a 'secret' meeting aboard my private jet. Then, after inviting him to have a seat, I'd fly him to my private retreat, drag what he knew out of him, then dump the body." He sipped his drink, and regarded the 'en femme' agent. "Same routine with this one?"

Olsen slowly smiled. "Oh, I have a better idea senator." He said, mixing himself a martini. "He makes a very convincing woman. Why don't we help him make his act perfect?" He grinned at the senator and popped the olive into his mouth. Slowly, the senator smiled back.

* * * * *

DATE AND TIME UNKNOWN Somewhere in America

Darren awoke nearly instantly, his quick mind leaping from a deep, drug-induced unconsciousness to immediate wakefulness. But, he remained perfectly still, eyes closed, as he stretched his senses to the limit, searching for every bit of information before he acted.

Immediately, he knew something was wrong. His finely honed body felt strange to him. A weight sat on his chest, and an - odd - feeling was the best he could describe what emanated from his crotch. Other, less quantifiable feelings tugged at his mind from all over his body. Ignoring this for the moment, he turned his mind outward, registering the blankets covering him, the muted sound of traffic emanating from somewhere to his right and below him. His eyelid revealed some sort of illumination was operating in the room he occupied. By no sound gave any indication of any other presence. Slowly, he opened his eyes.

He was in a bedroom. Decorated in pastels of rose and salmon, with pink and blue wallpaper trim along the ceiling. A window to the right admitted the sunshine, as well as the sounds he'd catalogued earlier. Slowly, he lifted one arm to remove the covers - and stopped, staring at his hand.

Only, it wasn't his hand. Smaller, smoother and more delicate, it's slender fingers were graced with long, neatly trimmed nails. The wrist was slender, leading to an equally feminine arm. Slowly, he used his new appendage to draw back the light bed-spread, and eased himself into a sitting position. Forcing himself to ignore his changed body - and the strange sensations that movement created - he took stock of the bedroom.

Decorated in a decidedly feminine decor, it boasted a large, four poster bed that he'd awakened in. To either side of the bed, matching end-tables stood. Beside the mirrored closet doors, a vanity table, strewn with feminine articles, sat in splendor. A closed door led from the room.

Carefully, Darren rose, and approached the full-length mirrored closet doors, his body feeling awkward and unbalanced. Steeling himself, he stood in front of the mirror, and looked himself - no, herself over, starting from the bottom and working up.

The woman who looked back from the mirror was like something out of an eighteen-year-old boys fantasy. The delicate feet were topped by gracefully rounded ankles. Above this, her legs stretched upwards, long and shapely, the creamy skin smooth and flawless. Her hips swelled above this, slender but womanly. Between her silken thighs, in a neatly trimmed patch of blonde pubic hair, rested the pink opening of her new vagina. To complement this, as a turn in the mirror verified, was a full, shapely derrière.

Smoothly rising from the width of her widened pelvic area, her new waist slimmed remarkably, showcasing a flat, firm stomach. The years of exercise that Darren had performed was gone - although perfectly smooth and flat, the abdominals were no longer rock-hard and sharply defined.

Thrusting proudly from her chest was perhaps the most perfect pair of tits Darren had ever seen. Firm and round, they seemed to ignore gravity completely. They were remarkably large, yet showed no sag. The creamy globes were topped by small, nub-like nipples of light- pink. She forced her eyes higher, to the head atop her long, swan-like neck.

It was a cheerful, open face. Full, luscious lips below a pert, upturned nose. Sparkling blue eyes with long, dark lashes, and high, arching eyebrows. Her complexion was flawless and supple. A mane of platinum blonde hair wreathed her pixie-ish face, looking like an abandoned haystack from her 'bed-head.'

But, to his surprise, Darren's new body didn't quite pass the line into 'bimbo' - rather, she was spectacularly sexy in a 'friendly, girl- next- door' sort of way. Friendly, reasonably intelligent, and beautiful, as well as sexy.

"My god." Darren muttered. . . then blinked, surprised at the rich soprano of her new voice. "They used EVE on me. The bastards!"

Most men, faced with this situation, would have been horrified, or in despair or denial. Although these feelings moved in sluggish undercurrents in Darren's mind, the one clear emotion she felt right now was the bright, burning flame of anger. Although she now possessed the body of a young blonde goddess, her mind was still the tightly focused, controlled thinking machine, and now it turned with precision as she focused herself on one thing - revenge.

Turning from the mirror, she began to examine the room. It didn't take her long to find what awaited her on the vanity table. There was a driver's license, for the California Department of Motor Vehicles. It showed her new face, and proclaimed her to be 'Belinda Metzler', of Los Angeles. It listed an address, which she assumed was where she was now. It also listed her new age as 21, knocking more than ten years of her old age. Also with the I.D. was a small pile of cash, a couple of credit and Debit cards, a birth certificate - and a letter. He picked it up, and found it advised 'Belinda' that she had gotten a job at Denbrough's Restaurant, starting on the 22nd.

That prompted Belinda. She moved to the end table, trying to ignore the sway of her heavy new endowments. She clicked on the radio, and hunted through stations until she found a news report, giving today's date.

It was the 19th. Not only had the rogue NSA agents stolen her life, her body, her history - but nearly two weeks of time, as well. The flame of anger flared into roiling fire, and her plans began to coalesce in her mind. No matter what it took, she WOULD get her revenge.

* * * * *

JUNE 19 - 11:30 a.m. Washington, D.C.

"Gatwick - excuse me, Ms. Metzler. . ." Olsen grinned wickedly, "Should be waking up about now, considering the time difference between here and LA." He shook his head. "What I wouldn't give to see her reaction to that body."

The room's other occupant was Bill Wexler, a short, slender, meticulously groomed man who was the prototypical image of a 'techie' - and the inventor of EVE. He shook his head at Olsen's comment. "Look, Rich, leaving any surveillance devices in her apartment might lend credibility to her story, if she took it to the police - or to 'Darren's' friends in the Agency. She probably knows enough to get an appointment with another agent. Say, if she said she was one of Darren's sources."

Rich Olsen looked thoughtful. "You think she'll try to expose us?"

Wexler shrugged. "Can't say. With our test cases, we found they fell in three groups. The first, the subject goes into denial. Dresses in male clothing, tries to convince people of the 'truth'. These people end up in an asylum, either by authorities who think they're insane, or because the trauma actually pushes them over the edge."

"I can see that." Agreed Olsen. "And the others?"

"Group two" continued Wexler, "are those who go into deep despair. They usually commit suicide within short order. Those who don't kill themselves commit 'mental suicide' - they cut all mental ties with their old life, and become. . . uh, 'ultra females', I guess you could say. They assume that their memories of male life was insanity, and 'cure' themselves by being more feminine than a real woman." He paused and took a sip of water. "The last group go into a mild depression for about a week, then accept their fate - provisionally, at least. They tend to wear women's clothes, or uni-sex clothing, but always very shapeless, conservative clothing. They are shy, nervous and uncomfortable. They majority remain virgins, or become lesbians."

Olsen rubbed his hands together. "I wonder which group our little Belinda falls in?" he murmured, then laughed.

* * * * *

JUNE 19 - 8:35 a.m. Los Angeles, California

The answer to Olsen's question, if Belinda had known about it, would have been 'None Of The Above'. None of Wexler's test subjects had been highly disciplined, intelligent agents, whose driving force was neither conformity nor his male ego. No, her driving force was getting the mission done. Being female was as unimportant right now as having to go 'en femme' for other missions had been. If being female was what it took to do the job - so be it. Later, after she finished her job, then she would deal with her new, feminine life.

Right now, the new woman had a job to do. She slid open the closet, and began to sort through the clothing. Not finding what she wanted, she tried the oak dresser.

The first order of business was underwear. She found a pair of plane cotton Hanes 'Her Way' panties, and stepped into them. They slid over the supple flesh of her long new legs, and pulled snug over her new, flat crotch. A huge, plain white underwire bra was the next item. She paused for a second and read the label, discovering her new endowments would be contained in a 42 EE bra - or, at her discretion, a 40 DDDD. They were the same size, but the fit differed. She picked the 40 DDDD - it fit snuggler, the cups gripping her globes tightly, and the straps digging into her shoulders. This size bra was less comfortable, but provided more support, which was what mattered.

Over the underwear, she drew on a pair, of jean shorts. They were tighter than she would have liked, hugging every curve of her tear- drop shaped ass and womanly hips. They would have to do. An XXL white T-shirt was next - it hung loose over her flat stomach and slender waist, but clung tautly to her bra-encased tits, faintly visible through the thin material.

Sitting on the bed, Belinda pulled on a pair of socks, grimacing. The only pair of socks she could find were pink ankle socks, with a trim of white lace. Over these indignities were pick-and white running shoes. It didn't escape her notice that every item was brand-new - a small, but telling flaw in the illusion that the NSA had tried to create. The CIA would have bought a large portion of clothing from second-hand stores, to support the fiction that the identity had some sort of past history.

Having previous practice at being female - albeit, not to this degree of reality - , Belinda was also sure to complete the female ritual - a small bead necklace went around her slender neck, and a matching bracelet around her right wrist. She applied a medium-red shade of lipstick, and used a spray bottle of water and a comb to make her hair presentable. She stuffed the I.D. and money - two hundred and fifty dollars - into a pocket, but leaving the plastic, knowing the NSA could trace her if she used credit or debit cards.

Satisfied, she left the apartment, not bothering to lock it, and headed into the bright summer sunlight.

Not bothering to find a bus, Belinda began to jog towards the nearest main street. She almost fell after two strides, the momentum of her unwieldy breast pulling her off balance. She was forced to change her stride, letting her hips swivel more, and her arms pump harder, to counteract the weight of her large, heavy tits.

She kept her pace easy, both to conserve energy, and to get used to the sway and bounce of her new body. Following the heaviest flow of traffic, she had no problem locating the nearest mall, and headed towards it, aware of the admiring gaze of men on her supple body - or at least, jouncing, melon-like tits.

She arrived at the mall's parking lot, and slowed to a walk, letting herself cool down as she made her way across the paved expanse to the doors. She stepped inside, shivering slightly as the air conditioning gusted across her slightly sweaty body. She blinked at the extremely pleasant sensation as her nipples stiffened inside their cotton prison. Dismissing it, she began to window shop, feeling the lustful teenaged gazes following her progress. She grinned slightly as she watched a heavy-set older woman strap her husband with her purse as he gawked at her mesmerizing bosom.

She stopped first at a small luggage store, and picked up a black leather purse and a small nylon 'carry-on' bag. Her next stop was at a large corporate multi-chain department store.

She hit the lingerie department first. She flipped through the racks of 'image' size bras for the 'larger women, finally picking up two black bras - one a heavy, canvas-like one similar to the white one she already wore, the other a lacier demi-cup with massive under-wire support and no straps. Next, she picked out two pairs of panties that matched her choice in brassieres. She knew that the store didn't allow customers to try on undergarments, so had to hope that the sizes were accurate.

She picked out a couple of new outfits - because in the size difference between her slender body and huge tits, dresses were out of the question - she was forced to pick two-piece outfits. She swung by the make-up counter, picking out a small selection of basic cosmetics and toiletries. A pair of shoes was her final purchase. The plain young female cashier rang up her purchases, unaware the woman she looked at enviously had been a man only a short while before. "Thank you. . ." Belinda glanced at the nametag gracing the woman's nearly non-existent chest. "Carrie. Uh. . . Do you mind if I ask you an odd question?"

Carrie shrugged. "I guess so miss."

Belinda looked at her with interest. "If you were given a choice, would you REALLY want to look like I do?" Carrie looked surprised. "Well. . . Yeah. Yes, I would." She said, blushing slightly.

Belinda lay one hand over hers. "Trust me. If I had a choice, this wouldn't be the body I would pick." She said sincerely.

The short shopping spree depleted a large part of her funds. She toted her purchases to the doors and flagged a taxi down, asking the driver to pick an inexpensive motel near LAX. He nodded and pulled away, his eyes frequently returning the awesome view displayed in his rearview mirror.

He dropped her at a Motel Seven on the airport strip. The motel was small and somewhat outdated, but clean. She used the bulk of her remaining funds to rent a room for the night, then accepted her key and headed to her room.

Dropping her things on the small bed, she undressed quickly, and headed for the bathroom. She turned on the water in the shower, allowing it to warm as she used the toilet for the first time as a woman.

It was decidedly unusual to take a piss as a woman, sitting on the toilet and feeling the stream of urine patter into the bowl in a lower- pressured sort of unaimed spurt. But, it got the job done, and that was what mattered. After wiping herself with toilet paper, she flushed the toilet, then climbed into the shower.

She had intended to take a quick, efficient shower to clean herself from the sweat of jogging. But, that plan was quickly carried away as she began to soap up. The sensation of the soap sliding slickly over her new body was pleasant enough - but when she reached her firm, round tits, she slowed and gasped as she slid over her nipples. She forced herself to finish lathering, then put the soap down.

Turning under the spray, she began to rinse, her dainty new hands truly exploring her feminine new body for the first time.

Her fingers slid across the slick skin of her long, shapely legs and lightly ran across her firm ass. Sliding them forward and up, they crested over her slender waist and reached the proudly out-thrust mass of breast flesh. She began to softly fondle her massive new endowments, her head tilting back, eyes closed in pleasure, as her long-nailed fingers began to tease her now-hard nipples.

Sighing, she forced her hands away and shut off the water. She began to towel off, guiltily enjoying the feel of the fabric moving across her unblemished flesh.

Naked, she gathered up her discarded clothing from the floor and folded it. Leaving one outfit aside, she carefully packed her few belongings into the carry on bag. Zipping it closed, she began to dress. She slid on the lacy black French-cut briefs. She then struggled into the lacy, strapless black bra, which lifted her firm mounds up and together. Over her racy under things, she pulled on a tight, midnight hued silk skirt that hugged her body like a second skin from knee to waist. A black silk short-sleeve top with a plunging off-the-shoulder neckline clung to her torso, revealing an awesome display of cleavage.

Returning to the bathroom, she carefully applied her make-up, her rich red lip gloss emphasizing her full, soft lips. Mascara and eye shadow increased the allure of her sky-blue eyes. She checked the look in the mirror. She was absolutely stunning, the black clothing hugging her body, and it's sheen creating highlights that increased the effect.

She slipped her dainty feet into the embrace of the black velvet shoes she'd purchased. She stood and walked over to the mirror, familiarizing herself with the way her body moved perched atop the four-inch heels. She used her comb and an elastic to pile her platinum blonde mane into a loose bun, emphasizing her long, slender neck. Admiring the finished product, she smiled slightly.

"God." She breathed in her sweet, clear voice. "I'm such a babe." She tried to chuckle, and was rewarded with a charming giggle, which caused her to giggle harder.

Dropping her remaining funds in her purse, she slung it over on well-displayed shoulder and headed outside. After locking the door behind her, the key joined her meager bankroll, and she made her way down the strip until she came to the 'Silver Wings', a bar catering to pilots - she hoped.

Stepping inside, she was greeted by the sound of a juke-box in the corner playing something by the Eagles. The hum of conversation dropped briefly as the clientele appraised the buxom blonde goddess in their midst, then regained it's previous volume, although with a different subject.

Looking around, Belinda made her way to a table near the back. She threw an extra little wiggle into her stride as bait. She put her purse on the scarred wooden table and lowered herself into the soft chair. Then, she waited.

It didn't take long. She heard someone clear their throat near her shoulder. She took a deep breath, allowing the unseen man a few seconds to gaze down into her stunning cleavage, then twisted around in her seat.

He was fairly well built and handsome. In his early twenties, he was dressed casually in blue jeans and a white denim shirt. His face was tanned, with an unruly mop of black hair. In each of his strong hands he held a cold beer. He gave her his most charming smile, and she traded it for an inviting one of her own.

"Hi," he said. "My name's Steven. Can I buy you a drink?"

She waved a hand to the empty seat. "Please do. I'm Belinda." She accepted one cold beer from him as he slid into the seat. She took a sip. He fished out a pack of cigarettes and raised an eyebrow. "You don't mind if I smoke, do you Belinda?" he asked.

"Actually," she replied, "I was wondering if I could steal one of those from you."

Steven gave her the one he had extracted from the pack and lit it with his silver Zippo, before he fished one out for himself. "So, what brings a lovely lady like you to our little haven?" he asked.

Belinda took a deep drag on the cigarette, enjoying the mild nicotine buzz. "Actually, I was hoping for some help. Are you a pilot?" Steven finished his long pull of beer and nodded. "Sure am. Own my own little puddle-hopper. Why, you looking to go somewhere?"

Belinda smiled as he nibbled at the bait. "Actually, I'm trying to get to Washington." She said. "I came here hoping to break into movies. Instead, I ended up broke, and don't have enough money for airfare."

He swallowed the much-heard - and even sometimes true - story, and nodded. "Well, I'd be glad to take you. . . if you want to find a way of, um, 'payment'? " He looked at her expectantly.

Damn. She'd hoped for a gentleman willing to help a lady in distress for free. Her mind quickly ran through her options. She knew if she turned him down, it would be useless to look for another ride here - she'd have to locate another bat and start over. She was in a hurry, and pushed aside her distaste.

With no noticeable hesitation to Steven, she leaned forward and spoke softly, forcing her voice to sound as alluring as possible. "How about I go down, and you take me up?" she asked huskily. She wasn't ready to offer more.

Thankfully, it was enough. "Sure thing. You got a deal Belinda. Where do you want to. . . Sign the contract?" he asked, leering. Belinda forced a smile. "I've got some luggage in my hotel room. You give me a lift to pick it up, and. . . "

He stood and swallowed the rest of his beer. "Follow me, gorgeous."

She made him wait a few seconds as she finished her beer in a more 'lady-like' manner, then followed him to the parking lot, still smoking the cigarette. She was determined to get as much as she could out of this distasteful situation.

He led her to a bright red Z-28 and unlocked her door. She finished the smoke and dropped it to the ground. She ground it under one spike heel, then climbed into the sports car. She told him which motel she was in, and Steven peeled out of the lot to the smell of burning rubber.

A minute later, he pulled up in front of her room, just a way's down the street. She forced herself to act eager as she dug out her key and unlocked the door, letting him in. She followed behind him, pushing the door shut. She wondered briefly if the desk clerk had seen her, and what he'd think of her inviting a man in her room like this. She thrust the thought away - besides, technically, he would be correct.

"Well, Belinda, the quicker I cum, the faster we can go." Steven said, chuckling. She forced a giggle, then dropped her purse on the bed, and guided Steven to a seat beside it. Smiling 'eagerly', she slowly unzipped his pants and pushed them and his gray briefs to his ankles.

His average-sized cock was already rock-hard with the images running through his head. It was flushed red, and throbbed slightly with each heartbeat.

Belinda sunk to her knees and took his throbbing dick in her hands, feeling its feverish warmth. In her career as an agent of the CIA, she'd had to do some unpleasant things - but this was her first blowjob.

Steeling her nerve, she leaned forward. Her full, red lips slowly moved forward and she lightly kissed his purplish head. . . . and deep inside her brain, hypnotic programming inserted by Bill Wexler came to life at the 'trigger' action.

Belinda found herself flooded with new thoughts. In the two weeks they'd held her, less than an hour had been used in the actual physical transformation. Most of the time had been used while he was still male, and drugged, to find what he knew. But, having a couple of spare hours, Wexler had idly taken the chance to have his version of fun. He had injected Belinda with a hypnotic drug, and had her watch a porno tape of blowjobs, imbedding a trigger in her subconscious. Now, it activated, flooding her with a barrage of images about blowjobs - and a massive jump in her hormones.

Knowing they were not HER thoughts in no way diminished the power of her sudden need. Belinda, resigned to what she needed to do, didn't fight the new desires flooding her - she rode with them, using them as a tool to do what was necessary.

Her warm, wet mouth pushed forward, enveloping Stevens hard cock. She applied light suction as her tongue began to flick across the taught, warm skin of his rock-hard penis. Her slender hand grasped the base of his shaft and began to pump in smooth, strong strokes. Her other hand lightly squeezed his balls.

Steve moaned and entwined his fingers in her silky hair as he climbed towards orgasm. "Oh, yes. . ." He hissed. "God, I'm cumming. . ."

Belinda had intended to let Steven's seed spray across the expanse of flesh exposed by her plunging neck-line. But, he'd let go of too much control, and implanted desires kept her full lips locked firmly around his cock as it spasmed, and shot a stream of hot, salty sperm into her mouth, a thin steam overflowing and dripping onto one delightfully full tits. 'Hungrily', she swallowed the thick liquid - and was shocked to find that, due to the implanted commands, she found it the most unbelievably fantastic taste she'd ever swallowed.

Released of her imposed needs, Belinda pulled from his drained cock, disgusted - and fulfilled. Hating herself for it, she used her fingers to get the last globs of spilled cum, disgusted - but wanting that indescribable taste. As sickened as she was, she was telling the absolute truth when she told him "You taste fantastic."

He pulled his clothing up and straightened himself out as she gathered her things. He also used the time to call the airport and file a flight plan. Then, giving her a light peck on the cheek, he led her to his car and turned towards the airport. She took the opportunity to bum a cigarette - and a part of her hated the fact it covered the taste that lingered in her mouth. She ignored it, and enjoyed the smoke.

Steven's 'puddle-hopper' turned out to be a well maintained Learjet 35. Painted in light blue, with the words 'Steven Douglas Charters', it was an older aircraft that had been top of the line, and, lovingly maintained the way it was, still a formidable aircraft. Belinda found herself unable to maintain her anger towards Steven - She'd expected a Cessna or Piper, not an expensive, high cost jet. In flying her - free - to D.C., it was costing him at least twelve grand in fuel and lost revenue.

"Here you go Belinda" Steven said, taking her luggage into the cabin. "Make yourself comfortable."

She followed him up the ladder and into the cabin. Grasping his arm, she turned him towards him. She stood on tip-toe, wrapped her arms around him, and kissed him. Not sexually, or seductively, but firmly and sincerely. He blinked.

"What was that for?" he asked, surprised.

She grinned wryly, surprised by her impulsive - and probably hormone driven - act. "I know how much this is costing you" she said. "I wanted to thank you - really - for what you're doing. It's very kind of you."

His response was unexpected. He flushed deeply, and his eyes refused to meet hers. "Look. . . Belinda . . I'm so sorry. . ." he stammered awkwardly. "My wife divorced me a couple of months ago, and I haven't been with a woman since. I. . . I took advantage of you. . and. . ." He trailed off, deeply ashamed.

Unwillingly, Belinda found herself touched. Instead of a manipulative prick, she found Steven was really a nice guy whose chivalry had slipped - and her thanks were making him feel so bad. . .

Without really thinking, she lightly touched his arm. "Look, Steven, I'm in some trouble, and I really, really needed your help." She lowered her eyes. "In fact" she said truthfully - in a way - "it's been - well, you wouldn't believe me if I told you. But. . . I really DID enjoy.

. "

The sincerity broke through to the ashamed man. He looked her in the eye, and saw only honesty (although she'd hated herself for doing it, and disgusted by the act, she HAD enjoyed the taste. . .)

"Still," he said, bashfully, "I owe you a lot. Let's get airborne, then I think we should talk some more."

"Sure." Belinda said, wondering what had prompted her actions. "Mind if I sit with you in the . . ." suddenly, she blushed brightly. ". . uh, cockpit?" she finished.

Steven laughed, and Belinda joined in. "Of course" he said, still chuckling.

It didn't take long to get the trim aircraft airborne and winging it's way east on its five hour flight to D.C. As the land unrolled far below the wings, Steven turned back to Belinda.

"So, what kind of trouble are you in?" he asked her, honestly worried for this stunning woman he'd met - and taken advantage of, he thought with a wince - only a short time ago.

"I really can't talk about it." She said softly, her trained mind regaining equilibrium. She'd already figured out that her odd reactions had been caused by the change in her hormonal chemistry. Estrogen was a chemical. Like other chemical, such as alcohol, cocaine, or sodium pentethol, Estrogen could - and did - effect the mind. She realized she'd have to watch herself in the future - and even so, her finely honed mental processes would be forever altered in many subtle - and not so subtle - ways. Emotions, mostly ignored in her male life, now had gained new textures and strengths, and lurked in her brain, ready to pounce on her analytical mind when she was least prepared.

To put it simply, a persons 'self', their core personality, was nothing more than a composite of every experience ever encountered. And, with her change, Belinda was gaining radically different experiences - for the first time, seeing things from a completely new viewpoint.

"Alright." Steven said firmly. "But whatever it is, I'm going to help." He cut her protest short. "I AM going to help." His voice softened. "Or I'd never be able to live with myself."

Belinda nodded. "Thank you." she said, softly.

For the rest of the flight, he kept her entertained - telling amusing anecdotes, letting her fly the plane, letting her sexy voice bounce over the airwaves with other pilots. By the time the plane settled down to meet the asphalt runway, she found herself honestly enjoying his company.

He refused to listen to her protests as he rented a car - paying for it but putting it in her name - and drove to one of the nicer hotels and renting her a suite for a week.

"Look" she said, softly, as they rode the elevator towards her room. "You really didn't have to do any of this. It must be costing you a fortune."

He carried her bag to her suite. "Look, Belinda, don't worry about it. My charter is doing very well, and I can afford it." He waited until she unlocked the door, then followed her in. He reached into his wallet, and flipped it open in front of her. A long string of credit cards unfolded - all GoldCards, indicating each had unlimited credit available. She realized he wasn't kidding - no bank would authorize a GoldCard for someone with a yearly income less then $100,000.

She watched in surprise as he removed most of the cash and one of the card, and dropped them in her purse. "No, please. . . " she said.

He ignored her. "I have to head back for LA." He said. "I've got a charter for tomorrow." He indicated her purse. "That's two thousand in cash, and the card has no upper limit." He leaned forward and his face softened. "Please. . . take it. That card's balance is zero right now. I'll have the company cancel it when it reaches ten thou."

She smiled at him. In spite of her attempt to control her new emotions, she was touched by his sincere attempt to help - and the truth was, this would help immeasurably. Giving in to herself, she wrapped her arms around him and kissed him deeply, passionately. He stood rigid for an instant, then relaxed and returned the embrace.

He gently pulled away. "I. . have to be going. You take care Belinda." She followed him to the door, and kissed him once, lightly, on the cheek.

"Good-bye, Steven" she said softly. "And. . thank you." She watched him until the elevator doors closed, cutting him from view.

She slowly closed the door. Between the time of the flight, and the time zone difference, it was now nine o'clock, local time. She kicked off her shoes and lay on the bed. She shut of the light, and closed her eyes. Inside her head, she set about methodically clearing her mind, forcing herself to lock away the thoughts and emotions of the day, and focus for the task at hand. Slowly, she restored her anger and rage into a furnace-like blast that drove back the distracting and uncontrolled thoughts, and returning her mind to a sharp, precise weapon of revenge.

At least for now.

* * * * *

JUNE 20 - 7:21 a.m. Washington, D.C.

Belinda awoke refreshed, in mind and body. Once more her mental processes were on track, and she had work to do.

Stripping of the rumpled clothes she slept in, she padded gracefully to the luxurious en-suite bathroom. Indulging her new, feminine side, she called down an order for coffee and a Danish as she started running a tub of warm water. Smiling slightly, she gave in and added some of the fragrant 'complimentary' bubble-bath, watching it foam up.

A knock at the door was followed by the muffled call of 'Room service'. Wrapping the supplied bathrobe around her spectacular figure, she found it refused to close across the breadth of her massive tits, displaying almost half of her breasts, but covering her nipples.

Sighing, she went to the door and opened it, letting in the slender, handsome man from room service. As she accepted the tray, she found herself speculatively eyeing the bulging crotch of his uniform. Blushing, she tore her gaze away, and he left with a strangely stiff stride which she tried to ignore.

Returning to the bathroom, she shed the robe and settled into the foamy water. Luxuriating in the warmth, she nibbled at her Danish and sipped her coffee. When she was finished her light breakfast, she soaped up and washed, forcing her eager mind to ignore certain images it wanted to indulge in.

Drying off - slowly, and with great attention to the sensual curve of her firm tits, she unpacked her meager luggage and dressed.

She pulled on the white underwear she'd worn her first day as a woman. Over this came a white denim skirt that fell to mid-thigh, and a tight black T-shirt. Over the T-shirt went a matching white denim vest, buttons strained by the pressure of her large tits. Her feet once more rested in the velvet pumps.

She carefully did her hair and making, achieving a more cheerful, 'girl-next-door' effect - but still incredibly sexy. She was ready. Locking her suite behind her, she rode downstairs in the elevator, and had the valet bring her rental car around.

Having lived in D.C. in her male incarnation, she knew the city, but had to be very careful - her targets knew what her new body looked like, and there was little she could do as adequate disguise. So, she kept her eyes open as she pulled up near the Senate offices.

This was the most dangerous part of today's game. She climbed out of the car and headed for the entrance, enjoying the summer heat on the exposed, silky skin of her legs.

She found, to her great relief, a tour was about to start. Paying her five dollar fee, she joined the tour as it started to head through the hallowed halls of the Senate Executive Offices.

Fifteen minutes later, they were passing the offices of Senator Johnson. She lagged behind and let the tour group separate from her. Taking a deep breath, she knocked on the door of the office.

A young slender man with close-cropped sandy hair opened it. He was well dressed in a dark blue pinstripe and a Yale tie. His eyes widened slightly at the sight of the stunningly beautiful blonde in front of him.

"Can I help you Miss?" he asked politely - amazingly, he even managed to look her in the eye.

"I'm so sorry to bother you." Belinda apologized. "I was with the tour and had to use the ladies room. I found that alright - but now I'm hopelessly lost." She smiled with just the right force. "How do I get out of here?"

The man laughed. "I know what you mean. When I started here, I was lost for the first month." He lowered his voice. "Us staffers call this place the 'Rat Maze' " He smiled again. "But, I can make it easy for you, I think."

With an exaggerated expression, he theatrically looked both ways down the corridor. He waved her inside the office and shut the door. "The Senator I work for has a private entrance" he explained, smiling. He led her through the ante-room to a heavy oak door. She noticed that he seemed to have an odd stride, and filed it away in her mind. "Just through here, and you're outside the West Wing."

The fact that he invited her in proved that he worked for the Senator without knowing his illicit activities. Otherwise, he'd never be so open. Belinda smiled. "Thank you so much, Mr. . . ." She trailed off, raising an eyebrow.

"Marlowe. Brad Marlowe." He introduced himself, shaking her hand. The intriguing motions created in her chest briefly drew his eyes down, and he blushed slightly.

"Linda" Belinda replied, making up a name in case he should mention it to the Senator. "Linda Hunt. And, thanks again." He held the door for her. "Just don't mention it to anyone." He asked. "I'm not supposed to do this."

She shook his hand once more, with a smile, then headed back to her car. She climbed in - but didn't start it. She turned on the radio and watched the front door.

Slightly after noon, she shut off the radio and sat up as Brad Marlowe emerged, easily identified by his unusual gait. She watched to make sure he wasn't heading for the parking lot, then slipped out of the car and followed him at as far a distance as she dared.

Sure enough, Marlowe turned into one of the swankier restaurants. She waited five minutes, then went inside.

"Can I help you miss?" The maitre d' asked, eyeing her. Sexy yes, but also beautiful - a rarity. Also, dressed nicely, and not terribly provocatively. Finishing his appraisal, and fairly sure he wasn't dealing with a hooker, his smile became genuine. "Do you have a reservation?"

Belinda shifted slightly to be more visible in the dining room, without looking inside. 'Come on' she thought, as she returned the Maitre d's smile. "No, I'm afraid I don't. Do I need one?" she asked, feigning disappointment.

The Maitre d' was sincerely sad. "Yes, Miss, I'm afraid you. . . ." "Miss Hunt!"

Belinda acted surprised as she turned and saw Marlowe approaching. She smiled broadly. "Mr. Marlowe! Imagine running into you here!"

He smiled at her and turned to the Maitre d'. "It's alright Winslow. The lady will be dining with me."

Winslow smiled and nodded, happy for the pretty blonde, as Marlowe led her to his table. He poured her a glass of wine, and smiled at her.

For the next hour, both poured on the charm, for different reasons. Belinda played the role of a girl on vacation from collage, slightly overwhelmed by D.C. She played it friendly and open, but somewhat shy. The lunch was pleasant and she actually enjoyed it. Finally, they finished, and Marlowe signaled for the check. As he escorted her out, she 'admitted' that she was taking the bus, and asked if he minded if she walked with him to the Senate building before catching the bus. He agreed quickly.

As they reached the doors, and he regretfully said good-bye, she thanked him for a lovely lunch. She waited until he disappeared inside, and was out of sight. Giving it a few minutes more, she ducked inside, and approached the security desk.

"Can I help you?" The guard asked, eyeing her.

Belinda pulled a pad of paper from her purse and jotted a brief note, forcing herself to blush furiously. "I was. . uh, . . wondering" she said hesitantly, holding the folded note. "Could you deliver this to Brad. . . I mean. Mr. Marlowe, in Senator Johnson's office?"

The guard smiled. "Of course." He took the paper and smiled at his partner as he headed down the hall. Belinda watched him go, then practically fled the building.

Before heading back to the hotel, she swung by a safe drop of the CIA, and opened the hidden box in the concrete overpass support. She extracted what she needed and left.

* * * * *

JUNE 20 - 9:48 p.m. Washington D.C.

Belinda sat in near the entrance of the nightclub, sipping at her Daiquiri, and watching the door. She was rewarded when they parted and Brad entered the club. He spied her easily and came over as she rose from the chair.

"I got your note" He explained unnecessarily. "I was honored that you wanted to see me again."

She smiled bashfully. "I know it sounds really odd but - you're nice, you're kind, handsome, and you don't. . . stare. . ." she said, blushing harder.

He blushed a little too.

For the next few hours, the drank, talked and danced. He turned out to be a smoker as well, and she accepted the occasional cigarette, 'admitting' she was trying to quit. She also 'admitted' that 'Linda Hunt' was a name she used in LA as an aspiring actress, and told him her 'real' name. She insisted he use 'Belinda'.

By the end of the evening he was hopelessly smitten by her - and she was shocked to find that her own attraction to him wasn't feigned. Since she'd taken a cab, she let him drive her to her hotel, and invited him to her room.

She'd thought she'd have to force herself to continue the next part - but between the alcohol, her new hormones, and her actual attraction to Brad, she found her female body aroused as she led himself in the suite.

Hesitantly, she slid her slender arms around his waist, and raised her face to him. He bent his own, and their lips met.

The sensation seemed to ignite a dull flame in her, and all hesitancy was lost as her full lips pressed against his. She felt his tongue slide between her lips and into her waiting mouth, and she responded eagerly. Gently, she pushed him towards one of the two queen- sized beds, her hands unbuttoning his shirt.

Pulling off his shirt, she sat him on the edge of the bed as his hands pulled off her vest. Belinda felt emotions and thoughts swirling in her slightly clouded. She couldn't believe what she was doing, yet was eager to continue. She was confused, aroused, disgusted and eager, all at the same time.

Feeling delightfully naughty, she pushed back from Brad and began to sway seductively as she sensuously pulled her tight black T-shirt off. Smiling wickedly, she undid her skirt and slid it slowly off, kicking it away.

Approaching him again, she resumed her passionate lip-lock with him, her huge, firm, bra-encased tits pressed firmly against his lightly haired chest. The dull flame was quickly becoming a raging forest fire of lust.

His hands slid around to her back and undid the straps to her voluminous tit-sling. It fell to the floor as he began to fondle her tits, his mouth travelling back and forth between her hard nipples and her eager mouth.

Bolts of pure ecstasy traveled through her body from the expert manipulation of her gigantic, creamy globes. She moaned in helpless pleasure, and he gently eased her to lay on the bed, slipping her panties off, but leaving her spike-heels on her feet. He stood and practically tore off his pants.

Now she knew why he walked funny. Thrusting from his crotch was the most enormous cock she'd ever seen, with enormous, orange- sized balls dangling below it. It was at least twelve inches long, and three inches thick. She stared at it with mingled horror and admiration. Her hormone driven admiration won.

"Love me, Brad." She begged, and he straddled her, stopping to give her a long, deep, LOVING kiss. Then he positioned himself, and thrust forward.

Belinda had no idea what to expect as her first sex as a woman - but nothing could have prepared her for what happened. Almost as a joke, Wexler had specially designed her cunt with not one, not two, but three clitoris'. One in it's normal place, on halfway down it's length, the other at it's end. And Brad's enormous cock hit all three with his strong thrust deep into her hot, wet cunt.

She screamed in ecstasy, hitting the high notes and shattering them. If not for the superb soundproofing of the room, it would have caused other guests to call the police. It seemed impossible for such a sound to come from a single human throat.

Brad Marlowe was a freak. Technically a undifferentiated triplet. Siamese twins or triples were linked together, but undifferentiated siblings were created when one, the 'dominate' absorbed the others. In some cases, it created a man with an extra limb, too many teeth, or a third eye. In Brad's case, he got the cock and balls of three men. Practically a virgin, he'd limited his sexual experience to horribly guilty trips to older hookers with extremely loose cunts, always afraid of injuring somebody.

At the sound of Belinda's teeth rattling scream, he stopped and began to roll off of her, sure he was killing her. He was stopped by and incredibly strong grip of her slender hands. He looked down into eyes burning with lust and pleasure.

"No. . " She moaned desperately. "Don't stop. . . PLEASE, don't stop. . . "

Realizing that it was the scream of ultimate pleasure, not ultimate pain, he began to thrust strongly, eagerly, happily into her.

"OH GOD! YES!" Belinda screamed in mindless ecstasy. Her back arched and she began to thrust back working her womanly hips like an expert. Waves of sheer pleasure shuddered through her body from the stimulation of her triple clits. She wrapped her long, supple legs around Brad's hips.

"I LOVE IT!" She screamed. "I Love it! I love. . . I love. . I love you. I love you Brad. Oh Brad, Love me " Her screamed slid down into throaty, passion filled moans as she concentrated all her energy into the rising flood of pleasure.

His huge, throbbing monster cock filled her completely, driving rational thought out of her mind. All she knew is that a man she found handsome, sweet and intelligent was also giving her the most incredibly perfect pleasure she'd ever experienced. Even in bed, his intelligence and kindness continued. Finally finding a woman who could accept his endowment, both physically and emotionally, he was determined to make this blonde goddess ultimately satisfied.

Like a maestro of sex, he kept bringing her close true orgasm, then sliding back down, varying depth and speed to keep her on the edge for an endless eternity. He had no way of realizing that after fifteen minutes, her foremost clit began to climax, sending orgasm through her equal to what any woman would feel.

"Uhn. . . UHNNNN. . Yes. Yes! YES! I LOVE you. . Harder, Harder " she gasped, her sweat-soaked hair flying as her head whipped back and forth.

The other clits kicked into orgasm ten minutes later, slightly out of sync. Instead of a series of multiple orgasms, Belinda's first experience as a sexual woman was a mind-blowing continuous orgasm that wracked her body like a thunderous detonation. Her cunt tightened violently around his monster cock, raising both their levels of orgasm. It caused Brad to cum, in a long, seemingly never- ending jet of hot sperm flooding into her cunt.

Gasping, Brad rolled off her supple, sweaty body as the aftershocks thundered through her body. She opened her eyes and looked up at him. "I love you, Brad" she said softly. She pulled his head down and claimed a kiss.

Brad lightly fondled one glorious tit. "I love you too, Belinda" he said, meaning it. So did she, for that matter. Exhausted by their epic lovemaking, they moved to the clean bed and collapsed into each other's arms, falling into a deep sleep. * * * * *

JUNE 21 - 9:20 a.m. Washington, D.C.

Belinda slowly swam back to consciousness, a warm glow filling her body. Her mind was no longer fighting itself - the unbelievable amount of pleasure last night had wiped away all resistance. Still intelligent, dedicated and skilled, she also knew - and accepted - that her new feminine life was permanent. And, as Belinda, she had found love. She stretched, and looked for Brad, her love.

Dressed in a bathrobe, and still damp from the shower, he was at the small breakfast nook setting the table. As she rose from the bed, he turned and smiled at her.

"Good morning." He gestured at the table. "Hungry?"

Belinda gave him an incredibly erotic look. "Um, I thought you'd never ask, darling" she said in a husky voice. With an unbelievably sensuous, feline stride she approached him - and knelt, opening his robe to let his rapidly stiffening cock spring free.

This time, she welcomed the pre-programmed flood of skill that filled her mind. Moaning with pleasure, her full, soft lips enclosed the massive, throbbing head of his cock, and her tongue began to expertly work on it, as her slender hands encircled the veined length of his huge shaft.

It was a reversal of last night. This time, SHE brought and held HIM at the very edge, working him expertly like a professional cock- sucker. She had to restrain a giggle at the thought that that was what she now was. She held him so long that his moans of pleasure became partial moans of pain, and he literally begged her for release.

She complied.

His cock jetted like a high-pressure fire-hose. Immediately, she knew her plan to swallow every drop of the unbelievably wonderful fluid was useless - the gushing steam was too much. She swallowed desperately as two fountains poured from the corners of her mouth, splattering across the broad expanse of her heaving tits. After seven seconds, she couldn't swallow fast enough, and risked drowning in his unbelievable spray of cum. She released her lips, and the stream splattered across her face, hair and chest, leaving her literally dripping with cum as Brad's cock stopped pumping.

The taste, texture and smell of his jism filled Belinda like the nectar of the Gods. She began to rub the warm liquid into the supple flesh of her enormous, cum-slicked breasts, and smiled up at Brad, her face and hair coated in his jism. She giggled.

"Time for a shower, I guess." She said, rising. Still playing with her tits, she swayed sexily to the bathroom and turned on the spray.

* * * * *

JUNE 21 - 10:21 p.m. Washington, D.C.

Belinda had hated to do that to Brad. But, she didn't want him involved. So, after a vigorous - and somewhat messy - marathon of sucking and fucking, she'd drugged his drink, and stolen his keys to the office. Sliding into the private entrance, she gone through the files and located what she needed to know. A couple of phone calls, routed through LA, had done the rest - now, Wexler, Olsen and Senator Johnson were gathered in Wexler's lab, holding a council of war.

Just then, there was a small 'bleep' from Belinda's pocket. She smiled, knowing that the sound indicated the carefully placed charges of paralyzing agent had gone off in the lab. She waited a carefully time twenty minutes to allow the nerve agent to clear. Then, smiling, she sauntered up to the lab, and let herself in.

Eight hours later, her grin much wider, she finished destroying the machine, and sauntered out into the warm summer air. After all, before Brad had passed out, he'd asked her to marry him.

And she said yes.

* * * * *

JULY 4 - 10:03 a.m. Smith Falls, North Dakota

Gary zipped up the new jeans, and turned, admiring the way they fit his muscular, 19 year old frame. As star quarterback of the school team, he had an image to maintain. Peeling them back of, he stood in his underwear and hung the jeans loosely on the hanger.

Just then, the locked door to the changing room rattled - and opened. Gary gaped as the sexy new salesclerk at the department store swiveled in, pulling the door shut. "What the hell?" he gasped.

The tall, slender, strikingly beautiful Eurasian woman smiled at him. "Sir, it's store policy to ensure we have completely satisfied customers." Still smiling, she dropped to her knees and pulled down his brief. His young cock sprung free, and she closed her full, sensuous lips around it.

Bill Wexler would have done anything to stop. But due to hypnotic programming, her new body gave every indication of enjoying the unbelievable, skillful blowjob it was giving the young customer. In short order, the man came, and although Bill wanted to throw up as the salty cum flooded her mouth, she smiled happily and swallowed every drop. Three weeks of performing the same service on every male customer gave her plenty of expertise. She'd already logged more than one-hundred and fifty blowjobs.

Helplessly, she licked his cock clean, then went out to the register to wait. When he emerged, she smiled at him and rang up his purchase. As he turned to leave, she helplessly called to him. "Thank you. Please, Cum again."

She knew he would. Ever since she started working, the store had got a hell of a lot of repeat business.

* * * * *

JULY 4 - 11:57 a.m. Las Vegas, Nevada

The stunning red-haired show-girl undid her sequined bra and let it drop. David drooled at the sight of her firm, large nipples DD-cup tits bobbing in front of him, and began to eagerly suck on them.

Rich Olsen wanted to die. Buxom show-girl at the casinos - hooker in her off hours. And the worst thing, she thought as the man's cock entered her sopping pussy, was what that bastard - bitch - had done to her. Although her body moved like a woman in ecstasy, she was in fact programmed to find any physical contact with a man terribly painful. Yet, she HAD to seek men out. She had no choice. At least, in her hours as a hooker.

Because, while she was a show-girl, she was a completely submissive lesbian lover to half the chorus line, programmed to get 'pleasure' from making one of the other girls orgasm every time they had a five-minute break between shows.

And, with her programmed skill, she usually did.

* * * * *

JULY 4 - 1:30 p.m. Los Angeles, California

Mr. Williams, the Gym teacher, looked around the playing field, frowning. Five of his students seemed to be missing. Hearing a muffled sound, he began to form an idea of where they might be. He headed over and ducked under the bleachers.

Sure enough, there were his students - and the new transfer student.

She lay naked on the ground, her long mane of hair spread in a golden fan. Her enormous GGG tits were pushed together by the student who was riding her bucking torso as he tit-fucked her. At each enormous tits, a girl sucked hungrily on her enormous nipples, gulping her warm, delicious milk. She was bucking because of the student powerfully fucking her cunt. And she didn't cry out in pleasure, because her mouth was full of cock.

Senator Johnson was gone. After two hours in her new body, her mind had disintegrated, leaving behind a cum-crazed teen. She loved her huge tits, her petite, slender body, her long, supple tongue. She lived to fuck. And, thanks to the very special pheromone glands she possessed, when she got horny - so did everyone else. The entire school had become sex-crazed maniacs, desperate to fuck her. Boys and girls, and all the staff, male and female, lusted after her body. And, she planned to satisfy them all. And, as more students lined up behind the masturbating Mr. Williams, awaiting their turn, one thing was for sure.

She was the most popular student at school.

The End...

BACK TO FUN ZONE

SUMMARY: While packing up an old house, one guy finds an old picture album and suddenly finds himself changing into the female in the pictures.

The Album

By Gunslinger

"...and this..." Dan said, grunting as he hefted the mildewed old cardboard box, "...is the last of them!"

Though the box was heavy enough, no visible sign of strain showed as James took the box from his much leaner built friend. Indeed, the massively muscled young man made it look easy as he carried the box from the ladder leading up into the attic over to the table in the center of the room.

"It's about time..." James Arbuckle comments, easily placing the heavy old box on the aged roughened surface of the old table. "I swear, the previous owner of this place had a severe case of 'Packratitis'!"

"Tell me about it..." Dan halfmoaned.

The lean, sandy haired young man rubbed gingerly at his aching back. "On the other hand, I think that this has earned us another 'beer break', don't you..."

James paused, midreach, in unloading the box, a look of regret crossing his broad, not unattractive face.

"Oh I, uh, finished them off 'bout a halfhour ago..." The tall, dark haired man admitted.

Dan rolled his eyes, and headed over towards the sideboard, where his keys and wallet rested.

"Okay, okay that makes it my turn..." Dan said. "I don't think this is really fair, though us splitting all the costs fiftyfifty.

I mean, sure, I couldn't have afforded this place on my own, and neither could you but when it comes to food and beer, you end up getting nearly twice as much as I do..."

Grinning, James struck an exaggerated version of the classic 'muscle man' pose, one fist hand curled upwards, the other curled down and planted on his hip.

"That's because I'm twice the man you are, girlyboy..."

James intoned in his best Austrian accent which wasn't very good, but good enough to make Dan laugh.

"Okay, okay don't rub it in!" Dan chuckled, pulling on his denim jacket. "I'll be back in a bit..."

"...and I'll be here." James assured the sandyhaired young man. Dan threw a mocking salute towards his best friend and now roommate, then headed for the front door of the nearly centuryold redbrick bungalow they'd pooled their money together to buy.

As the wooden screen door slammed shut behind Dan, James shook his head, and resumed unloading the box.

The house had come completely furnished with furniture that had been brandnew when the house had been built. It was still in generally good condition, and the guys were planning to use it for the moment, replacing it one piece at a time as finances allowed. On the other hand, the basement and attic had been crammed full of all sorts of 'junk', and the guys had decided against merely throwing it away, instead deciding to go through it in hopes of finding anything worth pawning or selling.

The old couple who'd owned this house had passed away with no heirs, so everything had come with the house so, James and Dan had the right to sell it. The downside, of course, was having to sort through the junk...

Now, James went through the box, which turned out to contain mostly books explaining why it had been so heavy. Truth be told, James was amazed the bottom hadn't torn out of the box when Dan had handed it down from the attic.

Underneath all the books, however, was something else. At first glance, it appeared to be a very old 'school notebook' of lined paper, It was, however, oddly... 'lumpy', and when James idly flipped it open, he discovered why.

It had been used as a photo album.

Aged and badly photos had been glued to the ruled paper inside, and James idly flipped through the pages, peering closer in hopes of making out the faded images on the yellowed film. One page in particular caught his eye, and the massively muscled young man leaned forward and peered closely at the remnant of an image.

"Hey a pinup photo...!" He exclaimed to himself. "Looks like it was taken sometime in the Forties..."

Suddenly, Jimmy's head snapped up, and a puzzled frown creased his face as he peered around the combined living/diningroom of the old house.

"Musta been the wind..." He finally muttered to himself though, never before in his life had he heard a gust of wind sound eerily like a female voice whispering 'fortyfour...'

"That's just too creepy..." Jimmy muttered to himself. Pushing himself up from the battered wooden table, he decided to head into the kitchen and fix some 'munchies' for when Dan got back with the beer. His heavy workboots 'clonk'ing on the old floor, he headed into the next room.

With both Dan and himself being quintessential bachelors, Jimmy didn't even bother opening the fridge the only thing in there was basically condiments. Instead, he opened up one of the cabinets and began surveying the possible assortment of food that came in box, can or bag. Cocking his head, he idly flipped a long strand of very dark auburn hair out of his face as he looked over the...

"What the hell...?" Jimmy shouted as realization caught up with reality. His broad, blunttingered hands flew to his head and buried themselves in a long, thick mane of hair that shouldn't have been there.

"How the... It isn't possible!" He exclaimed, running his fingers through the long, thick hair. "Hair can't grow that fast! It just... can't!"

Not bothering to close the cabinet, Jimmy turned and hurried off towards the bathroom despite what his fingers were reporting to him, and the fact that he could pull a hank of the dark, reddishbrown hair around in front of him, what he felt the need for at the moment was a mirror he needed to 'see it to believe it'.

Reaching the bathroom, he flipped on the light switch and stared at the mirror in shock.

His hair was longer but it had also changed during the rush to the bathroom. No longer was it 'just' a long mane of dark auburn hair somehow, impossibly, it had managed to arrange itself into an elaborately styled hairdo of a particular, archaic type.

"My hair...!" Jimmy gasped.

<My hair...> a voice whispered.

There was no pretending it was the wind, this time...

The voice. The old fashioned hairstyle Jinny's eyes widened in shocked realization.

"The photo!" He gasped not even noticing his voice was somewhat softer and higher pitched than it should have been. "Somehow, this all started when I looked at the photo!"

Leaving the bathroom, Jinny hurried towards the table. He looked down at the makeshift 'photo album' still laid open on the table and gasped when he realized the picture had changed somewhat.

"That's it!" He exclaimed then gasped as the altered sound of his voice reached his ears and registered on his brain. Face contorting in an odd mixture of fear and anger, he reached out, intending to tear the photo from the 'album' and tear it into a million tiny pieces...

...and then he fell down.

For several long seconds he simply stared in confused disbelief at his feet except that they weren't his feet. No, he had big, broad feet not tiny, delicate feet, clad in highheeled black patent leather pumps.

"No..." He whispered. "No, this can't be happening..."

Then his eyes bulged, and a strangled shriek emerged from his throat because his pant legs were slowly, but undeniably, rising higher on his legs while his worksocks were darkening and becoming a finer material as they slowly followed his cuffs in crawling up his legs.

"I.. I need to call somebody... Call for help..." Jinny babbled to himself in his throaty, femininesounding voice.

After a few seconds of futile tugging at shoes that refused to leave his altered feet, he began to crawl on hands and knees towards the kitchen, even as he felt the lines and contours of his body changing, the muscle slowly melting away.

<Just give in...> The Voice urged and to his horror, Jinny realized how much it sounded like his own, altered voice. <Surrender I promise it'll be a life of pleasure, like nothing you can imagine...>

Please stop... Please..." Jinny babbled, crawling blindly towards the phone.

<Oh, no...> The Voice chuckled. <This is MY house, mine and my sisters. They should never have arrested us, taken the house away from us today, nobody would think twice about my sisters and I, about out... desires. Our... womanly needs. Back then, though... we were 'crazy'...>

'I've been possessed by an insane ghost...!' Jinny thought to himself, half incoherently.

Reaching the kitchen, Jinny reached upwards with one arm that was considerably slimmer and less muscular than it should have been, and laboriously hauled his lighter body up to a teetering sort of balance atop the sixinch heels of the damned shoes he was wearing. He reached for the phone...

...and wanted to cry when he felt some sort of resistance meet his hand, keeping it from touching the phone. He stared in horror at the reflection that rippled and wavered in the chrome of the electric kettle an reflection in black and white, and certainly not his own.

<Ah, ah, ah...> The Voice chided. <None of that... NOW COME HERE!>

Ginny whimpered as his traitorous feet turned, and helplessly began to carry him back towards the table. He struggled, fighting every step, but his altered legs, now smooth and silkysoft, enclosed in kneehigh black nylons that were continuing to creep up his legs, refused to accept his commands. He could slow the pace, but Ginny couldn't stop himself from walking towards the album on the table.

With each step, Ginny could feel the continuing changes to his body the growing pressure behind what had once been a plain white Tshirt, now in the midst of becoming... something else, even as the flesh behind the writhing material bulged steadily outwards.

As much as his gibbering mind tried to deny it, he was growing breasts even as the sensations under the shrinking and tightening fabric over his crotch told him his manhood was steadily shrinking away.

He was becoming a woman.

Worse he was becoming her.

The Voice.

The longdead woman who spoke of her feminine wants and desires the things she would want him/her/them to do once the unmistakably feminine transformation Ginny was undergoing reached its inevitable conclusion.

"That's right, sweetcheeks..."

The Voice said but not as a whisper, but coming from Ginny's helpless, horrified mouth. "We're going to have fun. Lots and lots of wonderful, pleasurable, exciting fun..."

Ginny wanted to protest, to beg for a release, to even offer this body for her use if she'd just 'eject' him from it, even if it were into limbo or even death but Ginny had no voice to speak with, and no voice to give words to his horror and dismay.

His... no, her altered body came to a stop at the table, now balancing easily and sensuously atop the heels as he/she/they looked down at the photograph in the album.

"Hey, goodlooking..." Ginny said, helplessly. "Long time, no be..."

Then she chuckled throatily, a rich and sensual sound... laced with the sharp edge of rampant insanity that was no longer 'hers' completely as 'he' faced the horror of what life had become...

* * * * *

Shifting the car into 'park', Dan turned the key and extracted it from the ignition. Whistling cheerfully to himself, the rangy, sandyhaired young man hit the button on the driver's door that popped the trunk, then slid out of the car, closing and locking the door behind him.

Walking around to the back of the car, he reached in and grabbed the case of twentyfour icecold bottles of Molson Canadian the guys choice of 'imported' beers. Using one elbow to slam the trunk, Dan lugged the case of beer towards the front door of the redbrick bungalow. Idly noting that the lawn could use mowing, he braced the case of beer against the wall and used one knee to balance it as he pulled the woodframed screen door open with the thusfreed hand, then did that specific little juggling act as he swung the door wide open, then got his hand back on the case of beer in time to get inside before the screen door could swing shut.

That particular little maneuver was always a little nervewracking for Dan unlike James, the leaner blond didn't have the physical strength to hold the case onehanded at that angle. If he'd missed his grip, he would have dropped the beer. Satisfied at how adroitly he'd managed the maneuver this time, he walked into the living room...

...and dropped the case of beer.

The sound of bottles smashing and pressurized beer foaming across the hardwood floor didn't even register on Dan's conscious mind.

"Who...?" He stammered. "How...? I.. You.. erm..."

The gorgeous, stunningly wellendowed redhead reclining on the paisleypattern chaise loveseat let her full, beestung lips curl up in a seductive smile.

"Hey there, sailor..." She cooed in a sultry, smoky voice, rich with promise. "You looking to show a girl a good time...?"

"I... Er... Uh..." Dan stammered, brain still trying to accept the information his eyes were giving him eyes that were eagerly tracing the curvaceous form elegantly and erotically reclined before him.

"I'll take that as a 'yes'..." She said, with a seductive chuckle. Gracefully, she swiveled her shapely, nylonclad legs around, and rose to her full height atop the slender, sixinch high heels of her black patentleather pumps.

Slowly, broad hips swaying, the huge breasts visibly jiggling even in the confines of her red and black corset, she walked glided! Towards him, those full lips still curled in that oh so promising, oh so wicked little smile.

"The name's 'Ginger', Dan like the spice." She said, licking her full lips as one hand, no accidentally, rose to lightly trace a long-nailed finger across the creamy swell of one magnificent breast. "You do like things... spicy, don't you?"

All things considered, it didn't even occur to Dan to wonder how this impossible vision knew his name. The fact that she was here, and quite obviously hitting on him, was 'unbelievable' enough for such a minor fact to be unimportant. His eyes once more flicked down to the incredible tits filling out what had to be a custom-made corset...

...and so he missed the look of horror, disgust, and fear that suddenly flashed across 'Ginger's' face. She opened her mouth as if to speak...

...and then her hand quickly, but gracefully, lashed out and wrapped around the back of his neck, pulling his head forward as her luscious, open lips quickly met his. If he'd had any capability for surprise left, he might have wondered about the brief pause then, as if she were actually fighting the kiss rather than eagerly initiating it but then her tongue, long, supple, and eager, slipped into his mouth, and any possible consideration faded as she hungrily and eagerly kissed him.

Breaking the kiss, her lips once more curved into that wicked smile, and she sinuously strutted back over to the chaise. With obvious intent, she struck a provocative pose, leaning forward and looking coyly back over her own shoulder with a lascivious look.

"Well, Dan...?" Ginger prompted. "Aren't you going to help a gal out of her corset...?"

There was no subtlety at all in her manner, pose, words, expression, all of it told Dan that Ginger wanted him, and wanted him now and there was no earthly way that he could possibly tell what else might be going on inside of 'her' mind, so he could be more than forgiven for taking her up on an offer that she certainly seemed to be presenting with every fiber of her being. Still bemused, wondering if this was some sort of dream, he walked over to where the incredible, luscious redhead stood, his jeans almost painfully tight over the rapidly swelling hardon he was acquiring. With sweat-soaked hands, he fumbled with the unfamiliar fasteners of her heavy-duty silk-satisfying corset, while she murmured encouragement full of sensual promise.

As soon as the confining support garment fell away, Ginger turned and struck the ageold pose hands at her side, hip cock, one leg slightly bent. Her breasts, large as they were, sat high and proud on her chest, and she rolled her shoulders back to emphasize her endowments.

"You haven't been able to keep your eyes off my bosom since you walked in..." She said, huskily. "Well, you want them and I want you to want them, bigboy..."

'Bosom...?' Dan thought to himself, but it was an idle thought as he reached out and began to fondle the softly firm flesh of her huge tits. She moaned in response, throwing her head back so the look of shock and surprise wasn't visible to Dan as he bent forward to suck hungrily at one incredibly full, erect nipple.

"God, my breasts are so sensitive." She moaned, and Dan could be forgiven for missing the strange mixture of gloating, teasing triumph and surprise. She chuckled, a wicked sound. "It's almost as if, somehow, they were created so extrasensitive, just so I could experience impossibly intense pleasure from having men play with them..."

That struck Dan as a bit odd... but he didn't have time to dwell on it.

"As good as it feels, though, what I really want is a hard manhood in my cunny..." She cooed, licking her lips hungrily as she pulled slightly away from him but only so that she could turn and bend herself over the arm of the chaise, her shapely, nylonclad legs spread invitingly.

"Take me, Dan take me now!" She allbutbegged.

Dan had no urge whatsoever to refuse her. His hands hurriedly attacked his clothing, stripping it off with such haste that it was almost painful not that he noticed. The only thing that mattered at the moment was the raging erection he had and the allsoobvious 'solution' to that 'problem', so eagerly and openly offered. Stepping between her spread legs, he grabbed her by the hips and plunged his hard, throbbing cock deep into the warm, wet embrace of her sopping cunt.

"Yes!" She cried. "Take me, Dan take me long and hard! Pleasure me!"

Dan eagerly obeyed, his hips driving as he pistoned his cock into her almost preternaturally tight, soft pussy. Her body rocked with each thrust, her magnificent, dangling tits swaying and bouncing. She moaned and gasped in obvious pleasure as he thrust into her, and the only thing 'out of place' was some of her words, but Dan wasn't even listening...

"So long waited so long..." She moaned, body writhing as pleasure thrummed through her. "Made myself so sensitive.. made myself for pleasure and you're loving it too, aren't you...? God, Dan yes, yes! ...You don't want to, but you can't... oh yes! ...can't help yourself. Feels... God, more, more!... feels too good to fight..."

If Dan had been paying attention, he might have thought that moan and gasp laced monologue strange... and if he'd been paying attention, he might have found the shift in vocal inflection and words that came next even stranger, for though it was the same voice, it was almost as if another mind was using it...

"Fuck.. so good... so much pleasure... Ungh, ungh, ohhh! ...can't.. can't believe... getting fucked.. by best friend...feel so... so good... Oh! Oh! Don't want.. but.. can't.. resist.. Oh, God, YES!..."

She panted for several seconds, then something happened to her something Dan couldn't have seen, even if he'd been in any sort of mind to notice a strange look of confusion, lust, and excitement crossed her face.

"Fuck me, Dan! Fuck me hard! ...ungh, YES! ...Fuck my brains out, buddy I need it!" She cried. "I can't fuckin' ...OH, GOD! ...fight, she made it feel too... Oh, fucking HELL, yes! ...too good! Oh, God, buddy fuck me! Make me CUM...."

Then she/he/they stopped talking all together as orgasm grew closer, and he/she/they gave themselves over completely to the building ecstasy. Moans, gasps, and wordless screams of pleasure came from her throat as orgasm neared and, no matter how you cut it, it was purely pleasure that held sway in her jiggling, bouncing, writhing body.

Then, nearly simultaneously, orgasm hit each of them, and they spent endless seconds giving expression to pleasure using sounds that predated language...

Slowly, as Dan came back to himself, he realized he was sitting on the chaise, Ginger's lush, naked body wrapped around his own. One of her slender hands held the wrist of his right hand, holding it to her breast, where he was almost instinctively fondling and squeezing it. Her lips were kissing him, not just on his own lips, but roaming over his neck, chest and face, as she muttered softly, half to him, half to herself...

"So good... didn't know... couldn't know... just as she promised..." She murmured softly, almost bemused, between kisses.

Dan caught her full, soft lips for a long, deep kiss, then sighed in replete pleasure as the kiss broke.

"God, Ginger that was amazing..." He said and then, reality slowly began to reassert itself.

"Er.. not that I'm complaining, mind you but...who are you? I mean... where did you come from? Hey...! For that matter, where's James? Is he a friend... but, no, I'd know you if..."

She stopped his steadily more confused questions with a long kiss. When she pulled away, Dan was surprised by the look on her face an odd mix of many emotions, including... sympathy? But why...?

"Oh, buddy you have no idea how fantastic that was, how great you made me feel." She sighed. "You don't can't! know how fantastic it feels... yet."

"Huh...?" Dan grunted, puzzled.

She smiled softly at him half promise, half... regret?

"Oh, God, pal I can't fight her. She makes it feel too good, too wonderful. All she cares about is pleasure... and so that's all I'm built to feel, no matter what I might have wanted. Pleasure... like none you imagined you could feel. You won't be able to help yourself you'll see..."

She gave his hand, still on her huge tit, a squeeze, moaning in obvious pleasure.

"I loved getting fucked by you..." She told him sounding strangely.. surprised, among other thing. "It was wonderful, and I wish oh, God, how I wish I could spend forever doing it again and again with you. Of any man I could have fuck me, I wish it could be you, all the time.. and it would be all the time, buddy, 'cause I can't help myself. I.. I guess, I'm a slut now, pal, just unable to help myself the pleasure, you see, it's... addictive. You and I.. well, it'll be a life of sex, sex, sex... and we'll love every minute of it whether we want to or not."

"I... don't understand..." Dan admitted, giving her a sidelong look.

She sighed, and gave him that soft, sorrowful smile again.

"Oh, you will." She assure him. "Her sister my sister is just to eager to let me let you give me all that pleasure.

I desperately want to tell you I'm sorry... but, you see, I can't. Not when I know how good it's going to be for you...but at least we'll still be together, in a way..."

"What are you talking about...?" Dan demanded, starting to get exasperated, incredibly hot babe or not.

"That..." Ginger said, with a sigh, pointing...

"This?" Dan said, in confusion, glancing at where she was pointing.

"I don't get it..." he said, annoyance in his voice, as he looked up from the faded old photograph under Ginger's in the old lined notebook. What's going on, anyway?"

"It won't be long before you understand before you surrender..." Ginger told him. "Trust me, it'll be easier if you don't try to fight it. Just... give in, and look forward to a life of mindaltering pleasure that'll steal you away no matter your old convictions especially since Daisy has decided she wants to love sucking cock, too..."

"What the hell are you talking about...?" Danny demanded, idly flipping a long, goldenblonde lock of hair out of his face...

BACK TO FUN ZONE

SUMMARY: While packing up an old house, one guy finds an old picture album and suddenly finds himself changing into the female in the pictures.

The Album

By Gunslinger

"...and this..." Dan said, grunting as he hefted the mildewed old cardboard box, "...is the last of them!"

Though the box was heavy enough, no visible sign of strain showed as James took the box from his much leanerbuilt friend. Indeed, the massively muscled young man made it look easy as he carried the box from the ladder leading up into the attic over to the table in the center of the room.

"It's about time..." James Arbuckle comments, easily placing the heavy old box on the ageroughened surface of the old table. "I swear, the previous owner of this place had a severe case of 'Packratitis'!"

"Tell me about it..." Dan halfmoaned.

The lean, sandyhaired young man rubbed gingerly at his aching back. "On the other hand, I think that this has earned us another 'beer break', don't you..."

James paused, midreach, in unloading the box, a look of regret crossing his broad, not unattractive face.

"Oh I, uh, finished them off 'bout a halfhour ago..." The tall, darkhaired man admitted.

Dan rolled his eyes, and headed over towards the sideboard, where his keys and wallet rested.

"Okay, okay that makes it my turn..." Dan said. "I don't think this is really fair, though us splitting all the costs fiftyfifty.

I mean, sure, I couldn't have afforded this place on my own, and neither could you but when it comes to food and beer, you end up getting nearly twice as much as I do..."

Grinning, James struck an exaggerated version of the classic 'muscle man' pose, one fisted hand curled upwards, the other curled down and planted on his hip.

"That's because I'm twice the man you are, girlyboy..."

James intoned in his best Austrian accent which wasn't very good, but good enough to make Dan laugh.

"Okay, okay don't rub it in!" Dan chuckled, pulling on his denim jacket. "I'll be back in a bit..."

"...and I'll be here." James assured the sandyhaired young man. Dan threw a mocking salute towards his best friend and now roommate, then headed for the front door of the nearly centuryold redbrick bungalow they'd pooled their money together to buy.

As the wooden screen door slammed shut behind Dan, James shook his head, and resumed unloading the box.

The house had come completely furnished with furniture that had been brandnew when the house had been built. It was still in generally good condition, and the guys were planning to use it for the moment, replacing it one piece at a time as finances allowed. On the other hand, the basement and attic had been crammed full of all sorts of 'junk', and the guys had decided against merely throwing it away, instead deciding to go through it in hopes of finding anything worth pawning or selling.

The old couple who'd owned this house had passed away with no heirs, so everything had come with the house so, James and Dan had the right to sell it. The downside, of course, was having to sort through the junk...

Now, James went through the box, which turned out to contain mostly books explaining why it had been so heavy. Truth be told, James was amazed the bottom hadn't torn out of the box when Dan had handed it down from the attic.

Underneath all the books, however, was something else. At first glance, it appeared to be a very old 'school notebook' of lined paper. It was, however, oddly... 'lumpy', and when James idly flipped it open, he discovered why.

It had been used as a photo album.

Aged and badly photos had been glued to the ruled paper inside, and James idly flipped through the pages, peering closer in hopes of making out the faded images on the yellowed film. One page in particular caught his eye, and the massively muscled young man leaned forward and peered closely at the remnant of an image.

"Hey a pinup photo...!" He exclaimed to himself. "Looks like it was taken sometime in the Forties..."

Suddenly, Jimmy's head snapped up, and a puzzled frown creased his face as he peered around the combined living/diningroom of the old house.

"Musta been the wind..." He finally muttered to himself though, never before in his life had he heard a gust of wind sound eerily like a female voice whispering 'fortyfour...'

"That's just too creepy..." Jimmy muttered to himself. Pushing himself up from the battered wooden table, he decided to head into the kitchen and fix some 'munchies' for when Dan got back with the beer. His heavy workboots 'clonk'ing on the old floor, he headed into the next room.

With both Dan and himself being quintessential bachelors, Jimmy didn't even bother opening the fridge the only thing in there was basically condiments. Instead, he opened up one of the cabinets and began surveying the possible assortment of food that came in box, can or bag. Cocking his head, he idly flipped a long strand of very dark auburn hair out of his face as he looked over the...

"What the hell...?" Jimmy shouted as realization caught up with reality. His broad, bluntygered hands flew to his head and buried themselves in a long, thick mane of hair that shouldn't have been there.

"How the... It isn't possible!" He exclaimed, running his fingers through the long, thick hair. "Hair can't grow that fast! It just... can't!"

Not bothering to close the cabinet, Jimmy turned and hurried off towards the bathroom despite what his fingers were reporting to him, and the fact that he could pull a hank of the dark, reddishbrown hair around in front of him, what he felt the need for at the moment was a mirror he needed to 'see it to believe it'.

Reaching the bathroom, he flipped on the light switch and stared at the mirror in shock.

His hair was longer but it had also changed during the rush to the bathroom. No longer was it 'just' a long mane of dark auburn hair somehow, impossibly, it had managed to arrange itself into an elaborately styled hairdo of a particular, archaic type.

"My hair...!" Jimmy gasped.

<My hair...> a voice whispered.

There was no pretending it was the wind, this time...

The voice. The old-fashioned hairstyle Jinny's eyes widened in shocked realization.

"The photo!" He gasped not even noticing his voice was somewhat softer and higher pitched than it should have been. "Somehow, this all started when I looked at the photo!"

Leaving the bathroom, Jinny hurried towards the table. He looked down at the makeshift 'photo album' still laid open on the table and gasped when he realized the picture had changed somewhat.

"That's it!" He exclaimed then gasped as the altered sound of his voice reached his ears and registered on his brain. Face contorting in an odd mixture of fear and anger, he reached out, intending to tear the photo from the 'album' and tear it into a million tiny pieces...

...and then he fell down.

For several long seconds he simply stared in confused disbelief at his feet except that they weren't his feet. No, he had big, broad feet not tiny, delicate feet, clad in highheeled black patent leather pumps.

"No..." He whispered. "No, this can't be happening..."

Then his eyes bulged, and a strangled shriek emerged from his throat because his pant legs were slowly, but undeniably, rising higher on his legs while his worksocks were darkening and becoming a finer material as they slowly followed his cuffs in crawling up his legs.

"I.. I need to call somebody... Call for help..." Jinny babbled to himself in his throaty, femininesounding voice.

After a few seconds of futile tugging at shoes that refused to leave his altered feet, he began to crawl on hands and knees towards the kitchen, even as he felt the lines and contours of his body changing, the muscle slowly melting away.

<Just give in...> The Voice urged and to his horror, Jinny realized how much it sounded like his own, altered voice. <Surrender I promise it'll be a life of pleasure, like nothing you can imagine...>

Please stop... Please..." Jinny babbled, crawling blindly towards the phone.

<Oh, no...> The Voice chuckled. <This is MY house, mine and my sisters. They should never have arrested us, taken the house away from us today, nobody would think twice about my sisters and I, about out... desires. Our... womanly needs. Back then, though... we were 'crazy'...>

'I've been possessed by an insane ghost...!' Jinny thought to himself, half incoherently.

Reaching the kitchen, Jinny reached upwards with one arm that was considerably slimmer and less muscular than it should have been, and laboriously hauled his lighter body up to a teetering sort of balance atop the sixinch heels of the damned shoes he was wearing. He reached for the phone...

...and wanted to cry when he felt some sort of resistance meet his hand, keeping it from touching the phone. He stared in horror at the reflection that rippled and wavered in the chrome of the electric kettle an reflection in black and white, and certainly not his own.

<Ah, ah, ah...> The Voice chided. <None of that... NOW COME HERE!>

Ginny whimpered as his traitorous feet turned, and helplessly began to carry him back towards the table. He struggled, fighting every step, but his altered legs, now smooth and silkysoft, enclosed in kneehigh black nylons that were continuing to creep up his legs, refused to accept his commands. He could slow the pace, but Ginny couldn't stop himself from walking towards the album on the table.

With each step, Ginny could feel the continuing changes to his body the growing pressure behind what had once been a plain white Tshirt, now in the midst of becoming... something else, even as the flesh behind the writhing material bulged steadily outwards.

As much as his gibbering mind tried to deny it, he was growing breasts even as the sensations under the shrinking and tightening fabric over his crotch told him his manhood was steadily shrinking away.

He was becoming a woman.

Worse he was becoming her.

The Voice.

The longdead woman who spoke of her feminine wants and desires the things she would want him/her/them to do once the unmistakably feminine transformation Ginny was undergoing reached its inevitable conclusion.

"That's right, sweetcheeks..."

The Voice said but not as a whisper, but coming from Ginny's helpless, horrified mouth. "We're going to have fun. Lots and lots of wonderful, pleasurable, exciting fun..."

Ginny wanted to protest, to beg for a release, to even offer this body for her use if she'd just 'eject' him from it, even if it were into limbo or even death but Ginny had no voice to speak with, and no voice to give words to his horror and dismay.

His... no, her altered body came to a stop at the table, now balancing easily and sensuously atop the heels as he/she/they looked down at the photograph in the album.

"Hey, goodlooking..." Ginny said, helplessly. "Long time, no be..."

Then she chuckled throatily, a rich and sensual sound... laced with the sharp edge of rampant insanity that was no longer 'hers' completely as 'he' faced the horror of what life had become...

* * * * *

Shifting the car into 'park', Dan turned the key and extracted it from the ignition. Whistling cheerfully to himself, the rangy, sandyhaired young man hit the button on the driver's door that popped the trunk, then slid out of the car, closing and locking the door behind him.

Walking around to the back of the car, he reached in and grabbed the case of twentyfour icecold bottles of Molson Canadian the guys choice of 'imported' beers. Using one elbow to slam the trunk, Dan lugged the case of beer towards the front door of the redbrick bungalow. Idly noting that the lawn could use mowing, he braced the case of beer against the wall and used one knee to balance it as he pulled the woodframed screen door open with the thusfreed hand, then did that specific little juggling act as he swung the door wide open, then got his hand back on the case of beer in time to get inside before the screen door could swing shut.

That particular little maneuver was always a little nervewracking for Dan unlike James, the leaner blond didn't have the physical strength to hold the case onehanded at that angle. If he'd missed his grip, he would have dropped the beer. Satisfied at how adroitly he'd managed the maneuver this time, he walked into the living room...

...and dropped the case of beer.

The sound of bottles smashing and pressurized beer foaming across the hardwood floor didn't even register on Dan's conscious mind.

"Who...?" He stammered. "How...? I.. You.. erm..."

The gorgeous, stunningly wellendowed redhead reclining on the paisleypattern chaise loveseat let her full, beestung lips curl up in a seductive smile.

"Hey there, sailor..." She cooed in a sultry, smoky voice, rich with promise. "You looking to show a girl a good time...?"

"I... Er... Uh..." Dan stammered, brain still trying to accept the information his eyes were giving him eyes that were eagerly tracing the curvaceous form elegantly and erotically reclined before him.

"I'll take that as a 'yes'..." She said, with a seductive chuckle. Gracefully, she swiveled her shapely, nylonclad legs around, and rose to her full height atop the slender, sixinch high heels of her black patentleather pumps.

Slowly, broad hips swaying, the huge breasts visibly jiggling even in the confines of her red and black corset, she walked glided! Towards him, those full lips still curled in that oh so promising, oh so wicked little smile.

"The name's 'Ginger', Dan like the spice." She said, licking her full lips as one hand, no accidentally, rose to lightly trace a long-nailed finger across the creamy swell of one magnificent breast. "You do like things... spicy, don't you?"

All things considered, it didn't even occur to Dan to wonder how this impossible vision knew his name. The fact that she was here, and quite obviously hitting on him, was 'unbelievable' enough for such a minor fact to be unimportant. His eyes once more flicked down to the incredible tits filling out what had to be a custom-made corset...

...and so he missed the look of horror, disgust, and fear that suddenly flashed across 'Ginger's' face. She opened her mouth as if to speak...

...and then her hand quickly, but gracefully, lashed out and wrapped around the back of his neck, pulling his head forward as her luscious, open lips quickly met his. If he'd had any capability for surprise left, he might have wondered about the brief pause then, as if she were actually fighting the kiss rather than eagerly initiating it but then her tongue, long, supple, and eager, slipped into his mouth, and any possible consideration faded as she hungrily and eagerly kissed him.

Breaking the kiss, her lips once more curved into that wicked smile, and she sinuously strutted back over to the chaise. With obvious intent, she struck a provocative pose, leaning forward and looking coyly back over her own shoulder with a lascivious look.

"Well, Dan...?" Ginger prompted. "Aren't you going to help a gal out of her corset...?"

There was no subtlety at all in her manner, pose, words, expression, all of it told Dan that Ginger wanted him, and wanted him now and there was no earthly way that he could possibly tell what else might be going on inside of 'her' mind, so he could be more than forgiven for taking her up on an offer that she certainly seemed to be presenting with every fiber of her being. Still bemused, wondering if this was some sort of dream, he walked over to where the incredible, luscious redhead stood, his jeans almost painfully tight over the rapidly swelling hardon he was acquiring. With sweat-slick hands, he fumbled with the unfamiliar fasteners of her heavy-duty silk-satisfying corset, while she murmured encouragement full of sensual promise.

As soon as the confining support garment fell away, Ginger turned and struck the ageold pose hands at her side, hip cock, one leg slightly bent. Her breasts, large as they were, sat high and proud on her chest, and she rolled her shoulders back to emphasize her endowments.

"You haven't been able to keep your eyes off my bosom since you walked in..." She said, huskily. "Well, you want them and I want you to want them, bigboy..."

'Bosom...?' Dan thought to himself, but it was an idle thought as he reached out and began to fondle the softly firm flesh of her huge tits. She moaned in response, throwing her head back so the look of shock and surprise wasn't visible to Dan as he bent forward to suck hungrily at one incredibly full, erect nipple.

"God, my breasts are so sensitive." She moaned, and Dan could be forgiven for missing the strange mixture of gloating, teasing triumph and surprise. She chuckled, a wicked sound. "It's almost as if, somehow, they were created so extrasensitive, just so I could experience impossibly intense pleasure from having men play with them..."

That struck Dan as a bit odd... but he didn't have time to dwell on it.

"As good as it feels, though, what I really want is a hard manhood in my cunny..." She cooed, licking her lips hungrily as she pulled slightly away from him but only so that she could turn and bend herself over the arm of the chaise, her shapely, nylonclad legs spread invitingly.

"Take me, Dan take me now!" She allbutbegged.

Dan had no urge whatsoever to refuse her. His hands hurriedly attacked his clothing, stripping it off with such haste that it was almost painful not that he noticed. The only thing that mattered at the moment was the raging erection he had and the allsoobvious 'solution' to that 'problem', so eagerly and openly offered. Stepping between her spread legs, he grabbed her by the hips and plunged his hard, throbbing cock deep into the warm, wet embrace of her sopping cunt.

"Yes!" She cried. "Take me, Dan take me long and hard! Pleasure me!"

Dan eagerly obeyed, his hips driving as he pistoned his cock into her almost preternaturally tight, soft pussy. Her body rocked with each thrust, her magnificent, dangling tits swaying and bouncing. She moaned and gasped in obvious pleasure as he thrust into her, and the only thing 'out of place' was some of her words, but Dan wasn't even listening...

"So long waited so long..." She moaned, body writhing as pleasure thrummed through her. "Made myself so sensitive.. made myself for pleasure and you're loving it too, aren't you...? God, Dan yes, yes! ...You don't want to, but you can't... oh yes! ...can't help yourself. Feels... God, more, more!... feels too good to fight..."

If Dan had been paying attention, he might have thought that moan and gasp laced monologue strange... and if he'd been paying attention, he might have found the shift in vocal inflection and words that came next even stranger, for though it was the same voice, it was almost as if another mind was using it...

"Fuck.. so good... so much pleasure... Ungh, ungh, ohhh! ...can't.. can't believe... getting fucked.. by best friend...feel so... so good... Oh! Oh! Don't want.. but.. can't.. resist.. Oh, God, YES!..."

She panted for several seconds, then something happened to her something Dan couldn't have seen, even if he'd been in any sort of mind to notice a strange look of confusion, lust, and excitement crossed her face.

"Fuck me, Dan! Fuck me hard! ...ungh, YES! ...Fuck my brains out, buddy I need it!" She cried. "I can't fuckin' ...OH, GOD! ...fight, she made it feel too... Oh, fucking HELL, yes! ...too good! Oh, God, buddy fuck me! Make me CUM...."

Then she/he/they stopped talking all together as orgasm grew closer, and he/she/they gave themselves over completely to the building ecstasy. Moans, gasps, and wordless screams of pleasure came from her throat as orgasm neared and, no matter how you cut it, it was purely pleasure that held sway in her jiggling, bouncing, writhing body.

Then, nearly simultaneously, orgasm hit each of them, and they spent endless seconds giving expression to pleasure using sounds that predated language...

Slowly, as Dan came back to himself, he realized he was sitting on the chaise, Ginger's lush, naked body wrapped around his own. One of her slender hands held the wrist of his right hand, holding it to her breast, where he was almost instinctively fondling and squeezing it. Her lips were kissing him, not just on his own lips, but roaming over his neck, chest and face, as she muttered softly, half to him, half to herself...

"So good... didn't know... couldn't know... just as she promised..." She murmured softly, almost bemused, between kisses.

Dan caught her full, soft lips for a long, deep kiss, then sighed in replete pleasure as the kiss broke.

"God, Ginger that was amazing..." He said and then, reality slowly began to reassert itself.

"Er.. not that I'm complaining, mind you but...who are you? I mean... where did you come from? Hey...! For that matter, where's James? Is he a friend... but, no, I'd know you if..."

She stopped his steadily more confused questions with a long kiss. When she pulled away, Dan was surprised by the look on her face an odd mix of many emotions, including... sympathy? But why...?

"Oh, buddy you have no idea how fantastic that was, how great you made me feel." She sighed. "You don't can't! know how fantastic it feels... yet."

"Huh...?" Dan grunted, puzzled.

She smiled softly at him half promise, half... regret?

"Oh, God, pal I can't fight her. She makes it feel too good, too wonderful. All she cares about is pleasure... and so that's all I'm built to feel, no matter what I might have wanted. Pleasure... like none you imagined you could feel. You won't be able to help yourself you'll see..."

She gave his hand, still on her huge tit, a squeeze, moaning in obvious pleasure.

"I loved getting fucked by you..." She told him sounding strangely.. surprised, among other thing. "It was wonderful, and I wish oh, God, how I wish I could spend forever doing it again and again with you. Of any man I could have fuck me, I wish it could be you, all the time.. and it would be all the time, buddy, 'cause I can't help myself. I.. I guess, I'm a slut now, pal, just unable to help myself the pleasure, you see, it's... addictive. You and I.. well, it'll be a life of sex, sex, sex... and we'll love every minute of it whether we want to or not."

"I... don't understand..." Dan admitted, giving her a sidelong look.

She sighed, and gave him that soft, sorrowful smile again.

"Oh, you will." She assure him. "Her sister my sister is just to eager to let me let you give me all that pleasure.

I desperately want to tell you I'm sorry... but, you see, I can't. Not when I know how good it's going to be for you...but at least we'll still be together, in a way..."

"What are you talking about...?" Dan demanded, starting to get exasperated, incredibly hot babe or not.

"That..." Ginger said, with a sigh, pointing...

"This?" Dan said, in confusion, glancing at where she was pointing.

"I don't get it..." he said, annoyance in his voice, as he looked up from the faded old photograph under Ginger's in the old lined notebook. What's going on, anyway?"

"It won't be long before you understand before you surrender..." Ginger told him. "Trust me, it'll be easier if you don't try to fight it. Just... give in, and look forward to a life of mindaltering pleasure that'll steal you away no matter your old convictions especially since Daisy has decided she wants to love sucking cock, too..."

"What the hell are you talking about...?" Danny demanded, idly flipping a long, goldenblonde lock of hair out of his face...

BACK TO FUN ZONE

SUMMARY: On Halloween, Steve dressed as Batman encounters an ancient god who transforms him into Catwoman.

All Hallow's Eve

By Gunslinger

Borne upon the chill autumn wind and accompanied by a chorus of rustling leaves, the ethereal voice floated out of the tree-line, calling his name.

It took several long seconds for it to register. Sitting on the weather-grayed boards of the old wrought-iron framed bench, he was staring down at his own glove-encased hands, lost in thought. Clad head-to-toe in the black materiel of his Batman costume, he was little more than another darker-than-dark shadow, his mind a million miles away in a direction no cartographer had ever mapped.

It wasn't until another brisk gust ruffled the fallen leaves at his feet that he slowly returned from his reverie - and it was then that he truly heard the sound his ears had been blindly registering for the past few heartbeats.

"Steve" The whispering, melodic voice called, from somewhere beyond the northerly tree-line.

"Come to me, Steve "

His mouth, about the only part of him left exposed to the cool night air by the costume he wore, curled into a confused frown, and he pushed himself up from the bench.

"Hello ?" He called, hesitantly, feeling foolish - doubly foolish, actually, all-to-aware of the image he presented, clad in a heavy, yet nearly skin-tight costume that was hardly designed to show an over- forty body to it's best advantage, especially one with more than just a hint of 'swivel-chair spread'. "Is somebody out there ?"

"Come to me, Steve" the whispered, yet clearly audible voice floated forth again, it's unmistakably feminine tones warm and musical. "Come, Steve - come to me "

Hesitantly, Steve began to move towards the trees that screened the unknown owner of the lovely voice from his view.

Riverview Park had begun it's existence as the expansive private estate of a turn of the century 'Robber Baron', who'd lost nearly everything in the great depression. With no private citizen able to afford the estate, it had been taken over by the city, who had turned the gorgeous Tudor-styled home into a museum, and it's surrounding environs into a public park. With oak, cherry and walnut trees over a hundred years old, the park was a collection of secluded glens and vales separated by those Century-old centurions.

It was from that next secluded section that the voice was calling, and Steve uncertainly made his way in that direction, heisting for a few seconds at the three-deep line of tall trees before hurrying through the shadowed wood line and into the clearing beyond, cast in the silvery-blue light of the full moon.

A full, cast-silver moon that was given rippled reproduction by the water of the ancient reflecting pool that lay within the heart of the secluded glen. In keeping with the historic extravagances of the turn-of-the-century well-to-do, the reflecting pool and it's attendant rotunda had been imported stone-for-stone from Italy, an ancient roman artifact bought, transported, and reassembled at great cost.

It was from the columned little temple that the voice had originated - and it the columned little temple that Steve numbly approached, his eyes wide.

As Steve slowly ascended the three short stairs to the once-polished marble floor-stones of the small temple, the owner of the voice that had drawn him here slowly and gracefully arose from the ancient stone bench on which she'd been in repose.

"Welcome, Steve..." She said, her musical contralto low and honeyed. Steve stared at her, jaw slack and eyes wide.

Though her tall, lithe frame was clad only in a short, gold-trimmed white toga-style dress, the woman showed no signs of being chilled by the brisk October wind, nor did she shiver at the feel of the cold marble beneath her perfectly-formed bare feet.

Though the thick mass of glossy black hair that surmounted her classically-beautiful face was only barely restrained by the thin golden band, not a single strand of the hair was moved out of place by the sharp breeze, nor was her short, finely-woven garment disturbed by the wind.

Indeed, she did not seem to be affected by her surroundings at all, and quite rightly so, it might seem - for she was not quite part of her surroundings.

Steve could see right through her. Though clearly visible in the silvery light, she was a translucent vision, both the bench immediately behind her and the moon-filled surface of the pool that lay beyond both dimly visible through her shimmering form.

"Who..." Steve stammered, his mind both considering and rejecting the idea that this might be some sort of elaborate prank. "Who are you...?"

"Those whom you know as the Romans worshiped me as Luna." She said, slowly moving closer to him. "The Athenians knew me as Selene. I am the Goddess of the Moon."

"How..." Steve said, still stunned by the strange, unearthly mood that had gripped him at the very sight of the inhumanly beautiful woman with the rich olive-cast skin and the silvery, hypnotic eyes.

"Tonight is Halloween." She said, softly. "The one night that all is hallowed, the one night that I, and others like me, may once again send the shadowed selves we have become to walk the world of man."

"Why..." Steve said, suffused with a strange calm that held him in it's grip as she stopped a bare pace away from him. "Why did you call me here...?"

"I no longer wish to be but a shade." She said. "With my followers long gone, that is the fate of an Immortal - an eternity of life that is not life, our blessing of immortality made a curse as we become but ghosts, able to walk the earth but once a year. Though the others continue to believe that they will some day be resurrected, it is a hope I have given up. I wish to live, Steven - live as I have never before, trading my immortality for a mortal life, to feel the pleasures and pains a mortal feels, to live out a span of life - and then pass away when it is over, rather than lingering on in eternal nothingness."

She slowly turned, to stare out at the reflecting pool, her own voice becoming soft and reflective.

"More than a century I have waited." She said. "Even since the man who moved my temple re- consecrated it to me 'in the interest of historical accuracy', I have been allowed this as my portal upon each All Hallow Eve, and here I have come, awaiting someone that would allow me what I desire most - someone who would let me join with them, so that we become as one."

She turned back to him, her silver eyes pulling his own to her.

"I know what you desire, Steve." She all-but-whispered. "I know that you were sitting on that bench, berating yourself for not wearing a costume that would reflect your desire to be a woman."

Steve gasped.

"I know this, Steve..." She said, lyrically. "I can give you that which you have so longed for, Steve. Join with me, and we shall live as a woman. I will not 'possess' you, but become part of who you are

- and, even more, I offer you this; though but for one day a year, my powers will be restored, as they will be this night if I have the physical necessary to give that mystical will it's conduit to reality. Allow me this boon, Steve, and the power we will share will not only grant you that what you desire most - but, until the coming of the dawn, anything that you desire may be yours..."

Steve stood stock-still, lost in an eternal instant of hesitation, as desire and doubt warred deep within him.

"Please..." The goddess whispered an urgent entreaty. "You will not lose yourself, but become more. You will still be you - but with access to my memories, my emotions, my thoughts and feeling... and, upon one night each year, my powers..."

It was as much the desperate need in her eyes as her offer of a dream come true that decided him. Faced with the twin motivations of helping a woman in the ultimate distress, and gaining the very womanhood he had so long desired, the conclusion was all-but-forgone for a man of his mindset and morality.

"Okay." He said, simply.

"Thank you..." She whispered in eternal gratitude...

...and then her non-corporal form took the single pace that separated him, and her slender ethereal form merged with his bulky physical one.

For an instant, he was nearly overwhelmed, his eyes clenching shut as all that she had been became part of what he now would be.

Thoughts and memories and sensations assaulted him. Two thousand years of history seen from a personal point of view rolled past his mind's eyes as the emotions and sensations that had accompanied them tugged ghostly arms along his five senses...

...and then, with a gasp and a shudder, Steve opened his eyes.

He was still him - but, at the same time, he was 'them', a person now more than the one he'd been a second before in a multitude of ways.

Not the least of which was that he was seeing, hearing and feeling everything within the moon-dappled grove not only through the mundane senses he'd brought to the glen, but with the senses of a person experiencing physical sensations for the first time in a millennia..

The night became mystical, each rustling branch, each stirring blade of grass something to be wondered at and cherished. The breeze suddenly became rich with every scent it carried, each tantalizingly familiar and yet wonderful new. The very light itself acquired texture and depth, as eyes that had perceived but shadows of the world suddenly saw it again in full perception...

..and Steve's heart nearly burst with joy and awe, now knowing that the world he knew had been, for her, as shadowed and intangible as she, herself had seemed to him - but now was real and tangible and unutterably wondrous.

"Oh, my..." Steve whispered to himself, staring with wide-eyed new wonder at the world about him, and knowing in his heart-of-hearts that he'd made the right choice. "Oh, dear my, oh my..."

Though a part of him tugged at him to immerse himself in the moment, to enjoy the very act of being, there was a part much more integrally 'him' that also tugged at him - the part of him that had been offered the realization of a dream...

...a part of him that would not be denied a moment longer.

Taking a deep breath, Steve closed his eyes, and sent a thought echoing through the new and unknown byways of 'his own' mind...

'How do I do this...?'

The answer came, not as words or images, but as a strange sensation of certainty, as if he'd been trying to recall a name of a person he was sure he knew, and it had finally popped into his head...

Eyes opening, Steve slowly walked the length of the temple and emerged on the other side, now 'knowing-without-knowing' that he needed to be bathed in moonlight to do this.

Picking a spot well covered in the spun-silver of the moon, Steve lifted his arms and held them forward as if in supplication, palms upward - and then, eyes intent, stared in front of him and studied what he saw, noticing all the details touching his hyper-aware senses.

When he was ready, when the picture of what he was seeing was firmly in his mind, he began to imagine a mirror. In his mind's eye, he pictured it, spinning it out of the air as he concentrated on every detail of it: The play of light and shadow on it's free-standing brass frame, the smooth gleam of the silver-backed glass in it's embrace, even the shadow it cast upon the ground behind it...

...and the instant the image in his mind became complete, so did it's reflection in reality, as a brass- framed full-length mirror simply came to exist exactly where he'd mentally placed it.

Letting his breath out with a whoosh, Steve rolled his broad, somewhat chubby shoulders, working out the tension that had built there.

"This isn't as easy as you seem to remember..." He accused himself, silently, blinking his eyes rapidly to make up for nearly two minute's unblinking stare.

The reply was a brief wave of emotion that rolled through him, the exact same sort of thing he would have felt upon realizing he'd 'goofed' - but with a different accent to it, something warm and exotic.

"That's okay..." He assured himself, interlacing his fingers in front of his chest and cracking his knuckles. "Okay, it's time to give this a shot..."

Taking another deep breath, he stepped squarely in front of the mirror, just far enough back from it so that his entire body was visible.

Lifting his arms once more, Steve fixed his gaze on his reflection, and began to concentrate...

It started at the fingertips of the outstretched hands. The thick, plastic material of the gauntlet-style vinyl gloves rippled, then parted to make room for the fingernails that pushed smoothly and steadily outward, the slightly ragged, squared-of ends of each rounding out into a smoother, arched curve as the nail acquired a glossy blood-red sheen of nail polish.

As the elegantly formed nails achieved their full length of two inches, the fingers that supported them were becoming longer and slimmer. Even as the change move back over the hands, molding them to an equally slender, feminine template, the gloves that enclosed them were rippling and changing, the heavy matte vinyl becoming thinner and glossier as it turned itself into a form-fitting layer of durable, pliable latex.

As the glossy black latex extended back over the wrist, the flared gauntlet tightening to a form-fitting layer, the black materiel beneath it was also changing, becoming a shinny layer of dark-purple spandex that, like the glove over it, clung tightly to an arm shifting and writing into one that was athletic, well-toned - and undeniably feminine.

The changing glove stopped when it reached the inside of the now smaller, more delicately formed elbow - the changes to the clothes and the flesh and bone they covered continued, the biceps losing some of their bulky mass and acquiring that thin layer of smoothing feminine fat as the very bone structure beneath the firm muscles became narrower and more feminine.

With growing speed, the changes rushed onwards - as the broad shoulders narrowed and thinned under the writhing fabric, the change met in the center of the shoulder-blades in the hollow of the neck - and began simultaneously worked its way upwards and downwards.

The neck narrowed and lengthened as the heavy vinyl chest-shield with its famous black bat on a yellow oval began to 'melt', becoming yet more dark, tight spandex - even as the narrowing ribcage beneath it rippled and began forming two protrusions that, at first, were conical in shape, and modest in size.

By the time the change had reshaped the jaw-line into a delicately strong, femininely proud contour and had moved onwards to re-make a pair of slightly flesh male lips into full, gloss-red examples of sensual perfection beneath the now slender, well-defined nose, the 'bumps' of the chest had acquired a definite status, each near-perfect domed breast the size of a good-sized halved grapefruit, and still pushing outwards.

As the fabric became thinner and more form-fitting, the definition of the swelling nipples tipping each growing breast became better defined, and by the time the new endowments reached their full size and mass, the nipples that were now each as big as the first two joints of a man's pinky were thrust slightly skyward atop a pair of firmly rounded EEE-cup breasts...

...which caused those full, sensual lips to curl upwards in a smile as the changes to her face and head finished, the now skin-tight mask with its 'cat ears' enclosing a face of stunning beauty, its high, well-defined cheek bones giving it a slightly triangular shape.

The eyes that took in the rapidly downward-spreading changes were dark and veiled by long lashes as glossy-dark as the mane of slightly wavy raven hair that was gathered into a tight bundle and constrained by the three ebony-enameled steel rings high on the back of the latex mask, before falling down to spill outward in a still-lengthening silky cape.

In the shadow of the firm double spheres clearly defined by the spandex that embraced them, her waist pinched inwards for a perfect hourglass figure - a figure made even more wasp-waisted as the now 'naturally' twenty-one inch waist was suddenly compressed inwards another two inches by the black leather corset that appeared, the lower edge of the form-defining garment boasting a gleaming black utility belt that sat slung across the smooth, womanly curves of her expanded hips.

Hips that supported a remarkably firm and well-rounded derrière just below the eye-directing 'V' of her thick mane of hair - a spectacular fundament that was made even more mouth-wateringly delectable by the thin black-leather strap that went from the back of the corset, between her full new buttocks, and widened to cover a crotch that just finished going smooth as the leather rejoined the corset above - while the crotch beneath it finished going from merely smooth to the concavity of complete womanhood.

Seconds later, the changed had finished it's headlong rush, practically diving down legs that it left long and shapely in it's wake, the dark spandex fabric covered by another layer of even darker, glossier leather of the thigh-high, slightly flared-top boots that clung to the firmly rounded calves that, shapely enough on their own, suddenly became even better defined as her smaller, more delicately rounded heels were pushed upwards atop the black-enameled metal of the six-and-a-half inch high stiletto heels her new boots boasted.

Then, with everything else completed, the power finished up with the final touch, as a coiled black bullwhip appeared in the small leather loop hanging from the enameled steel 'D'-ring on the right side of her utility belt.

As the change finished, the newly-formed woman let her pent-up breath out, her spectacular new bust heaving with the exhalation, sending emotionally and physically pleasing new sensations through her nerves as the weight of her new bust shivered within the spandex enclosure, her full - and, now, chill-engorged - nipples moving slightly and pleasingly within the slick fabric.

Bringing her arms inwards and upwards, the new woman gently let her fingertips glide over the contours of her new, strongly beautiful face. The fingertips lightly traced the strong, well-defined structures of her altered visage before slowly moving downwards, lightly caressing the silky spandex coating her new neck, then moving over the slight bulge of her sternum before gliding onto the firmly rounded upper slope of her breasts.

With a sigh, she let herself enjoy the slow, light pressure of her hands as they swept across the breasts that thrust a proud seven inches out from her new ribcage. As her hands slipped downwards on their smoothly rounded surface, her thumbs tweaked her now fully-engorged nipples en passant, then her hand tilted outwards as they slid below the jutting shelf of her bust, lightly hefting her new endowments.

She gave a little in-drawn hiss of pleasure as she felt her hands heft the firm, softly firm flesh of her new breasts - and also felt the pressure and warmth of her own hands through the sensitive new flesh so prominent on her chest.

Regretfully, she let her hands continue their downwards journey, following the curves of her new body over her tight, flat stomach and out to her well-rounded hips, sliding down the outside of each firm thigh, to dip into the flared top of each boot.

The fingers of the left hand merely caressed the small roll of cash they found there, ensuring that the money in it's 'cat'-motif money-clip was exactly where she'd imagined it would be.

The other hand, however, rose back up to eye-level, carrying it's discover to her eyes.

It was a small, clear-plastic folder containing two credit cards, an ATM card, her house key - and her identification.

Flipping the small folder open, she eyed her new driver's license, ensuring that the picture and name were correct.

At the sight of the printed name 'Selena Kyle', the new woman smiled at the double meaning of that particular name, then slipped the ID folder back into her boot.

"Rorwrrwrr..." She growled at her reflection with a grin, striking a pose to show off her athletic and abundantly feminine new figure to its best advantage. "You look absolutely purrrrr-fect, my dear."

With a low chuckle in her rich new contralto voice, she ran her hands once more over the highly personalized Catwoman 'costume', then, extending her arm, erased the no-longer-necessary mirror from existence.

Turning, Selena started to walk towards the flagstone path that led from the glade - then paused, feeling a little 'weird'...

"It's just the way you walk in high heels..." She said to thin air, one arched eyebrow rising under the mask that hid them.

In response, the 'weird' feeling changed into something else..

"It's supposed to be so 'show off /sexy' that's the whole point of stiletto heels." She explained to the embedded woman within, who'd never worn high heels of any sort. "Don't worry, you'll get used to it..."

Her full new hips swaying and swiveling in a taut circular motion that emphasized the supple, sensual curves of her legs and buttocks, Selena headed out of the glade, enjoying the slight jiggle- bounce of her breasts as she moved.

With the smooth, easy, and sensual stride of her long, shapely new legs, it wasn't long at all before the path narrowed to slide in between the two post-war buildings that housed businesses facing onto the street.

In the twenty-four foot alleyway, lit by the orange glow spilling in from a streetlight near the street end of the alley, a bulky young man in faded jeans and a leather jacket leaned against the wall, smoking. At the sound of her high, slender metal heels ticking on the stone pathway, he looked up and peered in her direction - and, at first, saw nothing. Her outfit, nominally designed for cat burglary, blended to well with the darkness in which she walked - but as she entered the spill of light, her figure resolved itself before the shaven-head young man, and the heavy lips beneath his much-broken nose curled upwards into a loose, raunchy smile as he eyed her buxom, athletic figure.

"Well, well - woodja lookit this pussy..." He said in a rough voice, giving a hoarse chuckle at his crude, lewd double entendre.

The new woman's eyes narrowed slightly, and her lips tightened a fraction. If he'd said something complimentary about her new form, he might have been very pleasantly surprised to have been 'rewarded' for it - but crudity wasn't exactly what she wanted to inspire with her new form, so she tried the old tactic of 'ignore it, and maybe it'll go away' as she drew nearer to him.

"Nice tits, babe - why don'tcha whip 'em out for me...?" He chuckled, taking another hit on the small, roughly-rolled 'cigarette' he held, the odor coming off it indicating it to be a mix of just about every combustible material, legal and illegal, known to man.

Head held high, her previously loose, swivel-hipped walk becoming brisk and nearly business-like, she walked past him, both parts of herself having to remind themselves that turning the rude prick into a frog might be satisfying, but probably unfair.

"Yeah, that's it, slut - show me that ass o'yours..." The man said, coarsely.

Stopping dead, Selena looked over her shoulder and glared at him, thinking how easy it would be to turn him into a literal pig...

"Damn, girl - now them's cock-sucking lips..." He said, grabbing his cock. "So, you gonna blow me - or just gimme some sweet pussy...?"

That did it.

"I'm going to give you pussy, all right..." Selena said, turning to face him and lifting her arms outwards.

It looked like an inviting gesture, and the man smiled as he started to take a step forward... "What the fuck...?" He shouted, as he was yanked up short by the manacles that Selena had imagined into existence, connecting each wrist and ankle to the old brick wall behind him by a short length of chain. "What the hell is ummmph!"

"Much better..." Selena murmured, as the man continued to attempt to swear around the ball-gag that had suddenly appeared in his mouth, held in place by leather straps around his head.

A little more 'imagination' - and the man grunted through the gaga as his suddenly naked body was yanked unceremoniously backwards as the chains 'retracted', pinning him spread-eagle against the cold brick wall.

Concentrating, she formed a large, gilt-framed mirror on the wall opposite him - since she thought it only fair for him to get a good look as she turned her attention on him...

His eyes widened and he began making gagging sounds as his body writhed and began to change.

His closely-shaved scalp began rapidly sprouting long, platinum-blond hairs that spilled down in a huge, thick wave as his face became much finer, his already wide eyes growing wider - and bright blue - as the much-broken nose straightened and shrunk to a cute, upturned little snub above rapidly swelling lips.

His lips weren't the only things swelling - as his hips rapidly pushed outwards in time with a rapidly bulging chest...

Improving with practice, a transformation that had taken Selena minutes to perform on herself took seconds on her victim, and she smiled as she let her stare at her new reflection.

She was a living caricature.

Legs unbelievable long for her new, petite height merged into pneumatic hips that supported the newly-formed vagina in its heart-shaped patch of platinum pubic hair. Her waist, unconstrained, was even smaller than Selena's own - and it lay literally in the shadow of a massive pair of huge and artificially round breasts, each of which was the size of a medicine ball, and tipped with a small, bright-pink nipple in keeping with the fact that they weren't 'natural', like Selena's own firm bust - she'd purposefully imagined a pair of over-pumped saline implants to fill out the new woman's chest.

After all, it seemed like the sort of thing you'd expect from the vapid-looking bimbo that the new woman's face proclaimed her to be...

"Well, are you going to be a good girl, and apologize...?" Selena asked sweetly, willing the ball-gag out of existence from between the new woman's full lips.

Working her reshaped jaw for a second to relieve the ache the gag had imparted, the woman glared at her with huge blue eyes poorly suited for the venous look - and then spat defiantly in her almost silly new soprano: "Fuck you!"

"Wrong answer..." Selena said, willing the gag back into place.

Then, with another thought, she repositioned the transformed man in the center of the alley, the chains on her wrist manacles forcing her to be bent over the stainless-steel bar that had appeared at waist height across the alley, while her shapely new legs were now chained in a spread position to the eye-bolts that had appeared in the flagstones of the alleyway.

Looking at the out-thrust new bubble-butt facing her, Selena grinned.

"Fuck you..." She said - as she willed the leather covering her womanhood to transform, becoming a strap-on dildo, long and black and ridged with thick, ropey 'veins'.

"Oh...!" Selena gasped, the other end of the very special 'double dildo' she'd created filled her new womanhood, creating a 'filled' sensation that nothing in her past provided her with a reference to describe - but was that most definitely pleasurable.

With a powerful stride, she walked up behind the new woman and positioned herself, the head of the huge plastic phallus tickling the new woman's cunt.

Feeling it, the transformed man began grunting urgently into the gag - and Selena took that as her cue, and thrust forward...

The dildo she had created was very special. Inside the oversized external dildo was a more moderately sized one, weighted and mounted on a spring. As she thrust forward into the tight confines of the new woman's cunt, the 'inner dildo' retracted with the force of the thrust, pulling it out of her own wet womanhood - and as she pulled back, the spring and the motion caused it to thrust into her cunt once more.

In other words - she wasn't just fucking the altered man, she was also fucking herself. So, she had plenty of motivation to do it right...

Planting her gloved hands on the rounded contours of the other woman's new ass, Selena shifted her stance slightly - then went to work with a will, gasping in pleasure as her renewed thrust caused the inner dildo to resume it's wonderful work on her tight new vagina while the big black outer casing worked on the unwilling woman's cunt.

"Oh, yeah..." Selena gasped to herself at the wonderful sensation filling her as she thrust rapidly and deeply into the shivering, writhing new woman. "Yes, oh, yes..."

With the dildo working by the power of her own thrusts, it was easy to chose the pace and power that provided the most pleasure - for herself, at least. Judging from the other woman's reactions, the pleasure wasn't nearly as absolute as Selena pounded the massive plastic phallus into her, leaving her massively oversized silicone tits bouncing and jiggling from the rapid, hard thrusts.

"You... having... fun...?" Selena gasped at the other woman - but the question was also answered by an intensified feeling of emotional pleasure as the goddess within cast her vote on the matter, making the sensation of her first female sexual act all the more powerful.

Gasping in rising pleasure, Selena added a swiveling motion to the thrust of her hips, causing the dildoes in each cunt to create varying pressure against the tight walls of each woman's cunt - and, against her will, the new woman began making grunting exhalations of pleasure through her nose as Selena's thrusts caused unwanted pleasure to grow exponentially within the pussy she'd been cursed with.

As the pleasure continued to build, Selena abandoned technique and went 'into the home stretch' with short, hard thrusts at a machine-gun pace...

...until her first female orgasm hit her like a freight-train, and she joined the goddess within in simply experiencing the moment as an explosion of pure, white pleasure temporarily destroyed conscious thought in an outward-expanding fireball of orgasmic ecstasy that commandeered every nerve in her body to carry it's message of pleasure.

She didn't even hear her own high-pitched wordless scream of ecstasy, and it's echoing returns came as a surprise to her as the intense pleasure began to fade and she slumped forward over the well-rounded posterior of a twitching, post-orgasmic woman.

Blowing out her breath in a puff of amazement at the power of a female orgasm, Selena straightened, then used some 'imagination' to allow the transformed man to do likewise, leaving him chained to the bar still across the alley.

"Well, you enjoy getting fucked, babe...?" Selena asked, waving a hand and letting the gag vanish again.

The huge-breasted blonde spat on her.

Frowning, Selena wiped the spittle from the front of her outfit, not with hand, but with her mind. "What the hell is wrong with you...?" She demanded of the recalcitrant man.

"Ain't nothing wrong with me, bitch..." She replied venomously, the words contrasting with the high-pitched voice she'd been given. "Dumb cunts like you are made to be fucked by guys like me, you stupid bitch. Now change me the fuck back...!"

It had been Selena's plan to do just that - return the man to his original gender once he'd learned his lesson.

It was now obvious that it wasn't going to happen. This crude, rude, lewd jack-ass was just too dumb to learn - even in the face of what had happened, he still didn't grasp the fact that he wasn't in control of the situation in any way, shape, or form.

Taking a deep breath, Selena concentrated...

..and the huge-breasted blonde blinked, then shook her head and began to smile rapidly as she smoothed the fabric of the barely-there white spandex tube-dress that had appeared on her cartoonishly curvaceous body.

"Hi, there..." The huge-breasted blonde giggled, brightly. "Like, thanks for giving me such a, like, totally fuckable body - now I can go to California and become a porn star!"

"Yes, yes you can..." Selena said, dead pan, as she searched the buxom blonde's huge eyes for any outward sign of the male mind trapped helplessly within the very one-dimensional 'shell' of a persona she'd forcibly implanted atop the trapped male mind.

There was nothing to be seen. Having 'stolen' the idea from how she and Luna were joined, Selena had modified it to completely lock the male mind from the surface, leaving him little more than a passenger in the hyper-endowed body.

"Okay, you can go now..." Selena told 'Roberta Baggins', the 'real' name that appeared on the ID in the faux leather purse slung over a shoulder, that matched the platform heels she wore.

"Okay!" The woman who would 'choose' the screen name of 'Boobie Biguns' when her 'life-long dream'/worst nightmare of becoming a much-fucked pornstar came true said, brightly, as she helplessly giggled and turned away.

As the rapidly-grinning huge-breasted new cum-slut/pornstar-wannabe wiggled and jiggled her way out of the alley, Selena grinned in satisfaction...

...and then was hit by a thought.

This jerk wasn't the only deserving asshole out there - and while she needed about an hour's worth of power before dawn in order to rearrange her house and personal belongings to fit her new identity, it was just barely after ten, with hours to go before the dawn.

With a wicked grin, Selena looked around the alley - and then broke into a sprint, running towards a stack of skids piled next to a rusting blue Dumpster half-way down the alley.

With exquisite grace, she planted one foot on the skids, using them as a step to obtain the top of the garbage bin, which she continued on across at full speed - and, at the last possible second, dipped downwards, compressing the long, taut muscles of her legs, and then sprang forward into nothingness.

In mid-air, her hand flashed down to her side and released the whip from its loop, swinging her arm in an arch that sent the bullwhip whistling through the air.

A split-second after the sharp crack of the whip's weighted tip breaking the sound barrier, the last tenth of the whip snapped hard against the rusting iron railing of the fire-escape ahead of her, centrifugal force wrapping the tough leather around the sturdy metal - and causing her to soar upwards in a tightening arc.

At the top of that arc, Catwoman pulled her knees tightly against her full bosom and executed a perfect back-flip - then thrust her legs outwards at precisely the right instant, and landed lightly atop the railing on the other side of the fire-escape's platform.

With a snap of the wrist, she unwound the end of the whip from the railing behind her, and quickly curled it into a loop, holding it loosely in her hand.

Balanced on the thin metal railing as if standing on solid ground, the new Catwoman looked out at the street, her eyes shining.

"Okay, guys..." She whispered her warning. "There's a new girl in town - and she's much, much more than just another pretty face..."

Tensing the sensuous muscles of her long legs, Catwoman leapt across the alley and onto the roof-top across from her, her dark-colored suit quickly fading from view as she disappeared into the night...

THE BEGINNING

BACK TO FUN ZONE

SUMMARY: Failing to keep his promise to his plastic surgeon girlfriend not to frequent strip clubs, his girlfriend uses her skill to transform him into the ultimate stripper.

All The Time

By Gunslinger

Letting out a rebel yell, Rick pumped one fist into the air as he used his other hand to slap at his friend, Dave, sitting next to him in 'Pervert Row'.

"Do you believe this?" Rick shouted over the heavy, driving beat of the music filling the strip club with a presence as palatable as the haze of cigarette smoke that filled the darkened room. "Get a load of the rack on this babe!"

"No shit!" Dave shouted back. "Man, it's a shame Steve ain't here. He'd love this shit!"

Up on the stage, one long, toned leg wrapped around the brass pole as she undulated slowly backward, her long-nailed fingers teasing her huge, surgically-inflated tits, the aptly-named Suzi Staxx heard the two men talking about her...

...and it took every ounce of self-control that she had not to break out of her routine, to run to the edge of the stage, and to yell at them, telling Rick and Dave that she was Steve.

Amanda wouldn't have liked that - and Suzi had already learned what happened when you did something Amanda didn't like.

The hard way.

* * * * *

It had been love at first sight.

Not that Steve had cared all that much for Amanda. No, it was the big bucks that Amanda pulled down as a plastic surgeon that Steve had fallen in love with. After all, the lifestyle he lived called for big bucks, and that's something that Amanda had in spades - not to mention that her work kept her busy enough that she wouldn't eat up much of his time.

Best of all, she was looking for a 'trophy boyfriend', somebody who would clean up well and look good in an Armani suit, hanging off her arm at swank, boring professional cocktail parties.

Amanda was what you'd call 'asexual' - intelligent, driven, and so devoted to her work. She had neither the time, nor the urge, for the 'complications' of a relationship, sexual or otherwise. On the other hand, a successful businesswoman who didn't have any visible social or sex life was assumed to have a secret life - and that sort of thing could start rumors that would be a death sentence to her career. In fact, it was the fact that Steve, who was anything but asexual, wasn't looking for any sort of relationship that made their arrangement so perfect. As long as he was discrete about his endless string of one-night stands, looked good, and showed up when he was supposed to,

Amanda would buy him the clothes, the gifts, pay for his rent and car payments - basically, pay him to be her public significant other.

Her respectable public 'significant other'.

Which probably explained why one of the conditions of their little arrangement was that he stopped patronizing the 'sleazy little skin club' down near the rail yards. Oh, not that she insisted that he stop going to strip clubs all together - there was a rather upscale 'exotic dance' club downtown, and it wasn't too disreputable to visit as many as two times a week, according to Amanda.

Not, however, according to Steve.

After all, his friends - Rick and Dave - didn't have a 'sugar mama'. Two nights a week at the upscale club ran up to as much money spent as a whole week down at their usual hang-out.

So, Steve had started going back to his usual hang-out, without telling Amanda - after all, he didn't want to ruin his 'good thing'.

Amanda, however, had found out about his deception - and had decided that if he liked spending so much time down at the club, he should spend all his time down there...

* * * * *

Three inch tall, tapered, clear plastic platform soles. Nine inch tall heels, tapering down to the merest one-eighth of an inch where the little rubber tip that met the floor of the stage.

'Ankle Breakers', as they were known in the industry - and she balanced atop them with consummate ease, weight kept mostly on the balls of her feet and off the mostly-cosmetic heels.

They weren't easy to walk in, much less so expertly - but Suzi had plenty of experience. The last six months, during her involuntary 'outpatient basis' transformation, she'd worn nothing but high heels, day in and day out, starting in 'mere' two-and-a-half inch high stacked heels and slowly working her way up from there.

Amanda had insisted, the same as she'd insisted on the him-becoming-her dancing daily, both to pick up the skill, and to provide the proper exercise to tone and shape her long, smooth legs.

Legs that flexed and shifted sensuously as she made her way down-stage towards where Rick sat, a bill held between his teeth.

Reaching the spot of the stage in front of him, Suzi slowly and sensuously sank to her knees and leaned forwards, her slender fingers coming up to once more cup her breasts.

Warm fingers pressing against the warm, firm flesh of her spherical DDD-Cup breasts, the long, blood-red nails contrasting with the pale flesh of her surgically-implanted breasts as she pressed them firmly together, capturing the bill in her cleavage as she rubbed her huge, firm tits against her old friend's face...

...and she did it all with a smile on her lips. Her full, pouting, 'cock-sucker' lips...

* * * * *

Amanda had made no secret of why she was doing it to 'her', or how she wanted 'her' to feel.

Which was why Suzi hadn't been the least bit surprised when she'd forced 'her' to suck cock for the first time.

Disgusted, horrified and sickened, yes - but not surprised.

It had been during the transition stage. It had still been damned obvious that 'she' had started off life as male, despite the smooth skin, long hair, and make-up. Sure, maybe 'she' had a pair of taut little 'B'-cup breasts from the powerful hormones pumped into her on a daily basis, made to look even larger in the push-up bra under 'her' red spandex sheath dress - but the only surgery yet done on 'her' face had been the injections that had plumped 'her' lips up so, those new cock-sucking lips coated in heavy layers of gloss red lipstick.

Amanda had driven Suzi the half-hour distance to the nightclub - the nightclub where the sight of an obvious pre-op transsexual teetering in on four-inch heels and making no bones about the fact that 'she' was looking for a cock to suck wasn't all that unusual.

The type of club where that sort of offer wasn't to be refused for very long.

Within twenty minutes, 'she' had been on her nylon-clad knees in the bathroom, suffering the humiliation as she slurped and licked her way inexpertly through her first-ever blow-job...

...doing it one-handed, because her other hand was busy between her own legs, working her hormone-shrunk cock through the silk fabric of her panties, seeming for all the world as if she were turned on by what she was doing.

The man she'd been sucking off came before she did, and she'd had to chock down the salty, ammonia-flavored load of warm cum while frantically jerking herself off to the pathetic little ejaculation that was now the best her tiny little balls could produce those days.

Not that even her steadily more cum-soaked panties in any way put off any of the seven other men she sucked-off that night...

...not like the reactions 'she' got at the 'straight' bar Amanda took her to the following week, when it took three consecutive six-hour nights of bearing the taunts and disgust of the people in the club before she made her eight-cock quota.

* * * * *

Ankling her way off the stage, Suzi headed for the dressing room as the club began to wind down behind her. As the hardest-working house dancer, she both opened and closed the club, with six shows in between, along with all the private lap-dances she could wrangle out of the customers in between.

It was the sort of 'work ethic' that could make a woman rich - assuming she got to keep any of the money, that was.

She entered the mostly-deserted dancer's changing room, where she smiled and cheerfully greeted the few remaining dancers finishing up changing. The other dancers cheerfully returned her greetings, chatting amiable with the ever-cheerful and always friendly Suzi as they changed into their more sedate 'street clothes' - jeans and sweatshirts the heavily favored combination, but the occasional dress or skirt here and there for variation, though flats were almost de rigueur after hours spent in high heels.

Except for Suzi, the only woman working in the club who's street clothes were more extreme than her working clothes.

It started with the pair of silk, lace-edge panties, covered in a pink-and-white heart pattern.

Matching the panties was the silk-covered cotton bra. Her breasts, being pumped full of silicone rather than saline, were full, round, and firm, but the bra pulled them both higher and tighter, almost painfully so, creating a specific form of cleavage that looked as if it were trying to pop right out of the bra.

Next came the custom-made corset, also covered in the same pink-on-white heart pattern.

Unlike the heavy-duty canvas corsets she'd worn during the period of tight-lacing, this corset laced easily over her sixteen-inch waist, the special lacing pulling tight over the high, slim, 'long-line' waist made possible by the surgical removal of her lowest two ribs. The physical pain that had come from the four months of super-tight corseting was now in the past - but not the emotional pain that came from wearing such a garment, much less that of having such a tiny, feminine waist to wrap it around.

The same sort of self-disgust and humiliation she felt as she sat down and drew a pair of white, close-weave fishnet stockings up her long, dancer-toned legs, fastening each of the stockings to the three elastic garter bands attached to the bottom of the corset.

Up along those well-shaped legs she slid the elastic waist band of her skirt, settling the garment in place over her 'boyish' hips. White-on-pink, a photographic negative of the pattern on her undergarments, the skirt was short, flaring, and puffy, with several layers of lacy 'petticoats' built in to puff it out a full six inches from her hips, the last layer of fluffy petticoats barely low enough to cover her panties.

The bolero-style jacket she pulled on was of a matching fabric. With big, puffy-shoulder 'mutton chop' sleeves, the garment displayed both the corset and a fine display of her cleavage.

The final part of her ensemble was her shoes - shoes with the same height and style of heel and sole, but with an upper that transformed them into a modified faux 'Mary Jane' styling.

Balanced atop the towering heels, Suzi wiggled and jiggled her way out of the club and to the parking lot, where her hot-pink scooter was waiting for her.

As she putt-putt'ed her way to the parking lot's exit, several of the men straggling out of the club waved at her, calling her name.

It wasn't as if she were hard to recognize. It was no secret that she'd had plastic surgery to get her nearly 'Barbie Doll' look - extensive plastic surgery, even. All of which left her with a long, lean, curvaceous body that was unrealistically firm and toned without being overly muscular, one that men had watched her shimmy and shake for their enjoyment.

What none of the men who stared at her so lustfully knew was what the starting point for the sensual vision had been before the massive surgical reconstruction.

None of them knew that the sexy, buxom women they were fantasizing about had been born male - and, if it had been up to her, still would have been.

Amanda, however, hadn't bothered to ask. Well, no, that wasn't exactly true:

Amanda had asked...

...and simply laughed as Suzi had begged for her to stop.

Begged her to stop the surgical procedure that had lengthened 'her' legs by an extra inch and a half, making them longer and shapelier.

Begged her to stop the implant procedure that had supplemented the 'natural' little breasts the powerful hormones forced on her had given her...

...and, most of all, had begged her not to put her through the final procedure that made her 'all woman'.

Even as she rode down the street on her scooter, Suzi could feel the vibrations of the scooter's small engine running through her perfect, surgically-created new womanhood. One that, while not really 'real', was visually and functionally a perfect replica of a 'real' cunt.

Just knowing that the 'unkindest cut' had left her forever female, unable to ever go back to being the man she 'really' was, was humiliating and horrifying. Sure, even before the surgery, the powerful hormones had left her with a pathetically small, limp, practically useless cock - but she'd still had one, and could think of herself as male, despite what all the surgery had done to the rest of her.

As bad as having the body and sexual characteristics of a woman was, it was what she was forced to do with it that was the most utterly humiliating.

Arriving at the apartment building she now called home, Suzi pulled up at the back of the building and parked her unmistakable, hot-pink scooter in the slot beside the entrance door. Swinging her long, shapely leg over the saddle of the bike, she rose to her full height atop the slender heels and wiggled and jiggled her way into the building, heading up towards the top-floor of the six-story apartment building.

Though the building had an elevator, she used the stairs - not because she wanted to, particularly, but because the stairs were part of a program of exercise to keep her body in tip-top shape, which was vital - since it was her 'money maker'.

Reaching the top floor, Suzi headed to the door at the end of the hall and let herself into the single largest apartment in the building.

Though the building itself was merely a 'mid-range' building in terms of price and luxury, you would have thought that it was a top-of-the line luxury building if you'd judged solely off the interior of the apartment Suzi entered.

Luxurious deep-pile carpet stretched from wall-to-wall - walls boasting mirror and hand-polished ebony paneling. Black leather and gleaming chrome furniture. Small, expensive objets d'art.

All bought with her money - but not for benefit.

No, the apartment and its belongings were chosen by, and for, the apartment's other tenant: 'John Littleton'.

Not that it was his real name, and more the 'Suzi' was hers. The name he'd been born under was Lewis Runyon.

He couldn't use 'Lewis Runyon' any more, however, since Lewis Runyon was dead. Murdered...

...by Steven Lockhart.

Intellectually, begrudgingly, Suzi had to admit that the set-up was beautiful.

Lewis Runyon had been a cop. The cop who'd secretly been dissatisfied with his life, and especially his wife and two children, and had been looking to chuck it all - which was exactly what Amanda had offered him.

They'd staged it all perfectly. Runyon had responded to a call of 'domestic violence' that he and Amanda had arranged, making sure he was the closest cop when the call came in. He'd shown up

- to supposedly find Steve in the middle of raping Amanda, because of the frustration of not 'getting any' in their little deception.

Thanks to a pint of willingly donated blood, there was plenty of forensic evidence to support Amanda's 'eye-witness' claim of how Steve had brutally butchered Runyon and burned his remains in the furnace in the basement before fleeing.

So, Steve had been a wanted cop-killer and rapist - while Amanda had finally been able to reveal her 'terrible secret' in a way that bought her sympathy rather than derision. With a veritable death sentence hanging over his head, and the powerful will-sapping drugs she'd slipped him coursing through his system, Amanda had all the leverage she'd needed to make Steve dance to her tune, since he hadn't know that she'd been giving 'John' plastic surgery and a new identity - when she wasn't busy using drugs, hormones and surgery to exact her revenge on Steve.

Not just her revenge, however - but also the second half of the agreement with the new Mr. Littleton...

The one the left Suzi playing the roll of his 'Sugar Mama' - and slave.

Glancing quickly at the clock on the wall, Suzi hurried over to the bar and quickly began making up a martini, just the way John liked it - because she knew the cost of failing to play her role as John's 'perfect woman'.

Once upon a time, thanks to powerful synthetic female hormones, Sissy She-Male Suzi had boasted a pair of all-natural 'B' cup breasts - breasts that had then been carefully operated on to allow for a pair of implants to be emplaced.

Inflatable implants.

Implants that could be filled by way of small fill ports that would accept saline-filled needles...

...and, thanks to the small receiver that Amanda had implanted on her spine, it wasn't as if Suzi could refuse to let John do the simple inflation procedure. Any time she 'misbehaved' - or, as like Amanda liked to put it, refused to 'miss behave' - John merely had to press a button the 'wrist watch' he always wore, and she'd instantly be paralyzed from the neck down.

It had taken only one, thirty-six hour period of being a quadriplegic to make the futility of resistance obvious to Suzi - especially since that last, most graphic 'object lesson', John had inflated her breasts, already somewhat enlarged from previous 'lessons', to their current, massive EEE-cup dimensions.

All of which explained why, when John came through the door, she had his martini all ready, standing by the couch with it in one hand, an already-lit cigarette for him in the other, and a welcoming smile on her lips as she waited for her master like the obedient little slave she'd become.

Like the obedient little sex slave she'd become...

...which is why, after she handed him his drink and cigarette and made sure he was comfortable on the couch, she sank to her knees between his spread legs, unzipped his pants, and went to work giving the first of what was sure to be several of that evening's blow-jobs.

Sure, John knew all about his Sugar Mama. He knew what and who she 'really' was - and couldn't have cared less.

In fact, he thoroughly enjoyed it - in more ways than one. Besides the 'intellectual' enjoyment of having a feminized ex-man at his literal beck and call, there was also the purely physical pleasure - because, after all her 'practice', Suzi was damned near a world-class expert in performing oral sex...

...among other things.

She did, indeed, use every ounce of her unwanted talent as she worked lips, tongue and hands against the hard, throbbing cock that filled her less-than-willing mouth. Not that she was enjoying what she was doing, though sheer repetition had ground the fine edge of the humiliation and disgust she'd felt with her first hundred or so.

Nor was she giving it her all out of fear of punishment. Punishment came from many things, ranging from failure to comply to something as simple as John's whims - but not necessarily from poor performance, at least not on any sort of reliable basis.

No, she was doing it as she chased that faint, dim light of hope - hope of escaping the situation she'd been dragged down into.

Not that she could ever go back to being male, a fact that had led her to do less than her very best for the first little while - until she'd finally realized that there was being 'cursed' to a life of being female, and a life of being a subservient female.

It was the thought that, someday, she might never have to give a blow-job again that motivated her to give her best for now.

Every dollar, every cent she earned went to John, to pay the 'price' of giving up his old life. A price arbitrarily put at one million dollars.

Cash - as in, 'above and beyond the money she spent on creating just livable conditions', like the apartment, food, and other consumables.

Given that, it would take at least a decade to pull together a million in cash value - in which case she'd be a decade older, and out on the street, broke and homeless.

However, there was a little 'clause' in this - the fact that John rated each sexual act she performed for him on its quality in terms of cash value.

Sure, the 'hope' was part of the humiliation, forcing her to 'willingly' work as hard as possible in her personal and professional life - but it was a real hope, not a false one. Sure, after she won her freedom in five or six years, she'd still have to continue her work as a stripper to make ends meet, building up a nest egg, and she'd never be able to reverse what had been done to her - which meant that she'd be 'merely' a woman, instead of a subjected slave.

As she took yet another hot, salty load into her mouth and 'happily' gulped it down, the thought that flitted through her head was a wry, resigned one:

She was giving head to get ahead...

Licking her master clean, she smiled 'warmly' at him as he wrote the value of her latest blowjob down in a little black book, then wiggled and jiggled her way off to make 'her man' his dinner.

It would have to be a heart dinner - to give him enough energy to handle all the sex she'd quite willingly - in a sick way, even eagerly - entice him into, the same as every night, to gain her freedom all the sooner...

...which was the final humiliation, for even as she took this path, unresistingly being a skilled, eager and willing fuck-slut to her master, she knew that it was exactly as Amanda had planned, part of her grand scheme of punishment...

...and there was not one damned thing she could do about it. THE END

BACK TO FUN ZONE

SUMMARY: Alone and lonely on New Year's eve, one man finds a golden coin which gives him little condolence; little does he know that he has found a coin dropped by a leprechaun drunk on the eve of the millennium.

Welcome, Gentle Reader, welcome....

The nights grow longer as the seasons turn, and the hours seem to stretch on towards infinity as the stars litter the sky above us. Here I sit, as on many a night before, and find myself contemplating the unknown, the unusual, the unnatural. As the constellations of stars mark out the paths above us, so do the bright, brief glows of mortal life mark out the path that history takes - yet from these millions of brief, beautiful glows, only a few ever manage to become recorded in the annals that are handed down to the next generation, while the others pass on, unheard and unheeded.

Yet, perhaps, there are stories out there that need to be told. Stories that will never be heard by the populace at large but that - on a night like tonight, in front of the glowing embers of a dying fire - might be passed on from a simple story teller such as myself, to a questing soul like yourself.

Perhaps you'd care to hear one?

Very well then, Gentle Reader. Relax into the embrace of your chair, let your mind release it's doubts and skepticism. Mark me, now, for I do not claim that what I am about to relate is true.

But I do not claim that it isn't, either.

So, submitted for you enjoyment - and perhaps edification - here is a little tale that I call...

All's Well That Ends Well

By Gunslinger

Like a ghostly glowing face, the full, ripe moon hung high in the bright, starry sky, spilling is faerie light over a quarter of the Earth's surface like a blessing from the heavens. In some places, clouds girdling the blue-green globe obscured the silvery radiance, but in others the light spilled to earth unimpeded by obstacles of earthly or heavenly nature.

One such spot bathed in the luminescent shine was the sprawling metropolis of New York City, where the glow fell equally amount the steel-and-concrete spires above and the man-made valleys below.

It also fell on the sometimes-green refuge in the middle of the city, turning central Park into something almost wondrous as it danced across the new-fallen carpet of virgin snow.

It even fell upon the back of one of the city's denizen, a small fellow by the name of Midnight, who at that very moment was crouched low, green eyes narrowed as he eyed a small, winter-bare bush a few feet of the path, which was given to moving unnaturally and emitting quite unheard-of sounds, even for such a cosmopolitan spot as Central park.

The bush appeared to be swearing.

Upon silent paws, Midnight crept closer to the bush, which was now shaking in an extremely agitated manner. Having had nothing to eat for some hours, Midnight was - quite naturally - judging the edibility of anything that might be small enough to hide in such a bush, yet big enough to make such a commotion. Playing it boldly cautious, he crept forward, narrow ribcage almost dragging on the carpet of snow as he neared the source of the commotion...

...then, in a lightening move, pounced.

Only to be rapped on the nose - quite firmly, as a matter of fact - by a gnarled length of yew-wood held in a diminutive fist.

"Ye would beard me, ye moth-eaten pile o' fur?" the owner of the staff asked in a rolling, slurred voice filled with indignant rage that only the inebriated can produce. "Why, I've been put upon by bigger then th' likes o' you, and sent them scurrying for their hidey-holes with their tails between their legs! So have at ye, and may Brain Boru himself ha'e mercy on ye, for I certainly shant!"

Midnight, twitching his head in attempt to rid himself of the throb of his assaulted nose, eyed the tiny man who shook one fist at him. Deciding that discretion was, in fact, the better part of valor, Midnight made a tactical withdrawal and prowled off into the darkness, searching for easier - and quieter - prey.

"Damnable cats." The tiny man said, swaying upon his feet as he watched Midnight disappear into the night. "No good, th' lot o' them."

Shaking his fist one more time, Patty stared out at the expanse before him, trying to remember what he'd been up to before being disturbed by the cat. But a hands-breadth tall, Patty was almost as much as that around, his stomach straining the weskit he wore to it's limit. The faded green coat atop that didn't even attempt the futile effort of buttoning itself around his more than ample waist. Patty's red hair hung free and unfettered by his black cap, which he'd lost sometime earlier. He was in no condition to worry about the missing headgear, not yet even noticing it's absence, and by the time he did, it would have returned on it's own, as any good hat was wont to.

Blinking his bloodshot eyes, the leprechaun finally recalled what his task had been, and he turned once more to face his pot o' gold, currently tangled in several of the branches of the shrub in which he stood. Despite the wildly exaggerated rumors of the greedy mortals who had seen his kind, the pot was not some great iron thing, bigger then it's owner and filled with hundreds of pieces of gold. No, in truth, the pot was perhaps the size of a small tea-cup, and contained but a dozen pieces of that prized metal formed into gleaming disks. But it was big enough to have become hung up in the undergrowth, and Patty now faced a task that drink made nearly insoluble.

"Ye damned ungrateful thing!" Patty shouted at the recalcitrant pot, which - as always - completely ignored his ranting. "Here an' I've dragged ye half-way around the world, and what do you do to me? ye get yerself locked-up in some plant. Fine lot of gratitude from ye!"

Beating at the branches that bared the pot's passage, Patty grabbed the iron handle atop the pot and screwed up the strength that drink hadn't yet sapped. Closing his eyes and holding his breath, the leprechaun gave a mighty heave...

...and the pot slipped from the branches with almost no trouble, sending the little man toes-over- teakettle. Fuming, Patty rose and began to berate the rather unrepentant pot, then grasped the handle and continued to drag it through the snow towards his home, deep beneath the roots of the oldest Oak in the park.

Now, Patty was drunk. Not just befuddled, not merely tipsy, but roaring, three-sheets-to-the-wind, drunk. So, perhaps it could be understood that he didn't even notice the single, gleaming piece of deep yellow metal left lying in the middle of the path as he staggered home, dragging his eternal burden behind him the while, carving a curious pattern in the carpet of snow that the Typical New Yorker would never notice.

* * * * *

Some ascribe it to 'bad luck'. The more paranoid members of society claim that it's 'the world out to get them'. And those with a more philosophical turn of mind merely claim it to be 'one of those days'.

If that was the case, then Rick was having one of those years. And, in a few hours, it was going to become 'one of those millenniums' as the clock turned and tolled the beginning of more than just a new year, decade or century.

Rick was spending the Millennial New Year's Eve walking through Central park, his thin shoulders hunched against the chill in the clear, calm air. Those in a more appreciative frame of mind - helped along by a glass or two of New Year's spirit - might have noticed that it was actually one of the most beautiful evenings that the Big Apple had ever seen, crisp and clear and calm beneath an open sky. But Rick wasn't in any mood to appreciate the beauty of the moment, his lean, aquiline face turned towards the ground as he trudged with the slow, contemplative steps of a man with no real destination in mind.

The collar on his surplus Navy pea-coat was turned up against the chill, and a surplus watch-cap sat low on his forehead. Almost all that was exposed of his face was his nose, a proud, patrician beak that seemed much too large for the narrow, beady-eyed face that it surmounted. Perhaps an onlooker might draw certain conclusions from such a weasel-like countenance, but they would have been incorrect ones. Rick could no more help the fact that he looked like a con-man than he could help his long, lanky build and oversized feet and hands.

Nor could he be assigned much blame in the recent down-turn his fortunes had taken. A man in love was a ,man aside from himself, and he had not seen - until much, much too late - that his 'true love' was the con-artist in the relationship, her inner person more closely matching Rick's outer facade than her own, sweet features. Even had he known, perhaps not to much would have changed, either. Rick, despite his ungainly appearance, was a rare individual indeed, peaceable and cheerful and bright, with a generous and trusting nature - although some would say too generous and trusting.

Others might use the term 'naive.' Or, perhaps, 'dumber than dogshit'.

In any case, the past year had done much to erode away that which was the core of Richard Denbrough. Failure dogged his size-twelve footsteps as he searched for a job, for solace, for friendship, for hope.

Somewhere in the battle-field that the job-market had become, his smile was taken casualty. In one soup-kitchen line or another, his sense of humor was stolen. On a dark street or alleyway, where he'd walked in the search for a night's shelter, the last fragment of trust had been spirited away. But the basic goodness, honesty and internal fortitude that made up Rick held firm, though that armor no longer shined, but was battered and dented and discolored.

So, the eve of a new millennium found our 'hero' walking the byways of the city's refuge from itself, alone in a city of millions.

Now, God - or Fate, if you prefer - works in mysterious ways. For, it must be said, that unless circumstances had conspired just as they had, Rick would never be walking alone in Central park that night. And if he'd not been beaten down and worn out by his unfortunate circumstances, he'd never have been walking with his head down, his eyes fixed firmly on the ground ahead of his over-sized feet.

And if Rick had been anybody other than the Rick he was, what occurred next might have turned out very differently indeed.

For as Rick meandered his way down the snow-covered bath of the park, what should his eyes happen to fall upon, but a small, bright disk of deep yellow metal. Even as deep in a dour mood as he was, interest could make itself heard, and out tall, long-shanked friend paused to stare down at the item in question, sure that his eyes were mistaken and would correct themselves any moment now.

When that moment passed and his eyes continued to insist that he was seeing what he seemed to be seeing, Rick slowly removed his chilled, reddened hands from the deep pockets of the watch-coat and bent over to pick up the item and hold it in front of his dark, incredulous eyes. Still not believing, he pulled off his watch-cap and brushed his shaggy, greasy mane of rich chestnut hair out of the way of his eyes, to ensure himself the best view of the cold, surprisingly heavy metal disk he held.

"Well, I'll be..." He whispered, his voice rusty from disuse. "I don't believe it - it's a gold sovereign!"

Shaking his head in disbelief, Rick brought the coin to mouth and lightly bit into it, brining it back to his now-wide eyes for inspection. Sure enough, the soft metal had not only taken the imprint of his teeth, but there was no discoloration in the center of those marks to indicate a baser metal lurking beneath.

Amazed at his sudden turn of good fortune, Rick shook his head and carefully tucked the coin into the pocket of his dark coat. Feeling a bit buoyed by the discovery, he continued on his way, one hand wrapped around the coin and assuring himself that it was real, and that he had it.

* * * * *

In a tiny little home under an ancient tree, a tiny figure muttered and shifted in it's sleep, muttering thickly as a grin stayed on it's tiny features. Lost in the deep, deep sleep of the drunk, Patty muttered again as he continued to dream a very, very erotic dream...

* * * * *

Rick wandered through the streets, looking around with his sad, weary eyes as he wondered what he was going to do with the rest of his life. Even the gold coin didn't seem such a great omen any more - if it had been a hundred dollar bill, that would be one thing. But he could just see the trouble he'd probably have trying to sell a coin like this, looking the way he did. Any reputable gold dealer would probably arrest him on general principles - and any disreputable one would only give him a fraction of it's value.

Lost in thought, Rick was wandering without paying attention, and almost stepped on a figure half- sprawled on the sidewalk over a subway grate. He looked down to meet the faded brown eyes of a heavy-set, florid faced man dressed in a torn old parka held together with duct-tape. The dark-haired man's rheumy eyes looked up at Rick in a pathetic plea.

"Hey, mis'ser, You spare s'money for s'budy down on his luck?" the street person asked blearily. "Sure is cold t'night - a nice bed would we better, if I could get the cash, y'know?"

Tightening his fist around his only asset - the gold coin - Rick shook his head sadly. "I'm sorry - I can't help you." He told the man. Turning away, he threw a comment over his shoulder. "I wish you luck in finding a warm bed, though."

* * * * *

In that tiny home, a drunken, slumbering figure rolled over as a required response to a wish made on one of his coins fed itself into his brain. Despite his condition, the need would not be denied.

But Patty was in no shape to truly appreciate the wish, still lost in the depths of his erotic dream. The two thought-lines - the dream, and the need to fulfill the wish as worded - kind of intertwined in his befuddled mind...

* * * * *

"Thanks a lot, chum." The bum - who's name was Carl - muttered blearily, wrapping his arms around his body to keep warm. "A fat lot of..."

Then he gasped as a strange sensation ran through his body> He doubled over, clutching his stomach as the strange, writing sensations gathered strength there, then began to spread outwards rapidly. Gasping, he suddenly sat bolt upright in a spasm, arms flying wide.

The cracked and worn army-boots that kept his feet at least marginally warm began to writhe. The leather began to compress down on itself, becoming smaller and narrower at the toes as the color began to leach from the thick material, fading through the dark grays on it's journey through the gray scale.

The thick, short heel on the boot - worn almost away by use - began to stretch outward, rapidly narrowing as it did so. The top of the boot began shrinking rapidly down towards the ankles, the laces moving and drawing in on themselves.

In the space of a few second, the army boots had reformed into a pair of white leather platform shoes. Women's white leather platforms, with a seven-inch spike heel and a two inch platform below, and a white leather upper and ankle strap above, incongruously surrounding Carl's size eleven foot and the drafty socks he wore.

Then, painlessly, the shoes began to shrink, becoming a much smaller size as the foot inside altered size and shape, becoming feminine and dainty.

Then his socks writhed and began to change as well. The stretched upwards, becoming thinner and finer as the stretched, the material softening and the holes disappearing. As they moved upwards on Carl's legs, the legs they enclosed changed. The hair that covered them, a dark coarse layer, sucked back into his pores to leave his legs smooth as the muscle and bone reconfigured themselves. Within a short span, they were a pair of 'okay' female legs clad in white nylons.

Carl gasped at he stared down at his altered appendages, then - in a move inspired by panic - shoved himself upright, balancing atop those altered legs and the high heels that clad his feet.

But the changes weren't finished yet. His pants suddenly shot upwards and changed in hue while the T-shirt he wore also changed color to match, fusing with the material of what had once been the pants. In seconds, he was clad in a short blue spandex mini-dress - which quickly became evident as the parka rippled and reformed into a white leather coat that hung open from his rapidly narrowing shoulders.

"Help!" Carl cried out in fear as his body continued to change. "Please - somebody help me!"

He screamed wordlessly as he felt his cock and balls draw up into his body, leaving a perfectly formed vagina laying underneath the tight white lace panties his frayed briefs had become. Hair all over his body sucked back into pores as his muscles and sinew shifted, leaving reasonably attractive feminine counterparts in their place.

Carl's hands - now slender and feminine - flew to his chest as it began to bulge outwards at an astonishing rate. It continued to swell without mercy, until two tits the size of volley-balls strained the fabric of the dress that enclosed his slightly thick feminine figure.

He felt the muscles on his face reshaping, and his cream rose rapidly to a feminine pitch as his face reshaped into that of a somewhat worn but not unattractive woman. His hair spilled around his shoulders in a thick mane, rapidly lightening to a almost-white platinum blonde in shade, albeit with light brown roots.

Then Carl's scream stopped as the world seemed to shift.

Slinging her purse over her shoulder, Carla shivered in the chill air, licking her tongue over her gloss- red lips. Using her 'on duty' walk, she began to jiggle and sway down the sidewalk, knowing that tonight was a great night for finding plenty of eager, fee-spending customers to take back to the room. She was sure that all the action she was going to get tonight would pay really, really well - and probably keep her bed nice and warm for when she fell into it for a few hours of sleep early tomorrow...

* * * * *

Rick continued on his way. When he heard a scream behind him, he hunched his shoulders over and hurried a bit, having learned the first rule of life for any long-term resident of the Big Apple - don't get involved.

Walking further, he found himself in front of a Starbucks, and he paused to look longingly in the window. It was crowded, as always, with a long line of people getting coffee to help counter act whatever choice of booze they'd consumed tonight.

* * * * *

Ron Coleman rubbed his hands together as he ordered his coffee from the guy behind the counter. Slender and deviously handsome, Ron was dressed in a tux and overcoat, his long hair touching the collar on the expensive top coat. He rubbed his firm jaw under the short goatee he wore, trying to bring some warmth into his face as the guy turned away to fill the order.

* * * * *

"I wish I could get a coffee..." Rick bemoaned softly, entranced by the view of people going on about their mundane daily lives, not knowing how good they had it.

* * * * *

Veronica Coleman smiled at the man behind the counter as he turned back to hand him the coffee. Then the man stopped, as if jolted, and stared at her oddly. Ronnie blinked, startled by the man's reaction.

"Something wrong?" She asked in her warm voice.

"But... you..." The guy behind the counter stammered, looking around and behind her. "Excuse me?" Ronnie asked with a confused smile.

"Uh - nothing." The man said, his eyes locked on the slender, extremely attractive young woman in the elegantly tailored tuxedo that was cut in such a way as to be perfectly feminine, despite its masculine ancestry. He guessed this must be the wife of the guy that ordered, or something. Sure - that was it.

She'd been using the can, and while his back was turned, she'd returned and the husband had gone off to whiz. That's all it was.

It had to be.

Ronnie shook her head in amusement as she accepted the coffee and headed for the door. It never failed to surprise her when she met some of the 'unusual' denizens of the city, who managed to hold down jobs despite their odd behavior.

Stepping out the door, she almost bumped into a thin man dressed in a navy coat. He was looking into the window of the store with such longing that he wasn't paying attention, and almost got knocked over by the door when she opened it.

"Sorry." He muttered in a low voice, bowing his head. "I... wasn't paying attention."

"I can see that." Ronnie replied kindly, then looked down at the coffee, then back up at the sorry looking man. "Look - why don't you take this. You look like you could really use a coffee."

The man looked startled. "Uh.., no I couldn't..."

"Sure you can." Ronnie insisted with a sweet smile on her beautiful face. "I insist."

"Thank you." The man said, gratefully. He took the steaming beverage and looked at her with grateful amazement at her kindness as she crossed the sidewalk and climbed into her car.

Fifteen minutes later, Ronnie pulled up in front of her house and locked her car. Climbing the steps to the brown-stone town-house, she opened the door and stepped inside.

"Honey, I home!" She called, beginning to remove her black suede pumps with their two inch heels and gold-tone accents.

Linda stuck her head around the corner, eyes wide. "Who the hell are you?" She asked. "What are you doing in my house!"

Ronnie blinked at her wife in confusion. "Honey? Is something wrong?"

"Don't call me honey, and get the hell out of my house!" Linda said, looking both angry and afraid, and Ronnie stopped in the middle of removing her shoes. "Get out, before I call the police!"

"But..."

"Out!"

Confused, Ronnie slipped her shapely foot back into the shoe and slowly backed out of the door, which Linda promptly slammed and locked with the dead bolt.

"But..." Ronnie said, eyes wide. "What did I do...?"

* * * * *

Sipping at the hot liquid, Rick watched the taillights of the woman's car blink off in the distance, then turned and continued on his wander, amazed at his good fortune. Not only had he gotten the coffee, but he'd gotten it from a stunningly beautiful woman with a trim figure and lovely face who'd both been kind to him and treated him like a real person. Maybe his luck was changing, at that.

"Must be thanks to my good-luck charm." He said softly to himself, grinning as he fingered the heavy coin in his pocket.

Without really realizing it, Rick found that he'd slowly been navigating towards Times Square, where the 'Biggest Party of Two Millenniums' was underway. Now he found himself on the outskirts of the massive crowd of people who thronged the Square, laughing and drinking and keeping an eye on the timer as it inched towards midnight, now less than half an hour away.

A man carrying a plastic cup of beer bumped into Rick, almost bowling him over. Turning, Rick eyed the obviously drunk man.

"I wish you'd watch where you were going." Rick told him, politely, then turned and began to worm his way through the crowd without looking back.

The man who'd bumped into him snorted, and started to turn away blearily...

...then suddenly shook and gasped. The people gathered around him gasped and drew away, staring as the man dropped his drink and began to twitch.

Their eyes opened wide as the man suddenly shuddered - and he and his clothes began to write and reshape themselves.

Within the span of a few minutes, he and his clothes had completely reformed, and standing in his place was a cute brunette in a short black leather shirt that showed off her cute legs, and thick blue sweater that was stretched taut over a massive pair of spherical boobs.

She looked around blearily, giggling, then began to make her way through the crowd. Between her huge tits - which kept her permanently off balance as well as blocking her downward view - and her high-heeled shoes, Sandy had to keep a close watch where she was walking to keep from falling over her.

Behind her, the people who'd watched the transformation, openmouthed, began to talk among themselves, then began to applaud, assuming that it had all been some sort of trick or practical joke.

* * * * *

Rick stood and watched as the counter slowly headed towards zero, and sighed deeply. He looked around at all the people, laughing and enjoying themselves, and turned away, unable to bear being alone in a crowd of thousands. With some effort, he managed to make his way to the edge of the crowd, and he began to wander down the sidewalk, passing a massively endowed brunette who was busy trying to talk a drooling man into something.

He found himself in front of a multi-level parking structure, and decided on a whim to go in. He wearily climbed the stair, moving upwards in the buzzing fluorescent light that bathed the stairwell, until he reached the very top. Pushing the door open, he looked across the sea of parked cars, then began to make his way towards the edge that faced onto the crowd at Times Square, about two blocks from the garage.

That's when he caught sight of the woman.

She was standing on the ledge on the edge of the garage, just out of reach of anybody on the top level, unless they were willing to step out on the narrow little ledge. Underdressed for the cold whether, she was skinny and tall, with long, lusterless black hair, a face pockmarked with acne scars, and a hopeless look in her watery blue eyes behind her thick glasses.

"Miss!" Rick called, stunned. "What are you doing?"

She looked at him with her sorrowful eyes. "What does it look like, mister?" She asked. She jerked her head towards Times Square. "In exactly two minutes and seventeen seconds, I'm going to jump off this building and put myself out of my misery."

Rick was horrified. "No!" He said, stepping closer. "Look - whatever is wrong, it can't be bad enough..."

"What ever is wrong?" The woman asked, bitterly. "Look at me! I'm a hag. I'm a nerd whose ugly, broke and friendless. Death will be a release, trust me!"

Rick shook his head. "No, no - I mean, look at me. I'm not exactly a stud myself, but you don't see me throwing myself off a building, do you. I'm just as broke and lonely as you are, I have no friends or chances to..."

He trailed off, staring at the woman, then looking back towards Times Square. Then he stepped off the edge of the parking level, onto the thin ledge that supported the woman.

"Stop it!" The woman warned. "Don't try to stop me, or I'll jump right now!"

"Stop you?" Rick asked sadly, looking down at the pavement far below. "Lady - I'm gonna join you." She blinked, "Huh?"

Rick shrugged. "You're right. I was trying to find something I could say - and realized that I was basically at the same point in my life as you are - and have nothing better to live for than you. So, I figured that if it's bad enough for you to jump, it must be bad enough for me to jump."

She eyed him warily. "Don't try and give me any of that reverse psychology crap, mister." Rick shook his head. "I'm not. And, by the way - my name's Rick."

She eyed him for a minute longer, seeing the sincerity in his eyes. "I'm Brenda."

"Nice to meet you." Rick said, wryly, as the crowd began its ten second chant in Times Square.

"Just think - right now there's couples all over the world ringing in the New Year with sex, with their 'perfect' little bodies fucking each other in their 'perfect' little homes during their 'perfect' little lives." Brenda said, angrily, as she tensed her legs.

Then the crowd roared out the words 'Happy new Year', clearly intelligible even from here - and Brenda and Rick hurled themselves from the ledge.

And as his feet left the solid concrete ledge and he seemed to hover in that instant Gravity took hold, Rick unconsciously muttered "I wish we were too..."

* * * * *

Officer Don Mercer happened to be looking in just the right place at just the right time. New Year's around here was always crazy, and people quite often hung out of windows to watch the going-ons, and he had to warn them back into their apartments. Every year, complaints were filed by the dozen when drunken partygoers, leaning out their windows, accidentally dropped bottles or glasses.

So he was scanning the heights of the building on the street when he saw the two figures push off the side of the parking garage. He stared, wide eyed, as they hurtled downward...

...then vanished in mid-air. Simply disappeared.

Shaking his head, Mercer ran to the spot where they should have impacted, and found nothing at all. "Something wrong, officer?" A man asked, eyeing the cop looking up in confusion.

"Did you just see..." Mercer started - then realized that everyone else had been too preoccupied with other things at that particular instant. "Never mind." Mercer said, shaking his head. With one more glance upwards, he turned and walked away.

* * * * *

"Oh... god..." Rochelle said as Brad rolled off her. She snuggled her long, golden body against her fiancé's, her firm, DD-cup breasts pressing against his muscular chest.

"I couldn't agree more, gorgeous." The handsome, dark haired man said, giving his brunette bride-to-be a kiss on the lips. "Now that's the way to ring in a new year."

"Mmm..." Rochelle said throatily. "It was... perfect."

BACK TO FUN ZONE

SUMMARY: A young man professes to be a wizard and turns himself into a "bombshell" only to placate his bestfriend but what happens next only occurs in fairy tales.

Almost Magical

By Gunslinger

"Oh, will you just shut up!"

Grant blinked mildly. "Excuse me?"

John sighed and waved a hand. "I'm sorry - getting fired just... shortened my fuse. I'm just not in the mood to listen to your 'wizard' routine right now."

Grant's bushy eyebrows drew closer over his dark eyes, and his neatly trimmed goatee seemed to bristle. "What's that supposed to mean? I was making a quasi-serious offer, you know."

John sighed and rolled his eyes. Tall, broad-shouldered and muscular, the shaven-headed youth was usually cheerful and outgoing - but, as he'd said, his current and sudden state of unemployment had given him a short fuse, so his replies were sharper than usual.

"Look, Grant - you're a great guy and all. Smartest friend I've ever had, great roommate, the whole nine yards. But this whole 'you can do magic' shit is the last thing I need to hear right now."

Grant slowly rose from the chair at the kitchen table, a lock of his long, unruly black hair drooping in front of his eyes as he drew himself up as much as his thick frame would allow him to do. Unlike his friend's muscular build, Grant's frame was thick and heavy, carrying extra weight in ways that simply didn't look threatening, and when you threw in nearly a foot in height difference, the sight of Grant squaring off to John should have been ludicrous.

Somehow, it wasn't. For one thing, Grant's usual choice of clothing was less 'casual' than John's jeans-and-T-shirt ensemble. Today, he was wearing a pair of olive drab Levi's and a khaki shirt that looked vaguely military, making him look like a youngish 'British Colonel' sort of guy. Moreover, his jaw had gained definition with the clenching of his teeth, making him look almost 'heroic'.

More than anything, though, it was the look in Grant's dark eyes that caused his much bigger, more muscular friend to take an involuntary step back.

"Shit?" Grant asked. "That's what you think my revelation to you about my new studies is? Shit?"

John held up his hands, defensively. He'd always known that his more studious friend was damn-near a genius, and knew that he had all sorts of odd interests to study, but...

"Magic?" John said. "C'mon, Grant - you have to know better than to believe in... in... fairy-tales." "Oh...?" Grant said, his voice tight.

"Look, Grant - I'm sorry." John tried to placate his friend.

"No - you don't believe me." Grant said, angrily - and John winced. Not exactly the most socially adapt person on the face of the planet, a lot of Grant's self-image was tied up in his knowledge and intelligence - and John had just questioned that.

"I made a sincere offer to you, an offer to let your ex-boss spend a few hours as a dog or a pig to teach him a lesson - and do you thank me?" Grant railed. "No! You mock me!"

"Grant..." John tried again.

"No! I'm going to prove to you that - fledgling as they may be - I have magical abilities, painstakingly culled from ancient books, decoded and... well, you won't understand the whole technique. Just let me say that, out of the all the magical disciplines, the only one I have a firm grasp of so far is metamorphic magic - changing one living organism into another." Grant sat back down and crossed his arms over his chest. "So - go ahead and choose."

"Choose what...?" John asked, hesitantly.

"Choose what you'd like to see me turn myself into." Grant said, confidently.

"This... really isn't necessary..." John tried to dissuade his friend. He had thought maybe the whole magic thing was an on-going joke. After all, Grant did have an unusual sense of humor - but now John could see that his friend truly believed he was a... a wizard or something.

It was worrying the hell out of him.

"Uh, uh." Grant shook his head. "You don't believe me, so I'm going to show you - so go ahead and choose!"

On any other day, things might have turned out differently - but John did have a short fuse that day, so, angrily, he blurted out the first thing that came to mind...

"Okay - turn yourself into a woman." "Fine, I'll..." Grant blinked. " 'Scuse me?"

Now John was the one who was angry, although in a cooler, more sarcastic way. Another time, he would have let it go, but...

"You said you'd turn yourself into anything I said." He almost taunted. "So go ahead - let's see you turn into a woman."

"Um... perhaps a horse? Maybe a dragon...?" Grant suggested, blushing furiously.

"Naw - it'd scratch the floor, and then there's the fire risks..." John said, sarcastically. "Go ahead - be a girl, Grant."

Grant was blushing furiously. "Look, John - you can't..."

"I thought so..." John said, smugly - then instantly regretted the way he was treating his friend. He opened his mouth to apologize...

"Fine!" Grant retorted, angrily. Reaching into his shirt pocket, he removed an item John had seen him working on in the past few weeks, without recognizing its significance - a pendant, traced in odd, writhing designs. John had seen Grant create this out of solder, but had dismissed it as one of Grant's many hobbies. Now, he watched as Grant carefully placed that black leather strap it was attached to around his neck. Closing his eyes, he began chanting in an odd, dissonant voice, waving his arms in obscure motions.

"Uh... Grant?" John said, hesitantly, as the heavy-set youth continued to form the jaw-dislocating words, his arms weaving in complex - and painful-looking - patterns. "I'm sorry... You don't have to do this..."

Grant continued on, oblivious to John's half-hearted apology. For his part, John was worried about his friend's sanity - this was more than Grant's 'off-beat' personality...

After another moment, Grant's voice rose to a thundering crescendo - and then he fell silent. John, not sure how to handle his friend's strange actions, sought the right words for the situation...

...then his mind felt as if it were cast in a block of Lucite, coming to a complete halt as he gaped...

...at Grant's chin.

Grant's neatly trimmed goatee had begun to... to ripple, as if being stirred by a powerful, unseen wind. Yet the air of the apartment was completely still...

...and then the hair of the goatee began to fall out. A little at a time, then more rapidly, the hair dropped from Grant's face, dusting the front of the beige shirt with the short, dark strands, the rest of it tumbling to the ground.

"Damn..." Grant muttered, his voice warbling oddly. "That itches..."

"Uh... Grant?" John said, unsure whether this was some practical joke or not. Knowing Grant, it was quite possible he'd shaved, then used a special 'time-release glue' he'd invented, just so he could set this joke up...

...but that wouldn't explain the way that his thick, heavy mane of already full hair was slowly growing longer, curling back over his shoulders.

It definitely wouldn't explain the way his face muscles were twitching and rippling, as if they were changing...

John staggered back a few steps as Grant ground his teeth together and strained to contain a moan - whatever was happening, it obviously wasn't a pleasant sensation. Wide-eyed, John could do little but make incoherent noises and watch as his friend...

...changed.

Grant's face was still twitching and writhing in a highly unnatural fashion - but now John could actually see the changes occurring - the way his nose was becoming smaller and slimmer, while the flesh of his face seemed to be melting, allowing the jaw and cheeks to become better defined...

But the changes were in no way limited to Grant's face, and John felt his eyes slipping downwards, watching as his friend's beefy shoulders not only slimmed, but drew narrower. The front of his shirt, usually rounded over Grant's well-defined belly, was slowly falling inward as that substantial gut was melting away - but it hung 'strangely' as Grant's chest not only didn't recede, but seemed to be swelling.

"Uh... Oh..." Grant gasped in an odd, high-pitched tone of voice - and his hands (which were becoming slimmer with longer, more slender fingers and longer nails) darted down to the waist-band of his pants, which were now stretching tighter over hips that were becoming wider and an ass that, if not exactly becoming fuller, wasn't shrinking as fast as the rest of his body, and was quickly becoming firmer.

Awkwardly, making a moaning sound in the back of his throat, Grant kicked the now too-large shoes of his feet and quickly stripped off his pants, leaving him only in his boxer-briefs...

...which were clinging tightly to wider hips and fuller ass, but displaying very little bulge at the crotch. "Holy... Shit..." Jon muttered, numbly, as he gaped at his friend.

Grant's legs were already devoid of hair, apparently having shed all body hair at the same time as his facial hair - but John could see the twitching, writhing muscles of Grant's legs conforming to new - and definitely feminine - contours above feet that were obviously smaller and daintier...

A groaning sound drew John's eyes from those changing legs - to where Grant's almost completely feminine hands were struggling desperately to undo the stressed buttons holding the beige shirt taut over the new - and quite large - mounds beneath. Mounds that were continuing to swell, despite the fact that breasts larger than a triple 'D' cup must already lurk beneath the fabric.

"Oh.. It hurts.." Grant cried, dropping to now-quite-cute legs, his... her...? voice definitely in the female register as she struggled to get her shirt undone. Her body was shaking with the force that was reshaping her from the inside out, altering bone and flesh and sinew...

With a final, defiant cry, she tore open her shirt, letting a enormous, round pair of tits heave into view... then collapsed on her side, panting for breath, as the last changes racked her now completely feminine body, prompting a long, low moan in her now completely feminine voice.

John staggered... then dropped to his knees, seeing gray at the edge of his vision as his body threatened to black-out from the shock of what he'd seen - and what he was still seeing.

Dressed in the remains of Grant's clothes was a woman - a somewhat tall woman, with a slender, supple, well-toned body - and a pair of huge, firm tits, easily the size of a pair of basket-balls, and nearly as firm, each one tipped with a large, thick nipple.

Her face was... feminine. Not a stunning beauty, but definitely attractive, it was the face a sister of Grant's might have had, had Grant had any sisters. Though different, it obviously came from the same genetic make-up, with the same, slightly too-square jaw, the almost patrician nose - and the dark, somewhat deep-set eyes that, on Grant, had looked 'mysterious' - and, on her, looked sultry, especially framed by long, dark lashes.

Her lips were full, in a feminine way, but not overly so. In fact, her face was like most of her body - feminine, mildly attractive, but not enough to cause undue comment.

The only part of this new woman that didn't match that 'slightly better than average' routine was her breasts - her enormous, round tits that thrust so defiantly from her chest.

Slowly, stiffly, the newly-formed woman sat up with a moan.

"well..." She said, her voice a warm contralto that was almost overpoweringly feminine. "That was interesting..."

She looked down at herself, and grinned ruefully. "I think I overdid it one these, huh?" She said, her slender new hands coming up to lightly cup her massive new endowments, one finger sliding lightly - seductively - over a huge, erect nipple...

"Stop that...!" John demanded, hoarsely.

The woman who had been Grant looked startled as she dropped her hand away from her massive new breast and stared at her friend, who was pale and shaking - and looking away from her.

"John...?" Grant said, slowly getting to her feet.

John's too-pale face suddenly flushed brightly at the sound of her sexy, feminine voice, and he used his heels to scoot backwards away from her. "Get.. get something on..."

"What...?" Grant said, confused, glancing down at her naked, huge-busted new body, clad in just a pair of over-stretched boxer-briefs. "What's wrong, John?"

"What's wrong!" John said with a humorless bark of laughter, still not looking at her. "My best friend just, magically, turned himself into a woman - and now I'm getting turned on by him... her.. I mean..."

"Oh..." Grant said, hiding a grin. "Sorry. Here, I'll change back "

The new woman lifted her arms - causing her huge tits to bounce and sway - and began to incant... then switched back to normal English. "Shit!"

"What?" John said, glancing up - then, finding himself staring at her, glancing away, blush deepening.

"I'm not going to be changing back anytime soon." She said, slumping into a chair. "I'll have to re-learn the incantation - I can't match the same tones as before, with this different jaw, tongue and vocal chords." She shrugged, causing more interesting things to happen to her enormous bust - and John cursed himself for noticing. "I guess I'll have to get used to this, for now."

"Just get dressed!" John demanded - pleaded. Grant laughed, and rose from the chair to pad off. She returned a few minutes later, wrapping a heavy blue bathrobe around her shapely new form, while John busied himself with making coffee.

"There... better?" Grant said, slowly spinning in a circle...

...which caused the hem to flare out, revealing quite a bit of her new, feminine legs. John flushed, but nodded anyway.

"Sorry - it was just kind of freaking me out, you know..." He said, apologetically. "...what, finding my really male best friend suddenly so sexy. I suppose you understand."

"No, I don't." Grant said, casually. "After all, I find you incredibly sexy right now."

The coffee-pot hit the floor and bounced twice, splattering water across the floor. Luckily, it was tough, and didn't chip or shatter.

"What?!" John said, in a strangled voice.

Grant shrugged. "Part of the spell. You can either set it up as a curse, like I would have cast on your boss for you, or as a straight spell, which I cast on myself. With the spell, I feel completely comfortable being female - and my sexuality was reversed as well as my gender."

She said all of this casually, as if it were no big deal. Even as she bent over - giving John a fabulous view of her cleavage - and began to wipe up the water with a tea towel, she continued to talk, just as casually.

"In fact, until I became a woman, I didn't realize how amazingly handsome you are - so big and strong and cheerful, so easy-going and kind. You're... a near perfect man."

"I... you... But..." John stammered... then ran from the room, mind spinning.

Watching him go, the new woman shrugged, then finished cleaning up the mess and set about getting the coffee started.

It was two hours before John reappeared, moving stiffly and awkwardly into the living room, where she was curled up on the couch watching TV, her easy, unconscious pose too damned sexy for John's comfort.

"I.. think we need to talk..." John said, awkwardly.

"Sounds like." She agreed with a serious grin, as she sat up. "I don't understand, John - why are you so.. upset that a woman finds you attractive?"

"Because you're really a man!" John said, eyes bulging.

She stood up and threw her robe open, revealing every inch of her new body. John gurgled, wise eyed.

"Do I look like a man to you, john?" She asked, almost angrily.

"You know what I mean!" john said, looking away - and cursing his cock, which had stirred at the sight.

Grant sighed. ":Look, John. I was a man, yes. And I will be a man again someday... probably. But, right now, I am biologically and emotionally female. I have all the memories, interests and morals that I had, as a man - but, as a woman, I am sexually interested in men. Of whom, you are the most attractive to me." She shrugged. "Now, if you're not comfortable with that, then nothing will happen. It's not like I can rape you, or anything."

"But..." John stammered.

"Look - I'm a woman now." She said, with a sigh. "For better or worse, that's how you're going to have to treat me, while I am. I'm not going to pretend to be a man - and, frankly, I don't think I can pull that off, not with these.." She gestured at her staggering bust-line. "so - just pretend I'm somebody else.

Pretend.. pretend I'm Grant's sister, Gracie, staying for a week or so." "Grant doesn't have a sister..." John replied.

"He does now..." Gracie said, with a grin. "Starting now, I absolutely refuse to be 'Grant'. I won't answer to that name. No, I'm Gracie, grant's sister, and Grant told me all about you, so I know you even though we've never met. Okay?"

John opened his mouth... and realized that he really didn't have a choice. Until Grant... Gracie found a way to change back, this was probably the easiest way to deal with the weird situation.

"Okay... Gracie..."

"Good..." She said, with a grin - then, suddenly, she pouted theatrically.

"Gee, John..." She said, over-exaggerating a sad voice. "The airline lost all my luggage. I haven't a shred of clothes. Do you think you can take me shopping?"

John opened his mouth - and realized that 'Gracie' didn't have a valid driver's license. "Of course."

The new woman borrowed some of his clothes. It looked ludicrous, but the over-sized pants managed to slip over her womanly hips, something Grant's pants would never do - and even his over-sized sweatshirt fit snug over her huge mounds.

John was amazed to find that, even in ill-fitting men's clothing, he found her incredibly attractive. He'd always been a breast man, a fan of over-sized, round tits - and he'd never liked the too-regular features of models or Hollywood starlets. With her cute-yet-approachable looks and huge bust, the woman Gracie had, inadvertently, become was damned near his ideal woman, and it made ignoring her all that more difficult...

...especially since he knew that she was sexually attracted to him. He had to keep reminding himself who she 'really' was, otherwise he might do or say something incredibly stupid - and, in this situation, disgusting, when you considered who he'd really be saying it to, regardless of the body she now wore. It was still really Grant...

Worse - she seemed to take this 'role-playing' seriously enough that it made things worse. She insisted on getting his opinions on clothing, modeling it for him - and she seemed determined to actually flatter her new figure, buying understated-yet sexy clothes that (damn it) he thought she looked spectacular in.

She even bought make-up and jewelry, for god's sake! She even went to a beauty salon, and emerged with a complete make-over and new hairstyle.. and looking even better than ever. John's cock had no idea what was really going on, insisting on responding as if she were really a woman - and making John think he was going to go crazy from the difference between what he saw, and what he knew.

But what was his choice? He could either 'play along' - or try and treat her like Grant, which wouldn't make the situation any better for him, and would prod her into making it worse, since she refused to be 'Grant' while she was female. It was nearly enough to make him schizoid.

By the times he was done shopping, doing her make-over, and getting her hair done, John was beginning to half-believe she might be female after all - because they'd shopped until the mall was closing, and she'd bought a whole pile of stuff. She was even ankling her way out of the mall in two- and-a-half inch, somewhat blockish heels, the highest she could walk in without practice.

"Well - that was invigorating!" She said, with a smile. "Let's head home."

It wasn't until they were in the confined space of the car that John realized that she'd also applied some perfume, a potent fragrance that made him all-to-aware of the apparently female person sitting next to him, chatting with him so wittily and charmingly. The thing was... it was the same conversation, more or less, that he would have had with Grant, if things hadn't changed - and John was discovering, female body aside, that he enjoyed spending time with Gracie as he did with Grant, that the things that made Grant such a good friend were now making Gracie... absolutely amazing.

By the time they got home, he thought he was going to just vaporize, simply decompress and explode into his component atoms, from the pressure on his brain. She wasn't being... seductive. At least, not acting that way - but her very being, every detail about her, was so utterly perfect, that it was driving John absolutely insane. He was right beside his ideal woman, one who was his fantasy in every way, one who had even told him that she found him incredibly sexy - and he couldn't do a damned thing about it!

"Well, I think I'm going to hit the sack..." He said, practically the instant he brought the last bag of her purchases to her room.

"Okay." She said, cheerfully. "I'm just going to slip into something more comfortable and watch a little TV."

He headed off to his room and slipped off his clothing, sliding between the crisp sheets on his bed...

...and stared up at the ceiling, completely unable to get 'Gracie' out of his mind.

For nearly an hour, he lay like that, staring up at the dark ceiling. She was perfect, and she wouldn't get out of his head. Even though he knew it was really Grant inside that luscious body, that didn't help defuse his problem, - because he liked Grant, always had. They shared a lot of things in common - and to find that personality in that luscious body Gracie had, only meant that she was more than 'just' perfect, physically - she was everything he could ever want in a woman.

He rolled over and stared at the accusing red numbers on his LED clock. He knew that it was a combination of things keeping him from getting to sleep, and he decided that the best thing to do was get up, watch some TV, keep his body going until he was exhausted enough to sleep. Otherwise he was going to lay here all night, thinking of her soft, perfect flesh, her huge, glorious tits, her...

Forcing his mind to derail that train of thought, John pulled on his bathrobe and headed downstairs.

The TV was on, and it was showing 'The Princess bride' - a movie that John and Grant both enjoyed, which meant Gracie did too, of course. From the sounds in the kitchen, it sounded like Gracie was just finishing up Grant's habitual Midnight snack - and the thought that he knew every detail about the personality of this gorgeous, perfect woman only made the longing for her worse, since she wasn't his to have - she wasn't even 'she', really...

Then the door to the kitchen swung open, and she stepped into the light...

..and stopped. "oh! I thought you went to bed!" she said, her hands rising instinctively to try and shield herself.

Not because she was nude - no, nude would have been easier to ignore than how she was dressed.

She wore a black 'corset' gown, trimmed in dark-purple lace. The upper half of the gown was designed to be tight-fitting, like a corset - but in her case, it was even tighter, barely covering the nipples of her enormous tits as the ties that ran up the center of the garment strained over the massive cleavage that was fully displayed by the wide-spread halves of the gown.

The lower half of the gown was a filmy material, the black fabric nearly see-through - and it was obvious that she was wearing no panties from the way the darker triangle of her pubic hair could be faintly seen through the gauzy material. She was, however, wearing black nylons, which encased her legs right down to the high-heeled pumps she was wearing.

John began to blush as he felt his manhood harden under his robe, and she moved with unconscious, sensuous grace across the room and sat down beside him on the couch, only making the situation worse.

Then, suddenly, in a strange tone of voice, she said "the hell with it..."

...and rolled over, swinging one leg so she ended up kneeling over his lap, her huge tits pressed firmly into his chest, her face only inches away from his...

...and then even closer, as she kissed him.

For a second, he was too stunned to react. All he could do is feel her warm body pressed against his, those perfect tits against his chest, separated only by two thin layers of cloth, her firm lips against his as her silken tongue slid between his stunned lips and... he pushed her back, but not roughly. "What the hell are you doing...?" He stammered, the kiss still lingering on his lips - and in his mind.

"John..." She said, softly. "I lied to you." "What...?"

"I've changed myself into a woman a dozen times now, getting this look just right." She said. "I could change back anytime... if I wanted to."

"But..." John said, confused.

"I don't want too." She said, softly. "John... I've never, ever been sexually attracted to anybody, male or female, ever. Not once. I also haven't managed to be close to anybody... except you. In my life, you were the one person I felt any spark of... of kinship with, even though it was completely asexual. So, I decided, I would see what happened if I became a woman. I figured, over time, I might get you to... to love me. Maybe, then, I could learn to love you - you, the only person I've ever truly liked, the only person I've felt any emotions toward at all."

John was stunned. "I.. You mean, you.. never felt attracted to a woman. You're.. gay?"

"Not gay..." She said. "Emotionally crippled. I've never felt strong emotions in my life, and the few emotions I have felt have been.. transient. Quick to fade. Oh, sure, I act angry or happy or sad - but I'm just acting " She paused. "Except with you. With you, I could actually feel the emotions. When we did something fun I enjoyed it. When you did something annoying - I got mad. Really."

This was... overwhelming. "And.. you became a woman... to ?"

"To try and get closer to you." Gracie said. "I thought that if I spent enough time - months - looking like your dream woman, your attitude towards me might deepen. Maybe I could feel more emotions if you were more.. attentive to me." She hesitated - she smiled in a way that made his heart skip a beat. "What I never counted on was seeing you for the first time after making myself female, this morning... and finding myself incredibly, overwhelmingly sexually attracted to you. I was still planning a long, slowly, subtle seduction but, damnit, I can't wait that long!"

John shook his head, slowly, trying to cope with this new information. "No.. I... I can't.."

"can't what?" Gracie asked, leaning forward to his neck, her voice dropping to a whisper as she put her full, soft lips near his ear. "Can't accept that I'm your fantasy brought to life?"

Undoing the ties on her gown, she parted the top of his robe and pressed her huge tits against his bare chest, huge nipples pressed into his flesh.

"Can't accept that I want to make you happy?" She said, kissing him on his lips. He was too stunned to react, still trying to cope.

"Can't accept..." She said, sliding off of him and to her knees, fingers reaching forward. "that somebody you already like, somebody in the body of your fantasy woman finds you incredibly sexy, and wants to spend the rest of her life... doing things like this?" then she parted his robe, freeing his hard, throbbing cock - and wrapped her slender, long-nailed hands around it.

"This.. is wrong..." John said, gasping, trying to summon up his will to resist. "You.. you're a guy!"

"Not anymore..." She said, huskily. "...and never again. This is the gender I choose for the rest of my life, John. Whether you'll accept me as your partner or not, no matter what happens - I'm staying female, forever. All you have to decide is whether you let me spend my female life with you, loving you, pleasing you, or if you turn me away."

Then she bent forward, her massive breasts pressing against his legs - and wrapped her full new lips around his cock.

He moaned, reaching down and putting his hands on her shoulders, intending to push her away...

...but then she began to tongue his cock, slowly moving her head up and down on his shaft, and he couldn't do it. He couldn't tell his fantasy woman to stop sucking his cock.

She wasn't very skilled - but she was a fast learner, and very eager. She worked his cock over but good, her hands working the base and shaft as her tongue and lips worked in concert on his upper shaft and head. He moaned in pleasure at her long, slow manipulation, feeling like he should stop this, but unable to... then she stopped, herself, his cock glistening with her saliva.

"Please... I want to feel you inside of me" She said, huskily, slowly climbing up on the couch again.

She spread her legs and straddled him - and he could see she was telling the truth about one thing, because the cunt hovering over his cock was wet and ready.

"Please.. john..." She said - and now she was near tears as she begged him. "Don't.. don't turn me away.."

'This is GRANT!' John's mind screamed...

...and then answered itself in an instant, when that phrase struck home.

Grant. His best friend. The one who'd done things for him through the years, the one he could always trust, the one who was always there for him...

..and he, john, had reduced grant - no matter what body he/she was in - to tears, begging for something from him when he/she had quite literally give up everything (including his body and identity) for him.

"Oh, Gracie.." John moaned, putting his hands on Gracie's womanly hips and pulling downward, guiding her waiting cunt onto his hard, ready cock. He leaned forward and kissed those perfect lips, his hands going to her huge tits as she began to pump her body up and down on his cock.

"Yes.. yes " She cried, moving faster and faster as she rode his cock. "Oh, John - yes! John, I love you!"

John didn't answer her, his face buried in her huge, bouncing cleavage as she rode him, his own moans of pleasure muffled and eclipsed by hers.

Then, at the same instant, they came, bodies wracked by the force of their orgasm as they screamed out in pleasure, her voice overriding his as she achieved her first female orgasm...

..and second...

...and third.

Panting and covered in a sheen of sweat, they collapsed together, her cunt still encasing his softening cock.

"Oh, John..." She moaned. "That was... perfect."

"Yeah.." he said, stunned with the intensity of his orgasm. "Uh, Gracie...?" hearing the tone of his voice, she stiffened - then pulled away from him.

"I.. understand..." She said, resolutely but tearfully, as she slid off of him. "I hoped that you might... but I..."

"No!" John hastened to correct her, causing her to turn and look at him, half afraid to hope. "No - no, that's not what I meant. Gracie - please, promise you'll never leave me! I've found the one woman on the face of the planet who is perfect for me. I've accepted that, no matter who you were before.. or, rather, because of who you were!"

"Oh, John!" the new woman cried, collapsing into his arms with a tearful smile. "Then.. what were you going to say...?"

"Oh..." John said, blushing and suddenly very serious. "I, uh... well..."

"Yes?" Gracie said, lightly tapping his ribs. "come on - you know you can say anything to me. We've been friends for years..."

"Well, uh.." John said, awkwardly. "I.. wasn't wearing a condom, and you.. well...?" He trailed off questioningly...

...and Gracie's eyes widened as she realized that she still had a few things - important things - to learn about being female...

* * * * *

The wedding and the birth occurred less the two months apart...

BACK TO FUN ZONE

SUMMARY: What he thinks is a just a pledge hazing turns goes south when he is injected with a secret serum which turns him into his own fantasy of what a woman should be.

Alpha Male

By Gunslinger

Terry Rideou was halfway to the store when the van pulled to a screeching halt beside him and a trio of muscular, black-clad men in ski-masks spilled out the open side door.

Terry had a few second's warning as the sound of well-worn breaks screaming in protest dragged his head around, allowing him to see the dilapidated, dark-colored van come to a shuddering stop. Even as it halted, the trio of faceless attackers were scrambling out in a nearly well-coordinated movement - but there was a few feet between them and Terry, who was standing near the entrance of one of the many narrow alleys that riddled the older downtown section near where he lived. He knew these alleys like the back of his hand, having grown up in the neighborhood, and - unlike his massively built assailants - he had the rangy physique that bespoke his prowess as both sprinter and marathon runner. There was no doubt that he could outrun the trio of men, whose sheer bulk would be a liability in a foot-race.

With all that in his favor, the tall, ruggedly-handsome youth with the short mop of sandy blond hair only made a token sprint for safety, making almost no distance as a pair of attackers grabbed him, the third slipping a bag over his face and cutting off the late afternoon light. He barely even struggled, making more noise than any real hindrance, as they tossed him - fairly gently - into the back of the van, the sound of the door being slid shut mingling with the roar of the engine and the squeal of the tires as the noisy vehicle accelerated away from the curb.

The reason that Terry didn't put up much of a struggle was actually quite simple. He was looking forward to the 'kidnapping'.

Well, not necessarily to the kidnapping per se - he didn't know what the 'attack' was going to be, and he wasn't looking forward to the attack for its own sake. What he was looking forward to, however, was what the attack stood for. Though the method, execution and style varied from year to year and from person to person, the fact that he was 'attacked' was a sign that he was being seriously considered for membership in his college's most prestigious fraternity - the Alpha Kappa Delta's.

The procedure for becoming an Alpha Male wasn't an easy one. The Alpha's were a small, 'elite' fraternity, and they took their membership seriously. Their initiations for pledges were serious tests that went through twelve different stages, each one of which winnowed down the prospective group of pledges further and further. Terry had already been through eleven of the steps, and had been waiting, with baited breath, the final stage - if he was considered to be 'the right type' of guy for the Alpha's. That was one of the cruelties of the Alpha initiation's last stage - they never, ever told anyone flat out that they'd failed. Instead, they simply refused to move on to the next step for the failed pledge

- but there was no set interval between stages, so each prospective member went through a torture of anxiety, not knowing whether the next stage was yet to come, or if they'd been dropped altogether.

So - now he knew that he was still in the running - and had a fairly good shot at making it to 'Alpha Male' status. All he had to do was pass this final test...

...whatever it was.

As the van shimmied and rattled, sounding as if each part wanted to separate from each other part, Terry lay on the metal floorboards and simply soaked up the vibrations rattling through the vehicle's frame. With his vision occluded by the black hood over his head, he concentrated on the sounds he heard, trying to gather as much information as possible about his surroundings, the route the vehicle was taking, and anything else he could note - he didn't know what information would determine success or failure in the unknown test he was starting, so he strove to gather it all, impossible as that might be.

Above the noise of the engine and the hum of the tires, he could hear the traffic sounds of other vehicles slowly decreasing, which told him that they were heading away from the center of town, maybe towards the suburbs. He could also hear the other occupants in the vehicle talking in low voices, but was unable to distinguish the individual words themselves, leaving him unable to understand what was actually being said, aside from the occasional word or two.

Though he knew it couldn't be all that long a trip, it seemed to Terry that they'd been traveling forever - his adrenaline level was high with excitement and anxiety, and time tried to drag interminably as he lay motionless, afraid to do anything lest it screw up his chances to succeed at the test.

Then, his mind working overtime, he began to wonder if doing nothing, in itself, would cause the failure of the test...

The more he thought about it, the more he began to worry - what if the test itself was to see if he had the guts to risk expulsion by trying to escape. What if not trying would be the failure, whereas successfully avoiding the hypothetical test would be the successful outcome of the real test? What was he going to do?

Finally, he could stand it no more. Taking a deep, silent breath, Terry braced himself...

...then contracted the taut muscles of his abdomen, pulling himself into a sitting position using them alone as his hands rose to yank off the mask...

...only to be stopped dead before he got fairly started, firm hands grasping his arms and forcing him back to the floor. The only way that could have happened was if two of the vehicle's occupants had been sitting beside him silently, ready for just such an attempt.

Now that he'd started on this course of action, he couldn't back out - succeed or fail, he had to play out the choice he'd made. So, he began to struggle against the arms that held him, making a fine balance between honest effort to escape and the knowledge that this wasn't truly a dangerous situation, and he couldn't fight indiscriminately.

Not that he had a snowball's chance in hell, anyway - not with two muscle-bound youths fighting against him in an enclosed environment - they definitely had the upper hand. There was no way he could win the fight - he was just praying that the attempt itself was what they were hoping for, as part of the test.

More time passed while he was held immobile, making the occasional - vain - attempt to 'escape'. Then he heard the pitch of the engine changing as the hum of pavement changed to the crackle of gravel under the tires. This sound continued for a good fifteen minutes, letting Terry know he must be on one of the myriad rural routes that lay outside the city limits, a good distance from either his apartment or the campus - giving him an idea of what was to come.

Finally, the vehicle pulled to a stop, the feel of gravity indicating that they were on the back-side slope of a hill somewhere out in farm country. A short pause ensued, then the hood was pulled from his face.

The light from the over-head dome wasn't all that bright, but Terry had been hooded for at least half an hour, and it took several seconds for his eyes to adjust. When they did, he found himself in the back of a van filled with the detritus of its day-time function as the janitor's van - mops, buckets and odd cleaning supplies vied for the space filled by the five youths who had filled the van, now looming over him with their mask-covered faces focused on him alone.

"Okay, bud, listen up." One of the masked men said, trying to (and not quite succeeding) sound gruff and threatening. "We've been hearing things about some group that calls themselves the 'Alphas', and we want to know all about them. Now, you got three choices here. First: You can tell us all you know, and we'll take you back home."

Opening a small satchel, the masked man extracted a hypodermic syringe. It was about a quarter filled with a slightly yellowish liquid.

"Second: we can inject you with this. This is Pentobarbital Sodium - a kind of 'truth serum'. Then, after we wring you dry, we'll dump you here and you can try and get home by yourself, while still doped up. Trying to flag down a cop for help in that state would be... interesting, I would think."

He gestured, and a second masked youth reached into the bag and pulled out another needle - this one full to the top of a murky, dark-green fluid that looked decidedly unpleasant.

"Third choice - you manage to keep from talking under the truth serum - and we inject you with this, then bury your body where it'll never be found. So, pal - what's it gonna be."

Terry now knew exactly what was going to happen. Rule number one about the Alphas was simple - you never, ever, under any circumstance, discussed anything about them with anyone else. True, these guys were really Alpha Males themselves, but for the purpose of the test he was supposed to pretend they weren't. If he simply blabbed things about them, he'd fail for sure.

"Forget it - I'm not telling you a damned thing." Terry said, defiantly. He could have chosen to deny he knew anything, but figured that this would 'look better'.

"Okay, then - the truth serum." The man said. He nodded at one of the youths holding Terry's arm, and the youth pushed up the sleeve of the light-gray sweatshirt Terry was wearing, holding firmly onto his arm.

The first attacker then leaned forward, squeezed the plunger on the needle slightly to make sure there was no air bubbles in the syringe - then plunged the needle into Terry's vein and emptied the contents of it into his bloodstream.

Terry hadn't been sure how much of this was a bluff, and how much was 'real', to make the test truly demanding. He wasn't terribly surprised at being injected, though - many of the Alphas were taking pre-med, so they were probably using 'truth serum', exactly as advertised. Just to see how much willpower he had, as well as to test his willingness to 'take a needle' for the Alphas.

The assailants sat back on their heels and waited, their obvious leader keeping an eye on his watch - obviously, he knew what he was doing, and knew how long it took for Pentobarbital Sodium to reach it's full effect. The whole 'abduction and interrogation' routine was well worked out and played, impressing Terry with the Alpha's dedication and imaginations....

Murphy's Law is famous, the world over. Everybody knows it, or some close variation on it. Slightly less known is O'Tooles comment on Murphy's Law:

'Murphy was an optimist'....

The van was parked on a hill. The van was also old, dilapidated - and currently 'untended', the occupants all in the back. So, there was no one immediately handy when the parking brake began to slip, and the van began to roll forward, rapidly gathering speed as the vehicle rolled down the incline.

With a curse, the masked youth nearest the driver's seat scrambled to the front of the van, Terry watching him move with an odd sensation. It seemed almost as if the youth was moving in slow motion, though he was obviously hurrying. At the same time, the whole scene seemed to be oddly exaggerated in it's aspects - everything seemed heightened in intensity, with the colors being starker, the noises being sharply and clearly. Strangely, despite the enhanced sensations, it was also strange distant from Terry, as if he was watching it all on a movie screen - a high resolution, high-contrast movie screen with Dolby Surround sound, granted, but with that odd disconnection from his own sense of self. It took a second for him to register that it must be an effect of the drug kicking in - his own thought processes were also effected with a duality, trivial thoughts and ideas seemingly clearer and more profound then they'd ever been before, yet his ability to separate important thoughts from unimportant ones and follow them to a logical conclusion was fuzzy and difficult.

He watched the slow-motion figure of the youth slip behind the wheel, and it seemed that he could read the man's near-panic through the set of his shoulders and angle of his wrists. Terry could actually see each of the muscles in the man's legs move in a chain reaction as they bunched under the dark jeans he wore, pushing his foot down on the brake with a firm motion, 'slamming' the breaks in a languorous set of motions.

In the 'real' world, the actions were quick and hard, and the van rocked to a sudden stop just before it would have rolled off the curving road at the bottom of the hill and down the embankment.

The sudden stop jolted all the passengers forward...

Terry could feel the needle the third youth was still holding slide into his arm. It seemed to take forever to slide through his skin and into his vein, and it seemed to Terry that the slender metal spike was the size of the Empire State Building as it shouldered aside cells to make room for itself in his flesh. Then the rubber seal at the top of the needle itself pressed against his skin, stopping the forward motion of the needle - and the continued weight of the youth holding it forced the plunger inward, sending the contents of the syringe into Terry's bloodstream, where he could feel it slowly spreading throughout his bloodstream, seeming to burn slightly as it spread through the veins and arteries of his suddenly more 'there' body.

"Oh, shit!" John LaPointe swore, under his breath, staring at the empty syringe he held. He was a new pledge himself, made a member of the Alpha's only two days ago. His test had been to break into the bio-med supply room and fill the two syringes - one with a Sodium Pentathol derivative, the other with something 'threatening'. Since they'd never planned to use the second syringe, John hadn't even paid any attention to what he was filling it with, having chosen solely on appearance. He knew that it wasn't a poison, alkaloid or acid, because the different substances were stored in different lockers, and he hadn't bothered to pick the locks on any of the really dangerous cabinets. He'd picked the lock on the Barbiturate cabinet to get the Pentobarbital. Then he'd broken into the Faculty locker to get the 'other drug', because the 'new' drugs that the tenured staff worked on as side-projects were most often the scariest looking. Whatever was now flowing through Terry's veins was one of those projects, a drug that was not designed to be specifically lethal - but, other than that, John had no idea what the drug was, what it would do, or what the correct dosage - and dangerous overdose amount - was.

This could get him kicked out of the Alphas...

A quick glance around showed that nobody had noticed what had happened. All this had taken place in the space of an instant, even his frenzied thoughts and horrified conclusion - and everybody else was focused on the drop-off just in front of the beaten-up Ford's bumper.

Panicked and scared, John dropped the empty syringe into a puddle of cleaning fluid that had spilled, then stepped on it with his heel, crushing it.

"Shit!" He swore loudly, drawing the leader's attention. Catching John's point of focus, he looked down - and saw the shattered syringe, the fluid surrounding it keeping him from realizing that it had been empty.

"Don't worry about it." The leader of the little group said, shortly - he was angry at the unplanned situation, but was forcing himself from lashing out at somebody else because of it, and was actually being more reasonable about the 'accident' with the syringe as a result.

"Sorry..." John said. In another situation, he would have been caught cold from the expression on his face, but the featureless ski-mask he wore hid his guilty expression from view.

Terry wasn't about to tell on John - he was lost in a sort of a daze, his drugged mind having latched onto the idea of a great new type of infallible parking break. Though he remembered being injected, and had planned to say something, it didn't seem as important as the new train of thought he'd hit upon, which seemed so obvious and clear that he couldn't believe that he hadn't thought of it before...

"Hey, Terry." The leader of the group said, snapping his fingers in front of Terry's face, breaking his chain of thought. For a second, Terry just stared at the fingers in front of his face, amazed at their shape and texture, and the way they moved as they slipped across one another with slow, sharp movements. A second later, Terry's mind made the connection between the fingers themselves and the muffled reports that seemed to echo through his head, and he realized that he was watching a hand snapping its fingers. His brain then slowly connected a chain of reasoning, and Terry realized that the man whose hand belonged to was trying to get his attention.

His body feeling heavy and slow, Terry slowly forced himself to focus on the man in the ski-mask.

Seeing he had what little attention Terry could give, the masked man began to question Terry about the Alphas. Nothing serious, and the answers didn't matter to him - he just watched as Terry struggled against the drug's effect on him.

It was a foregone conclusion that Terry would eventually answer the questions. It took considerable training to be able to 'spoo' the drug. What interested the leader of the group was how well Terry fought. Finally, satisfied that Terry was giving the answers 'unwillingly', he decided that Terry had passed the first half of the test, and it was time to proceed to stage two.

"Already - that's all we need to know." He said, not bothering to act the 'thug' anymore - Terry was in no condition to notice. Gesturing, the leader had one of the others help him, and they hauled Terry out of the van.

"Okay - now you get to find your own way home." The leader said, as he and his companion climbed back into the van, which was now running. The vehicle backed away from the edge of the embankment, made a three-point turn, then sped off....

...just as it was beginning to dawn on Terry what he was supposed to do.

He stood there on the side of the dirt-and-gravel road, just soaking up the atmosphere of the late summer evening. The sun was heading for the horizon behind a stand of trees, stark shadows intermingled with long, slanting rays of pinkish-orange light. A soft, cool wind was stirring the foliage, and Terry found himself entranced in the motion of the leaves...

..after a few minutes, it dawned on him that he was just standing there staring at a bunch of trees, and he snapped his attention away from them, feeling disjointed and awkward. He looked around again, recalling which direction the van had come from, and departed to - up the hill he was now facing, the one it had rolled down.

It seemed to take considerable effort to get his body moving - it felt heavy and awkward and uncoordinated, as if his brain wasn't directly connected to his body. He felt as if 'Terry', the quintessential him, was a small man inside the head of the body, looking out through the eyes and operating a complex series of levers, switches and knobs to make the body work. At the same time, all his senses seemed hyperactive, reporting things with more clarity than he ever thought possible - when the wind ruffled his shortish, unstyled mop of sandy blond hair, he could swear he felt each individual strand's movement.

He'd just started up the hill when his hypersensitive senses began to report something odd going on in his body.

Confused at the strange sensations running through him, he looked down at his left arm, whose sleeve was still pushed up from being injected, and which it hadn't occurred to him to push down. As he stared dopily at the arm, he realized that the flesh itself was writhing, as if it were an ocean and the tide was rolling in. the undulating motion of the flesh and sinew was causing the hairs of his arm to fall out, and he watched them drift to the ground in bemused amazement, not really capable of worrying about it at the moment.

When his eyes made it back to the arm itself, it was because the sensation had 'deepened', now reaching right to the bone itself. He watched in amazement as the arm reshaped itself, becoming slimmer and finer. The wrist narrowed considerably, as the hand at it's end became smaller with longer, more supple fingers, each tipped with a nail that was somewhat longer then it had been before.

It took him a couple of seconds to think about comparing it to his other hand, and he found that both hands had the same, slender appearance.

"hey..." Terry giggled, finding his voice thick and slightly slurred. "I've got hands like a girl!"

Terry's attention was pulled from his hands by a pushing/pulling/swelling sensation elsewhere. His hands slid down to slide across his hips and ass as they slowly expanded outwards, pulling the slightly baggy denim of his faded jeans tighter and tighter s the flesh underneath reformed itself, making his hips wider and his ass fuller and firmer. At the same time, he felt the strangest 'pulling' sensation in his crotch, and he agonizingly fumbled open his fly and slid his hand down his silk boxers just in time to feel the last remnant of his once-proud manhood retreat inside his body. Under his questing fingers, he felt the flesh at his crotch reshaping itself, and he gasped at the sensations created as a clit formed under his roaming fingers, perfectly matched with the rapidly forming cunt.

As amazing as it seemed, his attention could be diverted from his lost manhood and newly-formed womanhood. He was staring down at his crotch, his mind just beginning to catch on to the fact that this wasn't right, when he noticed that his view was being occluded by his sweatshirt, which was slowly being pushed out at the chest, accompanied by an odd swelling sensation. His hands rose from his crotch and slid over the sweat-shirt, and he could feel the firm mounds of flesh beneath the sweater - as well as feel his hand's pressure through the flesh itself.

"I'm growing tits..." He said, as the swelling mounds continued to push out against his hands, already the size of grapefruit and still expanding.

It took a second, then...

"I'm growing tits!" Terry gasped, stunned and as horrified as he could get at the moment. "I'm turning into a.. a.. chick!"

There was no denying it - her breast were continuing to expand, even as sensation through the rest of his body informed him that the rest of his body was configuring itself to a new gender.

The initial euphoric 'high' of the drug was wearing off now, though it was still in his system and functioning in its main capacity as a hypnotic. Terry, of course, wasn't aware of that - he just knew that the artificially induced euphoria was fading, allowing him to respond more naturally to what was occurring to his body, even if he still felt somewhat light-headed and disconnected.

"Holy shit!" Terry swore. Completely disregarding any modesty or legal ramifications, he stripped out of his clothes. The worn-but comfortable sneakers, the faded jeans, the sweatshirt - even the athletic socks and the boxers, all came off and were dropped in a pile as she tried to get a good look at the body whose changes were just coming to a completion.

Of course, getting a really good look at your own body is nearly impossible without a mirror - but she definitely tried, even as the sensations from her body fed more information to a brain that was starting to rev up the emotions.

Fighting against the new weight and drag at her chest, Terry leaned over and stared down at a pair of feminine feet. They weren't all that changed, in absolute terms - but what had changed was enough, definitely pushing them into the 'feminine' category, as they'd become slightly shorter in length and significantly narrower in width. The proportions had also altered on more subtle levels, leaving her with feet that were unremarkable for a woman - but definitely remarkable at the base of a person who, until a short time ago, had been male.

Attached to those feet were a slimmer pair of ankles that led up to legs that were feminine, and - while not amazingly so - definitely sexy in a sort of cute, athletically toned way. Those legs led upwards to hips that had suffered relatively minor widening, to the point where they looked feminine, even if they were fairly slim and athletic for a woman. Though the new woman couldn't see her altered ass, she could defiantly tell that it was fuller and firmer, to a considerable degree.

There, nestled between her new, firmly silky thighs, was the undeniable outer lips of a pussy, unadorned by any pubic hair at all.

"I'm not going to faint..." Terry told herself firmly as the world grayed out for a second at the rush of emotions from finding herself 'unmanned'. The words brought little comfort, as they emerged in an unremarkable, but definitely feminine, contralto.

She couldn't see the slender, toned waist she now possessed, though her roaming hands informed her of such. She couldn't see the waist and taut stomach, because of the tits blocking her downward view.

And what a pair of tits they were! Of course, she could only see the upper halves, but what she could see, plus the feel of them in her hesitant, feminine new hands, informed her that they were huge - the size of basketballs, though no piece of sport paraphernalia had ever felt so resiliently soft, so silky smooth. Tipped by large, frank nipples, the massive boobs were almost spherical, gravity not yet having a chance to work on them like naturally-occurring tits. They looked more like surgical implants, with their firm texture and round shape - but, then again, they lacked the under-sized nipples and the unnatural 'hardness' at the center of saline- or silicon-inflated implants.

Her shoulders were somewhat broad for a woman, but not remarkably so - in fact, they were nicely rounded and toned, leading to shapely, smooth arms that matched the undeniable feminine nature of her slightly broad hands. The shoulder blades led to a slimmer neck that led up to the one part that she couldn't see in any form or fashion, her altered facial features - but her fingers could (and did) foam over her face. What they reported to her stunned and dazed brain was a slimmer, if still somewhat squarish jaw, a much smaller nose with more of an upturn at the end, and lips that were considerably fuller and softer than before. They could also inform the new woman of the longer status her eyelashes had achieved, and of the finer, more up-swept eyebrows that had replaced her previously heavy, straight ones. She also found that there had been changes in her cheekbones, which felt higher and slightly more prominent, and in her ears, which were smaller and more finely curved. In fact, the only thing that seemed unchanged was the shaggy mass of sandy-blond hair topping the whole package off.

"Oh... my.. god..." Terry said, heavily, wincing at the sound of her altered voice. Not knowing what else to do, she slowly began to dress as she tried to come to terms with what had happened to her. From what she could gather, she'd been turned into a tomboyishly attractive woman who would have been cute and mildly sexy in a wholesome, somewhat vague sort of way - if you could ignore the massive, spherical tits her athletic frame now sported. In fact, all things considered, she was just about what you'd expect Terry to look like, if she'd been born female - she had the Male Terry's same athletic frame, given the necessary adjustments for gender. In fact, she was the same height as she had been, as a male, and the clothing she was putting on fit pretty well, with the obvious exceptions of the hips, ass and breasts, where it clung much more tightly than it had before.

In fact - Terry realized that she must also be the exact same weight, as - remarkable and 'magical' as the change seemed - there was no way for mass to simply vanish. It had to go somewhere, since her frame was more slender and less muscular, for the most part.

Which, she realized, explained the massive tits thrust so roundly from her chest. All the extra muscle mass had been converted into breast-flesh, and was now straining the sweatshirt to the limit, each round, firm mound clearly defined by the taut fabric covering them.

Her mind was strangely composed and analytical about what had just happened to her - or, more accurately, there was nothing strange about it, despite how it might seem. It was the reaction that any first-year medical - or, perhaps more accurately, psych - student could have recognized.

Terry was in shock.

So many emotions had thrummed through her at one time over what had happened, that her body - in a self-preservation instinct - refused to recognize any of them. Her mind, instead, whirled aimlessly, unable to focus on anything 'major', while seemingly obsessed with minor things. Just as a mother in shock might become obsessed with finding her child's favorite toy, or a businessman in shock might become obsessed with tomorrow's scheduling conflict, Terry's mind was incapable of dealing with the overall condition, and was jumping from one aspect to another.

She found herself thinking about her shoes, which no longer fit. With obsessive care, she once again removed them and picked them up, her movements almost dreamy, her eyes not quite focused as she went about the task with a single-minded attention to every detail and movement, making her almost graceful - in a disconnected sort of way.

That done, she found her attention focused on her massive new bust, the weight of it, the way it thrust outward from her chest, straining against the fabric of the sweatshirt. She found herself moving with a slow deliberate motion, to keep them from jiggling or swaying too much, and she was over-aware of the feel and heft of them. Including the fact that the sensations themselves were actually quite pleasant. In fact, over all, she was aware - from the male viewpoint that reigned within the female body - that she was an attractive-looking young woman with massive tits. Though, as a male, he hadn't been terribly attracted to big busts, she was all-too-aware of her new endowments, and the feminine connotations they held.

All of this was 'natural' - but, as any psychologist could have told her, dangerous. Treatment was to bring the person out of emotional shock gently but firmly, getting them to deal with reality, no matter how painful.

Worse - Terry was still under the influence of the hypnotic drug coursing through her new, feminine system. As her mind focused endlessly on detail after detail, it effected her much more deeply and profoundly than it would have, otherwise, making the obsessive qualities not only sharper and more 'important' - but much longer-lasting, as they 'infiltrated' past the purely conscious level of normal shock, slipping into the deeper recesses of her subconscious.

Worst of all was the fact that she wasn't aware of the drug's influence. With the euphoric portion of its effects gone, she wasn't aware that she was still deeply within the hypnotic stages. She had no conscious control over what her brain processed, which would have happened on a basic level if she'd just known that she was under the influence. Just as telling somebody not to think of elephants would invariably cause them to think of just that, knowing she was vulnerable would have forced her to consciously consider each of her thoughts for content. Unknowingly, she was letting anything at all roll around in her unprotected brain, without the most basic of defenses - critical thinking - coming to her aid.

Not realizing any of this, from the shock to the vulnerability of her psyche, the new woman could only deal with what she knew, in the best fashion she could - under the circumstances...

"It's part of the test..." She said, aloud, in a dazed sort of voice, hope slowly blossoming on her tomboyish new features. "It's the second half of the test, and I'll be changed back once I get to the frat!"

In psychiatric circles, this was what was known as 'denial'. A common effect of emotional shock.

"That's it!" Terry said, snapping her fingers as animation flowed back into her new voice. "They're testing me to see how I react to being female on the trip back. I bet if I freak out over it, I fail - that must be it!"

This was 'rationalization', finding a 'reasonable' reason why the denial must be 'true'....

Some of the tension seeped from Terry's athletic, feminine body as she 'figured out ' what was going on. Now everything 'made sense', as far as she was concerned. This wasn't permanent or anything, it was just a test, after which - pass or fail - she'd be made male again. So - the only question now, was what she was going to do during the test itself.

Terry's full new lips curved upwards in a grin. "Hell, why not enjoy it?" She asked herself, 'reasonably'. After all, since it was only a short-term thing, there was no reason she couldn't have a little fun while she passed this latest trial. Sure, being made suddenly female was unnerving - but it wouldn't have been much of a test otherwise, would it? So, once she was 'over' the initial shock, she figured she might as well milk the new situation for all it was worth, as a sort of a 'once in a lifetime' chance to walk the other side of the gender barrier. After all - the test here was to see how she coped with the (completely temporary) change into a female, and by provisionally 'embracing' the change and playing the role to the best of her ability, she'd be succeeding at the test, while making it easier for her to cope with the situation. (While it lasted.)

Of course, she was completely oblivious to the glaring errors in her reasoning, her higher faculties by- passed by shock and the effect of the Pentobarbital still coursing through her system.

So, as she started to walk up the hill in the direction the van had vanished, Terry...

...or, as she'd decided to call herself for the (purely intentional-yet-limited) time she was female, 'Terri'...

...made a conscious effort to mimic the walk that would fit a 'natural' woman with this body, to the best of her ability. Not that she 'wanted' to, precisely - it just seemed important for her to do so, for many vague but compelling reasons, not the least of which was the fact that her body would feel off to her, even if she attempted to walk the way she always had as a man. On top of this was the fact that, to a hypothetical observer, the feminine stride would look less noteworthy than the male stride. So, she let her legs take shorter, more in-line strides while she made up for the lack of motion of her feet by adding more action to her hips - kind of a swivel-dip, her hips rotating more while each hip dipped further with each step. This action caused some noticeable motion in her breasts, which she compensated for with a sort of rolling motion of the shoulders as she swung her arms, converting the walk from a strong, if somewhat 'careless' male stride into a smoother, more feline feminine stride.

That still didn't keep her tits from moving within the tight confines of her sweatshirt, of course - despite being amazingly firm for their size, her tits were huge, and they had all the inertia that mass imparted. With every step she took, they shifted from side to side, her large, bare nipples sliding over the fabric of the sweatshirt. She could also feel the drag and mass of the tits themselves, something which she couldn't have described with exact accuracy if her life depended on it. the closest analogy she could come up with was to have to large, warm-water-filled balloons tapped to her chest - but, somehow, capable of transmitting sensations through the 'balloons' as well as from the chest wall that was bearing the weight.

It left a lot to be desired as a description, though - much of which came as a surprise to her. Somehow, she'd always thought of breasts as somehow being 'part-of-yet-separate-from' the rest of the body, self-contained and creating only sensations within themselves. She was amazed to find that it also affected the skin under her armpits and over her shoulders, which tightened and loosened with the movements of her new, massive endowments. More than that, the weight and soft mass of her breasts didn't just affect her by pulling forward on her chest, though they definitely did that. The muscles in her back, legs and waist also had to 'compensate' for both the constant drag of their presence and the shifting balance created by their movement. She couldn't claim to have given much prior thought to what walking around with huge, firm tits would feel like - but, if she had, she wouldn't have expected everything she was feeling as she headed up the hill.

That was just her breasts - she didn't even want to get into the hundred-and-one other sensations that her newly female body experienced from the simple act of walking. Like the way her crotch felt, without the bulge of genitals to 'walk around', her thighs moving over each other in ways that would have been painful as a man. Like the way her fuller ass felt with each step - as a man, she hadn't really, consciously, noted that the ass itself was musculature, and not just a 'passenger', but an active part of walking itself.

All this, atop smaller, slimmer feet that didn't seem nearly as well suited to inherent balance, requiring more of a conscious effort and grace than walking - or even standing - as a male did.

Terri tried to ignore all this as she walked - ignore it, consciously, that was. She had to pay attention to every single movement she made to allow her to move at all in this new body. All her old 'habits' for walking and balancing were completely off for her new build, meaning that she had to supply a certain amount of her concentration for simple acts that she used to do without thinking, as a man.

Which is why she didn't notice the car until it pulled right up beside her. "Well, hell oooooooo miss!"

Terri's heart skipped a beat as she spun around, almost toppling over as - for a second - surprise made her react out of now-useless instinct. Adrenaline shot through her altered system at the surprise, and she felt keyed-up, ready to fight or flee....

Then she got a good look at the car and its occupant, and wasn't sure how to react.

The car was a mid-eighties Mustang convertible, one of the less distinctive 'Pony Cars' Ford had ever produced. At least - that's how they were when they rolled off the assembly-line. This one, however, was anything but factory stock.

It was painted the brightest, most eye-searing shade of yellow that Terri had ever seen, with enough coats of KlearKote to give it a near-mirror shine, like the one boasted by the add-on chrome bumpers, running-boards, and the massive ram-scoop intake that rose from the center of the car's hood. The interior was a little more sedate, being 'simple' Zebra-skin-pattern leather.

The young man sitting in the driver's seat and ginning toothily at her was just as gaudy as his car. He was short, but almost as broad as he was tall, his oak-tanned body rippling with massive musculature. Covering the upper half of that musculature was the brightest, loudest, ugliest Hawaiian shirt it had ever been Terri's misfortune to see, and a pair of knee-length black neoprene swim-trunks with a lime- green stripe up the side. A pair of iridescent Ray-Bans' rested on the notched lump of his once-broken nose, and his teeth where almost surrealistic, they were so perfectly white and even. Topping the whole package of was a long mane of raven-black hair, tied back into a ponytail.

"Oh, hi..." Terri said, with a relieved little laugh. "You startled me."

"My mistake, then - the K-Man wouldn't purposely do anything unpleasant to a lovely lady like yourself." He said, his grin - if possible - actually growing wider.

"K-Man?" Terri asked, trying to keep up with the conversation while part of her was concentration on just remaining upright against the weight of her chest.

The guy whipped off his sunglasses, revealing a pair of startlingly blue eyes. "Kyle Kantor, at your service. And what can I call you? beside 'Gorgeous', of course."

"Terri." She said, "Terri Ritter." She was feeling distinctly uncomfortable - because the 'K-Man' seemed to be speaking directly to her tits, his eyes firmly riveted to where her massive new endowments were staring against the fabric of her sweatshirt.

She was, of course, disgusted and annoyed, as well as embarrassed and ashamed. The thing was, she had the absolute conviction that she had to act - and react - the way she would if she'd been born to this body. Or, rather, the way she thought that a woman who looked like this would act, which was a different proposition.

In her current condition, it never occurred to her to wonder about the origin of that absolute conviction. Instead, she found herself compelled to act upon it...

...so - not liking it at all, be feeling that it was necessary - she took a deep breath and pulled her shoulders back while she leaned forward, practically thrusting her tits in Kyle's face.

"I don't suppose you'd care to give me a lift, Kyle?" She asked, consciously - and unhappily - pitching her voice into a smoother, more seductive tone as she forced her full new lips into an equally warm, seductive smile.

"Sure thing, Babe." He told her tits. "Hop on in."

Terri headed around the other side of the car to climb in. Aware that Kyle was watching her, she 'ducked it up' and walked the way she thought women did. Being on the inside, however, and unable to see her own walk from an outside perspective, she had no idea that she was over-doing it, over- emphasizing the roll and sway of her hips, walking with one foot after the other in an in-line glide full of feline grace that looked damned seductive.

Opening the door to the car, she slid into the seat and smiled over at Kyle. "I'm heading to the Alpha fraternity. Do you know where that is?"

"Sure do, honey." Kyle said. "Say, you droppin' by to see your boyfriend."

"Of course not!" She said, almost indignantly, out of reflex - then cursed herself, silently. "Oh - so what're you doing there?" Kyle asked, flashing another thousand-watt smile. "Going to a party." Terri said, coming up with the explanation on the spur of the moment.

"Oh, a party girl - I like that." Kyle said. "As a matter of fact, that's where I'm going - me and some friends are having a party at my place, just a few blocks from the campus. I promise you, our party's bigger and better. Why don't you hang with us for awhile? Then, whenever you get bored, you can head over to the Alpha house from there."

Damn. The last thing she wanted to do was spend time with Kyle and his friends. But she couldn't refuse - now that she'd said she was a real party girl, she had to accept the offer of a bigger and better part. She couldn't turn it down, because it would be out of character.

Mentally grimacing, she smiled brightly. "Sure, sounds great!"

Again, it didn't even occur to her to wonder why she felt such a powerful need to stay in 'character' - especially since that 'character' was being created out of stray comments made by her and Kyle. If she'd been capable of thinking straight, she would have realized that she could have found a hundred of different ways to weasel out of the party - but, right now, the thought had never even occurred to her. Kyle thought she was a party girl - so now she had to be one.

Dropping the car into gear, he headed towards his place.

"Hey." Terri said, to make conversation. "If you live near the University, what are you doing way out here?"

Kyle grinned. "Well Promise not to tell, but I was seeing my connection. A little of the fun stuff to party with. You must know what I mean."

She did - and winced, internally. The thought that she could use the drugs as an excuse to avoid the party didn't come to her at all. Instead...

"Sure, I know - Like I said, I'm a real party girl." She said, brightly, not even recalling that it was Kyle who'd defined her as one, not herself.

Now that he thought she was also a user, Kyle dropped the circumspect manner. "Hey, that's great. Like I said, it's a real party, and we went whole hog on this. Grass, hash, oil, 'cid, 'shrooms - the works. Even got some exxtacy."

"Hey, that's great!" Terri said, feigning enthusiasm out of misplaced 'need' to say within the spurious 'character' she was unconsciously creating for 'herself'.

"We aim to please." The K-Man said with another blinding grin as he guided the speeding bright- yellow missile into the city itself, hurtling towards the campus. "We also got just about every type of liquor known to man, too."

With skilled precision that bordered on a performance, he slammed on the breaks and cranked the wheel hard, sending the car into a long, wide skid that left it aimed at the driveway to a sprawling old building badly in need of a coat of paint. Gunning the engine, Kyle shot into the driveway and parked behind a big 'Monster' truck, the last in a long line of vehicles that filled the backyard of the house, turned into a churned-up parking lot for the latest of what was obviously a long line of parties. The big frame building was already shuddering under the heavy blows of bass from a powerful stereo, and Terri had the feeling that Kyle blew all his money on: 1)His car 2) His stereo 3)Booze and 4)Drugs.

Not necessarily in that order.

Wanting to whimper and run away, Terri 'had no choice' but to act as if she was looking forward to partying, pasting a smile on her new lips and swinging out of the car with feigned enthusiasm. With the same over-stated, sexy jiggle-and-sway, she followed Kyle up the walk and into the side door, which led to a 'mud room', where fans were stirring air heavy with the scent of three Glade Plug-ins.

The reason was immediately apparent when Kyle opened the inner door and escorted her in.

Terri didn't know what hit her the hardest - the air, heavy with a haze of smoke that smelled evenly of pot and cigarettes, or the heavy driving bass rolling through the house.

"Hey, everybody - this is Terri. She's gonna hang with us for awhile." Kyle informed the people lounging around the huge main room of the strange 'house'. There were maybe two dozen people all told, two thirds of whom were male. Some had the 'hippie' look around them, others looked border-line grunge, and still others looked oddly preppy for such a gathering. There was also two guys and a girl who shared a 'semi-surfer' look similar to Kyle's own...

...and something 'clicked' in Terri's mind as she saw the woman. About her own age, the woman's 'semi-surfer' look was remarkably similar to Terri's own outfit, with the exception that she was wearing pedal-pusher jeans instead of full-length, and a pair of sandals. There was also a good chance that the sweatshirt and jeans were worn over swim wear, but that didn't show.

It was more than just the outfit, though - the woman had a similar athletic build to Terri's own, though not nearly well endowed. Her hair was more brown than blonde, though not truly brunette, and it was somewhat longer than Terri's, though of the same 'careless' styling - or lack thereof.

Though she didn't realize it, the instant Terri saw the woman, something deep in her mind said 'There's who you should model your 'character' after.'

Noticed Terri looking at the woman... and sighed. "Oh, sorry - I didn't know." Terri blinked, confused - then realized what conclusion Kyle had drawn.

It was the perfect 'excuse'... but Terri couldn't take it. She couldn't even consider it. Instead, unwillingly, she giggled. "Oh, geez, no - I'm strictly into guys, Kyle."

Great - now she needed an excuse to explain why she'd been looking so hard at the other woman. She came up with one on the spur of the moment.

"I was just wondering what make-up she buys." Terri said, having noticed the dark-blond woman was wearing a pale lipstick and mascara. "I've never been able to find make-up that I look good in, which is why I don't wear any."

"Well, why don't we ask her?" Kyle said, grinning again. He motioned the woman over. "Terri, meet Nicki. She's the co-owner of this wonderful abode."

Nicki smiled somewhat wryly. "If you wanna call it that - it used to be a Cadets' barracks." She held out a callused, tanned hand. "Hey, Terri, goodameecha. Come on in and grab a drink."

"Sure." Terri said - then, since she'd brought it up with Kyle, was 'forced' to say. "I was just saying to Kyle that I was wondering what make-up you use. I've never been able to find anything that really suits me."

Nicki stepped back and eyed Terri with a wry look. "Lemme guess - you also have a hard time finding clothes that suit you.. and jewelry... and a hairstyle... No offense, but if I looked like you, I wouldn't be downplaying myself."

Click. 'Model yourself after Nicki...'

"Well..." Terri 'admitted'. "The truth is, I grew up with five brothers, raised by a single father. I really haven't had much of a chance to be, you know... 'girlish'."

Nicki laughed. "Well, hell - that's do it." She cocked her head, eyeing Terri more 'professionally'. "Except for the bust, you look to be pretty close to my size. What say we see what we can do for you?"

'Shit - why are they doing this to me?' Terri lamented. "Sure - that'd be great!"

"Follow me, then." Nicki said. With 'no choice', Terri did as she was bidding, following Nicki through the group of people - most of whom were staring at her, unabashedly - and into the muddy-blond's room.

Shutting the door, Nicki turned to Terri. "So, the first thing we need to decide, is what look you're going for. Personally, I like these parties Kyle throws because of the chances of getting laid without having to waste time and money going out. 'Course, if I had a body like yours, it's be a hell of a lot easier."

'Oh, shit...' Terri went cold inside, and had to fight to keep herself from showing it. "Yeah, well, to tell you the truth... that's why I like parties, too."

"Great!" Nicki said. "Let's see what we can do for you. Go ahead and get undressed."

Now Terri was feeling really, really awkward, uncomfortable - and scared. She 'couldn't' let any of that show, though, as she pretended to be nonchalant as she undressed. The lack of a bra made Nicki's eyebrow rise - the boxers, however, she had to comment on.

"Lemme guess - your dad was a firm believer in 'hand-me-downs'."

"Yeah... With just him, money was tight. I didn't even know they sold 'womens' clothing until I turned eighteen and could afford to buy my own clothes - then I felt weird buying anything other than what I was used to wearing." Terri said.

"You really do need my help." Was Nicki's response, said over her shoulder as she rooted through her closet. Unfortunately, she wanted to chat... and Terri wasn't exactly prepared for what Nicki's 'chatting' consisted in. though she was consciously aware of her situation, Terri hadn't considered all the ramifications of it, and had never really considered what 'two women' might talk about while alone...

"So, how the hell did you manage a sex life with a bunch of protective older brothers hanging around?"

Terri winced. "Actually Until the past few months, since I've come to University, I haven't had a sex life. I'm still really new to this "

Nicki winced. "Poor girl! Guess that's why you hit the party scene - looking to make up for lost time." "Oh, yeah!" Terri said, feigning the enthusiasm she figured that her character required while wanting to run out of the house and to the Alpha frat, to get changed back this instant. Just the thought of having sex with guys, even hypothetically, was making her skin crawl.

"Well, lemme give you some advise." Nicki said, still rooting for the clothing she was looking for. "Sex can be the greatest pastime in the world, as long as you don't get to hung up on it. Most girls seem to want to hang all sort of complications on sex - but that just spoils it, the way I see it. No reason to ruin perfectly good sex by getting emotionally involved with it, or the guy. It feels great, it's fun to do, and it doesn't have to have any messy after-effects, if you don't drag them into it."

"Yeah - that's the sort of thing I'm looking for." Terri agreed, feeling nauseous.

"Good for you. Here's some more advice for you, then. Life's a hell of a lot easier if you aim at playing the guys. Let 'em know you'll give 'em just what they want, as long as they give you what you want, too. Don't be afraid to use your body - and, let me tell you, you've got a hell of a body to use." She paused. "Ah, here we go "

She handed Terri a bundle of clothing, and Terri - internally horrified and disgusted, externally 'excited', dressed.

First, there was the underwear - a pair of pastel-blue high-cut bikini briefs with lace trimming at the top. Terri felt utterly mortified to be putting on such a feminine undergarment, and her acting ability wasn't enough to hide the low, slow blush rising in her face - but, with her story, that seemed natural to Nicki, who merely thought Terri was so used to dressing in men's clothes from her years of wearing her brother's hand-me-downs.

Over those feminine panties went a faded blue denim skirt, with natural leather accent waist-band - much too short for Terri's taste, barely coming to mid-thigh, but...

"What good is sexy panties if there's never a chance of showing them?" Nicki quipped.

Then came the top. A white 'ballet' tank-top, with a low neckline and wide strap shoulders, it would have looked 'okay' on Nicki.

On Terri...

She had to fight to get the garment on, even though it was fairly stretchy. Once on, it clung like a second skin, molded to each breast so tightly that - instead of stretching straight across the highest point - it actually dipped about a third of the distance into her cleavage, lifting and defining tits that were so firm and spherical already that they hardly needed to be so emphasized.

The top also displayed an amazing amount of cleavage, the plunging neckline displaying about a third of each tit. Even the covered part wasn't all that 'covered' - her dark nipples could be seen faintly through the material, and there was no missing the way her huge, thick nipples thrust into the fabric.

"That's a good start. Now for some accessories " Nicki said, rooting around once again while Terri admired herself in the mirror.

Part of her was admiring the reflection - the woman in the mirror was obviously dressed to catch a man's eye, and the male part of her had to admit that the woman looked sexy, even though her huge tits were way too much of a good thing. Her legs were also pretty good... and her ass was just phenomenal.

"So... what do you think about blow-jobs?" Nicki asked, her voice muffled by the closet. "You try any yet?"

"Uh.. no.." Terri said, fighting the urge to vomit at the thought.

"Well, don't believe what you might have heard." Nicki said. "They're not disgusting - at best they're just 'so so'. When you're high, though, sucking a cock can be really, really satisfying - like a warm popsicle with a creamy center. Try it sometime."

Oh, dear god...

Then she put on the shoes Nicki provided - natural leather 'sandals' with a four-inch high heel. With the shoes came some jewelry - a bracelet and an anklet, both 'silver', a necklace with a pendant, in pewter - and pair of white plastic earrings in the form of exclamation marks.

"tacky, I know - but hey, I bought them when I was sixteen. They're the only clip-ons I got." Nicki said. "You really should get your ears pierced."

"I'll do that." Terri said - glad that she'd be male long before the urge to follow her promise would force her to do just that.

The final touch was the same minimal make-up scheme that Nicki wore - then they were ready to rejoin the party.

It was almost like there where to directly opposite personalities in Terri now. She was disgusted and embarrassed by the way she looked, and what she was wearing - but she 'had' to act as if she was excited by her make-over, acting more sexy as she walked out of the room with careful balance atop the heels, playing the part of a woman who enjoyed looking sexy and who wanted men to notice her. She felt sick, but that didn't inhibit the way she began 'flirting' mildly with the men who were staring at her as she crossed the main room behind Nicki, heading for the kitchen for a drink.

When they got there, a tall, almost painfully thin man was just getting himself a drink. He was also almost frighteningly pale, with almost translucent skin, topped off by a shock of rust-red hair. His eyes were the most intense green Terri had ever seen.

"Hey there, Nicki." He said, with a grin, pulling out a beer and handing it to her, obviously familiar with her brand. He, himself, was holding a really big bottle of Colt .45 Strong. He smiled and addressed Terri's exposed cleavage. "And.. Terri, right?"

"Yeah, that's right." Terri said - mentally shuddering at the way she said it, and what she did while she did. She gave him a long, thorough once over, her eyes pausing noticeably at his crotch. Her voice was sexy and thoughtful.

"I'm Sean, but people just call me 'Red'" He introduced himself. "So - what's your poison?"

"I drink Colt too." She said - even though she hated the stuff. She just couldn't stop herself from saying it, even though she shuddered at the memory of the taste.

The actual taste was even worse - but she had to act as if she liked it. She followed Nicki and Red back into the main room. Nicki curled up on a beanbag chair, while Red flopped down on the futon opposite her.

With no real choice (she thought), she also sat down on the futon, beside Red - and found herself compelled to look at him again, sidelong, before smiling mysteriously as she took another sip of the god-awful beer.

"What?" Red asked, smiling back. "You're cute."

Terri was utterly horrified to hear the words emerge from her mouth - she hadn't had any idea what she was going to say, and the words came as a complete shock to her. On a very deep level, her subconscious had absorbed enough of her 'character' to begin and formulate 'habits'. In fact, it had been doing so for a while now, she just hadn't noticed.

Like her walk - she'd stopped thinking about it complete, the sexy stride no 'ingrained' into her vulnerable subconscious. Other movements were also 'habitual' now, though she didn't realize it. She didn't even realize that she'd sat down with a decidedly feminine motion, and if she looked down at that instant she would have been amazed to find her legs crossed at the knee in a subconscious imitation of the feminine pose she'd seen so many times before.

And it would have really, really shocked her to learn that she'd been using body language to come on to Sean since the first instant she'd seen him. She's noticed the 'once over' she'd given him, because she could see what her eyes were looking at - but she couldn't see her own body, and she couldn't have seen the 'moves' she'd used so far.

When she'd first seen Sean in the kitchen, she'd pulled back her shoulders to make her tits stand out even more - which is one of the reasons he had been (and still was) shooting glances at her mouth- watering cleavage from time to time. When she'd stood still in the kitchen, it had been with one hand on her hip, one leg forward and hip cocked in his direction - all 'come-on' body language.

Even more blatant - and complete unbeknownst to her - she'd licked her newly-lipstick-covered lips slowly and seductively before taking the first sip of beer - and had done some truly arousing lipwork on the neck of the bottle as she drank.

Now, she was telling him he was cute - and this was one new 'personal habit' she couldn't miss. "Oh, I am, am I?" Red asked, with a grin.

"Yeah..." Terri affirmed, in a breathy voice, unconsciously licking her lips again. She shuddered at the way the answer slipped out, then - before her subconscious could strike again - took control of her own voice. "I know - it probably sounds like I'm hot to jump your bones, but it's really just making conversation. Besides - I can tell you're not really attracted to me."

'Oh, fuck!' She thought, horrified. The conscious and subconscious parts of her brain were in conflict, intermingling what they wanted to say and do - she'd just planned on saying 'I know how that probably sounds, but I'm just trying to make conversation. You're probably thinking I'm sort of... strange'.

To make matters worse - she'd said the last sentence in a pouting tone of voice - then was horrified to find her free hand seductively sliding over her body from her thigh, over her stomach, to her huge tit - which she gently hefting in a decidedly sexual manner. So surprised was she by what was going on, she hadn't noticed what her hand was doing until it reached her tit - and then it was too late to stop it.

Red's response was almost preordained. "Hey, I didn't say that. To tell you the truth... I find you very attractive."

"You don't think my tits are to big, do you?" She asked, thrusting her tits forward....

..when what she'd planned to do was laugh it off, with "even though I've got freakishly big tits?" Her conscious mind had enough control to determine the basic direction of the conversation - but her subconscious was twisting the words and tones to bring totally different meanings to what she was saying and doing.

"Actually... I'm sort of a... 'big tit freak'." He admitted, sheepishly. "I think you look.. spectacular." Oh, that was just great!

This wasn't going well at all. Terri felt like she was going to be sick to her stomach - but she couldn't show any of that emotional at all.

She was beginning to get really, really scared. By now, the shock of being turned into a woman was fading, as was the effects of the drug itself, and she was once more able to think critically - enough to wonder what the hell she was doing, and what the hell she'd been thinking up till now. She was no longer a slave to every comment or suggestion made to her, as the suggestibility faded - but that which had already been planted in her mind still existed, and influenced her on a subconscious level.

With reality finally seeping in, she was horrified by where she was and what was going on- and now capable of taking action to get away from the situation, hampered as she would be by the subconscious 'cues' now stuck in her brain. The first thing she realized was so basic that it stunned her that it hadn't occurred to her before.

Keep her mouth shut. Her subconscious couldn't twist anything if she didn't say anything.

She became aware that Red and Nicki were looking at her oddly, as she'd lapsed into a silence, a stunned, horrified look on her face as realization had set in. Now, without a word, she set her beer aside and stood up.

"Terri...?" Nicki asked, questioningly, confused.

Terri refused to answer - it wouldn't be safe. instead, she headed for the door...

...and it was like trying to walk through glue. She had to force her body to move, and a vise seemed to grip her head. She knew what it was - indecision. Part of her was desperate to leave - and another part of her was 'needing' to fulfill her 'promise' to hang around for awhile, and fulfill her 'quasi- promises'.

She realized that she wouldn't be able to leave until she fulfilled the conditions that had been imposed on her vulnerable subconscious. It was like a life-long pacifist trying to force himself to pick up a gun and blow away an innocent bystander - she struggled to make herself leave, but couldn't do it. She took a few hesitant steps in the direction of the door, then stopped, unable to force herself to go on.

"Terri, are you all right?" red asked, confused. Nicki had gone to get Kyle, worried about Terri's sudden descent into inexplicable behavior.

"I.." Terri said, faltering, struggling to get exactly what she wanted to emerge. "I need... drugs..." She managed.

She'd already fulfilled part of the 'bargain' her brain kept insisting she'd made. She'd had something to drink. Now, she had to fulfill the other two parts of the 'agreement'.

She needed to take some sort of drug... and she needed to have some sort of sexual experience. The first was from what she and Kyle had discussed, and - despite never having the urge to do drugs before - much less of a trial than the second one. The thought of having sex was still utterly revolting to her, no matter how much it disgusted her....

Though, she knew that she'd have to do it before she could leave. Hating to concede the necessity, Terri forced herself to think ahead, to plan her unwanted sexual experience. Red was already 'available', and was about as 'acceptable' a partner as she'd ever get...

By this time, Nicki had returned, unable to find Kyle, and worried. "Terri... maybe we should call a doctor or something..."

"No..." She said, fighting to keep control of her traitorous voice. Grabbing Nicki's arm, she dragged her to a quiet corner of the room, Nicki eyeing her apprehensively.

"You know how I said I haven't had much sexual experience with men?" She asked, her internal struggle emerging as hesitant words in a rapid, uneven voice. "Well, the truth is - I've never had sex with a man."

Well - that was the truth....

"oh my God!" Nicki said, everything suddenly becoming 'clear'. "That's what it is!"

"But " She said - and now she could let her control slip a little bit, as it was actually easier to force herself to say what she needed if she let the subconscious admit it. "I want to get laid tonight - I just need to... 'prepare' myself for it. Could I get something to.. help?"

Nicki grinned, compassionately. "You wanna 'do the deed', but are too nervous to just let it all go, huh? Well, I'll get you some exxtacy - that'll clear it up for you."

Which is how, ten minutes later, Terri found herself walking into a guest room with Red, trembling in disgust and fear (but merely appearing nervous to the now 'clued in' Red), waiting for the little pill she'd swallowed to kick in so she could get this over with and get to the frat house, where she'd be turned back into a man...

...she hoped. The 'certainty' she'd possessed was now gone, but it was the only hope she had, so she wasn't going to just let it go.

Sitting on the edge of the bed, she took several deep breaths while Red stood nearby, shifting nervously from one foot to the other, not exactly sure what he should do, or how he should start. Terri, meanwhile, didn't really want him to start at all - but 'needed' him to, on a deep level, so that she could continue on with her life, and hope to regain her lost gender.

Opening her eyes, she let her control slip, needing that deep, hateful subconscious 'persona' to help her through what she was going to have to do.

"Please.." She said, her voice close to breaking. "I.. can't make myself.. take the lead in this. You'll have to..." She swallowed, nervously. "Just.. take it slow and.. please.. be gentle "

"Oh, I will " Red promised with a nervous smile. Hesitantly - as if she were precious bone china he was afraid of breaking - he lowered himself to sit on the bed next to her.

Gently, he rested one hand on her near shoulder. She wanted to shudder at his touch, but didn't, bearing it under necessity though all her male instincts were screaming at her to run.

Slowly, Red slid his hand across her back, finally sliding it around her torso under her other arm. With slow, gentle pressure, he pulled her towards him, and knowing what he wanted - she'd done the same move herself, as a man - she turned her face towards him, eyes closed and breathing somewhat rough.

A second later, she felt his lips gently press against her.

She felt sick to her stomach, but forced herself not to flinch away as Red started kissing her. Summoning up every ounce of will-power she could summon, she forced herself...

..to let go, giving her subconscious need to be 'womanly' free reign.

She tried to detach her mind from her body, thinking of other things completely - but it was impossible. Every sensation she was feeling was clear and strong, and she'd become little more than a passenger in her own body, having 'willingly' given it over to the half-formed female persona in her subconscious. Though she wasn't consciously doing any of the actions, she could feel everything as she slowly wrapped her arms around Red, pressing her huge bust firmly against his chest as she let the kiss deepen, become more passionate. She wanted to vomit as she felt his tongue slip between her lips - but, instead, struggled not to retake control and pull away as her body responded 'enthusiastically' in the hungry, passionate kiss.

Responding to her growing 'enthusiasm', Red's hand slipped to her chest, lightly fondling her huge tit through her shirt. Kissing him more passionately, she urged him to more by pressing her tit more firmly against his hand...

'Oh, my God!' Terri thought, horrified. Changing her mind, she tried, desperately, to stop what she was doing - even if it condemned her to a lifetime of being a woman, she would accept it if it meant a lifetime as a celibate (or may lesbian) woman.

She didn't want to have sex with a man.

But it was much, much too late. Fueled by the hormonal increase of the drug, her half-formed sexual persona was now firmly in control, and she couldn't stop herself. Horrified, she found herself completely unable to control her wayward body as it moaned in pleasure at the touch of a man's hand.

Awkwardly, pausing only long enough to get it off, the conspired to remove Terri's shirt, freeing her tits to his touch. Eagerly, he fondled and squeezed her tits, his hands gliding over the firm, silky surface of the enormous mounds, teasing and tweaking her nipples, sending bolt of pleasure through her now highly-aroused female body.

'Oh, that feels great...' Terri's conscious mind thought, dreamily. "I'll have to wear clothes that show off my tits so I can get men to do this more oft..."

Her mind came to a screeching halt as she realized what she was thinking. Horror flooded her as she realized that the exxtacy she'd taken was inter-mingling with the other drugs already in her system.

Sodium Pentathol and it's derivatives take at least twenty-two hours to flush completely out of the system, even though the 'effective' dose is metabolized enough to stop working after a few hours, at most.

But the exxtacy was chemically similar enough to 'boost' the drug in her system, putting her right back into a highly suggestive state... while in the middle of sex.

Equally as bad, though she didn't realize it, was the other drug in her system's reaction to the exxtacy. The drug had been designed to cure cancer by recoding genes - but didn't work. At least, not the way it was supposed to. The professor who'd invented it thought it was nearly a complete waste of time - he'd never tried mixing it with a barbiturate, and didn't know about it's ability to strip away the male chromosome and replace it with the mirror-copy of the female chromosome inherent in all men. Now, it served another purpose - by assuming that the high hormonal level Terri was experiencing was 'normal', and resetting her body's new glands to maintain that level.

Helplessly, Terri tried to control what was happening to her, not knowing that she was beyond that stage by now.

She helplessly moaned low in her throat as Red finally broke the kiss, eager to lower his head and lick and suck her thick, engorged nipples., She threw her head back and put her hands on his head, urging him to continue.. even as she was 'eager' for the next stage.

Which she helped move him into by pulling his shirt off. Her hands then went to his jeans, gliding across the hard bulge at the crotch before going to his fly and unzipping it.

Catching her 'drift', he shifted his ass to help her peel the jeans off, then helped her remove her skirt and panties.

"Fuck me.." She begged in a breathy, eager voice, her eyes glittering with drug-induced lust that was being firmly imprinted in her once-more vulnerable mind. "Fuck me good and hard, Red - make me scream with pleasure."

Red didn't need any convincing. Pushing her down on the bed, he loomed over her as he rose to his knees, lust reflected in his bright emerald eyes.

Deep inside the eager, hormone-ridden body she now possessed, Terri was caught between two diametrically opposed emotions - part of her was screaming in horror and disgust, while the drug-affected part was screaming in desire and lust. Locked in equal strength, neither one was completely untainted by the other as her mind spiraled in confusion and sensory overload.

Her body, though, was more or less operating on its own, and didn't need the fragmented mind's guidance as it spread its athletic legs wide apart, exposing her hot, wet cunt.

Red slid his legs into position, straddling her - then plunged forward.

She screamed - her body in pleasure, her mind in pain - as his hard, throbbing cock plunged deep into her tight new cunt, filling her completely. Sensations of pleasure like none she'd ever felt before ran through her body at the sudden sensation of being filled, filling a gap in her body's senses she'd never known existed until now.

'God, that feels great!'... she thought - then her mind recoiled in disgust at the admission, though she couldn't stop what her body was doing. Her hands came up to grip Red's lean, taut hips as the red-haired man slipped his cock most of the way out of her cunt, leaving the new void in sensations exposed to her mind and creating a new desire to be filled again...

..which was then fulfilled by red's second thrust. She moaned, pleasure running through her as her cunt embraced his cock, the rhythmic, powerful thrusts of his hips driving his cock over her clit and all the hyper-sensitive nerve-ending inside. She began to roll her head side to side as he continued to fuck her hard and deep, her hips instinctively matching his rhythm, to drive him deeper and harder into her cunt.

"yes, oh yes!" She cried, body and mind - the part of her mind that was still male drowned out by rising tides of pleasure as her hands left Red's sweaty body to fondle her own, massive tits. "yes, red - fuck me hard. I'm a slut, ride me!"

And Red did, his face curled into an odd mask of lust as he pounded into her, his cock bringing her body to new heights of ecstasy as she writhed under his erotic ministrations.

"Oh, yesssss!" She screamed, then her words vanished into a primal scream of pure pleasure as her body was rocked with the mind-numbing power of her orgasm.

As her cunt muscles tightened, it pushed Red over the edge, and he came as well, shooting his load into her new pussy, baptizing. Sighing, he slipped out of her and landed on the bed beside her.

"So.." he panted. "How was it?"

"Fantastic.." She breathed, eyes shining. "Fuck me again!"

Red laughed. "Honey, I'm good - but there's no way I can do it again so soon."

Terri's male mind struggled for control over her lust-ridden body - but it was in vain. Aroused, locked in the grip of it's drug-besotted brain, it refused her commands, eager for more sex.

Rising from the bed, her hands rose to her tits to fondle and massage them as she walked towards the door.

"Hey, we're you going?" Red called, sitting up. "To find somebody to fuck.." She said, numbly.

Opening the door, she almost ran into a man on his way back from the bathroom at the end of the hall. At the sight of the naked, athletically built woman with enormous hooters, he came to a dead stop.

"I want your cum." Terri told the stunned man, hungrily. She barely registered him at all, other then as a male - and thus, an object for her lust. Grabbing his hand, she pulled him across the hall and into another guest room. He barely managed to close the door, his mind still struggling to follow what was going on, when Terri was on her knees in front of him, pulling his pants down around his ankles.

"Cock.." She moaned, hungrily. By now, the male part of her had degenerated into a screaming, horrified mess, no longer capable of even attempting the useless struggle for control as she gripped his cock and began to fondle and lick it, a look of pure, ecstatic lust on her face as she ran her tongue of it's head.

Under such conditions, it didn't take him long to get hard, and Terri licked her lips - and then closed them, gently but firmly, around the throbbing, veined shaft she held.

Gripping the cock with on hand, she used the other to fondle her enormous tits as she began noisily bobbing her head up and down the shaft. She moaned, low in her throat, as she swirled her tongue over the cock filling her mouth, finding the taste, texture and feel of it utterly gratifying.

Speeding the pace of her mouth and tongue, she brought her other hand up to the spit-slicked shaft and wrapped it around the cock, jerking back and forth eagerly. Within a minute, she pushed him over the edge and he groaned as he shot a jet of warm, thick cum deep into her throat.

The salty, musty liquid filled her mouth, and she gulped down eagerly, not wasting a drop of the precious liquid. Licking the man's cock clean, she slowly rose and - without a word to him - left the room, her sweat-shined body glistening as she walked out into the main room.

Dead silence feel as she entered the room.

"I need to be fucked. "She announced, eyes unfocused. "I need to be fucked long, and hard, and often."

Silence reigned for another instant - then pandemonium broke out as ten different men vied for her attentions...

Nicki, at the other end of the room, was staring, slack-jawed - then comprehension set in (so she thought) and she laughed, thinking that the drug had really kicked in for Terri, and that she might have some... uncomfortable memories in the morning.

She had no idea...

* * * * *

The light of dawn was just breaking over the campus, dispelling the misty-gray of predawn, when Terri finally walked up the steps to the Alpha house.

She was clad in the clothing Nicki had provided the night before, her own clothes in a bag she carried in her right hand. Her face bore a slightly haunted look, mostly in the eyes, which was mixed with weariness.

Terri hadn't slept at all. She'd spent several long hours fucking and sucking, unable to get enough... until, an hour ago, the drug itself had finally subsided, allowing her some measure of control.

Once more, her mind was under her command - but it was a tenuous command. She couldn't stop thinking about her body, and men's bodies, and sex. Everything she saw seemed to remind her of sex, which immediately brought the urge flaring to life - and it was a struggle not to give into that urge. This early in the morning, not many people were about - but the few men she passed had caused a battle inside her, the urge to fuck them so strong that she almost did it without thinking, needing to fight to get her new addiction under control.

It was a balance that couldn't last. She was sexual satisfied by her marathon session the night before, which let her take control of the addiction - but, the longer she went without sex, the harder it would be not to try and fuck any unsuspecting man she passed. It was a fine balance, but one she could walk - under those conditions, she could go her entire life and never have sex again, although she'd be constantly facing a craving for it.

The problem was - that set of conditions couldn't be maintained. She might be able to keep from actively having sex, on her own - but she was still walking, talking and moving like a living come-on, and as soon as a man responded to it and brought up the subject - she'd lose control, unless she'd just had sex (say, in the past couple of hours), taking the 'edge' off her addiction.

In short, she'd become a real, live, huge-breasted nymphomaniac.

Her only hope was to regain her male form before her two- or -three hour grace period ended, and she became vulnerable to any man who came on to her.

More than despair and lust were fueling her now, though - rage was also thrumming through her tired, well-fucked (and fuckable) body. Rage that had started when she'd begun to dwell on how this whole mess had started. Injecting her with dangerous drugs, as part of some stupid ritual! She couldn't believe that she'd thought these guys were 'cool', and she'd wanted to be one of them.

Rage that had redoubled when she'd used a pay phone to call campus security, posing as a 'cousin' of one of the Alphas. She'd managed - by being sweet and a little 'lost', claiming that her cousin hadn't picked her up - that the Alphas hadn't even come looking for 'him', even after several hours. They'd dumped her, drugged - then hadn't bothered to be worried when 'he' hadn't shown up after a few hours. After all - they'd driven around for quite a while to confuse her, actually dropping her not too far away from the campus - an hour's walk, after she 'straightened out'.

Yet, even after 'Terry' had been missing for six hours, they hadn't made any effort to ensure that 'he' was okay. Terri had even called her own apartment - and found that the machine only held one message, from somebody else.

She was fuming - so she had no problem pounding angrily on the front door of the frat house until it was finally answered by a very sleepy-looking John LaPointe - who suddenly came more awake at the sight of a huge-breasted, angry-looking woman on his doorstep.

"Can I help you, miss?" John said, startled.

"Don't you dare 'miss' me!" Terri said, angrily. "It's me - Terry Rideou. Look what you've done to me!" John blinked. "huh? Look, miss - Terry isn't here..."

"I'm Terry, you asshole!" Terri shouted, furious. She gestured to her massive bust. "This is what those drugs you injected me with did - turned me into a huge-breasted nymphomaniac, you bastard."

John's face hardened at the mention of his 'mistake' - but that didn't lead him to give any credence to her claims. "Look, I don't know how much Terry's paying you for this little joke, but you've got your money's worth. This isn't funny. Go home, and let me get back to bed."

"Joke?" Terri said, incredulous. "You think this is a joke? You turned me into this, dump me by the side of the road - then don't even bother to check up on me! Believe me, what I've been through - this is no fuckin' joke."

John was half-asleep, upset at having his mistake brought up, guiltily angry at not worrying about Terry - and he was naturally a bit of an asshole.

So...

"Look, miss, you go back to Terry, and tell him that he hasn't blown his chance to become an Alpha - because he never had one. We knew from the start we'd fail him for membership. We were just having fun screwing around with him."

And, with that, John slammed the door in Terri's face.

* * * * *

Making sure not to disturb... Tim? Tom? Something like that... Terri rose from the bed and silently pulled on her robe, tying it tightly around her figure. Without even thinking about it, she adjusted it so that the slit would display some delicious thigh as she walked, and so that the front displayed a perfectly delightful view of cleavage.

Silently, she padded to the bedroom door and opened it, slipping into the dimly-lit hallway beyond and easing the door shut. Still being quiet - but no longer striving for silence - Terri headed downstairs to the kitchen, walking with her usual, seductive stride.

She couldn't have walked any other way, no matter how much she tried. She knew - she'd tried.

As she neared the kitchen, she saw light spilling out from the door, and her step slowed as she wondered which of the other girls was up, getting an après fuck snack. Shrugging, Terri walked into the kitchen.

Standing at the open refrigerator was a slender woman, her naked back to Terri. Her head, crowned by a long mane of dark hair, was bent over as she considered her choice of snacks. As she heard Terri enter, she straightened up and turned - revealing that her slender ribcage boasted a pair of tits that exceeded Terri's own, so incredibly huge, firm and round that they seemed to dwarf her slender frame. As she saw who had entered, her eyes narrowed.

"Oh, it's you." She said in a voice colder than the air leaking from the appliance. "Joanna." Terri replied, cool but not as openly hostile.

The woman's full, soft lips tightened at the sound of the female name she still wasn't quite used to. Angrily, the woman who had once been John LaPointe picked out the makings for a sandwich, turning her back on the woman who'd made her - and all the other Alphas - into huge-breasted, insatiable nymphomaniac sluts like herself...

...with a few additions.

The first few weeks after being made female had been very, very hard. With no valid ID, it had been very difficult to explain things to the cops who'd showed up looking for Terry, who'd finally been reported as 'missing'. The fact that she'd been in the middle of a blow-job hadn't exactly boosted her credibility, either.

She'd ended up in a psychiatric ward for observation, nobody believing her story in the slightest.

That had all changed when she'd knocked out a policeman bringing in another prisoner, stolen his gun, and broken out of the psych ward. She'd gone back to the frat - with a stop along the way to break into the drug storage, easily done by waving her gun at the janitor, who had the keys.

Then, she'd forced each and every member of the Alphas, at gun point, to get injected with the same mix she'd been injected with that fateful night. Two of them - the ones she knew the least - she turned out, so the cops now surrounding the building could watch the change first-hand, which eventually forced them to believe her story.

The others she'd kept... and 'programmed'. For example...

"Joanna..." Terri said, the tone of her voice causing the other ex-man to whirl around, fear and hate in her eyes.

"No! I'm sorry...!" Joanna tried to avert Terri's still active anger.

"Gag Order" Terri commanded, activating one of the 'programs' put into Joanna.

Joanna's lips closed, and she made a muffled sound - cursing her out, Terri knew. Not that it would do any good.

With that command, Joanna wasn't aloud to speak coherently until she'd sucked cock and swallowed the cum, at least five times.

With a mixture of anger, disgust, lust and resignation in her eyes, Joanna started to turn away from the counter to head upstairs to wake some of the 'guests' she and the others had brought home. Much of the anger was for herself - her angry tone had been a result of her just being fucked, the act of which always angered her. She should have known better than to upset Terri - especially now that she, and all the other Alphas, truly understood what they'd done to her.

Before she could leave, though, Terri stopped her. "Hold on - before you go, why don't you make me a sandwich. That sounds like it would hit the spot."

Signing, Joanna forced herself to smile, then began putting the sandwich together, berating herself for loosing control at Terri.

She, like all the other girls, were helpless slaves to their bodies, just like Terri was - but they were also slaves to Terri, when she wanted them to be. They even understood it, to a degree - but they didn't have to like it. the weird part was... some of the guys had adapted better than others, Especially after their first sexual encounters - some of the guys found the ease, frequency and power of sex now went a long way to easing the pain. These ones were the ones that had actually managed to become friends with Terri, and who she almost never did anything. Two of the new 'girls' had actually had their programmed 'nymphomania' removed, allowing them to choose their own times and partners - a luxury that Terri would never again have.

Others, like Joanna... were having a harder time adjusting.

Finishing the sandwich - and doing it the best she could - she brought it to Terri. "Thank you, Joanna." Terri said.

Gritting her teeth, Joanna forced a smile and a curtesy.

"Very nice." Terri said, approvingly. Joanna nodded - politely - and headed off.

Watching her go, Terri bit into the sandwich, nodding to herself in appreciation of the taste. Though she'd never admit it to Joanna or the others, much of her initial rage was gone, and she'd resigned herself to spending the rest of her life like this.

Especially since she'd discovered how much fun it could be, having complete and utter control over a group of 'women' programmed with all sort of interesting commands....

With a wicked smile, Terri wondered which of the half dozen of the still-intransigent girls would 'screw up' next...

BACK TO FUN ZONE

SUMMARY: A large lumbering +man steps into a magic box and turns into a stunning female where he is treated with respect for the first time.

Alter Ego

By Gunslinger

Ox wandered through 'the other side' of the house, tears streaming down his face.

Wandering through the empty, dusty rooms of the apartment that made up half the pre-war bungalow he'd inherited wasn't a usual occurrence for him - but the tears were, and it shamed him to admit how often silent tears of pain, humiliation and rage rolled down his heavy cheeks. Then again, a lot of things were a shame to him - and the biggest shame of all was his own body.

Ox was a freak.

Nearly seven feet tall, the twenty-eight-year old man was a walking mountain. His body was huge in nearly every dimension - but it wasn't the sort of massive muscularity that some found attractive.

Instead, he was a huge, hulking mountain of hairy flesh that tended to put people in mind of Bigfoot or a Neanderthal - and that's how just about everybody in the small town of Bolter's Bay saw him.

As some sort of monster.

'Ox', of course, wasn't his real name. His birth certificate read 'Lee Williams' - but nobody had called him by his real name in a decade, ever since his mother had died. Even then, she was the only one who had used his real name - everybody else in town had always called him Ox.

As in 'He's as strong as an Ox - and just about as smart'.

That wasn't quite fair. Ox wasn't exactly the brightest bulb in the box, but he wasn't a moron, either. The impression of stupidity came from many things, not the least of which was his brutish appearance. But there was other parts to it, too - like the curse of his clumsy nature. No matter how hard he tried, he couldn't get his massive, hulking body to obey his mind with precision, and he was always knocking things over or breaking them, all without meaning to. All his movements were slow, awkward and ungainly.

Then there was his speech. His lips and tongue - like the rest of his body - didn't follow the instructions of his brain to well, making his speech thick, slow and broken, all in a deep, heavy voice.

He had never known his father, and had grown up with his mother in the small bungalow on the outskirts of town. She'd supported him by renting out the other half of their bungalow, which had allowed her to leave him a fairly tidy inheritance - but no amount of money could change the fact that he was an outcast, a freak. Of course, the apartment had been empty ever since his mother had died, nobody wanting to live in the same building with Ox. The last tenant had been a magician, who had - perhaps appropriately - just disappeared one day, leaving all his belongings behind.

That had been the final straw in Ox's social separation - because the police had almost immediately made the assumption that Ox had harmed the missing man in some way. It was sheer prejudice, and there wasn't enough proof to warrant a trial - but in the minds of nearly everybody in town, he was tried, convicted, and sentenced to a life-time of solitude.

Now, for the first time in ten years, Ox wandered through the rooms of the small apartment that had belonged to the magician. It was raining outside, and Ox had long ago learned not to wander out in the rain - the mud enhanced his inherent clumsiness, and he'd twice been beset upon by 'Good ol' boys' who'd taken advantage of the weather and the artificial courage of several drinks to rough him up some.

The walls of his own side of the house had seemed to be closing in on him, however, so he'd resorted to going through the connecting closet that allowed access from one side of the house to the other without having to go outside.

Now the massive, ungainly man awkwardly slumped down on an old chest that groaned under his weight and looked around at the collection of 'magical' equipment that 'The Great Randini' had left behind when he'd vanished one day.

Sniffing, Ox used the sleeve of the bathrobe he was wearing to wipe his eyes, and looked at the dusty pile of items, many of them obscure and confusing.

Slowly, Ox rose from the chest and wandered around the room, touching various items, until he reached a tall, dusty black-lacquered cabinet.

Staring dully at the large cabinet, he finally pulled on the brass handle and swung the door open, staring into the 'magic cabinet'.

One of his few happy memories was the one performance that Randini had put on for the then- eighteen Ox. It was just to practice some of his new tricks, of course, but he'd wanted an audience to give him a reaction, so he'd invited the hulking teen to watch. Ox had been delighted by the sleight of hand and illusions that the magician had performed.

He remembered how proud Randini had been of this magic cabinet, claiming that it had once belonged to a very famous magician who'd died without revealing it's secrets. Randini had tried to pull off some sort of illusion with the cabinet that day, but he apparently hadn't learned it's secrets yet, as it hadn't worked - and, upset, he'd sent the young Ox away while he tried to work out the secrets of the cabinet again.

That was the last time anybody had seen him.

Now, Ox sniffled and asked slowly and heavily of the silent piece of equipment: "Where did you go? Why did you, Randini?"

Ox stared at the box for a moment longer - then, he stepped inside the box and closed the door behind him.

He sometimes did this, going into his closet and shutting the door. In the darkness of his closet, he could pretend that he wasn't the big, hulking Ox, but somebody - anybody - else. Now, blessed darkness enfolded him, and Ox closed his eyes and bent his head.

"I wish..." He said, heavily, "...that I had a completely different body to live in."

An incredible, overwhelming sensation enfolded Ox, every part of his body tingling in the strangest - and somewhat enjoyable - manner, as if a thousand soft, gentle hands were caressing his skin.

Though it might have felt sort of nice, it was definitely unexpected - and Ox shouted and leapt out of the cabinet...

...then came to a dead stop as a few things registered. Like the way his voice had sounded when he'd screamed. Like the way his body felt to him.

Like the way his body moved.

Like the image in the dusty, full-length mirror directly across from the magic cabinet.

A stunningly beautiful woman was gazing back at him in the reflection. A slender woman, with long, shapely legs and flaring hips. With a tiny waist, and large, firm breasts. With a gorgeous, cheerfully intelligent face with full, soft lips, big, dark eyes and a pert nose, all framed by a jaw-length mane of richly golden hair.

Ox had become a gorgeous, sexy blonde woman.

Ox screamed again, hearing the high-pitched sound that was all woman emerge from her throat. Even though her face in the mirror was set in lines of shock and fear, the beauty, bright cheerfulness and easy smile were all etched into the intelligent face.

She turned, feeling her large, firm tits sway with the motion as she moved with an inherent grace and elegance. With an easy, graceful power, she re-entered the cabinet, pulling the door shut behind her.

A second later, a thoroughly shaken Ox - in his male form - staggered clumsily from the cabinet, patting his body as he stared at the reflection in the mirror.

"What happened...?" He asked his reflection, heavily... Then frowned as he realized something.

He was dumb. He knew he wasn't a moron, and he'd always known he was slower than some - but he'd never had a chance to truly gauge his intelligence against any one else's.

Until now. Because he realized that - in the few seconds it had lasted - his mind had been clearer and sharper while he was female than it had ever been before. He could remember the thoughts that had flown through his then feminine mind - but he could no longer make the same deductive leaps that he'd made so easily a moment before.

Slowly, he sank back down on the chest, the surface cool against his now naked buttocks, his bathrobe thrown aside. He frowned as he tried to force his mind to work through what his female mind had jumped to immediately.

He knew that the magic cabinet had been used for many tricks - Randini had described some of them to him. Including the one where the magician went in - and a beautiful assistant came out...

"Magic!" Ox said, stunned. "Real magic!"

He stared at the magic cabinet in amazement. Somehow, he'd managed to activate that 'magician-to- assistant' spell, and emerged in the body of a gorgeous woman who would have been perfect for a magician's assistant during the mid-to-late eighties. Gorgeous, buxom, intelligent enough to do the routines - and with an inherent grace and elegance that was more pronounced than other women's. Ox knew that the beautiful assistants moved in a more graceful, feminine manner than every-day women did, their every movement and pose designed to help distract the attention away from the magician's slight-of-hand trickery during the act.

Slowly, Ox approached the cabinet again, walking around it slowly with a thoughtful expression on his face.

Then, hesitantly, he re-entered the cabinet...

A moment later, she stepped back out, feeling the feminine grace of her feminine body as she moved towards the mirror. Her mind was again sharp and clear in a new and exciting way that he'd never felt before - things that had seemed difficult suddenly became clear to her.

Like the fact that she now had a way to go into town for such things as groceries without having to face ridicule.

Picking up her discarded bathrobe, she used it to clean off the surface of the mirror to get a better look at the slender, gorgeous body she now wore.

Though she wasn't particularly comfortable with being female, much less a stunningly beautiful one, she was able to admire her new body for its own merits - if it wasn't her inside of it, she would have found it incredibly sexy.

She was tall, for a woman, but nowhere near the height of her male body. Indeed, much of the height of her new form seemed to be in the long, luscious legs that led to her womanly hips. Her waist was delightfully slender, further emphasizing the firm domes of her breasts. The size of large grapefruit, they were firm and round, and tipped with large, frank nipples.

Her shoulders were now slender and nicely curved, and led to a long, slender neck. Her heart-shaped face was stunningly beautiful, with full, soft lips and dark, intelligent eyes.

She was absolutely stunning.

She shuddered slightly at how attractive she found the new form she wore. It felt exceedingly strange to realize that the incredibly sexy woman in the mirror was her - it felt weird to be a woman, any woman.

On the other hand...

She walked around the room, feeling the easy grace with which her new body moved. It was supple and sensual, without being 'overboard'.

It also felt utterly fantastic to be able to move so easily and with such control. It was as if the sheer mass of her old body had really been hiding this one underneath, and with all that extra 'padding' falling away, it allowed her to move the way she wanted to...

"Don't get too used to this, Ox." She told herself with a laugh, marveling at the rich, feminine voice that emerged from her new throat. She didn't really think she was in any danger of becoming 'addicted' to the supple grace and precision control of this feminine body - but it was a heady experience for her.

Not just how easily and confidently the new body moved, but how clearly she was able to think now.

Stopping in front of the mirror once more, the new woman struck a sarcastic pose, as if she were a centerfold - one leg slightly forward, heel raised, chest out-thrust, hands behind her head.

"Looking good, Ox." She told her reflection with a wry grin. "Lost some weight recently?"

Then she laughed. "I really don't think 'Ox' is appropriate for my new look. Perhaps something more like... Leeza? Lisa? Lee...anne?" She nodded to herself. "Leanne - there we go. Ox, meet Leanne."

She shook hands with herself, grinning. No matter how odd and even perverted being made female was, it was a heady, exciting experience - everything was new and different...

...and better?

Pushing the traitorous thought aside, she glanced at the cabinet and considered changing back - but she did have to go into town to get a few things, and it would be much 'easier' for 'Leanne' to do it, rather than 'Ox'. As a male, he always used to walk into town, never having gotten a driver's license - no car was comfortably built for a man of his mass and height. But as the shorter, slimmer and much more supple Leanne, a cab ride would be fine - and she wouldn't have to put up with any of the usual harassment.

In fact - she'd probably have to put up with guys staring at her new body. She made a face at herself in the mirror. "Now, there's a disgusting thought."

Still - fending off the advances of men would be easy - after all, she had no interest in men at all, so there was no hesitation or conflict in finding ways to turn them down. But to go into town as Ox would expose her to attentions she couldn't deny or turn aside...

"Well - one way to cut down on the number of guys hitting on me would be to put on some clothes, don't you think?" She asked her reflection with a grin. Turning away from the mirror, she walked over to the chest she'd been sitting on before entering the cabinet, and opened it.

She knew that - once upon a time - The Great Randini's act had included an assistant. With luck, perhaps she could find...
Aha.

There was two different 'assistant' outfits in the trunk. One of them was the 'classy' outfit, a sexy feminine 'tuxedo' that would never be worn to a wedding (except maybe in Vegas) and the second one was a sort of skirt-and-corset outfit. Looking at the two costumes, 'Leanne' figured that she might be able to get away with a little 'mix-and-match' outfit, even if it would be more revealing than she'd like.

Hell - a tent would be more revealing than she'd like - the thought of going out in public was giving her shudders. Two things came to her aid, though - the first being that her body was so feminine, so utterly unlike her male one, that nobody could possibly tell that she was 'really' Ox.

Oddly enough - the second thing that gave her the courage for this was the fact that - as Ox - she was used to humiliation and embarrassment. It wasn't as if going to town in her own body would be less humiliating - it would just be humiliating in a different, more overt, way.

There was no underwear with either outfit - but she figured she could improvise.

She started out with a pair of pantyhose. She had her choice - either the fishnets that came with the skirt-and-corset outfit, or the black nylons with lacy 'seams' along the side. She chose the black ones, along with the black hot-pants, that were part of the 'tuxedo' costume. She sat on the chest and rolled the pantyhose up before sliding them on her long, sexy legs - while thinking to herself that in her male body, her slower mind probably would have just had her pull the nylons on, probably putting runs in them.

Over the smooth material that now encased her legs, she pulled on the black hot-pants, which fit tightly to her hips and ass like a second skin, emphasizing the 'emptiness' at her crotch and serving as 'panties'.

Over this went the skirt that came with the corset outfit - a short black skirt with ruffles up and down it. It was shorter and tighter than she would have preferred, showcasing her long legs and fabulous ass, but she really didn't have much in the way of options - and it was marginally better than just the hot-pants by themselves.

Next, she pulled on the gold lamé vest that was part of the tuxedo outfit. It fit tolerable well, though it was tight across her large, firm tits - pushing them up to display fabulous cleavage in the vee-shaped neck of the vest. Again, she wasn't exactly thrilled with it, but didn't have any choice in the matter.

She had her choice of shoes - or rather, of footwear. The shoes for the tuxedo costume were black- and-gold pumps, with slender three-and-three-quarter inch heels. The corset costume, on the other hand, had black leather ankle-boots, also with a slender heel, this one slightly more than four inches.

She decided on the ankle-boots - simple because she could lace the slightly too-large footwear tightly on, while the pumps had a tendency to slip. It felt decidedly odd to stand and walk in high heels, but her magically acquired grace and balance meant that she did so quite easily.

She looked at herself in the mirror, and had to admit to herself that - if it wasn't her wearing both the clothes and the body - she would have thought the final look quite attractive, if a little 'eighties'.

She cocked her head as she stared at her reflection, wondering what was 'wrong' with it - then realized that she was used to seeing women wearing make-up, and it looked slightly 'odd' to her male eye to see a woman in a 'showy' outfit without make-up. She considered what she saw for a long moment, then shrugged - after all, she didn't have any make-up to put on, even if she'd wanted too - which she didn't.

But the 'discrepancy' still bothered her in the back of her mind.

Walking with an easy grace, she headed for the other half of the bungalow to grab some money and call the cab.

* * * * *

"There you go, Miss."

"Uh... thanks..." 'Leanne' mumbled, dropping money into the driver's outstretched hand without meeting his eyes.

The yes that had ogled her so thoroughly when she'd come out to the cab, the eyes that had stared at her in the mirror as he'd driven into town, and the eyes that were now gazing down the display of cleavage that she helplessly showed when she bent over to hand him money.

It wasn't actually a major thing, if you looked at it one way - despite his staring, he was polite and somewhat discrete, and it wasn't as if his eyeing her new body was physically harming her in any way. Hell, if she, in her 'real' body, had seen herself somewhere, she would have stared too.

The problem was - she still hadn't figured out how to deal with people ogling her. She knew it wasn't hurting her, and that it gave some enjoyment to the viewer, but the last thing she wanted to do was give the impression - false impression - that she was enjoying it. By the same token, however, she didn't want to be rude and just yell at the man and tell him to mind his own business.

It was weird - it would have been easy to play the stuck-up bitch and get all upset. The thing was - for the first time in her life, she wasn't being ridiculed and laughed at, and no matter how weird it felt, she didn't want to give this identity and attitude that would end up with people as disgusted with her as they were contemptuous of Ox.

She felt like she was developing a split personality - trying to be friendly and nice, without giving the impression that she was... you know, interested in anybody.

It was giving her a headache.

Her mind on the dilemma she was in, she turned away from the curb as the very pleased driver pulled away...

...and promptly walked smack dab into a handsome, sandy-haired man walking down the sidewalk. "Oh!" Leanne apologized, feeling mortified...

...and strangely pleased. As Ox, he'd bumped into many people in her time - and usually sent the sprawling. Even when the other person didn't go toes-over-teakettle, they were usually ready to yell at him.

This time, however, the man argued for the right to claim responsibility.

"No, no - completely my fault." He insisted, smiling at her. "I wasn't watching where I was going - though, how I could possibly miss seeing such a lovely woman as yourself..."

"Uh... thanks..." Leanne said, smiling wryly - and vainly trying discreetly to tug her too-short skirt down. It was a vain attempt on both counts - the skirt would only go lower if she was willing to expose something at the top of the skirt, and she didn't know the trick (if there was one) of tugging discretely at her skirt.

The man cleared his throat and politely glanced away, obviously having caught on to her discomfort from the way she was standing and her response to his compliment - and she felt a wave of gratitude for that.

Which was an odd coincidence, she realized - because she knew the man.

His name was John, and he was about the only person in town who had treated Ox fairly kindly, except for his mother. However, as 'slow, dumb Ox', she hadn't really noticed his kindness, or the way he'd tried to help Ox stand up for himself. It was only now that she was seeing things more clearly that she realized that John hadn't been one of the guys who had pretended to like him so that they could trick him into an embarrassing situation of some sort.

Leanne was staggered to her core by the realization that fear, slow-witted confusion and self pity had kept her from seeing that she could have had an ally - a friend - all these years.

"So, miss..." John said, blushing faintly. "Leanne." She supplied, holding out her hand...

...and she was stunned when John gripped it lightly, gave his name, and lifted her dainty new knuckles to his lips.

"Leanne - I was wondering if you'd allow me to apologize by buying you a drink...?"

If he'd asked with an ounce of self-confidence or lewdness, she would have turned him down flat - but he asked the question hesitantly, blushing lightly as he tried - and failed - to meet her eyes.

It was so touching - so heartfelt - that she didn't have the nerve to just say no, even though that was her inclination...

Well, mostly - now that she realized that John had been willing to be a friend to 'Ox' all these years, she felt ashamed about the way she'd misjudged him. that was enough to tip the balance slightly.

"Well, I really came into town to do some shopping..." She tried to demur politely - but she wasn't pushing it. Instead, she was putting the ball in his court, hoping that he'd let her off the hook.

"Well, why don't I come along?" John suggested with a endearing awkwardness. "I'm a wonderful 'lift- and-carry' sort of guy."

Leanne couldn't help but smile at the honest attempt. No smooth moves or lines, no attempt to 'seduce' her...

...and, even though he was obviously attracted to her body, he was making every attempt to keep from staring at what was so obviously on display, knowing about her discomfort.

"That sounds... friendly." She said, choosing the word with care to keep from giving the wrong impression. "I need to pick up some clothes - all my luggage got lost in the move, and this..." She gestured at the outfit. "Was all I could find to wear."

"I see." John said, buying her explanation for wearing something she was obviously uncomfortable in - and commiserating, rather than automatically 'complimenting', which was a surprise. "I know how annoying that could be. Why don't you try Madame Bourrets boutique?"

"Sure.." She agreed, and let him lead her, as if completely unfamiliar with the town.

As she walked beside him, chatting about nothing in particular, she wondered why the hell she was suddenly so aware of the way her large, firm new tits jiggled and swayed with each step she took...

* * * * *

"What the hell is wrong with me?"

"I'm sorry, Leanne - did you say something?" John called from outside the changing room.

Leanne blushed brightly - she hadn't meant to ask the question out loud, even if it was in a whisper that had kept John from hearing the actual words.

"No - just telling myself how good this outfit looks on me." She called back, fighting to keep her voice level and light. "I'm trying to talk myself into buying it."

"Well, why don't you then?" John asked.

"Because I can't afford all these clothes. I've already picked out more clothing than I can possibly buy

- it's just that they all look so good on me that I can't decide." She called back - and her blush deepened, if that was possible.

Part of it was the fact that the clothes she was trying on did look good on her - she couldn't deny it. It didn't really bother her that she found the clothes so 'attractive' - after all, it was her male mind admiring the way the clothing looked on a sexy, buxom blonde woman.

The part that was throwing her for a loop was the effect that John's opinion was having on her. Every time she tried on a new outfit, she modeled it for John - and he was always sure to comment on whatever positives he could find in the outfits.

But his choice of words made it clear what he really thought - and she was going nuts from the way she was reacting to that. The first outfits she'd tried on had been as 'boring' as was available - shapeless, colorless clothing that covered her body and downplayed it as much as possible.

John had been as polite as he could about the choices - but she'd seen the... disappointment in his eyes, in his voice, in his stance.

And it made her feel... bad. Ugly. Disappointed in herself.

Which was nuts! Why would she care if John... if other people found what she was wearing attractive. Hell, that was the last thing she wanted - to wear clothing that would draw more interest to her sexy, limber new female body.

So why the hell was she picking nicer outfits now? Part of it was because her male mind liked to see herself in the nicer, sexier clothing - but she was actually going to buy them.

She just couldn't bring herself to wear the clothing she'd originally intended to buy - it made her feel so uncomfortable that she couldn't stand it. Not that wearing form-fitting, figure-flattering clothes felt 'right' to her either.

But it felt better than wearing the other clothing...

...and it almost made her feel... proud?

She knew that, in this body, she was brighter than she'd been as a man - but right now she felt more confused than she ever had as Ox. She was acting in ways that she didn't really want to, and she was doing strange things without understanding why she was doing them. For example - she found herself smiling for no particular reason from time to time, and mostly when she was around John. What the hell was she doing - she knew perfectly well what John was assuming, what with her being all happy and cheerful and perky around him. She knew that it was ridiculous...

...but, for some reason, she just couldn't force herself to stop. It was like trying to hold in your laughter when something funny happened in an inappropriate place. You could fight it, stifle it - but it was still there, leaving you bent over, hand clapped over your mouth as you made low chortling sounds in the back of your throat as you struggled not to let the laughter escape.

That was what was happening here - when she was around John, she felt giddy, almost disgustingly cheerful - and no matter how much she tried to downplay it, some of it 'escaped'.

Shaking her head and trying - unsuccessfully - to clear it, she looked over the outfit she was wearing in the three-way mirror. She was now wearing 'real' women's underwear - already paid for - that consisted of lacy black briefs and a matching bra

- which was a DD-cup. Even though she couldn't see the lacy, 'too' feminine underwear under the clothing she wore, she could feel it...

...and it still amazed her how comfortable, how nice the soft, lacy fabric felt next to her skin, the way the bra cupped - almost fondled - her new tits. She'd never thought that something as commonplace as merely wearing underwear could actually be enjoyable.

Over the now-hidden lingerie, she wore a simple honey-colored summer dress that clung to her full bust and tight waist before flaring slightly into the skirt, which came to just above mid-calf. A pair of sandal-style shoes with a four inch heel graced her feet, making her already long legs seem all that much longer.

She looked damn good in the outfit, and she knew it - and the knowledge that she looked good managed to simultaneously embarrass, arouse and intrigue her.

Shaking her head, she opened the door of the changing room to model it for John...

...only to find him missing from his chair outside the changing room. She glanced around, and caught sight of him over at the counter...

...accepting the four very large bags from the store clerk. Startled, she glanced at the racks where she'd been hanging the clothing she'd tried on and put aside for consideration, and found it empty.

"You didn't." She said in disbelief as she numbly walked over to where he stood, grinning like a fool. "I did." He rebutted, wagging his eyebrows at her.

"You... Oh my god, there must be a fortune's worth of clothing in there!" Leanne protested. "I... I can't accept this!"

"Oh, I don't know - getting to see you model them for me is worth it, I think." John said - then blushed deeply. He hadn't planned the words, and hearing the way they sounded came as a surprise to both of them equally."

Placing one hand on her hip - and not even noticing the complete and utter femininity of the gesture - Leanne pointed her finger at John. "You return those right now - I can't let you spend this much money on me."

John somehow managed to look apologetic and boyishly undeterred at the same time. "Sorry - they don't give refunds, just store credit."

Leanne continued to 'glare' at him in disbelief.

John spread his hands. "Well? What would I do with store credit here? Although... I do think that little chiffon number would look simply mah-vuh-lus on me, don't you think?"

He hammed up the question so outrageously, turning his head coquettishly and flipping his hand through the hair over his ear, that it was too much for Leanne - she broke into a huge, silly grin, followed by a very unladylike snort of laughter...

...which was enough to make her laugh even harder.

"Okay, okay - I surrender." She said when her giggles subsided - then wondered why the hell she'd given in so easily.

Or why she still had a big, silly grin on her full new lips.

"Besides, it's not like I'm insisting on paying for everything..." John continued, with a grin. "I am letting you pay for your own cosmetics."

It was a reasonable comment - after all, anybody would assume that was her plan, to replace her lost make-up. This was the perfect time to let him know...

"Well, thank you too much." She said, surprising herself. "You're too kind."

Why the hell had she said that? It made her sound as if she intended from the beginning to buy make-up. Now, how was she going to explain that she wasn't going to buy any.

It turned out to be simple to solve. She bought some.

"So, if you've got everything, maybe I can buy you think drink now." John said as a bemused, confused Leanne accepted the bag of make-up from the woman at the cosmetic counter, wondering at what point she'd decided she was going to buy make-up after all.

"Well..." Leanne said, confused and uncomfortable with her strange behavior. "It's getting late and I haven't settled into my place yet - I just moved in then came right into town. I don't even have food in my cupboards. I think I should just do my grocery shopping and head home."

"Oh..." John said, disappointment showing on his face.

"So, if you want to give me a lift to the supermarket and then home, we'll pick up a bottle of wine..."

'What the hell am I saying?' Leanne asked herself, shocked, as the words continued to flow from her lips, as if by somebody else's command. She was shocked to find herself inviting John back to 'her' place for a drink...

...yet couldn't stop it. As John smiled and accepted, as he led her to his car and loaded her purchases into the trunk, as he took her to the supermarket and helped her shop, she tried to find the words to retract the offer - but they wouldn't come.

Lots of other words did, though - the entire time she chatted with him, a somewhat silly grin on her lips. It was as if her body was on remote control, acting on it's own while her mind was busy trying to figure out what was happening. What was she doing? Why was she doing it? Why couldn't she seem to control her actions.

Part of it was the distraction - the distraction of her new body. It hadn't been a big deal at first, but as the day had worn on, she'd found herself becoming more and more aware of her body, and it's femininity. She was aware of the graceful sway of her hips as she walked, the skirt of her sun dress snapping perkily back and forth as her long, luscious legs scissored seductively atop her heels. She was aware of the heft and movement of her breasts, and the way her new bra cradled them and their almost painfully erect nipples. She was aware of her full lips, turned up in a smile. She was aware of her new eyes, almost always gazing at John's trim, athletic body. She was aware of her silky man of hair, and the way she ran her dainty new fingers through it when she wasn't resting a hand on John's arm or shoulder or back. She was aware of her new womanhood, nestled between her silken thighs, feeling all warm and slippery and...

Like a bomb exploding, realization set in as John was driving her back to her place. Her eyes were closed, her head cradled against his broad shoulder while her hand slowly slid back and forth on his leg - and his hand was on her knee.

It was then that she realized...

...she was incredibly horny. Her body was so turned on that it was almost painful.

For an instant, she was utterly and completely stunned, unable to think at all as she realized that, ever since she'd met John, she'd been getting more and more turned on - and showing it, flirting more and more with him.

Then a second stunning realization occurred - the fact that she'd realized what was happening, but refused to see it, refused to deal with - denying it as long as she could, until it was so painfully obvious that she couldn't lie to herself any longer. She had the body of a woman, and she should have realized that it would have the normal hormonal urges and sex drive of a woman.

Especially since she - or Ox, which was the same thing - hadn't had sex in more than three years, and that had only been the third time in his/her life. Unlike his male sexual urges, which he'd satisfied when the 'pressure' had demanded it, the female urges weren't as 'hydraulic', being longer, slower - and more powerful. Now, her body was ripe and ready for what it had been lacking...

..which wouldn't have been a problem if it wasn't for the fact that she was 'emotionally attracted' to John. She - in her male mind - liked him for who he was, and what he'd tried to do for her while she was Ox. Now, that was coupled with her body's pure physical attraction to him as a virile, available male - leaving her in such a raging state of hormone driven lust and emotional vulnerability that she couldn't think straight.

Hormones had an effect on the system, just like any other chemical additives added to the blood. In many ways, hormones served to act much the way alcohol did, lowering inhibitions and increasing the body's sensitivity. She knew that women quite often did things that they wouldn't normally do - did things with people they normally wouldn't do it with - when they were aroused enough. For the past five hours, she'd been marinating in a hormone stew, building herself to a fever pitch.

If she'd let herself acknowledge what was happening to her at the beginning, she could have found ways to avoid this situation, found ways to 'cool down'.

Now, her body was painfully aroused - and she frightened by the loss of control she was suffering. She knew it was wrong, she knew that she didn't really want this, but she couldn't seem to stop her body's rampant need that was overriding her judgment. Good God, she was actually snuggling up to a man, and his touch was exciting her even more, and she didn't want any of this...

...did she?

She reached her place, and John turned to her with a surprised look. "Oh - you're renting the other half of Lee's house."

"Lee?" She said, surprised that he knew her real name.

He took it differently, though. "Oh - yeah, that's Ox's real name. Lee... and Leanne. How's that for a coincidence?"

"Yeah..." She agreed numbly, still struggling for control of her renegade new body. If only she could get inside and to the cabinet - under the pretext of using the washroom, say - she could change back long enough to jack off and relieve the sexual need before changing back...

"While I'm here I should say hi to the big guy - poor guy's the loneliest man I know." "He won't be back until later..." Leanne replied, numbly.

"Oh..." John replied, giving her a bit of an odd look. "Well, at least it's nice to know that you and he talk - it's good to see he's found an... acquaintance. Here, let's get this stuff inside."

John did the bulk of the lift-and carry, bringing her purchases into the other half of the house and looking around with interest at the dusty local, making running small talk that Leanne barely replied to.

Finally, everything was put away and John brushed the dust from his hands and went over to the door, Leanne following behind with a blank look.

"Look, Leanne - I think I'll take a rain check on that nightcap."

"Huh?" Was the wittiest response Leanne could come up with, staring up into his face as she tried to get her brain to function.

"you've been a little... abstracted." John said, gently. "I can tell that you really don't want that drink."

"You're right - I don't." Leanne said, grateful that John was relieving her of the responsibility of finding an 'out'...

...which is why it came to such a shock to her when she wrapped her arms around his neck and kissed him, hungrily.

John stiffened in surprise - then he began to kiss her back, just as passionately. His hands slid around her slender waist to caress her firm, full ass, and she moaned low in the back of her throat at the pleasure his touch brought - while her mind spun helplessly as she tried to understand what she was doing, and how she could stop it...

...or if she even wanted to.

She found herself unbuttoning his shirt, her slender fingers moving with a mind of their own, and she was amazed to find that she was taking the lead, John only reacting to her advances. His hands went to her dress and released the straps, letting it slide down her body and puddle around her shapely ankles - but she'd already awkwardly removed his shirt and was working on his pants, with great difficulty...

...because, at the same time, she was drawing him with her as she backed towards the bedroom. What the hell was she doing?

Why did it feel so right, even when she knew it must be wrong.

Then the back of her legs hit the bed and she fell backwards onto the covers, John - dressed only in his boxer briefs and socks - standing over her.

"Leanne, I don't know if..>" John started to say...

...and the thought of him leaving - of leaving her in this state - was suddenly more than she could bear. All other considerations flew from her mind at the overwhelming need she felt.

"John, I need you... I need you to make me feel like a woman." She found herself saying in a low, throaty voice - and was amazed to discover, at that instant, it was the utter and absolute truth.

John was a nice guy - but he wasn't a saint, and a gorgeous woman practically begging him to have sex with her was way past his threshold. With no further argument, he lowered himself to the bed next to her and kissed her passionately as his hands skillfully removed her bra.

She gasped in pleasure as his hands fondled her now-bare tits and painfully engorged nipples, her body shivering at his touch. When his hands slid down to remove her panties, she shifted her hips to allow him easier access, while her own hands stripped off his underwear.

Her eyes widened at the sight of his raging erection, his slightly larger than average cock throbbing with desire, the head almost purple with the blood that engorged his more-than-ready cock.

"My God... It's perfect.." She breathed, reaching out hungrily. Wrapping her dainty hands around his veined shaft, she drew him forward, pulling his cock towards her hot, wet cunt.

She released his cock as he swung his leg over her, trading her grip on his member for a grip on the taut muscles of his outer thighs as he positioned himself above her, paused...

...then pushed downwards with one smooth, even stroke that sank his cock into her cunt.

She moaned in primal pleasure as he filled her to the hilt, her back arching at the sensations created as the softly taut wall of her tight cunt gripped his cock, the shaft rubbing over the highly-sensitive nerve-endings with a pleasure she'd never known. She was completely unaware of the fact that she was moaning his name and urging him to 'fuck her silly'...

...but that didn't keep John from obeying. Lifting himself with his legs, his cock slid almost out of her cunt, making her shiver in pleasure even as she felt a pang of regret at having that 'fulfilled' sensation lessened...

...then he rammed it home again.

She cried out, a wordless scream of pleasure - and John repeated the action, beginning a firm-yet- gently rhythm that left her squirming in exquisite pleasure.

Instinctively, she began to buck her hips to maximize the penetration - and pleasure - as he began to pound into her with a steady rhythm, each successive thrust creating a new high of pleasure. As his pace increased, the waves of pleasure began to overlap, each one magnifying the one that followed as the ecstasy built.,

She was squirming on the bed now, her body lightly layered in sweat as she struggled to maximize the pleasure she was feeling. Her head tossed back and forth as he drove into her new womanhood, and her hands were sliding up and down the flexing muscles in his thighs as he continued to 'fuck her silly'. The power of John's thrusts had pushed them further up on the bed, half raising her torso on the pillows piled there, and he was braced with one hand on the headboard, while the other slid up and down her body and squeezed her tits with exquisitely gentle strength. She found herself gasping with pleasure at the added sensation that his touch on her tits brought, which wasn't eclipsed by the intense ecstasy in her cunt - but, rather, magnified by it. then the pleasure grew to the breaking point - and she orgasmed.

She screamed out in pure ecstasy, not even noticing the solid 'thwack' of her head resounding off the headboard in her orgasmic spasm. Her body writhed and shook as the orgasm exploded through her, sending flashes of pure, intense ecstasy down every nerve pathway, followed by three sharp aftershocks - a multiple orgasm.

Her writhing, flexing, shaking orgasm pushed John over the edge and he groaned and stiffened as his cock twitched and gushed its load deep into her cunt, mixing with the warm, freely flowing juices of her cunt.

"Oh, yes! Yes!"

Leanne became aware of the voice screaming in pure joy - and was surprised to find it was her own.

"Oh, God, yes! I love it, John, I love you fucking me - fuck me harder, fuck me again, fuck me for ever!"

'Am I saying this...?' Leanne thought in shock as she came down out of the orgasmic high, John dropping limply to the bed beside her.

"Give me a minute, Leanne - I'm only human..." He moaned with a humorous tone. "Geez - and I thought maybe I'd done something to offend you, the way you'd...'zoned out' on me on the way back."

"I.." Leanne started to answer...

...then realized what they - she - had just done. "oh... oh my god..." She said in a horrified voice...

..and felt an incredible wave of shame and self-hatred wash over her as John stiffened beside her. "What... what's wrong?"

She knew that he was dreading exactly what she was feeling - intense shame and disgust at what she'd just done. But she would never be able to live with herself, in any form, if she did anything to hurt John - no matter how bad it was for her, right now, she couldn't ever let him know the truth, because he had done nothing to deserve the self hatred that would overwhelm him if he thought he'd 'forced' himself on her.

"We... didn't use any contraceptive!" She said, barely pausing as she came up with a suitable excuse for her thoughtlessly blurted comment. "I mean - I think it's all right, but... I'm not ready to be a mom yet."

"Oh, God - I'm so sorry. I didn't think..." John started - and the tone of his voice was enough to pull her away from her own problems, temporarily.

"You didn't think?" She asked, forcing her voice to sound light. "You dumb ape - I dragged you I here before you could have done anything about it. I was so eager to have you inside me that I just couldn't wait."

"I don't even have a condom on me..." John tried to argue...

...and Leanne had a flash of inspiration.

"Well, lover - it was fantastic being 'flesh to flesh' the first time, and I'm glad that it worked out this way

- but you should probably run into town and buy some." She forced a sexy smile. "By the time you get back, you should be just about ready to use it, don't you think?"

"You mean...?" John asked, eyebrow rising.

It bothered her that it wasn't an effort at all to 'lie' - part of her (her body_) wanted what she was saying to be the truth.

"This one was great - but a little quick. I want a rematch where we can do it right - so we can pay the attention that each of our bodies deserve." She shivered, only partially feigned, and reached up to heft her tits. "I'm already warming up at the thought of you giving these babies their due."

John must have set a speed record getting dressed and heading out to his car.

Leanne waited until his car pulled out of the driveway, knowing that she had a good half-hour before he'd get back...

...then she rolled from the bed onto the floor on her hands and knees.

But she was surprised to find that the urge to vomit - just wasn't there. No matter how much she was shocked and disgusted by what had just happened, her body kept reporting that everything was A-OK

- and all lights were green for a rematch.

Pushing herself to her feet - which, she was bemused to note, were still wearing her sandals - she headed into the other room, and the cabinet. If only she were male again, her body wouldn't be arguing with her, and she'd be able to think straight, be able to plan for John's return...

A moment later, Ox emerged from the cabinet, hands roaming his body with gratitude, finding the usual, ungainly male bulk one more restored.

"Oh, shit - what have I done?" He asked the image in the mirror? "I.. I had sex with a guy!"

He thought about that, about the fact he'd just been fucked by a guy, and that same guy would be back before long, expecting a second go...

...and Ox almost collapsed in shock as his cock stirred and began to harden. "No!" he shouted at his image. "No, I don't like fucking guys!"

His body - his male body - was inclined to disagree. His mind remembered how good it had felt, how wonderful - not just the sex itself, which had been spectacular, but the belonging, the friendship - the having somebody desire 'her' and want to be with 'her'.

Especially that 'someone' being John, a kind, thoughtful man - and an extremely talented lover...

Ox screamed and smashed the mirror, shattering the image of himself standing with a painfully raging erection at the thought of 'another man'.

The evening, even with all its confusion, disgust and doubt, had been the most wonderful day of his entire life - and Ox slumped at the realization that he'd have to deal with this, one way or another.

He knew, now, what he had to do.

Walking over to the telephone, he picked up the pad of paper and pen he kept next to it and began to write, his heavy, awkward scrawl immediately recognizable as his handwriting to even the most inept observer.

Finishing, he read over the words again.

I'm sorry. I didn't ever mean to hurt anybody. I didn't want to hurt Leanne. I'm sorry. I'm a monster. I don't deserve to live. I hope Leanne's okay. Tell her I'm sorry for hurting her. Tell her I'm sorry for taking her purse, too. I want something of hers to take with me. I want to die with something of hers. I don't deserve to live, and I'm going to go throw myself in the ocean and drown so I'll never hurt anybody again. Tell Leanne that she can have everything I own, and all my money. It's for her, cause I hurt her and took her purse with me.

I'm sorry.

Ox

Satisfied, he carried the pad of paper into the other half of the house and lay it down on the low coffee-table in front of the fire.

Going into that apartment's kitchen, he took the half-empty bottle of wine from the fridge and grabbed a couple of glasses. Carrying them into the other room, he placed the glasses on the coffee table and filled them, then quickly drained one of them.

Walking back into the other half of the house, he picked up the phone and dialed 911. When the emergency operator answered, he began to speak, overriding her own words with his own heavy cadence.

"I'm sorry, I didn't mean to hurt her. You better send an ambulance to help her. I'm sorry. Please, somebody come and help her right away. I have to go now. Please, hurry."

He hung up, satisfied. Now that time was of the essence, he hurried as best he could.

His first stop was the cabinet - and a second later she emerged, now able to make better time in her graceful female body.

She dressed quickly, pulling on a pair of panties and a bra, not caring that they were 'dirty' rather than fresh. Over that went a simple denim skirt and black T-shirt, and she quickly put on some lipstick and a pair of earrings, hoping that the fact she was 'home' would explain the rather inelegant look.

Hurrying, she went into the living room and quickly drained the glass of wine, making sure to leave a smear of lipstick on the rim of the glass.

Then, taking a deep breath, she walked to the far end of the room. Shaking her head to loosen the neck muscles, she took another deep breath...

...then lowered her head and charged forward, sprinting with all the speed she could muster. Her head connected with the brick fireplace - and the world went dark.

* * * * *

EXCERPT FROM THE BOLTER'S BAY COURIER, Tuesday March 28th, 2000

AMNESIAC MAKES NEW LIFE

Just over a year after the incident that cost her her memories, Leanne Jane Doe once more has a 'real' identity - that of Mrs. Gary Lockman.

Leanne Doe - who still has no memories prior to March twelfth of last year - and Gary Lockman met shortly before Miss Doe was afflicted with amnesia, and he was the one to help her in the first months after the incident. They were married today in the Eastside Baptist Church after a short engagement.

Leanne suffered the affliction after an apparently accidental assault by her then-landlord, Lee 'Ox' Williams who - apparently grief stricken - then left a note indicating his intent to commit suicide by drowning. For reasons unknown, he also took with him all of Miss Doe's identification, leaving police and federal investigators little to go on when tracing the past of Miss Doe, who has yet to be formally identified....

BACK TO FUN ZONE

SUMMARY: A frail man doing research on the occult, finds an old spell book and, after using it on himself, turns himself into a sex starved vixen.

Alternatives

By Gunslinger

"Well, that's what I get for taking the penthouse."

Tom sighed as he read the neatly hand-written 'out of order' sign affixed to the iron grillwork around the elevator shaft. Then looked dolefully at the stairs leading upwards. With another heavy sigh, he began to trudge towards the staircase, shifting his book-bag to a more comfortable position.

Tom really couldn't complain about the elevator. It was a 1940's vintage installation, and artistically was absolutely gorgeous, if not as exciting mechanically.

Finding someone capable of fixing such antiquated machinery was expensive and time consuming. Since Tom was the only person living in the three-story building - and rent free at that - he wasn't in any condition to complain about how long the building's owner left the repairs. After all, it was Tom's own fault - with his choice of apartments, he could have taken one on the first floor, and never had to worry about it. But no - he had to take the large, luxurious penthouse that took up the entire third floor.

The cost of which was this - forcing his frail, ailing body to make the exhausting climb.

Tom still couldn't believe his luck. Despite the occasional problems like this, the apartment was practically a dream come true - for him.

Built in the 1800's, and upgraded only once in the middle 40's, the building was on the National Register of Historic Buildings, and it's maintenance and care was paid for by the government. Not wanting to leave the building empty, the Board had searched for someone to live in the building, and perform minor cleaning and maintenance in exchange for free lodging.

The problem had come trying to find such a person. As a protected building, no changes could be made to the building itself - any tenant would have to put up with poor phone connections, no cable TV, old-fashioned plumbing and electricity, steam heat and no air conditioning - the list went on and on.

But for Tom, it was perfect.

Thomas Edison Grant had been delivered into the world on July 15th, 1974, in a Cincinnati Hospital. He was delivered, four weeks premature, via cesarean section from the body of his mother, who along with his father, had drowned after their car had plunged out of control and into a lake. His mother had been kept on a respirator long enough for his delivery.

Due to many factors, Tom had never truly become healthy. Now, working his way through collage, he was an unusually short, unusually scrawny young man, pale and weak. His blond hair, worn short, was prematurely gray, and beginning to recede, and Tom peered out at the world through remarkably thick 'coke bottle' horn-rimmed glasses.

By virtue of his frail body, he was a loner, spending all his time in the company of his books. For him, the apartment was an oasis in a hostile world, where he could curl up with his studies, free from the taunts and discrimination his sickly body afforded him, and the loneliness from a life spent as an orphaned, lonely youth.

Now, puffing heavily from the slow climb, he stumbled against the wall and let his book-bag drop as he caught his breath. Rummaging in his pocket, he extracted the old-fashioned key, and struggled for several minutes with the old, worn lock on the door before the tumblers finally clicked home. Letting the door swing opened, he gathered up his back and went in, closing and locking the door behind him. With a sigh of relief, he looked over his sanctuary.

The door opened out into a short hall. A door to the left led into the bathroom, with its cast iron, claw-foot tub.

Straight on down the hall, it debauched into a huge, hard-wood floored living room with large diamond-paned windows. Aside from the large fireplace on the one wall, and three doors, the room was practically one massive set of bookshelves. With a happy sigh, Tom clicked on a lamp and dropped into the wooden straight-backed chair in front of the roll-top desk.

After taking a few minutes to recuperate, Tom leaned forward and pulled a couple of books onto the surface of the oak desk, opening them to where he'd book-marked them. Taking a yellow tablet of legal paper, he began to make notes for his thesis - 'Myth And Mysticism - The Pseudo-Science of Magic'.

His pen flew over the tablet, words flowing from the nib as ideas and notes filled the yellow paper. He was soon lost in his work, his bright mind churning over the beliefs of a dozen cultures and cults.

Half an hour later, he paused with a frown, staring at the page he was reading. He was currently working on the myth of 'Astral Projection', and had bought this book because it was supposed to be the 'definitive' reference volume on the subject. Yet here, where the kernel of the idea was supposed to be, there was only a annotation. He leaned closer, reading the tiny footnote.

'The Annotated Journal of Mysticism, Volume 1 - Pgs 1065-1092. Pub. British Foundation of Sociology, 1921.'

Tom's brow furrowed. Leaning back, he closed his eyes and thought for a moment, the rose and made his way to one of the bookshelves that lined to room.

It was Tom's secret pride that he'd collected the finest, most comprehensive collection of mythical, paranormal and occult literature on the planet. Having become intrigued at an early age, he'd slowly built the collection over the years, scouring second hand stores, auctions, estate sales and garage sales to build it. A voracious reader, even he couldn't keep up with his collection, having read but a small portion of what he'd purchased.

Now, he lifted an old, leather-bound tome from the shelf and blew the thin coating of dust off of it before carrying it back to his desk. He flipped it open, leafing through the pages until he arrived at 1065 - and frowned.

The title at the top of the page was supposed to be 'Astral Projection'. Instead, the faded Times Roman font proclaimed 'Alter Physicality'.

Blinking, Tom held the page with one finger while he checked the flyleaf of the book - and comprehension dawned as he read the date of publication - 1881.

It was the right volume - but the wrong publication. A quick perusal found the correct page, in this publication, of the section, and Tom was soon immersed once more in his work.

Several hours later, he finished his notes and closed the top on the desk. Carrying the 'Journal'. He headed back to the shelf and began to replace it - the paused. Still holding the book, he walked over to his stereo and put his CD of the 75th anniversary collection of the London Philharmonic Orchestra on. As the strains of Pachelbel's 'Canon in D' filled the room, Tom lay on the couch and once more opened the book to page 1065, and began to read.

'An obscure, little known belief pre-dating, but related, to lynchthropy, Alter Physicality states that each human being existent has an Avatar - an alternate physical form of existence. Not necessarily lupine, this Avatar may be any species of creature

- even, according to some, another form of human being. Adherents to this obscure belief state that one may, at the proper junctions and with the proper preparations, 'will' themselves into whichever Avatar that they possess. Again, many parallels exist between this belief and that of 'were-' creatures, such as 'were-wolves'. Once such similarity is the belief that the transformation between one form and another can be tied to the full moon. However, the beliefs related to Avatars are more specific than the rather nebulous ones of lynchthropy.

According to very old texts, the times when one may change their current Avatar is based on what is referred to as 'the four transitions'. These, according to the texts, are the following - dawn, or 'the instant in which the sun first appears', midday 'when the sun reaches it's highest point in the sky', sunset 'when the last vestige of the sun doth vanish', and midnight, or 'that moment when the Moon reaches the highest point in the heavens.'

However, it should be noted that these seemingly simple 'transition' times are further qualified - the first three having effect only when the sun itself is clearly visible (that is, not obscured by adverse weather), and the fourth, that of the Moon's zenith, must not only be visible, but must be on the night of the full moon...'

Tom let the book close on his finger and tilted his head back. Closing his eyes, he let his mind wander, imagining what it would be like to be a wolf, his compact muscular body sprinting through the moonlit streets of the city - causing widespread panic.

A small smile tugged at his pale lips at the thought. The smile widened when he considered the thought that his 'Avatar' might not be lupine - perhaps he'd be something tamer. A were-beagle or were-squirrel for instance.

Shaking his head at the thought, Tom opened up the book and continued to read the interesting - but outlandish - beliefs held by the long dead cult.

* * * * *

Exactly ninety-three minutes after he'd put it on, the CD whirled to a stop, the powerful finale of the '1812 Overture' echoing in the room.

Laying the book down, Tom rose and crossed the room to replace the CD with another. As he neared the stereo, however, he found his eyes being drawn to the window - and the full moon shedding it's shimmering silver light through the glass.

Tom felt an odd shiver down his back as he stared at the bright, full moon. Shaking his head to dispel the odd sensation, he pushed his glasses higher up on his nose and reached for the stereo - and drew back again, an odd expression crossing his face. He stood there for several seconds, undecided, then with a self-conscious air, he shut the stereo off and, picking up the book, headed for the door.

Closing, but not locking, the door behind him, Tom walked down the hall to the small storage room. Opening the door with his master key, he rummaged around in the boxes of dusty items left behind by previous tenants, vagrants and vandals. Finally, he located a small round knob of wood with a hole through it. He had no idea what it had come from, but it didn't matter. It was unvarnished and unpainted, which counted. The book specified that. It also specified that the wood should be yew, rowan or oak, but Tom had no way of knowing what type of wood this was.

"Not that it matters." He said to himself, feeling foolish. "This isn't going to work, anyway."

Nevertheless, he took the small piece of wood, and crossed the hall to the staircase access for the roof. He carefully climbed the short, steep flight of stairs and opened the heavy steel door at the top with an effort. He made sure that the lock-bar engaged, ensuring that the door could not fully close.

Tom looked around at the shadows cast by the moon, judging that it was very near to it's zenith. Feeling extraordinarily ridiculous, he began to strip, shivering in the cool air.

Though the book specified complete nudity, Tom stopped undressing when he was down to his socks and underwear, unwilling to go further. He sat atop an aging ventilator and, per the instructions in the book, clutched the small piece of wood between his teeth.

Judging it was about the right time, he closed his eyes and, with all his mind, concentration on the short, repetitive verse from the book, mentally repeating it in the recesses of his finely-tuned mind.

'Atari domino transtomae. Atari domino transomae. Atari '

There he was, sitting nearly nude on a cold metal ventilator, goose pimples rippling over his body as he shivered, mentally repeating a nonsense phrase over and over again in his mind, all in the light of the full moon.

He was very aware of the ridiculousness of his situation, and was feeling very, very silly - when the pain hit.

With a short cry, he hunched forward, falling from the ventilator. The small piece of wood shot from his mouth as he cried out, and his glasses fell off and skittered across the gravel roof. Falling forward, Tom landed on his side and rolled to his back, rocking back and forth as the pain washed over him.

It felt like someone was breaking all his bones while fire ants crawled over his skin, with somebody sitting on his chest and rubbing sand in his eyes. The pain was intense, quickly approaching unbearable....

...and then it was gone, as if it never existed.

Tom lay on his back, gasping, as his body reported a slew of odd sensations unlike any he'd ever felt. There seemed to be a weight on his chest and the cold was more intense at his nipples than it had been before. Something was tugging at his head, and his entire body felt awkward and heavy. Fighting against whatever was holding back on his hair, Tom lifted his head...
...and screamed.

"Oh my god!" he screamed, "I've got tits! I've become a woman, a woman "

The sound of the rich, feminine voice that he was screaming dawned on him in horror. His hand flew to his mouth and he stifled himself, the clear, high pitched scream died, and he stared at the two immense, firm tits thrusting upwards from his? slender, hairless torso.

"My my god. I'm I were-woman." Tom muttered in shock. He shuddered at the thought.

Suddenly, something dawned on him. He was staring down at the new endowments adorning his Avatar body. He was seeing them perfectly, the gentle silver light of the full moon shining on the soft, smooth globes.

Yet he wasn't wearing his glasses.

"I I can see." Tom said in surprise, hearing the rich, feminine contralto of this body's voice. "I have perfect vision."

Slowly, he sat up, having to strain against the massive of his new endowments - and massive they were. They blocked his view of his waist, hips and crotch, but he could see the long, silky feminine legs that now belonged to him. There was no doubt about it - his Avatar was a woman. A fantastically endowed woman, at that.

Awkwardly, Tom struggled to his feet - only to immediately fall forward from the unexpected weight of his tits. Instinctively, Tom tried to catch his balance...

...and succeeded easily, his new body moving with strength and grace like he'd never known. Standing there, swaying slightly, he was amazed to feel so healthy, to have such a fit, responsive body.

"Holy shit " He muttered. His shock and instinctive horror at his transformation was severely muted by the realization that not only was he still alive and capable of rational thought - but feeling better, stronger and healthier than he'd felt in his whole life. He might be a woman, by the fact that he was a healthy, able one went a long way to mitigating his horror at the sudden switch of genders.

Awkwardly, his mind whirling in a welter of confused emotions, he gathered up his things and, shivering in the chill night air, carefully made his way back to his apartment, barely remembering to close and latch both the roof door and his own behind him. Dropping the things in a pile on the couch, he unsteadily walked to the bathroom, marveling at how crisp and clear his eyesight was in this body.

Entering the bathroom, he took a deep breath to steady himself, then turned and, closing the door, looked in the full-length mirror hanging on the back of the door.

The eyes that stared back at him were not watery blue, but deep, dark brown. They were set in a face that, while not beautiful, was very attractive - and sensual. The full lips were parted in surprise.

A mass of dark brown - almost black - hair framed the face, hanging partway down a smooth back. The skin tone was slightly dusky, a far cry from Tom's usual pale hue.

As a woman, Tom was taller than he'd been - while in his masculine avatar he was a mere five feet, the reflected image showed a woman closer to five-eight or -nine. Much of the extra height seemed to be provided by the long, smoothly muscled and extremely shapely legs that supported her full hips and slender waist. The once baggy boxers were pulled taut across those full hips and firm, sexy ass, but the elastic waist band was, if anything, slightly looser around the slender waist.

Then there was the breasts. The huge, firm, round tits that thrust proudly out. The areolas were large, and surmounted by large nipples, still swollen from the chill air.

There was not the slightest trace of the masculine Tom anywhere in this body he saw.

"Holy shit!" Tom said again, still not used to hearing the rich, sultry voice that emerged when he spoke. Although it was with his inflections, the voice itself had a smoky, sensual timbre to its undeniably feminine pitch.

Slowly he lifted his newly slender hands and held them before his altered face, blinking at the long nailed tipping each finger. He shook his head at the sight - and was further bemused by the sensation of his long hair brushing his slender shoulders.

But the most amazing thing - aside from the very fact he was, for now, a woman - was how good he felt. He had more energy, more strength than he'd ever had in his life. For the first time he knew what it was like to be completely healthy, and utterly fit. It was an unusual and exhilarating sensation.

He turned to the countertop and quickly located his nail clippers. Awkwardly, he trimmed the nails to the length his masculine ones usually were, so not to accidentally poke himself. Then, trembling, he carefully lowered the boxers down to his sock-clad ankles, nearly falling over in the process. Straightening, he regarded himself once more in the mirror.

There, surrounded by a small, neat patch of dark hair, was the unmistakable pink slit of a vagina.

Tom sighed, unsurprised. He'd more or less known what he'd find. Still, it was somewhat of an adjustment to make. Yet his initial feelings of horror and shock had subsided as he began to get used to the balance, grace and power of his altered, now feminine self.

Still staring in the mirror, he slowly, hesitantly brought his hands up and lightly touched his new, huge tits. New, pleasurable sensations flooded from the point of contact as his fingers slid across the silky expanse of skin - then doubled and redoubled when he reached his swollen nipples.

Tom gasped at the powerful, pleasurable sensation, and jerked his hands away, blushing. The whole situation was difficult to deal with, and although it was now, in a way, his body, he still felt like he was...a trespasser or something, and the real owner of the body was going to catch him in the act.

Bemused, Tom walked from the bathroom, finding it easier now that he was starting to adjust to the balance of the body. He was amazed at how vigorous he felt. Though it was late, and he, in his male body, had been awake since early this morning, this body wasn't tired - in fact, it was restless, eager to spend pent-up energy, more than Tom had ever had before. Mind whirling, he dropped to the couch and tried to sort things out.

"It worked. It's impossible, but it's all true - and this is my Avatar." He said to himself, shaking his head. "I was just fooling around, but "

He thought about the whole thing. He wasn't terribly worried about being trapped like this - if it worked one way, then, presumably, it worked the other way too. All he had to do to change back was go on the roof at dawn and repeat the ceremony, and he'd be back to normal.

At least, that was the assumption. If, for some reason, it didn't work Well, it didn't make sense to worry about it until the time came.

Sitting and worrying until then wouldn't change the outcome either way.

Tom practically bounced off the couch and began to pace, his enormous tits bobbing and swaying. He had too much energy to stay still for any length of time, and he obviously wasn't going to sleep. He paced back and forth rapidly, not noticing his swaying, feminine stride, and tried to decide what to do for the next five hours until dawn. If he tried to just sit and relax, he'd probably explode.

He wondered what the hell to do with himself, and decided, finally, that he had to go out, move, go somewhere anywhere. As much as he disliked going out with this new, excessively feminine body, he had to do something anything.

The first problem with that plan was clothing. Obviously, none of his own would fit. So, with his new tits bouncing and swaying annoyingly, Tom walked down the hall to the storage closet, clicked on the light, and began sorting through the boxes of items, looking for something to wear. He moved aside a box containing undergarments of various sorts, not even interested in them, then began to look through the trunks.

He quickly discovered that pants were out of the question. Any that would fit the full hips and firm, round ass of this body were too long, and too loose in the waist. Also, none of the shirts and blouses would even come close to fitting his massive, distracting tits, except for one very large man's shirt - and that hung like a tent, the sleeves too long and the shoulders too big. With a sigh, he finally accepted the inevitable, and slipped on the only article of clothing that fit.

It was a nineteen-forties evening gown. Long and flowing, it was made of black silk. The design allowed the elegant dress to fit even his new, over-exaggerated feminine figure. Stepping into the skirt portion of the dress, he pulled the material of the top up and over his enormous new tits, shivering at the intensely pleasurable sensation of the silk sliding across his new nipples. Reaching behind his neck, he awkwardly tied the ties that held the front in place. The gown had a plunging back, left bare, and the dress strained to contain his figure. Two silken lace ties at the side also wrapped around and tightened the waist of the dress, leaving a large silk bow at the back. He disliked wearing such a sheer dress so tightly around his figure, practically showing it off - but leaving it loose would not only be uncomfortable and drafty - but tightening it served the purpose of restraining his overly abundant breasts.

Sighing, he rummaged through the shoes, trying pairs on. He found two pairs that fit his new feet - a pair of clunky brown leather shoes that had open toes and a squared off inch-tall heel - and a graceful pair of black velvet pumps, with a slender, graceful heel of two and a half inches.

Tom sat on the top of a trunk and eyed the two pairs of shoes. He knew he'd be more comfortable wearing the ones with the short, wide heel - but he also knew how utterly ridiculous they would look.

Sighing, he slipped his feet into the black velvet pumps and carefully stood. He waited a couple of seconds, swaying slightly, as he got used to balancing on the slender heels, then began to walk towards his apartment with careful steps. He stopped, almost falling over forward, then went back and dug up a small black and silver clutch purse, realizing that he needed something to put his wallet and money in. Somehow, it didn't even dawn on him that, in addition to picking up the purse, he'd also picked up the box containing the undergarments, and was carrying it with him.

Locking the storage room, he returned carefully to his apartment, finding that he got used to the heels unbelievably fast. In a matter of minutes, he was walking in them as easily as if he'd been born in high heels. It was incredible - but compared to being turned into a woman, it was a very minor magic.

He opened the purse to drop his wallet, money and keys into it - and stopped, surprised to find it full of jewelry and makeup. He dumped it all out on the couch, then dropped his stuff inside. Turning, he headed for the door - and found his eyes being drawn back to the small pile on the couch.

"Why not?" he murmured, considering. He walked back over to the couch. Just as he didn't realize that the walk was done in a sexy, gracefully feminine stride, he also didn't realize how out of character this was for him. At the moment, both the ease and way he walked seemed completely natural to him, as did his unquestioning acceptance of what was going on. It never occurred to him to question either.

Digging through the pile, he first selected a slim, silver watch, which he strapped to his slender wrist. Frowning, he considered a pair of small silver hoop earrings, then shook his head at even considering them, and lay them aside. Closing his eyes, he took a deep breath, preparing himself for leaving - then decided to 'pit-stop' before going.

He headed to the washroom and quickly undid the dress, letting it slide to the floor. He removed the bright red boxers and sat on the toilet, experiencing the odd sensation of urinating as a woman. Carefully, he wiped himself, ignoring the new sensations that produced, then flushed the toilet. Rearranging his clothing, he headed for the door, grabbing the purse on the way. He carefully closed and locked it behind him, and headed down the stairs.

Amazingly, he hadn't noticed half the things he'd done. Like carrying certain items into the bathroom with him. Or the fact that, when dressing, he'd replaced the boxers with a pair of lacy black underwear from the box. He didn't even notice that he'd pulled on a pair of black nylons with seams up the backs before putting on the dress. And he certainly didn't consciously remember his careful application of makeup, or the way he'd brushed his hair before putting it into an elegant bun with a skill he shouldn't have had.

He also would have been shocked to find that he'd painlessly pierced his ears with the small silver hoop earrings that now dangles painlessly from his perfectly pierced ears.

* * * * *

As the clack of Tom's heels faded down the staircase, the slight gust of wind from the closing door rifled the pages of the book, which had been left open when he'd dropped it. There, on the open page, was part of the section Tom had been reading. If he'd thought about it, he probably could have recited, word for word, the page that he'd read only a short time ago.

'...amazing things about the belief held by adherents of Avatars is the belief in 'physical memory'.

Simply put, this is the belief that the Avatar form has certain instinctive, overriding memories and skills that belong to it, and operate once in that form. A wolf, for instance, would already know how to move in it's new form with little or no adjustment, despite the radical physical differences between that form and the person's own.

Moreover, the Avatar would also have all the necessary hunting skill and the basic 'pack mentality' needed to function as a wolf. Apparently, these new skill and memories are supposed to integrate seamlessly with the transformed's own mind, to allow him to fully function in his new form, immediately and without extraneous instruction or training...'

* * * * *

Tom paused for a second at the front door and took a deep breath to brace himself. It was a self-defeating move - as his lungs filled with air, it caused his massive bust to push outwards, his nipples sliding across the slick fabric and driving home his situation in a muted burst of pleasure. Releasing the breath with a whoosh, Tom shrugged, pushed the door open, and stepped outside, his heels clicking on the pavement.

He set off down the street, accompanied by the gentle tap of the pumps' heels. Again, he failed to notice the easy, sexy way he walked, causing his full, womanly hips to swivel slightly with each step, setting his firm, delectable ass and huge, round tits in enticing motion. As he moved, the dress, slit up to mid thigh, swayed open and closed, sending little gusts of wind across his smooth, sexy legs, which were teasingly revealed briefly each time.

Walking briskly yet aimlessly, his steps carried him down the street, mostly deserted at this time of night. No going anywhere in particular, he found himself passing a small, upscale bar, and decided, on impulse, to go in. Pulling the door open, she entered the dimly lit room.

A few well dressed people populated the bar, mostly businessmen recently returned from overseas and still on foreign time. Many of them turned at the door's opening, and found themselves staring at a vision.

She was standing beneath a light, lending a halo of light to her. One sexy, nylon clad leg could be seen partially through a slit up the long, form-fitting dress she wore, drawing the eye up to the flare of her hips before leading to a delightfully slender waist.

A waist cast into shadow by the huge, firm tits that thrust proudly from her chest. It was clear from the way her swollen nipples pushed aggressively against the sheer fabric that she wore no bra, the huge bust appearing to defy gravity, their immense mass remaining firm and round without support. One of the men, who considered himself an expert in such matters, pegged that stupendous bust line as being about thirty eight around the ribcage, and at least fifty inches around the nipples, which meant that, had she worn a bra, it would have been at least a 38JJJ.

Her face was sensual and exotic. Showing slight traces of gypsy blood, it was slightly dusky with a rounded chin, a full, sensual lips, emphasized by a deep, glossy red lipstick. Mascara lengthened and darkened her full, long lashes, adding mystery to her dark, smoldering eyes. Her dark hair was carefully brushed and twisted into an elaborate, elegant bun. Her perfect ears were only enhanced by the small silver hoops that gleamed in the light.

With a smooth, sensual glide, she moved forward, her gaze sweeping the room. Forgoing any of the booths, she chose the end seat at the bar, and settled gracefully atop the stool, depositing her purse on the bar surface with a uniquely feminine motion.

Tom looked down the bar to get the bartender's attention. Before he could, he became aware of a presence entering his 'personal space' as a sleekly handsome young man settled into the spot next to him.

"Good evening miss. I thought I might buy you a drink."

Tom looked over at the man, his eyes flicking up and down as he took him in. The newcomer was about six foot tall, broad shouldered, tanned and blond. If Ken had been a real person, this would have been it. His physique was further enhanced by a tailored Armani in silver/gray. A tooth-pick jutted from the side of his mouth.

Tom thought about it for a split second, then decided it couldn't hurt. He knew this wasn't going anywhere, and he'd at least get a free drink out of it.

"If you'd like." He replied in his richly feminine new voice. "I'll have a...martini." He'd been about to say beer, but at the last second, decided on something different. "What's with the tooth-pick?"

"I'm trying to quit smoking. These help."

The man smiled and signaled the bartender. After giving an order for two martini's, he turned back around and held out a hand. "I should probably introduce myself. Roger. Roger Denbrough."

In a split second it occurred to Tom he should have thought about this. Even as he opened his mouth to respond, he cast about for a name. Along the wall behind Roger's head were framed autographed photos of celebrities who had been in the bar, and Tom grabbed the first names he saw.

"Sandra Reeves." He said without noticeable hesitation. To be polite, he shifted in his seat to face the man more, intending to finish the drink and blow him off. Well, maybe after a second one.

Roger smiled as the drinks arrived, and sipped at his while surreptitiously eyeing Sandra's enormous tits. He knew that the other men in the room were slowly dying of envy. The way she'd looked him up and down - and paused for a few seconds at his crotch... While she'd stared at the large bulge in his pants, the bartender as looked at her, then him, and given him a knowing wink.

Hell, when she'd turned to face him, she'd put her hand on top of his. Even now he could feel the heat of her hand, seeming to burn nerves directly to his crotch - which she was staring at again...

Tom let his mind wander as he sipped his drink, just trying to get through this uncomfortable situation as quickly as possible. It was awkward, but harmless, and with the free drink, he figured he came out ahead. Finishing it, he placed it on the bar.

"Another one?" Roger asked with a smile.

"Sure Roger, I'd love that." He shifted in his seat to get more comfortable, and waited for his second drink.

Roger almost came right there. After agreeing to a second drink, she'd shifted in the seat - crossing her legs so that the right one rested on the knee of the left. The slit had fallen open, revealing her right leg up to mid-thigh in all it's glory. The glorious leg that she was sliding up and down the inside of his leg.

Tom finished off the second drink quickly after looking at his watch and deciding he had to get home to be sure and catch the dawn. He thought about the best way to get rid of Roger, and decided to be quick, and give the standard white lie 'I'll see you around some time.'

Roger's face fell when the gorgeous creature said, "Thanks for the drinks, but I really have to leave now." Awkwardly, he rose when she did, his erection straining at his pants.

Turning to pick up her purse, she pressed the firm, full globes of her ass against his crotch, wriggling it slightly. Roger stiffened, almost erupting right there. Then she turned back and smiled at him, standing so close that her huge tits were pressed firmly into his chest.

Tom tried to ignore the incredible sensations emanating from his chest. The asshole, obviously wanting a quick feel, had stepped closer when his back was turned so that when he'd turned back around, she'd ended up chest to chest with him. Mumbling his quick line, he headed for the door.

Roger watched the sexual epitome of a woman seductively sway out of the bar. His cock felt like it was going to explode as he watched the erotic motions of her ass until the closing door obscured it.

"Well, you almost got lucky there." The bartender, Jack, said, shaking his head. "I've never seen anyone come on as strongly as she did. Then - poof, she leaves. What did she whisper to you, any way?"

With a blissful expression on his face, Roger repeated the words she'd whispered into his ear in a husky, sensual voice.

"Give me 15 minutes - then meet me at 1523 East avenue, top floor." Roger smiled wickedly. "Say, Jack, sell me a bottle of Vodka, will you?"

* * * * *

Tom sighed as he re-entered his apartment, closing the door behind him. It felt good to be back. As nice as this body was, fitness and health wise, it was more than a little awkward for him to be comfortable in public as a woman. Wandering over to the stereo, he turned it on and ejected the CD tray. Picking one at random, he stuck it in.

Looking around, he decided to kill some time tidying up. He began to straighten up, putting things back where they belonged, puttering around to the music of the CD he'd picked at random - 'Music for Lovers'.

The knock on the door surprised him. Who could be calling on him at this hour? Curious, he went over and opened the door.

He was surprised to find the guy from the bar standing outside, a silly grin on his face, tooth-pick jutting from his even white teeth, and carrying a bottle of vodka. What was his name again? Robert?...no, Roger, that was it.

"Um... Hi Roger." Tom said, surprised.

The well-built man smiled. "Hi Sandra." He held up the bottle. "Pre-mixed martini's, courtesy of the bartender who is an old friend." "Uh huh." Tom said, trying to figure out how this guy had found his apartment. Followed him home, maybe?

"So...are you going to invite me in?" Roger asked, gesturing.

Tom considered just slamming the door in the guy's face - but didn't feel right about it. It was odd, but perhaps understandable. He'd spent his entire life alone, shunned by society - and here, for the first time, was somebody who wanted to spend time with him.

Somehow, Tom couldn't bring himself to just summarily dismiss the guy. "Of course." Tom said, opening the door wider. "Come on in, Roger."

At least, that's what he thought he said. Unnoticed, what actually emerged from his mouth was, "Of course. I've been waiting for you, lover."

Which explained the enthusiasm with which Roger entered, smiling happily as Tom closed the door behind him. "Make yourself comfortable" Tom said awkwardly, gesturing at the couch. "I'll...uh, go get some glasses." Roger nodded. "Sure thing, Sandra."

Bringing the glasses, he dropped to the sofa next to Roger - not noticing that it was right next to him, her full hip pressed against the smiling man.

Roger poured a couple of drinks, and handed one to Tom, who downed it quickly. For some reason, the room had become broiling hot in the past couple of minutes. At least, that's how it seemed to Tom. He shifted uncomfortably, feeling like he was about to spontaneously combust.

"It's way to hot in here, isn't it?" he asked Roger.

Roger was perfectly comfortable - but he wasn't going to argue. "Yeah, I'm broiling. Perhaps we should get more comfortable."

That seemed to make sense, Tom mused. He rose and walked over to open a window, not finding anything unusual in the fact that another man was hurriedly stripping down to his boxers in his living room. Having opened the window, he still felt like he was frying, so it only seemed to make sense for him to reach up and undo the dress, letting the liken materiel slide off his womanly body to a pile on the floor. He turned back around.

Roger was standing by the couch, nearly naked. His body was muscular and exquisitely toned, and his briefs bulged alarmingly/enticingly. Again, Tom found nothing odd in the situation.

Without a second thought, Tom crossed the room, high-heels clicking as his exquisite, nylon covered legs moved enticingly. He lowered himself back to the couch, and Roger joined him. Quickly, Roger poured another round of drinks, and again, Tom downed his, feeling a pleasant, tipsy glow from the four martini's he'd had.

Casually, Roger draped an arm around Tom's shoulders. Tom, who had felt so hot, now felt a brief chill, and leaned into Roger's embrace for warmth. The chill caused Tom's thick nipples to stiffen. A small, dim warning began to sound in Tom's brain as Roger's hands slipped down, and began to caress his huge tits skillfully. Tom tried to figure out what could be wrong - especially with something he felt so right. With a soft sigh, Tom closed his eyes, enjoying the sensual manipulation of his massive tits.

Shortly, Tom was somewhat surprised to find his black lace panties were sopping wet.

That made a small break through. Not the fact that his cunt was hot and wet - but the panties. Frowning, Tom tried to recall putting them on - or the sexy nylons he wore, for that matter. Somehow, something didn't seem right.

The dim warning sounded again that there was something wrong with having Roger hold him, and fondle his huge tits so pleasurably. Mind whirling, Tom looked up at Roger...

...whose lips came down to meet his, and for a long instant he sat unmoving as Roger's tongue probed his mouth. The sensation of Roger's lips against his own full, red lips was so powerfully erotic, for a moment though fled. Half-heartedly, Tom cooperated as Roger maneuvered him into a laying position on the couch, stripping off both of their underwear. His cock was erect, almost thirteen inches long, and remarkably thick.

It was the sight of the cock that got through to Tom. Opening his mouth, he tried to buck Roger off...

...and only succeeding in impaling himself on the thick cock, sending new, mind-numbing sensations through his body.

Instantly, all coherent thought was washed away by wave after wave of pure ecstasy as Roger expertly fucked the huge breasted man/woman. Tom was incapable of anything but trying to maximize the shear, indescribable sensations that he was experience. He eagerly participated, his huge tits bouncing as he moaned in shear pleasure that rose into a cream as his first female orgasm swept over him.

Sighing, Roger rolled off of him and reached for a toothpick in place of his old 'after fuck smoke.' He watched in surprise as the huge breasted babe suddenly sat bolt upright and screamed.

"Oh my god! What did I do?!"

Ignoring Roger, she grabbed a bathrobe and a small wooden ball. Struggling into the robe, she headed for the door. Quickly, the confused man shrugged into a second robe and followed her.

* * * * *

"What the hell are we doing on the roof, babe?" Roger asked, staring out over the gradually brightening cityscape.

"You'll see," Tom answered cryptically, struggling to restrain the lewd sexual thoughts trying to claim his mind. Quickly, he tossed the bathrobe aside, which caused Roger's cock to begin to harden again. Quickly, Tom dropped to his knees and placed the wooden ball between his teeth. Composing his mind, he tried to concentrate on his mantra.

'Atari domino...(god, look at his cock it's so perfect)... No, concentrate! Atari (oh, it's hard again) domino transomae. (I bet I'd enjoy sucking it...) Atari (oh, I'm so horny '

It was no good. The thoughts kept breaking in. He couldn't concentrate on his own. He needed help. "Roger, help me." Tom said around the wooden ball, looking fearfully at the horizon. Time was growing short. "Sure babe, anything for you." Roger replied, sticking a tooth-pick in his mouth. "What do you want?" "Repeat this phrase over and over for me." Tom replied. "Atari domino transomae."

Roger blinked. "Huh?"

Tom shook his head angrily. "I don't have time to explain. Just keep saying it over and over again, no matter what happens. Do you understand? Atari domino transomae."

Roger shrugged, and began to chant the phrase over and over again.

Tom concentrated on Roger's repetition, timing his own mental chant to match, buttressing his own failing will with Roger's chant. It didn't work.

Roger's stiffening cock became clearly visible through the hanging robe when a gust of wind blew it open - and Tom's mind collapsed. Hungrily, he she leaned forward, spat out the wooden ball, and let her warm, supple lips encircle the rock-hard cock.

Following her previous - and, unknown to him, now useless - instructions, he continued to chant as she licked at his huge tool, her hands rising to stroke the shaft while her tongue worked his swollen, purple head.

Everything happened simultaneously. Her ministrations quickly brought him to orgasm. As the hot, salty cum filled her mouth with a flavor that exited and aroused her, he threw his head back and clenched his teeth around the sliver of wood in his mouth...

...just as the sun peeked over the horizon.

Sandra - that was who she was now, helplessly locked in the body and sexual needs of a huge-breasted, cum-crazed woman - was swallowing the mind-boggling delicious liquid when Roger jerked away in pain.

Licking the last of the cum from her full lips, Sandra let her hand slid down between her legs. The other began to caress her huge, firm tits.

Masturbating furiously, she watched Roger change, while somewhere deep inside her lust-filled psyche, Tom sobbed and screamed helplessly in horror - and pleasure.

* * * * *

Down in the apartment, the volume of the 'Journal' sat on the shelf, once more left to molder, as Sandra had no interest in reading such things, and Tom, trapped in her body and psyche, was unable to do so.

But, had someone taken the book, and opened it to the correct page, they might have found themselves reading the final section of the article that had been Tom's downfall.

'...one of the more interesting aspects of the belief is the fact that the 'transformation' is always performed alone, away from any potential observers.

Adherents of the belief, as is often the case, have a 'simple explanation' for the lack of independent study - according to these believers, it is extremely dangerous to be in physical contact with another living being at the time of transformation, as it might cause unpredictable side-effects to the transformed '

Roger clambered up the stairs, watching the delightfully swaying ass of Sandra, enjoying the sensual movements of her full, firm ass and her long, nylon encased legs. She was weird - no doubt about that - but God, was she hot. Those huge tits of hers was amazing.

To tell the truth, she hadn't been all that great, sexually - but Roger figured he'd try for a rematch, and see if she could do better. It was obvious she was hot for his bod - but, then again, a lot of women were. He wasn't known as 'The Ultimate Ladies Man' for nothing.

With a sigh, he emerged out on the roof, where Sandra was peering anxiously up at the sky, as if awaiting some portent. Roger shivered slightly in the chill pre-dawn air, the thin bathrobe doing little to keep him warm.

"What the hell are we doing on the roof, babe?" Roger asked suggestively, playing it cool and not looking directly at her dusky sensuality.

"You'll see," The huge-breasted woman answered cryptically. She tossed her bathrobe aside, which caused Roger's cock to begin to harden again. Roger watched, bemused, as the sexy bitch dropped to her knees and seemed to concentrate on something, while suggestively sucking on some sort of wooden ball.

Suddenly, she looked directly at him, and said "Roger, help me," around the wooden ball. She was looking, almost fearfully, at the horizon.

"Sure babe, anything for you." Roger replied, sticking a tooth-pick in his mouth. Whatever it took to get this sexy - but very weird, - slut to fuck him again. "What do you want?"

"Repeat this phrase over and over for me." She replied. "Atari domino transomae." Roger blinked. "Huh?"

Sandra shook her head angrily. "I don't have time to explain. Just keep saying it over and over again, no matter what happens. Do you understand? Atari domino transomae."

Roger shrugged. If she wasn't so damned hot, he'd just walk away. But, for tits like those, he'd play along a little while longer. He began to chant the nonsensical phrase over and over again.

Roger felt the cool breeze on his stiffening cock when a gust of wind blew his robe open. Suddenly, she leaned forward, spat out the wooden ball, and let her warm, supple lips encircle his rock-hard cock.

Following her previous instructions, he continued to chant as she licked at his huge tool, her hands rising to stroke the shaft while her tongue worked his swollen, purple head. Her ministrations quickly brought him to orgasm. As his cum shot out to fill the bimbo's mouth

, he threw his head back and clenched his teeth around the tooth-pick in his mouth, just as the sun peeked over the horizon.

Instantly, the pleasure turned to pain as a wave of agony swept over his body. Roger jerked away with a curse, collapsing as the wave of pain swept through him inexplicably.

It felt like someone was breaking all his bones while fire ants crawled over his skin, with somebody sitting on his chest and rubbing sand in his eyes. The pain was intense, quickly approaching unbearable....

...and then it was gone, as if it never existed.

Roger lay on his back, gasping, as his body reported a slew of odd sensations unlike any he'd ever felt. There seemed to be a weight on his chest and the cold was more intense at his nipples than it had been before. Something was tugging at his head, and his entire body felt awkward. Fighting against whatever was holding back on his hair, Roger lifted his head...

"Holy fuckin' SHIT!" He screamed, shocked to hear it come out in a rich, vibrant - and very, very feminine, voice. "What the fuck happened!"

His once muscular, manly torso had slimmed down, the skin tone taking on a dusky hue. Rising defiantly from the narrowed ribcage was what was undeniably a pair of firm, feminine mounds, tipped with large, dark nipples set in smallish, domed areola.

He had tits. Firm, dusky globes of womanly persuasion, ones that normally he would find attractive - but they were rising from his chest, jiggling slightly with every breath he took.

All though he'd never seen tits from quite this angle, he'd had ample experience at judging size, and even as he stared with wide-eyed incredulity at the firm mounds on his chest, his mind duly reported that they seemed to be about a DDD cup. In the cool morning air, the dark nipples were becoming engorged, and Roger not only saw them stiffening in the breeze, he felt them, a pleasurable tingle that ran down his spine.

"What the hell is going on?" Roger cried, wincing at the voice it emerged in. Awkwardly, he rolled over, feeling his sensitive new endowments against the roof, and levered himself up. As he did so, he gaped at his slender, dusky feminine new arms, which ended in slender, long-nailed hands. As he unsteadily stood, he looked down at the strong, shapely female legs that supported his new body as he struggled to balance his new body, with its new center of gravity.

Sandra was sitting a few feet away, watching him disinterestedly while she sucked on one finger coated with her own juices.

"What the hell have you done to me?" Roger screamed, approaching the huge-breasted woman. "I'm going to kill you, you fucking bitch!"

"Jeez, calm down." Sandra said, one hand fondling her own massive tit.

Instantly, Roger found himself acting calm. Not actually becoming calm - the rage, confusion and horror continued to roil within him - but acting calm, no way to express the intense emotions he was feeling.

"How the fuck did you do that?" he asked in a calm, firm female voice. "You told me to be calm, and now I have to be. What are you - some kind of witch? You turned me into a woman."

Sandra blinked, and slowly stood. "What? You mean you have to do as I say?" She cocked her head. "Fondle your tits, Roger."

"I don't want to..." Roger began, helplessly calm - then stopped with a gasp of pleasure, as his slender new hands rose and began to massage and fondle his new endowments, sending little bolts of pleasure through him.

Sandra smiled. "Cool." While Roger continued helplessly massaging his sensitive, silky mounds, Sandra eyed him speculatively. "Jeez, you look a little like me." Sandra said. "Weird. I didn't look anything like the other you when I was a man."

"You...were a man." Roger asked, trying, in vain, to force his hands away from his sensitive tits. He was shamed by the pleasure he was getting from his new endowments.

Then, horrified, the meaning of what Sandra said dawned. "You mean... I fucked a man?" Roger asked, unable to express his horror and outrage at her.

Sandra laughed. "No, you fucked me...and I'm definitely not a man." She cocked her head. "You can stop fondling your tits - it's distracting."

Thankfully, Roger let his arms drop as she continued speaking. "I used to be a guy named Tom - kind of. You see, Tom is still kind of inside me...but it's me - Sandra - who's in control." She laughed again. "Tom doesn't like it - he screaming right now. Hang on, I'll let him talk to you."

Suddenly, Sandra's posture and expression changed. It was still the same, sexy, feminine voice, but with completely different inflections.

"Roger, you've got to do something. I...I can't control this body - she's forcing me to do these things. You have to look in the book and..."

Suddenly, 'Tom' was gone, and it was Sandra addressing Roger once more. "Tom was a pathetic little wimp - and a virgin, to boot. Why would I want to go back to that sorry life when this is so much more fun?" She smiled suggestively and fondled her huge tits lewdly. "I think you'll find out what I mean before long."

"No..." Roger said, horrified and unable to express it. "I'm not staying this way... change me back..."

Sandra laughed. "Oh, I don't think so. I think I need a 'girl friend' to hang around with. Come on, lets go back to my place."

Swaying sensually, she headed for the stairs, and Roger helplessly followed obediently, calmly 'begging' Sandra to release him and change him back.

Pleas that fell on deaf ears.

* * * * *

"Come on, you've got to see this." Sandra said, opening the door to the apartment and going inside. Helplessly, Roger followed as she led him to the bathroom, and stood beside him as they looked in a full-length mirror.

Suddenly, that comment about him 'looking a little like her' made sense.

They shared the exact same skin tone, a slightly dusky shade, like a built-in tan. Their faces could have been carbon copies - the exact same dark, smoldering eyes, high cheek-bones, and full, sensual lips.

There were differences though. Roger was several inches taller than Sandra. His hair, hanging to mid-back, was a rich, glossy black, where Sandra's was a dark brown shading to black.

Roger also possessed a more athletic body than Sandra. If anything, his new legs were sexier than hers. They appeared longer, and were sensually muscled - what Roger called 'dancer's legs'. They led up to a pair of hips that were not as wide as Sandra's - and, nestled there, was a small patch of pubic hair trimming a definitely female vagina. It took some effort for Roger to see past his loss of manhood and look at the rest of his body.

Like Sandra, his ass was full and remarkably sexy, a firm tear-drop shape, leading the eye upwards - to his almost impossibly slender waist.

Sandra was wasp-waisted above her full hips - but Roger's new body possessed the slimmest waist he'd ever seen. Although his slender hips were almost boyish, his incredibly narrow waist made them look delightfully feminine.

Then, of course, there was their tits. Sandra possessed a massive, gravity-defying pair of chest-melons, thrust from her chest like two huge, firm, flesh-toned water balloons.

Roger's new endowments were more modest, but still large. DDD-cup in size, they were even firmer than Sandra's, forming symmetrically perfect globes that needed no support. Unlike Sandra's tits, where the large nipples were centered in large, diffuse areola, Roger's new areola were small, clearly defined, and domed, rising in a rounded half-sphere before peaking in large, dark nipples.

Roger's shoulders were not as narrow as Sandra's, and his arms were better toned and slightly more muscular, without detracting from their femininity. His hands also lacked the extraordinary daintiness of Sandra's, yet in no way could be considered even slightly masculine.

"My God"... Roger murmured, stunned at the sight in the mirror. He hadn't just been turned into a woman - he'd been turned into a drop-dead gorgeous babe. While Sandra was the epitome of exaggerated sexuality with a massively endowed hourglass figure, Roger was tall, slender and incredibly fit - with a large pair of absolutely perfect tits, incredibly sexy legs that went on forever, and a face that a fashion-model or movie-star would die for.

"See, I told you we looked alike. You look like 'my older sister' would, if I had one..." Sandra's voice trailed off, and she'd looked thoughtful, then devilish.

"What's your name?" She asked suddenly.

"Roger. Roger Denbrough." Roger replied, his stomach dropping.

"No, it's not." Sandra said, smiling wickedly. "Your name is Cynthia - Cynthia Reeves. You're my older sister. Now, what's your name?"

Roger wanted to scream, but couldn't. He couldn't even struggle mentally - thanks to the side effect of being in contact with her during the transformation, anything she told him embedded itself in his psyche. So, helplessly, he replied. "Cynthia Reeves."

Sandra laughed. "That's right. Sandy and Cindy, that's us. The Reeves sisters." She looked Roger - or rather, Cindy - up and down speculatively.

"I'm going out for a second. I want you to sit down and do something with your hair, and put on some makeup." She instructed.

Helplessly, Cindy complied as Sandy left the room. He was shocked to find that somehow he seemed to instinctively know how to apply make-up, as he carefully did his face to match Sandy's. He also found himself brushing out his long, glossy black mane and gathering in with a silver clip at the back of his changed head before letting it spill in raven waves down his slender, smooth back.

Sandy returned shortly, and smiled in approval at Cindy's new look. "Great. Now, get dressed - we have places to go, people to see." She handed him a pile of clothing, and Cindy had no choice but to obediently dress.

Calmly, of course.

The first item was a pair of lacy black panties. Helplessly, Cindy slid them in place, feeling them settle into place around his slender hips, fitting - physically comfortably, emotionally uncomfortably - tightly around his sexy new ass and depressingly/delightfully smooth crotch with its new woman hood.

Next came the pants. They were his - the silky gray pants of his Armani suit. They fit fine, length wise, but even with slender hips, they were skin-tight over his new ass, hips and crotch, detailing the smooth, sexy line of his delightful derriere.

Likewise, the black silk shirt was also his. Helplessly he pulled it on, finding it fit well enough - except for the chest. There, he could barely button it over his firm, large tits. The soft fabric strained to contain his mighty globes, his new nipples poking dents in the thin fabric. He tucked the shirt into the pants, which were extremely loose in the waist. That was taken care of with a white leather belt Sandy handed him that drew the waist-band tight, and emphasized his phenomenally slender new waist.

Next, a pair of black, feminine socks with a frill of lace at the top. Once they were on, the final step was stepping into the pair of black shoes Sandy had provided. They were leather pumps with thin stiletto heels and pointed toes. The heels were three-and-a-half inches and again, Cindy was shocked and dismayed to find that, with just a few minutes practice, he was walking easily - and sensually - in them. To all appearances, the perfect image of a sexy, well-dressed woman.

Accompanied by her massively endowed sister. Sandy had slipped her dress back on, and had picked up her purse. She handed him one as well - pearly gray velvet - containing his money, some make-up, and assorted other items. It took an order from her before he'd accept it.

"Now, we're going out. From now on, whenever any one else is within earshot or sight of us, you will play the role of my older sister as perfectly as you can, as if you were born female - born Cynthia Reeves, to be exact - and it was perfectly natural for you."

"I really don't have a choice, do I Sandy?" 'Cynthia Reeves' asked calmly. "Please, don't do this to me."

Sandra frowned. "You sound like a robot like that. While you're 'being' Cindy in public, you make react emotionally - but only the way 'Cynthia Reeves' would act, the right emotional responses for her at the right times."

As simple as that, Cindy knew he was trapped in a female persona - whenever there were other people present, that is. Helplessly, he followed Sandy from the apartment, feeling his new body move in ways fundamentally different than that of his old body. Ever gentle click of his high heels on the floor seemed to reverberate in his head, driving home the inexplicable, unreal situation he'd somehow become embroiled in.

Desperately, he tried to break free of Sandra's imposed will as they went downstairs - and failed, utterly and completely. It wasn't hypnosis or brainwashing, or some other, understandable, fallible human contrivance. It was pure, unadulterated magic that held him in thrall to her, and he couldn't even weaken the force of her commands in his mind.

They reached the ground floor, and approached the front door. Cindy knew that, once through that door, he'd be stuck playing a persona not his own, unable to give voice to his real thoughts. He tried one last time.

"Sandy - No, Tom," He implored calmly, "please, don't do this. I'm a man. I don't want to be a woman, I don't want to be your sister. Please, Tom - fight her. You can beat her. You know what I'm going through - you've been through it. Save me, Tom. Turn me back. Fight the bitch, Tom..."

Sandy faltered, wobbling on her heels. She hunched over, her body shaking as, deep inside, Tom fought for some measure of control - and lost.

Sandy whirled angrily. "Don't ever call me that again!" she shouted, effectively sealing Cindy's lips on that score. She glowered angrily at him, her usually stunning face a twisted mask of rage. Slowly, that look faded, to be replaced with one of cool, calculating cruelty.

She carefully straightened her dress, then looked Cindy full in the face.

"Your name is Cynthia Anne Reeves." She said, enunciating clearly, with a malicious edge in her voice. "You are 26 years old, 2 years older than me, your sister. You were born female, under that name, in Los Angeles. You finished high-school and collage with good grades. You were tall and gangly until you were 21, being a very late bloomer. Then, you developed rapidly. Now, although you are proud of how you developed, you are still insecure about yourself. You envy me, and the way I bloomed early and was very popular with the boys."

Sandy's cruel smile widened. "Because of your insecurity, you have a deep, abiding, and indelible need to outdo me as a woman. Everything I do that is feminine, you feel a need to top, to go one step further. Although you love me very much, and enjoy doing things with me, my every action is the goal for you to beat."

Helplessly, as she was twisted with rage and hatred inside at her cunning, cruel manipulation, Cindy felt the pathways and byways of her brain altering to match Sandy's command. Although she knew the truth, she was now incapable of dealing with it on a conscious level. Her viewpoint altered against her will as she found herself thinking of herself in the terms described, despite knowing they were fabrications. Just as her command to be calm had robbed him of the ability to express his anger earlier, now he found that his inner rage and desire to kill Sandra with his bare hands was looked behind an impenetrable barrier, unable to surface in his expressions, or even his controllable thoughts. It merely smoldered deep inside. Suddenly, she understood exactly what Tom was experiencing - only, somehow, worse.

Tom's entire personality was submerged deep within Sandra, helplessly imprisoned, experiencing whatever Sandra did, without any semblance of control.

Unlike Tom, who was submerged beneath Sandra, Cynthia WAS Roger - altered and manipulated, but still his male mind was fully present.

Simply put, the situation for them was like this. Tom was like a man tied immobile in a wheelchair and sent rolling down a hill. Roger was like a man who had been whipped until he'd collapsed into the wheelchair, and was now pushing himself downhill from being beaten.

Helplessly, Cindy smiled. "Well, shall we go?" she asked, hating herself for saying the words. Sandra laughed cruelly and stepped out the door, and Cindy unwillingly/eagerly followed, moving with the same sexy, graceful stride as 'her sister'.

Sandy hailed a cab - the driver of which did a double take as the two gorgeous women entered his cab - and directed him to take them to the local college 'hang-out'.

Smiling, Sandy turned to Cindy and said "I think we should look our best, right sis?" Taking out some items and began to touch up her make-up.

Helplessly, Cindy found herself compelled to do the same - making sure that her own make-up was better - sexier - than 'her sisters'.

The cab pulled to a stop, and Sandy climbed out, smiling seductively at the driver. Cindy was compelled to helplessly do the same, rage and shame broiling, unseen, deep inside.

With an erotic, sensual stride, the two buxom, sexy 'sisters' strode into the diner, causing every male's head to swivel in unison. They gaped at the sight as the women walked down the aisle and into a booth with four strong, handsome young men.

"Hi guys." Sandy said with a seductive grin as she slid into the booth. She slung an arm around the nearest man. Cindy did the same on the other side, finishing their greeting with "Don't mind if we sit here, do ya?"

Not one of the four stunned young men even considered objecting. The one with the gigantic hooters started rubbing her fabric-encased tits on his side, and the taller, athletic one began stroking the guy's cock through his pants.

Cindy wanted to scream as she helplessly came on to the handsome college students, acting in the most erotic way she could. She knew what was going to come next, even before Sandy said it.

"You guys feel like coming back to our place and have some fun?"

Again, there was no opposition from the guys, who smile broadly at each other and scrambled to pay for their food. Grabbing their jackets, the men 'escorted' the women out to their cars, and piled in. Each of the women got into a car with two guys, sitting between them in the front seat and coming on to them as the two-car procession headed off to the apartment.

Deep inside, Cindy struggled for some measure of control as she led the two guys up the stairs. She was helplessly walking up the flight of stairs in as sensuous a way as she could, and she could feel their gaze on her firm, sexy ass. Yet no force of will could alter her desperate need to outdo her sister in the art of feminine sensuality as the entire group arrived at the apartment, the four young men practically drooling as the two sexy women invited them in. Sandy threw Cindy a conspiratorial wink, knowing what was going through her mind, and enjoying her unseen horror and disgust.

"Well guys, make yourself right at home." Sandy said with a smile. She settle onto the love-seat, smiling up at one of the men, who promptly sat next to her. She leaned against him suggestively.

Which left the couch for everyone else. The three men shuffled around, working out the math, and wordlessly trying to make sure that they weren't the odd man out.

Helplessly, Cindy suggested a solution. "Go ahead guys, sit down." She smiled helplessly. "I don't mind having to sit on a lap."

Instantly, the three young man sat down. Cindy sensuously swayed over, and lay down across all their knees, looking up through lowered lashes. "Don't be shy. You can touch - if you'd like to."

They like to. The men smile at one another. The one on whose lap her head was pillowed slid a hand down the inside of her blouse and began to massage her firm, full tits, while the one in the middle snaked a hand up and began caressing her inner thigh. The third man looked on enviously.

Sandy smiled at the sight of the secretly humiliated ex-man, and turned to her own companion. "Hey, handsome, how would you feel about tit-fucking these babies?" She cradled her huge tits, and the man's eyes nearly popped from his skull. Sandra guided his hands to her dress, and he eagerly undid the ties and pulled it off, revealing her massive, firm globes. After a few minutes of fondling and sucking them, he let her pull away. Removing the rest of the dress, she lay on the floor, and smiled up at the man, who lost no time in dropping his pants and straddling her torso, his hard, throbbing cock in her immense cleavage. With a blissful expression, he began to tit-fuck her.

Helplessly, Cindy wasn't to be outdone. Quickly, she stood and stripped off her clothing, showing her magnificent, naked, athletic body to the drooling men. She lay down on the floor, and pointed to the middle one.

"You. How about a tit fuck?"

Eagerly, the man stripped down, a promptly copied his friends posture and expression as he straddled her.

Cindy was disgusted to feel the man's hot cock slide between her firm endowments as he pressed them together and began to fuck her cleavage. But that was nothing compared to the shame and rage as she spoke to the other two men.

"Hey, guys, what's wrong. My mouth and cunt are still free, you know."

With huge smiles, the two men responded eagerly. Helplessly, she wrapped her hot, 'willing' mouth around one of the men's cock - while the other one positioned himself - and thrust his hard, ready cock into her sopping wet cunt.

The cock she was 'hungrily' sucking on was the only thing that kept her from crying out in mingled disgust and pleasure as she was penetrated for the first time. The hard shaft slid easily into her sopping cunt, filling her as if she had been made to hold a cock - which, in a way, she had. The sensation was like none she had ever felt, fulfilling and exciting physically, yet all the more emotionally horrifying for the pleasure of it.

The pleasure only mounted as he eagerly fucked the horny young 'woman'. He pumped in and out of her hot, wet cunt, causing rising waves of pleasure to mount, making it difficult for her to concentrate on the world-class blow-job she was giving to the other man. Not that she wanted to concentrate on the sickening task - but she was helplessly compelled to be a better cock-sucker than her 'sister' could ever be, and she struggled to suck the guys cock like a professional, despite the distracting, disgusting, mind-breakingly intense sensations building in her crotch, and sending bursts of shear ecstasy through her nerves.

The man she was giving a blow-job to shuddered, and exploded into her mouth, a flood of hot, salty cum shooting down her throat while she 'eagerly' drank every drop before she spit his softening cock from her cum-coated lips.

She needed to do that so she could gasp and scream with the intense, unbelievable sensations rising through her as she neared orgasm. Then it hit, and her whole body shook in pure, unadulterated ecstasy as she screamed out in primal pleasure. Her spasming cunt pushed the man over the edge, causing him to shoot his load of cum deep into her cunt.

At the same instant, the man on her chest stiffened and grunted as he shot his own load of cum, drenching her tits, face and hair with the warm, thick liquid.

Cindy's mind whirled in confusion. She has laying on the floor, covered in cum. Cum filled her mouth, stomach and cunt with it's warmth, and it's flavor filled her mouth.

And to her horror, she had loved every second of it. She'd hated every second of it to, but it had felt so good to be fucked, and his cum had tasted so wonderful. Already, she found herself wanting to experience it all again, and hated herself for the lust that rose, unbidden, through her.

Looking over, Cindy saw Sandy, now with her own coating of cum. Hungrily, helplessly, Cindy crawled over and began to lap the cum from her 'sister's' enormous tits. Soon, the two women were locked in lesbian lust, licking not only the cum from each other, but each other cunt, bringing each other off.

The sight was enough to re-arouse the passions of the four guys.

And, as the sight of the stiffening cocks elected a deep, powerful lust in her, Cindy knew that she was locked helplessly into a cycle of unending, bi-sexual lust. She watched Sandy as she began to hungrily fuck one of the guys, satisfying her own raging nymphomania.

Sandy was a cum-sucking, insatiable nymphomaniac slut.

And Cindy was helplessly compelled to outdo her at everything feminine - including fucking.

And, as she helplessly impaled herself on another hard cock, Cindy realized that meant that they'd have to develop a whole new word to deal with somebody who was even hornier than a nymphomaniac.

Because they'd need that word to describe her for the rest of her life.

BACK TO FUN ZONE

SUMMARY: One man meets a druid who changes his life for the better regardless of her gender alteration.

Amazing Grace

By Gunslinger

Under the newly-risen moon, the pastoral landscape had been transformed into a tapestry of quicksilver and blue, with the star-spangled heavens arching above. The soft burble of water from the river mingled with the soft sound of nocturnal life, and the cool November wind sighed through the autumn-gilded grasses and shrubs, whirling small pockets of fallen leaves across the gravel roadway.

Grant Douglas noticed none of this. Still panting slightly from the laborious job of hauling his pudgy body up the steel I-beams that formed the sides and top of the old-fashioned bridge, the dark-haired young man stared down at the rock-strewn shallows below. Though his dark eyes seemed focused on the boulders that churned the shallow water white and frothy, Grant didn't truly see the cascade, his mind turned inwards on itself, his pale, pudgy face still beneath the full beard and mustache he wore. If not for the chill autumn wind stirring the long, slightly greasy dark-brown hair that protruded from the back and side of his faded black ball-cap, Grant could have been turned to stone.

Finally, Grant sighed. With slow, almost painfully precise movements, the dark-haired young man unzipped his faded leather bomber jacket, pausing to take off his cheap digital watch before he removed the coat, so as not to further tear the already much-patched lining.

Laying the coat beside him on the I-beam, Grant then hiked up his legs and carefully untied and removed his worn hiking boots. Dusting them off, he lay them inside the coat, along with his cap, watch and wallet.

His jeans and the faded denim work-shirt he was wearing soon joined them, leaving Grant clad only in a white undershirt, gray boxer-briefs, and once-white socks, almost worn through at the heels and toes.

Shivering in the chill air, Grant closed the jacket and tied it shut with the sleeves, then dropped the bundle to the sidewalk of the bridge, ten feet below.

Then, before he could change his mind, Grant rose, took a deep breath - and hurtled himself off the bridge, closing his eyes as he leapt forward, arching so as to insure he hit head-first.

Braced for the brief blast of pain he expected before the welcome nothingness of death, Grant felt the wind move around him, rushing as he plummeted downward...

...and then the 'falling' sensation stopped. He could still feel the breeze moving across his body, as if he were standing still, and he could still hear the soft sounds of night. He wasn't dead...

"What in tarnation do you think you're trying to do?"

The voice, old and querulous, startled Grant into opening his eyes - and then he closed them again, shaking his head to clear it before opening them again.

It didn't help - he still saw the same thing.

He was hanging, upside down, about four feet above the shallow, rock-strewn water. Standing on the bank was the oldest-looking human being Grant had ever seen. Deeply tanned, the scrawny old man had a face like old leather, wrinkled and toughened by years - decades - of exposure to the elements. Though thin and bony, the old guy stood tall and proud, his sharp blue eyes alert and interested.

Long, snow-white hair curled down his back, matching his long beard. He was dressed in a... A cassock? Some sort of archaic-looking robe, either black or a very dark color that looked black in the dim light.

Stunned, Grant could only stared, eyes bulging, as the old man on the bank made a gesture with one hand - and the world 'rotated' around Grant, until he found himself hover upright, a foot or two above the water.

"Who.. who are you..." Grant managed to force out of a suddenly tight throat.

"My name's not important." The old man said, waving a hand. "I'm a Druid. Lived out here for the past hun'erd and fifty years - and I ain't never seen somebody trying to pull a stunt like this in all that time. What in the name of Gaia possessed you to try and kill yourself?"

The surprised look faded from Grant's face, to be replaced with a hurt look that felt all-too-familiar to the young man.

"Well, let's see..." Grant said, bitterly. "I'm a thirty-one-year-old virgin who's not only flat broke, but - thanks to a blood disorder I've had from birth - managed to get AIDS during a blood transfer to deal with that disorder. Hmm... now why would I want to kill myself?"

The old guy's snowy eye-brow rose. "I see. Well, cain't rightly say that's not a sad story, sure enough - but is it really worth dyin' over, boy?"

The 'boy' really rankled Grant - but considering that the old man was somehow holding Grant a foot or two above the ground - well, water - was enough to make Grant reconsider making a fuss about it.

Instead, he merely sighed again. "Yes and no - it's the knowledge that it isn't going to get any better that makes it worth dying over."

The self-proclaimed Druid looked thoughtful. "Yeah, I guess I can see that - still, part of my belief is in the sanctity of life. If I weren't here, it'd be different - but I can't just walk away now and let you finish killin' yerself. So - what if I was to cast a spell that would re-write history? I ain't sure how many changes to history I'd have to make to correct all those problems, but I'm sure I can do it."

Grant blinked at the old man. "Wait a second - are you saying you can fix my life?"

The old man laughed. "Oh, don't 'spect paradise, boy. Life don't work that way. All I'm offering is a different life, a different history in which you're a different person, with the different highs and lows of that life. Life's a gamble, boy - I'm just offering to deal you a new hand is all."

Grant stared at the old guy. Was this really happening? Or was Grant already dead, and all this was the afterlife? Or perhaps he was still hurtling towards the river, and this was all some delusion taking place in the final instant before he hit bottom...

Still - what did he have to lose...?

Well, since the answer to that question was 'nothing', Grant nodded. "Okay - go ahead. Change history for me."

"Sure - but le's jus' make sure you won't just wanna jump offa 'nother bridge. Tell me for sure what you need in your 'altered' life to make you happy. Jus' the important stuff, mind you - I cain't do everything, so just gimme the top items."

Grant closed his eyes, trembling, wondering if this impossible situation was real - and, if so, how much he dare hope.

Taking a deep breath, Grant began to speak in a rapid, tremulous voice. "Well - I'd have to be healthy. No blood disorders, no AIDS, nothing like that. I'll need at least some money, enough to get by on, at least for a while. I don't care whether or not I'm a virgin, 'now' - just as long as there's a damned near certainty that I won't be one for long." He paused, then decided to 'go for broke', so to speak. "Oh - and since I've 'lost' so many years of wasted life, I should be younger, too - say, about nineteen?"

The old guy nodded, thoughtfully. "Yup - I guess being broke an' a virgin is more embarassin' at thirty- one than it would be at nineteen. Okay, that's doable. Now, I don't know exactly what life you're gonna get, 'cause it don't work that way - but it'll have all those things you specified, so I trust you'll enjoy it. You'd better - 'cause I'm also throwin' into this new history that I ain't here right now, so I won't even 'member this." He grinned. "Since you don't know my name or where I live, you ain't gonna be able to keep comin' back and begging me for another life, until you hit a 'perfect' one. I won't 'member doing this, so I won't feel it's any of my problem to make sure you're happy, either."

"That's fine." Grant replied, honestly. After all - either his 'new' life was going to be better than this one was, or it wasn't - in which case, he could still kill himself, having 'bought' at least a few extra minutes of life - and having had a chance to feel the heart-pounding excitement that hope brought, something he hadn't felt in much too long. No matter how things turned out, he owed the old guy big- time for that, at least.

The old guy began to chant, loudly, waving his arms in complex patterns. The air around grant began to stir, whirling around him without touching him, as if he were in the eye of a hurricane.

Raising his voice, the old man lifted his arm, crackles of electricity jumping from finger to finger as he built to a rising crescendo...

...and then a bright flash of white light made Grant involuntarily slam his eyes shut, just as he felt a sudden acceleration...

...then darkness and silence reigned supreme - until the silence was broken by Grant's new body hitting the water, only a foot below.

The very, very cold water...

Grant was no Druid - but he must have had some magic of his own, as he levitated right out of the cold water, his 'incantation' a shrill scream as he hauled himself up onto the bank, shivering violently.

Thankfully, the water hadn't done much to his super-tight, mid-thigh-length black leather skirt. Likewise, his black leather, round-nose platform-pumps with eight inch heels were simply covered with rapidly beading water. The black nylons he was wearing were also fine - except for the fact that they did little to shield the slippery-smooth skin of his toned, sexy legs from the bite of the wind.

However, the same couldn't be said about his dark-blue, front-buttoning sweater with a 'sweetheart' neckline. It was sopping wet, weighing heavily on his slender shoulders and molded cold and tight over his enormous, basket-ball sized breasts. His enormous nipples were rock-solid, dinging into his sweater without a bra to get in the...

Right then, Grant's brain simply skidded to a stop. It refused to deal with the situation at all, simply going into 'recording mode'.

Right about then, a male voice came through the night. "Grace! Grace, where are you?"

Grant merely stared as the owner of the voice came out of the darkness, at a dead run. It turned out that the strong, warm baritone came from a tall, broad-shouldered young man dressed in jeans and a yellow-and-red 'Letter Jacket'. His long, sandy-blond hair blew back from his ruggedly handsome face as he rushed up and grabbed Grant's new arms gently but firmly.

"Grace - what happened?" The handsome young man asked, urgently. "You're soaking wet! Did you fall in the river?"

Grant merely stared at him, wordlessly. Holding Grant's new body gently, the young man shouted into the darkness.

"Hope! Hope, get down here! Your sister's hurt!"

"What!" A sweet contralto screamed - and it sounded oddly similar to the one Grant had used when 'levitating' out of the water. "Don't move, Doug - Rick and I will be down in a second with a flashlight!"

A second later, a cone of bright-yellow light flared to life just to the right, and at the top of the bank. In the back-wash of the flashlight's beam, Grant could see that it was a gravel driveway, with a boxy- looking vehicle sitting in it, too dark to make out the details.

A little further back from the river and further along was the edge of a log-style building. Still feeling stunned, Grant numbly realized that he had somehow been moved a couple of miles down-river, to a different location.

But, hey, what was simple teleportation compared to instant gender-reversal?

'I didn't specify being male as one of the important items.' Grant thought, rather surprised to find himself still fairly rational and lucid, even if he wasn't exactly himself...

That thought caused a sweet, cute little giggle to come from the body he was in, which made the young guy give a strange look. Grant realized this, and he clamped down on the thought...

No - no, she clamped down on the thought, brain getting back up to speed.

'Well, why not? After all, slightly more than half of the population is female...' Grant... Grace...?

...thought, logically. 'That, I can understand - but why are my tits so damned big...?'

Just then, the people with the flashlight arrived. One of them (Rick, Grant/Grace assumed, rightly) was a slender-yet-sinewy young man with dark, thick curls and a dark tan. Beside him was...

Grant/Grace stared. The young woman standing across from him looked 'familiar'. In fact, she looked a bit like Grant's mother. Grant's mom, though buxom, didn't boast the 'rack' this dark-haired nineteen year old did. Packed tight behind a blue button-front sweater, these tits were huge, as big as basketballs. As big as...

...as Grant's new tits. Or, apparently, as big as the tits 'Grace' had all along - just like her twin sister... Hope, wasn't it? Well, that made sense - Hope and Grace.

"What happened?" Hope asked, urgently. She and her twin sister were dressed identically, as well - it was like looking in a mirror for the new woman, able to see the same sexy, lush body, the same dark, thick hair - and, probably, even the same bright-red lipstick on the same incredibly full, sexy lips.

'But, how...?' Grace thought, numbly, barely hearing Doug's concern that she'd hit her head. The new woman's mind continued trying to understand all of this, her new body unresisting as they led her towards the cabin.

Then, suddenly, it all made sense - and it came back to her, in the form of a photograph and letter she'd seen as a young boy of twelve, when rummaging around in the old stuff in the attic.

The photo had showed a much younger version of his mother - perhaps eighteen or nineteen. With her, on her right, was her parents - Grandpa looking very stiff and formal, despite the obvious 'touristy' feeling to the photo. Next to him was Grandma - and it was a younger version of the same Grandma that had made Grant feel so damned guilty throughout puberty - after all, you weren't supposed to have fantasies about your Grandma!

This one, though, it was hard not to - not when she was so slender, so buxom, so damned sexy! In the photo, Grandma had been dressed in too-damned-tight faded-blue-denim clam-diggers, and a white 'peasant' blouse that showed way, way too much cleavage for a relative to have. Again, the young Grant had felt that illicit stirring, and damned himself for it.

The fact that Grant's own mother had definitely inherited those genes didn't help - and seeing his younger Mom in the photo, wearing skin-tight blue-jeans and a tattered jean jacket over a white bustier top didn't help.

Next to her, on her left, had been a man Grant had never seen before - and older man, dressed in a causal way that still bespoke a lot of money. Next to him were two older people, obviously his parents - and this man's mother had put even Grandma to shame in the 'bust' department.

With the photo had been a letter to a long-ago friend, never sent, in which Grant's younger mom had explained that she was breaking up with this 'Michael Frost'. Sure, maybe he was gentle and friendly. Sure, he might have gobs of cash, and was willing to use it to treat her like a queen. The problem was, what he wanted out of a marriage was her acting like his sex-starved little bimbo slut, twenty-four hours a day. This Frost guy wanted a buxom, sexy woman willing to act like a mindless sex toy for him, in return for which he'd leave her a bundle of money after his heart condition killed him of in the next ten or fifteen years.

With that memory, Grace understood that history had been altered so Mom had married Frost - which made sense, too, in a way. After all, Grant's blood disorder had come from Dad's side of the family...

So, Grant was now Grace Frost. Was 'Daddy' dead? Grace didn't know - but she realized that Mom had borne twin daughters rather than a son, and later too - but not too late that those daughters grew up, seeing their mother play the 'sex-starved bimbo' all day.

Yes - yes, that definitely explained a lot.

So, to sum up: 'Grace Frost' was a healthy, well-off, incredibly buxom nineteen-year-old woman who had grown up, along with her twin sister, Hope, in a household where the only 'role models' were the woman who acted like a mindless slut, and the man who had rewarded her for it, lavishly - which more-or-less ensured that Grace was no longer a virgin.

Everything Grant had asked for - if not in the way he'd expected. Still... was it really all that bad? Sure, it wasn't the ideal life - but since magic was no longer available, the choices were either accept this life and do with it what she could, or kill herself.

Her old life had been bad enough for her to accept the second choice - but she had just started this life. She didn't know if it was that bad or not - so, suicide was in reserve - which left her with trying to 'slip' into this life, and see if it was worth living.

She realized that as they unlocked the door to the cabin and got her inside, flipping on lights. For the first time since coming out of the water, her mind was fully up to speed with the new reality, and she was able to deal with it in 'real-time'.

Her first considered action as a woman was to half-moan a word: "Wha...?"

"Hey!" The handsome young man - Doug - said, urgently. Grace wondered if he was her boyfriend in this new life - and wondered which answer she should hope for. Doug shook her lightly, making sure he had her attention, his blue eyes boring into her dark ones. "What's your name?"

Grace feigned a confused look. "Huh? It's Grace, silly - Grace Frost. But what..." Doug held up a broad, strong hand. "Okay, Grace - do you know where you are?" Grace paused, then took a shot. "Sure - at my cabin."

"Oh, your cabin..." A voice identical to her new one said off to the side, with a giggle. "Yup, that's my older sister. She's fine, Doug... so you and Rick can go get the stuff outta the jeep now."

Doug rolled his eyes. "Yeah, sure. C'mon, Rick..."

The two young men headed out the door, which Hope closed firmly behind them - and then she hurried over to where Grace was desperately trying to look casual.

"God - I wish I'd thought of jumping in the river!" Hope said, breathlessly. I'm so nervous I feel like I'm on fire, and so horny I feel like I'm going to burst! A nice cold-water dip would be heavenly."

"Uh - yeah..." Grace said, lamely, wondering at the 'girlish' change in her sister.

"That's all you've got to say?" Hope asked, incredulously. "Daddy's bodyguards and PI's making damned sure no boy touches us, while Mom goes on hour after hour about how wonderful sex is with him, sitting on his lap and telling him how much she loves having sex with him? Now, not only is our birthday, and Daddy's not aloud to stop us anymore - but we get invited to the best party around, the one with all the guys we heard all those stories about! Don't tell me you're not excited!"

Grace stared, trying to absorb Hope's rapid-fire monologue. "I'm just... stunned, really." Grace finally managed, honestly. "I... I'm just having a hard time believing this is really happening."

"I know exactly what you mean!" Hope squealed, her tits bouncing delightfully as she jumped in nervous excitement.

'I doubt it...' Grace thought, stunned, watching the nineteen-year old with the body of a wet dream nervously smooth her dark sweater over her massive, round tits - and then nervously undid the top button with her blood-red nails, exposing more creamy cleavage.

The same nineteen-year-old wet-dream body Grace had - but Hope was acting like a sex-crazed, hormone-driven sixteen-year-old or something. No, that wasn't fair. Hope had mature intelligence and judgment - but it was all skewed by a very strange upbringing.

"Here - take yours." Hope said, anxiously, shaking a couple of small, dark-purple pills out of a plastic medication tube. She pinched one between her nails, and held the other out to Grace.

Grace stared - did she have some sort of medical condition she needed medication for? Something genetic? After all, Grace had only explicitly stated 'healthy' - and wasn't somebody who's medication stabilized the problem 'healthy'?

"Oh - don't you think one will be enough to do it?" Hope asked, having swallowed her own pill while Grace hesitated. Now, the huge-breasted young woman shook another two pills out of the tube. "There - that's a guarantee..."

Grace swallowed, not knowing what to do. Finally, she managed a faint, weak smile, and she took the pills and swallowed them. It seemed the least complicated way to handle the situation.

"Oh - here they are!" Hope said, visibly forcing herself to calm down after she heard her own high- pitched squeal. Outside, the lights that had flared were joined by the sound of car doors closing and engines dying as Hope visibly restrained herself. A second later, she was a sexy, calm young woman. "Come on, sis - let's go say 'hi'."

Numbly, Grace followed Hope's pertly swaying derriere towards the door - then, bemused, realized she was using the exact same sexy, wiggling stride Hope was using. Grace stopped dead, feeling a little light-headed and... foggy.

Hope stopped and looked back. "What are you doing?"

"I.. I don't think I..." Grace tried to explain, without being able to 'explain' - the truth was too unbelievable. Beside - it was getting strangely hard to think straight, her thoughts sort of drifting in and out. Her body felt strangely light, and she swore she could feel every single strand on her head.

"Look, sis - you know the deal." Hope said, in a cross between exasperation and sympathetic urgency. "Either that..." she jerked a thumb towards the door, "...or this."

'This' was a Walkman with headphones, and a little plastic vial, taken out of Hope's purse. Now, she held them up and shook them slightly, shrugging her shoulders.

Grace, mind desperately trying to keep up through the thick molasses that was gumming up the machinery. Gestured at the Walkman. "That."

Hope stared. "You're serious! You'd rather..." She stared, then sighed. "Fine."

Gripping Grace's slender wrist, Hope led the unresisting woman towards a bedroom. Grace's mind felt as if it were stuffed full of cotton, and she found herself wondering when her body had become just so damned sensitive?

"Okay - take these!" Hope said, urgently, having led Grace into a bedroom and sitting her on the edge of the bed. She was holding out a couple of blue capsules, with yellow bands on them. 'About the size of a vitamin capsule', Grace thought absently to herself as she took them and swallowed them, marveling at the way they felt as they slid down her throat. 'I wonder what they are ?'

Before it could occur to her to ask Hope, Grace found her sister pushing her back on the bed, laying her down as she put the Walkman beside her and began to slip on the headphones. Hope paused, looking down at Grace quizzically.

"When made this tape, it was just a joke - a 'worse case ' joke about what would be the alternative to breaking the promise we made - but, secretly, I was kinda glad we'd made it. I thought I'd be the one to back out "

Smiling faintly, Hope slipped the headphones over her twin's ears and the tape began to play...

* * * * *

Grace awoke feeling rested, alert, and wonderfully refreshed.

"Must have dozed off...!" She told herself, brightly, as she sat up in the dark room, absently removing the headphones - which, in any case, were doing nothing to block out the din of the party, the tape in the Walkman having ended some time ago.

"I guess I can be forgiven for it, though... Having been a man, almost committed suicide, then turned into a huge-breasted young woman can tire a girl out!" She giggled in the darkness. "Not that I could ever explain it to anybody else, of course - they'd think I was downright crazy!"

Humming softly to herself, Grace glided sensuously to the door and opened it with smooth, deliberately-sensual grace. Completely unaware of the sexy, swaying way she was moving, Grace continued humming the eerily haunting music as she swayed out into the hallway, her lips curled into a happy smile.

Softly smiling, she approached the open 'everything-room' of the cabin - and almost ran into a tall, long-haired blond, dressed in a sexy little denim number.

"Hi..." Grace said - and then she wrapped her arms around the handsome young man, and kissed him long and hard. She finally broke the kiss and smile happily into Doug's rather startled eyes.

"Uh.. hi..." Doug said, a little surprised by her greeting. She grinned at the confusion in his eyes.

"Ya wanna fool around?" She asked, happily - and Doug blinked twice. Giggling, she lead him back towards the bedroom she'd just vacated, humming happily to herself.

"You seem very, uh..." Doug said, then stumbled to a stop, not exactly sure how to end that sentence.

"Upbeat?" She asked, grinning. "Yeah - I had a chance to do some serious thinking, and I decided that things were more than just 'okay'."

"Uh... okay..." Doug said, obviously not understanding.

Turning on the light and closing the door, Grace led Doug to the bed, pushing him down to a seated position and sitting on his lap, grinning at him. Taking his hand gently, she looked into his eyes.

"Doug, would my having sex with you feel good for you?" She asked, sincerely. Doug blinked. "uh - I'd assume so "

"Would me having sex with you feel good for me?" She asked, sweetly - and Doug blushed. "Yeah - I think I can safely say it would." Doug said, nodding.

"Well then - why not?" Grace asked, happily - and she placed Doug's hand firmly on her breast.

It didn't take long from there - especially with her 'nudging' Doug along the way, first kissing him passionately while he rather hesitantly massaged her huge, firm breast through the damp fabric of her sweater - then with more eager attention as she stripped the sweater off, setting her huge tits free.

Moaning, she let her head loll back, enjoying the touch of his hands on her body...

...while thinking about what she'd heard while the blue pills she'd taken had cleared her mind from the 'anti-inhibition' drugs she and Hope had taken as 'extra insurance'.

It hadn't been enough for Grace, who hadn't even known what they were - so, instead, she'd listened to the 'last resort' tape...

...the tape that, apparently, her and Hope had made - or, at least, the 'historical' version of Grace had made it, back before Grant had 'leapt' into the time-line.

The tape talking about all their hopes and fears, the things they wanted to do with the money they also got on their nineteenth birthday. The jobs they wanted to have, the lives they wanted to live - and the things they wanted to do.

These weren't the hopes and dreams to two sex-crazed bimbos with minds skewed by a bad upbringing. No, the two girls who'd recorded the tape had known and understood that 'Mom' and 'Dad' were playing a game - but that mom was doing it mostly out of love.

Not love for Michael frost - love for her daughters. She was doing what was necessary to give her daughters everything she'd never had - to put them farther ahead than she, herself, had gotten. Their mother loved them - and that was why she'd been so careful to remain 'balanced' in her explanations of sex to her daughters, explaining that, though it wasn't as 'perfect' as she pretended it was for Michael, it was still pretty damned good - if you just let yourself enjoy it. That was Mom's secret, and it was the one discussed on the tape: there was no need to feel guilty about it if it felt good for everyone involved.

Well, Grace had embraced the idea whole-heartedly. Obviously, it had a different meaning for her than it would have had for Hope. For Hope, it would have been a 'guilt trip' - but for Grace, it was a reminder that this life held possibilities that her old life never had - if she could just learn to relax and enjoy them.

That was certainly what she had in mind as the last of her clothing was slipped off by Doug's strong- yet-trembling hands. Laying back on the bed, she smiled up at the handsome-and-nervous young man, letting her eyes trace his strong, muscular form with only the faintest hints of her old shame, ingrained in her from her days of manhood - but any idiot could see that she was no longer a man, and she didn't want to be a lesbian. Unlike her old, past life however, where she couldn't get any, now she was a woman, a sexy woman, and she'd only have to be a virgin if she let old, no-longer- applicable dictates bother her.

She was determined not to let that happen> She was a woman now, a wealthy, young, healthy woman, and she couldn't see living her new life celibate - so she smiled and spread her legs, her eyes becoming heavy-lidded and eager.

"I've never had a man before, Doug." She told him, honestly. "please - show me how good it can feel to be a woman."

It was an honest request - and Doug picked up the challenge. Smiling at her, he leaned forward easily, gently pressing his hard, throbbing cock against her wet, ready cunt - and then, slowly but firmly, he buried himself into her wet new womanhood.

She gasped at the incredible sensation of being filled - and fulfilled. It felt wonderful...!

It felt even better as he began to thrust, slowly and gently at first, but soon with more power and speed - and part of it was from her urging as she begged him to go harder and faster, finding all sorts of wonderful new sensations as the handsome, fit young man made gently passionate love to her.

She knew that this wasn't going to be a lasting relationship - but, as she squirmed under him, Grace didn't care. Not that she was going to be a slut or anything, but she was going to indulge herself now and then, like tonight - except tonight was extra-special, with everything new and exciting to her. She wanted to try everything at least once, see what it felt like - she couldn't know what she would and wouldn't enjoy in her new, feminine life until she tried it.

She knew one thing for sure - she was going to enjoy having sex as a woman every time she did it - it felt wonderful. Since she'd been a virgin as man, she didn't have a real frame of reference for the amount of pleasure - she just knew that it felt much, much more pleasurable than masturbating.

Much, much more pleasurable...

Screaming out her first orgasm, head whipping back and forth with the power of her first female orgasm, Grace thought to herself that she'd been right, after all, in defining the 'necessities' to the old Druid. Though she was sure she would have enjoyed life as a man under the same 'rules', and though she knew it would have been a less startling transformation, Grace couldn't say she was the least bit disappointed about her new life.

As the first of what she wanted to make sure were many orgasms faded away, Grace smiled up at her first lover, filing his face away for review in the years to come, holding a special place for her as her 'first'...

...and, half an hour later, after some more kissing, titty-fondling, and a few minuets of sucking and licking to get him all the way up, Doug was also her second...

...and, an hour later, her third...

When the two young lovers finally fell asleep in each other's arms, exhausted from plumbing the depth of sexual ecstasy, Grace was damned glad she'd dropped herself into the age-bracket when men were at their sexual peak...

THE END

BACK TO FUN ZONE

SUMMARY: Working the late shift in the University's Archeology department, one guy discovers an artifact that creates profound changes over him.

Amazonian Artifact

By Gunslinger

With a finicky precision made all the more outlandish by the surprising grace with which his pudgy hands moved, The Great White Whale lifted the folded white handkerchief to his broad, pale brow and deftly dabbed away the thin layer of sweat the beaded there. Despite the cool, dry air of the underground room - vault, to be more accurate - the motions as the rotund and abnormally pale young man finished drying his brow were almost habitual, a sure sign of an oft-repeated motion. Likewise, the very careful return of the neatly folded handkerchief to the breast pocket of his rumpled white linen suit also bespoke many repetitions.

As he heaved his bulk up from the stool upon which he'd been perched, twenty-nine year old George Washington Whatley presented an extremely odd sight. Not merely because he was a self-described '5-4-3' - five foot, four inches tall and tipping the scale at slightly over three hundred pounds - but because G.W. Whatley, a.k.a. 'The Great White Whale' was an albino African-American. White blonde hair and eyebrows complimented alabaster skin and pale, pink eyes... but his facial structure and features were almost stereotypically African, which left him looking all the stranger to eyes unaccustomed to seeing broad, flattened noses and almost exaggeratedly full lips in such pale hues.

His decidedly odd appearance was part of the reason why the Ph.D. candidate voluntarily worked in the catacombs - the carefully climate- controlled vaults deep beneath Southeastern Florida University's Archeology and Anthropology department. His sensitivity to temperature, which left him sweating even in these cool conditions, provided the rest of the explanation.

It also explained why he was cataloguing artifacts from the A & A department's Amazon dig at quarter after eight on a Friday night. After all, it wasn't as if there was anywhere else he could be that would be more comfortable for him, either physically or emotionally.

Turning his attention to one of the unopened crates sitting atop the long, scarred wooden surface of the worktable running down the center of the room, G. W. picked up a sheaf of papers on a clipboard, extracting the pen from its holder on the side. Carefully, he copied the numbers imprinted directly onto the metal band of the Customs seal, double-checking to ensure he'd written it down correctly. Only then did he pick up a pair of side-cutters and snip through the band with a swift, twisting motion the pulled his hand out of range of the sharp metal edges of the cut as the Customs seal gave way with a 'twang'.

Trading the wire cutters for a short, much-used pry-bar, G. W. worked the tool into the face of the crate lid facing him, applying an easy pressure.

When the lid began to rise, he moved six inches over and repeated the process, then continued in six-inch positions around all four sides of the lid, until he was able to easily lift the top of the crate free without ever having had to put undue pressure on the crate. Putting the lid aside, he reached into one pocket, emerging with a pair of very thin, white cotton gloves.

Carefully working them onto his pudgy, but dextrous hands, he once again picked up the clipboard, and then began the task of double-checking the listed manifest against the crated and tagged artifacts inside.

He was about a third of the way through inventorying the items against the Customs manifest when he discovered the anomaly.

"Hullo - what have we here...?" G. W. asked himself, sotto voce, as his gaze flicked back and forth between manifest and partially emptied crate.

No matter how many times he checked, however, 'one finely carved wooden box, approx. 20in x 10in x 5in, lacking mandatory artifact tag' didn't magically appear on the manifest - nor did the supposedly mandatory tag appear upon the box when he very carefully lifted it out of its padded niche in the crate.

"Maybe they tucked the tag inside the box...?" G. W. suggested to himself, despite the fact that this not only went against standard operating procedures, but should have been caught by either Export or Import sides of the Customs inspection.

Still, with nothing better occurring to him, G. W. grimaced and, after another second's worth of hesitation, very carefully began to open the tight-fitted lid of the hand-crafted wooden box.

A volunteer with many roles in the A & A Archives, G. W. was not a curator; what he was doing was more than merely 'technically' against the rules. If anything happened to an artifact, he would be both legally and financially liable for it - and in a world where the originating country was loaning said artifacts to the discovering university, such as what was happening here, there was even the very real risk of sparking an international incident.

The lid came free, and G. W. barely had time to identify the item nestled in the velvet-padded box as being a bronze statuette of a woman - of a much later and considerably different style than any of the other artifacts in the crate - before the statuette suddenly and inexplicably began to glow...

An instant later, the sound of ripping clothes intermingled with the sound of the wooden box hitting the table. The box... but no metallic clatter from the statuette, and the pulsing golden light continued to fill the room, originating at a point about five feet of the floor.

The golden glow continued to pulse as, a scant second later, a shocked, gasping sound gained power and intensity, briefly becoming a short scream. The scream, undeniably and unmistakably torn from a female throat, was nevertheless quite powerful, broad across registers high and low before being chopped off, to once again be replaced with rapid, panicked breathing.

Slowly, the glow began to fade - and the origin of the light also shifted, sinking slowly downwards, coming to rest on the work table a bare instant before the glow itself flickered and vanished, leaving behind only the cold, impersonal light of the overhead fluorescents.

Under that cool white glow, the sole inhabitant of the vault sat sprawled on the floor, gasping and shaking... and, aside from the tattered remnants of a white linen suit completely inadequate to the task of coving the figure within, bearing absolutely no resemblance to George Washington Whatley, The Great White Whale.

Still gasping slightly, the emphatically feminine figure rose with a leonine grace to her feet, revealing her height to be in excess of six feet - much of it seemingly coming from the long, incredibly toned legs.

Her entire body was equally as well toned, bordering on being downright muscular... but in a way that failed to detract one white from her undeniable femininity. Although broad of shoulder, she was equally broad of hip, and the practically tiny waist that lay between the two left her with an emphatic hourglass figure. Her buttocks, firmly rounded, were taut and out-thrust, a 'bubble-butt' that helped counterbalance her large and equally tautly firm breasts. In terms of actual mass, those breasts would have been gargantuan on any 'normal-sized' woman, but were not nearly so out of place on her statuesque body. In fact, either regarding her breasts on their own or as part of her look overall, the single most applicable word for nearly any aspect of the new woman was 'impressive'.

Her skin was a gorgeous, glowing shade of bronzed, and her hair was dark copper; her eyes were liquid gold.

Tall, toned, lithe and graceful, the woman who stared down at herself in shock, one hand lightly touching her crotch, the other cupping a full breasts, was a gorgeous example of athletically sensual femininity.

A virtual Amazon. No... a literal Amazon.

Part of that literal sense came from the way, entirely unconsciously, the new body moved at the still-male mind's command. G. W.'s mind commanded the body to dart to the table to grab the statuette - but it was the body itself that moved with feline grace, like a pouncing leopard. One strong, yet finely formed hand snatched up the small figurine, and part of G.W.'s mind noticed that the diminutive figure represented almost perfectly matched her new shape, right down to the shade of dark-patina bronze.

None of which kept that rich new female voice from begging desperately: "Change me back. Change me back!"

Clutching the statuette frantically, the new woman was swallowed in disappointment as the metal remained cool, enigmatic, and unresponsive in her hand.

Despite, in its own way, being almost as unusual looking as G.W.'s old body, in many ways this new figure was far superior: tall, awesomely fit, richly toned in shape and hue, exotically beautiful...

...but it wasn't the body G. W. was supposed to have - and, for all its advantages, one of the differences between it and her old form finally pulled G. W.'s mind back of whirling depression to the more immediately repercussions of the situation.

Namely, the fact that this new form didn't have the old one's idiosyncratic reaction to temperature.

In other words, this new body found the vault every bit as chilly as any barely-clothed person would be expected to - and, given her new physiology, two rather prominent portions of her feminine anatomy were responding in a very predictable way, by becoming even more prominent.

Feeling her large, dark nipples becoming erect under the effect of the cool air was a new and disturbing - if certainly not painful - experience for the new woman. Despite the size and firmness of her new breasts, they were 'natural', at least as far as that term could be applied to anything magically bestowed. It did mean, however, that her nipples were fully in keeping with the rather Brobdingnagian scale of her new mammaries.

Regardless of what she might choose to do regarding the inexplicable transformation she had undergone, it was a clear-cut case of 'first things first' - she needed to find something to wear.

Given a physique that could be described as 'a South American Jessica Rabbit who had decided to become an Olympic-caliber gymnast', that would have been task difficult to fulfill in a good-sized mall.

While the Catacombs housed many a strange and wondrous artifact, now including one capable of spontaneous and (physically) painless instant gender transformation, it was considerably understocked in the clothing department.

About all that a quick-but-thorough search turned up was a conscious realization in the new woman of the strange, unintentional feline grace with which she moved. Previously unnoticed in her shock over the transformation, the realization that she was almost literally prowling through the Catacombs came as a rather unpleasant shock to G. W. No matter how hard she tried, she simply couldn't get her form to move with anything but a sinuous and exotic grace... nor, once she had realized how she was moving, could she stop noticing the easy, powerful, and more than mildly sensual way her new figure moved. The rolling motion of her broad shoulders, setting her prodigious new bust to bouncing and swaying... The counterbalancing roll and swivel of her broad new hips... The rhythmic flexing of the muscles of her taut buttocks, firm thighs, shapely calves...

If not for the new complexion that hid the rising heat in her face, her blush would have stood out like a beacon as she her own awareness of her sensual new form's exotic movements provided a second 'good excuse' for her large nipples to be fully engorged.

Finally forced to admit that there was absolutely nothing at all in the Catacombs that could be used as even make-shift clothing, the new woman sighed and, after a few minutes hesitation, admitted to herself that she was going to either run a risk now, or simply wait in the chilly vault until somebody happened to come by, in which case she'd be seen naked either way.

Removing the tattered remnants of male clothing that merely hindered, rather than hid, her unwanted new form, G. W. retrieved her wallet and cell phone. She then walked back to the work table, and picked up the odd little statuette that had caused this all to begin with, not only intending to take with her, but hoping against hope that it would simply reverse what had been done to her.

When she picked it up, she felt the briefest flare of hope, as it began to sparkle and glow with a golden light - but almost immediately she was doomed to disappointment, for instead of changing her in any way, this new glow simply presaged a change to its own form. Seeming almost to melt, it writhed in a golden glow in her hand, then slipped up her arm before she could react, reforming itself into an intricately carved bracelet.

Perhaps 'bracer' would have been more accurate, given how much of her forearm it covered - and 'unbroken bracer' would have been even more accurate, for she could find no way to move the new ornamentation now that it had chosen to adorn her arm with itself.

"Couldn't you at least have turned into a metal bikini...?" She asked the metal bracer accusingly in her rich new female voice - but the enigmatic artifact gave no reply, and she sighed, steeling her nerve for what she was about to do.

Then, the strange in-built grace of her new form having more to do with it than steeled nerves, she walked straight-backed and smoothly out of the Catacombs, bare feet slapping against the cold concrete floor leading toward the broad steel-and-concrete staircase.

G. W. was rather desperately hoping that, at this time of the evening on a Friday, nobody would be using the utility corridors that connected most of the buildings on campus.

The reason funding had been pushed through for the corridors was not ease of maintenance, or any of the myriad other appreciated side effects of having the tunnels - they were actually there as storm shelters against hurricanes, largely paid for by FEMA grants. On extremely hot, muggy days, or during heavy rains, students would use them to go from one building to another, and the maintenance, mail, and other support surface staff would use them to transport loads on wheeled dollies that rode easily over the concrete floor. More often than not, however, the tunnels were practically deserted - which had always been one reason why G. W. had preferred to habitually use them, the other being his discomfort with variations in temperature.

Now, however, a gloriously gorgeous example of tall, athletic womanhood, she had all new reasons to hope she would not encounter anyone in the fairly dimly-lighted corridors, as she moved with a feline grace up one flight of stairs and into the tunnel that connected to the Performing Arts building.

If she could only get to the Property rooms behind and beneath the stage area, she was sure she could find something that would fit even her statuesque new figure...

Reaching the backstage area of the Performance Arts building without having run into anybody, G. W. let out a sigh of relief as she used one toned, dusky arm to push open a door leading into a costume storage area.

Helpless to permit one, last nervous glance up and down the still-deserted hallway, the new woman stepped through the doorway, letting the door swing shut behind her as she side-stepped around a large rack of feathered- and-sequined dresses...

...and found herself face-to-face with a rather understandably startled- looking young woman.

A rather blandly pretty brunette in a light-weight, earth-toned floral summer dress, the young woman's normal 'notable feature' was usually a nose that was slightly too large for her otherwise rather narrow face. At the moment, however, that slight imperfection was more than overshadowed by both how wide her dark eyes had gone, and how wide her mouth gaped in surprise as she stared at the very tall, toned, and emphatically nude female figure that had suddenly appeared with feline grace and silence in front of her.

"Who the hell are you? What are you doing here...?" The brunette demanded, stridently... and then an odd look came into her dark eyes.

"Why are you naked...?" She demanded - but considerably less stridently, a new tone entering her voice as her surprised expression faded, and she took a much longer, more inclusive look at G. W.'s body.

"...and, what's that incredible perfume you're wearing...?" the brunette continued, her voice now low and husky.

G. W.'s suddenly whirling mind tried to make sense of the question. Perfume? She wasn't wearing any perfume...!

No - it was the brunette who was wearing a powerful, delicious perfume. Something rich. Something exotic. Something... intoxicating.

Arousing.

Erotic.

"...and, most importantly " The brunette continued, her voice sounding both hungry and dreamy, " are you into girls?"

"Yes. Oh, very much, yes " G. W. heard herself reply in a throaty, dreamy chuckle.

"Oh, good " The brunette replied, her hands going to the buttons on her dress.

As they came together, neither of the naked young woman paid the slightest attention to the literal golden glow that enveloped them.

* * * * *

Sometime later, the two young women rather reluctantly uncoiled from one another, sweaty flesh slipping with sensual susurrations as their intertwined bodies moved apart atop the hastily constructed bed of clothing pulled with passionate fury from the nearby racks.

"Oh, my " The brunette sighed, dreamily, reaching for her dress. "Oh - I'm Deborah, by the way. Deborah Harriman but you can call me Debbie, if you like."

"Galatea Warchild" G. W. heard her new voice respond, and wondered dreamily why that particular name had rolled unbidden from her tongue... but that didn't seem at all important, not considering the other things that had recently rolled across her tongue. In a warm golden fog - metaphorically speaking, now - she watched as Debbie pulled the dress on... and noticed immediately that it didn't fit the way it had before she'd taken it off.

A lot more toned, shapely leg was revealed by the hem probably because of the extra height the woman had acquired during their lovemaking, mostly in her now proportionately longer legs. The waist of the dress was also considerably looser than it had been but the bust was considerably tighter, not all that surprising considering her noticeably larger, firmer breasts.

She hadn't changed nearly as radically as Galatea had, and nobody who knew her would have any trouble recognizing the altered woman... but they would undoubtedly be somewhat surprised by just how much sexier the now anything-but-bland brunette looked.

"Oh, wow..." Debbie commented, running her hands down her altered body. "I'm really going to drive the boys wild now, aren't I...?"

"Oh - are you into guys...?" Galatea asked, felling dreamily surprised.

"They have their uses, now and then... as long as they're properly respectful and servile, of course." Debbie sighed... and Galatea had the oddest feeling that Debbie hadn't felt that quite that way before they'd met.

For that matter, she felt fairly certain that Debbie would have objected to anybody calling her 'Debbie', before they met. However, their interaction seemed to have made more than just physical changes to the young woman... just as Galatea was unconcernedly aware of some shifts in her own way of thinking, although, thankfully, not where the general subject being uninterested to me was concerned.

"Here, Lady Galatea, I've found some clothes I think will fit you..." Debbie said, having been busy while Galatea was musing this over. "Not that they are really fitting for one such as yourself, my Goddess, but I'm afraid that it is the best I can do, for now..."

Her own dreaminess rapidly fading, Galatea felt strangely... confident. Almost Powerful, as she rose smoothly to her long legs and looked down into a Debbie's face, where dreaminess had also faded. In the brunette's case, however, it seemed to have faded into something very much like worship...

...and, despite some lingering concerns in the back of her mind, to Galatea, that seemed completely right and proper for some reason.

"Very well, my love - you may help me dress..." Galatea replied, feeling a bit guilt about how imperious she sounded... but only a bit. Then she was dressed, and the Amazon Princess let her newest subject lead her through the tunnels toward the sorority house where new recruits all unknowingly awaited...

THE END

SUMMARY: The tale of lust, depravity and perversion all on the talk show, The Terry Winger Show.

American Maid

By Gunslinger

The Opening Theme Music begins. AS the OTM continues to play, Harvey, on Camera 2, keeps his camera zoomed-in on the letters mounted on the back wall of the studio, long experience letting him keep the camera centered on the words 'The Terry Winger Show' until the music swells, at which point Harvey sweeps the camera across the chanting, clapping studio audience, to the center aisle separating the sections of the seating - or, more specifically, to Terry Winger himself. Terry is wearing a simple gray suit, his thinning blond hair carefully coifed, his poise confident and friendly. The high- intensity lights are picking tiny diamond pin-points of light from the silver rims of his glasses - bright highlights only a few degrees brighter than his trademark smile. He is holding a wireless microphone in one hand, and when the baleful eye of the camera focuses on him, Terry does what he loves to do best: He speaks.

TERRY

Hello, and welcome to the Terry Wringer show. Today, we have a very special treat for you, our viewers, and for the studio audience here in Chicago. It's a tale of lust, depravity and perversion - and we have it here for you today, only on the Terry Wringer show. Would you like to hear this sordid tale...?

The studio audience cheers - enthusiastically. Not all of which comes from the 'plants' in the audience, staff members hired solely to 'pump up' audience reactions. The truth is, such 'plants' were invaluable in the first two seasons, but since then the audience members have been able to provide enough enthusiasm on their own - they may not know what the show today is about, but they know Terry. The baby-faced MC smiles again, famous (or infamous) blue eyes sparkling under the hot studio lights.

TERRY

It would seem that you would. Well then, why don't we give a big Terry Wringer welcome to... Marian!

The studio audience begins to clap, as expected - and then a ripple of murmurs and comments run through the crowd, creating a sort of general 'Oooohh...!' sound that overcomes the clapping. This is not the least bit surprising - considering the woman who has just walked out of the door in the set and started walking - swaying, actually, with quite a bit of fore-and-aft jiggle thrown in - down to the comfortable chairs arranged on the stage.

If she's not five foot even, she can't be more than an inch more than that - excluding the heels, of course, since the slender black heels of her classic pumps lift her exactly five-and-three-quarter inches higher into the air. She moves with an easy grace atop those slender supports, the muscles of her long, smooth legs flexing sensually with each step - and it's easy to see, since the 'poofy' skirt she's wearing is not only barely long enough to cover her tiny white lace panties, but it's made of black nylon, the translucent material allowing a good view of those panties, clinging to the smooth swell of her full hips and sliding down to near invisibility within the cleavage of her full, round ass - the same ass that's moving with a provocative little sway as she reaches the chairs and, gracefully, sinks down into the nearest, crossing those long, milky legs of hers at the knee.

As cute as her dimpled knees are, however, that's not where Harvey (still on camera 2) decides to focus. Instead, he tightens the shot so that she's only visible from the waist up.

That waist is delightfully trim beneath the matching nylon top, enhanced rather than concealed by the handkerchief-sized wisp of an 'apron' - purely decorative, obviously, the tiny lace square matching the panties, the little maid's cap tucked into her thick, curly platinum tresses - and the fabric of the not- purely-decorative bra, the one that was straining mightily to contain the massive, round orbs of supple flesh that thrust roundly from her chest, riding high and proud, with the neckline of the barely-there top low enough to allow plenty of milky cleavage to push upwards and outwards.

Above that abundant cleavage is a long, slender column of a neck, the flesh as smooth and perfect as that covering every visible inch of her body - and, with her highly-modified Maid's uniform, that's most of it. Balanced atop that neck is a heart-shaped face, a smooth brow leading first to high, well-defined cheeks, and then down to a smoothly pointed chin.

Her eyes are big, blue, and framed by long, dark lashes that contrast with her fine eyebrows, their pale coloring making them nearly invisible, to give her that same sort of mysterious smile that brought the Mona Lisa fame - and smiling she was, her softly full red lips pursed into an bright smile that seemed to invite those watching to smile back at her.

Many of the men in the audience are smiling, but for different reasons. However, the smile on the face of your host and mine, the One and Only Terry Winger, is the same slick, smooth smile that had practically become a trademark for the talk-show host. He keeps that smile in place as he strolls casually down to the stage amidst a sudden eruption of sound from the audience - mainly appreciative shouts and comments from the male portion of the studio audience, along with a not-inconsiderable number of suggestions that he 'take it off...!' or, for the less socially adept, 'shake 'em, baby!' Reaching the stage, he strikes a pose familiar to his many viewers - one Italian leather loafer on the stage, the other on the studio floor, his body leaning forward over the upraised knee in a manner designed to foster a sense of intimacy with the guest. In a lower voice used for the same purpose, he greets his guest, a woman who Harvey (the guy on camera two, remember?) would have undoubtedly referred to as a 'a real smoking bitch' :

TERRY

Welcome to the show, Marian - and thank you for agreeing to speak with us today.

MARIAN

(With a giggle)

Oh - It wouldn't matter if I agreed or not. Master told me to come... so to speak.

Terry raises one bushy eyebrow theatrically, as if he has no idea what she's talking about - as if he wasn't completely and utterly prepped on every guest, to avoid looking the fool when talking to them. With a well-feigned tone of surprise, he asks the question on his audience's mind:

TERRY

'Master'? You have a... a Master? As in, 'a person you must obey'?

MARIAN

(With another giggle)

That's right, Terry. I'd tell you what his name is, but I'm only allowed to call him 'Master'. He's the man who decides what I do. Without him, I just sit, perfectly still, in my closet - until the next time my Master wants or needs anything from me.

(Another giggle)

It used to be mostly sex, but since he's gotten bored with me, I attend mostly to standard maid's duties, except for when he hosts an orgy.

Terry pauses to give the audience - or, rather, Camera 2 (operated by your friend and mine, Harvey) - an incredulous look that's wholly spurious.

TERRY

You're some sort of... of sex slave? Forced to obey every whim of a man who makes you live in a closet? How, exactly, does a nice young woman like yourself end up in a situation like this?

The audience collectively leans forward, eager to hear details - not knowing what Terry knows about his guest, and so unable to recognize the 'loaded' nature of that particular question. Perhaps an intelligent, observant individual might have got an extra second's warning by the downcast eyes and slight pout of those delicious lips, instead of the usual giggle - but few of Terry's audience could be describes as either intelligent or observant, much less both. Her answer comes as a shock to nearly everybody - except, of course, Terry.

MARIAN

Actually... I'm not really a woman. I mean, I guess I am, now, but I was born as a... as a man.

The audience gasps in shock and amazement - as does Terry, though his is merely well-feigned. He, after all, knows more than he's telling. He takes a long, slow look at the guest sitting in front of him, the movement looking slightly exaggerated to the live audience, but apparently naturally to the much larger viewing audience. With apparent sympathy in his carefully modulated voice, he asks the trademark question:

TERRY

Well - why don't you tell us all about it?

Marian immediately perks up - and that causes a definite audience reaction, as her bright smile comes with a sharp-yet-graceful movement to seat herself straighter in the chair, causing that phenomenal chest of hers to jiggle in a way that could only be described as 'enticing' - and Camera two gets a perfect shot of it. (Harvey's experience in gauging guests in action - he's not the show's longest-running camera operator for nothing.)

MARIAN

Oh, sure - that's what Master told me to do, and he said I could have a really, really good orgasm after I did. You see, I can only reach orgasm when he says I can.

(A slight pout, followed by a giggle.)

Well, Terry, I guess I'd better start at the beginning. Like I said, I used to be a man, and no - unlike John Wayne, 'Marian' isn't my real name. Master told me to never tell anyone what name I had when I was a guy, so I can't tell you who I was, before, but it wasn't Marian - he gave me that name when he changed me into his perfect little sex-toy. 'Maid Marian' - you know, like in Robin Hood? Anyway, that's getting a little bit ahead of the story, so why don't I back up and fill you all in.

It all started about a year ago. That's when I first met my Master - though I didn't call him that at the time, of course. To tell the truth, I was a cable technician, and as far as I was concerned, it was just another service call. Little did I know that he'd rigged the cable outlet so it was a conductor for one of those 'stun-gun' zapper things. I went to hook up his coax - and, instead, got about ten thousand volts pumped through my body. As you can imagine, that didn't exactly leave me in a position to provide much of a struggle when he dragged me down to the operating room he'd set up in the basement.

You see, my Master studied all sorts of things, including various branches of medicine. He'd been planning his new empire for years, and he'd been getting ready in secret. I was just unlucky enough to be the person on-call when he was finally ready to begin.

Like I said, I was just a cable installer, so a lot of what he did is a mystery to me, even though he explained what he was doing every step of the way - to increase the humiliation, you know.

Marian shudders slightly, a grimace crossing her surgically perfect face - and the unfamiliar expression pulls certain muscles taut in certain patterns, patterns that reveal that parts of her skin are tighter than others, a result of the extremely extensive work that has been done on her fair visage.

Terry nods, making a sort of 'go on...' gesture with his hand as he murmurs something to her, unheard by the microphone he carries limply in one hand. Once more, the full-breasted woman's features smooth, and she picks up where she left off:

MARIAN

Anyway, it took months and months of intensive work on my body to get me to look like this - hormone treatments, plastic surgery, liposuction, breast implants, and a whole raft of other things I can't even remember the name of. That was just to get my body the way he wanted it. At the same time, he was also doing other work, work much more.. delicate, I guess. He was also brain-washing me, you see, making me over into his perfect little fuck-toy - without shattering my mind completely. He didn't want a brainless bimbo, but somebody intelligent enough to carry out even the most complicated tasks.

Not to mention, me being technically 'sane' and rational meant that the 'real' me, the male mind-set trapped within this lush new body, would be experiencing.. the worst.. humil.. hum.. humiliations possible...

She breaks off, obviously having difficulty - which, considering her incredible story, isn't surprising. This supple, huge-breasted woman on the stage is really a man, surgically remade into a woman, and being forced to do this interview for the same reason she was allowed to retain her original persona - for the sake of pure humiliation.

Harvey (Operator of the second camera from the right) gets it all, including Terry's expression of sympathy - and, for once, it's not feigned. The talk-show host actually feels something for this person he's interviewing, and the sight of her pain hurts him...

...but not enough for him to forget who he is, of course - and, more importantly, what he does.

TERRY

I realize this must be very hard for you, Marian - but, surely, being allowed - ordered - to tell your story must mean that your ordeal will soon be over. Surely, now that people know what has been done to you, the authorities will put a stop to it and arrest...

Marian's eyes fly wide open, and she begins to jerk in her chair, making small sounds of pain.

MARIAN

No...! No, they.. they can't! If.. If I'm taken away from my Master, I.. I'll spend the rest of my life in agony.. and I.. I'm not allowed to.. to...

Marian struggles to regain control of herself, obviously terrified at whatever fate her Master has 'programmed' her to experience, should he be removed from her life. Terry, of course, gives her the time she needs to be able to continue her story - which she does, once again apparently serene and mildly amused, complete with the giggles - all of which the audience, for the most part, realizes is an enforced personality that she must play out to the best of her ability.

MARIAN

Anyway, it wasn't just the new 'rules' he brainwashed me with, or even just the new personality he wanted me to have - he also used all sorts of techniques to ensure that I'd be incredibly skilled, sexually. I learned everything I needed to know to be the perfect sexual partner, at least as far as my Master was concerned. Whether or not I enjoyed any of it wasn't even a consideration, of course - or, I guess it was, in a way, since he didn't alter my sexual preferences in any way, so that everything I did would be utterly humiliating to me, even if I couldn't show it.

Marian pauses, her long-nailed hands coming up to lightly - teasingly - caress the sheer fabric barely covering her enormous endowments.

MARIAN

Would this be a good point to tell you that I've been ordered to demonstrate some of my sexual talents? One of the things I'm supposed to do it suck a man's cock, right here on national television, uncensored and live - or I'll go into incredibly painful convulsions that'll get steadily worse until I either obey my instructions, or die.

The audience gasps and fall momentary silent. The expression on Terry's face is - amazingly - completely unfeigned, one of horrified desire, of conflicting ideals and desires in mingled sympathy.

TERRY

Well... I... That is...

The talk-show host clears his throat, and tries again:

TERRY

Well, we certainly don't want to be responsible for your death. I'm sure the network will understand what we're about to do...

The audience goes crazy, a raft of the male population quite vocally offering themselves up to be her 'partner' for the demonstration she just has to make - but Terry ignores them, this time choosing his own humanity over showmanship -and his own desires - and he asks the enormously-endowed woman the most self-sacrificing question he's ever made on the show:

TERRY

Why don't you choose who you'd like to demonstrate your technique on...?

Marian blinks, obviously surprised - and then she does something that she hasn't done since her own personal nightmare began: She smiles.

Not the vapid, sexy little smile that's practically a permanent fixture on her new features. No, this is a warm, grateful smile, completely voluntarily and heart-felt. She looks at Terry for a long moment, her eyes conveying everything she needs to say - and then she slowly lets her gaze sweep across the audience, looking for something she's not had in along time - a good sexual partner, even if it's for something as 'demeaning' as a blow-job - though, truth be told, she's long past that stage, all the things she's been forced to do by her Master having dulled the edge off of her emotions so much that simple blow-job is actually a relief. In fact, she's actually come to enjoy the physical sensations, now that most of the initial disgust and horror have been worn away by the sheer number of times she's repeated the act she's about to perform. So, it's with an actual eager glint in her eye that she surveys the broad range of available partners - and finally lifts one hand to point a gloss-pink nail at a man.

MARIAN

Him. The cute cameraman - if he doesn't mind...

She's pointing to the ubiquitous Harvey. (See? There was a reason to keep pointing him out...) Harvey, of course, doesn't mind - in fact, the viewing audience is monetarily treated to a shot of the studio ceiling as he abandons his post, ripping off his headphones and letting the camera swing upwards as he hurries towards the stage, his toned legs moving him quickly. Though an older man, Harvey keeps himself in top shape - and, since the studio lighting is so damned hot, he's dressed in pretty standard camera-man clothing, namely a pair of shorts and a T-shirt that reveal his lean, trim body.

Either the thought that his wife religiously watches the Terry Wringer show hasn't crossed Harvey's mind - or, more likely, he just doesn't care. Edith (Wife of the ever-popular Harvey) was the high- school 'Miss Popular', and she's stayed in fairly good shape over the years - but even in her heyday, her figure was nothing like Marian's, and it just so happens that Harvey likes women with a full bust - or, as he's been known to refer to them, "Big honkin' hooters'.

The guy on Camera one picks up the action as Harvey practically hurdles his boss, reaching Marian in record time - and she's now standing, slowly and sensuously licking her softy full lips.

Considering that a few hundred thousand people know exactly what's going on at this pointy - and, more importantly, what's about to be 'going on' - speech seems rather unnecessary. In fact, Marian says all that needs to be said by simply flicking an unobtrusive clasp on her right shoulder - the clasp that the outfit she's almost wearing has been designed around.

Despite appearances, the outfit isn't made up of several different garments, but by one, ingeniously contrived - and with that simply flick of one long nail on a simple clasp, the entire outfit slides to the floor, leaving her dressed only in heels and the little cap- and the glory of her forcibly-inflicted body, lush and almost unrealistically perfect in coloration and tone. Her breasts, being implants, are as artificially round and firm as you could expect - but Harvey certainly doesn't seem to mind their artificial nature, as he eagerly reaches out and begins to fondle and squeeze her breasts, hands trembling with eager desire as he caresses her magnificent mounds, the fact that she was once a man apparently not a factor as far as he's concerned, judging from the bulge in his crotch.

Marian moans - which isn't surprising, since she'd thoroughly enjoying Harvey's touch. After all, she's spent the past few months as a humiliated sex-toy, forced to undergo steadily more degrading and painful ministrations as her Master got steadily more bored with the 'simple' stuff. In fact, this is the best she can remember feeling in a long time... and she's beginning to realize something:

She's being rewarded. For 'long and faithful service', in an odd way - now that her Master is tired of her, he doesn't care if she's humiliated and tortured. In fact, he's completely indifferent to her fate, now - the show is 'one last fling', so that the world will know Marian's true origins. Once she's completed what she's been ordered to do, she'll be free to live whatever life she can find - though she doesn't know this yet, since she's been told to 'forget' that command, until it's all over. Her unnamed soon-to-be-ex-Master doesn't want her slipping the mental leash he's given her, not until she's done her last few tasks.

Still, Marian has no complaints at the moment, everything else subsumed in the fact that she's actually enjoying what's going on and so, she's almost hesitant to step back slightly, breaking the rather obsessed man's touch on her massive mounds. Still, she has to do it - she's feeling the first, faint tremors and aches that presage an all-out 'disobedience' attack, so she needs to get right on with it.

She does. Quickly, eagerly and skillfully, she slides down to her cutely dimpled knees, a genuine smile once more wreathing her face as his throbbing crotch slides into eye-level view. With eager fingers, the transformed male reaches out and yanks the cameraman's pants and underwear down, setting his cock free, to jut proudly from his crotch, exposed on national TV...

...but not for long. At least, not all of it - since Marian opens her mouth and, with a soft sigh of genuine pleasure - takes his cock into her warm, wet, and for the first time in ages, willing, mouth.

Many of the men in the audience were 'porn addicts', having seen anywhere from dozens to hundreds of porn movies - and they'd all later agree that Marion had the style of a pro, mixed with the grace and eagerness of somebody who was truly enjoying what she was doing.

Harvey didn't exactly seem upset with her technique, either. In fact, he was moaning and gasping as she sucked lightly, head bobbing and hands working his now-spittle-slicked shaft. She paused several times to actually remove his cock from his mouth - so that she could lick it.

Kiss it.

Work her tongue and lips up and down it's throbbing length...

...and even lightly nuzzle and suck on his hair scrotum, though it's because of her implanted skills rather than for her own enjoyment.

One that rather unpleasant necessity had been taken care of, however, she's free to cram as much of his cock as she can back into her eager mouth - and she can take a lot.

In fact, she now picks up speed and deep-throats him, her face burying itself firmly into his lower abdomen as she works him closer and closer to spectacular orgasm...

...and when it comes, she had her head pulled back, only the throbbing, nearly purple head of his cock between her full lips, so that she can fully enjoy the flood of hot, salty cum that rushes over her tongue and down her willing, eager throat.

Marian, a huge-breasted woman who'd once been a male cable contractor, feels utterly, supremely happy over the fact that she's just given the man of her choice a blow-job. The taste, the sensation, the emotional connotations of this act are now pleasurable to her, since they are contrasted to all the dirty, nasty, painfully disgusting things she's been forced to do over the past few months - details that will have to wait for one of the twenty-seven other episodes of the Terry Winger show she'll be featured on over the next three years. Even though she could now speak, having licked Harvey's cock clean and thanked him - profusely and honestly - for letting her suck his 'sweet, wonderful' cock, she has no desire to continue on with her little expose of her life.

In fact, as will come to be standard whenever she appears on the show, she's now much more interested in her own gratification, having rediscovered that sex can be pleasurable, even without the orgasm to 'top it off' with...

...and the reason that she's invited back to so many shows comes when she rises from the floor, now barely aware of Harvey's presence as her mind shifts into a higher gear, focused on her next programmed task.

She licks the last sweet drops of cum off her lips... as she slowly approaches Terry, who is still standing in the same place, having watched the entire oral display with wide-eyed amazement. Incredibly, his eyes open even wider as she sensuously walks - practically dances - over to where he's standing, her desires and intentions obvious in every move she makes.

She wants to fuck his brains out...

Terry Wringer actually drops the microphone he's holding. His hand simply goes limp, and the world- famous mike drops to the ground - as the huge-breasted woman reaches out and traces her long- nailed hands over the jacket he's wearing, her body thrumming with desires...

...and something else. Something she hasn't felt in an even longer time: Control.

Her Master's not here, and even though she's still obeying his last commands to her, here she controls what happens - and that means that she's enjoying the thought of what she's about to do before the act itself, and the fact that she won't be able to reach orgasm until the end of the show doesn't bother her a bit.

Which is fine - especially since she doesn't realize that the orgasms she's been denied are still possible, and in fact a damned-near certainty, now - since many of the restrictions have been released on her, though she's been ordered to consciously forget the instructions.

So, when she begins ripping Terry's clothes off (with no little help from the man himself), she'd eagerly anticipating the fact that she's about to control a sexual encounter, and completely unaware of what's waiting for her.

MARIAN

Fuck me, Terry. Throw me down on that couch over there and slam that cock of yours into my hot, wet cunt...

TERRY

(Incomprehensible groan, indicating agreement...)

Terry, now naked except for his shoes, glasses, and a pair of hot-pink silk boxer shorts that are going to earn him a lot of ribbing in the near future, does exactly what she tells him to do - which is damned near enough for the mental equivalent of an orgasm, Marian supremely happy as the talk-show host lifts her in his arms by cupping her full ass and lifting, her huge breasts crammed forcefully - and pleasurable - into his face as he blindly staggers over to the supposedly decorative couch along one wall of the set. It's dark green, sort of small, and has a slightly musty smell to it - but neither Terry nor Marian seem to care as they tumble onto it.

There's a momentary moment of awkwardness as Terry tries to remove his boxers without removing any part of his body from any part of hers - but they finally manage...

...and Marian and the audience, both at home and in the studio, are amazed at the length and girth of Terry's cock. Who knew that the long-winded old fart boasted such an endowment...?

Like Harvey, Terry didn't have long to display his pride and joy - as it was soon buried deep into Marian's artificially-produced-yet-highly-realistic cunt.

His technique would leave a lot to be desired - but he's actually trying to give as much pleasure as he's getting, and no matter how inept a lover he might be, Terry was more considerate than any Marian had ever experienced. She's now making sounds of pleasure as he fucks her hard, pleasure from the way he's riding her...

...and then, startled, she begins making louder, more intense sounds of physical pleasure. She's feeling... fantastic. In fact - she's feeling...

...feeling...

...feeling...

Terry, unaware of the look of shocked, amazed pleasure on her face, is pounding away for all he's worth - and it does the trick:

Orgasm!

She screams:

MARIAN

OH, GOD - YES! Don't Stop, baby, make mamma cum again....

Terry Winger, talk-show host extraordinaire, was famous all over the United States, and even abroad, for his abilities and talents as a host. At forty-one, he's no longer a rangy youth, but he's at the peak of his career...

...and, even as he chums, he reaches the peak of his fame - for, old or not, inept lover or not, his surpassingly large cock reveals another skill of his as he does exactly what she commands - which only makes the second orgasm, hard on the heels of the first, all the more spectacular...

...and drains Terry in more ways than one, leaving him limp as he rolls off the couch, onto the floor, and gently begins to snore.

Marian, a stunned look on her face, stars down at the limp figure of the talk show host, then slowly rises to her feet, angling sensuously over to where his mike lays. She picks it up, then slowly looks over the studio audience.

She grins.

MARIAN

Hello, and Welcome to the Maid Marian show. Today, our topic is: Orgies: Fun Fantasies for the Masses...

Then, with a giggle, she tosses the microphone aside and literally dives into the audience....

The Terry Winger Show topped all the ratings for that week...

THE END

BACK TO FUN ZONE

SUMMARY: With a temper constantly out of control, one man bumps into a Leprechaun who grants him three wishes; he wishes to have a more calm personality, little does he know that he has no control over the results.

Anger Management

By Gunslinger

Shivering, the young lady looked out at the rain lashing the street, the low, scudding clouds providing a gray twilight that matched the cold rain and cool wind. Pulling her coat tighter around her body, she popped open her umbrella and started to dash from the shelter of the doorway to her car...

..and almost slammed into the man stalking down the sidewalk, his hands balled into fists and his face a mask of rage.

She uttered a strangled scream and drew back from the man, her eyes wide in fright. Her heart seemed to pause in it's rhythm at the sight of the tall, heavily muscled man, whose medium-brown hair was now dark and plastered to his low, threatening forehead from the rain that soaked him and the T-shirt and jeans that covered his body - the wet fabric now clinging even more to the curves and slabs of his broad, muscular frame.

Even more frightening than his mere appearance, however, was the fact that he seemed to be in an insane rage - his face twisted in anger, his dark eyes narrowed and practically glowing with rage.

Though barely a whisper, his deep voice rumbled and growled as he bit off curses and insults, his square jaw working as if he were chewing on the words rather than speaking them.

Then...

...he was stalking past her, his boots slamming heavily against the concrete. In that frozen instant in time, she'd thought she was about to be raped, assaulted, murdered - or worse. It took a second for her brain to catch up to the adrenaline that had been dumped into her system, allowing her to realize that her heart hadn't stopped, but that time had, - for an instant - seemed to slow, creating the illusion that her heart had stopped...

...and the illusion that he'd so much as slowed when they'd collided. Now, she realized that he hadn't even looked at her - it was as if he was completely unaware that she even existed as he continued his way down the street, trailing grumbled curses behind him.

Shaking her head, the woman unlocked the door to her car, shooting occasional glances at the man's receding back.

"God - I gotta get outta this town." She said aloud as she slid behind the wheel and brought the car to life. Putting it into gear, she pulled away, the taillights quickly disappearing into the cold waterfall of rain.

* * * * *

Dave hadn't noticed his collision with the woman, other than on a purely physical level as his body had adjusted itself to maintain it's balance.

His mind was too busy to notice such 'minor' incidents. Though he walked through a cold spring rain, his body soaked to the bone, he didn't notice the cold, either - he was kept warm by the red blanket of rage that consumed him, his anger and hate consuming him and burning with a heat that drove physical discomfort from his perceptions.

David Lambert was royally, intensely, powerfully pissed off....

...at the fact that he was royally, intensely, powerfully pissed off.

"What the fuck is my major malfunction?" He growled at himself, slamming a fist against the taut muscles of his thigh without feeling it. "What the hell is wrong with me, anyway? I knew that it was no big fuckin' deal - so why the fuck did I just... explode?"

Dave had just been fired from his latest job, for 'blowing up' at a customer. Sure, the customer had been a bit of an asshole, whiny and annoying - but that was no reason to have gone off the deep end. Even Dave knew that, both now and at the time he'd done it - yet, he just couldn't stop himself from doing it.

It wasn't as if this was an isolated incident - he'd been through more jobs than a sheik had cars. All of them had ended, one way or another, after his temper had given out and he'd blown his lid.

He'd had really, really high hopes for this job, though - he'd just finished a voluntary Anger Management seminar. He thought he'd had himself under control, thought he'd finally managed to rein in the raging temper that he couldn't control - then, a week into a 'so-far-so-good' job, he'd run into that whiny little man with the annoying Brooklyn accent..

...and that had been the end of his hopes. Now, as he stalked down the sidewalks with no particular destination in mind, he was trying to cope with the fact that, rather than disappointment, all he could feel about it was self-directed rage - which only made the anger that much worse, and that led to more anger at his problem...

It was a vicious cycle, and he was so consumed with his own self-hatred and -anger that it would take a major even to snap him out of it.

It was just about then that the heavens seemed to explode.

It was as if a thousand flash-bulbs went off in the same instant, tuning the world glaring blue-white as a bolt of lightning slammed down from the low clouds into the tall oak tree in the park a hundred or so feet away from where he stood - followed an instant later by the back-flash, a thousand times more powerful, as the connection was made and the electricity surged back into the sky, matched by the tremendous thunderclap that seemed to beat past Dave's eardrums and directly into the hearing center of his brain.

In one frozen instant, as if his brain had taken a snapshot of the lightning strike, he saw the lightening cleave the hundred-year-old tree in half, splinters and sparks flying as flames burst to weak, spluttering life on the wet wood. He saw the tree start to topple...

...and saw the child on the ground, in the path of the left half of the tree's fall.

Before he was even aware of it, Dave was moving. Anger, even thought itself, had vanished as he responded to a much older - and stronger - imperative buried in his brain. The massive, thick muscles of his legs now gave up every ounce of energy in their sinew and fiber as he bolted forward, air rushing in and out of his lungs as his vision seemed to narrow to nothing but the small, green-clad figure that was just starting to move - too slowly.

Then Dave was there, his broad hands outstretched - and he grabbed a fistful of cloth with it's struggling cargo inside and pushed off with his legs, throwing himself forward. He pulled his precious burden to his chest to protect it as he tucked-and-rolled out of the way as the tree slammed into the ground behind him, branches slapping painfully - but harmlessly - across his back as he rolled away from the point of impact.

"Geez - are you okay...?" Dave gasped as he uncurled... "Just fine, me boyo - thanks in most to yerself, I might add."

Pulling himself to his feet, the four-foot-nothing tall man brushed at the bits of foliage clinging to his green claw-hammer coat and faded beige-and-brown weskit, then performed a deep bow before the stunned and gaping Dave, his bright red beard and mustache parting to reveal an engaging grin.

"'Tis not often that wee folk find ourselves indebted to the likes of you, me lad." The tiny man continued in the same cheerful, Irish-accented voice as he straightened. "Indeed, 'tis more likely that we be tryin' to avoid ye altogether, if ye take my drift."

"You... you're... a..." Dave stammered, eyes bulging as his brain tried to make sense of what it was seeing - without actually acknowledging what it was seeing.

"A leprechaun - aye, that's right me boyo." The man said, cheerfully. "Seamus O'Branaggh, at yer service." He grabbed hold of three of Dave's fingers - the most his diminutive hand could encompass - and shook the stunned man's limp hand. "An' I do mean 'at yer service', me boyo - fer I owe you my life, and I'll not be shirkin' my debt, past troubles or no. Ye did me a good turn, and I'll repay you for that, on the name of Cú Chulainn himself, I will."

Mustering up all his scattering wits, Dave asked the most intelligent, penetrating, philosophically-rife question he could come up with:

"Huh?"

The little red-haired man smiled at Dave beatifically. "Me lad - I'm goin' to grant ye three wishes. Anything at all that yer little heart might be desiring - fame, fortune, or the proverbial luck o' the Irish. What will it be me boyo? And, to make this all formal by the lights of the Council of Elders, I give ye m'word in the formal manner..."

Drawing himself up, Seamus' assumed a very solemn expression, and when he spoke it was in the tone of one reciting a ritualistic phrase or oath.

"By the oath of the Elders,

I repay the debt owed by me.

The first three wishes uttered by you, I give my oath to grant unto thee."

Dave was gaping at the nattily-clad, four-foot tall figure, a look of disbelief on his face, his brain spinning in neutral as it tried to deal with something that was manifestly 'impossible'.

Which was why his brain wasn't quite up to the task of thinking everything through logically. If he'd been presented this offer in his 'right mind', he might have taken the time to think them through carefully, to come up with the three most 'perfect' wishes he could...

...or, then again, maybe he wouldn't have. Dave was many things - but 'a rocket scientist' wasn't one of them.

In any case, there is no way of telling what might have happened, in other circumstances. What did happen, was that Dave blurted out the first thing that occurred to him, the very thought that had been floating around in the back of his head for the past few hours.

"I wish I would never get angry or upset again!" Dave blurted, without thinking. Seamus winced. With that same, formal tone, the leprechaun spoke.

"You have spoken wish number one, I swear it be granted, consider it done!" Then, dropping the formal tone, he spoke in a more 'brotherly' voice.

"Me lad, I'm sworn to grant ye the wishes as ye speak them. By the laws of the Council, I must - and, if ye'd merely caught me, I'd do it with glee. But I do this without malice, and I beg of ye, boy - choose yer words with circumspect caution. We Little Folk are bound by ancient laws that... do not favor the mortals."

"Uh... huh?" Dave said, mind still trying to cope with the situation.

"Ye might have wished to be able to control your anger." Seamus said. "But... didn't I?" Dave said, confused.

"Nay, lad - ye wished to never get angry or upset again, and that's considerably different, me lad. Though I hold the power to grant the wishes unto ye, it is not I who holds the actual means of the granting. When I grant the wishes, they are on behalf of the Council of Elders."

"But... I thought..." Dave's brow was furrowed in confusion.

"Aye - mortals have trouble graspin' the obvious, sometimes." Seamus sighed, rolling his eyes. "If ye be a barrister... lawyer, as ye say.. ye would understand. Tis' like when the Pope (curse his Catholic hide) makes a declaration, he is supposedly 'speaking for God'. Likewise, when I gift ye with three wishes, I am calling on the power of the Council for the actual grantin' of them, as no single being, fey or otherwise, could be entrusted with such unlimited power. Ye must be careful, and leave no lee-way for the... 'play' of the council, as they have no love lost for mortals of any stripe."

Dave blinked. "You mean... you're giving me wishes that are dangerous?"

Seamus sighed. "Aye - just as fire can warm and cook for ye - but, if misused, can harm ye. Treat yer wishes with care, me boy!"

Dave still didn't quite grasp the distinction... but the very lucid manner in which this improbable event was occurring was starting to get his brain back up to speed, and he hesitated a bit before voicing his next wish.

"I wish..." Dave stated, carefully. "That I would be able to get a long-lasting job, where I'd be friendly, cheerful and nice to my customers and coworkers."

Seamus winced again, while he intoned:

"Witness the speakin' of wish number two - I swear on my oath, it'll be granted unto you!"

Then, almost pleading, he said, "Please, lad - ye must be more careful with what ye say! Could ye nae be a little more specific in yer wishes, lad?"

"What?" Dave protested. "I thought it was a really good wish!"

Seamus sighed. "Well, I can but hope that the Council be keepin' in mind that ye saved me life when they grant these wishes, boyo. Now, please - speak yer third wish with great care!"

Confused as to why either of the wishes could be dangerous, Dave bit his thick, lower lips and considered his third wish very carefully. Like the first two, he wanted to make sure that they were only directed at him - after all, how badly could things go wrong when he was the only one affected by the wish. So, he wanted to find the right words to make sure that the wishes affected only him. After all, in his second wish he'd been careful not to say that his customers would like him, but that he would behave in a way that would probably make them like him. Where could the harm be in that?

Finally, Dave was ready for his final wish. He figured it was a good, safe wish, and that it couldn't possibly harm anyone...

...and would be really, really good for him, in many ways.

"I wish that the way I look, sound and act would be less threatening, that I'd be more sensitive to what other people thought of me - and that I was really, really skilled at sex!" Dave declared triumphantly.

Even without his anger, his 'Neanderthal' looks had turned off lots of women, and this wish would make him a handsome, non-threatening guy who was what every woman wanted - sensitive and a great lover. Talk about a perfect wish!

Except... Seamus winced worse then with the other two. Though his tone was formal, it was also heavy with sadness.

"With the speakin' of wish number three, witness my dealings be finished with thee!" He intoned - then patted Dave on one, thick, arm.

"I wish ye the best of luck, me lad, and will try to convince the council to go easy on ye, despite the way ye phrased yer wishes - but I don't hold much hope. I'm sorry my boyo."

"Wha...?" Dave said, confused. "But..."

"I must go, lad. I truly am sorry - but it isna my feelings that control the council's will." Seamus said - as he began to spin. It was slow, at first - but he gradually sped up, until he was merely a green, four- foot-high blur, like a miniature tornado...

...and then he was gone, as if he'd never existed in the first place.

Dave looked around, shaking his head and wondering if what seemed to have just happened had, in fact, happened. Maybe that branch had clipped him on the side of his head on the way down...

Pushing himself back to his feet, Dave stared at the spot where he thought the little, green-clad leprechaun had been - then shook his head, doubtfully, and headed off towards his apartment, wondering if he was losing his mind.

'Well...' Dave thought, in an offhand manner. 'If nothing else, this... hallucination had broken my bad mood. I don't feel angry at myself for blowing the job anymore...'

Perhaps, if he'd been a bit brighter, he might have wondered more about the significance of that 'coincidence'...

* * * * *

Reaching his third-floor apartment, Dave let himself in and closed and locked the door behind him, tossing his keys on the table...

...and watching a spray of water splash across the wall with the motion of his arm. Though he'd realized he was sopping wet, somehow the actual implications of it had escaped him until now, and he turned his eyes downwards to the slowly growing puddle around his size-thirteen shoes.

"Hmm... this could be messy." He remarked calmly to himself. With quick, precise movements, he began to strip out of his sopping-wet clothes, watching the puddle grow by the second...

...without being particularly bothered about it. Sure, he knew he'd have to clean it up, and cleaning wasn't exactly Dave's favorite pastime, but somehow it just didn't seem important enough to get upset about.

Once naked, he padded quickly to the bathroom, draping his sopping wet clothes over the shower- curtain rail. Grabbing a handful of towels, he quickly swiped the worst of the moisture from his skin and hair, then padded back to the foyer, carefully and efficiently mopping up the drips and splatters of water along the way, finally reaching and sopping up the main puddle inside the door.

Dumping the towels into the tub, he debated taking everything to the laundry room in the basement, then calmly decided it wasn't worth the effort - he could do it all in the morning. Taking another towel and drying himself more thoroughly, the massively-muscled man padded to his bedroom and pulled on his frayed-yet-comfortable bathrobe before heading into the living room.

It was Dave's usual habit to leave his TV on during the day, simply turning down the volume. An older twenty-one-inch TV, it had begun 'acting up', taking hours to warm up before it would finally focus, hence his habit of leaving it on almost all the time.

Now, however, the screen was dark - and a faint, but perceptible, odor of burnt plastic filled the room.

With little hope, Dave walked over to the TV and pushed the switch to the 'off' position, then pulled it forward again, to the 'on' position.

Nothing happened.

Turning the carcass of the television around, Dave could see char marks where the innards had sparked and splattered to brief, electric life, probably from a storm-induced overload.

Reaching down, the big man disconnected the defunct set from the wall.

"Well, now that's a shame." He told himself. "With no job, I certainly can't afford another one, and might be without a TV for months. Well, at least it didn't set my apartment on fire."

Calmly, he walked over to his old-fashioned stereo (bought third- or fourth-hand at a garage sale for twenty-five dollars), and flipped it on, waiting for it to warm up before turning the large, analog tuning dial in search of...

"Hey..." Dave said, blinking. "My TV just died. Shouldn't I be yelling and throwing things about now?"

Dave looked at the charred carcass of the TV with a puzzled frown. Though he could think about how he'd expect himself to be acting right now, he just didn't feel any particular urge to act out those violent expressions...

...of anger. In fact, he didn't feel any anger at all. There was some mild disappointment, a sense of boredom at losing his main source of entertainment, and a bit of worry over the cost of replacing the aging set - but no anger. Even the emotions he was feeling seemed... muted. Incapable of getting a real rise out of him.

"Well, that's strange." Dave said, blinking with surprise. "Hey - maybe that whole 'leprechaun' thing did happen, after all. Maybe my wish really did come true, and I'm not going to 'explode' anymore. That would be great, wouldn't it? No more problems with my temper."

Leaving the stereo crackling with mid-station static, Dave sat in the worn armchair in front of the blind eye of the dead TV, and considered what he was feeling - or not feeling. Could it be true? Could his temper have finally been 'defused'?

"Maybe I should test this out..." Dave mused to himself. Nodding at his conclusion, he picked up the phone beside the chair, checked for the dial-tone, then spun the rotary dial seven times in the manner of somebody long used to dialing a particular number. He listened to it ring at the other end of the line, followed by a feminine voice saying 'hello.'

"Shelly?" Dave said. "It's me, Dave. Look, I was..." the feminine voice at the other end interrupted - loudly, vehemently, and at some length.

Dave waited the tirade out... calmly. When she finally wound down to the point that he could get a word in edgewise, he spoke.

"Yes..." He agreed. "You're right - about all of it. I should never have yelled at you, and I should have never, ever laid a hand on you, for any reason."

Even as he spoke, he was somewhat startled to realize that he was speaking the truth. He had been wrong, utterly and completely. It had been all his fault, and she'd never done anything at all in their relationship. It was almost scary - as if he was seeing the relationship through her eyes all of the sudden, seeing what she'd seen rather than the mess he'd believed had been mostly her fault, provoking him into what he'd done.

"Shelly - I'm sorry. I really, truly am. I know there's no hope for us, now or in the future, and I won't bother you any more - but I wanted to apologize, to tell you that you were right and that I was wrong. Everything that happened was my fault, in it was me - and me alone - who screwed up what could have been something special. I am so very sorry."

The silence at the other end of the phone was complete, as if his ex-girlfriend wasn't even capable of drawing a breath. Then, after the pregnant pause, she asked - in, for her, a remarkably timid tone - one question.

Dave was surprised by it. "What? No, Shelly - I'm not sick... Oh - oh, you thought that maybe.. I was dying? No - I'm fine. I.. just wanted to set the records straight..."

Slowly, he found a grin beginning to surface on his face as he continued. "...because you going around calling me a 'son-of-a-bitch' has really been bothering me. Sure, I'm a violent, lousy, no-good Neanderthal - but your choice of phrasing insults my mother, not me. I figured that wasn't really fair..."

His ex-girlfriend laughed, weakly.

Dave shook his head - ever since his break-up with 'the Bitch', as he used to call her, the mere thought of her could send him into a rage - and here he was, talking with her calmly and rationally.

"Anyway, I have to go, Shelly - but I wanted you to know that I finally realize the injustices I've done you. though I know you can never forget what I did, I hope that, someday, you'll be able to forgive me. Either way - I'm out of your life now, for good. I wish you all the best, Shelly."

Listening to her stunned good-bye, Dave reached out and hung up the phone - and stared at it, amazed at the fact that he'd not only gotten enraged, but he'd actually...

...been sensitive to her feelings about him. Understood what she'd felt about him. Just like he'd wished.

Slowly, Dave began to grin. "Wow... This is...weird. Nice... but weird."

Maybe, in with whoever his next girlfriend turned out to be, he'd be able to avoid the problems altogether, instead of just seeing them afterward. Geez - if this was really happening, if his wishes were really coming true - he'd be the most 'perfect' boyfriend that any woman could ever wish for.

Dave smiled, triumphantly. Despite Seamus' 'warnings' - which Dave hadn't really been able to make sense of, anyway - things certainly seemed to be working out well.

Rising, Dave walked over to the radio and continued tuning it, sliding over station after station on the AM dial - and finding nothing he really wanted to listen to, despite the fact that many of the songs playing were the Top 10 of Rock and Alternative, his usual sound fodder. For some reason, they sounded more like angry, discordant noise than music, and the ones he'd always thought sounded more 'mellow' now seemed more depressing than anything else, with 'uncomfortable' lyrics.

Sighing, Dave switched over to the FM band - something he couldn't recall doing since he'd bought the stereo. Slowly, he hunted through the unfamiliar stations...

...and found himself pausing more and more often, listening to longer and longer segment of songs, none of which he recognized. Finally, he found a station that was playing smooth, somehow 'intricate' music, unlike any he'd ever paid attention to before - yet oddly compelling. Shrugging, he left the radio on the station, finding the 'mellow' music oddly matching his current, rather mellow mood.

Cocking his head in mild surprise at his strange affinity for this music, he headed into the kitchen and opened the fridge. Aside from some condiments, a half-package of hot-dog wieners, and a few cardboard containers of take-out food that he'd almost forgotten were in there, most of the fridge was taken up by the large bottle of dark-amber malt liquor he preferred. Dave bit his lower lip absently as he considered his 'choice' - Colt .45, or Olde English 800.

With a hesitant motion, he reached in, his hand wavering between a bottle of each, and then - hesitantly - he pulled out a bottle of the Colt...

...then immediately put it back and chose the Olde English. Twisting the cap off of the short-necked, red-and-gold labeled bottle, he threw his head back and took a long, deep swig...

...then spluttered, spewing half the mouthful over the counter. "Gaw-wd!" Dave said, in surprise. "This stuff is... really, really bad!"

It was, too - really strong and bitter, with a wicked after-bite. In short, the same as it had always tasted - yet, for some reason, he thought it was utterly disgusting.

Shaking his head, Dave used a handful of paper towel to wipe up the counter - then dumped the rest of the beer down the sink, since there was no way he was going to drink the bottle tonight, and once opened the 'beer' would go flat pretty quickly, which wouldn't add to it's negligible attraction.

Still feeling like he wanted a drink, he rummaged around in the fridge - and spotted, in the back, a bottle of white wine that Shelly had kept there, left behind when she'd stalked out.

Shrugging, Dave pulled it out - then had to hunt around in all his cupboards, searching for a corkscrew. Though it seemed to take forever to find one, he felt rather happy - after all, he'd usually be royally pissed off at the evening he was having, yet he was remaining quite calm and rational.

Things were definitely going to be better for him now that his mindless rage was 'defused'.

Finally getting the bottle of wine open, he started to lift it towards his lips.. then decided that it just didn't feel right to swig wine from the bottle, like you would beer. Instead, he hunted through the cupboard until he found one of the three remaining wine-glasses left from Shelly's brief tenancy in the apartment. Filling the glass, he carried glass and wine out to the living room, unconsciously curling his legs up under him as he settled into the chair, sipping at the wine. Closing his eyes, Dave just relaxed, enjoying the soothing sounds of what the mellow-voiced DJ informed him was a song by somebody named 'Enya'.

The song was most of the way through, when Dave began to feel... strange.

Opening his eyes, Dave cocked his head and tried to narrow down the unusual sensation that seemed to be running through his body, but was unable to pinpoint where or what it was. Still puzzling over it, he lifted the wine-glass towards his mouth...

...and paused.

"Hey..." Dave said in a voice of mellow surprise, staring at an arm that was somewhat slimmer and less muscular than it had been earlier in the evening. "My other wish is kicking in - I'm becoming less threatening-looking."

Finishing the act of taking another sip of wine, Dave put down the glass and pulled his arm out and perpendicular to his body, to get a better look as it slowly continued to lose mass, it's once thick, dark coating of 'ape-man' hair slowly lighting and thinning.

It was more than just his arm, though - he could feel the rest of his body slowly altering shape as well. Deciding to get a better view, he got up from the chair and headed into the bathroom, shucking off his robe and stepping as far back as possible in the small room, to be able to see as much as possible in the somewhat dusty mirror hanging above the sink.

"Gee... I'm really slimming down..." He remarked to himself, cocking his head as he surveyed his slowly decreasing muscle-mass. "I.. I think I'm also getting shorter, too. Maybe I should have wished that my clothes would fit my new look, as well - what I own now is going to hang on me like a tent..."

He continued to stare at his changing body, brow slowly furrowing in confusion. The change was slow, but steady, and the effects were starting to add up, forming a pattern that seemed odd - though the rate of change itself seemed steady and constant, certain parts of his body seemed to be changing at odd rates. His hips, for instance, didn't seem to be shrinking nearly as quickly as the rest of his body, while his waist seemed to be rushing much faster. Though his ribcage itself was continually squeezing inward, his pectoral muscles not only didn't seem to be shrinking - the actually appeared to be growing large on his steadily diminishing frame....

...and his once-mighty cock, 'Goliath', as he'd always liked to call it, seemed to be in a hurry to shrivel away to nothing, his hairy ball-sac keeping pace as it rushed to disappear.

Dave might not be the swiftest guy in the world, but...

"Dear me - this isn't right." Dave said, startled. "I seem to be turning... turning into a woman."

Intellectually (If that word could be applied to Dave) he knew that the thought should both panic and enrage him - but it didn't. He could summon up concerned confusion - but nothing really powerful, though he knew that he not only would be concerned, normally - but this was one of the few times in his life that he'd have the right to be...

'Angry and upset'.

So Dave wasn't exactly a genius. He wasn't completely brainless, either.

"So that's what the leprechaun meant..." Dave said, still worried - yet proud of his sudden realization. "I didn't ask to control my anger - I wished never to be upset or angry. So I can't be - even when I should be..."

The brief burst of pride vanished, quite quickly. "Oh. Oh, my - this isn't good. Not good at all." He bit his lower lip with mild worry. "I do wish I could be upset about this - I really should be, after all. Being turned into a woman certainly isn't a good thing. I most definitely should have been more specific, and said 'a less threatening marl'."

He stood, stock-still, for a moment, chewing it over in his mind. "Of course, I suppose that a cute puppy-dog is also 'less threatening'... but would being a puppy be better, or worse, then being a woman..."

A couple more minutes of heavy thought didn't help - with his inability to feel his true emotions of anger and other 'upsetting' feelings, it was impossible to honestly gauge what he would have 'preferred', before being 'tampered' with.

"Oh, dear - I definitely didn't think this through when I made my wishes. I should have listened more closely to Seamus." Dave 'fretted', the best he could do, emotionally, at the moment. "What shall I do? I doubt a doctor could help, at this point."

Raising his voice - which was slowly but steadily rising in pitch - Dave tried the only thing he could think of.

"Seamus! Seamus, can you hear me? I need to talk to you!"

He knew that he would be bellowing at the top of his slowly changing lungs, were his emotions unaltered - but Dave simply couldn't summon up the 'negative' emotions necessary for raw panic. Uncertainty, discomfort and dismay were in place of fear, horror and despair - and he simply couldn't feel any variation of anger at all, not even the slightest.

For a long moment, Dave thought his rather mild calls for assistance had fallen on deaf ears...

...and then a tiny green tornado spun itself into existence on his counter-top, stirring the roll of toilet- paper on the back of the toilet tank, and ruffling Dave's slowly growing hair.

Then the tornado slowed, and Seamus stood there, shaking his head despondently. "Tsk, ts, me bo.. Dave." Seamus said, sadly. "I did try to warn ye."

"Yes, you did, but I didn't understand." Dave replied, in a steadily rising pitch. "Still, I find it hard to believe that this is how your council of Elders treats a man... uh, mortal, who saves the life of one of their own - without any intention of receiving a reward, at that."

"Well, the Council's disdain of Mortals..." Seamus started, sadly - then he blinked. "With no intention of a reward, say ye?"

"That's right." Dave affirmed. "I didn't really believe in leprechauns and stuff, until all this started. Even when I was 'wishing', I thought maybe I was hallucinating, maybe from a blow on the head."

"Well, me lad... maybe that'll put a different spin on things." Seamus said, carefully. "I canna promise anything, mind ye - but wait, and I shall see."

Seamus turned his face up and closed his eyes, and then his lips began to move as if he were speaking - but no sound emerged.

After a couple of long moments - while Dave watched, uncomfortable, as his body continued to alter - Seamus lowered his face and opened his eyes.

"I'm sorry, Dave." Seamus said, with a sigh. "You're unselfish intent might have carried some weight - but the Council says, since you accepted the proffered reward, you must accept the responsibility of having worded them the way you did."

"But I didn't understand." Dave said, reasonably, unable to get angry about this. "Not only the warnings you gave - but that this would truly happen. Having helped you, I was accepting your 'reward', thinking it was a good-faith offer you were making. I didn't know anything about this.. Council, not when you made the offer."

"Aye - that's true!" Seamus said - and now the little man looked mussed and sweaty. "To tell ye the truth, lad, I'm not even supposed to be here, much less speaking in your defense. But, as you saved my life, I will see what I can do - even if it gets me in a mite of trouble."

He lifted his head again...

After a considerably longer time - during which Dave's now mostly 'gender-neutral' body continued to slide towards femininity - the leprechaun lowered his eyes, and sighed. Though he'd stood on Dave counter-top the whole time, he looked as disheveled, sweaty and exhausted as if he'd just gone twelve rounds with Ruben 'Hurricane' Carter...

...and lost.

"Dave, me friend, I am eternally indebted to you for saving me life - and that's no small thing, considerin' how long we Little People live, if not killed by some foolishness, like bein' drunk under a tree in a thunderstorm. I argued my best, and promised every promise, called in every chit - and I could not do verra much for ye."

Dave cocked his head. "You mean - there's nothing at all they'd do?"

Seamus sighed. "Not quite, me lad. With me impassioned plea, and my call upon their honor, after you saved me life and all, they backed down - but not verra much at all."

"Oh?" Dave said - and was glad to find that at least 'hope' and 'relief' still had some hold on him - though the concurrent 'worry' at the leprechauns qualifiers wasn't nearly as strong as it should be.

"Well, I canna help with the emotional thing, as it's already been done." Seamus said, sadly. "Likewise, I canna do anything at all about you becomin' a lass. The Council says that it canna undo these, since they are already done - or, at least, started." He waved a hand. "Though, to tell ye the truth, I think they are merely bein' stubborn. They enjoy playin' their little games with mortals, and to tell the truth, I do to - 'tis only the fact I am indebted to ye that keeps me from reveling in what's happening to you..." He grinned, sheepishly. "As much as it pains me to admit it, that does not mean that I find it... amusing, even if I wish it were happen' to somebody else."

"Thanks." Dave said, with a sarcastic grin. "I suppose you feel 'safe' admitting it, since I can't possibly get angry about it."

"Well - sort of." Seamus admitted. "The other part that lets me say it is the fact I did by ye a little leeway. Given my impassioned pleas, the Council has agreed to allow me to ease yer transition inta yer new life. They've given me a wee bit of power - just a wee bit, mind ye - so I can help ye adjust. However - the three wishes ye first made must come true, and I canna help you with that."

"Ah..." Dave said, knowingly, his voice now sounding completely foreign to his own ears. "I see - a cut-rate leprechaun."

"Careful, Dave." Seamus warned with a half-grin. "I'm still the one who decides how, exactly, to 'help' you..."

"So - how 'wee' is this power?" Dave asked, raising one eyebrow - which was considerably slimmer, and more curved, then it had been to begin with.

Seamus coughed and cleared his throat. "Well, with the fraction of the power they've given me, I canna affect more than one other person, OR, about two hundred pounds worth of matter - an I canna create or destroy matter, only change it." Seamus shrugged. "And, because of the limitations from yer first three wishes, I canna make any changes directly to you, because they would conflict directly with yer original wishes."

"Okay..." Dave said, with a sigh... then realized that, while he'd been busy discussing the problem with his own private 'cute-rate' leprechaun, the odd feeling had departed, indicating that the changes to his body was done.

Or, rather, the changes to 'her' body.

Unable to feel more than mild trepidation, the person who'd been Dave only a few hours ago turned to look in the mirror.

"Oh..." Dave said, in mild shock and discomfort. "...My."

The person reflected in the glass would be described by many different terms. 'Petite' was one of the first that would jump to mind, and 'Feminine' was most definitely in there, as well. 'Cute' was high on the list, as well as 'sexy'. In fact there was a host of adjectives that could be applied to the new body Dave possessed...

...but she just couldn't imagine 'threatening' ever being used to describe the person the new woman saw in the mirror.

First of all, she was short. She only topped out Seamus by four inches or so, which would make her four-foot-four-inches, four-five at most.

Then there was the fact that she was slender - very slender. Not 'skinny' - no, all the curves were there, as well as a nicely padded layer of firm, healthy flesh with a rosy glow. She was just very fine-boned, with tiny, dainty hands and feet, a swan-like neck, and a nearly infinitesimal waist.

Despite her lack of stature, the new woman certainly didn't look 'childish'. Though on a smaller scale, the body reflected in the mirror was of adult proportion - young adult proportions, perhaps, say twenty-one or so instead of Dave's 'real' age of thirty-two, but still full-grown.

What a figure it was, too...

Her feet seemed positively tiny, even on her small frame, with high, well-defined arches and tiny, perfectly-shaped ankles. Rising from these delicate porcelain feet were her legs - proportionately longer than usual for her height, they were long and shapely in a way that was 'cute-sexy' rather than 'sultry-sexy' - they were shapely, with firm, healthy skin, but only lightly muscled with well-toned curvatures. These legs seemed to rise on forever before flaring out at her hips. These hips were somewhere between 'girlish' and 'womanly', just nicely curved, and wide enough to support the cutest, firmest tear-drop shaped ass that was an equal mixture of 'pert' and 'sexy'.

The hips were further emphasized by the tiny waist above it - a mere thirteen inches around, which was tiny even for a woman of her diminutive stature. Above this tiny waist flared a slender, fine-boned ribcage...

...that supported a pair of large, perky tits somewhere in the DDD-cup range. Which was a relative thing - because though, visually, they looked remarkably large and firm, her tiny build meant that her 'Triple-D' tits were, pound-for-pound, inch-for-inch, equivalent to an average-sized woman's C-cups.

So, despite the fact that they looked large and firm and round... they still fell within the most basic range of 'perfection' for many men - 'More than a handful is wasted'. In realistic terms, her firm, taut globes would be just about perfect for the average man's hand-span.

Her shoulders were very narrow and finely shaped, leading to long, slim arms tipped with fine, long-fingered hands joined to tiny wrists. Above those slim shouldered, he swan-like neck lead to her face...

...and it was her face that was the most exquisite work of art.

The shape of the face itself had gone from low-browed and square-jawed to a pixieish heart shape, with the cutest little chin on the planet. Above that chin lurked a full, firm set of rose-bud lips that were incredibly mobile, managing to be incredibly cute and sexy at the same time - the power of each waxing or waning on how much she used the dimples that flanked the full, soft lips.

Above that mobile mouth was a pert, up-turned nose, flanked by her well-defined cheek-bones. Above those cheeks lurked a pair of eyes that were unbelievably expressive. Dark and depthless, they could be allowed to fall wide open in huge, limpid, doe-eyed pools of utter cuteness... or narrowed in 'playful' seductiveness that lost none of it's force from being 'cute'.

This entire face, this sheer artistic masterpiece of girlishly-mature, seductively-cute features, was framed by a long, luxurious fall of rich, silky mahogany hair that fell straight and true past her shoulders, flaring out slightly at it's ends.

"I... I..." Dave said, amazed and stunned - and 'anxious', since he was currently incapable of feeling wild, unfettered panic, and 'uncomfortable', since utterly horrified would also have qualified as 'upset'. "I... I'm gorgeous!"

"Aye, lass - that ye are." Seamus agreed, looking the petite new woman up and down, appreciatively. "I may not have wanted this to happen to ye - but I have to say the Council has good taste in women..."

"Gee, thanks..." The new woman said, still staring at the reflection in the mirror - but the mildly sarcastic comment was further robbed of it's bite with her sweet, oh-so-feminine contralto voice, and it almost sounded as if she were sincerely thanking the leprechaun for the 'compliment'.

"How am I supposed to live like this?" Dave asked Seamus. If not for the power of the 'angry or upset' wish, it would have come out in a terrified, furious, frustrated bellow - under the calming influence of the wish, though, it came out more as a mildly petulant inquiry.

Seamus shrugged. "That's what I'm here for, Lass - to help you adjust and work out a new life. I should warn ye, though - I canna stay around forever, so we'd better do this quickly and get it out of the way before the Council decides it's time for me to leave."

"I don't want to adjust..." Dave said, relatively reasonably, all things considered.

"Ye dinna have a choice, lass - ye made yer wishes, and in doin' so, left this new life as one o' the choices the council could make in grantin' them. So, the council decided to have some fun."

Dave sighed. "Will you stop calling me 'lass'?" She asked, 'mildly annoyed'.

Seamus laughed. "Well, I canna call ye 'boyo' anymore, and ye don't look like a 'Dave' to me, not in that body."

Dave blinked - and felt tendrils of 'anxiety' run down her spine, the equivalent of what would have been sheer panic. "Oh, no, Seamus. What am I going to do? I can't use my own identification - because you're right, I don't look like 'Dave'. I... I'm a 'non-person'."

Seamus patted Dave on the shoulder. "Dinna worry yer pretty little head about a'that, lass - Seamus is here to help. First, though, we have to get the full of your three wishes done, and we haven't much time. We're gonna have to get ye looking for a new job."

Dave was amazed. "What? Look, I'm not ready for this, not now. I... I need some time to adjust to... this." The new woman gestured at her reflection in the mirror, the petite, stunningly attractive woman who bore absolutely no resemblance to the person she'd been such a short time ago.

Seamus shrugged. "You can take all the time ye want, Lass - but I'll probably be called back to the fey mists afore mornin' - and then you'd be left to the tender mercies of yer new life without any help."

Dave was as shocked as it was possible for her to get, now. "Morning? I.. I thought you'd stay with me for a couple of weeks, at least."

Seamus shook his diminutive head. "Nay - even me comin' here and bragging the council for the ability to help ye is almost unheard of. Usually, after the wishes are made, we leprechauns are never seen again by that person. Only the fact that I owe you my life has allowed me to bend the rules even this far. Morning is all you have me 'till - I must be gone afore sunrise."

"That... that's only about ten hours..." Dave said, more in realization of her true situation than in protest.

"Aye - that's why ye must accept ye knew life as quickly as possible." Seamus agreed. "Once I'm gone, ye'll have no help at all."

"I... I need a minute to think..." Dave said, weakly. Feeling almost numb, she headed for the living room...

...and almost stumbled at the way her new body felt as she moved. For one thing, she was lower to the ground, making everything look huge to her - the world seemed to have become gigantic, everything growing larger.

Then there was the fact that she was smaller and lighter, her body moving with more easy, supple grace...

...especially since her wish had specified that she would 'look, sound and act' less threatening. So, a lot of her surprise came for the fact that her body moved with a very easy - and very feminine - grace. In fact, she couldn't stop it from happening. No matter how hard she tried to 'tone down' the effect, her body was walking with a cute-sexy feminine sway, her hips moving in a pertly sensual way, swiveling back and forth even as the 'rolled' side to side.

Though she didn't know it, Seamus could have attested to the fact that it did absolutely incredible (and dick-stiffening) things to her firm, perfectly-shaped ass.

Dave could feel the way it made her large, firm tits bounce and jiggle with each step, though. Rather than a more 'feline' glide used by fashion models or other overtly-sensual women, her new stride was perky and energetic, with a lot of 'ass-wiggling' - and a literal bounce in her step, causing her tits to move more than they would have otherwise. The feel of tits bouncing and swaying on her chest was definitely a new one for her - but she couldn't make her new body walk in any other way.

Reaching the living room, she collapsed into the chair...

...or, at least, tried to. Her new body betrayed her, making the 'despondent' moment cute-and-sexy, as well as feminine and graceful.

Even sitting in the chair was a weird experience. The chair itself seemed huge, considering the considerable decrease in her size and mass. Not only that - her full, firm ass made it feel strange, as if she were sitting on a pair of firm pillows - that somehow transmitted sensation through to her brain.

"I'm not ready to accept this." Dave told the world at large. "I'll never be ready..."

"Ye'll have to be, lass." Seamus said, entering the room. "Ye have no choice - unless ye want to mope around until my time here runs out, then ye'll have to face all of this without any help at all."

Dave lowered her head, and sighed. Seamus was right.

If it weren't for the imposed control of the wish, she might have spent all this time in panic and denial - but even that was denied to her. She hadn't wished that she couldn't show anger, but that she wouldn't get angry or upset - so she couldn't.

Though she knew, intellectually, how 'horrible' this was, she couldn't feel it. Which, in a way, made what she had to do easier, even if she was all-too-conscious of the fact that she didn't like this, and would have been panicked and horrified if she were able.

"Okay..." She said in her cute, sexy, and definitely feminine new voice. "I... I guess I should get dressed."

"Aye - and I can help." Seamus said. "Go get yerself some clothing, and I'll change it to fit yer new body, Lass."

Dave pushed himself out of the chair, and Seamus trailed the new woman as she walked into her bedroom.

She quickly gathered up a pretty basic set of clothing, just something to wear - it wasn't like she was 'fashion conscious' about her new gender. Given the choice, she might have worn a nice, thick, 'hide everything' parka.

Instead, she picked out a pair of jeans, underwear, socks, a white tank-style undershirt, and a white cotton work-shirt.

"First, the skivvies." Seamus said, and Dave began to slide the now-oversized white boxers up her long, shapely legs...

...and, as they rose, they changed. Writhing beneath her slender new fingers, the fabric became finer and softer, as it seemed to melt and flow.

"Seamus...!" Dave protested - and, thanks to the wish, it came out with mocking exasperation, instead of anger. Dave looked at the leprechaun, then glanced back down at the very lacy, very feminine white French-cut briefs that now rode around her hips, the lacy front panel pulled tightly over the smooth mound where her new vagina now replaced a once-proud manhood.

"Aye - maybe ye'd prefer a g-string, lass?" Seamus said, with a grin. "Ye make a fine figure of a woman, and I'm a man - ye dinna think I'd let ye wear a frumpy pair o' knickers, did ye?"

Dave sighed - but decided to keep her mouth shut. Though more frilly and feminine than she would have liked, the truth was she didn't want to wear any women's underwear. Besides...

...she wasn't angry, or upset, about it. She couldn't be. Without the emotion impetuous, she couldn't be 'bothered' to complain about it further, even if - intellectually - she knew she should be feeling degraded and disgusted by the frilly garment.

"Okay, okay - have your fun." Dave said, picking up the undershirt...

...which writhed, quickly reforming itself into a lacy white bra that matched the panties.

Dave sighed and rolled her big brown eyes - but put the garment on, finding that her hands and fingers somehow knew the secrets of putting the frilly DDD-cup bra on her body. It felt strange to have the soft cups enclose her new, firm mounds - but it also felt disturbingly... comfortable. Almost pleasant.

"Aye - that's better." Seamus said, nodding, as he eyed the new woman. "Not that yer birthday suit is any less lovely, lass."

"Would you stop that?" Dave... said. Not 'demanded', not even 'asked', really - it came out almost good-natured, despite the fact that Dave wasn't thrilled at being made to look 'more lovely'.

"Ye should get used to it, lass - with the fine figure of a woman ye are now, compliments will be fast an' furious from now on." Seamus said. "I canna help it if I think ye is a stunning sample of womanhood."

Deep inside, Dave wished she had the power to be angry about this - but she didn't. The best she could do is 'resigned indifference', with a faint hint of 'frustrated annoyance.'

"Okay, okay." Dave said - nicely - as she sat on the edge of the rumpled bed and picked up the socks. She began to pull the first one on...

...and on...

...and on.

Instead of coming up just past the ankle, the white athletic sock continued to grow longer and longer as her slender hands drew it upward, the fabric becoming finer and softer, except at the very top, where it was becoming silkier and thinner...

...until Dave was staring down at a white nylon encasing her shapely leg. The nylon had lace-trimmed 'panels' running up the inside and outside of each leg, and the top portion had a white elasticized

'ribbon' sewn in to keep it in place. Shooting Seamus a helplessly inoffensive look, Dave went ahead and pulled on the second 'sock', which also modified itself into a cute-and-sexy nylon, further emphasizing the long, fine contours of her new legs.

When she pulled on the white work-shirt, Dave was surprised when it didn't change all that much. It became smaller, to fit her diminutive frame, and tighter - it was as if it were specifically tailored to fit every curve of her new torso, from slim waist to full breasts, perfectly. The top three buttons disappeared altogether, to provide a tantalizing view of her creamy cleavage - but that was it.

The jeans, however, were another story - as she pulled the over-sized pants on, they ceased to be pants at all, becoming a denim skirt. The new skirt was tight, with a small slit at the very back to allow easier movement. The faded denim garment hung to just above her cute knees, and now featured attached suspenders that she clipped in place.

"Well... I guess I do look good in this..." Dave allowed, looking in the mirror. Though not 'proud' of being so attractive, she also wasn't allowed to get upset about it.

"Oh, we're not done yet." Seamus said. "There's still yer shoes, jewelry, make-up and hair." "Shoes, yes." Dave agreed. "But, the rest ? I don't think so."

"Oh, but I do." Seamus said. "Ye kinda have to, my dear "

Dave, startled, realized it was true - she suddenly realized that, though she wasn't excited by the prospect of make-up and the like, she also couldn't ignore it. It was as if it were imperative, a need she couldn't avoid.

"Oh... all right " Dave sighed.

The shoes she started to pull on were worn white sneakers but they swiftly became a pair of white platform pumps with an ankle-strap and six-inch high stiletto heels.

She 'protested' - weakly - at the shoes but since she seemed adept at walking and balancing in them, she didn't press the issue, lacking the emotional impetus to do so. Instead, she spent awhile being bemused by the fact that she seemed to know just what to do with the make-up no on top of her dresser, finding it easy - and 'natural' to apply a pastel pink lipstick, faint silvery eye-shadow, mascara and blush. Likewise, when she put on the long, silver-and-black earrings and matching necklace, her dainty new hands seemed skilled at it - as skilled as they were in putting her hair up into a pony-tail.

Finally done, Dave looked in the mirror - and had to admit the cute, sexy young woman looking back was perfectly attired for her 'look'. From the sexy-yet-not-slutty outfit that hugged every curve of her small-but-delightful body, to the subdued-yet-enhancing make-up scheme, she was just about perfect.

"Well... I guess I'm as ready to face the world as I'll ever be " Dave admitted, as unhappily as she was capable of being now. "But it's late in the evening. I'll never find a job tonight."

Seamus smirked. "I'd suggest you do your best, lass. I canna protect ye once I'm gone - and that'll leave the council free to decide what type of job you end up with. In fact, they'll try and do that tonight, but I'll be there to help you 'refuse' the offer, something ye canna do by yerself."

Considering the body Dave now possessed, she could guess what the Council might have lined up for her as her 'long-term' job.

Had she been capable of it, she would have shuddered. "Okay " Dave agreed. "Let's find me a job."

"Not so fast, lass." Seamus said. "Ye'll need some identification - so ye must choose a name. Ye don't think ye can introduce yerself to a potential employer as 'Dave', do ye?"

"Well..." Dave hesitated, not really wanting to pick a new, feminine name. After all, she wasn't exactly happy with the way things were turning out, and - despite not being able to get emotionally worked up about any of this - was still having a had time coping, mentally, with everything that was going on.

Seamus sighed. "Look, lass - the Council's original plan would have ended up giving you a whole new identity - that ye would have been trapped in. At least, this way, ye can choose your own identity." The leprechaun waved a hand around, all-inclusive. "This inna ye apartment anymore, Lass

- it's Dave's. When you walk out of here, you won't be able to come back - you'll have to start a whole new life, a whole new identity."

"What?" Dave asked, surprised.

Seamus shrugged. "The council dinna 'delete' Dave from existence. People will still remember the male you - but you can no longer claim to be him. As far as the rest of the world is concerned, Dave will vanish. What would you tell the police when they arrived, looking for the missing Dave? Almost as bad would be you wanderin' the streets, with no home or identity. The best ye can do is decide on the new you - but ye only have until I leave to do so, because once I'm gone you won't be able to."

Dave blanched at the thought, despite not being able to be 'upset' over it. She could still see, intellectually, all the problems that would arise if she claimed to be Dave - or if she claimed to be anyone at all, and not have any identification to back it up. She did need Seamus' help.

She just wished everything wasn't happening so fast...

"Uh..." Dave said, searching her mind for a suitable new identity. "How about.... Daphne? Daphne... Wassermann?"

Seamus grinned at Dav... Daphne's choice of last name, pronounced as if 'Was-a-man'. "Aye - that'll do..." The leprechaun agreed, waving a hand.

Instantly, a white leather purse appeared on Daphne's slender arm, heavy with money, ID, and all the other 'normal' items of a woman's purse.

Daphne sighed - and wished she could feel the emotions she knew she should, given the situation. She was slowly loosing touch with the memory of how she 'should' be reacting, finding it harder and harder to 'argue' what was happening to her. Intellectually, she knew this was horribly wrong - but her emotions, controlled as they were, seemed to indicate that this was just 'uncomfortable', rather than the horror it truly was.

"Well..." She said, shaking her head. "I guess we'd better go find me a job."

* * * * *

As dawn approached, Daphne was... 'Mildly anxious'. Which was the same as ravening panic for most people.

The part that had first... 'peeved' her, was going out in public at all, as a woman. Going outside as a woman was bad enough - but the fact that she 'didn't mind' being female in public bothered her (intellectually, of course) the most. After all, she'd been Dave, a muscular, manly man - and here she was strolling the streets as a sexy woman, not feeling 'upset' about it. The fact that she was now incapable of feeling angry or upset didn't mitigate the intellectual strangeness of it all.

That had started to fade when she'd gotten her first job offer, though.

They had been walking down a dimly-lit street near the down-town core of the city - and a woman dressed in tight-fitting leather and spandex had come out of an alley a few minutes after a man had left it. She was counting a small wad of cash - and when her eyes had fallen on Daphne, she'd grinned - and offered to introduce Daphne to her pimp, since a 'girl like her' could earn a lot working the streets...

...and Daphne had felt an overwhelming urge to accept the new job as a hooker. It was a tremendous need pressing down on her, and she'd opened her mouth to accept, even though she knew she didn't want the job...

...and Seamus had declined it for her, and the terrible pressure to accept had vanished. Since then, she'd received more offers - to be a high-class call-girl, to be a stripper, to be a porn-star... obviously, it had been set-up by the Council - there was no way that anybody, even somebody as sexy as her, could have been offered as many 'smut' jobs in one night. If it hadn't been for Seamus declining them all for her, she would have unwillingly accepted any of them - and Daphne was sure the Council would have made sure that her wish that it be a long-term job would be honored.

Now, dawn was approaching, and Seamus would soon leave - and if she didn't have a job by then, she'd accept the next one that came along, and she knew that the council would make sure it was something unpleasant.

There had been other chances to get a job - signs for 'Help Wanted' in windows, where she could have gone in and gotten the job... but those hadn't seemed like the type of job she'd want to work 'long term' in. She knew whatever job she took, she'd have for a long time - and who wanted to be a Liquor Store clerk for a long time, or a gas-station pump-jockey?

Now... she wished to spot just one 'help wanted' sign. Anything - as long as she was able to avoid being turned into a hooker, stripper, of porno star...

"Well, lass - this is it." Seamus said. "the sun's coming up - and I have t'go."

"Please - just a few more minutes." Daphne asked, biting her full, lipstick-coated lower lip. "If you go... I'll be helpless."

"I'm sorry lass - I don't have a choice." Seamus said...

...then he began to spin. A second later... and he was gone.

Daphne looked around - and if she could feel panic, she'd be feeling it right now.

Behind her, a woman wearing a black leather mini-skirted dress, fishnet stockings and a high-heels was coming her way. In front of her was a sleazy-looking guy carrying a box marked 'Master Mark's BDSM Emporium.' She was standing right in front of a store-front whose cheap-looking sign read 'Exxtacy Video Productions.'

In a second, she was sure she was going to be given 'an offer she couldn't refuse.'

She looked around, wishing she could feel the sheer panic that she should be, given the situation.

Then she saw a long, black Mercedes limousine pulling to a stop at the red light at the corner, across the street.

Daphne bit her lower lip again - then hurried in the direction of the limo, heels tip-tapping on the pavement as, beneath her blouse, her large, bra-encased tits jiggled and swayed.

Reaching the limo, she tapped on the tinted window, praying... the window rolled down, and an older man looked out. In his late forties, the man was handsome in a definitely masculine way, with a sweep of silver-gray hair and a proud nose. He eyed Daphne, obviously trying to reconcile the 'hooker-style' action of tapping on the window with her 'semi-demure' outfit.

"Yes?" He said, thick eyebrow rising.

"I'm sorry..." Daphne apologized. "But... I'm almost at the end of my rope. I'm flat broke, I was just evicted from my apartment, and I don't own anything but the clothes I'm wearing. I am willing to work, though, and work hard. Please - do you have any job you can hire me for? Any job at all? Scrub- woman, scullery-maid - anything? I don't care if it doesn't pay well - I'll take any job..."

The man slowly looked her up and down again, obviously assessing her. He cocked his head. "Can you type?" He asked, slowly. "Take dictation? Anything like that?"

Daphne couldn't feel angry or upset - but she was almost overwhelmed by the sheer power of the hope that flooded through her. "Yes, I can!"

She couldn't - but the wish was that she'd have a long-term job. If she was hired, she'd be able to keep the job, no matter what....

"I'm Robert Falkenbridge." The man said. "And you are ?"

"Daphne." She said, "Daphne Wassermann."

"Well, Miss Wassermann..." Falkenbridge said. "I appreciate your willingness to work and to tell you the truth, you remind me of my youngest daughter."

He rummaged around inside the car, then held something out. She took it...

...and found herself holding two items. One of them was a business card:

FALCON IMPORTS

Carl Pitonski, Manager

Below that was the address - and, at the very bottom, in small letters was the disclaimer: 'A Division of Falkenbridge International.'

The other item was a credit card. A Gold Card, to be exact.

"I'm going to take a risk on you, Miss Wassermann." Falkenbridge said. "I'm going to call Carl and tell him that I'm sending you over, at noon. He is to hire you as the company's receptionist. Not that they really need one, but if I tell him to, he will." Falkenbridge paused. "Now, if you were to spend the time between now and then buying yourself a suitable outfit, getting yourself ready and the like, and then show up you'll have the job. As long as you can do the work, I'm sure Carl will keep you employed.

If, however, you don't show up... well, then I know I've been a foolish old man. In either case, I'm going to cancel that credit card... first thing tomorrow morning."

Daphne was almost overwhelmed by her good fortune - she was hired. This was it - she was safe.

More than that - she had a credit card that was valid until tomorrow morning she could use to get a new apartment and some clothes. Though being female wasn't exactly something that excited her, at least she'd have a good job and a new place to live.

"Thank you, Mr. Falkenbridge." Daphne said, sincerely. "I will be there to start work - and I think that I'll be working for Falcon imports for quite some time. Thank you."

Falkenbridge simply nodded, probably already berating himself for his foolish trust in a complete stranger. The window rolled back up, and the car pulled away.

Head held high, the future looking brighter than it had before - even if she was stuck as a woman - Daphne headed off down the sidewalk, walking right past the hooker and the man with a box of bondage items..

...neither of whom bothered offering her a job.

* * * * *

Because of the wish, she couldn't feel nervous as she climbed the stairs of the building that served as Falcon Import's place of business...

...but she could feel foolish, and she did.

She'd gotten herself an apartment, which - if not luxurious - was fairly nice. She'd had some furniture delivered, and had bought some house-hold items and groceries on the credit-card, making it livable.

Then she'd gone shopping.

She'd intended to get rather subdued, less 'showy' female clothes...

...and hadn't been able to. She just couldn't. The stuff she'd bought as 'casual' clothing had been bad enough - all of it was roughly equivalent to the one outfit she already owned, without a single pair of pants in the lot.

Worse had been the 'business clothes' she'd bought.

Though Daphne didn't completely understand it, she figured it had to be tied in with her wish about being good with her coworkers and customers - because she'd found herself picking out her wardrobe with almost obsessive care, unable to accept merely 'good enough'.

Which explained the outfit she was wearing as she headed up the stairs of the combination warehouse-and-offices that Falcon imports took up.

Daphne was dressed to the nines - or maybe even to the tens.

Her shoes had been remarkable expensive - Daphne had never realized how much a pair of women's shoes could cost. For the money she'd put on the card, she'd gotten a pair of black leather pumps with red trim, and slender five-inch tall heels.

Leading up from those shoes and encasing her shapely legs was a pair of black nylon stocking, with seams running up the back of them. These nylons, in turn, disappeared under the barely-knee-length burgundy skirt she wore, a form-fitting yet not skin-tight skirt that was carefully tailored to be flattering - especially of her firm, finely-shaped ass. The skirt was cinched tight around her tiny waist by a white leather belt.

Under the skirt lurked a pair of expensive, provocative black lace panties, and a garter-belt attached to her nylons. Though what she wore under her clothes couldn't possibly affect anything in her job, she'd been unable to 'slough off' even on her undies, being as fussy about them as she had been about the black silk blouse she wore, it shimmering, flowing fabric tailored nicely over the swell of her firm, black-lace-bra encased breasts.

Over this blouse was a burgundy jacket that matched her skirt. Both jacket and skirt were of a fairly light fabric, and weren't designed to be worn pressed and stiff - with her cute, sensual beauty, the 'dressy-casual' look worked much better than the more severely-cut business suits popular today, though she wished that she'd been able to pick on of the more 'straight-laced' outfits to counteract her cute-but-sexy figure and face.

Her face was carefully made up to emphasize her good looks in a sort of 'business-sexy' way, without making her look either 'cool' or 'hot'. Her hair had been redone, now done up in a sort of loose bun, with a few loose tendrils at the sides of her face - which she kept having to brush away from her face in what she was sure was an almost irresistibly cute-and-flirtatious manner.

She wore small gold earrings with a short chain 'weighted' by a cubic-zirconia 'diamond' at the end. A matching 'gold-and-diamond' necklace encircled her slender neck, and a 'gold and diamond' watch was mounted on the slender black leather band around her wrist. A small, elegant black-leather purse was slung over her shoulder.

It was this that made her feel foolish - she had practically obsessed, helplessly, at getting a perfect 'professional' look, while still retaining that 'innocently-sexy' look and charm that she didn't really want in the first place.

She looked stunning - and that's what made her feel the most foolish of all.

Reaching the door at the top of the stairs, Daphne took a deep breath - then pushed it open and went in.

The place looked... nice. Very upscale, with a sort of an old-fashioned feel to it, with lots of dark wood paneling and cream-colored walls, lots of greenery, glass and gleaming brass.

It wasn't all that large, all things considered. Technically the second floor, the offices were at third story height, the warehouse being two stories all by itself, She could see the basic layout of the office right from here - she was standing in the receptionist area, a nicely laid-out part of the building that took up most of the front right corner of the floor-plan. A row of large windows ran along the front of the building, with the large, horse-shoe shaped receptionist desk along the one wall. The rest of the area was taken up a dark-red leather bench-seat encircling the beam in the middle of the room, with plants forming a pleasant waist-high 'barrier' around the waiting area.

Along the other wall was three offices, wood-and-brass doors with frosted glass with black lettering indicating the position of the person within. A hallway ran to the back of the building, where two more offices, a copier room, a conference room, a coffee room and the bathrooms were.

When she entered, there was a phone ringing in one of the offices, and muffled conversation in another - but no sign of anybody.

"I guess they do need a receptionist, after all." Daphne muttered to herself, still feeling 'strange' about being a woman at her first day of work - but happy that it was a fairly nice job. Hesitantly, she headed towards the hallway, looking down it.

At the very end of it, the door was marked with the name and title of the manager, Carl Pitonski.

Hesitantly, Daphne walked down the hallway, heels clicking on the hardwood floor. Reaching the door, she hesitated - then reached out and knocked on the wooden frame beside the frosted pane of glass.

"Come in!" A voice called from inside, and Daphne opened the door.

The man sitting at the desk was working on the computer. Rather slender, he was wearing a beige cotton shirt and a brown tie, and a pair of fashionable silver-rimmed glasses slightly magnified his green eyes. His dark hair was neatly trimmed, and he had the general air of a well-organized person, even if he was currently distracted by whatever he was working on.

Then he double-clicked the mouse and made a small, wordless sound of satisfaction, then turned his attention to his visitor....

...and involuntarily did a long, head-to-toe double-take of the short, slender, stunningly sexy woman standing before him.

Daphne, of course, was incapable of being truly offended by the long, appreciative look.

"Hi." She said, warmly, feeling her lips curve upwards in a smile - it didn't matter if she wanted them to or not, since she'd wished she'd be 'nice, cheerful, and friendly'. "I'm Daphne Wassermann?"

"Oh!" the manager said, 'snapping out of it'. He rose and walked around the desk to shake her hand. "Carl Pitonski - but you can call me Carl. We're kind of informal around here."

"Carl." She agreed, finding herself practically 'posing' to look her best as she smiled helplessly at her new boss. "I guess I'm to be your new receptionist - if you'll have me."

Carl laughed. "Well, we certainly make enough to hire a receptionist - we've just never bothered." He gestured with one hand towards the door, and as she turned and began to 'follow him from in front'...

...he placed an arm across her shoulders, to guide her. Intellectually, she was squirming at being touched by a man, but her smile didn't alter a whit....

...as she helplessly found herself leaning ever-so-slightly into his side.

"Uh " Carl stammered, then continued. "As I was saying, we don't really need one. Hell - we don't really need the six employees we have now."

"Oh?" Daphne asked, sweetly - and helplessly found herself smiling up at him, her eyes meeting his, rather than just glancing quickly at him as she asked the question. Though she couldn't show it, intellectually the rapt attention she was unwillingly giving him bothered him.

It seemed to have an effect of Carl, too - though not a negative one. "Um Well, you see, we really just receive the imports, then re-ship them to retail outlets. We don't really get clients coming in, and the work we do, over the phones, is fairly light - the actual warehouse personnel do most of the work, and we just really sign the paperwork, and deal with the occasional problem. You see, it's really all just a front - one person, other than the warehouse staff, could handle everything. But it seems more impressive to people if there's a different person for all the different tasks, so we create the illusion that we're a major concern."

"I think that's a fantastic idea!" Daphne found herself gushing, perkily. "Since all you're doing is convincing people overseas to sell you items, then doing the same here, it's all negotiation - so you want to present a strong image!"

"That's it exactly." Carl agreed, with a smile. "Our profits depend solely on the buyer's ability to buy low, then sell high. Kind of like the stock market, and our buyer - Mark Lindwood, that's his office there - is the 'one guy' I was talking about who could run everything. He's really the only one of us who does any work - the rest of us are just here for appearance, so he does things like transfer a hesitant seller to 'Legal', or 'Accounting', or 'the Manager'. This illusion of a large, powerful company allows him to make really great deals - which, in turn, makes Mark a small, powerful company all himself, with us 'supporting actors'.

"Well - then I'm a dream come true for you!" Daphne said. "Really?" Carl asked, as Daphne slid behind the reception desk.

"Sure - not only can I make the company sound bigger on the phone..." She said, wondering where all of this was coming from, "...but I can set up a video-conferencing system in the conference room.... and another in one of the offices, so it's not always the same back-drop all the time. Then, using the Internet, Mark can video-conference with the sellers and buyers.. and have 'the secretary' bring him files, or call the various departments and have them 'transferred' to Mark's speaker-phones, making him look that much more important, and the company that much bigger!"

Carl's jaw had slowly sagged lower and lower as Daphne had talked - and now he looked like he could drive a Mack truck in there with no problem. Shaking his head, he cleared his mind of the surprise at having this perky, sexy little woman apparently just whip-up a new sales-scheme to increase they're buying power.

Daphne, for her part, was wondering what she'd said. Not really conversant with computers, she didn't quite grasp the plan she'd just helplessly outlined.

"Wow.. this sounds " Carl said, amazed. "Okay, hang on - I'll get the guys together, and we'll discuss this, because this sounds "

Carl began to turn to the first office and Daphne found herself interrupting with "Carl?"

When the manager turned back, Daphne found herself expertly picking up the handset of the complicated-looking phone on the desk, punching a couple of buttons...

"Hi - this is the front desk. Mr. Pitonski would like you to meet him in Conference Room A as soon as is convenient." Daphne said in a friendly-yet-professional voice. "He's calling an all-department meeting."

She hung up on the startled question from the other end, winked at Carl with a bright smile, and proceeded to do the same with the next office.

While she was going through her little spiel, the door to the first office she'd called popped open, and a confused man stuck his head out, caught sight of Carl and began to ask a question...

...then caught sight of Daphne, who found herself smiling and waving at him while she finished her spiel and went on to the next office...

--++--++--++--++--++--++--++--++--++--++--++--++--

INTERLUDE

With a groan, the figure on the medical bed stirred, then slowly sat, massively muscled legs swinging over the side of the bed as the man rubbed the back of his thick neck.

"Well - how do you feel, Di.. Um, Dave?" The severe-looking woman in the white medical coat asked, looking her patient over with a critical eye.

The tall, dark-haired man with the massively muscled physique pushed himself off the bed. "I thought.. I thought I'd feel stronger than this."

Sheila De Deville, head of the 'Anger Management Clinic', smiled thinly. "Oh, you will. You must remember, that body has been laying motionless for almost a week while we got everything set up, It's going to feel weaker than usual."

'Dave' smiled. "Well - it feels good to be on the right side of the gender barrier." He rolled his massive shoulders, getting used to the new body enclosing the person who had been Daphne Wassermann....

...for the past four days. Before legally changing her name, it had been Diana Falkenbridge. "This body-swap system of yours must be making you a very rich woman." The new Dave commented, looking over at where her old body - short, slender, well-endowed and gorgeous - rested, unconscious.

"That's just a side benefit." Sheila said. "I have my own reasons for doing this work."

Dave walked over and looked down at her old body, now housing Dave's persona. "So - is he.. I mean, 'she' ready?"

"Yes - thanks to all the 'prep' work you've already done." Sheila said. "Telling your father you wanted to 'make it on your own' and legally changing your name was the important part - it divorced you from your old identity, and gave us a clean slate to work with. Having your dad line you up at a job at Flacon, with the fact that the other employees aren't supposed to know you're the boss's daughter was the other important factor. Of course, they knew as soon as they saw 'you' - so they won't question anything 'Daphne' does."

"And she won't know who she 'really' is because of your programming." Dave said, with a smile. "While I step into the life 'she' left behind."

"That's right - and that neatly solves your problems." Sheila said, a trifle smugly. "Not only will you have to put up with all the society-based prejudices that come from the triple handicap of being female, short, and beautiful - you won't have to hide the fact that you are a 'lesbian' - as a man, your interest in women will be considered 'natural'."

"Yeah - UI can hardly wait to try this monster out " Dave said, hand sliding down to caress his large, currently semi-hard cock. He eyed Sheila thoughtfully and the head of the clinic shook her head slightly.

"So - why the 'Leprechaun' routine?" Dave asked. "Isn't there easier - and more believable - ways to mentally condition him into his .. uh, her new role?"

"Maybe." Sheila said. "But this is fool-proof. Should the injunction against talking ever break down... all she'll do is tell that outrageous story. With the false set of memories we've implanted in her, she has no idea that she never left this clinic. She actually believes that story we fed her, and can't possible 'squeal' on our little operation of swapping the minds of chauvinistic woman-beaters with the bodies of women eager to get out of their old lives." She shrugged. "To tell you the truth, I'm almost sorry that you were the swap-mate for this one. Oh, I know you're glad to get such a handsome, muscular body - body I'd rather have slipped his mind into the body of a drug-addicted whore or stripper, like I've done with the others. I think it's more fitting then the life we've given her."

"Well, there is the 'sub-routines' you gave her... isn't there?" Dave asked. "I mean - you're not making her life a bed of roses, are you?"

"Of course not!" Sheila said, honestly affronted. "No - we'll drop her off at your apartment - that is, the one she remembers renting. When she wakes up tomorrow, she won't know that it's really her first day as a woman, thinking that it was her - and not you in that body - who had her first day at work yesterday. That's when the programming will take effect."

"Great." Dave said, dismissing the worthless man in his old body from his mind. "So... where would I find my clothes...?"

--++--++--++--++--++--++--++--++--++--

"Here's our little miracle worker!" Carl greeted Daphne as she settled in behind the receptionist's desk. "Hi, Carl." She greeted him. She sounded perky enough, and her bright smile looked real enough...

....but, inside, she was confused.

She felt... strange. She couldn't put her finger on it, but she felt awkward and uncomfortable. Though her movements and actions looked as smooth and graceful as they had on her first day of being female, they were no longer 'background' to her - though she didn't have to actively think to make her body move the way it did, she was more aware of it.

In fact, it was really strange - but she was more conscious of her new body then she had been yesterday. Everything about it - and it felt weird. She could remember using the washroom yesterday, for instance, and hadn't thought much of it when it had happened - but when she'd done it this morning, it had felt awkward, strange...

...and demeaning.

She also couldn't understand how she'd seemed to accept her new gender so glibly yesterday. Ever since she'd awoken this morning, she'd felt all sorts of things about her new gender, and none of them pleasant. In fact... she'd felt almost terrified, almost disgusted, almost horrified, as if her emotional control was slipping - which couldn't be. For one thing, she wasn't capable of showing any of these emotions - if anything, she was helplessly acting more chipper and perky than she had yesterday. It was just that, inside, she was feeling very awkward, uncomfortable and self-disgusted by what she was doing, living life as a female.

"Why don't I put on some coffee?" She volunteered, suddenly, surprising herself with the offer. "And the system's set up to play music through the offices - why don't I put something on?"

"Sure." Carl said, heading to his office. Daphne wondered why she'd suggested either the coffee or music, but shrugged it off as being similar to her video conferencing brainstorm of yesterday.

Shrugging, she got up and walked over to the cabinet against the back wall of her receptionists are, in which was hidden the industrial-size coffee-maker, a small fridge, sink and dishwasher, and all the other items.

Daphne set about getting the coffee ready, apparently enjoying the work that actually bored her. Her cheerful grin looked utterly realistic as she mentally chafed at the 'stupid make-work' as she slipped one of the large filter-packs of coffee into the hopper.

Of course, she had no way of knowing that the filters had been placed there by Sheila, and contained a powerful hypnotic inducer and a few other drugs, as well a premium Colombian fine-ground.

Likewise, there was no way Daphne could possibly know about the subliminal messages encoded into the music of the CD she slid into the sound-system and set playing through the ceiling speakers.

Meanwhile, Daphne was internally busy trying to cope with all the sensations she didn't remember feeling from yesterday, everything from the way the straps of her bra never seemed to sit comfortable, to the way her shoes pinched her toes and would make her feet ache after standing in them for awhile.

When the coffee was brewed, she went around to each of the offices and delivered a cup to each of the men. She also took one for herself.

Soon after finishing the first cup, she found herself wanting another, and she poured herself one, not realizing that the drugs in the coffee had primed her for the subliminal commands on the CD, instructing her to drink lots of the coffee. Before long, her coworkers also wanted another cup, and another, and...

...this went on until the first CD - the 'drink coffee' one was finished...

Feeling sort of fuzzy and light-headed, Daphne put on a second CD to replace the finished first one. She still felt really weird and strange about being a woman, and bothered by both the concept and the physical manifestations of her new gender - but now she was also beginning to feel worried and horrified by it, something she wasn't sure she should be capable of feeling, given her wish. She wasn't sure, though, as her outward demeanor was as chipper and perky as ever - even if she was acting a little vapid and had a hard time concentrating on some things. It didn't seem all that important, though, since the entire staff seemed a little 'out of it' today.

Shrugging (mentally, at least), she slid the CD into the machine and pressed 'play'.

* * * * *

"Hey, Daphne - we've got a gift for you!"

Feeling fuzzy, confused and uncomfortable, Daphne looked up to find all six of her bosses surrounding her desk, beaming. She was sort of glad to see them acting more alive - when she'd brought the package from 'The Cuttler Custom Footwear Company' FedEx had delivered into Carl twenty minutes ago, he'd been sitting at his desk, staring of into nothing and mumbling to himself.

Daphne was completely unaware of the fact that, until Carl had spoken, she'd been doing the exact same thing. Now, she smiled brightly and spoke in a voice even more chipper than usual.

"Gee, guys - what have you got?" She asked, very brightly - and sort of vapidly, even tacking a little giggle onto the end, even though she didn't realize it.

"Well - we've noticed most secretary's were one pair of shoes into work, then change into higher heels while they're at the office." Mark explained. "So - we got you some 'work shoes'!"

Smiling, each of them took their hands out from their backs and placed a pair of shoes on her desk. They were different colors and styles, but each of them shared a common theme.

Each one had a two-inch high platform...

...and a nine-inch tall spike heel.

She stared at the six pairs of shoes, startled...

...and felt a sudden pain deep behind her eyes. Though she couldn't consciously hear it, it was as if a voice was in her head, talking to her...

<You must accept the shoes. You must wear the shoes. You must be a perfect secretary. You must make your bosses happy. You must be a perfect woman. You must make men happy.>

The words didn't register on her conscious mind - but Daphne 'heard' them, nonetheless, and felt an overwhelming need to...

"Gee, guys - thanks!" She said, gathering up the shoes. "You guys are, like, sooooo thoughtful!"

Intellectually, she was shuddering at the thought of wearing such outrageously high heels, which would have her standing on tip-toe... but she had to do this. After all, they were right, and it was her own fault for wearing such high heels for her casual shoes. Now she'd be stuck wearing five or six inch heels when she was at home or after work, and heels like this at work. After all, it made sense...

...didn't it?

Part of her seemed to insist that there was something wrong with this line of reasoning, but she couldn't find it. She'd been stupid enough to wear high-heels into the office, so now she had to wear even higher ones during the work day.

Putting the other pairs under her desk for future use, she picked up the black-and-gold pair Carl had presented her with. Quickly shucking off her 'low' six-inch heels, she stepped into the skyscraper heeled shoes and rose up on them.

"Gosh, this is great!" She said with an unconscious giggle. "Now I'm almost as tall as other women!"

The shoes made her take shorter steps as she walked, giving her a new stride that involved lots of jiggling and swaying as she walked around the desk...

...and began kissing the guys to thank hem.

She was startled when she started kissing Carl - and kissing him quite expertly and enthusiastically. This was no little peck, by a full, tongue-to-tongue French kiss, lips pressed firmly together...

Carl didn't seem the least bit put out, accepting and returning the kiss eagerly and without hesitation.

'I guess this is normal, and expected...' Daphne thought, fuzzily. "This is what a Good Secretary does to thank her bosses. This is what I have to do to be a Good Secretary. I must be a Good Secretary..."

Still disgusted by doing it - but no longer questioning the necessity to do it - she went ahead and thanked each of the others for their gift, before jiggling and swaying back to her desk.

After all, she had work to do. She didn't even notice as the men's faces went somewhat blank and they headed numbly to their offices, as she was too busy answering the phone in a perky voice...

...and almost unconsciously replacing the now-finished CD with another.

After she hung up the phone, Daphne glanced around to make sure nobody was about - then fiddled with her bra straps a bit.

Not only were the straps digging into her shoulders, but the lacy undergarment seemed uncomfortably tight around her breasts, pressing into the soft, sensitive flesh - especially her swollen, turgid nipples, which were almost painfully erect and pushing into the fabric...

Almost as quickly as she began to wonder why her nipples were engorged, the thought vanished, a dazed, vapid expression coming across her face as she got lost in the soothing sounds of the music from the CD...

* * * * *

"Wow, Daphne - that looks great!"

"Thanks, Ron!" Daphne acknowledged the compliment, self-consciously patting the mass of platinum- blonde curls that now adorned her head. "It was kind of a spur-of-the-moment thing."

It had been, too - while she was on her lunch break, she'd been walking past a beauty salon - only to find that she wasn't walking past it, but into it. An almost overwhelming urge had made her request to have her hair bleached and curled - after which she'd found herself 'needing' a heavier, more brightly- colored make-up scheme to go with it. Which, of course, had necessitated some new jewelry, large golden hoop earrings as a matter of fact.

She still wasn't quite sure what had prompted this, and she knew that she didn't really like the hairstyle - but she hadn't liked her old one either, and at least this one was gaining her compliments, which must mean her coworkers liked it.

That was it, she decided - her wish had made her want to make her coworkers happy, and so she'd somehow known that they preferred her as a blonde. It was nothing to worry about, even if she'd felt utterly disgusted and degraded to be in a salon, having her hair curled and dyed like a 'real' woman. The fact that she'd have to have her 'naturally' straight, brown hair done at salons from now on was utterly disgusting, demeaning and would have had her in tears if she were capable of crying, but it was the price she had to pay for her wish to keep her coworkers happy - and so she'd have to live with it.

Unconsciously humming to herself, Daphne set about making another pot of coffee, enjoying the relative freedom - while she'd been at the restaurant, she'd gone into the bathroom and removed her bra, grateful for the release from it's painful confines. When she'd looked in the mirror, she'd been surprised and worried about the way her thick, engorged nipples were pushing into the off-white silk blouse she was wearing, the darker are of her nipples and aureole faintly visible through the sheer material - but the concern had vanished almost immediately, and she hadn't even thought about it since then.

In fact, she didn't even think about it as she answered the phone while the coffee brewed. While she talked, perkily, on the phone, she simply reached up and began massaging one turgid nipple through the material, struggling to keep from gasping or moaning into the phone as she played with her nipples. After all, ever since she'd removed the bra, the way the soft, silky material had felt moving over her erect nipples had been driving her nuts, and when nobody was around she had every right to ease the frustratingly pleasant tension the feeling had caused by playing with her thick, highly- sensitive nipples through her shirt. That right seemed so obvious to her that she didn't even question it as she massaged her swollen nipples and struggled to keep her voice level.

Finishing the call, she delivered coffee to the offices, smiling helplessly at all the compliments her new 'do received, then returned to the receptionists desk and began sipping at her own coffee.

* * * * *

"Oh!" Daphne practically squealed, in surprise. "I'm sorry - I thought you'd already left. I was just going to turn off your light before leaving."

The truth was, she'd been in kind of a daze for a bit, and hadn't actually noticed who had and hadn't left - she'd only snapped out of her daze when the CD had come to an end, to realize it was twenty minutes past the time the office closed. She'd just slipped on her causal, six-inch-high heels when she'd noticed Carl's light still on. She'd gone in to shut it off - and found Carl sitting at his desk.

"Yes, well..." Carl said, shrugging. "I can't leave quite yet." "Oh?" Daphne asked, brightly. "More work?"

"No..." Carl sighed, pushing his chair out from behind the desk. He gestured downwards. "This."

'This' was the massive erection string up from the open fly of his trousers, throbbing slightly with each beat of his heart.

"Oh - yes that could be incven.. inconvnet... a problem." Daphne said, unconsciously giggling despite her disgust at being confronted by her boss' naked - and quite large - cock. "What happened?"

"Actually, I was thinking about how sexy you are." Carl answered evenly. "That gave me this raging hard on, just thinking about you."

"Oh, my!" Daphne giggled - while a shudder passed through her mind.

It was her fault Carl had this hard on, so she'd have to do something about it. No matter how much it disgusted and sickened her, no matter that she'd rather die, this was her doing and she had to set it right...

"Well - I guess I'd better help you the, Carl." She said, brightly, jiggling and swaying across the room. Smiling brightly, she licked her hot-pink, high-gloss lips...

...and sank to her knees in front of him.

"Oh, you don't have to do this." Carl said, with a sigh. "I can wait until it goes away..."

"Oh, I don't mind!" Daphne lied - she couldn't make him feel guilty about this. She was a Good Secretary, and a Good Woman - she had to do what was right. So, a lie to ease his mind... "I just love sucking cock, Carl, and I've been dreaming of sucking yours all day. Sucking on your big, hard cock and swallowing all your hot, sweet cum would make me so very happy."

Carl smiled. "Well, if you don't mind..."

"Oh, no, not at all!" she denied, lying perkily - but, disgusted as she was, this is what she had to do. At least she was incapable of displaying her disgust or horror, so he'd have no way of knowing that she wasn't as eager and excited as she seemed.

Shooting him a bright smile, Daphne bent her head, opened her full, glossed lips wide - and for the first time, went down on a man.

'God - I think I'm going to be sick!' She thought, as she expertly wrapped a hand around the base of his cock and closed her lips tightly around his shaft.

'It's a good think I always act like a perky woman, so he can't see how disgusted I am.' She thought, as she expertly swirled her long, supple tongue of the crown of his throbbing cock, lightly stroking his rigid shaft with her hand.

'I bet he actually believed that out-and-out lie...' She snickered to herself as she used her free hand to tickle his hairy ball-sack, while pistoning her head up and down, making low moaning sounds in the back of her throat as her lips slid up and down his throbbing cock. As she slurped hungrily, she moaned to herself 'I just want to die...'

She pulled her mouth free, sucking slightly to create a wet 'pop' as she pulled free. She continued to stroke his spit-slicked shaft with her dainty hand.

"Oh, god I love sucking cock!" She said, brightly, then licked the bottom of his shaft and lightly sucked one hair ball into her mouth to suck on it, feeling like she was going to retch.

"And the taste of hot cum, fresh from the source ?" she said, her free hand ducking under her skirt to slide over her panty-covered cunt, as if sucking off a man could actually turn her on. "There's no finer taste!"

She then enclosed his shaft with her lips, going back to making moaning sounds as she continued to slurp away at his cock.

It didn't take much more to push Carl over the edge, hot cum jetting from his cock and down her throat.

'Oh God, Oh God - I'm going to vomit then die ' Daphne though, slurping hungrily at the cum and swallowing every drop of the musty, salty liquid. She licked his cock clean, then smiled up at him.

"Thanks, boss!" She said, in a bubbly voice. "Gee, tell the rest of the guys that if I ever give them a hard on, I'll be glad to take care of it for them! I just love sucking and fucking!"

'Well,' She thought, as she headed of home. 'At least I've arranged to take care of any problems I might cause by giving my coworkers hard-ons. I hope they don't get them often though '

* * * * *

"Whoa - love the new outfit, Daphne." Mark complimented her as she dropped off his fifth cup of coffee.

"Thanks!" Daphne acknowledged. "I had to buy something new - I think my titties are growing more sensitive! So I had to buy a tighter-fitting shirt so I could keep them from bouncing around, since I don't wear a bra anymore.

It was weird - but she was more comfortable wearing the skin-tight blouses she'd bought, even if they did outline her tits even more. The only other drawback was that she..

<The voice in the back of her mind spoke up again, 'prompting' her.>

...had to act like she loved having big tits, find ways to make them even more prominent and enticing, since the only reason any woman would wear such revealing shirts was because she wanted men to see them and like them. She hated it - but she had to do it. She had no choice, that was just the way it worked.

"Do you like my titties, Mark?" She asked, putting her arms behind her back and thrusting her chest out more, the well-displayed mounds pushing out against her tight blouse, creamy cleavage threatening to burst through the open neckline of her blouse.

"Yeah - I do..." Mark said.

"Would you like to fondle them and suck them?" Daphne asked, bringing her hands up to caress them while she mentally pleaded for Mark to say 'no'...

"I'd love to, Daphne!" Mark said. Shit.

"Good! I love having my big boobies fondled and sucked!" Daphne lied enthusiastically, quickly undoing the remaining buttons on her blouse and letting the garment fall open, exposing her large, firm spheres of tits flesh. Jiggling and swaying atop her heels, she walked around the desk and sat in Mark's lap, making the appropriate sounds of pleasure as she began to fondle and suck her big, round tits.

Before long, she felt something pressing into her ass... Shit, and double shit.

"I seem to have given you a hard on!" she giggled, disgusted - why couldn't these guys control themselves! "Naughty, naughty me - but I can take care of it!"

She hadn't put on any panties this morning, because they'd just felt so confining - so it made it easy for her to simply pull up her skirt, smile fetchingly while undoing Mark's pants - and impale herself on his cock.

"Oh, that feels so good!" Daphne lied, mortified. "Oh, yes, you fill me up!"

Her legs began to thrust her up and down on the chair while she moaned in apparent ecstasy, struggling not to focus on the sensations shooting up and down her spine. After all, she didn't want to enjoy fucking a man, no matter how wonderful it felt, how much pleasure it caused to thrum through her body, until her screams of passion and ecstasy were no longer faked, but utterly real, screams of utter pleasure as she came, thrashing atop a man's hard cock and crying out his name...

After she'd finished screwing Mark's brains out, she rearranged her clothing, mortified at having let herself enjoy the act.

That was wrong. She was supposed to make sure that the man enjoyed it, not her. She'd have to do something about that, no matter how much it pained her...

She'd just have to start fucking after working, finding men and fucking them hard, until she became so used to getting fucked in every way and every position that it simply became another hum-drum chore. After all, she wasn't going to let what had happened to her screw her up - she wasn't going to let herself enjoying any aspect of being female, no matter how cheerful and bubbly she had to act...

* * * * *

ONE MONTH LATER

Licking the last drop of cum from her full lips, Daphne thanked Steve again, then flounced off towards the bathroom to make sure her make-up looked good.

Well, at least she wasn't having to suck cock as much as before, she thought with relief as she touched up her lipstick. After all, now that Maria was here, Daphne only had to do occasion cum- slurping duties, when Maria was otherwise engaged.

Which was good - since every time she sucked cock, it brought back the memory of when she'd been raped. Two guys had waylaid her outside the warehouse when she'd been working late one night, and they'd forced her to perform. Sure, the guys had caught them, but not until that tough-looking Latino guy had forced her to suck his cock...

Just then, the door to the bathroom swung open.

"Ola, Miss Daphne..." Maria said as she entered. The tall, slender Mexican woman's voice was a soft and submissive as ever, and as usual she refused to meet Daphne's eyes.

"You don't have to call me that!" Daphne giggled. "We're both secretaries - equals!"

"Yes, Miss Daphne..." Maria agreed - as she always did. Maria would agree to anything. A slender, dusky-skinned woman, Maria wasn't as beautiful as Daphne, nor as 'secure'. In fact, she agreed with just about anyone on just about anything, the most utterly submissive woman Daphne had ever seen...

...except when it came to cock-sucking. Maria was apparently a cum addict, because the shy, quiet woman would turn into a raging, demanding cum-sucking slut when she felt the need for cum. She did each guy in the office at least twice. She was built for it, too - while pretty, her single really outstanding feature was her mouth, with it's incredibly full, softly-firm pouting lips and incredibly long, supple tongue. Not only was Maria a real cock-sucking machine, but she was, by all accounts, the most incredible blow-job artist alive.

"You havin' good day, Miss Daphne?" Maria asked, hesitantly, in her broken English.

"Not bad." Daphne lied - all her days were 'bad' to one degree or another, what with her having to fuck at least five times a day, and sometimes more. At least she had the two new secretaries to help out - before they arrived, she'd been fucking and sucking almost non-stop.

Of course, the drop in the 'fringe workload' was good, aside from it allowing her time to do her real work. It had come a week after her rape, and she'd needed the lessening of the sexual attention, after that guy had forced the blow-job - and his weirdo-friend had mauled her tits, giggling like a hyena all the time, until he'd jacked himself off on her titties. What a freak. Well, that was over now, she thought to herself as she left the bathroom.

"Okay, Shari - I'll take over here." Daphne told the other secretary, who'd taken over the desk while Daphne had been busy servicing Steve.

"Oh, Goody!" Shari said, standing up. "Carl promised he'd let me do my strip-show for him if I let him fuck me after!"

Daphne rolled her eyes - that was Shari. The dark-haired woman was utterly obsessed with showing off her body - which completely floored Daphne, since Shari's body wasn't exactly the world's most spectacular. In fact, she was both too little - and too much.

Shari was tall and skinny - not slender, like Maria and Daphne, but 'skinny'. Her legs were 'okay', but her hips were too slim and her ass too flat to be more than mildly attractive. Not that she was ugly, she just didn't have many curves...

...except for the part of her that was 'too much'.

Her tits. Her freakishly outsized tits. The size of beach-balls, the massive, artificially round spheres of silicone-filled flesh thrust from her skinny body almost obscenely, barely crammed in one of the tight crop-tops she always wore. This was Shari's obsession - her tits. She didn't seem to realize that the freakishly outsized tits weren't sexy - in fact, she acted like she thought every man she met longer to fondle and suck them. Daphne guessed that, given her figure, Shari had probably been flat chested and ignored through much of her life, and had become focused on getting bigger tits - to the point that it had become an over-blown obsession. Sometimes, Daphne wondered how the woman could even walk around, being that top heavy.

Massive MMM-cup tits bouncing and swaying obscenely in her crop-top, Shari rushed off to 'show off' her body, while Daphne settled in at the receptionists desk and checked the log of things to do.

Hmm... she had to make coffee. Maria and Shari were drinking gallons of it a day, it seemed - but that was okay. A month ago, she and the guys had gone through a week-long phase like that, before stopping. She was sure that this would end for the girls, too.

Putting the new batch of CD's that Shari had brought to the office over to the side, she inserted one into the player and hit play before trying to decide what time to schedule another damned hair appointment. She'd have to fit it in sometime after lunch, since she was meeting with a new client and would probably have to fuck him at his hotel room to get him to sign.

She was just reaching for the phone when it rang.

"Hello, Falcon Imports, Daphne speaking!" She chirped, brightly, into the phone. "Daphne, it's me!" Came the voice over the line - and, mentally, Daphne winced.

It was her boyfriend, Bob. A muscular man with an abnormally large cock and amazing stamina, she'd started dating him, using him to cure her of feeling any pleasure from sex. She'd thought it would only take a week or two - but here she was, acting like his bimbo girlfriend, fucking him like crazy night and day, and she still hadn't gotten rid of the unwanted pleasure of being fucked.

"Hey, honey - what's up?" She asked.

"Well - I know you were planning to go out tonight, but Dan just dropped buy, and I was hoping you could rush home after work, make us some dinner, and get the spare room ready for him."

Daphne repressed a sigh. "Sure thing, Honey! Anything for you!"

"Um..." Bob said, hesitantly. "I... don't suppose you could talk that other girl, Shari, into coming to dinner too? You know, to, uh... keep Dan company?"

"Sure, no problem!" Daphne promised, knowing that Shari would love a new man to test her 'charms' on.

"Great! Thanks a bunch, honey." Bob said. "I.. I hope you're not angry at me." Even after a moth, Bob still hadn't figured out how stupid a question that was. "No, honey..." Daphne said, truthfully. "I'm not angry."

She might be disgusted, horrified, humiliated, degraded, sickened - and resigned - about her new life...

...but she was never angry.

Her chipper smiled fixed helplessly to her face, as always, Daphne went back to work...

BACK TO FUN ZONE

SUMMARY: As revenge for the treatment of his sister, one man finds himself encased in a mesh suit that transforms his shape.

Another Fine Mesh

By Gunslinger

Ahead of the veil of darkness parting from his eyes, before the first sounds registered on the fine membrane of his inner ear, even before the physical sensations could register on his groggy mind, Jack knew he was once again conscious.

It was the smell.

The ripe, sickly-sweet smell of rot, combined with the sharp, sour smell of chemicals. The unmistakable odor of once-living materiel decaying in a stew of man-made materials and liquids. The sharp, acidic odor that rose only where mankind existed - the smell of garbage.

It was with that smell in his nostrils that Jack Montcalm returned to the world of the living, the rest of his senses flaring to life like the indicator lights on an engineering board registering the return of power to downed systems.

Even as the low, dull throb of pain in his head was being overlaid by the various pressures where his own body's weight pressed against concrete even colder than the sharp breeze that flowed over his apparently naked body, sound and light vied for attention as his eyes fluttered open, staring up at the dark sky above the narrow alley, assaulted by the sounds of a big city late at night.

With a groan, the muscular, dark-haired man levered himself into a sitting position, his mind trying to connect both ends of the black-out. Here-and-now, cold and prone in an alleyway, was obvious - but it was the sequence of events leading up to this point that was somewhat hazy, made even more difficult to reconstruct due to the low, but vicious, headache.

"Home..." He muttered to himself, weakly, struggling to get his eyes to focus properly. "I was heading home..."

That's right. He'd been running late, and busy trying to come up with a plausible reason to give Kara, even as his mind had been distracted from the task by the memories of the sights, sounds and touches of Lisa. Then, stepping into the alleyway that formed a shortcut between his mistress' apartment and the place he'd parked his car, he'd stopped suddenly upon seeing...

"Oh, shit..." Jack muttered, remembering now. He'd stopped dead upon seeing Kara's older brother, David. David, a skinny, bespectacled man who was practically the stereotype of a 'geek'. David, whose threat that Jack would 'regret it' if he ever hurt his little sister had seemed so laughable at the time - but no nearly so much so when he'd seen Dave in the alley, raising a gun...

Wait a second - if he'd been shot, why wasn't he in excruciating pain, if not dead? His body ached with a constant, all-over low throb that matched the slow, heavy beat of the headache, but...

Blinking his eyes again, Jack turned his attention to his own, well-muscled body - and his eyes widened.

"What the fuck...?"

He was not, after all, naked - though his initial mistake could easily be forgiven, since he was the next thing next to it.

His first thought was that the once-piece body suit that covered him neck to toe without concealing anything was made out of a silvery nylon - a thought that was quickly disabused as 'nylon' covered fingers touched 'nylon' covered leg, to find that the material was actually some sort of fine, supple metal in a fine-weave mesh.

Fine and supple the metal might have been - but it was also tough, something he quickly discovered when he tried to remove the garment. It didn't so much as give, much less break, molded perfectly to the contours of his...

"What the fuck!"

Between the situation, the shock, and the headache, it wasn't until that instant that Jack had realized that the body it was tightly enclosing was completely devoid of any body hair, the fine metallic mesh hugging smoothly denuded contours.

He ran his mesh-enclosed hands over his mesh-enclosed body - and a sharper pain than the low throb indicated where he'd been 'shot' - a small bruise, roughly the size of a dime, with a tiny puncture mark in the center.

Still feeling like his head was stuffed full of wool, Jack managed to reconstruct the sequence of events that had occurred.

The 'gun' Dave had shot him with must have been a tranquilizer gun, firing a dart filled with something that had knocked him out cold. Once Jack was unconscious, Dave had then shaved Jack's body, then somehow gotten the seamless, one-piece metal-mesh outfit on his limp body.

That must have been more or less the 'how' of what had happened - but, utter then the prospect of the humiliation of having to walk home next-to-nude, Jack couldn't figure out the 'why'. Well, of course, the 'why' was punishment for Jack having cheated on Kara, exactly as Dave had warned - but Jack couldn't figure out the 'why' for this particular - and peculiar - method of punishment.

Then, from the back of a sluggish mind that was hardly genius-caliber even when working at full capacity, a memory of a Demi Moore movie surfaced, and Jack grunted, wondering if this was Dave's modern-day equivalent of the 'Scarlet Letter' of an adulteress.

It was a sufficiently 'nerdish' explanation that Jack was willing to accept it as a working hypothesis - though, of course, he didn't coach it to himself in such terms.

Considering it, Jack smirked.

'Fidelity' wasn't a word in his limited vocabulary. At twenty-eight years of age, he could quite honestly say he'd been lying and cheating his way through 'relationships' for a decade now, finding that the effort forming supposed relations with women was worth it - between the fairly-regular sex and the excitement of the deception, his life revolved almost entirely around a very active sexual tension: He was either having sex with his 'girlfriend', whatever not-to-pretty but all-to-gullible (or desperate) woman he was milking for room-and-board; having sex with his ultra-hot mistress-du- jour, or going through the exciting and just plain fun routine of trying to keep the two women from ever finding out about each other.

It was a contest that, sooner or later, he lost - his longest record being a whole eight months.

Considering the wide-ranging confrontations, consequences, and occasional combats that had resulted from a decade of infidelity, this one was both refreshingly new and relatively mild.

So, he was 'caged' in the fine mesh outfit, and a quick check around showed that his own clothes were nowhere to be seen - nor was his wallet or keys.

He obviously couldn't go 'home' to the apartment he'd been sharing with Kara, and the way he was dressed - or undressed - guaranteed no hotel would take him in, especially since he couldn't pay.

On the other hand, no matter how demeaning it might be, a trip to a police station would net him something, since what had been done to him was obviously illegal, while his own actions were 'simply' immoral. As much as he disliked the police, collectively and as a concept, it was about the only obvious avenue open to him - especially since he'd probably end up being picked up for indecent exposure long before he could make it to Kara's apartment to demand his belongings, anyway.

Pushing himself up off the cold concrete floor of the alley, he tried to put the various aches and chills of his body aside, and headed down the narrow, high-walled alley, aiming for the reflected streetlight leaking into the narrow concrete canyon at its end.

He was nearly to the end of the alley-way when he slowed to a stop, his eyes narrowing in confusion.

He could swear that there was somebody nearby, whispering. Actually - many sombodies, and mixed in with low voices, barely audible, was... music?

More than the 'auditory hallucination', there was also a strange, odd little prickle tickling his skin. Something funny was going on - but there was nothing humorous about it.

Hesitating a second longer, Jack shook his head, and took a couple of swift, determined strides forward, leaving the alley-way...

...and then collapsed to his knees, hands flying to his head as sensations and sounds assaulted him.

His body was twitching and flinching as the 'slight tingle' intensified into something just short of actual pain - and a cacophony of sound flooded his ears...

...except that clapping his hands over his ears didn't dim or mute the sounds in the slightest.

He wasn't hearing the sounds at all - since they were bypassing his ears completely, and being dumped straight into his brain.

Assaulted as he was by a low electrical current shooting through every cell in his body, a wild cacophony of sound filling his mind, Jack couldn't concentrate on understanding it's origin, and probably wouldn't have been able to deduct it even if his mind wasn't under such an assault.

He simply didn't have either the intellect or information to recognize that the fine mesh of special, highly conductive and focusing metallic material was acting as an antenna for radiated energy.

Even as his entire body was bombarded by various forms of radiation that the mesh aimed and focused into his body, his mind was being assaulted by all sorts of radio and television signals - signals that had been almost completely blocked by the walls of the high, narrow alley he'd awoken in, but which now had free access to the 'antenna' that enclosed his body.

Stumbling, staggering, he pulled himself up and tried to flee from the sounds and sensations assaulting him, not even thinking to flee back the way he'd come - thinking being almost impossible under the barrage that was hitting him where he couldn't defend himself, directly in his mind.

Instinct and instinct alone drove him to flee, and he fled in the direction he'd already been facing, neither seeing nor hearing his surroundings as he staggered across the thankfully empty night-time street and slammed into the wall of the building across the road from the alley...

...and into the 'shadow' of its bulk, which cut about two-thirds of the signals slamming into him, reducing the 'noise' and tingle to something slightly more tolerable.

"What.. the hell.. is.. happening...?" Jack gasped, trying to focus.

It wasn't easy. Though the over-all amount of signal he was absorbing had dropped, it also meant that there was only two 'strong' signals still hitting him, and instead of being an incomprehensible noise among dozens of other equally strong signals, they were 'clear' signals - like two loud radios playing above the low chatter of a crowded room.

It made it hard to concentrate when, above the 'static' in his mind, he was also hearing a commercial for tampons and one of the latest top-ten hits.

Eyes half-clenched in confusion and mental 'pain', he began walking unsteadily down the sidewalk, one hand trailing along the face of the building for balance and support as he headed for the end of the street.

He was in no condition to notice the changes that had occurred to that hand and arm - not to mention the rest of his body - as the energy being directed inward was causing cells and system to 'mutate'.

Changes that were still occurring as he staggered towards the corner, though at a slower rate.

Finally, he reached the corner of the old office building, staggering around the curved brick facade...

...and slumping gratefully into it's inset alcove of an entrance, the signals dropping away until only one was loud enough to be heard, and that at a 'reasonable' volume who's only major annoyance over a 'real' sound was it's direct access to his brain, meaning that he couldn't simply tune it out, instead helplessly forced to listen to the woman blathering on to the on-air psychiatrist of the local radio station.

With only that one distraction, it only took Jack a few seconds to notice there was something wrong with the body he was rather mindlessly staring down at as he reveled in the 'relative silence' in his head.

"What the...?" Jack asked himself, eyes widening as he stared down at his body...

..except that it wasn't the body that he would have defined as 'his'.

'His' body was muscular - this one, though 'athletic', wasn't as heavily muscled.

It was also somewhat under-endowed in the 'one-eyed trouser snake' department, his own proud endowment barely half the size it should have been...

...while the two firm, dome-like mounds riding from the hairless rib-cage, though barely even B- cups, were vastly over endowed for a man.

"Tits...!" Jack gasped, not realizing that the eyebrows that shot upward were thinner and finer then the had been before, any more then he realized the jaw that sagged in disbelief was finer in structure, the lips spread in an 'O' of amazement fuller then they'd been so shortly before. "I've got... tits!"

The low sound still playing in his mind, the low tingle still running through his body, Jack tried to make sense of what was happening to him - but his mind simply wasn't up to the task.

There was no way on earth that he could have deduced the function of the 'antenna array' he wore, or how it worked. Made of 'mnemonic metal', the mesh absorbed any form of radiated energy and converted it into focused radiation at a specific frequency, for a specific purpose. The mesh didn't have to cover his entire body to effect his entire body, something made clear by the changes his uncovered head had also sustained.

The changes were body-wide, regardless of how much was covered- but the larger the antenna, the more powerful the signal. A 'watchband' of the same metal would have required hours to induce as much of a systematic change as Jack had already undergone.

It might have actually been a more fitting punishment, the transformation David had 'pre- programmed' into the antenna-mesh during it's creation happening over a period of hours, or even days - but David's plan wasn't punishment, but prevention.

In short, by creating and utilizing the brand-new technology, Dave was ensuring that no other woman would have to suffer the sort of heart-break that his research had shown Jack had inflicted on quite literally dozens of women.

That was the totality of Dave's plan - to rob Jack of the very gender that allowed him to take advantage of the 'weaker sex'.

The very same sex that Jack was well on his way to becoming.

Despite being cruel, unusual, twisted, and illegal, it was basically a straight-forward plan - but Dave had failed to take Jack's mind-set and intellect (or lack thereof) into account.

Jack, staring down at his/her rapidly changing body in horror, did not make the differentiation between 'him being given a woman's body' and 'him being turned into a woman' - two very different propositions, and yet Jack's limited scope and personal prejudices were only capable of recognizing one of the two scenarios.

After all - in Jack's black-and-white world, men were 'human' - and women were 'sub-human', basically little more the vapid little living toys that existed to fulfill men's needs...

...and so that what he saw himself becoming.

It was enough to induce panic. Panic, of course, interferes with logical brain processes - and Jack had little enough of those to spare.

"Oh, God, no...!" Jack screamed in a rapidly rising pitch, eyes wide at the unimaginable horror of being made female...

...and he rose from his crouch and sprinted out into the street, ignoring both the increased tumult in his head and the tingle across his body as he gave in to the blind instinct of 'fight or flight' - and since there was nothing he could 'fight', he simply ran. Ran as fast as his changing legs could carry him.

Lost in panic, he neither saw nor heard - but he 'felt. Felt his body changing quickly - and the faster it changed, the faster he tried to run, to emotionally devastated to realize that he was aiding his own fate as he kept his changing body bathed in the unseen river of radiated energy that flowed through the concrete canyons of the city.

Despite the late hour, the city was far from empty, and on Jack's mad dash through the neighborhood, perhaps a dozen people saw him - or, rather 'her', since that was what they took from the fleeting impression they got as the buxom, supple figure in the 'nylon bodysuit' dashed through the streets.

Jack didn't notice any of the people he - she - passed, too wrapped up in her own horror, disgust and fear at what she was becoming...

...and, unreasoning and unthinking, Jack didn't know that there came a point that the suit could have been removed - the point where she was fully female in the genetic sense.

Mnemonic metal 'wears out' as it altered the flow of energy, and Dave had purposefully set the 'seams' to weaken at a certain point, when Jack would definitely be fully female. Technically, the plan worked as expected, with the suit begin to unravel and flap against the altered body it enclosed as it's panicked owner sprinted through the streets.

However, the suit had no seams along the shoulders, instead being closed under the arms - and so the antenna continued to rest of the slender shoulders of the new woman it had formed, and continued the transformation past the 'base-line' level.

It wasn't until the rest of the mnemonic metal gave way that the sensations faded from Jack's consciousness, and she finally stopped running, panting hard as the remains of the suit fell to the ground as a fine dust that quickly dispersed on the evening wind.

Even as the sensations and head-filling 'noise' of the transformation ended, so did the altered individual's mad dash - not due to abatement of the horror or disgust, but due to lack of oxygen.

Placing altered hands on altered knees, the person who had so recently been Jack gasped for air, the very act on increasing her barely-thinking horror and self-hate as each gulping lungful she drew in caused her highly altered chest to shimmy and quake.

Dave had 'programmed' the mesh suit very specifically. With variables involved that couldn't be computed, Dave had come down on the 'safe side' of feminine attributes - but he hadn't expected Jack to wear the suit so much as one second longer then necessary.

The two factors combined to give the new woman a figure that was... noticeable.

The suit couldn't effect the bone structure that underlaid the softer tissues of Jack's body, nor could it alter the non-living hair and nails - though it could, and had, removed some of that hair.

The suit could, and did, make all sorts of changes to the 'soft tissue'... The end result was quite remarkable.

Jack was the same height she'd been before the transformation - which made her tall for the new gender she'd become. Likewise, she was a 'sturdy' woman - not masculine, but broad-shouldered and with strong facial features. Some of the musculature that the male version had boasted remained, padded under a smoothing layer of feminine fat - and the rest had been 'relocated' and converted.

The tissue that it was 'converted' into was an odd amalgam, halfway between fat and muscle - meaning that the flesh it had transmogrified into was firmer then it would be on a 'natural' woman.

In other words, the massive breasts now thrust from her ribcage were not only huge, but incredibly firm...

...and, amazingly enough, not wildly out of proportion, despite being the size of volley-balls.

With her height, broad shoulders, and wide ribcage, the massive, spherical breasts actually looked damned amazing - in fact, the word that might have occurred to somebody if they'd been trying to describe the new woman would be 'Amazonian'. Tall, toned, with a strong body and full, firm breasts, Jack's new proportions more closely matched that of the classic comic-book super heroine than the every-day woman.

Jack, however, didn't think of it in quite those terms as she slowly straightened, and turned with haunted eyes to look in the darkened store window beside her as a mirror.

"Shit..." She gasped in horribly feminine new contralto. "I look kinda like that Voyager chick...!"

Indeed, though his hair was dark and Jeri Ryan's was light, there was much in common between his body and that of 'Seven of Nine' - though the busty miss Ryan had nothing on Jack's new endowments.

Along with Jack's new 'hyper-femininity' came some thing else - 'hyper hormones'.

Just as her firm, spherical new breasts were considerably larger and firmer than a 'natural' woman's, so was her hormone glands larger and more prolific than that of a normal woman...

...and, though she hated the new body forced upon her, in the abstract, in the immediate she found it quite sexy.

In short, though she hated being a woman, the woman she had become was turned on... by the woman she'd become.

Almost immediately, her large, thick nipples went hard, and a disgustingly enjoyable warmth began to build in her abdomen, a warmth that slowly suffused her body as the arousal built on itself, more and more hormones being dumped into her system.

A system that had no 'experience' with the female hormones.

Even women who had lived life since puberty with those hormones could have rapid and powerful mood swings when their normal hormonal balance shifted. In Jack's case, it was much the same as a non-drinker starting his alcoholic experience with a twenty-sixer or rye whiskey.

In the space of a few seconds, Jack 'got drunk' on the powerful hormones raging through her body. "Whoa..." She said, blinking, as she suddenly felt warm, light-headed... and very, very, very good.

It was a 'natural' reaction in an unnatural situation - but with her not-too-impressive intellect further befogged by the hormonal intoxication, the new woman came to an incorrect conclusion.

"Shit... Dave's fucked with my mind..." She gasped, not seeing her sexual arousal and 'pleasure at being female' for what they really were. "I... I'm, like, some sort of nympho or slut, or something..."

It was a highly mistaken conclusion - but it was also 'supported' by Jack's prejudices and predispositions towards women. Especially in her current state, the idea that being turned into a woman 'automatically' made her horny for men didn't only seem plausible- it seemed certain.

Without even questioning it, the new woman simply assumed that her mind had been altered...

...and, with that conclusion, effectively convinced herself that now had an irresistible need to have sex with men.

She'd talked herself into being a nymphomaniac.

Perhaps, given even a few more minutes of uninterrupted contemplation, the new woman might have been able to start picking at the loose threads of the 'certainty' until it unraveled - but she wasn't given those few moments.

The fire-engine red '72 Chevelle pulled to a stop beside the naked new woman, the short, swarthy man inside the lovingly polished car unable to pass by a tall, big-breasted woman standing naked on the sidewalk without some sort of lewd reaction. In fact, in it's own way, the urge was completely understandable.

"Hey, babe..." Raymond shouted, "Nice tits!"

The reaction, however, was something unexpected, and Ray blinked twice as the buxom woman looked down at her huge, firm breasts, sighed, and answered regretfully: "Yeah, they are."

Taken aback by the response, Ray simply let his 'motor mouth' go on without conscious direction: "Wanna fuck?"

Jack's full new lips twisted, and she sighed again as she shrugged, answering with what she truly believed to be the truth: "Unfortunately... yeah."

It took a second to register - and then Ray's eyes widened. "You... do?"

The new woman shrugged, 'helplessly'. "I can't help myself - I'm just so horny..."

The sadly-spoken comment was a mix of truth and mistake - she was, indeed, very horny, but she simply didn't realize that it was her own feminine body turning on her masculine mind, instead assuming that her mind was now as feminine as her body, as so the arousal she felt must be for a man.

So, when Ray invited her to jump into the car, she sighed once more in resignation - and gave in to the non-existent 'uncontrollable urge' to have sex with men, dejectedly walking around the car and climbing in the passenger's side.

"Geez - you're serious...!" Ray said, mind still struggling to catch up with events. Short, barrel- chested, and pock-marked from bad acne, Ray had never had anything like this happen to him before - outside of his dreams, that was.

This, however, wasn't quite like his nocturnal fantasies. Though the words were 'right', they weren't spoken in a chipper, eager tone of seduction, but in a resigned sigh: "Yeah, I'm a horny little nympho who can't get enough hard cock. I gotta have it all the time. So, let's go to your place and do it, okay...?"

It wasn't quite 'right' - but Ray sure as hell wasn't going to argue. Putting the car into gear, he squealed away from the corner, pulling an unnecessarily tight U-turn that 'just happened' to 'make him' brace himself by placing one hand on a smooth, firm thigh...

Sighing at 'not being able to resist' her urges, Jack placed her hand over his and slowly and without enthusiasm had him start stroking her leg.

The sensations that followed were predictable, and even obvious - yet she misconstrued the understandable pleasant sensation as further proof that she'd been 'modified' to enjoy men.

"I'm Ray..." The swarthy, dark-haired driver said, ever tooth in his mouth visible in the shit-eating grin he now wore. "What's your name...?"

She didn't even give it much thought: "Jackie."

"Jackie, you are one hot lady..." Ray 'complimented' her lewdly.

"Yeah, I am..." She agreed, shortly. "Look, can we not do the talking thing? I just need to get fucked is all, not make any friends, 'kay?"

Ray had absolutely no problem with that. Even as he pulled the car into the parking lot of the run- down tenement in which he lived, he was mentally composing a letter that began 'Dear Penthouse...'

"This way..." Ray said, eagerly, helping his buxom, agreeable new 'friend' out of the car.

It never even occurred to 'Jackie' that she could just turn and walk away. After all, she was horny, wasn't she? Ray's touch had felt good, hadn't it? She was now a woman, and a big-breasted one at that, wasn't she? Well, she must be nothing more than a horny little slut, then - right?

In her mind, befogged with hormones and pre-programmed with a lifetime of gender bias, the answer to all of them was 'yes'.

With resignation, Jackie followed her 'new friend' through the dingy hall of the tenement to his apartment, looking around with a profound ;lack of interest solely as an excuse to have to look at the man she was being 'forced' to satisfy her 'uncontrollable urges' with.

"Here we are, babe..." Ray said, eagerly, leading her into his apartment, one that through it's lack of coordination and general disarray proclaimed as loudly as words that it was the habitat of a bachelor.

"Great." She said, with a shrug. "So, let's get to it, huh?"

Ray had absolutely no problem with that. Grinning, he led her into the bedroom.

Since she was already naked, she gave him an efficient hand undressing, not even trying to do anything 'arousing' - which would have been unnecessary, since anticipation and imagination had already taken care of that little chore, and Ray was more than ready to go.

Letting her guide her onto the bed, Jackie stared up at the ceiling, trying to mentally distance herself from what was happening as Ray spread her legs apart.

"Oh, baby..." He said, eagerly, crouching between her long, shapely legs and reaching out to fondle and squeeze her huge, round tits. "God, are you hot...!"

She accepted the pleasurable sensations that came with his eager, unskilled touch as being yet more proof of her new, 'mind-altered' state. She let him play with her breasts and stroke her smooth, taut flesh without objection, since it put off the actual act that she didn't want, but 'so obviously needed', proved even more by the way his touch aroused her even further - again, without realizing that it was a purely physical and perfectly natural reaction for a female body to respond to pleasurable sensation, and had nothing to do with her mind.

Finally, with her neither urging him on or putting him off, his own desires moved him to forgo further exploration of her new body, and 'get on with it'.

With a shit-eating grin, Ray shifted himself a little further up - then, with one hand, guided his rigid tool into the warm, wet embrace of her tight new womanhood.

She gasped in unwanted pleasure at the wonderful friction that resulted - and that sound was the last and only confirmation Ray needed, and he began thrust eagerly into her, not even thinking to concern himself with her pleasure, since she had given no indication that she cared, either.

For her part, she didn't simply lay there and let him 'satisfy her need', as she'd originally planned. With him working strictly to satisfy his own needs, she found the action less than 'perfect', some innate sense of what was going on inside her new vagina telling her that it needed to be somewhat different to bring her to the orgasm she 'needed' - and since the thought of specifically asking a man to fuck her in a certain way abhorred her, she began grinding and thrusting her own hips in an effort to bring herself off as quickly as possible, just a chore to be done.

It also had the effect of creating even more pleasure for Ray, and he began making low, throaty sounds as he bucked and plunged atop her.

It was a rising cycle, and she was both gratified and ashamed to feel the growing pleasure that came with the act of being fucked by a man - and, against her will, she began making sounds of pleasure as well, gasps and moans that inadvertently escaped her full new lips as the pleasure continued to build...

"God, yes, you're fantastic..." She heard her new voice said through the fog of pleasure and hormones that now had her higher than a lord, higher than any of the times she'd tried pot in the past, more drunk than mere alcohol had ever made her. Between the pleasure and the hormonal high, any semblance of control was lost, and her body - and voice - were responding 'honestly' to the wonderfully pleasurable sensations flooding through her...

...and even as she heard herself begging him to do it harder, she numbly assigned it to her 'brainwashing', still unable to see the truth.

All things considered, it wasn't at all surprising what happened. With her own disinterest, coupled with Ray's extreme interest and his 'fantasies' prior to actually beginning, he was much closer to the 'breaking point' than her.

Even as the pleasure in her continued to build, even as some small - but growing - part of her reveled in guilty pleasure at the wonderful sensations and the expectation of the power of an orgasm, Ray finally exceeded his own sexual red-line, and with a howl of pleasure, began twitching and jittering atop her as he pumped his load deep into her new vagina.

She hadn't even come close to orgasming. Though the act itself had generated pleasure, it had also generated a real need to finish the act - a need that was denied as Ray's last, frantic thrusts indicated that he was finished, and just 'emptying himself out'.

There were all sorts of responses that, theoretically, Jackie could have used to finish the job, not the least of which was doing it herself...

...but none of them crossed her mind. With certain assumptions now locked in stone, with the belief that this had been done to her maliciously and by design, she simply accepted the concept that this was part of her fate, and so unalterable.

Instead, she did a piss-poor job of simulating a female orgasm, one that was only accepted by virtue of Ray's male ego.

"Thanks, stud, that was great..." She said, unconvincingly, as she sat up and gave him a quick kiss.

She 'forced' herself to do it, having 'finally seen the obvious', the fact that Dave 'must have' had in mind for her, and the she 'obviously' couldn't fight...

"So, twenty bucks would usually do it..." She said, pulling the number out of thin air, not think of economics so much as her new 'role' to be played. "I'll take some clothes in trade, though, honey."

Ray blinked - and his face fell a bit. "You're... a hooker?"

"What else would I be?" She said, with a shrug, actually believing that it was exactly what all the signs said she must be. "So - cash or trade, stud, which'll it be...?"

* * * * *

The black rayon blouse tied just under her massive new bust, coupled with a plaid 'skirt' made from a plaid beach-towel and a pair of big safety-pins, left her with a decidedly 'school-girl' look that was enhanced, rather than detracted from, by the pair of sneakers she wore.

"Guess I'll have to learn how to walk in high heels..." She muttered to herself as she walked out of the building - accepting, without question, that she was doomed to be a hooker, and since hooker wore high heels, she obviously had no choice but to learn how to do so, just as she'd 'have to' learn how to do make-up and other feminine things...

...but all of that took money, which she didn't have.

With that in mind, Jackie shrugged, sighed, and headed off looking for her next 'trick'. THE END

BACK TO FUN ZONE

SUMMARY: A scientist agree to allow his colleague to transform him into a woman for a two month period to validate an experiment; little does he know that he is going to end up working in a strip club.

The Answer

By Gunslinger

It was in the bar at the Ritz-Carlton that James Francis Wraithe opened his mouth at the wrong time, and stuck his foot in it.

Jim was sitting at the bar, his back to the small gaggle of his 'colleagues'. To tell the truth, the tall, well-muscled scientist didn't really care for his fellow scientists, of any branch - he was one of the few intellectuals who actually attended these seminars merely to learn the latest news. So the tow-headed bio-synergist may not have gotten involved in the conversation at all...

...if they hadn't dragged in that old worn question.

"Look, I should think that we've proven - conclusively - by now that Function follows Form - an object or species' shape and build decide what it's niche in the universe is." The pedantic Medical Physicist, Simmons, was saying in his dry British monotone.

Leeds, the female Bio-Electronicist, wasn't buying it. "Not at all - Form follows Function. The niche that needs to be filled is there first - then creatures adapt to meet the needs of their environment."

Letting out a deep sigh, Jim turned to face the heavy-set Brit and the severe-looking woman. "Please - don't tell me you're still beating that dead horse." He said, shaking his head. "Haven't either of you read my paper in AJ&M? I thought I put all this to rest."

The other two looked at him, somewhat put-out.

"Excuse me - Wraithe, isn't it?" William Simmons asked. "I don't believe I'm familiar with that work."

"I am." Karen Leeds said - sniffed, actually. She turned to her antagonist. "He'd come up with a whole new... 'perspective' on the matter, saying it has been the wrong question being asked all along."

"Exactly." Jim said. "The actual question in the matter should be based on three variables - with Form and Function on one side, and Behavior on the other. Form and function are two sides to the same thing. All that remains to be seen is whether or not Behavior determines them, or they determine Behavior." He smiled, smugly. "I believe that I have also demonstrated that Behavior determines Form and Function."

"Really?" Simmons asked, trying to wrap his mind around the new thought. "Can you offer an example?"

That's when James walked right into it.

"Well," He said, picking - offhand - the wrong example. "Take men and women. Those women who wish to 'break the gender roles' in society behave more like men - and thus, you'll also note, are less attractive than 'womanly' women - smaller breasts, less attractive faces, etc. The same with lesbians, and so on."

Karen Leeds looked at him with contempt. "I see - so, hypothetically, a woman who was originally 'stunning' would become less so if her behavior was masculine."

Jim shrugged. "Yes and no - Because of 'unnatural' laws imposed on society, behavior in a person is minimized until they are 'of age', limiting what they can and can't do, thus allowing the body a 'head start' on matching society's views, not the individual's own behavior. In today's society, a better example would be if..." He frowned. "Well - let's say a person, born as a man, was suddenly made extremely feminine. By his/her own behavior, he/she would definitely become masculine in appearance to match the behavior - not become more feminine in behavior to match the body."

James sat back, satisfied that he'd made his point beyond argument.

William frowned. "I can't say that I completely agree, old boy - wouldn't the pressures of society to conform change behavior to match the appearance?"

Before Jim could open his mouth to rebut, Karen also jumped in. "Perhaps. Perhaps not - but I do know that a woman's body will determine some - much - of her behavior."

Jim couldn't believe his ears - his work was so clean, so elegant that it should be obvious to all - yet these two, so far apart in their views, were rallying against it. "Oh, come now! It should be obvious to you two. If I could prove it empirically, I wouldn't hesitate to show you two..."

They looked at him.

"Really? It can be done, you know." Leeds said, and Simmons agreed. "We'd be quite willing to say we're wrong - back your paper up publicly with the results - if you are willing to put it to the test."

For an instant, the vision of the Nobel Prize danced before James. "Really - how so?"

Leeds shrugged. "Well, it is not legally available - but for a scientific test with a certain volunteer, it could be arranged."

Simmons nodded. "Quite right. We could make you, for all necessary purposes, completely female. Even place you in an environment where you must function as a female - say, for two months."

Leeds finished. "If, at the end of that time, you have managed, successfully, to not only maintain your masculine behavior, but acquire a more masculine form through exercise, demeanor and other factors

- than your thesis would be proven."

Become a woman for two months? Jim opened his mouth to denounce the idea - hotly. "Unless, of course..." Leeds continued. "You do not have that sort of faith in your theory."

"I'll do it." James said, hotly - regretting the words even as they emerged, but not backing down. "Just to prove you wrong."

* * * * *

"Whoa... You've got to be kidding!"

James stared, open-mouthed, at the amazingly realistic three-dimensional image rotating on the large MAG monitor attached to the system.

"Well - we more or less agreed that the purpose was to have to be as feminine as possible - I think this is adequately feminine, don't you?" Leeds asked, archly.

James had to agree, as he eyed the life-like 'woman' rotating slowly on-screen.

According to the scale bar, she was slightly short, even for a woman. Slender, with slim hips and long legs, she was slightly athletic - all the better, he supposed, to let her frame support the inordinately large, proud breasts out-thrust from her slender ribcage. Her face was pixie-ish - more 'cute' than 'gorgeous' - and her full-lipped countenance peered out at the world below a mass of hair that was mixed strands of black and deep red.

"How... how big ?" James asked, miming as if holding cantaloupes at chest height.

Simmons laughed congenially. "Oh, my dear boy You will be a 38-EEE. A rather quick study revealed that the local chain stores all carry that size in stock, so you will not require custom made... support."

"Thanks... I think " James muttered, merely shaking his head when the other two looked at him questioningly. James considered arguing - but then again, it didn't really matter, as he'd be uncomfortable no matter what. Let them have their little fun - his principles were sound, and it didn't matter.

"Fair enough - now, about the other "

Leeds interrupted. "Oh - not a problem - ID, an apartment, everything has been arranged." James sighed. "All right - then I guess there's no need to wait - let's get started."

"Very well..." Leeds said, approaching with a needle. "This will only hurt for a second "

The sharp pin-prick of the needle - then everything went dark....

* * * * * Cold.

Very cold....

As he slowly came awake, James became aware of the fact that he - well, she, if everything went right

- was shivering. There were sounds of city life from somewhere nearby - muted, but not muted enough. As she groggily came awaked, James cursed whoever it was who'd left the window open...

Opening her eyes, everything she had expected - and honestly, somewhat feared - took a turn for the worse.

The first off was the startling revelation that her new eyes saw things slightly differently - going from dark brown to a bright green apparently increased their night-vision, as well as shifting colors slightly, but noticeably.

But as interesting as this data was, it was overridden by sheer panic as it suddenly struck home that she appeared to be laying in an alleyway, in the middle of the night, in a large suburban city somewhere in North America.

Starting, she sat up, her new hear pounding in her new ribcage. Fighting back panic, she let her new eyes adjust to the dim light filtering into the alleyway and tried to take stock of what was going on.

"Good God " James began as she took stop - then trailed to a stop, hearing the undeniably feminine voice that emerged from her throat. Momentarily distracted, she pushed aside the voice thing for now, and looked down again. "These things are huge !" she muttered in her new voice, staring down at her new endowments. From this point of view, they seemed much, much larger than they'd looked on-screen.

The huge tits were clad in a black V-neck shirt that wrapped around on one side, fastening there. The design seemed to practically lift her amazing cleavage into the cool night air, and revealed the edge of a lacy black bra. Past the massive swell of her new tits, James could see her shapely legs, encased in black nylons, and the black leather skirt she wore that came to just above her knees. Her feet were encased in black shoes with a slight platform and somewhat squared heels that looked to be about three-four inches tall.

"What the hell is going on?" James asked herself, looking around the deserted alley. The sound of the high-pitched voice still shocked her as it emerged from her throat. It was going to take some getting used to.

Pushing herself off the ground, she looked around and frowned.

For one thing, there was no sign of a purse that might contain 'her' ID - and money. But the other reason was how short she seemed to be. She'd expected to be shorter - but she looked at the dumpster nearby, and from her eye-level, she seemed to be much, much shorter - but that couldn't be right. It must just be an optical illusion.

She turned towards the light at the end of the alley and began walking. She immediately discovered that if she didn't want to fall over, she'd have to shorten her stride and let her hips roll in a more natural - more feminine - motion. Walking in the heels with the usual masculine stride was out of the question, and she wasn't going to walk around bare-foot.

The other thing she discovered was the decidedly odd sensations walking produced. The odd way the air felt as it flowed over her nylon-clad legs. The strange way the fabric of her briefs moved over an empty crotch. The way her tits moved in time with her hips, the way her hair shifted in the wind - all of it strange, if not actually unpleasant.

Her mind slightly stunned by the thousand-and-one tiny differences in the way her body moved and felt, she made her way out of the alley and looked up and down the mostly deserted city street. It seemed to be a side-street in a city core - at the end of the block, in either direction, she could see busy cross-traffic.

But at the end of the block in one direction, she could also see a convenience store - and the welcome glow of a phone sign.

She started off - and barely managed to keep her balance. Cursing her lack of attention, she forced herself to walk with a slightly exaggerated feminine stride, to keep from falling out of her shoes. At the slower pace, it seemed to take for ever to reach the end of the block and enter the reassuring warmth of the store. She quickly spotted the phone near the entrance way and walked over.

As she picked up the receiver, she suddenly became aware of the way the young male cashier was eyeing her - especially her breasts. For a second, it didn't even register - the thought was too new. Then it did - and she blushed fiercely, even as she gazed levelly at the cashier until he, too, flushed, and looked away.

James turned his attention back to the phone - and got a shock as she read the LED display on the front of the blue, silver and yellow pay phone.

'Welcome to Bell Canada... Please insert coins or card '

Canada? What the hell was going on here?

Picking up the phone, James dialed collect, and waited for the automated voice to ask for a name. Speaking clearly, she said...

"Cyndi Smith."

James dropped the phone in shock, hands flying to her traitorous throat. That name had emerged, unbidden, when he'd tried to say 'Jim Wraithe'. Now, hesitantly, she tried again - this time with her full, legal name.

"My name is Cynthia No-Middle-Name Smith." She heard emerge in her new, clear soprano.

"Miss?" A voice called from behind her, and she slowly turned to stare numbly at the clerk, her long, slender fingers still wrapped around her smooth, swan-like neck.

"Huh?"

The cashier eyed her with mixed apprehension and appreciation. "Is something wrong?"

James forced herself to snap out of the daze and fake a small smile. "No - just need to use your rest room " She said, somewhat unevenly, as she hung up the phone.

"Uh sure - it's back there."

Nodding, James headed down the aisle towards the twin doors, marked with the international symbols. She reached for the knob of the bathroom...

...then stopped, confused. She looked back and forth between the two doors, then shook her head and went over to the Ladies' room and went in locking the door behind her.

One look in the mirror confirmed her suspicions.

The woman in the mirror bore some similarities to the one in the computer simulation - as if she were a sister to that woman.

A shorter, considerably more buxom sister. Her open, deceptively cheerful face with the pixie-like chin and large green eyes were the same, as was the pert nose and full lips - which, she noted, were gloss-red with lipstick, as her entire face was made-up.

However, her hair was different - a short, straight mane hanging to her ears, it was a bright, artificial red on one side, and a medium blue on the other. With her short build, massive tits, and generally 'perky' look, James had to admit - she looked like a 'Cyndi'.

Experimentally, she talked to the reflection of the woman she now was.

'My name is James Francis Wraith' is what her mind sent to the vocal chords. 'I was born, male, December 18th, 1967, in Bedford Falls, Massachusetts. My parents were Peter and Jessica Wraith.'

What emerged sent a chill down her spine.

"I'm Cyndi Smith - no middle name. I was born as Jane Doe sometime in 1974, in New York City. I don't know who my parents were."

Not only had that Bastard and Bitch changed her body - they'd done something to her mind to ensure that she couldn't tell anyone the truth.

Jim - Cyndi - turned away from the massively-endowed reflection and headed back into the store proper, reminding herself to walk with the feminine stride - as much as she hated giving in that much, it was infinitely better than falling over. She made her way to the front desk.

"Hi..." Cyndi said, hesitantly. "I need some help."

The young man smiled at her - well, at her bust, actually. "What can I do for you, Miss?" "I... I think I was robbed..." Cyndi said, making it up as she went along.

"Think?" The clerk said, raising an eyebrow.

"I..." Cyndi said - then inspiration struck. "I must have been hit on the head - I can't remember anything aside from my own name. I don't even know what city I'm in. I woke up in an alleyway down the block, with no purse. Please - can you at least tell me where I am?"

For the first time, the young man's eyes rose to meet her own, and she saw startled sympathy. "Oh, my god - that's terrible!" He said, sincerely. "You're in Toronto - and my name's Bill, by the way."

"Cyndi" she replied, flustered by his sympathetic gesture as he put an arm around her and led her to a seat.

"Cyndi, you just sit right here, and I'll call the police." Bill promised, and gave her a cup of coffee to sip on while he went to the phone and dialed.

Cyndi sipped at the coffee, trying to keep a confused demeanor while inside, rage boiled at the betrayal of her 'fellow scientists'.

She didn't even realize that she was eyeing Bill's ass, tightly packed into his jeans.

* * * * *

Cyndi sighed as she locked the door to 'her' room in the woman's shelter.

The police had taken her complete statement, and searched the alley where she'd awakened. Not surprisingly, they'd found evidence pointing to her having been dumped, unconscious, out of a vehicle at the spot. It was also not surprising that they could find no record of 'Cyndi Smith' - although her American Accent meant that she could have been dumped here from anywhere in the states, and the fact that she had no memories of anything, plus she had no family, made it impossible to find her history.

Of course, Cyndi didn't clue the cops into the fact that 'Cyndi' didn't have any history. Instead, she'd accepted what little help they could give - a ride to a woman's shelter, where the charity that ran it - the YWCA - would help her start a new life.

Of course, Cyndi didn't tell the House Matron, a 'Miz Snider' what her true plans where, once she'd made enough money. She'd merely eaten the small, poorly cooked dinner provided, and went right up to 'her' small room and it old, noisy bed.

Carefully, Cyndi undressed. The shirt and skirt were no big deal. The nylons - she almost yanked them off like socks before she realized that that might cause a run. She wasn't really happy about wearing nylons at all, but they were the only clothes she had, and had better be careful with them. Carefully, she removed them. The hardest part was the bra - she had to contort in ways she wouldn't have thought possible to awkwardly unclasp the massive garment and remove it. Soon she was dressed in nothing but her black, lace-trimmed briefs. Laying her clothes - her only possessions in the world - on the dresser, she saw her reflection in the dusty mirror. It was only then that she noticed that she was wearing a cheap pair of black plastic earrings. It took a couple of minutes - and a bit of pain - to get them out, then she lay down on the bed and pulled the thin cover over her as she tried to think.

It wasn't easy - all sorts of thoughts and emotions tried to intrude. In addition, her body felt tense, her nerves crackling with energy that kept her from relaxing. If she'd still been a guy, releasing the tension would have been easy - she would have just...

In the dimly-lit room, Cyndi flushed a bright red as the thought occurred to her. But it would probably work, taking care of the tension and...

...well, why not? Sure, it felt strange - damned strange - but she was in a woman's body, at least for now, and women must do it all the time. If she didn't, it might take hours for her to calm down enough to sleep.

But it still felt... weird.

Hesitantly, Cyndi closed her eyes. Beneath the thing cover, she slowly let her long, dainty finger slide over her flat abdomen. Soon they touched the lower slope of her huge, firm tits, and she hesitated there for several eternal seconds. Then, gently, she cupped her hands and lightly squeezed her proud new tits.

The sensation was... interesting. Her hands didn't even come close to being able to cup the whole tit, her old male hands' wouldn't have come close. Each tit was easily as big as her own head.

But the area of each breast that she could put the light pressure on responded by sensing impulses of a mild pleasure to her brain. Experimentally, he began to slide her slender finger over the double domes of her huge tits, feeling the pleasing sensations the touches created. Using techniques that she'd never, in her life as a man, expected to be using while alone, she began to fondle and caress her huge tits, discovering why women seemed to enjoy it - it wasn't anything mind-boggling, but it was definitely pleasurable.

It became even more so as her fingers found her fat, long nipples.

Cyndi bit her full lower lip as twin bolts of stronger - and somehow, more sensual - pleasure ran through her. Her nipples were easily as sensitive as her shaft had been, back when she'd had a cock. Not nearly as sensitive as the head of that cock, but about equal to the still-sensitive shaft. However, it felt decidedly strange to be feeling that sensation in two places, both considerably higher up.

But not nearly strange enough to stop. For several long minutes, Cyndi merely lay with her eyes closed, lightly pinching and massaging her nipples, discovering that her technique with women over all these years hadn't been all that great. Twisting them like radio dials wasn't what was needed - rather, a light pinch and a touch of pressure, the sliding the soft palm of her hand over the engorged nipple....

Not really thinking about how strange all this was - caught up in the sensations - it now seemed only natural to let one hand glide back down over her smooth, supple flesh, to the neatly-trimmed triangle of hair between her silken thighs.

She began sliding her palm over her crotch with long, slow rocking motions, causing interesting - and supremely enjoyable - new sensations to reverberate through her body as the pressure was transmitted to a small nub of flesh. Cyndi began to pant as the strokes became shorter and faster, and she placed more pressure on the one particular spot. Then, without even thinking, she folded her fingers into a shallow reversed 'V' to let the middle finger's stroking be in direct contact with her new clitoris.

Cyndi gasped in pleasure as sharp waves of pleasure rebounded through her body, connecting her nipples and her clit with filaments of erotic pleasure - that suddenly burst in a sharp, sweet explosion of ecstasy that swept over her.

Sighing with pleasure, she brought her hand, now damp with her own vaginal juices, back up to her huge tits. Gently massaging her massive boobs, she drifted off into a deep sleep, filled with chaotic, erotic dreams.

* * * * *

Cyndi awoke feeling rested and relaxed. Stretching luxuriously, she swung her shapely legs over the edge of the bed and stood up.

Walking over to the mirror, she looked at herself in the reflection.

"What the hell are you so happy about?" She asked her reflection, without rancor. "Your life - your manhood - is stolen from you, you have no past or future, and you have no idea what to do with the present - yet masturbate, and you wake up chipper." She smiled at the reflection. She had no idea why she felt so damned good - she knew she should feel a lot angrier, a lot less confident - yet somehow, she just couldn't dampen the good spirits she was in.

Shrugging it off, she pulled the thread-bare bathrobe out of the closet and padded down to the communal showers, finding that she actually found the sensation of her huge tits bobbing and swaying quite enjoyable - as was the way her large, engorged nipples rubbed against the fabric...

...that's when it hit her - the reason she felt so damned great. Unlike when she'd first awoken, she was over the shock of being female - and was beginning to experience it. Only now did she realize just how much more sensitive this body was, how much more graceful - every move she made felt so smooth and easy - and pleasurable. The way her tits moved... the way the air moved over her shapely legs... even the way the muscles of her firm, full ass moved as she walked with a pert, feminine sway - all of it was more enjoyable to do than the equivalent action in her old, male body.

But she'd been used to her old body and, with no reference point, hadn't realized that it wasn't as nice as it could be. Now, in this body, she was in a constant state of mild physical pleasure.

No wonder why she felt fantastic.

Shaking her head, she showered quickly - yet without skimping. She let her dainty hands slide across the smooth expanses of her soft, silky skin, and admitted that her new body was much nicer to touch than her other one had been - it was one thing she was going to miss when she managed to get changed back.

So, she might as well enjoy it while she could.

After drying off with the coarse towel on the rack, she followed the instructions she received last night and headed down to the dining are. Since it was an all-woman shelter, the interior spaces were informal - the only rule being 'no nudity'. Cyndi saw more than one woman dressed only in a bathrobe - or bra and panties. Cyndi found herself wondering how these women would react to knowing that they had a 'man' in their midst.

Then, with a slight grimace, she realized that the 'man' had a more spectacular body than any two of the other women combined.

Accepting a plate from the woman behind the steam table, Cyndi sat down to her breakfast of over- cooked bacon and soggy scrambled eggs.

"Well, the food might not be exciting - but here's something that should be." A small packet landed on the table beside Cyndi, and she looked up into the smiling face of an attractive woman that she remembered - vaguely - from the night before.

The woman noticed the slight blank look. "Kathy Stenson - I'm the lady who got your temporary ID and work permit." She said, pointing at the packet on the table. "You can now work in Canada - and collect a small check each month to help out."

Cyndi smiled. "Thank you." She told Kathy, sincerely - if she was going to reclaim her old life, it would take money. The work visa and ID were a godsend. "How'd you get them so quickly?"

Kathy winked. "Trade secret. So - what kind of work are you going to be looking for?" the woman dropped onto the seat across from Cyndi and stole one of her triangles of burnt toast.

Cyndi frowned. "Well... I'm not sure." She said - realizing she might have a problem. She couldn't see herself convincing anyone that she was a world-class scientist. "I... I want something that pays good money, but I don't have any school records..."

Kathy eyed Cyndi in a way that made her uncomfortable. Looking around, Kathy leaned forward confidentially. "I wouldn't normally even bring this up..." She said in a low voice. "But with a body like yours "

"What?" Cyndi asked, warily.

Kathy looked around again. "I used to work in a club - as an exotic dancer. I still have some connections, and it does pay very, very well - and lack of school records is not a problem."

Cyndi pulled a face. "A stripper - I don't think so. I might have the body for it - but I don't think I have the guts to do that." She was being diplomatic, because Kathy had once worked as a stripper.

Kathy shrugged. "Okay - well, anything I can do to help, just ask."

* * * * *

"Todd - this is Cyndi. She's the one who needs the job."

Cyndi's stomach churned and shame burned deep inside her as she stood, awkwardly, in front of the owner of the 'Body Shoppe', who was eyeing her professionally.

Two weeks ago, the thought of taking this job had been completely ludicrous. Now, after the time spent trying to find work of any kind, she began to realize that if she wanted a chance to regain her old life before she was fifty, she'd need a way to earn money much. Much faster. So, she'd swallowed her pride and approached Kathy.

Of course, that wasn't the only thing that had changed in the past two weeks. Over that time, it had been once small lost battle after another. Take make-up - she hadn't planned on using it at all. But to get any sort of job, a woman had to 'dress-up' for the interview, which included make-up. Any woman not willing to make an effort with their appearance wasn't even considered, so make-up had become de riguer...

...as had some jewelry... and keeping her legs and arm-pits shaved One small thing after another.

Not always small things, of course - like the fact that she'd somewhat shamefully slipped into the habit of nightly masturbation, but with the added help of a small, bright pink dildo. She still felt ashamed about doing it so 'naturally' - and enjoying the act so much - but she just couldn't bring herself to stop. In fact, she was having a hard time just holding it down to once-a-day. With the dildo, it was even more intense, and it felt so damned good...

Cyndi, who had truly believed the hypothesis she'd laid out as James Wraithe, began to understand why this had happened to her. After two weeks of life as a woman, she was starting to see just how arrogant her view had been. Not only had she - unknowingly - held that chauvinistic attitude in her personal life, but she'd had the gall to publish it as a scientific theory in a respected journal. She wasn't quite ready to forgive Leeds and Simmons - but she was beginning to understand why they'd done it, Leeds especially. A woman who'd gotten to the fore-front of her profession by her brains and determination, 'James' had basically said that it had been easy - he'd completely dismissed what she'd had to go through in her life due to her gender. Cyndi was ashamed to admit it, but at least now she could see it clearly, rather than lying to herself - as a man, she'd viewed women as 'men with tits', and considered their arguments about the differences in society between men and woman merely an excuse. Now, seeing things from the other perspective, he knew just how much impact gender had on how you acted. Or rather, how you had to act to make it in the world.

"Do you have your costume?" Todd asked, breaking into Cyndi's thoughts.

"Huh ? Oh - yes, I do." Cyndi said - hoping that it fit. She hadn't even seen it yet. Since she couldn't afford to buy the clothes, Kathy had dug something up for her, but in the rush to get her make-up on (how strangely natural that delay seemed now), she hadn't had a chance for a test fitting.

Todd nodded. "Okay - this is how it works. We pay you two-fifty every night you work, and you can schedule as many nights a week as you want. However, you have to give as a weeks notice if you're going to miss a night. Tips earned on-stage are yours, straight out. You can - and we urge you to - do private dances. Minimum price at the tables, ten bucks - twenty in the back rooms. We split the money for private dances, half-and-half. Only other rule - touching above the waist is fine, anything lower is a no-no. Like boxing - nothing below the belt."

Cyndi nodded, her throat dry. "Got it. I'm trying to make some money, so about scheduling "

Todd held up a hand. "You work tonight. First dance is at nine-thirty. That's what time you have to be here. Second dance is at one. You can do private dances if you want tonight. After we see how the crowd likes you - and how you like the work - then we'll talk scheduling. Okay?"

Taking a deep breath, Cyndi agreed - it did sound fair.

"Good - see you at nine. Dressing rooms in back, and you get all the free water and soft-drinks at the bar you can handle."

* * * * *

"Good luck!" Sophia said, making one last check of her make-up. The slender black woman smiled at Cyndi one last time than walked - swayed - out of the dressing room.

Taking a deep breath, Cyndi began to get ready. She'd already done her make-up, with Sofia's help - a bright red lipstick, lots of mascara and eye-shadow. 'Thankfully', her rather unique hair required almost no work.

Now, all she had to do was get dressed - then go out and undress in front of a crowd of leering men.

Cyndi started with the lacy black panties - what little of them there was. Useless as a true undergarment, the tiny garment barely covered her crotch, and felt more than just a little weird as it slid between her firm, full ass cheeks, drawn tight around her hips.

Next came the bra - a massive black garment that was black lace trimmed. It was a front clasping style, which made it a lot easier to get on - and off. Cyndi clasped the massive GGG-cup garment around her huge, firm tits, which were so firm and round that they didn't need the support of the garment. The sensation as it closed over her huge nipples almost made it worthwhile wearing it though.

Then came the black nylons. The silky material slide easily up her silky smooth legs, held in place by the built-in garters in the black lace top. Cyndi then spent several minutes ensuring that the floral lace pattern that ran down the outside side of each stocking was straight.

Over the tiny panties came a tight black skirt that hung to just above her knees and clung to the curve of her hips and ass. A short-sleeved 'button front' blouse was tucked into it - the front 'buttons' actually easy-opening snaps. The blouse molded itself to the impressive bulge of her tits, and was clasped all the way up to the collar, where she clipped into place a red clip-on tie.

Then she stepped into a pair of black platform shoes with seven-inch tall stiletto heels, and tied on the little 'apron' around her waist, complete with the fake, lightweight plastic pen and pad that completed her sexy little 'waitress' costume. Trying to control her mild trembling, Cyndi went to stand by the door of the dressing area.

"That was sexy Sophia, guys - let's keep the applause going for her. She's now available for private dances, just get her attention. Now, please put your hands together to welcome our next dancer onstage. Let's hear it for Cyndi Staxx!"

Taking a deep breath, Cyndi affixed a smile to her face as the heavy beat of the music rose, and forced herself to walk with the exaggerated feminine, seductive stride that Kathy had taught her as she headed to the stage.

She almost broke stride as she came into view of the men. Not because of the butterflies in her stomach, or the stage fright - but because of the way the applause doubled and redoubled as the crowd of guys caught sight of the petite, big-titted pixie with the two-tone hair. The veritable wave of lustful appreciation rolled over her, taking her by surprise.

Ankling on the stage, she began to move in time with the beat, heeding Kathy's advice to make eye-contact with the patrons - but not too long for any one. She let her slender, dainty hands slide across her clothed body sensuously as she moved, occasionally lifting the skirt slightly or playing with the 'buttons' of her blouse.

The first item she removed was the tie - and was amazed at the roar of approval as the red piece of fabric came off. Likewise the apron - she hadn't even shown anything yet, and the guys seemed to be going nuts.

Then, a few minutes later, she tore open the blouse's snaps and began playing with her bra-encased tits - and the crowd let her know how they felt. That's when Cyndi discovered something amazing...

She was enjoying all the attention she was getting. A lot. And even more, the combination of highly appreciate attention, plus her own hands on her body was getting her horny. Very, very horny.

By the time the skirt came off, she wasn't forcing herself to dance - with no effort, she was moving incredibly sensuously to the music in what was practically a masturbatory dance. She couldn't believe how turned on she was by doing this - her nipples were rock hard, and an all-too-pleasant heat was growing in her crotch as the men whistled and applauded. And she still wasn't naked yet!

By the time she was naked, her hands cupping her massive, bare tits and sliding suggestively over her hot, wet crotch, the men were practically lining up with five-dollar bills in their mouth for her attention. One by one, she extracted the cash by squeezing her massive tits around it and drawing it away, then giving the man a quick, closed-mouth kiss before moving onto the next one. And each time she touched a man, briefly, she felt like she was going to orgasm right then and there - she'd never been so aroused in her whole life.

Over the next hours, as she did private dances and her second show, that intense arousal just continued to build. Unlike when she was male, there was no 'hydraulic pressure' factor to create a point where the arousal became too much - it just continued to grow and grow. Cyndi's fears and disgust - hell, most rational thought - disappeared and the intense arousal she was experiencing. More than just sexual arousal, however, was an incredible sensation that came from being so.. wanted, so admired, so...

..so damned sexy. These men acted like she were some sort of sexual goddess - she could here the reverence (and lust) when they spoke, and see it in their eyes. It was incredible, inflating her ego as quickly as her libido.

By the time the club closed, she felt like her body was on fire, thrumming with sexual energy. Her hands, seemingly by themselves, kept trying to migrate to her tits or sopping wet cunt. Only a few hours ago, she would have wanted to stop doing this - now, she only wanted to get back to her room, so she could give in to the pure lust that thrummed through her veins. Quickly changing into her street clothes, Cyndi hung her costume up to be dry-cleaned - Todd had accepted her working every day, happily - and headed quickly out to the bus stop.

She shifted from foot to foot, waiting impatiently, when a car glided to a stop, and the window came down - revealing a vaguely familiar face.

The handsome young man smiled at her. "Hi Cyndi - I caught your act. You were incredible! If I'd known, I would have got your autograph that night." He paused. "Um... the busses stopped running this route a half-hour ago. Do you need a lift somewhere?"

Then Cyndi placed the face - Bill, the convenience store clerk she'd met that first night as a woman. "Yeah - that'd be great." Cyndi agreed, her voice husky with her lust. She climbed into the car.

"So - where to?" Bill asked, smiling at her.

Cyndi looked at Bill's handsome face - then her gaze, helplessly, slid down to the large erection straining his pants. For a long second, she didn't answer, a small, male voice screaming at her in her mind while the lust throbbing through her veins drowned it out.

She closed her eyes and took a deep breath while Bill, his smile slipping, repeated her name.

Despite her lust, Cyndi was mostly in control of herself - she knew that she was experience an incredible urge to fuck Bill's brain out right now. She also knew that the thought was also repugnant to her, as she'd been a male only a few weeks earlier.

But she also knew that sex with Bill would feel damned good. And she knew that, technically, there'd be nothing wrong. Despite her male upbringing and history, she was, now, fully female - and a very, very horny one at that. She could either go back to her room for some unsatisfactory masturbation...

...or...

"Bill..." Cyndi said looking at him. "Can I... tell you something?" Bill frowned in confusion. "Um... sure."

Cyndi swallowed, and gave Bill the truth - sort of. "I... I've never had sex. I never really found men attractive, and I have never had lesbian sex. But tonight, on stage... I've never been so turned on before in my life, and I need... I want" She paused, and looked straight into Bill's eyes. "Bill - will you have sex with me? It'll be my first time, so it'll be awkward, but "

Bill's already stiffening cock went rock hard. His own voice became husky as he nodded. "I find it hard to believe that you have never but if you say so, then I believe it. My place?"

Cyndi nodded, trembling with lust, and confusion, and nervousness. "Yes and please hurry."

* * * * *

Both 'gentle' and 'nervous' were forgotten by the time they reached the door of Bill's apartment.

As they burst through the door of the apartment, they were locked in a passionate kiss. Cyndi's hands were already pulling his shirt off, and as soon as he slammed the door shut, Bill returned the favor. Both of them wore shirts with buttons - and these they simply tore off, not breaking their passionate tongue-dancing as they threw the torn garments aside.

Cyndi's hands flew to Bill's ass and she ground her crotch against his in a circular motion as her undid her bra. She pulled away from him slightly, allowing the massive undergarment to drop away, then pulled her huge tits tightly against his chest, moaning slightly in the back of her throat as her huge, engorged nipples pressed firmly against his skin.

Eagerly, her hands attacked the waistband of his pants as his hands went to her skirt. Awkwardly, the two managed to get their lower garments, including underwear, off without breaking their embrace.

Cyndi had lost all her reservations. Having decided to do it, her only concern now was fucking Bill as soon as possible - her body felt like it was on fire. During the ride over, she'd come to a startling revelation - she just didn't care anymore. Sure, she'd been male once - but this new body was more sensitive, more sexual than she'd ever been as a man - and she was going to enjoy it. There was no shame, no hesitation. Even in the almost painful throes of lust, she was getting more out of this body than she could ever have dreamed of as a man.

So she had no hesitation in being the aggressor in the act. Pushing Bill back against the wall, she lifted one sexy leg, sliding it sensuously along his more muscular one - then, with a convulsive thrust of her hips, willingly - eagerly - impaled her hot, wet cunt on his hard cock.

Cyndi cried out as an explosion of pleasure rocked her brain. She cried out again as she thrust, hard, then pulled back again, repeating the almost convulsive movement in an ever-increasing rhythm.

"Oh God!" She screamed, overwhelmed - her experience with the dildo hadn't even come close to this incredible sensation. "I... never knew.. it could feel... soooo.. GOOD!"

Bill moaned too. "Oh.. God..!" he agreed - then his eyes widened. "It... really is... your first... time?"

"Mmm... mmm..." Cynthia moaned. "YES! Oh, Bill - FUCK ME!"

And she dragged the stunned young man's lips down to her own as she continued to drive her hips forward, Bill responding with only a slight, conscience-driven hesitation.

Orgasm came like a string of fire-crackers that exploded with bursts of ecstasy rather than noise. Cyndi screamed, losing control of her finer motor functions as pure, mind-numbing pleasure took her. Her sopping cunt clenched tight around Bill's cock as he continued to drive into her, shooting his load deep within her new womanhood.

Covered in sweat, the two lovers slumped against the wall in each other's arms. Despite the incredible sensations of female orgasm, Cyndi discovered, amazed, that the sex had only dulled the bright edge of her lust - not sated it.

Gently, Bill disengaged from her, panting. "I.. I'm sorry, Cyndi. I just didn't believe..." He stammered, head hung low.

Cyndi stared at him for a moment, not getting it - then it hit.

Bill thought he'd taken advantage of her. He thought that, driven by her lust, she'd done something she wouldn't have done normally...

Then, blinking, Cyndi sunk slowly to the couch. Had she? Had lust driven her to do something? Yes.

She had no doubt about it, now. The hormones that had been floating around in her blood were a chemical that had created a reaction. Like drinking, or doing drugs, she'd been in an 'altered mental state' - high on pure, unadulterated lust. She could see that clearly now. Her need for satisfaction had erased her objections to having sex with a man. She would have had orgasms, still - but by masturbation, if it weren't for the fact that she'd been so horny that she couldn't think straight. Her lust hadn't been for a man, per se - just for release.

Now, with the edge taken off her lust, she could think clearly again.

And it didn't matter. She knew that she'd never have considered it before, in her right mind. But now, she was in her right mind again - but having had sex with a man.

And, although it felt weird, emotionally - it hadn't been sickening, or disgusting. It had been wonderful.

"That's all right, Bill." Cyndi said, forcing herself to smile cheerfully. Now that the awkwardness had returned, she had to hide it - because her own confused emotions weren't enough to erase her new urges for sex, and were no excuse to make Bill feel bad. "I was just too horny to let you take your time. It was my fault - you can show me how good it can be when you're ready."

Bill gaped at her, not realizing that her 'misunderstanding' of his apology was on purpose.

Cyndi continued. "God! If I'd known how it felt, I would have done it a long time ago..." - a half-truth - "...but I'll just have to take what I can get."

Then she paused, as if a thought had struck her. "That... that is, if you don't mind being my teacher." She said, slowly. "I don't want to give the wrong impression - if it had been anyone else who'd offered me the ride, I wouldn't have had sex with them..." an outright lie "...but I haven't been able to get you out of my mind since I met you - and when you offered me a lift..."

Bill looked at her, needing to believe. "You mean that?" He asked - and looked her straight in the eye for the answer.

"Bill - the first night we met, you touched my arm, and I felt something I'd never felt before." She said, with utter and complete sincerity. "And the way your ass looked, packed into those jeans..."

And seeing nothing but the utter truth in Cyndi's eyes, Bill relaxed, and smiled slowly. "You know... I do have a spare bedroom if you'd like to move in..."

Cyndi laughed - honestly, with a clear, sweet sound. "Bill, honey - I'd love to move in with you. But what the hell does a second room have to do with it? The question is... how big is your bed?"

Minutes later, she found out that it was... big enough.

...as was the couch.... and the kitchen table... and the front seat of the car....

* * * * *

Karen Leeds knocked on the door to the apartment that the club manager had given them. She glanced over at Simmons with a fretful look.

"God - having to work as a stripper for the two months - I hope she isn't too angry. This went a little farther than I'd intended." She said, rubbing her hands together nervously.

"I " Simmons started to reply, then he stopped short as the door swung open.

Cyndi leaned against the door-frame. Her huge tits swayed gently under her t-shirt at the motion. She smiled at the two scientist. "Oh - hi. I was beginning to think you weren't ever going to get back in touch with me."

The two scientist shared a confused look at her chipper manner. "Um " Simmons said.

Cyndi waved a dainty hand. "Forget it. I owe you two an apology - and a very, very heartfelt thank- you."

"Wha ?" Leeds asked, flabbergasted.

Cyndi winked at her. "Hey - not only did I go from a boring, dry life as an arrogant chauvinist to a fun, exiting new life, but I got younger in the deal - and found somebody special too. Sure, I was pissed at first, but hey "

Leeds shook her head, incredulous. "You... you mean you don't want us to change you back?"

Cyndi smiled with sweet humor and laughed. "Well - that's probably screw up my wedding, now wouldn't it?"

And, flashing her engagement ring at the stunned scientist, Cyndi shut the door firmly on their stunned faces - and the last link to her old life.

"Honey - who was at the door?" Bill asked, coming out of the bathroom.

His bride-to-be smiled enigmatically, and held her arms out to her fiancé. "Oh - just a couple of people asking the wrong question." She giggled. "Silly them - they wanted to find out if Form follows Function, or the other way 'round."

Bill blinked, but he was used to Cyndi's sometimes quirky ways. "Oh - and what's the right question?"

"Which form has the most fun doing it's function."

BACK TO FUN ZONE

SUMMARY: Logging onto the chat room, he didn't mean to play the role of the naughty girl, but things start to change, and pretty soon his world is morphed into that of a sexy young vixen.

Applied Research

Part One

By Gunslinger

It was there, in a dozen little tell-tale reactions: the sweat-damped palms he quickly dried against the light blue fabric of his slacks; the tongue darting out to lick narrow lips that nevertheless continued feeling dry to him; the way his watery blue eyes flicked almost obsessively over the glowing screen of his laptop, triple-checking things he had already double-checked a half- dozen times before.

It was a familiar sensation - and that was part of what made it especially strange; for if the sensation itself was almost depressingly familiar to Nate, the situation he was now experiencing it under was practically diametrically opposed to the one that usually caused him to feel it.

Nathan Hawthorne ran a distracted hand through his nearly brush-cut thatch of sandy-blond hair, and tried to understand where the sense of nervous excitement that thrummed through his tall, gangly body was coming from. This tingling sensation that came from a hyper-awareness of infinite possibilities, both positive and negative, was usually reserved for 'real-life', face-to-face social interaction; the virtual anonymity of the Internet was usually his escape from social anxiety.

Then again, he as he logged into the chat-room, 'usually' he wasn't going to try and pretend he was a girl online...

The thought wrung a strained chuckle from the 25-year-old University student as he finished entering NAUGHTYHOTTIE as a user-name, and logged into the on-going chat.

In a very real way, the tall, almost painfully thin young man's social anxiety had led to his major in sociology, with a minor in psychology. Nate had always been comfortable with computers and electronics in general, defining himself as the quintessential 'techno-nerd'. While hardware and software might be complex, it was also reliably consistent; assuming nothing was actually broken, when you pressed button 'x', you got outcome 'y', every single time. Reliably and consistently.

People, on the other hand... not so much.

Which was what had spurred the younger version of Nate to choose his academic career path in hopes of finding an underlying pattern - a 'base code', if you will - to human interaction, something he could learn and understand that would give him 'rules' for interacting with people.

All of which had somehow conspired to lead him up to this moment: logging into an on-line chat-room in the guise of female fan of the so-called 'reality TV' show Party Chix, all as part of his research for his thesis paper.

Grabbing a bottle of Mountain Dew Code Red, Nate took a swig of the lukewarm liquid as he scrolled through the on-going chats. The window for his - for NAUGHTYHOTTIE's - own chat wasn't yet active; a fact that represented one of the reasons he'd chosen this particular site. A very much 'adult' chat-room, run by the producers of the TV show that needed 'informed consent' releases for anything that might make it into the show about the urban party scene, the chatroom access was very heavily moderated for legal reasons.

Sure enough, minutes later a private chat window popped up on Nate's screen, the red-lettered username that denoted administrator/moderator status at the top reading WEBMISTRESS. A pre-formatted legal disclaimer scrolled by, with the requirement to 'digitally acknowledge' acceptance of the conditions by stating the login information about age, sex and location was accurate.

WEBMISTRESS: Do you swear A/S/L is accurate?

The cursor blinked accusingly at Nate, awaiting an answer, and he took another quick swig of soda, mind racing. He'd already thought about this, and there was no real way for them to know he was lying... right?

...except that both the ethics in sociology and Nate's own fundamentally honest nature argued against even this 'little white lie'.

NAUGHTYHOTTIE: Actually male student, Rutgers University, 25. Doing sociology experiment for Sociology of Sexuality and Gender. Would still like access under assumed name/gender, please.

Following this up with a hyperlink to the course outline, Nate waited almost breathlessly, time seeming to drag out as he waited for the response. Then, after a scant two minutes that seemed to drag on for hours:

WEBMISTRESS: Of course - I'm delighted to have the chance to expand your education on gender and sexuality. By all means - go wild, 'young lady'.

With that, Nate's chat window opened up to full functionality, allowing him to interact with the others on the virtual message board.

It was an interaction that - thanks to the moderation that was supposed to ensure A/S/L - meant 'she' was supposedly exactly what 'her' profile indicated; a sort of virtual sex-change, if you will. Theoretically, this would allow Nate to interact with others as a woman, and see whether or not others responded to 'her' the way Nate's assumptions dictated the interaction would go.

At first, that interaction was sporadic, short, and hesitant - but, gradually, Nate began to feel more comfortable, settling into his assumed 'persona', and his responses became longer and more involved as he played out 'her' role on the chat-board. Soon, his long, boney fingers were flying over the keyboard, the gloss of his hot-pink fingernails flashing in the white glow of the LCD screen...

Nate's fingers seems to tangle in themselves as his mind locked up. A wave of disorientation swept over him, hitting almost like a physical blow, causing him to flinch and gasp in pain and confusion.

Slowly, his pale eyes wide, Nate slowly lifted his hand and held it in front of him, staring at the glossy, hot-pink nail polish that adorned his rather ragged, oft-bitten fingernails.

Fingernails he quite clearly remember painting. Painting with the cheap, store brand nail polish - polish that was sitting beside the bottle of soda and bag of liquorice whips he'd all purchased at the same time at the local pharmacy.

He remembered the embarrassment as he'd almost randomly picked a shade from the small collection of cheap cosmetics the store carried. He remembered coming up with a lie about his girlfriend sending him out for a last-minute purchase of nail polish she needed in order to match the new outfit she'd purchased after a last-minute call to replace a sick bridesmaid for an old friend... and not needing the lie as the disinterested clerk had rung up the three items without so much as an askew glance at the nail polish.

He remembered every detail of the purchase, every detail of the sensations of awkwardly applying the nail polish; he remember just how incredibly awkward and 'stupid' his left hand had seemed as it tried to apply the glossy polish to his right hand's nails. He remembered every detail, including the 'why'; namely, that it was helping 'get into character'.

What he couldn't remember was two very discrete things - the first being why, at any point, this could seem a logical and reasonable thing to do; and, much more germane to that sense of disorientation, why he'd felt so shocked and surprised at the sight of the nails, since he so clearly remember how much he'd been noticing all along not only that his fingernails had been polish-clad as he typed, but the strong and unmistakable scent of nail polish that had been floating around him ever since he'd applied it.

How on earth was it possible for something so strange and unusual that you couldn't help but continuously notice it the entire time somehow manage to 'catch him by surprise'...?

Frowning, Nate continued warily watching the short, neatly trimmed pink fingernails of his right hand, almost as if daring them to somehow confuse him again, as his left hand idly reached out for the nearly-empty bottle sitting on his table next to his laptop. Bringing it to his lips, Nate drained the lukewarm mouthful of liquid in the bottom of the bottle, hawk-like nose wrinkling in distaste at the yeasty flavor of the flat, warm beer as it slid down his throat.

Still frowning, Nate pushed away from the table, the rubber soles of his battered brown deck shoes squeaking slightly on the cheap linoleum as he crossed the kitchen of his apartment lost in thought.

Something here just wasn't adding up. He certainly couldn't put his finger on it, and perhaps most people would have ignored such a vague feeling of disquiet, but the core of Nate's personality sought out and thrived up 'perfect' order and comprehensibility - even the most minor, inconsequential 'inexplicability' bothered and worried him, and he simply could not get how strange both his original decision and the resulting, out- of-place confusion were.

Placing the empty bottle on the chipped and faded Formica counter beside the bulky old Frigidaire, Nate pulled open the door to the cranky old appliance and grabbed another beer, his pink-nailed fingers twisting off the bottle-cap and flipping it towards the nearby garbage can. As he lifted the bottle towards his lips, he idly lifted his hand towards his chest - and barely remembered at the last second to use the heel of his hand to, as the cheap pink plastic press-on nails would certainly have popped off if he'd used them to scratch at a chest made itchy by the unfamiliar feel of the training bra's cups against his hairy chest.

With a small snort at the 'close call', Nate glanced at the cheap pink nails out of the 'Made in China' teen make-up starter-kit-slash-toy, then started to turn back towards the unfinished post waiting on the laptop...

...only to come to a frozen dead stop in the middle of his kitchen.

Training bra?

His face completely and utterly expressionless, Nate continued staring straight ahead as, with slow, overly precise movements, he reached behind him to place the beer on the counter. Still staring fixedly at the far wall without seeing it, he then slowly undid the buttons on his rather rumpled white cotton shirt, mindfully careful of the long press-on nails tipping his slender fingers.

Only when his shirt was hanging open did Nate lower his gaze, woodenly surveying the extremely plain white training bra encircling his pale chest. A thin mat of sandy body-hair formed a trail leading downward from between his pectoral muscles, the line momentarily hidden by the bandeau where the two triangles of the empty cups met.

He remembered the bra - remembered buying it, remembered the embarrassed, awkward effort of putting it on. Remembered every half- embarrassed, half-excited moment from the moment he'd walked out of the store this morning, somehow certain everybody he passed on the street somehow knew what the unmarked white plastic bag he carried contained.

He remembered every single second of it, from the almost impulsive decision to purchase the bra to further his research to the moment when he'd scratched at it through the shirt with the heel of his hand and been utterly unsurprised to find it there.

What Nate couldn't remember, however, was any single second in his life that such a half-formed, impulsive choice would ever have made the least bit of sense to him; much less actually going on to carry through such an unlikely and out-of-character action.

It simply wasn't something methodical, think-everything-though - hell, overthink everything - Nathan Hawthorne would ever do.

Yet... he'd done it. He remembered doing it. He was, right this instant, looking down at incontrovertible proof that he had done it...

...and yet it still made absolutely no sense to him.

"What. The. Hell?" Nate wondered aloud, his voice completely devoid of inflection as his orderly, nit-pickety mind tried to assess something that very mind managed to insist was both utterly impossible and yet also manifestly occurring.

How long he stood there, trying to work out two diametrically opposed, mutually exclusive views on his own subjective schism between what he knew himself capable and willing to do versus what he clearly had done despite that, Nate didn't know - but it was long enough that the chat-board chimed to warn him it was about to log him out due to inactivity.

The sound shook him out of the mind-whirling funk, and feeling dazed he walked over to the table, the short, broad heels of his black leather loafers thumping across the floor. Daintily slipping into the chair, he idly smoothed the hem of his navy-blue skirt down over his knobby knees, then flipped and errant lock of chestnut hair out of his eyes and peered at the glowing screen to see where he'd left off; out of instinct, his pale hazel eyes went to the top of the screen:

GHOST_OF_GLORIA_S: Does anybody really believe that? Sure, being network TV, they don't show hardcore confirmation, but girls who look like that, dress like that, ACT like that...? If they're NOT little sluts and tramps, then they're bitchy cock-teasers of the first order. Either way, they're setting gender equality back by at LEAST a century!

WEBMISTRESS: Interesting point, G.G.S - but, given her screen-name, I have the feeling NaughtyHottie might have a different point of view. Why don't you share that P.O.V with us, NH?

NAUGHTYHOTTIE: Geez, Ghost - they're just having some fun! Loosen up! They - all us women - HAVE the 'right to choose'; forcing us all to dress and act to YOUR standards is as bad as the very scenario of men and society forcing us to look and be sexy!

Nate blinked at the screen, eyes rapidly reading the rest of the growing argument in which he - in his feminine persona - had defended 'her' right to be sexy, until reaching where he'd left off when he'd been surprised at the sight of his half-inch long candy-apple red nails:

WEBMISTRESS: A very good point, Hottie - that comparison of a party being a 'stage' and the clothes a 'costume' was very apt - and clearly appreciated by the guys!

NAUGHTYHOTTIE: Exactly! I get to decide if I wear tight, sexy clothes and high heels, because I enjoy showing off what I've got it while I'm still young enough to both have it and enjoy it. When I'm old, wrinkled and saggy, no guys are going to want to ogle my withered body, so I HAVE to do it now if I'm ever going to explore my sexual opportunities - OPPORTUNITIES, note. I may get some guys so hot they WANT to have sex with me, but I choose ...and that's where he'd left off, the cursor blinking on an unfinished post.

Before logging on, Nate had carefully crafted a persona - using what he'd learned in his gender studies thus far to create what he believed to be a credible example of what a young woman who liked Party Chix would be. He'd then immediately learned something new when he'd logged in, only to find that he'd mistakenly assumed the large female demographic of the show was made up of women who were FANS of the girls in the show - when, in fact, most women on the forum seemed to enjoy HATING the 'vapid tramps' and 'stupid sluts' and the 'debauched, desperate attention- whoring' the show chronicled.

Despite having realized that, he - as normal given his meticulously pre- planning nature - had 'stuck to the game-plan', and the resulting point of view his avatar expressed in the argument was perfectly in keeping with that persona.

It was also, however, considerably at odds with what socially anxious and never-eager-to-'flaunt' Nate actually believed and acted upon...

...which was why his slowly increasing sensation of disorientation redoubled with the strongly renewed memories of feeling EXACTLY that way as he'd made his purchases and preparations to be as feminine and 'showy' as possible to 'get into character' before logging in this evening.

None of it made any sense at all.

The computer chimed a second time to indicate that it was about to log him well, NaughtyHottie - off the chat board, and a very confused Nate was inclined to let it do so...

Which was why it was so surprising when the screen blinked and refreshed and Nate gasped to realize that, without even consciously thinking about it, he'd reached out and finished his interrupted post, then clicked to submit it.

"Wait... Did I just...?" Nate asked himself in a low voice, his head feeling as if stuffed full of cotton - or, rather, with mutually exclusive thoughts and memories. Grimacing, he reached out to click on the 'log out' link - when he hand was stayed by a new message window popping up:

WEBMISTRESS: Even if you go now, there's no stopping it. You have a lesson to learn; the changes are necessary for that lesson to take. The more you fight it, the more it will hurt - the best thing to do is stop trying to think, and just go with the flow.

"What the hell...?" Nate demanded to the universe at large - and the threw his hands up to his head, crying out in a breathy voice, eyes clenched tight as a sharp, jagged bolt of pain ripped through his head. From somewhere nearby, brassy music flared to nerve-jangling life, and a strange breeze, laden with scents Nate's mind couldn't quite identify, but nevertheless insisted on labelling 'feminine', sprung to brief light around him.

Then, as quick as it all had come, the pain and strong sense of dislocated mental confusion faded... and, his longer-term memory insisted, everything was exactly the way it had always been, never mind what his short-term memory was insisting to the contrary.

Feeling much like he'd just awoken from a nightmare, the details of which were rapidly draining from memory in the light of day, Nate let his rather dazed gaze seep across the room.

"This... isn't right..." He muttered to himself in his soft, androgynous voice even as he frowned in confusion, due to the simple fact that he had no idea why it 'wasn't right'.

Pushing his caster-mounted office chair back from the compact computer desk he'd set up in the 'breakfast nook' of his modestly upscale high-rise apartment, Nate stood and, almost dreamily, smoothed his dark blue above-the-knee skirt over his skinny, pale legs. The three-inch-tall stacked heels of his classic black patent-leather 'Mary Jane' pumps 'clocking' off the black-and-white diamond-pattern tile floor, Nate dreamily walked out of the nook and into the kitchen proper, thoughtlessly tossing a lock of his jaw-length chestnut hair out of the way of one hazel eye.

Slowly, Nate walked through the apartment - and everything he saw somehow managed to 'take him by surprise', even though the instant he thought about it, he could remember not only when and where he bought it, but also why.

The only problem was, not a single damned one of those remembered decisions made the least bit of damned sense to Nate.

In retrospect, the decisions he quite clearly remembered making seemed entirely too...feminine. Moreover, the associated emotions - happiness, joy, excitement, pride - that had been so very evident according to his memories, was now missing completely. As he finished his impromptu inventory of well-remembered and 'much loved' possessions, all he felt now was confusion, dismay, and dislike.

The full-length mirror mounted on the back of the bathroom door was the worst - for the person looking back from it bore little resemblance to how Nate felt he should look, regardless of what his memories insisted about him working long and hard to 'happily' look as...

...as...

Well, his initial reaction had been '...as feminine' as he now did, but that wasn't true at all. Yes, he was wearing women's clothing, and yes, he had lightly applied make-up and smooth, lightly tanned skin, but the person inside the female clothing looked more or less androgynous.

Which, considering his emotions insisted that genderless figure was 'too feminine' while his memories of desperately wishing he'd been born female insisted it wasn't feminine enough only made his head ache all the more.

Angrily, he plopped himself down on the closed seat of the toilet, and went to yank the damned Mary Janes off his feet - and then hesitated, feeling oddly reluctant.

He hated the damned things... and yet, he remembered being so excited when he bought, of loving them even as his ankles ached as he awkwardly stumbled around in them, trying to get used to the high heels, the pride and joy he'd felt just earlier today at having since mastered the skill needed.

The skill he was absolutely sure he didn't want, and in fact, would never have wanted, regardless of what his memory insisted - and the skill he'd undeniably be using just moments before when he'd competently and confidently walked around the apartment in these very heels.

With an annoyed grunt, Nate overcame that strange reluctance, yanking the damned shoes off and tossing them aside.

There was something very, very strange going on her, and while his memories insisted that years had passed since the point at which his emotional and logical choices had deviated from what he thought/knew they SHOULD be, that same out-of-tune logic was somehow also insisting that the REAL deviation began earlier today, when he'd logged onto the Party Chix website.

His lightly pink-clad lips set in a thin line of determination, Nate strode out of the bathroom in his stocking feet, determined to re-read that strange, vaguely threatening post again, and see if he could use his impressive intellect to determine what the hell was going on. Crossing the kitchen, he almost absently picked up the bottle he'd set down a short while ago...

while frowning and wondering why, exactly, he'd simply left the freshly- opened bottle in the kitchen, rather than bring it to the computer with him. Plunking his ass (padded with a 'body shaper' girdle) into the chair, Nate re- read the message... and gasped as his eyes took it in:

WEBMISTRESS: You go girl - there's no stopping you now! It's a good lesson to learn; change is often necessary to grow. If you don't fight, you can't get hurt - but you also can never win, and no matter what you may 'think', you'll never 'know'.

Frowning, Nate checked some things in his browser - and the frown deepened when he could find no indication that the 'other last post' he remember had ever existed.

In fact, even his own memories insisted this had always been the post made what did make sense was the knowledge that he'd been confused, angry, and more than a little afraid by the 'last post', especially since what he was reading (and remembered reading before) simply didn't provide and logical reason for him to feel those emotions and mental confusion.

All in all, it was all beginning to make Nattie's head ache, and 'she' took a long and soothing swallow of the ice-cold vodka cooler. The cool liquid sliding down 'her' throat mingled with the warm burn of the alcohol as it hit 'her' stomach, and 'she' sighed with something like relief as booze- influenced softness smoothed some of the unusually jagged edges in 'her' strangely conflicted thoughts.

After all, Nattie thought with a frown as 'her' long-nailed fingers returned to the keyboard, 'she' HAD be nervous and uncomfortable when 'she' had decided to stop 'playing around', and start living full-time en femme, but that had been over a year ago...!

Maybe, 'she' decided while responding to a new post, it was because 'she' had logged on to this website under 'her' feminine persona - but that was actually LESS of a 'lie' that living the persona... wasn't it?

Perhaps, Nattie mused, that was the source of unhappiness 'she' felt - the acknowledgement that even 'she' felt she was 'living a lie'. After all, no matter what 'she' might have wished from the universe, it certainly wasn't...

...HER fault that she wasn't born as beautiful and sexy as some of the smoking hot girls on that hot new show Party Chix. The smoking hot girls who were clearly having a lot more fun in life than she was, Natalie thought, moodily.

Oh, not that she was actually ugly or fat or anything like that - or that 'the universe' had managed to bless her in other ways - Natalie admitted to herself with a wry smile as she finished her wine cooler and thought about how few other girls would complain about a life like hers. Still, it was maybe a matter of perspective - 'the grass is always greener' - Natalie thought to herself, as she walked out of the penthouse's formal dining room, where she'd set up her laptop on the large mahogany table. Despite any other benefits in her life, she'd always felt strangely, almost confusingly, unhappy in her own body, always feeling like there was something wrong with it, no matter what anybody else - or even she herself - tried to say to convince her otherwise.

Looking around, Natalie couldn't help but be wryly aware of those 'other benefits' as the tapering, 3 1/2-inch heels of her black 'mary-jane' pump rang against the marble floor of a kitchen that sometimes seemed large enough to double as an airplane hanger. Still, having extremely wealthy parents willing to let their daughter live 'away from home' in nearly sinful luxury didn't change how Natalie felt about herself, and she placed the empty bottle on the counter in passing as she headed into the massive bathroom to stare wistfully at the reflection in the floor-to-ceiling mirror that took up nearly one wall of the bathroom.

No, certainly not 'ugly' - but not really any better than 'blandly pretty' Natalie thought to herself with a sigh, eying the well formed, but generally unremarkable body nature had given her. Oh, She dressed to play up what she did have... but, as she sighed again and unbuttoned the ivory short-sleeved blouse, that was just part of the problem.

With yet another sigh, she brought her long-nailed hands up to lightly cup the B-cup breasts encased in the simple white bra - one of the 'not enoughs', as far as Natalie was concerned.

"Maybe I wouldn't feel so... so uncomfortable with my body if my breasts were bigger..." she muttered to herself...

...and then Nautica Hawtine blinked in confusion as her own words registered on her ear.

"If I'd been naturally blessed with bigger breasts, I mean, of course..." She gave her reflection a somewhat confused little chuckle, still cupping the impressive DD-cup breasts in the lace edged support bra holding her 'upgraded' beauties. "As much as I might wish Mother Nature has supplied you..." she told her breasts' reflection "...I'm satisfied with the 'second best' of implants - and I certainly wouldn't go larger!"

Especially not with my generally slender frame, she thought with a grin, as her tanned hands re-wrapped the silver wrap-around blouse in place, the v-neck displaying a nice view of her golden cleavage. Of course, the generally slender build was why she'd had smaller breasts than what she would have preferred, naturally, she thought as she tucked a strand of dark-brown hair behind a well-shaped ear sporting a small golden earring. With a shake of her head, Nautica swiveled on one slender, five-inch heel of her black 'classic' pumps, her tastefully understated jewelry glistening in the light as she made her way across the kitchen, picking up a fresh wine cooler along the way.

She was just about to re-enter the dining-slash-computer room - when the sound of the front door being unlocked stopped her dead. Frowning, Naticua diverted to the lobby, and her confusion grew as a complete stranger walked...

Nautica cried in in confusion, almost dropping the wine-cooler as a brief bolt of pain shot through her head.

"Nautica!" A strange voice rang out in concern... except, Nautica thought as the thankfully brief bolt passed, it wasn't strange. In fact, she thought in bemusement, it was nearly identical to her own.

Which wasn't surprising, considering that it came from a woman who looked nearly identical to Nautica in every way.

Same bronzed-olive complexion. Same strong-yet-feminine face with dark, exotic eyes, framed by the same of black, slightly wavy hair. The same trim, yet still shapely figures...

...and they were even wearing the exact same crushed-velvet dresses that went from pewter at the shoulder to black at the hem of the tight fitting skirts that reveled equally well shaped legs - and whose matching V- necklines displayed identical dusky-golden cleavage of matching all- naturall DDD-cup endowments.

"You okay, Nautica...?" Kincadia Hawtine asked with concern - and Nautica Hawtine managed a somewhat confused smile as she lifted her glass of chilled white wine.

"Might have had a bit too much..." She said in way of half-explanation... both to her sister and herself.

"Well, no reason not to get the party started a little early - but Party Chix doesn't even start for another ten minutes!" Kincadia chuckled. "Grab another glass and the bottle, and we'll get settled in."

It sounded just fine to Nautica, who clearly hadn't realized how tipsy she'd let herself get, and she declined a 'top up' of the expensive wine as she settled onto the large, sinfully comfortable couch and flipped on the big, wall-mounted HDTV while Kincadia filled her own 'balloon' wine glass...

...and then gestured with the bottle towards Jeff, sitting in a matching arm- chair on Kincadia's side of the couch.

"No, thanks - I'm more of a beer..." Jeff chuckled. He leaned forward, peering past a suddenly very confused-feeling Nautica, and continued: "... speaking of which, Mark - beer me!"

"No problem, buddy!" The handsome brunette replied to the broad- shouldered carrot-top, then turned to the sexy, if somewhat blowsy-looking (bottle) blonde perched on the arm of the chair, her arm passively around Mark's neck.

"You're gonna have to let go a second, Honey-Buns..." He told her, with a grin.

"Aw, but I don't want to..." The busty peroxide blonde whined in a somewhat nasally voice that turned the only half-joking complaint into "Aw, bud I don wanna..." - even as she reluctantly complied, just long enough for her boyfriend to fish a beer out of the open cooler beside the chair, and scale it underhand to his friend.

"Thanks for letting me bring the guys along, Nautica..." The blonde said, and even now in a cheerful mode, it's somewhat nasal wine could quickly grate on Nautica's nerves - which was weird, because she'd never found her best-friend's voice annoying before, Nautica mused.

"No problem, Honey." Nautica managed what she hoped was a convincing smile for Henrietta 'Honey' Metzger.

"Hey, everybody - the show's about to start...!" Kincadia's best friend Jessica shouted through the archway separating the huge living room from the equally huge kitchen - and the bulk of the rest of the guests at the Hawtine twin's 'Party Chix Party' flowed into the room, drinks of choice in hand, as Kincadia unmuted the TV just in time for the show's theme song to fill the room.

As the show went from its club-music intro to first commercial break, Jessica approached the couch, a trio of guys in tow.

"Guys, meet our hostesses." The vivacious black woman said to the three - rather handsome, Nautica noted almost absently - young men, pointing them towards Kincadia.

Waving a dusky-golden hand first towards herself and then her sister, she said "I'm kinky, and she's naughty."

The guys gaped at her for a second - and Jessica laughed.

"Guys, meet Kincadia and Nautica Hawti." She gave them a more formal introduction.

"Aren't those the most horrendous names for parents to hang on children... especially ones that grow up into hot babes like us...?" Kinki teased the guys. Taking a long drink of the rather less-than-vintage wine to hide a strange sense of confusion, Nauti instead focused her attention only the guys as Jessica completed the introductions.

Steven was on the short side, with golden-blond hair and shoulders so broad that he seemed almost as wide as he was tall. In contrast, the second blond of the group - sun-bleached wheat blond, that was - was as tall, whippet-lean, and awesomely tanned as you would expect the self-admitted 'surf-bum' to be. Despite being introduced as Doug, for some reason that he seemed to find funny, he insisted they call him 'Grommet'. He was also best friend to the equally tanned, but dark-haired and somewhat short, Wally.

"Well guys, go ahead and make yourself comfortable..." Kinki offered with a smile - patting the couch beside her.

They ended up 'boy, girl, boy, girl, boy' - Steven on Kinki's left, Wally on Nauti's right, and the up-beat, funny, and extremely charming Grommet in the 'sweet spot' between the two identical sisters, the envy of his two friends...

...and, most likely, every other warm-blooded male (and perhaps not a few hot-blooded female) viewers who would see this when it aired next week, Nauti thought a bit sourly as she watched one of the Party Chix camera crews film the 'only mildly staged' introductions. Re-introductions, of course - some very careful 'prep work' had been done before the cameras had started rolling on this special sure-to-grab-ratings first episode of the spin-off. For herself, Nauti still wasn't sure letting Kinki talk her into pitching Party Chix: Hawti Penthouse had been a good idea, no matter how wildly enthusiastic the production company had been over it.

Of course, when the producer was your porn producer turned just-barely- not-porn 'reality TV' producer, and the co-producer was your ex-pornstar mother, AND the deal allowed you to live lavishly on a combination of profits from Hawti Productions shows, the 'location budget' allotted to the new series, and your own not-inconsiderable income as one of the stars... well, you couldn't expect life not to be a little 'unusual'.

Taking a sip of the cheap champagne - actually, 'California sparkling wine' - Nauti once again considered the odd duality that contributed to this odd feeling that it wasn't really HER life she was living, but somebody else's.

After all, 'reality TV' was anything but reality... and the Hawti sisters were anything but the 'dumb, filthy-rich playgirl heiresses' that might come across on TV.

Oh, they weren't hurting, and the massive and luxurious penthouse was real enough... but the 'crystal champagne flews' were bulk glassware filled with California bubbly, 'silk' sheets were rayon - 'luxury on a budget', as the production crew referred to the artificially implied lifestyle the girls were supposed to be leading... and that was just the tip of the iceberg.

Like the girls 'friends' Nauti thought, watching a camera crew filming a peroxide-blond bimbo all-but-lapdancing with some guy named... Matt? No, Mark, Nautica corrected herself, hiding another grimace in a sip of bubbly as she mused on having to memorize the names of her 'friends'. Of course, some were easier than others, she almost chuckled, as she watched her supposed 'best friend' grind the ass almost exposed by the scandalously short 'schoolgirl' skirt against Mark's lap - and the camera then panned up to where the equally abbreviated tied-off blouse looked ready to become explosively untied under the strain of her massive - ridiculously! - over- inflated 'stripper boobs'. Again, it was only an illusion, for it wasn't simply tied off, as wardrobe had put a VERY sturdy hook-and-snap-clasp behind that fabric.

It looked ready to give any second, but it never would... and even if there had been a 'wardrobe malfunction', it never would have made it to air, though that wouldn't occur to viewers who tuned into to breathlessly await something that was never going to happen. Given everything else, whether recognized by the viewers as such or not, that was 'fake' about her, Nauti had no trouble remembering the name of a 'best friend' who chose to name herself 'Honeydew Melons'!

Which, Nauti mused as she finished her bubbly, fully explained her sense of unease and confusion, of... being someone else.

Then, spying the rather annoyed look of a unit producer behind the camera pointed at the couch, the reluctant co-star of the new series turned her attention back to the three guys, and her absolutely identical-looking and identically dressed, but considerably less inhibited, twin sister - who gestured at her, rising from the couch.

"Come on, Nauti - let's dance for the boys..." Kinki said, and Nauti hid a sigh as she dutiful rose and followed her sister to a spot - pre-arranged to be cleared for them, of course - and began to 'wiggle and shake' almost as sensuously as her sister to the music playing in the nightclub from which the Party Chix on the TV was being aired. The twisted and twined sexily around each other on the improvised dance floor, and the camera followed the action avidly.

"Wait, now I've lost track..." Grommet joked to his buddies. "Can you guys tell which one is which...?"

The rest of the nearby partygoers laughed at the rather insipid joke, even as Jessica responded to her cue and walked over.

"Why, silly, everybody knows which one is kinky..." She joined in the laughter, sounding only slightly forced as she gave the rehearsed response.

"If the leather alone wasn't a dead give away..." Kinki cooed in a seductive voice, still swaying as she seductively ran long, blood-red nails down from the leather collar, sliding teasingly over the skin-tight PVC dress (barely) encasing her full breasts, "...and the extreme tight-lacing of the corset didn't clue you in..." - as her hands slid to emphasize how the leather corset clung to her wasp-like, twenty-inch waist - "...then at least the ballet heels should have made it obvious."

All this, while she still continued swaying sensuously - atop the impossibly high, slender 7-inch heels of her fetish footwear, forcing her literally 'on her toes'.

Nauti still could barely believe how far her sister had been willing to go for the show - farther than the viewers who tuned in over the show's now three-season run could possibly know. Part of the show's popularity had been following the slow 'deviation' between the originally identical twin, 18-year-old sisters as, now of legal age, Kinki moved to live up to her name... but she (and their parents) had planned this long before the show had started, and Kinki had been tight-lacing and practicing in steadily higher heels for two years before filming began, with careful wardrobe choices hiding the differences between the two girls as the mostly-male audience 'breathless' watched her 'struggle' with what had actually been a carefully-prepared sure thing... trying to 'overcome' their parents 'objections' and become a fetish-fashion supermodel!

Then Nauti felt a presence at her shoulder, and she glanced over at the ridiculously top-heavy bimbo at her shoulder, just as Honeydew giggled out in this patently false high, lisping soprano: "...And you know this girl is naughty..."

It took all Nauti took not to scream at the dumb, wannabe stripper who thought this show was a good 'starting point' to her career as a freakishly huge-busted stripper... and it took nearly as much willpower not to cry over the massive weight dragging at her own chest and sending twinges through her lower back.

It wasn't fair! She'd all but been black-mailed into the 'gimmick' her twisted family had thought such a sure rating's grabber. Just because they'd decided this brainless bimbo should be her 'best friend', she shouldn't have had to 'happily' get matching inflatable implants at the same time she did - and she shouldn't have had to continue playing out the role of 'best booby buddies', go to the clinic with her and keeping their steadily enlarging, steadily more ridiculously huge and round tits, exactly the same size and shape as each other over the course of three seasons. It was unfair, even if she'd been assured they could be downsized at the end of the show's run.

She hadn't expected the show to last three seasons, and she'd never expected the bimbo would be willing to go so freakishly huge, and...

"...when she'll even talk her bestest friend in the whole wide world in keeping up with her own tit fetish!" Honeydew giggled to a finish.

"Oh, you know you love your wonderful new boobs - or, at least, the attention it gets you from the guys!" Nauti purred wickedly, gently caressing the skin-tight - and barely-there - black spandex dress that so sexily displayed her own, fantastically gorgeous and wonderfully round tits. Gazing proudly down at the wonderful display of deep, bronzed cleavage, she cupped them and lifted them slightly, loving the heft, the firmness of her gorgeous attention-getters... and then she released them, loving the bounce and sway of her delicious fun-bags - and loving even more the way the over-inflated implants meant that when they stopped bouncing, they rode so wonderfully high, round, and firm on her chest in a way no saggy, pendulous natural breast even half as big as her spectacular Triple-G's could ever match. Aware - as always - of both the guys eyes and camera lens on her, she wiggled atop the two-inch platforms and seven-inch tapered heels, her jiggling atop her 'stripper shoes' setting her 'stripper boobs' bouncing.

As well it should - because just as the family had secretly planned before shooting started, she was going to become the world's premier big-tit stripper! Despite how her 'practice sessions' in the show might look, she already knew the two years practise before hand gave her skills at least as good as any other stripper in the world - even if she did have to downplay it for the cameras.

...but not for much longer, Nauti thought behind a fake smile directed at her 'best friend'. Oh, the ratings were going to be terrific at the betrayal scheduled for next month. Honeydew, who had legally had her name changed to that ridiculous moniker, who'd reluctantly allowed her tits be pumped to match Nauti's, who'd really struggled through dance training while Nauti just had to pretend to, all in the belief that after they show they were going to be a duo act...

Oh, it would be a thing of beauty when, at the audition, Nauti would seem to be a no-show, and Honeydew would have to perform a solo... and THEN Nauti would show up for her own solo, with superior dancing skills... and having added the last two cup sizes to max out implants that, unlike she'd told Honeydew, had been that much larger than the bimbo's own, now absolutely maxed-out implants, all along!

Especially since Nauti was much more beautiful to begin with - and that was really the whole point, now wasn't it? Before the implants, there'd been no comparison between the two - no competition. In Honeydew's case, she'd practically needed something to stand out from the crowd, and in three seasons, she'd believed she'd been 'drawing equal' with Nauti, based on the fact that all interest was shifting towards 'big tit' men interested in their stupendous bust-lines.

So Nauti had to keep hidden the truly wicked edge that wanted to creep into her smile as she watched Honeydew's boyfriend approach and charmingly embrace her, whispering into her ear before 'unobtrusively' drawing her away towards the bedrooms - with the cameras catching it all, of course.

Most often, these reality show relationships were staged - the 'loving couple' would disappear into the bedroom, only to end up playing solitaire or something equally unromantic. In this case, Mark really had seduced - completely ensorcelled! - Honeydew... so her complete and utter devastation would be equally real when, after Nauti blew her away at the audition, Mark would dump Honeydew for Nauti.

Ratings gold, Nauti thought smugly - but the best part was the please she'd get from doing it, because the dumb bimbo hadn't figured out how the world worked. Nauti was simply the 'more' woman, with a much better body, and the knowledge - and will! - to use it. That was a woman's power, after all - the ability to control men and crush other, lesser women. If you didn't have, there was nothing you could do about it... but Nauti (and Kinki, and their mother) DID have it, and nobody could stop them if they decided to use it.

To Be Continued....

SUMMARY: Logging onto the chat room, he didn't mean to play the role of the naughty girl, but things start to change, and pretty soon his world is morphed into that of a sexy young vixen.

Part Two

Of course, on the topic of pleasure, she really was 'seeing' Mark behind Honeydew's back - fucking, at any rate - and since he really WAS a 'big-tit' man, she had no trouble controlling him... and would be equally devastated when she crushed him, too.

Of course, Kinki had her own, similar plans for betraying that equally out- of-the-loop bitch Jessica... but it was scheduled to happen AFTER the ratings surge from Nauti's manipulations. Which meant Nauti should focus on her own part of the on-going, long-term plan... and Mark was out of the way for the night, so she smiled, and turned her attention to Grommet and Wally, slipping down on the couch between them, and subtly playing them off against one another in growing competition for her. Then, once the hooks were set, got up to grab her champagne glass and refill it - and sat down again on the couch, but this time between Grommet and STEVEN...

...and then excused herself to 'go the bathroom'. She walked through the 'kitchen' and down the hall, opening the door to the room boasting the big mirror - and found her 'twin sister' already in there, doing her make-up.

As she stepped into the elaborate, multiple-sound-stage set's dressing room, she couldn't help but eye the other woman and be amazed at how much time, effort, and dedication had been put into this series of porn films. Hell, Mistress Kelly almost could pass for... well, not a twin sister, in real life, but a sister, certainly.

"Hey, Nancy..." Mistress Kelly - a 'professional name', baring as much relationship to her own birth name as 'Nancy Knockers' own did - greeted her co-star with a genuinely warm smile... and why not? They were making a ton of money off the 'Kinki and Nauti' series of films.

Of course, the real reason behind that was because these films had about ten thousand percent more plot behind them than most porno. The 'reality behind reality TV' angle was gold - everyone trying to backstab everybody else, while two conniving twin bitches were secretly the biggest backstabbers of all...? Well, of course, since this was porn, all the 'backstabbing' actually translated into 'fucking the brains out of somebody'... but, amazingly, the very large fan following of the series actually tried to keep track of who was fucking who's supposed boyfriend/boss/brother/favorite pizza deliveryman, etc., etc.

Of course, it was the rather mysterious and never seen writer who had to keep track of all those kinds of details - but the actors and actresses had not only been hired to do the hottest possible on-screen fucking they could, but to have enough 'real' acting talent to make the characters at least marginally believable.

Of course, Nancy thought as she pulled out her gloss-red lipstick and began coating her plump, perfect (if collagen-enhanced) dick-sucking lips, the other secret of the series was how many niches and fetishes the plot-line allowed them to cram in. Like Mistress Kelly, professional dominatrix, playing one ultimate bitch of a sister, and 'secretly' dominating and breaking men in her bedroom. In actuality fact, her toughest scenes - for her were her 'public' scenes when she couldn't follow her natural inclinations... but that only made her dominance scenes in 'private' all the hotter, because she actually had more delayed gratification to make up for. She REALLY got off on it...

Looking in the mirror at the two of them, Nancy once again compared them and not just physically. Oh, they were quite close in that sense, although Nancy was certainly more on the voluptuous side of the two, even without Mistress Kelly's fetish tight-lacing drawing her waist down to what she seemed to think was a 'delightfully painful' 19 inches. As a matter of fact, Nancy had been hired as 'twin sister' because she had nearly as an exaggerated hourglass figure... but HER waist had been very carefully (and not at all 'delightfully' painfully) down to 'only' twenty-one inches for the role.

Just then, the door opened and the other three actresses who made up the 'regular' cast walked in. Sure, each of the series had 'guest stars', but these were the 'core five' recurring women in all the films, and having them all in getting ready for the upcoming sex scenes allowed Nancy to complete her thought about the range of people the series regularly appealed to.

Holly Mountains, of course, filled one niche - one she called 'slim and stacked', but which Nancy secretly thought of as 'lugging around monstrous bolt-on boobs'. Oh, not that Nancy had anything against either implants or sheer size - she, herself, had gotten 'enhanced' when her own natural attributed had begun to hang a bit low for comfort. On the other hand, Nancy WAS built along the classic 'buxom bombshell' lines that had also given her a more naturally hourglass figure than Mistress Kelly had started off with... which meant Nancy had naturally boasted equally 'bombshell' DD-cup breasts even before getting the implants that had put her just one cup-size shy of Holly's own GGG-cuppers. The big difference was that Holly was nearly as skinny as a rail, and those massive mammaries of hers were almost 100% fake... and not the saline of Nancy's own, but silicone, to boot! Still, a certain portion of the fan base seemed to like them - or maybe just the fact that everything else about Holly, up to and including her amazingly convincing 'bimbo' routine, was equally as fake.

On the other hand, there was the very, very sexy black actress who went solely by the name of Jizzabel - and who was all natural in every conceivable way, from those pouting lips to the out-thrust perfect 'bubble-but' posterior. She was hot, she was black, she had an ass to die for, she had perfect, large-nippled D-cups that she worked hard to keep perky without any augmentation... and she not only sucked cock like a world-class champion, but she was willing to do anal.

Then there was 'The Famous Melinda Manchester'... and the way the actress playing 'Ma Hawti' used that entire phrase, you'd think it was her actual name.

On the other hand, Nancy didn't begrudge the older woman it TOO much... for the definite MILF actually had been an insanely hot actress in her younger days, and had aged quite well with only a moderate amount of plastic surgery to keep her fan-base drooling. Still, Nancy found it telling about her 'real' acting skill that she was an aging pornstar barely able to pull off pretending to be an aging pornstar... but she had MAD skills in the sex scenes, and knew how to get the absolute most out of her male co-stars... in every possible sense of the phrase.

Perhaps most importantly, however, Melinda knew - and served as a reminder to the others - that how almost incomprehensible it sometimes seems that people would not only pay them, but practically THROW money at them to a) look as hot as possible, and b) have lots of hot and horny sex with well hung men, it was a fantasy-come-true with a limited lifespan. You had to get while the getting was good, and all five of them were making damned sure they did...

..and with that in mind, they all headed off to do their next scenes with broad smiles on their faces.

Of course, Nancy had to banish that smile before she walked out onto the 'living room' soundstage to find Steven, Wally and Grommet fighting about who was really going to get to fuck her 'tonight'. (A pet peeve of all the actresses had been that the men always got to use their real first names... until the more experienced Melinda pointed out that it was because guys who watched porn didn't bother to remember the names of the male stars, by and large.)

Of course, it was a problem 'Nauti' soon sorted out - by asking why they thought only one of them was going to 'do her', all while sexily stripping out of her skin-tight black spandex dress, then letting Wally peel off her panties with his teeth, leaving her only in garter belt, nylons, and platform heels.

Of course, the sex scenes were closely choreographed, and this once was no exception - but whatever that might have done to marginally impact the quality of all the sex Nancy was getting, it more than made up for it in quantity.

Like in this scene, for example. She let the guys lay her down on a 'conveniently' (custom-built) padded coffee-table, and they spent a few minutes all fondling her and kissing her up and down her body, pausing for a few hot-and-horny tongue-writhing kisses of their own...

...then Wally and Steven stepped discreetly out of camera as Nancy let her head roll back, lipped her full lips, and beckoned Grommet with one scarlet-nailed finger. He stepped forward, and she eagerly opened her mouth and engulfed the first third of its throbbing length with her warm, wet mouth, pausing to make sure a good close-up of it veined length moving in short strokes between her plump red lips before she wrapped her right hand around the rest of the wonderful organ.

Then, as she continued to suck the one wonderful cock filling her mouth off, Steven carefully climbed atop her and gave her a second wonderful cock to play with, this one between her fat, golden tits - already discreetly 'oiled up', of course. Slowly, he began to ride her deep cleavage, alternate pushing her tits together, or letting them part so the camera could get a good shot of his huge cock between her huge tits. Her free hand fondled the head of his cock a couple of times as it popped out the top of her cleavage - and then she reached down to spread her pussy nice and wide, so that the camera could film Wally's own throbbing manhood perfectly as he slid it deep into a womanhood already wet and ready for it.

With all three men fully engaged, the camera alternated between taking some longer distance shots of a woman clearly enjoying being fucked at both ends while being ridden in the middle, and close ups of each individual action.

Hard enough as it was for Nancy to concentrate, what with all the wonderful sensations at being so wonder chock-full-a-cock, she was also a professional. She knew the planned routine, and had the skills to make sure it all went off in the proper order. The speed at which she hungrily sucked on Grommet's cock, just how much wiggle-swivel-and-buck her hips gave Wally, how often she freed up a hand to help Steven's deep cleavage action... it was all consummately done.

The men came in exactly the right order, the same order they'd started.

For the last few seconds of Grommet's part, Nancy had devoted her hands to pushing her own tits together for Steven - so that she could bend her neck farther back, letting Grommet grab the back of her head and give her the full, hard face-fucking her deep-throat position allowed. She loved having the long, hard cock plunging so deep inside her, and wished it could have gone on longer - but, of course, he had to swiftly 'back it out', pulling his wonderfully tasty cock out of her dick-loving throat and mouth alike... but not too far away, because the camera had to film him getting every drop of that delicious cum in her mouth in one incredibly long stream... and her not missing a drop of his hot spunk.

Even as she savored all of his tasty man-seed, Nancy knew she'd been allowed the fairly rare privilege of swallowing it ALL only because of Steven's role. She, of course, managed to get her head up in time to have her still-open mouth in position for his own, even more voluminous eruption... but she got to actually get very little of that tsunami of cum in her mouth, as Steven bucked himself expertly, giving the camera what it wanted as almost a full half of that massive cum-load glazed her face, and almost all the rest coated her massive tits.

The reason, of course, was to have her mouth out to scream out her rolling orgasm just as Wally came - 'overacting' it, of course, but thank god not having to do it by very much - and then she was able to begin wiping some of the warm facial into her mouth. Half a load had to be better than none, however, for the other half she'd been told to fondle and kneed into her own meaty tits - but then again, that had some pleasures of its own to enjoy.

Tanking the guys profusely and sincerely for the good, hard gang-banging they'd just given her, she then hurried off to clean herself up for the next scene. Once ready, with her hair and make-up touched up, (and thank god Steven's aim was perfect enough not to have to require a full wash-and-dry of her hair, as had sometimes happened), she 'snuck' into the set of 'Honeydew's bedroom'.

Holly had the unfortunate part in this scene as having to fake being asleep while her 'boyfriend' fucked her 'best friend' in the same room... but Nancy couldn't feel sorry for the silicone-stuffed slut. First off, she'd had her own scene with Mark's magnificent manhood just a short while ago - and, besides, the 'backstabbing' wasn't ALL playacting...

There was only so much cock - and star billing, and the money that came with it, but that was a secondary consideration - to go around during however each woman's 'shelf life' as an 'actress' lasted, and each was trying to get as much of it as they could... or were if they had any brains that was, Nancy thought as she got into position, her pendulous breasts hanging down as she thrust her broad hips and full - NOT 'fat', like that bitch Jizzabel kept saying! - ass into the air.

Then she stopping thinking about professional considerations as Mark's huge, throbbing cock filled her dripping wet cunt...

...well, ALMOST filled.

Came close to filling, at any rate - she was a big, well padded woman, damn it, and her pussy wasn't getting 'droopy', no matter what that old, dried-out cunt said, so keep you unwanted advice on how to stay nice and tight to yourself! What mattered was that she had a good, hard cock fucking her pussy... and because he'd done that plastic-boobed bitch so recently, it'd take a good amount of time before he'd shoot of on her.

She was right - the hardest part of the whole scene was stifling the screams of the three orgasms before he pulled out and squirted his entire load of creamy man juicy over her ass and back. (A waste of perfectly good jism, as far as she was concerned.) It dripped off the jiggling masses of her buttocks as she left the kinda small and sparsely furnished set supposed to be a 'luxurious penthouse apartment', and she grunted as she stepped into the not-quite-big enough dressing room the five 'star actresses' had to share to find somebody already in each of the two shower stall.

She finally got herself cleaned up, then got dressed to go back 'home' on the small porn company's lot. Of course, she could have gone home to shower... but her day-to-day clothing was also her 'costumes', and getting cum out could be a stone-cold bitch.

Not that she'd be all that pissed at losing THIS costume, she thought as she struggled to get the spandex dress on. Damn it, why couldn't clothing be designed for women who had curves! Even the stretch of spandex didn't completely solve the problem, hanging a rather loose over her waist and belly even as it strained to contain her massive breasts, wide-flaring hips, and sexy (damn it!) ass.

...and if that stuck-up, so-called 'Mistress Kelly' made ONE MORE snide comment about how if her tits sagged any more, the chest-and-waist problems would solve each other...

Sure, the skinny bitch might use super-duty corsetry and surgeries to get her waist down to that ridiculous sixteen-inch diameter, Nancy thought smugly, but I have the exact same 'super-hourglass' difference of twenty inches between MY waist and MY matching hip and chest measurements, and I only have to do light night-time corseting to keep my waist at very respectable 24 inches, thank you very much! AND I actually have some TITS to go with the package! With that thought, she jiggled towards the door a bit wobbly on the four-inch platforms and ten-inch heels of her favorite pair of black PVC 'hooker boots'.

Having gotten a quick clean-up in the public washroom in that bus station, Nancy hurried across the run-down foyer, eager to get back to 'her' corner... and as much cock she could find during her 'shift'. Reached the doors to the street and pushed through...

...but it was Nate Hawthorne who stepped through, staggered atop the high-heels, looked down at the super-curvy body of the Hispanic whore he was inhabiting (and whose nymphomaniac lust-driven memories he shared) and a scream tore past his/her/their obscenely collagen-inflated 'trout lips'...

* * * *

Holly stared in desperation, trying to hide it begin a plastic-looking smile, as she whirled and cavorted on the stage of the run-down strip club.

She was on the second song of her three-song set... and no matter how hard she'd been working the meager crowd, not one man had slipped so much as a single in the cleavage of the fantastic tits she was offering them.

Was happening? How could everything be going wrong? It wasn't possible! She'd started off in clubs as bad as this one, for god's sake -- but she was a superstar now, goddamn it...!

She knew she hadn't been all that pretty when she'd started, but she'd worked her ass off, and some money had come. She'd died her blonde, watched her figure carefully, learned all the moves, did every trick she could think off... and finally, she'd been able to get the money to buy those expandable saline implants to overcome her most glaring physical flaw, her nearly complete lack of tits.

A little more money than before trickled in... and as soon as she could afford it, she'd gone into to get 'pumped up'.

With the bigger tits, so came more attention, more money every night... and so, whenever she could, she went back in - and the clubs she'd worked even nicer. Nicer clubs meant bigger spenders, so the money curve had increased even faster on a show-per-show basis. She had begun to gather a following. She'd earned even more money when magazines began to offer photo shoots - and even more when she'd finally made 'feature dancer' status, and clubs would actually ask her to come do special shows for them, which meant even more money.

She'd been smart, damn it! She hadn't blown the money some of the way other girls did, damn it! She'd reinvested it in her 'business', just like you were supposed to!

Yes, she WAS just coming of a 'short break' in her career... but it wasn't like she'd been on a damn vacation, for god's sake! After all, she'd noticed business tapering off roughly the same time her implants had maxed out, it was understandable. Her fans expected bigger and better on a regular basis, but none of the doctors would help her, insisting it was illegal to overfill implants and other equally bullshit 'medical considerations'!

Well, some money had still been coming in, so she'd applied the same determination she'd used her entire career, and saved up the money needed to SOLVE the problem. The doctors in that South American clinic hadn't argued when she'd waved enough good old American greenbacks in their faces, and they'd replaced her old implants with new ones... but it took time to heal, damn it!

Well, now she was back, and she was bigger and better than ever - better then better, in fact, with these 'new' implants that were old by American standards, and practically impossible to get. But SHE had gotten them, and there was nobody who could get close to her now, so why...

Henry Metzger staggered to a stop, desperately clinging to the brass pole in the center of the stage for balance as he stared in horror and the truly gargantuan 3000cc silicone implants that at least spared him the sight of the painfully underweight stripper whose body he was inhabiting - and he began to scream...

* * * *

Mistress Kelly looked - sneered - down at the man kneeling on the floor, his face between her legs.

"Is that the best you can do...?" She taunted, even as he lapped - desperately - at her pussy. Not that he was actually that far from getting her off... but her taunting threw him off, and when she lifted one leg and lightly dug the needle tip of her ballet-boot heel into his back, it threw him off even more...

...which let her taunt and belittle his 'failings' even more, of course - which was the whole point. As much as she enjoyed orgasm, she enjoyed humiliating men just as much... and orgasms could actually get much better when they were forms of delayed gratification, whereas humiliation was best served anytime, anywhere.

She couldn't hold the orgasm off forever, despite her formidable skills - but, unless the now-thoroughly-unnerved slave servicing her was unusually observant, he had no IDEA he'd succeeded at his task, for her finally honed skills let the professional dominatrix hide even the slightest trace of the orgasm from her 'customer'. Not even a twitch, much less anything so gauche as a scream, so he would continue to work at pleasing an 'unappeasable' mistress until SHE had decided...

...and then Martin Kelly screamed - not so much in horror, but in agony over the medically-inadvisable corset that only rather extreme (and illegal) surgery allowed her to get down to a 14-inch waist... and the agony from calves and now-deformed ankles that came from mastering (mistressing?) equally inadvisable platform ballet boots...

* * * *

Staring at each other across a short distance, the two men gyrating - or, at least, 'moving' - on the night-club dance floor had looks of shock and awe on their faces.

Sure, the fact that it seemed like she must have had breast implants installed in her ass to make stick out so roundly and firmly was a bit odd, but other than that, the black chick had been downright hot...

...and when she'd dragged them over to a corner of the dance floor where she could bend over and be completely hidden behind a waist-high frostedglass railing, hauled up the hem of her spandex dress, and demanding Pete stick his cock up that ass, he hadn't hesitated to long.

When she demanded Lucas 'fuck her face' good and hard, HE hadn't hesitated at all.

With loud dance music, thrusting bodies shaking her from both ends, and a cock pistoning down her throat, nobody even knew Josiah Bell was screaming...

* * * *

The ex-beauty queen (who didn't think the 'ex' part, ever), carefully pulled on the sparkling, emerald-green sequined evening dress she'd worn the night she won the crown - and, of course, it fit as perfectly as always, as perfectly as it had that very night.

Smiling, Melinda Manchester carefully lowered the crown itself... well, a replica of the one she'd had to give up to the following year's winner, that is

...into even more carefully arranged hair. Balancing easily - indeed, gracefully - in shoes only slightly different than the ones she'd worn that night, she turned and began to walk...

...and Melvin Manchester never screamed as he tried to puzzle out why somebody would create a life-size animatronic Barbie doll, moving with ridiculously inhuman grace atop the seven-inch stiletto heel pumps, perfect plastic face locked in perfect, plastic smile. Not 'ridiculously' oversized, but large and certainly unrealistically firm plastic boobs stood out like cones, refusing even to jiggle above the unnaturally slender waist.

He was still trying to fathom the purpose of this unrealistically, inhumanly 'perfect' plastic representation of unnatural human femininity when he bumped into the full-length mirror...

* * * *

The darkly beautiful woman stared with something halfway between disgust and amusement at the five, variously distorted parodies of 'femininity' grovelling on the floor before her - and then, finally, spoke one sharp word: "Silence!"

It wasn't a yell, nor a scream - it was a command, and one that was obeyed instantly, if unwillingly, by all five figures.

The woman nodded in satisfaction.

"I am Webmistress." She coldly informed the helplessly silenced figures. "I am, amongst other things, a Reality Warper."

She paused - and smiled a very cold smile indeed.

"While you five used to be men who, each for reason of their own, logged onto a website in feminine persona, and proceeded to post certain...

perspectives of women."

She let the silence stretch out, looking into pleading eyes.

"You may have noticed..." She announced dryly "...that I have taken each of you considerably further past those perspectives. The reason for this is simple - when a Reality Warper 'releases' the warp, the universe snaps back to the way it was before the warping began."

Hope flared in each of those eyes... and she waited another long moment before crushing most if it back out.

"Or, I should say, it tries to." She let another pause for them to start to panic, then continued: "You see, had I only taken you as far as your own beliefs, you would have 'snapped back' quite easily to something at least nearly indistinguishable for what you would undoubtedly call 'the real world'.

Taking you so far away from it, however, makes it harder for the universe to return to its 'original' shape. That, in fact, is precisely why I did it."

Another long pause.

"You see..." She continued with a very thin - razor-blade thin, and as likely to cut - smile, "...just how close to 'original reality' we snap back to will be determined by just how much you have altered you original, truly held opinions after this experience... if you are, indeed, capable of altering them at all, regardless of... incentive."

"Simply put, I have pushed you far enough past your original beliefs as your own beliefs were from actual reality - and I have done it on the basis of 'collective responsibility'." She explained. "If all of you have learned half the lesson, or half of you all the lesson, or any combination of like percentage, you'll return to something similar to 'original reality'. If, on the other hand, none of you learned anything, you'll all become exactly what you original considered your own concept of 'femininity'."

Another flaying grin.

"Personally, experience has taught me to expect something... in between the two." She said with someone other than these five might almost have mistaken as good-natured amusement. "Let us find out, shall we...?"

...and she waved her hand.

* * * *

Nate... Nancy... Nauti...ca?... looked around in confusion, blinking and trying desperately to sort out what - impossible as it was - at least a dozen complete sets of memories of who and what s...he?... was...

...and then her/his/their eyes fell on the piece of paper sitting on the table in front of them/her/him:

Party Chix

Hawti Enterprises Inc. Talent Release Form

Below this header lie a fairly short block of text, with 'blanks' for various pieces of information... including one at the very bottom for a signature.

A signature that had been filled in a neat, feminine hand that was quite readable: Natalie Hawthorn.

"Thank you ladies!" A voice said - and a man wearing a Party Chix T-shirt and a small radio earphone/microphone rig said brightly, quickly gathering up the signed release forms. "Enjoy your free drinks. We start rolling in... (a quick check of his watch and a muttered question to somebody over the radio) ...about fifteen minutes."

Then he bustled away, and Natalie looked around the night-club Party Chix had chosen to film this week's episode in, feeling a bit... disconnected.

She was in a nightclub, obviously... but didn't remember coming to it. She was sitting at a table with four other women... she couldn't clearly recall ever have seen before. She'd just apparently signed a release form, and while she knew and remembered the show itself, didn't remember reading or signing the form - or why she would sign such an agreement. Most of all, however, she had a very, very strong urge to run to a mirror and see if she looked... what she looked... how she looked...

Well. She'd (apparently) just signed a release form to be on TV, Natalie found herself striving for reasoned, logical thought - surely that must explain a sudden, intense bout of body consciousness...?

That made a certain amount of logical, rational sense - and also provided an equally logical, rational 'excuse' to give in to her irrational compulsion to take a look at herself in a mirror.

"Well..." Natalie said, forcing herself to keep her tone light in front of the other women at the table, "If I'm going to be on television, I guess I'd better check my make-up!"

"I'll come with...!" The attractive black woman across the table practically blurted out - and Natalie blinked, hoping her own attempt to sound 'natural' hadn't sounded as brittle as the other woman's had.

Natalie was perhaps even more surprised by the heavy sigh that preceded and almost leaden tone in the voice of the raven-haired woman to Natalie's right as she said: "I guess I might as well come, too."

"Uh... sure." Natalie replied, hiding how taken aback she was by manufacturing a rather strained grin. "After all, we girls have to keep up the whole 'going to bathroom in groups' thing, right?"

Her feeble little joke resulted in a wide range of expressions that startled her - from something very much like a grimace of horror from the buxom blonde sitting to Natalie's left, to the instant and smiling nod of agreement from the stunning, slightly older woman sitting between the raven-haired girl and the black girl. The attractive African-American, herself, looked confused... while the slim-waisted woman to Natalie's right simply heaved another sigh.

"Uh... okay then..." Natalie muttered, sliding off the stool - then pausing, frowning slightly, before remembering to grab the little black leather clutch-purse that clearly belonged to her. Along with the other two women, she began threading her way to the women's bathroom... and then, to cover her confusion over the fact that she was somehow absolutely certain she was heading in the right direction of the bathroom without having any memory of how she would know where it was, she decided to introduce herself to the ebony-skinned woman - who, out from behind the table, had revealed herself the undoubtedly proud owner of a truly spectacular ass.

"By the way, my name's Natalie - Natalie Hawthorne," she said, once again striving to make her voice sound both natural and friendly. She was more than a little surprised by the pause that followed her introduction - a pause that grew steadily more awkward as it continued to lengthen.

"I'm Kelly... Kelly Martin." The somewhat dusky-skinned woman with the luxurious mane of gleaming black hair filled in the awkward space, her voice still sounding oddly flat. Natalie turned to give the other woman a smiling nod of recognition and gratitude... and then found herself fighting the urge to let her eyebrows rise as she took in the six-inch metal spike heels on the other woman's gleaming black ankle-strap pumps.

"I go by 'Jazzy'." The black woman finally replied in a decidedly odd tone of voice. "Jazzy Bell."

A bit bemused by the nickname - or alias, perhaps, - Natalie forced a warm reply, and Kelly muttered a less-than-enthusiastic 'nice to meetcha' from behind her.

"So...." Jazzy said, obviously looking for a conversational opener, "You two related, or something?"

"Um, no..." Natalie replied, shooting an confused look at Kelly, wondering why somebody might think they looked anything alike - and then felt herself feeling even more confused as they reached the short hallway leading to the bathrooms - because she wasn't sure she and Kelly didn't look anything alike...

* * * *

Henry Metzger watched through Melanie Honey's guileless blue eyes as the trio of darker-haired women walked away, and Henry/Melanie wish they were allowed to heave the deep sigh they wanted to vent. Unable to do so, the platinum-blond composite turned to the other blond who'd remained at the table, and Henry used Melanie's sweet soprano to give the only name they were able to use, by way of introduction.

"Yes, you certainly are a 'melony' honey!" The golden-haired woman instantly agreed, and entirely too practiced chuckle coming through her perfect 'politician's wife' smile as she gracefully extended a hand towards them. "I'm Melissa Manchester. So very pleased to make your acquaintance, Miss Honey."

"Please - call me Melanie," they replied - and Henry was morbidly satisfied when he at least managed to keep Melanie from adding an insipid little giggle at the end of it. As she shook the almost eerily lovely woman's hand, Henry forced Melanie to look directly at the gorgeous blonde, wondering what was going on behind the stunning gold-flecked green eyes.

"So - shall I assume that you've chosen to call yourself that as some sort of... 'professional' name, then?" Melissa inquired delicately, those emerald- hued eyes flicking briefly to Melanie's most prominent features.

"Oh, no..." Henry let Melanie respond - so, this time, there was a giggle. "The name came first - I just sort of decided to, er... live up to certain expectations, I guess you could say."

"Yes, well, perhaps you've exceeded all expectations..." Melissa replied, with another of those all-to-polished chuckles.

Henry winced, then added himself into the stream of Melanie's answer, to keep her - their - explanation from going as far as only-Melanie would have let it.

"Well, since I was pretty young, I'd been training to be a gymnast, so I was quite happy with the body nature had given me..." They explained, gesturing at a generally slender, but well-toned and limber body that most professional gymnasts would have, indeed, been envious of - if not for one particular aspect: "...but, as you can see, when I hit puberty I also hit a rather aggressive growth spurt."

Indeed, that exquisitely toned and limber body was two inches over six feet in height - and simple physics meant that more 'compact' gymnasts could perform the same moves faster and move on to the next one more efficiently, as they explained to Melissa. She then went on with: "Since the professional gymnastics I'd devoted my life up until that point were no longer a realistic possibility, I began to find myself more and more aware of the fact that puberty hadn't seemed fit to 'grow' me in any other way but up!"

At least with Henry 'in the loop', they didn't give the whole '...and since I still had the desires to be competitive and famous left over from my gymnastic days, I decided to become a world-famous stripper!" part of the 'built-in' speech.

Henry just hoped he was as good at keeping them from living that 'dream' as he was at keeping them from talking about it...

* * * *

As she touched up the deep, glossy wine-red lipstick on her full lips, Natalie had to admit how someone - in the dimmer lighting of the club proper, at least - might mistake Kelly and herself for being relative.

Under the almost unforgiving fluorescent light of the bathroom, of course, the differences between the two women were laid bare.

Most noticeable, the fact that Natalie was the considerably more... lush of the two. Oh - not that she was 'fat', by any stretch of the imagination; indeed, both Natalie and Kelly possessed enviably 'hourglass' figures. It was just that, figure wise... well, one way to put it was that Natalie was playing Jane Russell to Kelly's Marilyn Monroe. Natalie simply had wider hips and shoulders than Kelly did, that was all.

...which was why, at first glance, somebody might also judge each woman equally well endowed - from a 'head on' view, at least.

After all, each woman's respective rack exactly filled their respective ribcages from side to side - just as each woman's ass exactly matched the breadth of each woman's hips. It wouldn't be until the two women were seen in full profile that one would realize that Natalie's broader width meant that she 'stuck out' considerably further, chest and buttocks, than Kelly did.

Other differences included the fact that Kelly possessed slightly dusky skin and richly ebon hair, whereas Natalie's hair was a deep brown with auburn highlights, and her skin was simply tanned; again, differences less obvious under dimly-lit conditions. Further confusion might be attributed by the fact that the two women had inadvertently chosen 'complimentary' outfits.

Both wore pumps, though Natalie's were black velvet with a one-and-a-half inch 'hidden' platform and six-inch tapered heels. Both wore black nylons on shapely legs, and both sets of legs disappeared under the hem of a fitted black above-the-knee skirt - although Kelly's was leather, while Natalie's was made of crushed velvet. Natalie's skirt, however, was an integral part of the dress whose sleeveless V-neck upper half was pewter gray... whereas Kelly had worn a pewter gray spandex top. To be fair, the difference was made less obvious by the fact that both women had chosen to wear broad black leather belts to emphasize their trim waist.

Yes, Natalie thought to herself - in a dim light, seen head-on, from at least a distance, she could see how somebody might even be able to mistake the two of them for twin sisters...!

She chuckled at the thought, and began to run a brush through her own mane of thick, loose-curved hair.

* * * * *

Kelly heard Natalie chuckle, and as she glanced toward her, Kelly forced herself to repress another deep sigh at the other woman's comfort in her own skin. She clearly wasn't suffering from some sort of schizophrenia...!

Kelly turned back to the mirror - and this time, a small sigh did escape her lips.

Damn it, it wasn't right for her to have to deal with simultaneously thinking that her waist was somehow both too small, and yet not small enough. That the heels she balanced so easily on were both too tall and too short. Her breasts were both too big and too small. Her make-up too garish and yet too subdued.

...that she should want to have men find her attractive, and yet not.

Well - she'd been a bit surprised when she'd looked down at the table to find she'd signed a contract to be on Party Chix... but this 'perfect balance' in her own self-assessment was surely driving her slowly and painfully insane. If she couldn't choose, perhaps what she was doing tonight would force her to 'tip the balance' in one direction or another by the way people reacted to her.

...and, if not, then she could go ahead and commit suicide to get away from an endless, yammering shouting of contradictory thoughts in her mind that, for all their divisiveness, managed to agree on one point: whatever it was that she was 'supposed' to look like, this wasn't it.

With that unnatural, irrational, and yet utterly unbreakable conviction that she was some sort of hideous freak smashing steadily away at her sense of self-worth, Kelly grimly went back to the task of touching up her make-up.

* * * *

'Melissa Manchester' watched the three women returning to the table, and if she'd actually been capable of anything like actual thought, she might have been thinking, rather smugly: 'I don't need a mirror to know that my make-up is perfect!'

Of course, 'she' didn't think anything of the sort, for even the most advanced Artificial Intelligence only presented the illusion of thought, and that was all 'Melissa Manchester' really was. 'Her' persona was nothing more than an incredibly advanced AI designed solely to ensure that every movement, every word, every action was as absolutely, flawlessly perfect as the body that housed it.

Which was why, as the trio reached the table, she smoothly and gracefully rose from the stool - the better to perfectly display her perfect body - and, with a perfect smile, acted as the flawless hostess in order to complete the introductions.

All the while, 'her' programmer - or, at least the raw intellect of the person who might have called themselves Melvin Manchester, had not all emotions been utterly suppressed in its overwhelming obsession - constantly 'updated the program' in order to make sure that it always would be perfect, in any situation.

So, it was with flawlessly perfect grace that 'Melissa Manchester' gestured at the sexy black woman to introduce herself...

* * * *

Surreptitiously, she took a deep breath, opened her mouth, and spoke:

"Hi. I'm  Jazzy Bell." She said with a mental wince, hoping nobody notice the faintest of hesitations as she'd over-ridden what the voice in her head wanted her to say.

She was the last one to be introduced, and as the other women murmured polite words, she took a somewhat more obvious breath, and pushed ahead.

"So, why don't we go <get banged> up to the bar and get  something to drink?" She suggested, hoping her speech patterns didn't sound too odd with those tiny little pauses and equally tiny hitches of indrawn breath every time she forced the strangely alien thoughts away.

Of course, Jazzy thought to herself with well-hidden annoyance as she turned to lead the little parade of pretty, sexy young women toward the bar, it wasn't just her speech that was affected. Although you'd have to watch her very carefully to notice them, there were tiny little 'twitches' in her movements as she also over-rode the physical commands that went along with the mental-vocal ones. Still, either it wasn't as noticeable to others as it seemed to Jazzy herself - or the others were simply being too polite to comment on it.

"So - what'll it be...?" The bartender asked her with a professional brightness.

"I'd like  a rum and cock, please." Jazzy replied - then winced as the bartender blinked. Hastily, she back-tracked with a nervous chuckle, and said: "I mean a cum and coke, of course."

She winced again, but the bartender - after a second's considering look - simply smiled and replied easily, "One rum-and-coke coming right up, miss. Will that be cash, debit or charge?"

"I'll <take it up the ass> be paying cash!" Jazzy replied a bit breathlessly, glad she'd managed to get it out unaltered... even if, as she was saying it, she'd leaned forward and stuck her 'bubble butt' out and up, giving it a sexy little wiggle.

Full lips pressed tight against any untoward words that might want to pop out, her body held under rigid control, Jazzy passed the time spent waiting for her drink wondering why the voice in her head, urging her to act like some complete sex-crazed slut, sounded male to her...

...and then the house-lights flickered briefly, indicating thirty seconds to filming, and the music that had been kept at a back-ground level rose to full, nightclub intensity as the show got underway.

To Be Continued

SUMMARY: Logging onto the chat room, he didn't mean to play the role of the naughty girl, but things start to change, and pretty soon his world is morphed into that of a sexy young vixen.

Part Three

Webmistress strolled unseen and unnoticed through the measured chaos of a nightclub in full swing, and smiled coolly to herself.

It wasn't that she was invisible or anything - it was simply that a low-level 'warp' extended around her, causing people around her to always be looking somewhere else, to take a step in one direction or another for long enough to pass through unimpeded - even to decide they didn't really want the drink they'd just ordered, then forgetting about it even as she picked it up and moved on, sipping.

This, the final stage of the test, was her favorite part...

Though none of the transformed males was aware of it, each of them - albeit in different ways - were perfectly and completely balanced between their own, male minds and an artificially constructed one made up of how each ex-male thought of women. Since they were perfectly balanced, that's what made this a 'fair test'. Whether or not they overcame or succumbed to their chauvinistic, unrealistic views of women based on what they experienced here tonight was - in a very real way - completely up to them. Even Webmistress couldn't know if their male-mindsets were too ingrained to make up for all the disturbing and unpleasant female experiences she was sure their unrealistic assumptions about women would lead them to encounter tonight.

In the event that they were sufficiently disturbed and/or disgusted by the way they would be treated while looking and acting like their own 'fantasy' about women, they would immediately 'warp' back into manhood - but not quite the male life they used to have, but whatever kind of man they would have been, (and would continue to be from now on) without those rather sick and twisted views of 'femininity'.

If, on the other hand, they managed to reinforce their belief that whatever it was they experienced tonight was exactly how their own 'fantasy woman' should be living - well, then, they'd warp into exactly that life, and over time the male remnants of their personas would slowly fade away.

To arrange that, Webmistress had been required to do something she'd never done before - maintain a low-grade bubble of 'unreality' around each of the transformed males until the time came that each bubble collapsed into whichever reality they individually chose to accept. This new technique felt very strange to her, for there was a constant, low-grade 'pull' on her own reality from it - yet, despite having set them up, she wasn't exerting the normal conscious control over them that she usually would have been, putting her at an unusual remove where she couldn't even quite 'read' them. It was a rather disconcerting feeling, she discovered, turning pockets of her own power over to other minds to control - especially to control subconsciously! - but, having considered it carefully before implementing it, she didn't see how anything could actually go wrong.

So, Webmistress simply took another sip of her drink, and continued strolling along to enjoy the show while she awaited the five outcomes of her own private entertainment for the night.

A small knot of men near one corner of the dance floor caught her eye - and the figure in the center of that knot was tall enough that she knew what had caused it. Her smile widening, Webmistress strolled over unobserved and looked over the first bit of 'entertainment' she'd come across.

At the center of a dozen or so men's rapt attention was a tall, lithe woman. She was dancing, and the feminine form in smooth, sensual motion wasn't an unusual thing to draw a man's eye - but aside from a few short bouts when her dancing become more energetic and overtly sexual, most of the time her moves were relative desultory - barely enough to set the long, platinum-blonde hair pulled into a simple ponytail to swaying, in fact.

Moreover, she wasn't dressed particularly 'sexy' as the vast majority of the young women in the club were. Oh, the jeans she wore on her long legs were fairly tight-fitting, but that paled in the face of spandex leggings, skin- tight leather or PVC pants, or short skirts and dresses that dominated the club. Even less innately 'sexy' was the medium-grey ribbed cotton athletic T-shirt she wore, tucked beneath the waistband of the jeans pulled tight to her waist by a simple white leather belt. If anything, the 'sexiest' thing she wore was a pair of platform sandals - but even those 'only' boasted a one- inch clear plastic platform and three-and-a-half inch clear plastic heels attached to the white leather straps that criss-crossed her feet and wound around her ankles.

Her mildly attractive face didn't even boast the slightest touch of make-up.

Then again, Webmistress thought with a rather nasty smile, none of the men were looking at her face...

* * * *

As the slightest movement set their volleyball-sized breasts to jiggling and swaying under a simple T-shirt that nevertheless molded skin-tight to their spherical endowments, Melanie was nearly in heaven - and Henry was suffering in a deeply flawed hell.

They were dancing - and Melanie could literally feel the caress of the eyes that followed her tall, lean form as it moved with, at very least, a toned athleticism with every move.

The reason why Melanie was only nearly in heaven was simple - most of the time, Henry was interfering with her, keeping her from really dancing, the way she wanted to. Of course, sometimes his control slipped, and she was allowed to really move, and then she truly was in heaven as the men's gazes became even more helplessly captivated by the motion of her body - and, most especially, her magnificent tits.

Those tits were the reason why Henry's hell was so deeply flawed - and why sometimes he lost control.

Everything else about being ogled by the men around him disgusted and humiliated him... but that core trait of his, the one that had got him in trouble to begin with, was that he agreed with the men ogling Melanie's rack. Hell, if he had been among the men, he'd be ogling harder than any of them, because he truly did believe a fantastic pair of tits should be enjoyed - enjoyed as much as possible, in whatever way you could arrange to enjoy them.

Quite frankly, about the only thing about women Henry cared about was their tits! Oh, not that he didn't want to have sex with women, or anything - but he would have happily fucked any female body, if it were connected to a sufficiently magnificent pair of breasts. Tall, short, skinny, fat, black, white, yellow or red... none of that mattered to Henry, and he didn't factor any of it into judging women - any more than he factored in things like her personality, interests, hopes and dreams...

The sole criteria he judged women on - the sole criteria he honest believed anybody (including themselves) should judge a woman on - was the size, firmness, and overall 'melonosity' of their boobs.

Which meant that even Henry 'loved' the perfect boobs jiggling and bouncing on their chest - even though he was also busy hating the fact of where they were located. Henry just couldn't help it.

Just as, whenever he made the mistake of glancing down, he couldn't help but love the sight of those huge breasts bouncing and jostling.

It was during those periods that Melanie was allowed to dance the way she wanted - and Henry was making that particular 'mistake' more and more often, and taking longer each time to tear their eyes away from the sight that gave him so much enjoyment..

* * * *

Even as she grinned at the buxom blonde's predicament, Webmistress also winced - for that struggle between the two minds was creating sensation she'd never experienced before.

Usually, a reality either was, or it was not. The transition was practically instantiations. This time, the variation between the two possible realities was causing some sort of... 'harmonic resonance'. It was not only new... but distinctly unpleasant. In Henry/Melanie's case, it was 'flipping' at the same time as Henry's loss of control - but his 'fight' between the two realities wasn't the only one going on, and the other ones were also producing uncomfortable sensations in the source of Webmistress' power. It was simply that each 'harmonic interference' between two possible outcomes was manifesting in a different - but equally uncomfortable - manner.

Well - at least it provided a sort of 'homing beacon', unique to each of the transformed men... although, Webmistress wouldn't know which person each 'harmonic' belonged to until she saw who was producing it. She now knew who was creating this one... just as the rate at which the flipping was increasing and lasting longer would give her a good idea when it was about to 'pop', so she could come and watch the finale for herself. It was still some time away, however, so she decided to go and see who belonged to one of the other 'flavors' of discomfort worming its way through a certain anatomical structure of the brain that only a very, very few people possessed...

* * * *

"Hey, gorgeous - can I buy you a drink...?"

Sitting at the bar, Natalie stared fixedly down at the bowl of peanuts she was slowly eating, one by one, merely as something to do as she tried (and failed) to not feel like the ugly duckling among gorgeous swans.

"Ahem - I, er... asked if I could buy you a drink, beautiful...?"

Natalie sighed, wondering what in the hell had led her to agree to this. A plain-jane like her, with an entire nightclub full of sexy and beautiful women...? It was like she'd been setting herself up to feel miserable about herself!

"Fine - be that way... bitch!"

The annoyed bitterness in the man's voice drew Natalie's eyes up to the mirror behind the bar - and her mouth quirked as she watched the man stalk away from his intended target. No wonder she'd simply ignored him...!

Oh, the man wasn't exactly ugly - but the tanned brunette with the thick, loosely styled mane of deep mahogany hair was way out of his league. Even sitting at the bar, hunched over a bowl of peanuts with her luscious lips quirked in a wry...

'Holy shit - that's me...!' Natalie's mind exploded in stunned recognition. 'I... I'm gorgeous - and that not-to-shabby-looking guy was trying to buy me a drink!'

Eyes bright with delighted, even aroused excitement, Natalie whirled on her deliciously plump-yet-firm buttocks, dark eyes eagerly scanning the crowd as she looked for the guy who had been trying to buy her a drink... the guy who had been trying... a guy who would try... a guy...

Looking at the other women - the beautiful, sexy women - thronging the club, Natalie sighed and wondered why she even bothered getting her hopes up some guy would be interested in some nobody like her in a room full of women like that. She slowly, dejectedly swiveled to face the now half- empty bowl of peanuts, and the long, lonely night still ahead of her.

She felt, rather than saw, the bartender come to stand in front of her, and there was a trace of amusement in his voice as he spoke.

"Well, if you're not planning to let any guys buy you a drink tonight, were you at least thinking of buying yourself some...?"

Natalie forced back a soft sob at the bastard's cruel needling. Just because she was so... so plain didn't give him the right to tease her like that!

Then, taking a deep breath, Natalie forced her emotions to heel. Sure, she was plain - but she wasn't ugly, either. Maybe the bartender didn't know how cruel his comment had been... and maybe a couple of drinks was just what she needed to mute the sting of it, in either case.

Forcing her eyes upwards, she somehow manufactured something that might be mistaken for a smile, her conviction that the bartender didn't know how he'd made her feel rising with the sight of the good-spirited grin he was giving her.

"Uh... yeah. Yeah, I'd like a drink. Bring me a cosmopolitan, would you...?" Natalie asked, in a quiet voice.

"Sure thing, pretty lady..." He replied - turning away as he said it, so that he didn't catch the hurt look that crossed her face.

'Maybe he just says that to all the women he serves - a habit...' she tried to console herself as he stepped away.. and then she winced and sighed as his movement away forced Natalie to confront the reflection of one of the 'drop dead gorgeous' category of women in the bar, the plunging pewter neckline of her dress revealing quite a view of the gorgeous golden globes of her...

'Wait - those are my 'gorgeous golden globes'...!' Natalie realized, eyes widening. She began to smile, realizing that a hottie like herself didn't need to be sitting alone here at the bar, not with all the handsome...

The bartender returned, placing her cocktail on a napkin in front of her and quoting the price. Eager to take the drink and start mingling, Natalie quickly grabbed her clutch-purse of the bar and began rooting through it for her money.

With a sigh, she handed a bill to the bartender and in a sad voice told him to keep the change. Staring into the depths of her cocktail, she wondered why she was thinking even a few drinks would allow her to get up the nerve to try and mingle, a plain-jane nobody like her...

* * * *

Webmistress winced anew. Briefly, she considered tracking down the guy who had tried to buy Natalie a drink and tell him that if he wanted to score with the babe at the bar, all he had to do was wear a mirror on his chest...

Well, at least she knew which one was producing the 'uppercut' bursts that trickled away to nothing... until the next fist of pain slammed into Webmistress' power center.

Feeling a bit like the punch-drunk boxer that had spawned the mental metaphor, Webmistress headed off to identify the next originator of a harmonic.

* * * *

"Man... is this babe for real...?" David whispered - well, given the volume of the music, 'stage whispered' - to his buddy, Andrew.

"I dunno..." Andrew replied, shaking his head as he stared at the golden- haired woman moving with incredible, supple grace as she danced her way through the bodies gyrating on the dance floor.

She was definitely dancing, that was certain - but she certainly wasn't 'gyrating', not in the usual dance-club sense. Instead, with a grace, skill, and ability neither men - nor any of the other men had ever witnessed - she was... was... dancing.

She was dressed somewhat more 'formally' than usual for a dance-club, too. She wore an emerald-green satin cocktail dress that came to just above her knees. The ruffled bodice enclosed what looked to Andrew to be perfect, perky D-cup breasts, and twin rhinestone-studded straps crossed a slender waist before crossing again in the middle of delightfully displayed back as they rose to become the straps over her flawless shoulders. All in all, Andrew estimated that figure to be a delicious 36D-24-36, and it was perched gracefully atop the slender five-inch heels of her white 'classic' pumps with small 'emerald' decorations.

"To be honest..." David started to say - and just then, the woman's eyes caught sight of the two men talking to each other.

For the briefest of instants, a look of sheer panic stamped itself on that stunning face - and then it was gone, replaced with perfect white teeth displayed in a all-to-perfect beauty-queen smile. Then she danced for them.

Instantly, all other thoughts fled each of the men's minds as they gazed upon the woman, moving her body in a way that somehow reached out to each of them. It was so entrancing, so captivating, so... perfect, that it didn't even allow them the chance to be anything like sexually aroused by the movements of that oh-so-perfect figure. There was no room for something like base sexuality as her movements reached deep into the brains of each man and forced their (rather atrophied) sense of pure, aesthetic beauty to take up all their brain-power...

...and then she realized that her attention on Dave and Andrew had allowed another man's attention to somehow drift away from adoring worship of her utter perfection, and another brief spasm of panic crossed her features before she smote the heretic with the full force of her Goddesshood...

Both men watched, entranced, as she danced away... but she was dancing 'away', and the spell oh-so-slowly faded.

"...it's starting to freak me out..." David finally managed to finish the thought in a huff of breath, and Andrew nodded in agreement. They began to edge off the dance-floor... even as part of them cried out to stay, to devote themselves to that per-

The stopped dead, eyes glazing, as the Goddess spotted them, and once again they were enthralled... but while she captured them anew, another man managed to bolt away into the crowd.

* * * *

Webmistress rubbed wearily at her temples as she turned away from the... woman-shaped thing on the dance floor. Even she hadn't been completely immune to the incredible beauty of 'Goddess Melissa-bot' as she danced... but now she knew it was Melvin generating those merciful short, but damnably intense bursts of pain every time his creation fell short of the utter perfection that would enthrall all men into worshipping 'her' beauty.

For the first time, Webmistress found herself hoping the male side of one of the five would 'win out' - the reality 'Melissa' would no doubt create if 'she' one could be... problematical.

There was no sign of it happening soon, however, so Webmistress headed off, practically staggering, hoping to find the one creating the writing, twisting sensation in her source next.

She didn't - she found the one creating the incredibly rapid 'clicking'.

It was Jazzy - and she was sitting perfectly upright in a dim corner booth, motionless except for the slow rise and fall of her chest as her blank eyes stared sightlessly of into nothingness.

"She's... catatonic, or something!" Shout the manager, who'd been summoned by a waitress who'd become very worried indeed when she'd tried to serve the woman. "Call an ambulance or something....!"

Jazzy wasn't really catatonic, Webmistress knew - it was just that the two sides of her were locked in so perfectly matched a battle to decide what she was going to do or say, that she ended up saying and doing nothing...

...and, as it had been all along, the battle was still growing more intense as each side tried to find an edge, taking up more and more of her brain, until it would get to the point where she would even forget to breath.

"Miss...? Miss, what's wrong...?" The waitress who had found Jazzy blurted out in shock - and then whirled to the manager. "Sir - it... it might be something contagious...!"

Dimly, Webmistress realized through the whirling, throbbing, twining pain in her head that the 'miss' the waitress had been talking to had been her.

She was no longer 'unnoticeable'; the feedback from the five minds was getting too strong for, interfering in her own control over reality.

Five minds - but she had only found four...

A high-pitched woman's scream - and then a woman burst from the bathroom, shouting incoherently.

Somehow, Webmistress stumbled along with the crowd - and saw what had caused the screaming woman to flee from the bathroom.

Kelly was standing, arms braced against the counter holding the sinks, staring fixedly in the mirror as her clothing slowly ripped apart - which wasn't surprising, as the body inside those clothes was in flux.

Her breasts swelled rapidly, until they almost rivaled Melanie's - and then they began to shrink, even as her waist pinched even more sharply inwards... only to widen again, in time with bulging hips, which in turn shrank even as her ass ballooned outwards, and she began to shrink...

Somehow, so uncertain about her body, Kelly's desperate mind had managed to find a link that allowed her to reshape her body.

A body that her mind simply could not decide how it should look. Too late, Webmistress realized just how massively, arrogantly, monumentally, stupidly, thoroughly, dangerously, lethally she'd screwed the whole thing up.

Too late, for as she reached out to break those five bubbles and stop what was happening, she realized she'd taken that ability away from herself when she'd 'handed it over' to each of the five transformed men.

Stupidly, because she should have realized that 'perfectly balanced' meant perfectly balanced - either side unable to 'win'. She'd counted on outside factors to push them one way or the other... but when one outside factor might push them one way, another outside factor could push them the other. It had been too perfect a balance.

Lethally... because it was killing her. The feedback loop was only growing stronger in each of the five. Jazzy was the furthest along, with Kelly a close second - but all five were in a feedback loop that would eventually destroy them...

...except that they weren't really at risk, because the power that was killing them came from Webmistress, and as the focus of all five of those whip-sawing feedbacks on five different frequencies and amplitudes, she was going to be the first to fail under the still-growing feedback.

Barely able to think through the metaphysical pain, her howling mind struggled to come up with something - anything! - that could break this loop before it killed her and dumped each of the five ex-male's into whatever reality that 'fit' whatever was most dominant within them at the instant of her destruction.

She couldn't - couldn't come up with a single, solitary thing, and now she was on the ground, shaking uncontrollable, thoughts skidding away from her, destruction imminent...

...so Webmistress did the only thing she COULD do, even though a scream of pain, of loss, of desperate anguish tore from her throat even as she did it.

Reality flinched from the unthinkable thing she'd just done - and then it exploded.

* * * * EPILOGUE

One Month Later

When her first warning that it was time to get up, the somnolent figure who had once been Webmistress began to stir. A month ago, the attempt to tray and regain the reassuring nothingness of sleep would have been instinctive, but a month's worth of failing to heed the warning was a strong incentive; slowly, the blessed dark tide of sleep began to recede as the figure reluctantly strove for consciousness.

When the second warning that it was time to get up came, the person who had once been Webmistress stirred, and eyes slowly slid open to stare up at the blank bedroom ceiling above. Sleep-heavy limbs sang a siren-song to remain in the blessed cocoon of the bed, but very slowly the person began to stir.

The third warning to get up came, and the woman who had once been Webmistress, but was coming more and more to think of herself solely as 'Body', finally forced herself into motion, her movements heavy with the dread of the day she was going to have to face - a day like every day of the past month, a day like every day of her future.

With slow, reluctant movements, Body forced herself to sit upright, and then to swing her legs over the side of the bed. Her conscious mind still not quite willing to release the blissful state of sleep quite yet, she drowsily felt around with her feet for the pair of mules, finally finding them and sliding her feet into them. Body managed to get herself upright...

...but she must have taken too long, for she felt the very first sensations that warned her she was about to be punished, as she'd been punished before to make her rise from the bed and face the world, even though she did not want to.

At least this time, she made it to the bathroom before she made a mess in the bedroom. Humiliated, she waited for it to be over, then Body took care of her morning ablutions, then returned to the bedroom - for the humiliating task of getting dressed.

Finally 'suitably' attired, Body quelled a sigh, and forced herself to leave the sanctuary of her bedroom - and, as she stepped out into the upstairs hallway, Body caught sight of Nate Hawthorne just stepping into the bedroom across and down the hall a little ways, breakfast tray in his hands.

With his hands full with the tray, Nate tried to push the door closed with his foot once he was in the room - but it didn't quite shut all the way, leaving a slight gap between door and frame.

Body hesitated - but then, despite everything, simply couldn't resist. As silently as possible, she padded to the door, then maneuvered herself until she could press one eye up to the narrow opening.

Body watched as Nate carefully placed the heavily-laden breakfast tray on the bed-table, then tenderly perched himself on the edge of the bed, lightly caressing one shapely, dusky leg of the figure just beginning to stir on the bed's soft surface.

With a soft sigh, the reclining figure's eyes fluttered open - and in that first, waking moment, an expression of confusion - and concern - began to form...

...and then, in a soft voice, Nate said "Good morning, gorgeous creature," and the expression on Kelly Hawthorne's face faded instantly into a warm - and sultry - smile.

"Mmm... Good morning yourself, lover-boy..." Kelly all-but-purred. Turning her head slightly, she eyed the breakfast tray, inhaling deeply. "Something sure smells delicious."

Even now, Nate hesitated ever so slightly, his innately shy nature warring with the new situation - but then, a shyly wicked smile touched his face, and he leaned forward, nearly burying his face between his wife's firm, pert breasts and taking a ostentatiously deep inhale himself.

"I'd say something smells absolutely heavenly..." He informed her, with a playfully judicious tone.

"I meant the food, you insatiable satyr you...!" Kelly replied, slapping him on the arm - but it was a playful slap, and her voice had once again practically been purring with sensual satisfaction.

"Oh, well, the food..." Nate replied, equally playful. "Well, given how much energy you expended giving me ultimate pleasure last night, I figured you needed to refuel."

"Oh, you burned a lot of calories yourself, handsome..." Kelly chuckled - and cocked an eyebrow suggestively, "...and who said anything about being done, hmm...?"

"Your whim is my wish, milady." Nate replied - and leaned down for a long, lingering kiss. Then, slowly and teasingly, he began kissing his way down her body, murmuring little compliments and muttering approval of every silken inch, until he finally reached her womanhood. This, too, he kissed - but he didn't move on, shifting himself into a more comfortable position on the bed, even as she spread her taut thighs to allow him all the better to like and nibble at her wet pussy.

"Oh, god... that feels wonderful..." Kelly Hawthorne moaned - and then Martin Kelly continued: "Drop-dead gorgeous, and she also sucks cock like a world-class pro. What did I ever do to get so lucky...?"

Willingly, skillfully - lovingly - working her husband's hard, throbbing cock with her skilled hands and full, pouty lips, Natalie Kelly chuckled around the cock filling her warm mouth - then really buckled down to work.

"Oh, God baby - you're the best... the best!" Martin moaned as she used hands, lips and tongue to pleasure his hard cock. It was as if she somehow instinctively knew the best way to pleasure a man, and yet her skill was so great that she could also keep him from 'popping off' too quickly, making the intense pleasure last and last - but there was a limit in all things, and finally he gasped: "Oh, baby, I'm gonna cum...!"

That's when she released the muscles at the back of her throat, leaned forward, and took the entire girthy length of his impressive cock right down her throat - causing him to immediately erupt, his cum jetting right down her throat.

With another chuckle, the buxom, tanned woman pulled her mouth off of his slowly softening cock with a muffled 'pop', then carefully licked every inch of it clean before finally sitting up again.

"How was that for a 'wake up call'...?" Natalie asked.

"Wonderful..." Martin Kelly replied - and then Kelly Hawthorne went on, tartly: "...but now that you've gotten my pussy all hot and wet with an oral orgasm, you just have to satisfy it complete with a hard, throbbing cock!"

"I can do that, lady mine..." Nate laughed, gesturing at his crotch as he shifted into a better position. "It just so happens that I have one right here!"

"Then fill me with it, lover-boy...!" Kelly half-demanded, half-begged. "Fuck me, Nate - fuck me hard!"

Nate laughingly agreed - and slid his hard cock into her wet and oh-so- willing womanhood. He began to thrust, somewhat slowly at first, but under her demands, began thrusting harder and harder and Natalie Kelly thrust herself hard and fast up and down on her husband's wonderful manhood, telling him how much she loved it as Nate Hawthorne fucked Kelly's cunt as she moaned and thrashed asked for more and...

Body pulled back from the opening, mind whirling a little bit - as it always did when Kelly/Martin and Nate/Natalie went into 'rapid transformation' mode.

It didn't happen all that often, and the time it was most common was in the morning - when the woman in each of them needed the most reassurance from their respective husband that they were, indeed, beautiful.

In it's own way, it was a very 'elegant' solution for the problem of unbreakable balance, Body had to admit. After all, neither of them was consciously aware of the transformations at all.

One of them was always male, and the other female - and, whoever was male remembered a complete, uninterrupted life of always being male, and the female likewise for being female. When they switched, the memories switched just as smoothly, and the now-female believed herself to have always been female (with the memories to back them up) as fervently as she'd believed herself to always have been male when she was male.

At any given instant, one of them was a man amazed to have somehow 'caught' such a gorgeous and sexy woman - and the other was a woman who was equally ecstatic to find a man who could make her feel gorgeous and sexy all the time.

Body shook her head in amazement - for it also allowed the pair to have some truly marathon sexual session. Though not consciously aware of the transitions, they nevertheless somehow employed them in a decidedly 'conscious' manner. Whenever whoever was the man came close to orgasm during sex, they would switch - and go through a female orgasm, which means 'she' would be heard and ready when the 'new' man came close to orgasm and the switched again.

Which meant, by and large, the 'fuckfest' ended only when they reached simultaneous orgasm.

All in all, the two... people... seemed quite satisfied with their lives - even if the constantly 'swapping' reality of their lives never actually matched whatever life they remembered living in whichever gender they happened to be in that instant.

Moving silently away from the door, Body carefully made her way down the stairs- and then paused at the bottom, peering through the archway that led from the hall into the living room.

This being morning, Body supposed it was technically 'Jazzy' sprawled on the couch - but that was a hard definition to make, considering the way 'handling the balance' had been achieved with the sexy black woman.

For example - in what Body considered the 'Jazzy' state, she wasn't even consciously aware she was a woman.

Which explained what she was slumped on the couch wearing a pair of men's boxer shorts over her nicely rounded hips, and a white 'wife-beater' undershirt over her taut, ebon breasts.

It also explained why her dark eyes were avid as she paged her way through a porno magazine.

Just then, a little light flickered on the special phone console beside the couch - and, conscious mind completely unaware of what her left hand was doing, Jazzy reached over to flick a switch.

To be more accurate - Jezebel reached over and flicked the switch, and it was her voice that emerged, completely unnoticed by Jazzy, from between full, unadorned lips: "This is Jezebel, you fucking pathetic loser. What sort of sick, perverted fantasy you're too weak and pathetic to try in real life are you going to try and convince me I should play along with, dickhead?"

She paused, then spoke again into the little boom-mounted mike on the high-end Bluetooth devie on her left ear: "What, again, you sick piece of shit. This is the third time in three days, you pathetic wanker. Do you actually imagine that I'm down on my knees right now, dressed only in a latex corset attached to latex stocks, my full, firmly packed round ass thrust up in the air as I beg you to slide you hard, throbbing cock into my tight fucking ass, you sad pervert...?"

As Jezebel continued the demeaning - and highly explicit - phone sex with one of her regulars, Jazzy tossed aside the girlie mag and picked up a big, black plastic dildo. Using her left hand, she spread open the fly on her boxer shorts - and then she slid the dildo deep and hard into her hot, wet cunt.

It was not a response from the filthy slut-but words pouring from her - or, rather Jezebel's - mouth, but from getting turned on by the 'hot babes' in the magazine. Jazzy didn't even think it weird to be fucking her dripping- wet cunt with a big, fake dick - her mind refused to consciously acknowledge it that way, and she thought of it simply as 'jacking off'.

Two minds in one body - but only one in control of the majority of their actions, with the other in control of their voice, and neither consciously aware of the other. That was why, as Jazzy 'jacked herself off' by plunging the dildo hard and fast into her sopping womanhood, not a single part of it showed up in the voice still 'voice-fucking' the man on the other end of the phone-sex line. Not even when Jazzy reached powerful, body-twitching orgasm did Jezebel's voice so much as miss a beat.

Then, still consciously unaware of what the 'other her' was doing, Jazzy pushed an earbud earphone into her right ear. It was attached to the TV, and she - 'he', in her mind - turned on a sports highlight show, not even consciously aware of the reason she was delaying having a beer.

Body continued to watch - and listen - until Jezebel had finished the call - and her shift. Removing both Bluetooth transmitter and earbud, she rose and walked - with a masculine swagger - towards where Body stood.

Trading a raunchy, innuendo-filled greeting for a much more sedate one from Body, Jazzy swaggered up the stairs.

Equally amazed by how Jazzy/Jezebel's balance issue had been dealt with, Body carefully made her way through the swinging door into the kitchen - then stopped dead to watch what was going on.

A padded cushion from one of the wooden kitchen chairs had been placed on the floor in front of a second chair - and on it knelt a stunningly, (one might even say 'perfectly'), beautiful woman. A woman in the process of giving the grocery delivery boy an unbelievable long, luxurious, exquisitely pleasurable perfect blow-job.

Though the full, wine-red lips wrapped around the throbbing cock would alternate longer, slower patterns with fast bobbing motion, the perfectly coifed mass of glossy black, 'retro'-styled hair always fell immediately back into perfect place. Those full lips wetly worked the shaft, but no extra drop of moisture escaped, and no lipstick was smeared or wiped off on the cock she so expertly sucked. Even her pose as she knelt in front of the young man was in no way awkward or submissive, but sublimely sexy, graceful, beautiful... and powerful.

Then the delivery boy came incredibly long and hard, crying out in ecstasy - and the woman didn't miss so much as a drop of the cum that gushed from his cock in a veritable torrent.

Once she'd milked him dry, the woman rose with exquisite grace, replacing the cushion on the other chair, then walking calmly and with sensual, perfect elegance over to the purse on the counter, while the delivery boy finished arranging his clothes...

...and then he blinked, looking momentarily confused.

"Here you are, Billy," The woman said in a rich, full voice, giving the delivery boy some money. "You may keep the change."

"Thanks, Miss Manchester!" Billy replied, heading for the door - and pausing to exchange greetings with Body, (although, of course, he didn't call her that), looking at her almost longingly... and wondering why his cock wasn't responding the way he'd expect it to around her.

Then he walked out the door, completely unaware that the gorgeous woman with the perfect, milky-pale skin and rick, dark hair had just given him a blowjob.

Well, to be honest, that was because he wasn't the one that had gotten it. His body had - but it had been Melvin who had been the one to experience it.

With a deep sigh of regret and loss, Body surveyed the body that had once been hers - still with the coloration Webmistress had possessed, but formed into the epitome of perfection, as defined by the mind - or, rather, the impossibly advanced and 'perfect' Artificial Intelligence - now operating it.

That, after all, had been the last-ditch solution Body had given into, the last act she - as Webmistress - had, or ever would, perform. The reality-warping power, after all, was provided by a structure in the brain itself... so when she'd made that last alteration she'd ever make to reality, she'd swapped 'minds' (but not brains), and thus bodies, with Melissa Manchester.

Who, in the space of less than a single second, had calculated this 'perfect' solution for all the imbalances in reality.

Well, that everybody e/se seemed to think was perfect - Body was considerably less taken with the solution, at least as it applied to her...

"Good morning, Tinabelle," Melissa greeted her with the same name the delivery boy had used, warmly and sweetly - which she was now able to do, with the 'perfection' of holding reality-bending powers and the fact that Melvin was no longer 'egging her on' allowing her to be perfectly sweet, comfortable and rational, without the egotistical need to 'become' a Goddess...

...since, in a very really way, she already was one, and so perfectly secure in the knowledge that she didn't need to dominate the rest of the world into overt recognition of the fact. Mainly, she only used it to give various unsuspecting men the sexual experience of a lifetime - although none of those men ever knew it, because it had been Melvin who experienced it each time. In bodies of every different possible size and type, with cocks of every size, shape and color, Melvin got to experience the perfect sexual encounter for that particular body - and since, between sexual encounters, Melvin was dormant inside of Melissa, life from his perspective had become nothing more than an unending series of perfect sexual encounters, each different from the last to keep it from getting boring.

So, even from Melvin's point of view, limited as it was, the solution was perfect.

"Good morning, Melissa!" Body replied, hating how warm, bright and cheerful it emerged from her glossy hot-pink lips...

...and then she gasped as her nipples suddenly swelled to full extension - and since that was a rather impressive amount, left them straining almost - almost - painfully against the shiny spandex that covered them

Though she wanted to say it sourly, when Body spoke it was not only in that warm, chipper voice, but with the pleasure thrumming through her from her nipples quite evident in its tone: "..er, and Tits says 'good morning', too!"

"Of course they do, dear." Melissa said with warmly complacent certainty. "Please sit down, and I'll get your breakfast for you."

Oh-so-very-carefully, Body maneuvered Tits into place, resting them gently on the table as she lowered herself into the chair.

To the rest of the world, she was Tinabelle - but that was really a 'secret code' indicating that she was a composite creature - Tits and Body.

Tits was what had once been Henry Metzger/Melanie Honey. Body was what had been Melissa Manchester's female form, with what had been Webmistress' mind inside of it, controlling it... except for Tits, and certain associated functions Tits had co-opted.

Henry/Melanie had been obsessed totally and wholly with tits... and the 'imbalance' had come from Henry hating them on 'his' body, and from Melanie wanting to focus exclusively on her tits to the exclusion on her own body.

Well, now both sides of Tits' personas were merged into one, happy one - for they were 'nothing but a huge pair of tits'... and they had Body to take care of non-directly-Tit-related things, like eating, sleeping, walking and talking...

...and, eventually, though Body had so far successfully fought a losing battle against it, 'taking care' of any or all of the cocks that Tits loved getting hard. Tits only cared about being admired and lusted after, fondled and pleased and, yes, sometimes even fucked directly - but it was Body who was expected, once 'broken in', to deal with cocks most of the time, and even clean up after the times Tits themselves were fucked.

Of course, the body Tits was mounted on was no longer exactly identical to the one Melissa had posses when she'd been in it. Oh, it was certainly close enough - close enough that 'Tinabelle Manchester' was Melissa's younger sister. Then again, the Tits mounted on that body weren't the same ones Melanie had been carting around...

...the new fusion was much more 'efficiently' designed for the purpose of drawing men's attention.

The new Melissa was wearing a navy-blue housedress with white polka- dots, a red leather belt, black back-seamed stockings, and red leather T- strap pumps with a six-inch gold-toned spike heel that matched the elegantly understated jewelry she wore - and it all enclosed a 36DD-24-36 figure.

For the various similarities between the two 'sisters', there was absolutely nothing 'understated' about Tinabelle.

She, too, wore a 'housedress' - but hers was white with pink polka-dots, with the upper half of the dress glossy spandex, and the loose-pleated skirt of white silk over several layers of lace underskirts. The hem of the lowest underskirt didn't quite cover the elasticized tops of the white nylons she wore, making the little pink satin ribbon bows on the back of each nylon visible.

Rather than a belt, Tinabelle wore a hot-pink leather waist cincher that pulled the spandex below Tits even tighter, making Tits stand out all the more - though Body felt they hardly needed the help. However, Tits felt that it was better not to display much of their actual skin, but still make their size unmistakable - the theory being it would make men all the more eager to see them displayed than a plunging neckline would.

Her shoes had a T-strap upper in the same hot-pink, high-gloss leather - but the one-and-a-half inch platforms were white, as were the seven inch tapered heels. Also gloss hot pink were the big, hoop earrings, the large 'bead' necklace, and the many bangles Tits had Body wearing today.

All in all, that ensemble encased a 38HHH-20-38 figure with legs proportionally longer for her height than Melissa's - and the much larger Tits now boasted nipples keeping in scale with her massive, incredible firm spherical size.

Not that 'Tinabelle' looked like a bimbo - no, she still had all of Melissa's old beauty and grace (as well as golden hair and green eyes), and her enforced reactions were warm, sweet, and even intelligent. She didn't have Melissa's 'programming' to force her to try and be graceful and 'perfect' in every motion, but she did have the 'muscle memory' that any motion she made had an amazing amount of grace built-in. It just seemed considerably more 'natural' than the original, blonde Melissa's movements... and nowhere near as elegant as the new Melissa's movements.

There would be some women out there, Body knew, who would actually kill for a body like the one she now possessed - but she wasn't one of them...

Melissa brought over a plate, and placed it on the table. Very carefully, Body manoeuvred plate and herself so that she could reach around Tits and begin eating the breakfast - which was, of course, perfectly prepared.

Shortly thereafter, Jezebel came into the room.

A skin-tight red spandex dress, barely long enough to cover her crotch and that magnificent ass of her, encased her body, and she was walking with a frankly provocative 'come and get it' walk atop the tapered heels of her glossy patent leather thigh-high black boots...

...and Jazzy was consciously unaware of any of this, as she spoke in that still-feminine voice, but with a male cadence.

"Damn - there be some fucking hot female flesh in this room right now!" Jazzy exclaimed with a grin. "How about a quick bite to eat before I head out, gorgeous?"

"Certainly." Melissa replied, warmly. "What are your plans for the day, my dear?"

"Oh, you know - just gonna go for a walk, see what's up..." Jazzy replied conversationally - unaware as she said 'what's up', Jezebel had put a hand at her crotch, using it to mime getting an erection.

"Might pop into the sports bar for something to drink..." Jazzy continued - as Jezebel lifted a hand and mimed giving a blow-job.

"Might run into a couple of the guys, bring 'em back here to hang out..." The blissfully unaware 'male' portion of her personality not noticing as Jezebel put air quotes around 'hang out', then held her hands out in front of her and bucked her hips, pantomiming sex.

Despite everything, despite her own unhappiness with her fate, Body had to fight back a grin at the sight of Jezebel's actions to Jazzy's conversational, off-hand tone.

Well - that, and knowing what would happen, since Body had been around when Jezebel had brought a guy home to 'hang out' with earlier in the month. The guy and her had been sittin' in the living room, watching TV, and Jazzy had commented on one of the 'hot babes' on the screen... then 'conversationally' mentioned that she would have looked even hotter wearing something shorter and tighter.

Like the very clothes she'd been wearing, without being consciously aware of it. Which was why the guy had drawn certain conclusions when Jazzy had continued in the same vein, about how when a hot babe dressed 'short and tight', you knew it was because she was looking for some action... an opinion given while Jezebel had reached over and begun lightly stroking his crotch.

As he'd given her a good, hard fucking that she (or, at least, her body) responded eagerly to, he must have thought it a bit odd to her here conversationally remark, "I don't know what you're doing back there, buddy but it feels fantastic. Keep it up!".

It certainly hadn't stopped him from following her instructions, Body had noticed.

Now, taking the breakfast sandwich Melissa had made for her, Jezebel wiggled and swayed her way out of the kitchen, her 'pure bitch-slut' persona currently in silent control of the majority of their shared body taking Jazzy's consciousness out to get fucked as much as they possibly could... while Jazzy's mind simply ignored or 'converted' anything that didn't fit her supposed male identity.

The weirdest thing about it, Body thought with a sigh, the depression re- enveloping her as she pushed the now-empty plate away, was the fact that both personas in the gorgeous black body were happy with their strange new life.

"Oh, come now, Tinabelle - surely it's not all as bad as that." Melissa said - even though she knew Body's feelings about her own current existence. "You are beginning to adapt to yourself, after all."

"Maybe," Body said warmly, wishing she could grunt it doubtfully, as she wished. "Then again, Tits punished me again this morning for how it took me to get out of bed. I understand they aren't just going to let me spend all my time hiding in bed - but is it really fair to humiliate me by lactating uncontrollably for nearly five minutes, simply because I don't pop right up out of bed like some bright-eyed jack-in-the-box...?"

Melissa simply looked at Body for a moment - and then made the slightest, elegantly graceful gesture with one hand...

Body felt herself - that is, her mind - 'shunted aside'. Like a puppet with its strings cut, she fell forward onto the table, supported solely by the Tits her head now flopped helplessly down upon, eyes open wide and staring helplessly as her face went blank and slack.

'I'm sorry - I didn't mean to complain...' Body shouted into the echoing vaults of her mind - but no sound emerged from her slack lips.

For a moment, she lay there helplessly - and then, with an oddly graceful convulsive jerk, Tits stood them up.

It was that 'pre-programmed' grace inherited from the original Melissa-bot body that allowed for the strange parody of a sexy walk as Tits moved towards the sink atop those high heels, arms hanging limp at her sides. She reached the sink - and then stood, motionless, as Melissa came over and carefully pulled the straps of their dress of Tinabelle's body, lowering it to the wasit-cincher and freeing Tits.

Tits - who was already transmitting a very familiar tingling, tightening sensation to Body's silently pleading mind.

Then, just as she'd already had to do once this morning, Body was forced to endure the sensations as milk began to leak, dribble, and occasional spurt from her huge, now-swollen nipples.

That was humiliating enough - but then Melissa took her right Tit's swollen nipple in hand... and began to squeeze and tug.

Body wished she could sob and plead in utter humiliation as the milk now became a gush with very tug... even as her body twitched under the utter humiliation of the intense pleasure generated from the humiliating and degrading milking she was undergoing. She knew from experience - which she'd sworn never to repeat - that the milk came out much faster if she actively 'milked' herself... but it was accompanied by pleasure she didn't want to feel, and only redoubled the demeaning humiliation when her pussy helplessly began to dampen from the pleasure.

Then, thankfully, Melissa stopped tugging on the massive nipple when Body estimated that tit was down to about half-full, and it returned to a steady leak like her still mostly-full left Tit...

...and then Melissa took the right Tit, lifted it up with both hands - and, latching her perfect lips around the swollen, super-sensitive nipple, she began to suck.

It was even more degradingly pleasurable that hand-milking had been, and the milk began coming faster and faster, flowing into Melissa's mouth...

...and then it exploded into a thick, steady jet of arching milk that quickly drained the rest of her right Tit - all over the kitchen floor.

All over the floor, because what had spurred the sudden, boob-draining gush of milk had been the orgasm she'd reached, just from being suckled. It was a tremendously powerful orgasm - or, in fact, 'double orgasm', for it had fired orgasmic pleasure in both the right Tit, and Body's now-sopping pussy. That amount of pleasure had been more than enough to overcome Tit's control of their composite body, and Tinabell had slumped to a loosely straddle-legged sitting position, her back supported by cabinetry, as she soundlessly and slack-faced shuddered her way through the Tit-draining, pussy-soaking orgasm that wracked her helplessly body.

"You aren't being punished, dear..." Melissa told her, gracefully crouched beside where Body finished helplessly shuddering her way through the last of the orgasm. "Tits is just trying to teach you that your new life doesn't have to be 'horrible' - that you can have a life full of pleasure, lots of pleasure, if only you'd let it..."

Then, Melissa turned and elegantly walked away, even as control was returned to Body, who shuddered and shivered, gasping.

Her face flushed, her breaths coming in pants, all too aware of the sodden, warm wetness in her panties and the milk still dribbling from her still mostly-full left Tit, Body stared down at the massive, spherical endowments thrust outrageously far from her chest, each tipped with a massive, pink nipple at full, throbbing extension.

For a long moment Body simply stared down... and then, with an almost dreamy motion, Tinabelle carefully hefted the full weight of her left breast in her hands. Held it for a second. Hesitantly, with fits and starts, lifted and twisted it. Almost reluctantly, pushed her head forward. Opened her lips. Hesitantly took the full, pink nipple between full, pink lips...

She might have been hesitant and unsure when she began to suck - but by the time an even more powerful orgasm caused the milk to empty from her second boob in one huge, gushing stream, she was slurping and sucking hungrily at the massive nipple, hands needing and squeezing her breasts, refusing to let go even as more milk than she could possibly swallow spurted and gushed from her lips around the huge nipple, her body jerking and shuddering sharply in the throes of intense ecstasy.

Then the huge boob fell from her hand as Tinabelle slide down, laying in the puddle of milk, almost unwillingly basking in the afterglow of the most powerfully pleasure orgasmic experience of her life - and she couldn't help but acknowledge that Melissa's solution to Tits' and Body's problem might not have been nearly as 'imperfect' as she'd first believed...

THE END

SUMMARY: From his Jail cell, a macho male emails the writer giving detail to his slow transformation into a female for crimes committed.

Arrested Development

By Gunslinger

Subject: COURT ORDERED E-MAIL DIARY Date: Wed, 15 Mar 2000 08:46:35 PST

From: "John Doe" <7382635276@idoc.gov> To: gunslinger@beararchive.com

If you've been reading the papers, then you know who I am - or who I was. Until two days ago, I was Richard William Lockhart, of Chicago, Illinois.

Yeah, that Richie Lockhart. The one who plead guilty to twenty-two counts of aggravated sexual assault. The one who took the most unusual plea-bargain in the history of Illinois jurisprudence, rather than face a life in jail.

You don't know the details of that plea-bargain - but you're going to find out. One of the many little conditions of this arrangement was the most unusual elocution I've ever heard of - I've got to write this daily e-mail account to a person chosen by my 'keeper' - and, for whatever reason, she picked you. I have no idea what the hell you're supposed to do with this damned thing, but I have to obey all the rules laid down, or my new address is going to be Joliet, for 'the rest of my natural-born life'.

See, the deal is that I'm a free man in only two weeks. That's right - in fourteen days, if I obey all the rules of this little plea-bargain, I get to walk out free and clear.

I won't be 'myself', though - one of the weirder little aspects is that I'm legal a ward to one Doctor Evelyn Meredith - my 'keeper'. I'm also now legally known as 'John Doe'. I gave up my 'past' life for a chance at a new one. All my old identity is 'gone'. I'm not allowed to ever use my previous identity to gain any 'history'. Hell, if I want to drive again, I'm going to have to reapply for a license under whatever name I get 'assigned' to me by Doctor Meredith on my last day. That's the rules.

Good ol' Doc Meredith is the one who's going to decide who I'm going to be for the rest of my life. See, I've given up everything. I'll be free when I walk out of here - but I won't be myself. I'm going to be 'cured', see. That's what this whole, weird little two-week rehab thing's about. Supposedly, by the end of that time I'll be a new person in body and mind. Well, I don't know about the whole 'mind' routine, but I ain't exactly Tom Cruise, if you know what I mean. So, maybe the 'cure' will be making such an absolute stud-muffin that I'll have women throwing themselves at me, thus removing my 'need' to force it.

Hell - a guy can dream, can't he?

Look, I really don't know what to say in this damned letter. It's supposed to be an 'introduction', let you get a feel for who I am and what's going to happen when my 'rehab' starts tomorrow. What should I say? That I'm short, skinny, funny-looking? I've got brown hair that's hair-colored. I've got brown eyes, brown beard, and wear brown loafers ninety percent of the time. You know that movie where an asteroid's gonna hit earth and they send a bunch of miners up in shuttles? You remember that guy who went nuts, shot up some stuff, sat on the 'nuclear weapon', stuff like that? Thin guy, greasy black hair, bulging eyes?

He could be my better looking brother. Imagine him shorter, with muddy brown hair and eyes, and a voice that sounds like he sucks helium twenty-four hours a day - and you've got me down to a 'T'.

How 'bout you, 'Gunslinger' old buddy? Who the hell are you? I know you're a guy, 'cause Doctor Meredith refers to you as 'he'. I know that you're a writer, too - and if this is some sort of deal where you're getting an exclusive book or news story, then more power to you. I just don't get why Doctor Meredith seems to find it amusing that I'm being forced to tell my story to you.

Speaking of my keeper, she just told me that I can stop here. (Yippee). The court says I have to write to you every day, so I will. I hope that you know why the hell I'm doing this - 'cause I sure as hell don't.

DAY ONE

Look, buddy - I don't know who the hell you are, but I know you're a guy, so you'll understand why I'm asking you to do this. More importantly, at the moment, you're the only person outside this secure facility I'm allowed to 'talk' to - and not only am I 'allowed' to say whatever the hell I want to you, I'm urged to.

So, here's what I've got to say:

CALL MY LAWYER! His name's David Robertson, and he's in the book. Chicago, Illinois. Firm of David Robertson and Associates, Attorneys-at-Law. Call him, and tell him he's got to do something.

You know what they did to me today? They treated me like some fuckin' faggot or something!

Oh, there was other stuff, and I don't know what the hell that's about, but it was no big deal. I've got to walk around all the time with this pole on wheels with this IV hanging off of it and running into my arm. They give me a very specific diet, and they're making me do these exercises I can't figure out. Plus, there's these two-hour sessions of 'hypnotherapy', where they put me under with drugs and I wake up feeling groggy and 'stupid' for a couple hours. Big deal.

But I was dressed like some fuckin' sissy while I did all this stuff! No shit!

I mean, it started right after I woke up this morning. I'm tryin' to grow a goatee, but I shave around it every third day or so, so people'll know it's hair, and not some dirt or something. Only, I'm told to shave the whole thing off. So, I'm a little ticked, no big deal, I do it.

But now - that's not what Doctor Meredith meant when she said I was to get rid of 'all the hair'. She meant everywhere, man!

Jeez - I thought she was joking, at first. Two really big fuckin' guards-slash-interns made me understand that it was no joke. I couldn't believe it - those two huge apes actually stood over me in the industrial-sized shower, watching me as I stood there naked and wet - and they made sure I shaved off all my body hair. I think they're faggots or something, cause it didn't seem to bother them at all to watch my skinny naked ass as I shaved my legs like I was some fuckin' chick getting ready for the prom. It just wasn't the legs, though - it was everywhere.

Then they did something to me. I don't know what the hell it's called, but involves a rotating table, this big fuckin machine with warnings all over it about lasers and shit - and when they were done, not only didn't I have any body hair, but you couldn't tell I ever did. I've never been one of these 'ape men' who grows hair all over their body - but I've never been as completely hairless as I am now, not since I was old enough to walk.

I think it's permanent, too. Isn't that laser shit 'forever'? Or maybe it's 'only' a couple of months. God - this is so fuckin' embarrassing, man - you gotta know what I'm talking about. How'd you like to shave off all your body hair, like some broad?

But that's not all - oh, no. They also made me wear girl's clothes! Yeah!

First, it was like this little, cute, 'Catholic School Girl' outfit. You know - plain white panties (Doctor Meredith called them 'briefs', but they're women's panties), plaid skirt, white blouse, stupid little plaid tie, these silly white knee socks and those damned 'Mary Jane' shoes.

God - it was so embarrassing. Those damn panties don't fit, of course - even if it wasn't disgusting to wear girls panties, the way they fit would have made it bad enough - too loose on the ass, too tight on the crotch. God!

The blouse, I guess, was no big deal - kinda like a dress shirt, if you know what I mean - but the damned buttons threw me. They're on the wrong fuckin' side!

Then the skirt Ugh. Man - it was just longer than my knees, but I felt like I was naked. At least it was plaid - I kept telling myself it was a goddamn Kilt. Hell, if Mel Gibson can wear a kilt, I could live with it.

Then there was these socks - white and knee length. I wouldn't give a damn about them, but I was ordered to be 'presentable' in the damn outfit, and I swear I musta pulled the things up a million times during the day.

Then the shoes. Those black patent leather things with the straps, you know? The heels are short, little more than on cowboy boots - but these were god-damned women's shoes, man!

Thing was I was glad to get back into my 'day-time' outfit after my exercise periods. I know that sounds fuckin' sick - but that 'outfit' covered just about all of me, even if it was in women's clothes. During my workouts, I had to wear this hot-pink bathing-suit like thing, with white pantyhose kinda things. Women's sneakers - and ankle and wrist warmers, and a sweatband. I looked like an extra from that movie about dancers, the one made in the eighties when this was 'gym wear'. God - it was so damned embarrassing.

Not embarrassing as dinner and the couple hours afterwards. I had to wear 'evening wear'!

I'm not fuckin' lying, man. I had to wear a fuckin' black dress that went down to my ankles. It sounds like it covered a lot, but, trust me, it didn't. It's neckline was low, and the back went practically all the way to my ass crack. The skirt had this slit up the side, and I had to wear these black nylons! And shoes - high-heeled shoes. Black velvet 'pumps', with these skinny little three-inch heels. God!

I wouldn't have let them do any of this to me except for those two damned apes. The big, muscular guys had to actually force that stupid 'school-girl' outfit on me.

Then they hand-and-ankle-cuffed me into a chair until I was ready to be 'cooperative'.

What the hell else could I do?

Right now, it's not that bad. It's almost bed time, and these three hours are 'mine'. I get to read or watch TV - and I can wear any of the clothes they left with me. It's all women's clothes, and nothing fits right, but jeans and a T-shirt are jeans and a T-shirt, even if they're women's clothes and over top those damned panties.

But you gotta call my lawyer, man. Tell him what's going on. There's got to be something he can do. Isn't this 'cruel and unusual?'

DAY TWO

Please, man - tell me that you've called my lawyer. Tell me that he's investigating a way to make them stop this shit.

Oh, I get it, kinda. They're trying to teach me to respect women by forcing me to live like one. I know what they're trying to do - but that doesn't mean I like it, goddamn it!

It's getting worse. Today I had to do all the same things as yesterday. You know - had to wear the 'school-girl' outfit, the workout clothes, and 'evening wear', although this time it was a red dress, nylons and red pumps. Plus, I don't have to drag my IV on a pole anymore - now they're got the bag on an arm-strap, and it looks like a goddamn purse, with a tube running to my arm.

But now they're making me wear make-up! That's what I did for most of the time I wasn't working out or in hypnotherapy. They were forcing me to go through lessons in make-up! Now, I have to wear make-up whenever anybody else might see me - which means damned near all the time!

Look, I'm telling you - there's no way this can be legal, even if I did sign the damned agreement. I mean - nobody told me that shit like this would be going on, or I'd never have agreed.

Well... maybe. Considering what goes on in prison, maybe looking like a sissy-faggot is better then being some big con's 'bitch'.

But damned, it's disgusting. I look like the world's ugliest chick. Not that I'm upset about not looking good like this - hell no!

Look - you gotta get my lawyer. I don't care what you might think about me, or anything. You probably think I'm scum, and deserved to be punished. Fine - let them punish me! But not like this!

Think about it, man - do you have any idea how humiliating it is to dress up like some fuckin' chick and wear makeup?

DAY THREE

Please. Help me.

I thought the first two days were bad - but they're nothing compared to today.

They performed 'minor surgery' on me - they put some sort of chip thingee in my neck, after I left my room this morning without putting on any damn make-up. They said I was being 'troublesome', so they knock me out and insert this little thing in the back of my neck. It's like a two hour surgery, from start to finish.

But now they can zap me with electricity any time they want to! The bitch actually has a little button on her watch, and every time I do the least thing she thinks is 'resisting' her 're-education', I get zapped! Man, it hurts - I tell you, it's like getting hit by a Mack truck, only without any 'real' injury.

She also said that having the chip in will help them 'accelerate' their program.

So I started wearing goddamn high heels today! I mean - I thought my 'evening wear' heels were 'high heels', and I could barely wobble around on them!

No - when the bitch said 'high heels', she meant 'high heels'. Platform boots, with seven inch spiked heels.

I thought she was kidding! There was no fucking way I could walk in heels like that!

She wasn't kidding. I had to wear the boots - and I'm still wearing them. They buckle up, and have this little lock on each one that keeps me from taking them off, even for bed - I have to wear them until I get it right, even for getting up in the middle of the night for the bathroom.

But that's not all - I'm monitored twenty-four hours a day, and they're using 'light charges' (weaker 'zaps', like getting hit with a Buick instead of a Mack truck, big diff) to 'help' me learn to walk in heels. Every time I goof up, they zap me!

I wore different clothes today, 'cause the bitch says my outfit has to match, and the boots don't go with any of the outfits. These boots are black fake leather and go up thigh-high, covering my entire legs.

So, I wore this red leather skirt and a white 'fuzzy' sweater for the morning.

I didn't want to, but with this chip in me, I had to - just as I had to learn how to do different make-up shit to go with my new 'look'.

I also was 'honored' to be able to start wearing jewelry today - cheap, gaudy stuff. By the time they were done, I looked like some cheap tranny hooker or something.

The work-out was hell. Pure hell - I had to wear the boots the entire time, and I could barely stand, much less go through the exercises. They said they were 'going easy' on me, but I don't think it was any such thing. There I was in that pink leotard and these boots, trying to follow the exercise program it was nuts!

That's another thing - there's something else weird about these boots.

They're electric. There's some sort of battery packs in the platforms of each boot, and I keep feeling these weird tingles in my legs that they keep saying is EMS, without telling me what the hell that means. All I know is that as I ate each meal, I was 'plugged in' to allow the batteries to recharge. In fact, I'm plugged into a socket right now, as I write this.

Man, I think the doctor's actually insane. Crazy. One card short of a deck.

You gotta talk to somebody - anybody - and find a way to get me out of this. I didn't agree to letting somebody put some sort of microchip in my neck, man.

For my evening clothes, I had to wear this really tight leather skirt, and this black silk blouse. That was bad enough - I could hardly walk in this dress, and just sitting down...

...but after dinner, I had to dance with one of the big apes that works here! Of course, I argued - and got zapped. So I danced, really badly - and got zapped. I fell down a dozen times at least, got zapped each time - then had to have help getting up, because I couldn't get up by myself!

Now I can't wear jeans and a T-shirt to 'relax', because I can't get jeans on with the boots on. Even that tight skirt had to be laced onto me.

So now I'm wearing the only thing I could find that was comfortable and that I could get on. A goddamn pink silk negligee!

Help me.

DAY FOUR

Goddamn it - have you called anyone? Talked to anyone? Is anyone even out there, reading these damned things?

Look - you want to know what I'm wearing right now? Besides from those damned boots, I mean?

A corset. That's right, a corset - black leather, so tight I can hardly breathe, locked on me like those boots - and, like the damned boots, it's electric! More of the EMS, whatever the hell it is!

That's not all - they're really drugging me up. With everything that's been going on, I haven't been paying much attention to that damned IV I'm toting around everywhere - but now I'm really, really worried about it. It's harder for me to concentrate - and my emotions are all over the map!

I even broke out crying earlier. God! That's embarrassing - but I gotta tell you what's going on, so you understand. I don't care if I'm a low-life scum - I don't deserve this!

Aside from the corset, today was mostly like yesterday, with a lot of zapping for my 'screw-ups'. It's getting downright constant - every slightest 'unfeminine' thing, the slightest goof - and I'm zapped!

God - my feet are killing me. I still barely stand and walk in these damn heels, and I'm wearing them twenty four hours a day - and the boots are too tight to begin with. Man, I feel like my feet are being crushed to a pulp, and my heels and legs hurt from trying to balance on the little 'nothing' heels.

I'm going to bed - I need to just lay down and sleep. This corset is driving me nuts, and with this twenty-four-hour-a-day dope flowing into my veins, I can't think straight.

DAY FIVE

God-fucking-damn it!

I'm not writing this - I can't write on the computer, not now. I've got these fucking.. glove-thingeers on my hands! They're leather, they lace up the side and they go from my hands all the way up to my shoulders - and it's full of these little stiffener-joiner things. I can use my hands for most things, but typing ain't one of them. I also can't lift anything very heavy, can't make any sudden gestures...

See, that's what they're supposed to be for. I have to be more 'graceful', so these glove things are the answer. They look like leather gloves, but they have resistance things in them that only let me move slowly and smoothly - and sudden movements or changes of direction, and they lock-up solid.

Guess what? The fucking boots and corset have the same thing - only they weren't 'turned on' before. They're electrically operated, and the gloves are actually plugged into the power-pack of the corset.

Oh, yeah - all three of them are also doing that EMS thing, too - so now I got to recharge all the time. Mostly during the meals, and during those hypno-therapy sessions. It's nuts.

Anyway, they hooked up this voice-recognition software for me to 'write' the e-mail - but they had fun with that, too. When they programmed it, they took recordings of my voice and digitally altered them, finding a pitch that sounds female. Guess what - that's what they programmed this computer with. I've been sitting here for three hours trying to match the fucking voice they picked - and what you're reading now isn't how I'm saying it, as I keep 'screwing up' the voice and having to repeat myself three or four times to get it to take it.

I sound like some sort of phone-sex girl. The only 'female' voice I can make is this high-pitched sort of 'bimbo' voice. It's so fucking degrading, man.

This is getting way-the-fuck out of hand. I hope you're reading these, I hope you're finding somebody to help me. This shit is crazy - and it's not even half way yet.

They say that I have to start using this voice all the time. All the staff will be carrying little hand-held computers with the same voice recognition programming in them, and if I screw up - I get zapped.

You've got to do something. Please.

I'm going to bed. Not only did it take way too long to 'write' this much - but I just seem to be exhausted all the time. They're not feeding me enough, and the drugs are screwing up my system. I'm a skinny little guy to begin with - yet they're almost starving me.

God - I'm exhausted.

DAY SIX

I think I'm going to kill that bitch.

Maybe a murder charge would get me sent up for life anyway - but at least this shit would be over, and I'd get the intense satisfaction of killing the doctor.

You know what she did to me today - she made me put on 'girl padding'. Padding for my hips and ass and these silicone 'breast forms' that looked like disembodied tits - only now they're 'embodied', hanging off my chest.

I've got D-cup 'tits'. God!

I can barely move with all this constrictive 'grace-building' stuff on, I've got fake tits glued to my chest and hip and ass pads glued 'down below' - and I'm doing my own make-up and jewelry and getting dressed in girly clothing. I'm doing my work-out sessions, and having to dance with a guy every night after dinner - all while talking like some fucking bimbo.

Okay, I get it - women don't have it easy. But this isn't real - I'm not really a woman! It's not like this for 'real' women! This is worse for me than any woman who was born! I mean, flat chested women would be proud to get big tits - not disgusted and sickened like me. Real women wouldn't argue and fight not to have to wear heels - they all learn how to do that as part of their life. Women aren't forced to wear skirts and tight clothing - they choose to do that!

The bitch has flipped her lid - when I tried to reason with her, explain this to her, she gave me a huge zap, and I had an 'emergency' hypnotherapy session, another two hours in addition to my regular ones. I was practically a zombie for most of the day - I was so confused and emotional that I was probably the perfect little prisoner, doing exactly what I was told because I was too 'dopey' to do anything else.

Even now I'm feeling all messed up - but it's way better than it was before.

I gotta get some sleep. Even the sleep I'm getting doesn't seem to be helping my exhaustion - I keep having really weird dreams or nightmares or something. I can never really remember them when I wake up, but I'm not sleeping well.

DAY SEVEN

Halfway.

I'm halfway there - I've just got to hang on. If I can.

I'm scared, Gunslinger - I think I'm loosing my mind. Maybe it's the stress, maybe it's the drugs, maybe it's the exhaustion - but I think I'm going insane.

I might make it to the end of the two weeks - as a raving lunatic. It scares the shit out of me.

I woke up this morning - without really waking up, if you know what I mean. I was still half asleep as I got dressed. Then I open the door to my room...

...and there's this woman standing in the hall. I see her, and I think to myself 'hey, she's pretty good looking...'

Then I realize that it's a mirror. No shit - I was looking at myself.

But... even after I realized I was looking in a mirror, I couldn't shake the idea that 'she' was pretty good looking. Not gorgeous, but cute - and I couldn't break that thought all day.

I still can't.

They've put mirrors up everywhere - and every time I go past one, I find myself thinking of the reflection as somebody else - a woman.

And it's making me do weird shit. I can't help myself.

Like - when I saw her walking in a mirror. I thought she was doing okay in her heels - but it would be better if she walked like this...

So she did - only it was me, walking the way I wanted the 'woman' to walk. I know that it's really me and all - but I can't stop myself. I'm walking, standing, sitting, moving - so that the cute chick in the mirror looks good to me. It's like I've developed a split personality or something.

I keep catching myself doing this shit, and make myself stop - for a few minutes. Then I realize that I'm doing it again, without thinking about it. Almost as soon as my mind wanders - which it does a hell of a lot - I 'automatically' start trying to make that 'woman' more attractive in the way she moves and stands and walks. Then I catch myself for a few minutes - then my mind wanders again.

I caught myself touching up my make-up, not realizing what I was doing until I was done and 'admiring' the way 'she' looked.

It's scaring the hell out of me.

It means that I'm getting zapped very little - but even that doesn't make me happy. It means that I'm acting the way they want me to act - like a girl.

So well that they don't need to correct me that often. I'm not even 'consciously' trying to do it.

Maybe it's like that guy and the dogs. You know, where he trained them to ring a bell or something? Maybe all these zaps have 'trained' me to avoid them by being girlish. Maybe I can't help myself - maybe when I'm released, I'll still do it, like some helpless sissy boy.

You know what scares me the most, though - when I first saw the 'woman' walking in these really high-heeled platform boots - I thought she was doing pretty well in them. She was walking pretty good in them, if not as sexy as I 'wanted'.

When I 'remembered' that she was me....

I felt almost proud that I had learned to walk in those heels so quickly.

I.. I'm...

I gotta go to bed.. I can't think straight....

DAY EIGHT

Oh, dear God - help me. Please. I know I'm scum, I repent everything I ever did, I'll go to prison. Just help me.

I don't know who I am any more.

Oh, I know who I was, and who I still am, even if legally I'm no one. But that's just a name, a history - not the real me, the part of me that makes me who I am.

And I think I'm losing that.

It all came off today - the gloves, the boots, the corset - all of it except the padding and the IV. I was allowed to get back into that 'Schoolgirl' outfit...

..and I was grateful for it. I really was - it was so much more comfortable than everything else, so much better, even if it was still women's clothes.

Then I saw my reflection - and I couldn't see 'me' that much in it.

I always assumed that, under all that, I still looked the same - but whatever that EMS shit is, and whatever the drugs they're pumping into me, I look different. My legs, my arms, my waist - all look more like a woman's. My arms are skinnier, my arms more feminine...

Oh, dear God in Heaven - my legs are actually kinda sexy! Oh God, oh God...

Sorry - I'm sorry - I'm just so emotional now. Even writing this - I'm crying. Not sobbing - just tears. Tears like a faucet I can't turn off all the way. I can't stop.

There's a lot of things I can't stop.

I told you - they took those boots off. Those awful, high-heels boots. I could wear the Mary Jane's, with their nice low heel...

...but - I couldn't. they felt.. wrong. Uncomfortable. Like I have clunky 'Frankenstein' boots on my feet. I couldn't walk right in them, and they felt all wrong.

I actually asked - pleaded - with the bitch for a pair of higher heels - and when she told me I could pick my own wardrobe, as long as it matched, I actually sobbed in relief.

Oh God, dear God, what the fucks wrong with me? What are they doing to me?

I picked these white platform pumps with a six inch heel. By myself - no forcing me, no threat of zapping - I actually picked them so I could feel 'comfortable'.

Comfortable! In high heels!

Then I picked clothes to go with it. A slightly short of knee-length denim skirt with built-in denim suspenders over a white T-shirt that covered my...

Oh - yeah. I started wearing a bra. They told me to - but I didn't argue. I didn't.. 'want' to. I... Wait - I'll get there. Let me do this in order.

God - it's so fucking hard to concentrate... Where was I?

Oh, yeah - the shoes and clothes. Anyway, I got to pick my own outfit, and that's what I picked to feel comfortable - but that whole mirror thing is still going on - and it's getting worse.

When I saw myself in the mirror this morning, before getting dressed, I wasn't seeing 'me' - I was seeing 'her' - and the sight of the stuck-on pads disgusted me, especially the breasts. So I put on 'nude' nylons with my panties to hide the joins of the ass and hip padding, and when I was told to put on a bra, I did it eagerly, so that the half-naked woman in the mirror looked good.

I was admiring the 'cute' woman - and I still hadn't 'clued in'.

That's what's scaring me the most - I got all the way dressed, walked around for awhile, was doing my work-out when it all hit. What I was doing, how I was feeling...

The fact that I was 'voluntarily' doing everything I could to be a better female.

I collapsed and cried. They let me - no zapping or anything. I almost wish they had - God, I just lay there and sobbed.

The thing is - I'm still doing it. My mind wanders in and out. Sometimes I forget I'm disgusted by what's going on, and feel proud about the way I look. Like when I was in the workout - the whole thing came crashing down when my cock slid out of place and made a bulge, and I felt the need to hide it again like I had been all morning, so it wouldn't ruin the illusion. I'd done it this morning without having to really think about it - but it was tougher to do in my workout clothes, and it registered on me what I was doing.

Yet - after the.. the...

Damn - I can't remember. Whatever it is that the doctor and I do for two hours, when I go to sleep. Call it my 'nap', though it's not helping my exhaustion. If anything, it's making me more confused.

Anyway - after my nap, I was that whole 'look like a good woman' person for a couple of hours without thinking about it. Not that I thought I was a woman, you know? I still know I'm a guy...

...but for chunks of the day, I was a guy who wanted to do his best to look and act like a woman.

I'm exhausted. I can't write anymore. I'm going to slip into my negligee and go to bed. I'll write more tomorrow.

DAY NINE

I can't take it any more.

I did it again, today - but more of today was spent in that... the.. You know - that other thinking kinda of thing.

I wore women's clothing - picked them out myself and didn't think twice about it. All day, I barely realized what I was doing, not until my 'alone time'.

I just tried to talk in my real voice. I can't do it - I can't even remember what my voice really sounds like. The voice I'm using now sounds to me like I'm supposed to talk like this.

I can barely make myself remember that I shouldn't.

I think it's this stuff in my purse in my arm. I'm so 'used' to it that I really didn't think about it. Except I did, tonight, when it caught on something and pulled out.

I started to put it back in my arm - then realized what I was doing. What I have been doing.

Letting them do these things to me.

I'm a man. I know I'm a man. Even dressed like a woman, I'm a man - and this is it. I'm fighting back.

They're pounding on the door right now - but I pushed my bed in front of it. It will take them awhile to get in.

I'm tearing off all the 'padding'. Unnnghhhhh!

God that hurt - these tits are really glued on. Ummmmghnnn!

That's one - oh shit, I think I'm going to puke. I look so ugly - I've only got one tit and...

No. No - be strong...

I... I stole some tinfoil at dinner. It was on the baked potato, and they didn't see me. It's on my neck now, and I think they can't use the button to zap me, because of it.

I think...

Ahhhhrrghhhh.. Unnnnnn... Oww...

That's it - all the padding's off. It hurt - but it's gone.

I have to do this - even if it means I'm going to prison for life. You understand, don't you?

I... I realized that I'm ashamed of my own cock. The sight of it, at least - even now, I keep wanting to 'hide' it.

This is them - they're doing this to me. I'm so confused...

I'm going to... Arggghhhhhhhh!

No, no let me go! I won't let...

DAY TEN

Ohhhh...

I feel so funny....

Doctor... whatzername gave me some stuff for the pain.... I feel funny... but good Everything seems to be so funny... I keep giggling for no reason...

Tee hee.... Doctor was sooooo mad at me last night. Yelled at me a lot about all the things I did then she got all calm real sudden like and told me that I had to be punished...

So they did surgery on me, most of last night and a lot of today. I don't 'member much of it, really, 'cause I was unconc... unconju out of it. (Tee hee.) But they told me what they were doing and I can see it, so I know...

You want to know what they did? I got titties now. Real ones.

Well, I guess they're not real, kinda - but they're mine, no padding or anything. They're really big, too - she said that I'm a triple-E cup now.

I didn't know they'd be so... not really 'heavy', but 'there', if you know what I mean. I can feel them all the time, pulling on my chest, bouncing and swaying about when I move - but not very much right now because they're all bandaged up. I was told they'll be tender for a few more hours, but the new way they used means that they'll be fine tomorrow and they won't hurt anymore. They say that my new boobs are almost indus.. indets just like real one and nobody will know they're not from looking at them or touching them.

It's kinda funny - they look pretty good on me and I can't stop thinking about that. I'm not supposed to be proud of having great tits...

...am I?

I just can't seem to care about it though. I feel great - everything is wonderful, even my new tits and face...

Oh, yeah - they did something to my face. My nose is smaller now, and my lips feel all weird because they're really, really full and soft. Kinda like the way your lips feel when you go to the teeth-doctor, only it's kinda nice. It's really weird but right now it's a blast. Just talking makes me giggle because how they feel...

They also did something that makes my eyes look bigger, and now they're blue. A real light blue color, but I don't know how they did it. They told me how, but I didn't understand any of it and can't remember it, anyway.

Hee hee hee you should see how small my waist is! It's tint ! I can almost wrap my hands around it now, it's so small. They took this vacuum-cleaner-type-thingee and sucked all the fat-stuff in my waist out, and moved it to my ass. Now my ass feels like I got a pillow or something in each cheek, all big and round and firm.

I wonder what it would feel like to sit on it?

Oh, yeah - I'm not sitting down. I'm strapped into this frame thing that's holding me in, like, a standing position almost. It's keeping me from actually standing, though - it's kinda like I'm floating. That's 'cause they did a lot of surgery on my legs and feet and hips. They say I'll have to be like this for a day or so while they heal - see, they did something that makes my hips wider and my legs longer. They also made my feet smaller, and now they say I can walk real easy in high heels. I wouldn't care about that, but they told me that I can walk bare-foot on tippy-toe, or in high heels - but it will hurt if I walk in low heels, so I guess I should be glad that they made me able to walk easy in real high heels, huh?

Wait is that right?

I don't know... and right now, I don't care. Boy, I don't know what this stuff is, but I feel goood...

Tee hee...

Oh, hey, I guess I should get to sleep - Doctor says I've got a big day tomorrow. I wonder what's going to happen....

* * * * *

The blue-what flash lit the room like a heavenly camera taking a flash-photograph, followed a split second later by a crash of thunder that shook the small house - cottage, really - all the way to it's stone foundations.

Chris blinked and shook his head. Lifting one hand, he removed his tortoise-shell-and-gold rimmed glasses and rubbed the bridge of his nose with a thumb and forefinger, trying to expel the vagrant orange dots behind his eyelids - he'd had the bad luck to be looking at the window when the lightning had lit the sky.

The fury of the storm shook the cottage, and Chris shivered as the wind-driven rain lashed at the window. It was purely psychological - after all, the fire in the big stone fireplace kept the interior of the small cabin toasty warm - but the fact that it was irrational didn't help lessen the chill feeling that ran up and down his spine.

Replacing his glasses once more, Chris glanced almost accusingly at the silent 486 sitting on the scarred wooden desktop, then shook his head and once more returned to writing long-hand on a pad of paper, cursing the storm. With a limited income from his writing career, the cabin was about the only place in his price range, the low cost of rent a direct result of it's location in the 'boonies'. Usually, the small cabin was nearly ideal for him and his writing - quiet, comfortable, and in a setting that could be conducive to inspiration. However, one of the drawbacks was the fact that he almost always lost power when a storm rolled in.

Like now.

"Well..." He said to himself, philosophically, as he took a sip of Molson Canadian. "...at least I don't have to worry about being interrupted while I'm writing "

Just then, somebody began pounding on the front door.

For a second, Chris sat perfectly still, as if posing, then very slowly looked up towards the ceiling. "Veeeeery funny." He said, dryly.

Putting down the beer, he reached over and grasped the handle of his cane. With a soft, familiar groan that he didn't even hear anymore, he pushed himself out of the chair and began to cross the room, limping heavily.

The pounding on the door - fairly light, but insistent, continued unabated.

"All right, all right - I'm coming!" he called, irritably. Reaching the door, he pulled it open...
...and gaped.

Standing on his semi-sheltered front porch was the most incredible woman he'd ever see.

She didn't look real. Not that he thought she was a hallucination or anything - she was obviously flesh- and-blood. It was just that she didn't look like a natural person.

Second of all, there was her face. Surrounded by a mane of now-lank chestnut hair that dripped it's load of rainwater onto the floor, her face was almost surreal in it's perfection - huge, bright blue eyes, a tiny snub nose and full, bee-stung lips vied for attention on a heart-shaped face with inhumanly flawless skin.

Thirdly, her body was amazingly slender and supple, with full, womanly hips and legs that seemed impossible long. He could tell how long - and shapely - her legs were by the tiny black leather skirt that she wore, that showed off almost all of her nylon-clad legs, emphasized even further by the black platform shoes she wore, the seven-inch spike heels bringing her up to his own eye-level.

But, the first thing he noticed was the huge, round, mind-boggling tits that strained the seams of her tight white T-shirt - not to mention, stained Chris' imagination. With the shirt sopping wet and semi translucent, he could see quite a bit of the massive breasts, and could tell that the firm, spherical shape didn't come from a bra - her massive, dark nipples were clearly visible, almost painfully engorged from the cold spring rain.

While he gaped at her, she was also eyeing him, doubtfully, and Chris knew what she saw - a tall man in his early thirties, with a frame that had the bone structure that should have been husky, but - instead - was almost painfully thin and pale. A shock of dark hair and a full beard made the skin of his face look even more white, causing his dark - and, right now, gaping - eyes all that more conspicuous.

"Can... can I help you?" Chris finally managed.

Even her voice didn't sound real - too high, too weak, too breathy - it sounded like a stereotype of a woman's voice. It immediately brought to Chris' mind the voice of SNL actress Victoria Jackson.

"Gun... Gunslinger?" She asked, hesitantly.

Chris blinked at his 'nick'. "Uh, yeah..." He shook his head. "Do I... know you? Online, I mean.." he hastily added.
"...because I know I'd remember if we'd met in person."

"I'm " She paused, her face screwing up as she seemed to be struggling mightily with something.

" Bambi Biggins."

Chris' face betrayed amusement, skepticism and doubt. "I don't think I "

She waved a tiny, dainty hand in frustration. "That's the only name I can give." She said, in 'anger' - her voice wasn't given to displaying that emotion very well.

"I'm..." She paused, in thought - then inspiration struck. "the... woman (the word seemed to be dragged out of her throat, unwillingly) who wrote you those court ordered-emails."

Chris blinked, eyes widening in shock. "Richie? Richie Lockhart?"

She winced, as if the name was physically painful to her. "I can't say that I am. I'm Bambi Biggins."

Chris gaped at her for a second, then nodded. "I.. see. Well - come in."

She came through the door, moving with a stride that was as artificially-yet-amazingly sexy as her body, then jiggled and swayed past Chris to the fireplace.

"I don't understand." Chris said, closing the door. He walked over to the door leading to the tiny bathroom and grabbed a towel. "Your e-mails just stopped. I never expected to hear from you again much less have you show up on my doorstep."

"Thanks." She said, taking the towel. "Well, you see - I escaped. The day after my last e-mail. The day the did this..." She gestured at her huge, obvious bust, then paused. "...and this.." she gestured at her crotch. "...to me."

Chris blinked. "You mean..."

Bambi closed her eyes, her full lips trying - and failing - to twist into an expression of wry misery. "That 'Little Richard' was replaced by 'Miss Terri'?" She nodded. "Yeah."

"I... still don't understand how you ended up here." Chris said, in confusion.

She shuddered. "I... They... this isn't supposed to be the 'end result' See, they were planning into making me into some sort of super-slut stripper. The body is done, mostly, except for the blonde hair - but they'd only started in on my mind. Then - because I was in pain and on a lower dosage of painkillers - they were lax. They didn't think I'd face the agony of walking on my altered legs." She managed a bit of wry grin. "I guess they didn't understand how... motivated I was. I managed to get away."

The she took a deep breath, and tears began to form in her eyes. "But I didn't have anywhere to go! As far as the rest of the world was concerned, I was just some huge-breasted bimbo! I... I didn't have any money or ID or history, and if I tried to contact anybody from my old life, I'd be caught! The only thing I'm good for right now is the stripper they wanted me to be - or a hooker, which is sort of the same as their plan, too."

"So - you tracked me down?" Chris asked, tilting his head.

"Yeah." She agreed. "Please - let me stay here. I need... I need somebody who knows who - what - I really am, even if I can't say it anymore. I know that I can't be... that.. again, and I won't ever be treated like I was - but at least you know I'm not the mindless bimbo I look like."

Chris shook his head. "I don't think I can do..." He started.

Bambi's huge, blue eyes took on a look of desperation. "Please - you don't understand. I need someplace to stay, a place where I'll be away from the public - a place just like this. You see..." She paused, then forced herself to reveal the last bit of information. "they did get a little farther in 'programming' me then I let on. I... I have no real skills, and no 'desire' or 'want' for sex " She swallowed. "But... I... I have to... need to 'reward' men who make for things. On the way down here,

I... I had sex ten or twenty times a day. Blowjobs, tit-fucks, hand jobs, cunt and ass and everything a woman could possibly do to make a man cum. I I can't help myself." She swallowed and looked him in the eye. "I... If I stay here, I'd find myself.. compelled to keep you 'happy' - but no one man could possible make me have as much sex as I'd have in public. Please... let me stay, and and I'll make sure that you're the most sexually satisfied man on the planet."

To say Chris was stunned would be an understatement. However, he didn't immediately refuse her offer - and as much as she hated it, Bambi knew that this might be the weakness that she needed. It was true that having sex with men disgusted her - but it was also true that she'd have to have some sex everyday, and she'd rather have to keep pleasuring one man who couldn't possible have sex with her as many times as she'd been having daily since her escape. It was the lesser of two evils - and she was hoping that Chris would give in.

With a little 'encouragement', perhaps...

Forcing herself to meet his eye and fake a smile, Bambi slowly, sensuously peeled her sopping wet T- shirt off, revealing her huge, round tits. She didn't realize that her every move was almost over-sexy, the male fantasy ideal of how a sexy woman moved - and it didn't really matter, anyway.

Forcing herself, she slowly approached Chris, her hands slowly fondling and massaging her huge tits until she reached him. then she wrapped her slender arms around his neck and pressed her huge tits firmly into his shirt-covered chest as she pressed her lips against his. He hesitated for a second, then let his lips open slightly - and she proceeded to try and kiss him better then he'd ever been kissed before - not because she enjoyed it, but because satisfying him utterly and completely in every way was kind of 'built in' to her mind now, and having to do this to just one man instead of dozens of strangers was definitely n improvement, no matter how much it disgusted her.

Breaking the kiss, she forced herself to smile at him again - then slowly slid to her knees, dragging her huge tits down his chest and stomach. When she was kneeling in front of him, she slowly unzipped his pants and pulled them and his underwear down to his ankles.

She felt the rest of him stiffen to match his rapidly hardening cock as the pants pooled around his ankles - and she understood it was in awkward anticipation of whatever she might say or ask about the scar.

It was a large, flattened ellipse on the inside front of his left thigh, and the scar tissue was matched by a smaller, more rounded scar on his outside left buttock - as if something had once gone right through the leg, doing considerable damage to the thigh and buttock muscles, without breaking the bone.

She was tempted to say something - but from the way he'd stiffened, she realized that all of his lovers must have inquired about the scars - and he obviously wasn't willing to discuss it.

Which was fine with her.

After all, she couldn't give a damn about Chris, as a person. She couldn't care less about what he thought or wanted or did, other than how it affected her. She wanted to live out the rest of her life as comfortably as she could in her new form - which meant that she'd have to keep him as pleased as possible, sexually, and would endeavor to learn enough about him to keep from doing anything to upset him. But, mainly, she was planning to exist separately from him except for when she was pleasing him in some way - in short, be a sex-toy, not a friend.

And in that spirit, she completely ignored the scar and instead leaned forward and slipped her amazingly full, soft lips around his hard cock.

Then she 'switched places' in her mind.

She'd discovered this amazing trick shortly after her escape, and it was the only reason that she'd not gone insane.

It was really quite simple - she forced herself to imagine, as vividly as possible, that she was the guy, watching all of this happen from his viewpoint - and was 'merely' mentally controlling the woman sucking on his cock, making her do just what he wanted her to do. Having been male, she was able to include all the remembered sensations, building up a remarkably 'real' imagined scene - so it was almost as if she wasn't really sucking on a man's cock, and very well too.

Of course, she knew that it really was her - but during the actual act she was distanced enough to be able to perform as if she was the horny, eager-to-please and happy-to-satisfy woman that 'he' was 'mentally' forcing to act like. Which was technically true - only, unlike the imagined scenario, it wasn't his male mind in a male body controlling the woman, but his male mind right in the woman's hugely- endowed female body.

It didn't take too long before Chris stiffened and shot his load down her throat. She lapped at it 'eagerly' - but that was the end of her little 'imagination play', the real taste of cum flooding her mouth pushing her out and making her 'realize' what she'd just done - but it was already over and done with, and that's the best she could hope for in her new life - blocking out the unpleasant acts until they were done with, and just having to live with the shameful knowledge that she'd just done them.

"Well?" She asked Chris, forcing her voice to remain level - and fighting the urge to vomit. Chris was looking doubtful. "So, if I let you stay, you'll..." managing not to frown or curse, Bambi 'sweetened' the deal. "Cook and clean for you - but otherwise remain out of the way entirely, except when you want me to fuck you silly. Sound fair?"

Slowly, Chris began to grin. "Yeah... yeah, I have to say - that sounds like a hell of a deal..."

* * * * *

Carefully rolling out of bed so as not to wake the lightly snoring 'woman' beside him, Chris grabbed his cigarettes and padded out into the living room. Lighting a cancer stick, he took a deep drag.

Limping badly without his cane - which he'd considered too noisy with his new 'guest' sleeping - Chris made his way over to his desk and pushed the button on his computer. Gratifyingly, it came to life - the power had obviously come back on sometime during the marathon sex session that he and Bambi had done.

Loading his word processor program, Chris quickly cut-and-pasted the e-mails from Netscape, then scrolled down to where they ended, and began to type...

BACK TO FUN ZONE

SUMMARY: One man finds a set of keys and, in exchange for a reward, he agrees to have a witch change him into a woman.

The Art Of The Deal

Part I

By Gunslinger

'Listen, Syffer, I'm not going to put up with any more of this, d'ya hear me?'

The skinny young man blinked behind his thick glasses and nodded his head, obediently, though the angry voice at the other end of the phone couldn't see the motion. "Yessir, Mr. Cortland."

'Good!' Larry Cortland, head of Cortland Wholesalers said, angrily. 'Now - you make at least ten sales by the end of the month, or I'm pulling your distributorship, got it?'

Don Syffer repeated a meek 'Yessir', but it was to the angry hum of an open line - his boss had hung up after delivering the ultimatum.

Lowering the phone and setting it in the cradle, the sandy-blond young man looked around the tiny 'industrial/commercial' office he was renting. Furnished in second-and-third hand furnishings, many of them 'Government Institutional Bland'. The office was grubby, dimly lit, and tiny, barely holding the couch, desk, chair and filing cabinets that made up the entire 'Central Northwest Chicago District Office' of Cortland Wholesales, Incorporated.

It was also where Don lived, though he kept that secret - he wasn't legally allowed to live here, but the bed was hidden in the fold-out couch, and he maintained the fiction that the coffee maker and small beer fridge was for his office coffee, not his entire kitchen. He'd spent almost all his money to get this office up and running... simply because he couldn't find any other jobs. A meek, quiet little man, he had little job experience and even less personality, and he'd hoped the fact that this job was mostly phone sales would make it possible for him to make a modest living through it...

..but he was wrong. Don Syffer was a wimp, and he knew it. At the slightest hint of argument or confrontation, he always backed away. He didn't just take 'no' as an answer - he took it as an order.

Sighing with resigned frustration at his lack of courage and self-confidence, Don shut down the computer, getting ready to head off to bed...

...when somebody knocked on the door.

Blinking in surprise, Don padded over to the door and opened it a crack to look out. For a second, he felt a stir of genuine panic at the sight of a man in a blue uniform... until he realized it wasn't a cop at all.

"Good evening, sir - working late I see." The man smiled, apparently not phased by the fact Don had opened the door a mere crack. "I'm John Takamachi, the new night security guard."

"There is no night security guard..." Don replied, dumbly.

The golden-skinned man grinned broadly. "Well, there is now, sir. The management thought it'd be a good idea. I'll be around every hour or so. If you're still here and working, I'll just knock on the door and say 'hi', make sure everything's all right. If you're gone, I'll just open the door for a quick peek and make sure nobody's broken in... so, if you deal in confidential documents, you might want to lock them up before you leave. Not that I'm planning to peek at them or anything..."

Don grinned weakly. "Of course not. Uh... actually, I was just leaving. Just give me a sec..."

Numbly, Don grabbed his coat and briefcase, shutting off the lights as he locked the door behind him - the door to both his office and his home. He couldn't go to sleep there, not with the guard checking it every hour... he'd get caught living there, and that'd get him kicked out.

He'd lose the office/apartment, which would be disastrous... but he wasn't that much better off. He had no place to go. Even as he rather weakly thanked the new guard and said good-night, he was wondering what he was going to do - he didn't have the sort of money to rent a hotel room for the night, nor an apartment to live in after work. What was he going to do...?

Well, one thing was for sure - he couldn't spend all night skulking through this dark, run-down section at the edge of town. That was a good way to get mugged and/or killed... which was more of a 'permanent solution' to his current problems than he wanted.

Sighing, Don walked down to the nearest bus stop... and looked at the sign advising that it was a limited-time run, doing 'daylight service' only...

Cursing his misfortune, he headed through an alley, aiming towards the brighter lights of the center of town.

He was part way down the alley when something caught his eye, a flash of light among the shadows. Stepping closer, Dan bent down and looked closer at what lay on the ground.

It looked as if a woman had dropped her purse, then quickly gathered as much as she could in the darkness. That was the way he interpreted what he saw, anyway - scattered around a small 'impact' mark in the dirt of the alley floor was a collection of loose change, an almost-finished tube of lipstick, high-heel imprints in the dirt, some used tissue paper...

...and a set of keys on a 'gold' ring with a leather fob with a small, clear plastic square in the middle showing a lighter color behind it.

Picking it up, he turned the keys to the light, to better read the writing...

It was an old fob - in this security-conscious day and age, he doubted they even sold it anymore. After all, to actually put your address on the keys in the hope of somebody actually obeying the request to 'return for reward if found' was slightly ludicrous.

However, it seemed whoever's keys these were was actually naive enough to fill in that card with the address... and the thought that there might be a cash reward of some sort was enough to raise Don's spirits a bit. Wrapping his hands around the keys, he started walking with a firm destination in mind - the address listed on the key-fob...

* * * * *

The address turned out to be located fairly close by, as luck would have it - but whether or not it was 'good' luck or 'bad', Don wasn't sure, since the location wasn't in the direction of the more 'safe' area of town, but back among the dilapidated buildings of the mostly commercial-industrial area.

As it turned out, the address on the key-fob was an aging - if remarkably well-preserved - brownstone Victorian home, with dark scrollwork and tall, turreted towers that gave the slate-roofed home a decidedly Gothic feel.

"Gee... I wonder if it's just an old address left on the ring..." Don muttered to himself, looking around. The lot on which the house sat was fairly large, and surrounded with lowering, dark oaks and thick, heavy shrubbery. It was the last remnant of an age gone past - while the rest of the houses had gradually deteriorated and finally been sold off in a rezoning move, this lone house remained, surrounded by the shells of factories and industries whose own time was passing - an anachronism in the midst of decay.

Hesitantly, Don started up the cobblestone driveway that was flanked at the street end by a pair of tall, soot-stained brick pillars surmounted by crouching lions that had once been white marble, but was now pitted and sullied.

Almost instantly, Don found himself in near-perfect darkness, the tall trees and heavy shrubbery blocking off what little light the widely-spaced street-lights off the lot provided. His heart pounding in his thin chest, Don more-or-less groped his way along by feel, finally veering off the cobblestones onto a slightly smoother pave-stone path leading to the dimly lit front door of the building.

Climbing the creaking wooden steps to the front porch, Don discovered that the light was coming through the diamond-paned windows flanking the door - and that faint light was further diffused by what appeared to be red silk curtains on the inside of the windows. Hesitantly, Don stepped up to the heavy, iron-bound oak door and used the tarnished brass Lion's Head knocker, sending a deep, reverberating 'thud' rolling through the building. After banging the knocker three times, almost ritualistically, Don leaned over and tried to peer through the side window.

The thin fabric blocked vision, but not completely - Don could see a darker shape move within, and he straightened and nervously readjusted his glasses as he heard heavy metal bolt being drawn back, and a lock being turned. A second later, the door swung open...

Don hadn't known what to expect. He'd tried - and failed - to form some sort of image of the owner of this unusual home, vacillating between an old, bitter 'cat lady' who refused to sell the house (or get rid of any of her three dozen cats), and an old ex-Army officer type to set in his ways to even consider moving. In either case, he'd really expected a senior citizen - a tag for which the person who opened the door certainly didn't qualify.

She was tall. Taller than Don, as a matter of fact, forcing him to look up slightly. She was also slender, and very supple - and very attractive...

...if you liked 'dark and mysterious', that was.

Her skin was flawless alabaster, it's pale hue not the unhealthy pallor of illness, but a gloriously natural milky complexion that was further intensified by the crushed-velvet dress she wore, which was so dark a shade of purple to be almost black, except where the fabric picked up the highlights that accentuated the supple, feminine curve of her body.

The skirt was long, coming down to the black velvet pumps she wore, lifting her a further five inches above Don. The long slit up the side of the dress - and her pose in the doorway - let Don catch a glimpse of the black fish-net stocking she wore beneath the dress. The pose also accentuated a full, perky bosom - which was quite well displayed by the low neckline of the dress, letting Don guesstimate that she must be a firm, healthy 'C'-cup, at least.

She had the sort of cool beauty of a professional model, with regular, finely-shaped features that just barely balanced out, each one so sublimely even and perfectly defined that if any other feature was just that much less perfect the entire, eerie beauty would have vanished. Behind her long, dark lashes her dark eyes were a mystery as she examined Don, and her long, straight mane of glossy black hair seemed to have a life all its own as the faint breeze stirred the silken strands and moved them over her mostly-bare shoulders.

"Yes...?" She asked in a smoky, throbbing voice that would have been intensely sexual if she hadn't been speaking with a completely flat tone of disinterest.

Don coughed and held up the keys. "I, uh, found these in an ally, and there was an address on them..."

"Oh, yes - I've been looking for those." The woman said, her flat, cool voice now tinged with the faintest hint of interest - and that faint hint was enough to let Don know what she'd sound like if she actually tried to speak sensuously.

He doubted any man alive could survive the full, erotic power of her unleashed voice...

"Yeah, well, uh... it's a lucky thing you actually use that tag with your address on it..." Don muttered, blushing furiously as he handed over the key ring.

"I'd forgotten about it completely, to tell you the truth." She said in a vague tone that still didn't rob her throaty, rich voice of its incredible power. It was obvious that she barely noticed Don at all, other than as the 'thing' that had brought the keys. She had the sort of air about her of a person who was used to talking to herself when she thought, and so it wasn't so much as if she were responding to Don so much as just musing aloud. "It just came with the key-ring when I bought it in... sixty-nine, was it...?"

Don blinked. Nineteen sixty nine? Not a chance. At first glance, Don had thought she was eighteen, maybe nineteen - but then he'd seen her eyes and heard her voice, and pushed it up as high as his own age of twenty-four. Even so, there was no way she could have even been born in sixty-nine, much less out buying key-rings and filling out address tags.

"Uh... you mean eighty-nine, don't you?" Don suggested, nervously.

This time, she actually favored him with a glance, though her voice was once more completely flat when she spoke.

"No."

Then, with that one syllable, she started to close the heavy door....

Perhaps it was the strangeness of the situation, or the eerie feel of the house and it's environs. That was the only thing Don could figure it was, fear of just walking away and through the eerie section of town with nothing to show for his detail. In any case, he surprised himself, his heart racing with unexpected energy as he put one hand against the thick door and said: "Wait."

She paused, one finely arched eyebrow rising above her mysterious eyes. "Was there something else?"

Don cleared his throat nervously. "Well, uh... the tag said there'd be a reward if returned..." "Sorry - I don't keep money around the house." She said, starting to push on the door again...

...and finding it held open by Don, who - to his own surprise - wasn't backing down.

"Yeah, right - nothing at all." He said. Perhaps it was the fact that he almost literally had nothing to lose that emboldened him so. "This place is obviously well-kept, and you have to eat... so how do you do that without any money?"

She looked at him with a cool, level gaze, and when she spoke her voice was chilly enough to drop the ambient temperature a good three degrees. "Well, if you must know, I'm a witch."

Don blinked. "A what?"

"A witch." She repeated, her mysterious eyes intent. "Not that it's any of your business, but I am two- hundred and seventy-three years old... next January. I had the uncommon fortune to be born on January 1st, and am exquisitely powerful. By the time I was, oh, a little over a hundred, I found that the best way to live was to limit my contact with the outside world to a bare minimum. Not a great loss, I assure you - there seems to be little enough in the world to interest me, and especially not the... 'people' - and I use that term very loosely."

"Uh huh." Don said, in a noncommittal tone.

She tossed her head, her glorious mane shining and rolling. "The only truly worthwhile 'sentient' people on the planet are those who, like me, experience the full vastness of the metaphysical world, and who aren't so... so attracted to the trapping of the physical world, like money or possessions." She paused and stared at him coolly. "In other words, your desire for any sort of reward only lowers my already abysmal opinion of you."

Don almost backed down. He'd been doing it so long that it was practically a habit...

..except that this woman well and truly pissed him off. Usually, he had a near-morbid fear - and fascination - with women, his physique and personality practically guaranteeing he'd be a 'flop' with the ladies. This one, however, just managed to get under his skin. She was gorgeous.. and frustratingly self-superior. Not to mention a complete flake.

"Well, I'm not leaving here unless I get some sort of reward!" HE said, angrily, leaning forward.

She wasn't ready for that. In fact, neither was he, the action done almost instinctively - so he was as surprised as her when his sudden weight on the door forced it open, and he found himself forced to take a step forward to keep from falling.

That put him firmly in the foyer - and he 'caught on' slightly faster than she did. Now it was Don's turn to push on the door to close it - behind him.

"Now, I'm not leaving until I get some sort of reward, Miss." Don said as firmly as his reedy little voice would allow. "I've had a shitty day, I'm gonna lose my business and my house, I'm gonna be flat broke, and I came all the way out here to return your keys to you so I'm not leaving until I get something in return."

"Really?" She asked, and now the power of her voice wasn't veiled any longer - nor even the least bit erotic, the power as icy-cold as an Arctic wind. "The only way I could reward you would be through the use of my powers.. and no sane mortal tries to compel the powers of a witch."

"I don't care how you end up rewarding me." Don retorted. "If you think that the only way is through your powers, then it's you who is 'compelling' yourself."

Her eyes narrowed. "Do you really want to be 'rewarded' by a tremendously pissed-off witch who is quickly becoming to hate and despise you?"

Don snorted a laugh. "Look, you hated and despised me before you even met me. You got a prejudice against 'mortals' like me. Well, I don't know how or why you developed such an aversion to other people - and I really don't care. I don't know you, and don't pretend to - all I ask is the same 'courtesy' in return."

She just stared at him, coldly - and that anger began to seep away from Don. As unaccustomed as he was to being so forceful, it was almost a relief to feel that usual, timorous 'persona' begin to slip back into place.

"Look, Miss..." Don said, raising his hands. "I'm sorry I yelled at you. I've just had a really, really bad day, and things are only going to get worse for me. I know that none of this is your problem... but you did have a problem. Your keys were gone. I helped you solve that problem by bringing them back to you. Isn't it only fair that you try to do something - anything - to relieve my problems? Even a token gesture, just to show the faintest appreciation for the effort I went to, bringing the keys back to you?"

She just continued to look at him, coldly - as if he were something she were contemplating how to best scrape off the sole of her delightfully petite pumps.

Don sighed, then turned to the door. "Gotcha. No reward." He started to push down on the old-fashioned latch... and it just sort of popped out on its own. He'd been thinking it, but hadn't really planned to say it...

"Well, at least I didn't have to worry about being clawed by cats..."

It should have been a cryptic remark. After all, it's was a whimsical comment made on one of the 'mental images' Don had formed of a potential owner for this place, an old lady with dozens of cats. He'd sincerely hoped he was wrong, since he and cats didn't get along - and the comment had popped out in whimsical near-regret, as he'd almost have preferred a batty old lady with a stable of cats over this ice-maiden.

However, the comment had a profound reaction on the self-proclaimed witch. Her dark eyes flew wide open, and her glorious faced rocked back as sharply as if Don had back-handed her with all the strength in his scrawny little body. Slowly - painfully slowly - she let her face come around again, her big eyes blank and her jaw hanging slack.

Don had already pegged the woman as the type who talked to herself - and now he was positive that this was the case, because she spoke - but she wasn't speaking to him. Indeed, even though she was speaking to herself, the voice she used - flat and oddly inflected, almost dreamlike - was that of somebody mimicking the remembered words of somebody else, quoting them back to herself.

" 'The one thing you have to be most careful of, Eloise...' " She said in that odd voice that was - and wasn't - her own, " '...is your own arrogance. You think you are better then Mortals - and perhaps you are. But even lesser animals deserve some measure of compassion, even if it is merely simulated out of good manners...' "

Don blinked, realizing that he'd inadvertently connected her with an old memory - obviously the 'words of wisdom' of a mentor or somebody who'd been a major influence in her life. The witch - Eloise? - had mistaken taken Don's comment to mean that such a 'bitch' wouldn't own pets...

Suddenly, she snapped out of her mnemonic daze... and a measure of humanity seeped into her face with the faint look of embarrassment in her dark eyes.

"I am sorry, Mr...?" Her rich, throaty voice wasn't warm, but it was polite, almost painfully correct. "Uh... Syffer. Donald Syffer." Don managed. "Uh... Call me Don."

She hesitated, a sneer starting to form instinctively - then she caught herself, forcing her full, dark-red lips into the faintest semblance of a smile. "Of course.. Don. And you must call me Eloise."

"If you insist..." Don mumbled.

"Of course." She said, gently laying one slender, long-nailed hand on his shoulder. It was just a 'polite' move, and her stiffness took any pleasure out of the sensation Don might have felt, otherwise. Obviously, she was trying desperately to live up to the ideals of somebody from her past, and was so desperate that she was 'pretending' that none of the unpleasantness had happened, that he'd just now come to the door... and Don was startled to find that her eyes were almost begging him to play along with it.

"Please, won't you come in and have some coffee?" She asked, gesturing towards the half-seen 'drawing room' visible through the wide, dark-stained post-and-lintel doorway.

"I really just dropped by to give..." Don started, almost desperately eager to leave now, and let her regain her dignity, as imperiously annoying as it might be...

...but found himself unable to complete the polite refusal - because he couldn't seem to breath.

Instead, his jaw was hanging open as he stared at the sterling-silver coffee-service sitting on the coffee table in the drawing room. The one that hadn't been there when he'd started to refuse, but had formed itself while he watched - starting off as a faint vapor that seemed to twirl and coalesce, until it had becoming as solid and real as the floor Don stood on...

...or perhaps that was a bad comparison, as the floor didn't feel all that stable at the moment. In fact, it seemed to be slowly rolling, as if he were on the deck of ship -and Don realized he was on the point of fainting, rather than dealing with something his logical mind insisted was flat-out impossible.

"Oh, you must. It's the least I can do for somebody so kind as to return my keys." She said - and the way she said it sort of made it clear to Don that she was trying to clear up the 'debt' she'd just realized she owed him.

Don's mind didn't seem to want to track. Instead, it seemed to want to spin off and chase down irrelevant pathways... but he was still coherent enough to know that he didn't want this woman pissed off at him. Though he still considered her claim of being a powerful witch to be 'impossible'... he was beginning to wonder just how badly the 'impossible' could hurt him.

"Love a cup..." He managed in a croak, his voice coming from a throat that suddenly felt as if it were made entirely of eight-hundred-year-old rawhide leather left in the Nevada sun.

"Oh, splendid..." She said without enthusiasm - or rancor, which made her almost painfully polite. Indeed, she'd switched from a condescending, smug bitch to a prim and proper Victorian Lady, which was almost enough to make him believe her claimed age...

He had to give himself full credit. He didn't scream, faint or go completely off his hinges when the black cat padded into the room from the doorway leading to the kitchen. Having decided he wasn't going to be able to handle this situation 'Logically', Don had fallen back on his oldest 'habits' - pure submissive fear - coupled with ingrained manners. So, when the cat padded sinuously into the room,

Don only bowed his head to it politely - as if meeting a 'fellow gentlemen' on the streets of Victorian England - and seated himself in one of the over-stuffed armchairs near the coffee-table. Eloise settled herself primly on the settee across from him, back straight and hands clasped demurely at her lap.

The cat sprung lightly up onto the small couch beside Eloise, curling up next to her and eyeing the delicacies on the table.

"Yes, I know." Eloise said in a low voice - and for the first time, she seemed truly human, because the voice carried the faintest tones of a good-humored sigh. "The tuna canapé..."

She started to reach for a plate, obviously intending to get something for the cat...

...when the cat lay one paw on Eloise's knee and looked rather pointedly at Don, who felt a shiver run down his spine.

"Oh, of course." Eloise said, sounding a bit shocked with herself... and was that the faintest flush on her fair skin? "Guests first, always, right Cassandra?"

The cat didn't answer verbally - and, at the moment, Don wasn't sure whether it would have surprised him the least if it had. It did, however, curl up with the sort of self-satisfied assurance that Don had thought only cats could possess... until he'd met Eloise, of course.

"I apologize." Eloise said, with a touch of shame, drawing Don's eyes from the cat. Eloise held out a cup of steaming coffee in a fine bone-china cup, complete with rose-painted, gold-trimmed saucer. "I must admit that my manners have slipped. We so rarely entertain guests."

Don was almost literally in a daze, his mind not wanting to deal with this - so he was operating on semi-autopilot, as if in a dream-state...

He took the proffered cup of coffee and said the first thing that popped into his head. It was a product of his environment, drawn from his mind by the 'Victorian' feeling of this odd little tea-party...

"If this is 'poor' service, Miss Eloise, then I would fear to see what you might do if sufficiently prepared..."

It was stiff, formal and a bit odd - but the right thing to say, apparently.

Lifting a silver tray containing some sort of presumably-edible tidbits, she said in a self-deprecating tone. "Oh, it was the least I could do."

The cat snorted. Not the mild 'sneeze' of a cat, but a clearly derisive snort that drew Eloise's eye, proffered platter of scones completely forgotten in her outstretched hand.

Don, over the rim of a cup that contained unbelievably good coffee, eyed the frozen tableau of cat, lady and scones.

It might have been a cat, she might have been a lady, and those might even be scones. At this point, Don was numb enough to accept anything...

...so he didn't go stark, raving mad when Cassandra, the cat... shimmered - and, suddenly, was replaced by a lovely young lady who was identical to Eloise in every way, except her eyes were a deep, emerald green.

"It certainly is the 'least' you can do." Cassandra said to Eloise in a voice that was nearly identical to Eloise... except warmer, more vibrant. The emerald-eyed woman turned to Don...

...and smiled.

Though she was almost perfectly identical in face, figure and dress, that smile completely transformed Cassandra into a vision of warm loveliness completely unlike Eloise. It wasn't that the smile was 'overly-familiar', or even that it implied anything... but it was a truly magnificent smile, nonetheless.

"I'm Cassandra." She said, warmly. "You said your name was... Don, was it?"

Don nodded, numbly - then, with remarkable aplomb, considering the situation, essayed: "The lovely- and-spirited younger sister, I presume?"

Cassandra's smile widened even further - apparently she'd read at least a few of those 'bodice ripper' novels as well. Don had read them while in high-school, hoping they'd give him some sort of insight into the female mind. Other than discovering that some women liked very poorly written literature, he'd learned nothing... except for the 'manners' he was parroting back in this mad little tea party they were having.

"Younger by about a minute, actually." Cassandra said in a conversational voice. "Unfortunately, it meant I was the less 'talented' twin, by a considerable margin." She paused, then continued in the same warm, conversational voice. "That's why I spend so much time 'en feline' - time spent in other forms doesn't count towards aging in your human one, and I haven't nearly the natural immunization to aging that my dear sister has. I hope I didn't startle you too badly by changing in front of you... but my human form is the only one capable of speaking English."

"Oh, no - quite understandable..." Don assured her, wondering if he'd been mugged on his way out of the building this evening. Chances were, some burly mugger had cracked him over the back of the head with a tire-iron to steal his wallet, and now Don was laying in a coma in the county hospital while the doctors debated pulling the plug on his non-insured ass.

Then again...

Cassandra turned back to her sister. "Well?"

Eloise rolled her eyes, then spoke to her marginally younger sister as if the object of their discussion wasn't even present - say, the way you might speak about a dog to a friend while rubbing said dog's belly. You just assume that the 'poor dumb thing' couldn't possibly understand you.

Don found that marginally more offensive than your friendly neighborhood canine would have, though.

"I just can't..." Eloise said, with a sigh. "I'm being polite - but that's just my cover for my annoyance with it! Oh, I suppose I do owe it something for its effort, and I know Mother - Goddess rest her soul - always said I should treat Mortals fairly, but... It isn't that easy. Worse, it's a... a male! If it were a female, perhaps I could risk using my powers to reward it, without being afraid that I'd do something out of uncontrollable spite..."

Then Don did something the friendly neighbor canine usually didn't do - but got about as much of a reaction as that said dog would have, had it gotten the notion to start talking to it's owner.

"So - if I were a woman, you'd be willing to grant me a reward?" Don asked, still lost in that strange little daze by the unreality of his current situation. "Fine - agreed."

The two sisters looked at him as if he'd just spoken in a foreign tongue - or babbled like a raving lunatic. As one - in the exact same voice, tone and intonation - they said: "Huh?"

Don shrugged. "Well, if that's what it'll take to get my reward, go ahead and turn me into a woman. Just temporarily, of course, so you can let your hatred fade a bit - and then you grant me a reward... after changing me back, of course."

Two completely different expressions formed on those nearly-identical faces. Cassandra's face took on a worried look - while Eloise looked like a cat about to pounce, her eyes narrowed and her chin out-thrust.

"Welll....." Eloise said, slowly... sensually. Don quivered at the erotic impact of the rumbling, sensual voice. "We don't we talk about that..."

"Don, I don't think this is such a good..."

"Shut up, sister dearest..." Eloise said, softly, lovingly. "This most delightful Mortal and I are talking." She turned those eyes back on Don, leaning even further forward and slowly, sensuously licking her lips.

"Oh, do please continue, sirruh - you interest me strangely..."

Don quailed inside, stunned at himself for making the suggestion. He'd slipped so far into that 'fantasy' world brought on by his unwilling inability to treat these 'impossible' occurrences as reality. He held up his hands tried to reason out the 'impossible' logic that had prompted him to say what he had.

"Well, now..." He told Eloise, nervously. "I know your sister is worried that you haven't yet gotten over your 'mad' enough to not do something awful to me instead of changing me into a woman. After all, that's what you were afraid off, right? That I'd ask you to transform me, and you wouldn't be able to stop yourself?"

"Well, yeah... I guess..." Eloise said, looking narrowly at Cassandra. "Sounds like something she'd be worried about, even if a mortal was dumb enough to ask me to use my powers on him when he knew I was pissed at him."

"Yes..." Don agreed, nervously. "But I also know that there's one thing you power can't do - it can't control my will. Oh, you could 'subjugate' me, enslave me, use me like a living puppet - but that would just be you controlling my body with your mind. It wouldn't be me in there. You'll agree to do this, just so you can enjoy making me live as a female... and getting the added benefit of it really being me suffering through it."

Eloise blew out her breath in a rush and sat back. "Yeah. You're right." She admitted, candidly. Then her eyes narrowed again. "However, I don't want you backing out of this, or finding a way to take the fun out of it. It's got to be a formal, binding agreement, see? So - I get to change you into whatever type of woman I deem fit - right?"

Don nodded, nervously. "Agreed."

Eloise smiled. "And I get to mess with your mind, too? I can... play with it all I want?"

Don shook his head, trying - and mostly failing - to look stern. "No. You can't touch my consciousness, or my memories."

Eloise frowned, looked thoughtful, then smiled again. "How about things like skills, habits, anything biologically or biochemically created within the body? Anything not directly touching the core 'you'?"

Don winced nervously, trying - and failing - to imagine what the worst she could do with that was. Well, he was sure he was going to find out... "Agreed."

The smile had more sly force to it now. "I also get to decide what we'll do during the time you're female. I don't want you just sitting here, refusing to do anything at all..."

Don worried that over, then shrugged mentally. "Agreed." Her smile was positively smug now. "For seventy-two hours." Don quavered. "No - twenty-four. One day, that's it."

Eloise pouted theatrically. "Oh, that's not fair. That's not nearly enough time."

"If it takes you longer than that to roast, baste and bastinado me, I'd be surprised." Don said, shocked at his own bluntness, but feeling giddy and light-headed again at the sheer insanity of having this particular conversation. "Stop fishing. I know you don't like mortals. It's no great secret, Eloise."

You're just doing this for kicks, to work out some pent-up frustration at being perfect in a world of flawed designs - so none of them can meet up to your 'perfect' ideals, none of them can take care of your 'perfect' needs. Well, Eloise, for me this is my last chance. I'm desperate, and I've stumbled into something good. I'm willing to take twenty-four hours of whatever hell you care to put me through, as long as I get that reward at the end of it."

He paused and took a deep, deep breath, replacing what he'd used in his sudden, surprising burst of energy and 'attitude'. "And you...? You get the pleasure of a mortal plaything to fill those hours of boredom that being too perfect in an imperfect world creates. So, something for everyone."

Eloise looked startled - then slowly smiled. "Agreed. Done... and... DONE!"

The last word was shouted so loud it seemed as if the house shook - and Don really began to sweat.

Then Eloise stood, folded one arm over the elbow of the other one, and tapped one long, perfect fingernail against her full, gloss-red lips.

"Where should I begin..." She said, and the voice was that of every woman since the dawn of recorded history about to embark on a 'Make-Over' project...

In other circumstances, Don might have been tempted to laugh.

"So, Don, what is it you did... I mean, do for a living?" Cassandra asked, almost sadly. "Uh, I'm a salesman... why?" Don asked, frowning.

"Because I think you struck a very bad deal here, Don..."

"Enough with the chit-chat..." Eloise purred, looking at Don hungrily. "Stand up." Don swallowed nervously. "N... now?"

To his shame, it came out about an octave higher than usual.

"No time like the present, handsome..." Eloise said, practically licking her lips. "You know how I lost those keys, Mortal? A couple of guys tried to rape me. Right there. Rape! ME! Well..." She shrugged a lean shoulder. "Since I was being attacked, certain 'restrictions' were loosened on me. I was allowed, without permission, to alter their minds anyway I saw fit." She smiled, hungrily. "Let's just say that they'll never thinking of raping another woman again But, as initially satisfying as that was, it wasn't really 'them' I was doing anything too. No, it was my own 'constructs' controlling those bodies, with the 'real' them locked 'safely' behind a wall, where I couldn't get at them. Changing their minds, literally, made them somebody else.... But you... but you, you're entering into this willingly "

Don swallowed, nervously. Eloise was about to take out her frustrations from a couple centuries of Mortals on him!

...but in a very sharply time- and range-limited way. He hoped.

Slowly, he rose, idly noticing that the splendid coffee service had disappeared... as had the coffee table. Which made it easy for him to stand in the middle of the open area, easily seen - and circled - by his new 'mistress' as she considered the exact form of her 'revenge' on him.

Then she smiled - and it wasn't a smile that reassured Don in the least.

"I think we'll have a little fun..." She said, and he shudder slightly at the type of tone she used for the word 'fun' - one dripping with dreadful ironic glee. Eloise waved one slender, well-formed arm...

...and Cassandra cursed as the couch she was sitting on disappeared. Indeed, all the furniture in the room had vanished, to be replaced with racks and racks of clothing - women's clothing, in a riot of styles and colors. Directly in front of Don, a three-way mirror had appeared.

A three-way mirror that revealed his short, slightly pot-bellied body in all it's 'glory' - since he was stark naked. He shivered from more than the cold and blushed, furiously, hands twitching to cover his groin then dropping limply by his side as he realized that what he was trying to cover wasn't going to be there much longer.

In the back of his embarrassed mind, he noted that his glasses had vanished along with the rest of his clothes and personal effects - but he could still see perfectly well, a 'fringe benefit' for his time spent as a woman that he hadn't considered. Of course, being able to see perfectly, in and of itself, did not make up for the day he was going to spend as a female, but he made a mental note to work 'perfect eyesight' into the 'reward' he was going to get at the end of this ordeal.

"I'm going to let you choose your clothing... sort of." Eloise said, grinning wickedly. "This way, it gets to be a surprise for me, too. However, each of the pieces of clothing has a different... 'curse' on it, for lack of a better word, so who you'll become is determined by the clothes you pick." She grinned, wickedly. "Just to make things more interesting, though, you have to pick out a complete 'ensemble', complete with jewelry and make-up, before you can start getting dressed. Once you see the effect of the first garment, I don't want you to be able to back out of what you've chosen."

Don made a face, knowing that she was 'setting him up' - but this was the very reason he'd been able to make a deal with her. She had amazing powers, and she could, indeed, turn him into any woman she wanted - but this was much more 'entertaining' for her, watching him 'willingly' turn himself female, seeing what 'mistakes' he made in selection, and the joy of watching him have to live for the next twenty-four hours with whatever body he ended up 'giving himself' through his uninformed choices.

Sighing, Don looked around, wondering what he should choose first. With a distinct lack of enthusiasm, he began to browse through the clothes.

He decided that the obvious place to start was with 'undergarments'. Eloise had arranged the clothes in 'sections', so that all the underthings were together - special hangers with bra-and-panty sets on them, corsets and body-briefers, girdles and nylons, panties by themselves in a riot of color and designs, garters, and every other style and design of garment designed to be worn next to a woman's skin.

Almost immediately, he noticed something that made him very nervous: All the clothes were in his size. Though there was a variety of styles and colors, everything would fit his current body, including the decidedly odd-looking bras, with 'flat' cups and straps big enough for him.

There was no way of telling how each garment would reshape his body. He had no way of successfully 'choosing' what size his new body would be, because all the clothes were his 'current' size, including (he checked) the shoes.

Biting his lower lip in frustrated thought, Don looked at the daunting array, trying to 'get into' Eloise's mind and figure out what would be the 'safest' outfit to choose.

It seemed to him that the most 'obvious' choices were the most dangerous. She was probably betting he'd try to 'tone down' the look he'd have and so choose clothes that were as 'unisex' as possible, like jeans and a sweat-shirt. He was pretty sure that the 'curse' on such objects was pretty bad, so if he tried that he'd get something he definitely didn't want.

On the other hand, the 'sexy' outfits were probably 'less cursed', because he'd have to force himself to choose them and put them on... but he wasn't sure he could do that. Actually trying to pick out the sexiest outfit available just felt so terribly wrong to him - not that anything about this particular situation felt 'right'.

Finally, Don decided to 'split the difference', choosing something obviously feminine without getting to 'wild'. Hesitantly, he began to gather his outfit, agonizing over each choice...

...and not finding it any easier with Eloise's commentary added in.

"Oh, yes, pick that one..." She said as he looked at a pair of dark-blue satin briefs. "You'd look absolutely darling in them."

Fighting the urge to snap something at her, Don cleared his throat nervously and continued trying to decide...

It took him nearly an hour. Eloise obviously enjoyed herself the entire time, make various comments and 'suggestions' while Don agonized over the not-to-feminine-yet-not-masculine look he would go for. Cassandra, on the other hand, remained silent the entire time, a sorrowful look on her face as Don slowly picked out various items.

Finally, he had a small pile of clothing and accessories near the three-way mirror. Taking a deep breath, he looked over his selection.

"Okay... I think that's it..." He said, uncertainly.

"Are you sure?" Eloise asked, snidely. "There's a lovely pair of red leather pants that would probably look great on you."

Don shook his head, swallowing nervously. "No - this will do."

"Very well." Eloise said. She waved her arm, and the rest of the clothing - and the racks it was on - vanished. "Well then, why don't you get dressed?"

Nervously, Don followed her 'suggestion', his heart beginning to pound furiously at the thought of what was about to happen.

He started with the panties he'd chosen. They were white briefs, but not the plainest pair that had been available - they were 'brief-briefs', with quite a bit of the 'material' being semi-transparent white lace, with only a smallish triangle of solid, opaque fabric covering his actual crotch. Of course 'real' women's briefs wouldn't have fit properly, but these were perfectly sized for his current body, even taking in to account the bulge of his average-sized cock.

He'd decided not to take bra, nylons, socks or other such items. The way he'd reasoned it, the less items he chose, the less 'curses' there were to affect him. So, the next item of clothing he pulled on was a skirt. It was a pretty simple skirt, a mixed-fiber material that was fairly tight, yet light and stretchy. Coming down to about mid-thigh, the red skirt was as short as Don could force himself to wear - at that length, he could 'lie' to himself and pretend they were just a pair of shorts.

Next, Don pulled on the top he'd chosen. He wasn't quite sure what to call the design of the skirt. It was white, and had short sleeves, like a T-shirt... yet was made of a somewhat heavier, 'fuzzier' material, and had a cowl neckline, almost like a sweater - yet it was very comfortable and not overly warm, which was one of the reasons he'd chosen it.

The skirt and blouse weren't too bad, and even the briefs, as feminine as they appeared, were bearable, since they fit perfectly - but the next item made Don shudder a bit, having to force himself to step into the shoes he'd chosen.

He'd really, really been tempted to just pick a pair of feminine-looking running shoes, but had known that would be a mistake. As much as he didn't like the idea of it, he'd forced himself to pick a pair of 'high-heeled' shoes - in this case, a pair of sandal-style shoes with white leather upper and four-inch- high 'tapered-block' heels. Aside from the height, the heels resembled cowboy-boot heels, which was the best he could do.

That left only make-up and jewelry... and Don had gone very lightly indeed on those items.

Feeling greatly ashamed by his 'voluntary' feminine act, he began to apply the make-up he'd chosen. He started with the lipstick... which was really more of a lip-gloss, being a pale pinkish-flesh color so close to a 'natural' shade that only the reflective nature of the gloss made it 'obvious' that he was wearing lipstick. Still, it wasn't as 'showy' as any of the other available colors, and it was the most that Don could force himself to wear.

The only other make-up he used was a little mascara, and he curse under his breath as his trembling hands made applying the black liquid difficult.

In the way of jewelry, Don had chosen a simple pair of silver clip-on earrings. They were quite small, and pretty plain, being only three-quarter-loops of silver, with a faint design on the outer surface.

Looking at himself in the mirror, Don grimaced at what he saw, then reached down for the last item he'd chosen, out of a mix of 'decoration' and 'practicality' - a silver-toned watch, obviously designed for a woman. With another grimace he strapped it on...

...and the instant the clasp on the chain-style band was done up, Don felt his body tremble - and begin to change.

He gasped, eyes flying from the clasp he'd just finished connecting to the three-way mirror, unsure of what part of his body to look at first as he felt muscle, bone and sinew shifting and changing into the feminine form he'd be wearing for the next twenty-four hours.

As it turned out, the transformation happened so quickly that his flickering eyes only caught tiny glimpses of the changes-in-progress before it was done... and he was further distracted by the sensations that accompanied the change. The feel of his cock shrinking back into his body, forming the opening of his new womanhood, while his balls were 'sucked' into his body and repositioned even as they 'mutated' into a pair of ovaries.

Even stranger and more unnerving was the feeling of a full-blown womb being formed.

Meanwhile, there were hundreds of other sensations crowding in on his awareness. The feel of his actually musculature and flesh changing was almost completely lost under other sensations, including the feeling of his chest pushing outward rapidly, while his waist was 'drawn inwards' above hips and ass that were swelling.

His scattered glimpses of the fast-moving changes were further obscured by the fact that he was growing taller, his viewpoint continuously changing as he shot upwards. Don was short, for a guy, and he'd subconsciously expected to stay about the same height, which would have been average for a woman, to find himself actually growing taller came as a further-disorienting shock...

The changes seemed to finish in an instant - and instant that, somehow, also felt like an eternity...

...and then Don was gazing in shock at her body.

Her feet had become smaller and more feminine, though they didn't quite make it to 'dainty' - and the shoes had also changed to match her new, most definitely feminine, feet. From there, her legs rose upwards, smooth and feminine. They were 'nice' legs, well-shaped, but not remarkably so, since there was a little bit of extra - yet attractive - padding on them, smoothing the contours into softer, more 'gentle' shapes than, say, a dancer's legs.

The skirt now rose a little higher. Not ridiculously so, but it was definitely shorter - and tighter, molding itself to her wide, well-rounded and defiantly womanly hips. 'Child bearing' hips, Don would have said, had they been on anybody else. They were matched by an ass that, while not 'spectacular', was nevertheless very full and firm, barely shying away from being 'too much of a good thing'.

Her new waist, beneath the clinging material of the shirt, was slender, but not remarkably so. Feminine, but only 'average' in it's dimensions.

Her face was... cute. Pretty, perhaps, open and well-formed, but the features of it weren't terribly well-defined, since they were also somewhat 'padded', especially her full, glossy lips. Her nose was completely average, and was flanked by warm, cheerful-looking hazel eyes currently wide in shock. The face she now 'boated' was framed by sandy-blond hair that hung loose and natural to just past her somewhat wide (for a woman) shoulders.

Though she was at least a good six feet tall (not including the height of her heels), you could only tell the fact by comparing her to objects around her, since her proportions were well-balanced enough that she didn't look all that tall. Indeed, at a glance and with nothing immediately 'comparative' around, she would have looked 'average'...

...if not for the massive, firm tits that strained the shirt she was wearing to the limit. They were huge, each the size of a 'small' beach-ball, and tipped with large, dark nipples whose coloration was only faintly visible through the medium-weight fabric, but whose size and shape were clearly defined by the way they pushed out in impudent mounds, further stretching the straining fabric.

"Oh, My god..." Don said, hearing a most-definitely-feminine voice emerge from her new throat. "I.. I'm..."

"Huge...?" Cassandra supplied in a stunned voice, staring wide-eyed at the woman Don had become. "...huge!" Don parroted back, still staring at the image in the mirror.

"I noticed." Eloise commented, sarcastically. "I guess I could have mentioned that if you didn't pick a bra, your tits would grow until they filled whatever top you were wearing to it's maximum limits... but where would the fun in that be...?"

Ignoring Eloise's laughter - and, to a considerably less successful degree, her own massive endowments - Don forced herself to get a good 'overall' look at her new appearance...

...and was amazed to see that, as a whole, those gargantuan tits didn't look totally out of place. On a more slender, 'model-like' frame, they would have been freakish. On her, though, they just looked 'big'.. and almost 'right'.

Her entire body carried extra padding. Oh, she wasn't fat by any stretch of the imagination. Just delightfully well padded, an 'smoothing' layer of feminine fat over taut, strong muscles. Indeed, she looked almost like a prototypical 'country girl' - at least in certain movies with a special type of 'low- brow' humor. She was pretty in a big, strong (yet most definitely feminine) way. She also had that sort of 'not too bright' look that went with most naive 'farm-girl' characters in those movies.

If the new woman had been forced to describe herself to somebody who couldn't see her - say, over the phone - she would have said she looked like a cross between Dolly Parton and Drew Barrymore, with a pinch of Meg Ryan thrown in... but taller and bustier.

"Well, I guess it could have been worse..." Don told herself, without much in the way of conviction.

"Or better, from my point of view." Eloise commented with a grin. "I'll take what I got, though - you're quite the sight, my dear."

"Yeah, I guess I do kinda stand out..." Don admitted, ruefully, turning slightly to get a somewhat different look at her massively-endowed new body. Hesitantly, she reached her slender-yet-strong new hands towards her massive new rack... then let them fall away, also uncomfortable about checking inside her skirt. She knew that she'd find a fully-formed vagina there, yet almost felt like it wasn't real until she verified it... and so was in no hurry to do that.

"Well, there's one little detail to take care of..." Eloise said, with a grin... and she snapped her fingers.

Don couldn't repress a gasped as a medium-sized, fairly plain white leather purse appeared on her shoulder.

"Go ahead, see who you're going to be for the next little while..." Eloise 'suggested', and Don hesitantly followed the instruction, finding herself mildly curious about it.

There was some money, some make-up, some other odds-and-ends... but she pushed them all aside and pulled out her identification, looking at the photo that matched her new face, then hazel eyes dropping to the name...

"Doyawnada Fukkme?" She asked, incredulously, her voice shooting up an octave in outrage and shock.

"What?" Cassandra asked, startled, then staring at her sister with narrowed eyes. "Come on, Ell... that's just too much."

Eloise's eyes narrowed. "Hey, this is my gig, sis... butt out."

"But it's not even a real name!" Cassandra protested on Don's behalf.. and the new woman felt a surge of gratitude for the younger, less-powerful sister as Eloise capitulated.

"Oh, all right..." She said with a huff of 'long-suffering' breath, making a gesture...

..and Don read aloud the name that had replaced the outrageous moniker originally there.

"Donna Sue Wannamaker..." She read, then managed a wry smile. "Well, I guess it's better than the other one..."

"Glad you like it..." Eloise said, in a frosty tone.

Don - Donna - frowned slightly at the cold tone.. then grinned.

"Hey, don't get so hung up on name." The new woman, suggested. "After all, even if my ID said one thing, it wouldn't necessarily mean I have to use it. After all, I am still myself - that's the 'fun' in this for you, right? 'Donna' is probably what I would have chosen myself, anyway... so you really didn't lose anything."

For the first time, a hint of grudging respect appeared in Eloise's eyes... and she slowly grinned. "I guess you're right. The name's not all that important. It's watching what you do, how you have to act, for the next day "

"See? Now you're getting into the spirit..." Donna said.

Cassandra blinked. "Uh... You seem to be taking this all pretty damned well, Don na."

Donna grinned at the sister. "Well, I did agree to it, after all, so I knew what was coming more or less." She ruefully looked down at the massive mounds of tits-flesh that strained her shirt. "I think I got the 'more' but I can live with it, at least for the next twenty-four hours. Then I get a 'reward' from your sister so I might as well do all I can to get her into a very 'giving' mood, right?"

"Oh, I love how this Mortal thinks..." Eloise said to Cassandra with a bright, unforced grin - the first Donna had seen on her face, and obviously the first in a long, looong while that Cassandra had seen, judging from the surprised look on her face. That look grew even more surprised as Eloise slipped an arm around Donna's new waist, looking up at her happily.

"I think this might be the start of a be-yooo-tiful friendship." She said, winking.

"Wait, wait..." Cassandra said, looking at the two women who were grinning at each other, one an ex- man, the other a witch. "You were eager to 'humiliated' him.. uh, her, just a while ago.. and you, Donna... you can't actually enjoy this can you?"

"Can I answer for both of us?" Donna asked Eloise, still grinning. Eloise blinked. "Actually, I'd be impressed if you could."

Donna winked at her. "Well, I'll give it a shot "

Turning to Cassandra, Donna tried to explain - and hoped to god that she got it right. Despite Cassandra's misgivings at the outset - and 'his' own - she thought she'd actually made one hell of a deal assuming she'd 'read' things correctly, something she'd find out in a second.

"For my part, being female is far from comfortable." She said. "But it's not 'painful' or in any way damaging to me and, afterwards, I get a reward which I can use to set my life back on track, so it's almost almost like a contest. Your sister is going to enjoy trying to humiliate me during the next twenty-four hours, and I'm going to try and get through it without breaking down. That's why your sister is so happy - because I wasn't just willing to let her 'start' the game by making me female - but I'm showing that I'm willing to play it the best I can, make it a real challenge for Eloise here who hasn't had a 'real' challenge in ages, since she's so powerful - and that's the real reason for her agreeing to this whole thing. Not just 'revenge', though that's part of it too but the 'challenge'."

Eloise looked up at the woman she'd created with a look of stunned surprise.

"Oh, my god..." She said, breathlessly. "I.. I didn't even realize... As soon as you said it, though, I knew you were right. I haven't been 'challenged' in ages, and especially not by a mortal. I've been seeing you as nothing but a nuisance. It never occurred to me that a Mortal could actually be.. well, almost an equal, in the 'game' at least."

"That's because, aside from the change into a woman, we're on a level playing field." Donna said. "the game, now, is intellectual and emotional, not 'power' - which means I have a fighting chance, which is why it's so exciting to you." She grinned. "There's no real joy in winning a contest unless there's a very real chance of loosing it, as well."

Eloise grinned - but this time, it was wicked. "Chance or not - there's no way I'm loosing this one, girlfriend."

"Witch or not, there's no way I'm going to let you win." Donna shot back - and both of them grinned at each other, with a look of consideration in their eyes.

"Okay, enough of this chit-chat." Eloise said, briskly, pulling away from her creation. "We're going out."

"All of us?" Cassandra asked - and she sounded nervous.

"You bet. So come on..." Eloise said, heading for the door. Nervously, Donna stared at the witch, then began to follow. She wasn't surprised to find that she walked with an easy, feminine grace atop the heels she wore, wide womanly hips swaying and huge, firm tits jiggling and bouncing inside her top. It was new and different and discomfiting... and she tried very hard to 'ignore' the sensations as best she could.

Cassandra fell in beside her... and Donna was surprised to see that the younger sister looked almost as nervous as she felt.

"What's wrong?" Donna asked, glad to have something else other than herself to focus on.

"I.. I haven't been out of the house in more than a century..." Cassandra whispered back, nervously. Gently, Donna slid a hand into the other woman's, and gripped it reassuringly.

"I've never been outside as a woman before. It'll be nerve-wracking for both of us..." Donna said, letting some of her nervousness show for Cassandra, while she'd hidden it from Eloise. "We'll just have to help each other get through it..."

Cassandra threw her a thankful look that almost melted her newly feminine heart... and then they reached the door, and both stopped dead on the threshold, hearts pounding in anxiety as they looked out at the mundane world that, nevertheless, was now new and strange for each of them.

"Well? Come on!" Eloise said, impatiently, from the bottom of the steps.

Donna and Cassandra shared another look. As much as she'd tried to prepare for this, mentally, the reality of it was something she hadn't been prepared for. Being turned into a woman was one thing - but having to leave the privacy of the home and walk out into the world - in public - as this woman, to have to 'play the part' in a world that would only see her body and not know what she 'really' was, was something else.

"I can do this..." She told herself, uncertainly, in a whisper.. and was bemused to hear Cassandra, also in a whisper, tell herself "If she can, I can..."

Hands gripping each other's even tighter in much-needed reassurance, they stepped forward.

Head held high, cool breeze blowing over her legs, and huge, jiggling tits proceeding her by a good twelve inches, the new woman stepped into the world, not knowing what the next twenty-four hours would bring, but determined to see it through and win the 'prize' at the end of the game.

Now if only she'd stop trembling so damned much...

END Part I

SUMMARY: The continuation of one man who plays a very dangerous game with an amazingly powerful witch and lets himself be turned into a tall, huge-breasted woman for 24 hours.

Part II

'I willingly agreed to be turned into a woman...' The person who had once been Don Syffer thought, '...just so I could get a reward that would improve my life. Either I'm crazy, or my life really, really sucks '

The chill evening wind brushed across her tall, incredibly endowed new body, moving over the bare flesh of her long, silky-smooth new legs and having a rather disconcerting effect on the large, thick nipples that graced her unexpectedly massive new breasts. However, the chill wind wasn't the only reason she was shivering - trembling - as she stepped across the threshold of the Gothic-looking house, Cassandra's hand clasped firmly in her own.

'Maybe both ' 'Donna Wannamaker' thought with a wry humor as she emerged onto the front porch.

After all, it wasn't exactly 'sane' to play a very dangerous game with an amazingly powerful witch... yet Donna was 'willing' to be humiliated and degraded in order to win the 'prize'. Though she was far from comfortable with being female, much less with what Eloise might force her to do, Donna drew what scant comfort she could from two things; It was only for twenty-four hours, and nobody out there knew who she was. People might see 'Donna' do things that would be humiliating for a man to do - but they'd have no way of knowing that this tall, huge-breasted blonde 'Country girl' was 'really' a man in spirit. Whatever 'shameful' acts Donna had to go through, the only people who'd know about it were the three of them.

Besides, she told herself, the most remarkable part of the evening wasn't the fact that she'd met a pair of twin sisters, one a powerful witch, the other one somewhat less so - but more 'human'. It wasn't even the fact that she'd been turned into a woman - or that she'd 'volunteered' to have it happen.

The most amazing thing was the fact that she'd had the guts to stand up for herself, and to go through with the 'deal'. Despite all the misgivings and fears she had, despite the guilty feeling that she was 'perverted' to let herself be made a woman, the fact that she'd found a little bit of courage and strength to do something about her pathetic life - even this - was a source of amazement to her and pride.

Of course, the fact that she felt proud about letting herself be turned into a tall, huge-breasted woman was another source of disquiet, but she was willing to take anything she could at this point...

"One step at a time, huh Donna ?" Cassandra said, nervously, her milky complexion even more pale, her smile strained and nervous. Despite being more powerful than the average human woman - and longer lived - Cassandra was nowhere near as powerful - or as arrogantly confident - as her slightly older sister, and this was nerve-wracking for her. Despite her own mixed, confused feelings, Donna managed a somewhat strained sympathetic smile of her own for the frightened woman.

"Yeah - Except I never expected to be taking any of those steps wearing high heels..." Donna replied sotto voce...

...and was rewarded by a clear, trilling laugh that she'd all-but-startled out of the nervous woman.

Still holding hands for moral support, the two women descended the steps to where Cassandra was waiting, impatiently. Though the prospect of a real challenge put the witch in a better mood than her wont, even occasionally making her downright cheerful and friendly, two centuries of cold, arrogant disdain couldn't be washed away in such a short time, and her aloof impatience was an indicator of her habitual nature.

Unlike usual, however, her manner 'thawed' once they'd made it down the steps and were no longer holding up her 'entertainment'.

"Okay, ladies - it's time to have a little fun," she grinned. Though she and Cassandra were nearly identical in appearance - except for the color of their eyes - that grin looked completely different than the one her marginally younger sister used. "Now, first of all, you should know that, at least for the next little while, you'll be the only person able to see and hear us, Donna. To the rest of the world we'll be inaudible and invisible."

From beside her, Donna heard a soft sigh of relief, and realized that Cassandra felt more secure being 'out in the world' as a wraith, unseen and unheard. Donna couldn't blame her - she wouldn't mind if the same had been true for herself. 'Wearing a female body was one thing...

"Why is that, Eloise?" Donna asked, curious... as to Eloise's motivation, that was. After all, the 'game' was to see if Eloise could 'break' her spirit in any one of hundreds of ways, of which just being female was only the first. If she could get any advance warning, perhaps she could 'brace' herself for what was to come - after all, 'forewarned is forearmed', as the old saying went.

Eloise, however, grinned wickedly and deflected the question. "Oh, I - and Cassandra, of course - are stunningly beautiful. We wouldn't want to distract people from your own, glorious magnificence."

To 'amplify' her point, she stepped forward, closer to Donna - which forced the golden giantess to look down at the shorter witch... and made her realize that, when talking to people of 'average' height, the sight of her own massive bust, straining the fabric of her white shirt, would occupy the bottom of her view at any given time. Now she realized why she was so tall - after living life as a shorter-than-average man, being tall was one of the more harmless experiences of this odd situation, sort of novel and interesting... but now she understood that there was a Machiavellian meaning behind it.

The disconcerting sensations that came from having breasts - and not inconsiderable ones, either - weren't enough for Eloise. It wasn't enough that Donna could feel the weight of them, and the sensation of the fabric pressing tightly against them. Their weight and shift and jiggle. Of the odd, somewhat pleasurable sensation of their very 'reality', and how they interacted with the world outside her new skin. No, this wasn't enough - Eloise wanted to make sure that Donna also had to see them, at least peripherally...

Well, it was just for the next twenty-four hours... and, for that matter, it was twenty-four hours spent doing things Eloise thought would humiliate her - which meant that there was a great advantage in employing whatever delaying tactics she could think of.

Well, perhaps her body, gender and name had changed - but, deep inside, she was still 'Don Syffer'. Shy, uncertain Don, living a life of quiet desperation...

...and, since 'Don' never acted 'quickly' (except for the recent situation, and look where that had gotten 'him'...) Don was also an expert in finding 'delays' that didn't look like delays. After all, getting caught at it might produce a confrontation, something Don usually also avoided habitually.

"Soooo " Donna asked, slowly, still bemused to hear that crystalline, feminine voice emerging from her throat - still bemused by the throat itself, and everything else that went along with this new body. "Isn't being invisible going to be awkward, Eloise? You know, having to keep an eye out to keep from banging into other people who don't see you or are you intangible, too?"

Eloise blinked, and when she spoke there was an amazed tone to her voice. "Well, actually, we're not technically 'invisible'. Like you said, that would have certain problems. I just used that word because I thought it'd be easiest for you to understand "

"Oh. I see " Donna said, looking down at her 'chosen tormentor'. "Well, why don't you explain it to me, and if I have any difficulties understanding it, I'll let you know?"

"Sure..." Eloise said, nodding. "Just don't speak aloud to me - you'll figure out why as I explain "

Then she turned and began walking, and Donna had to fall in step with her, Cassandra trailing a step behind and to the left. At least Eloise was walking slowly, rather than hurrying to bring Donna to her first challenge, which would have been the case if Donna hadn't asked her question. It was something, at least...

"You see, we're not actually 'invisible' so much as.. as unremarkable. On the conscious level, anyway. People will still see us and hear us, subconsciously, but it won't really register on their consciousness. We'll sort of fade into the background.

People will step out of our way without ever realizing that we were there. So, we can do whatever we want, and not get noticed. However, if you try to interact with us, you part of it would get noticed. If we were to have a conversation with other people around, it would seem to them as if you were talking to yourself "

"You have no idea what it would look like to somebody else if I decided to start playing with your hair or something." Cassandra interjected, flashing a grin at Donna. "Since they can't notice me, it would look like your hair had come alive or something "

Eloise looked startled - then shot her 'quiet' sister a look and giggled. Apparently, living together for a century or more had more-or-less eliminated the majority of conversation topics, and this was the most most 'alive' either of them could remember being in a long time. Donna certainly hoped her perception was correct - it might mean that Eloise would be 'easier' to get into a good mood for the reward... or that Cassandra might be able to intercede on Donna's behalf. Either way...

"So, as you can see " Eloise continued on with the 'lesson', "We don't have to worry about being noticed, but don't have to worry about bumping into things. I could even ask somebody for a cigarette, and - if they were the type to give me one in normal circumstances - they'd not only give me a cigarette, but immediately forget about it or, more accurately, never remember it in the first place.

That's just an example, since I don't smoke - but you get the idea "

Donna nodded, slowly, trying to make it look like she was 'thinking' of something, rather than responding to something somebody (who, to the rest of the worlds wasn't there) had said.

While they'd began talking, Eloise had led them around the corner of the house and in a direction opposite from the one Donna had originally come - and Donna was somewhat surprised to note that a rather shabby residential section started about a block away. The sisters' house wasn't as isolated as it had seemed when she'd first arrived, the house itself hiding the more residential area from sight. Still, in retrospect it seemed sort of logical. The house had been built for privacy in what had been the 'green belt' of the city, back in the nineteenth century. Slowly, the residential city had expanded from one direction, while the industrial section had moved in from the other, until they'd met almost precisely where their house stood. Idly, Donna wondered how the sisters handled things like taxes and the like, but it was a passing thought. More immediate was the 'annoying' fact that she wasn't supposed to talk with the sisters. Donna really, really wanted to keep the conversation flowing, both as a delaying tactic and as a way to keep her mind off of what had happened to her, and what was still to come. However, the fact that they were moving into an area more populated than the empty industrial section made it hard to do that without looking like a raving lunatic talking to thin air. Even though it was getting quite late, there were still people moving around in the end of the residential section, which was mostly older Victorian-style homes that had long ago been subdivided into apartments...

Then Donna suddenly grinned and stopped walking.

"Hey..>!" Eloise protested, startled - watching, surprised, as the new woman rooted around in her purse, finally emerging with a small black plastic compact.

"Feel a sudden need to touch up your makeup...?" Cassandra asked, stunned, shooting a wary look at her sister - obviously suspecting Eloise of 'tampering' with Donna's mind, which was against the rules.

Donna, however, didn't open the small rectangle of black plastic, instead holding it up beside her head...

"Hi, Eloise?" She said, starting to walk again, now staring off into nothing. "I had a couple of questions for you..."

"What are you doing, Donna...?" Cassandra asked, confused. Of course, she'd been a semi-voluntary shut-in for the past century. Her sister, a little more cosmopolitan, caught on after only a second's hesitation.

"A cell phone!" She said - and then she laughed with delight. "She's pretending to talk on one of those wireless radio-phones I told you about, Cassie!"

"Hmmm... I think this Mortal might be a little more clever than you gave her credit for..." Cassandra noted.

"Oh, wouldn't that just be delicious..." Eloise asked, her eyes alight with the idea of a real, honest-to-God battle of the wits. Obviously, her years of looking down on mortals had made her believe that this would be a fairly easy win, 'limitations' or not.

"So, anywaaaaayyyy..." Donna said - and she said it with that certain tone that only women ever managed to get right, the sort of 'I was in the middle of talking and you went off on a tangent, but far be it for me to actually mention how rude that was' tone that women had used for centuries to put both men and other women into their place without actually having to say anything...

...and Donna found that this experience could actually be fun, at least here-and-there, because the look on the sisters' faces was priceless. Struggling to conceal a grin, she continued talking.

"I was wondering whether you were the only one who can do this... or can Cassandra do it, too?"

The two sisters shared a quick look, getting themselves up-to-speed with the conversational flow that had been broken by their surprise at Donna's little 'cell-phone' gambit.

"Oh, I can be 'unremarkable' too, on my own..." Cassandra admitted. "For me to cast the spell is a lot more complicated, though. I have to get certain herbs and minerals, set up a pentagram, that sort of thing. Eloise just... wills it to happen."

"It's not easy, though, which is why I don't use it all the time when I go out somewhere." Eloise admitted. "For one thing, I can't hold my 'anti-aging' spell in place at the same time. Usually I age at the rate of about a minute-per-day. While I'm using my powers for this little 'game' of ours, however, I'm going to age at the normal rate. I can afford it, of course - but it's not something I do often..." the amazingly powerful witch made a face. "I hate going 'cat' - the furballs are just terrible, and not being able to scratch where it itches can drive you mad enough to change back to human - which burns more 'power' then you saved if you do it often enough."

"Tell me about it..." Cassandra muttered. "There are weeks that I stay cat the entire time... and you're not all that fussy about keeping that damned litter-box clean, sis..."

The trials and tribulations of modern witches... Donna had to repress a smirk. Somehow, the stories and fairy-tales dealing with witches somehow failed to mention the more mundane aspects of their existence.

"Sounds... well, 'boring', actually." Donna said, honestly... while 'strolling' along, keeping Eloise at a slow pace, further delaying the inevitable. "Sort of the equivalent of a 'workaholic', if you know what I mean. What do you do for.. for fun?"

Of all the possible reactions Donna would have anticipated, this wasn't one of them. Rather than tossing off some sarcastic comment, Eloise stopped dead and shared a long, sorrowful look with her sister.

If Donna had ever doubted the sisters' claimed ages, the ancient pain in both pairs of eyes would have reversed his doubt.

For a long second, the three of them remained in a frozen tableau, the ex-man watching the two witches share a look of deep and ancient pain - then Eloise sighed and straightened, pushing the pain aside with the facility of somebody well-used to forcing their own pain deep inside, hidden from all but themselves.

"Well, here we are..." She said, with a grin that almost matched it's former wicked intensity. She gestured at the building they were standing close to - a bar. Not exactly an upscale one, either - the graffiti-marred sign identified the plain brick building as 'Tommy's Place', and the red-painted door flanked a small, dark window mostly taken up by a neon sign that advertised 'Cold Beer'.

"Oh. Okay." Donna said, suddenly nervous... trembling in fact. For a few minutes she'd been able to take her mind off of her situation, but now it all came back in a rush, and she felt her new stomach contract into a leaden ball of nervous fear as she once more became hyper-aware of the tall, ultra- buxom body she was crammed into.

Despite all of this, however, part of her mind was still churning over the two women's reaction to her question. From a certain point of view, it would have seemed like they'd avoided answering the question. From where Donna stood, however, they'd answered it louder then words.

Perhaps the sisters had survived more then two centuries... but Donna's life had been far from 'perfect', and she knew there was a hell of a difference between 'surviving' and 'living'...

It was odd to feel a sense of pity and sympathy for an incredibly powerful witch who was about to do her best to humiliate you. With mixed feelings thrumming through her nerves, Donna took a deep breath, squared her shoulders...

...then immediately let her shoulders relax when she realized what 'squaring' them did to her breasts, pushing them up and out. Flushing - flustered - she opened the door and stepped into the dark, smoky bar, the sisters following her with a chuckle.

The place was, quite frankly, a dive. The furnishings were cheap and mismatched, and the atmosphere reeked of every known material that could be smoked by human beings, not all of them legal. Underlying that was the mixed odors of unwashed human bodies and astringent cleaning solutions - too much of the former, not enough of the latter. Unwillingly, Donna felt her nose wrinkle with the melange of unsavory odors that flooded her olfactory sense, and she hesitated just inside the door.

"Come on - we don't want to be in here any longer than absolutely necessary..." Eloise said from just behind her, gently pushing on the small of Donna's back to get her moving. Her arrogant, self-centered tone was back - coupled with a dreadful glee at whatever humiliation she had planned for the new woman in this place.

"Okay, okay..." Donna muttered, still feigning a phone conversation - more important than ever, because she'd certainly gained the attention of the mostly-male clientele, many of whom were eyeing her openly. After all, it wasn't every day a pretty, sandy-blond giantess wandered in, much less one sporting an awe-inspiring bust whose large, thick nipples clearly revealed she wasn't wearing a bra.

The more observant onlookers would have noticed she was trembling slightly, with a sheen of nervous sweat rapidly beginning to form as she struggled - and almost succeeded - to hide the gut-wrenching nervousness she was feeling. It seemed as if every nerve-ending in her body had been rubbed raw with sandpaper, making every sensation - including those of her new, huge-breasted body - seem magnified.

Putting her 'phone' away, she struggled to look natural as she moved towards the bar, the sisters following close behind. Though a feminine stride was 'implanted' into her repertory of skills, her stride felt stiff and awkward to her, and she was hideously aware of the fact that she was balanced atop feminine shoes with high heels - and what those heels did to her 'nice' legs and ass as she moved.

"Okay, Donna, here's the first challenge..." Eloise told her, smugly, as they crossed the room. "You've got to get a guy to buy you a drink... and whoever buys you the drink you have to 'reward' with a big ol' kiss."

Donna almost stopped dead and whirled to stare at Eloise in disgust. Even though she managed to avoid that extreme reaction, her stride faltered and a look of near-panic crossed her face, all unbidden.

"Something wrong?"

The question came from three sources at once. One of them was in Eloise's smugly sarcastic tone. Another came from a heavy-set individual in a leather-and-denim ensemble who was sitting nearby, frankly leering at her.

The third came from one of the better-dressed patrons, a dark-haired man sitting at the bar, sipping at a beer and trying hard to ignore what was going on around him. Though his gaze had been frankly appreciative, his manner had been of somebody using the sight of her as a distraction - as if she were the most 'lookable-at' object in the bar, an assessment Donna really couldn't fault him for. His question came in a concerned tone, with a polite 'Miss' tacked on the end.

Cassandra's addition to the quadraphonic inquiry was a gasp of shock... followed by a poorly-stifled giggle.

Donna nearly loved the younger, less powerful witch for that gasp - and came close to hating her for that giggle...

Time had seemed to stretch out, expanding every millisecond into an eternity... as Donna's mind raced, trying to cope with what was before her. Memories chased through her mind, memories of the few women she'd kissed as a man. (Including Becky Delsario, the first, in eighth grade.) Thoughts about what she was doing, had done, and was going to do raced through her head, mixed with one unifying thought: the 'brass ring' at the end of this ordeal. No matter what happened, Eloise was going to 'reward' Donna for the return of the keys... but just how good that reward was depended on how well she handled these challenges.

Meanwhile, while these thoughts were rampaging through her hyperactive mind, her overworked nerves were accepting and passing on sensory data - perceptions of a world that seemed to have slowed to a crawl.

There was Eloise, all-but-hugging her left shoulder, a smirk on her face while she waited for her reactions, while her sister - looking stunned but amazed - hung a little further away, off of Donna's right shoulder, both somewhat shorter than the golden giantess Eloise had turned her into.

Even lower than the twin sisters' heads were the two men, both seated, both in front of her - one to the left, the other at the bar to her right. Between her height and her standing position, each man's eyes were about level with her huge, heavy breasts. The greasy, chubby guy on the left was staring directly at her huge tits, while the one on the right had actually managed to bring his eyes up to her face before speaking - but his gaze had also lingered thoughtfully on her new 'rack' before reaching their current location.

Donna noted all of this in that frozen instant in time. As a man, she'd been slow, inoffensive, indecisive.. so she was shocked when she found that she had a plan, a course of action - and one that could quite easily be termed 'aggressive', considering the circumstances.

Her surprise didn't keep her from acting, though. Even as that frozen second compressed back into 'real time', she was already putting her plan into motion.

Deliberately, she turned away from the scuzzy guy at the table and blinked at the man at the bar, forcing her face to assume a new look, and hoping that she looked more upset than panicked.

"Oh, It's nothing..." She said, striving to put a catch in her voice and, basically, sound as pitiful and pathetic as possible. "I just realized that I was so upset when I left the apartment that I forgot to grab my money." She quite deliberately sniffed, as if restraining tears, and hoped it didn't sound as fake to the guy as it did to herself.

"Oh - I'm sorry to hear that." The guy said in a noncommittal voice that made Donna experience the strangest mix of panic and relief at the thought that the guy might not take the opening...

...and then felt the exact same emotion somehow reverse itself as he gestured at the empty stool next to him.

"I'm sort of having a pity party for myself." He said, with a sorrowful grin. "Since misery loves company, why don't you join me for a drink or two - on me."

"Gee, thanks..." She said, settling into the chair, and hoping her nervous, awkward actions were being attributed to her being 'upset'. "Uh.. I'm Donna."

"Alan." He introduced himself, briefly. "I'm afraid this establishment is somewhat lacking in variety. Beer all right with you, Donna?"

"Fine." She said, nodding, and let Alan gesture the dour-looking female bartender over and ask for two more beers. The woman gave Donna a long, cool look, her narrow eyes speaking volumes before she turned away to grab two more domestic beers from the fridge behind the bar, popping them open with the easy motions that came from long practice, then banging them hard onto the cigarette-scarred bar.

They each took a sip of beer, more as something to do to fill the awkward silence than any real desire for the drink. At least Alan didn't have a couple of 'semi-invisible' witches lurking directly behind him, making him even more uncomfortable.

Well, at least Eloise was on the side away from Alan, which gave Donna's plan a better chance of succeeding - assuming that Alan gave her an opening to...

"So, I'll probably regret this..." Alan said. "...but what's wrong?" Bless his little heart...

"I'm cursed..." Donna said, 'brokenly'. "I... I'm psychic."

Alan stared at her. "A... psychic?" He said, as if making sure he heard her right.

"Oh, not like the famous seer Cassandra or anything..." She said, hoping and praying. "In fact, it's very limited - and strange. It's enough to make my life a type of living hell, though. You see, I can tell things about people... but only when I'm kissing them."

"Kissing them...?" Alan said, openly doubtful.

Donna snorted. "I know it sounds weird - but it's hell. I can't tell anything about the future, can't tell if a complete stranger is lying to me... but whenever I get into a relationship, I can tell things about my boyfriend... and it's not something I can turn off, so I find out things that we would have been happier if I hadn't known about. It's hell. I mean, how can I have a relationship with a guy if I know - know - that every time I kiss him he's comparing me to his old girlfriend, and finding me lacking? Sure, it's not like he'd be cheating on me... but how can I have a relationship knowing that he's thinking about going back to her?"

Alan looked at her from the corner of his eye. "I.. see. Well, that would be a problem. Still, you'll have to forgive me if I seem a little... skeptical." He paused. "I don't suppose you'd be willing to demonstrate?"

Donna blushed. She couldn't help herself - the thought of having to kiss a guy did it to her. However, given the circumstances - as Alan perceived it - it would be an unremarkable blush.

"Well... Okay." She said, ears burning. "Just so you don't think I'm a complete loon. Just remember - I'm no Cassandra..."

Then, praying the younger witch had gotten the hint, Donna leaned forward...

The fact that she was awkward wasn't remarkable - one of the 'good' things about her plan. After all, she was kissing a complete stranger, and so some awkwardness was to be expected. Alan had no way of knowing what the true reason for it was, of course.

The odd thing was... it was just a kiss. Donna hadn't had tons of experience, as a guy, but she'd had some... and once she'd closed her eyes, it felt more or less the same, as a woman, as it had as a man. Oh, there were some subtle variations, but a pair of female lips kissing a pair of male lips created the same basic sensations, no matter what end you were on.

Somehow, the fact that it wasn't physically revolting wasn't the least bit comforting to Donna. After all, kissing a guy was 'perverted' - she shouldn't find it mildly pleasant, if awkward.

However, she forced herself to go ahead and make it a deep, long kiss, slow and 'experimental' rather than passionate...

...and they broke apart, Alan looking appreciative, Donna struggling to keep fear at bay. Then she was struggling to repress a sigh of relief to see that Cassandra had caught on.

Spread out on the bar was the contents of Alan's wallet. Thanks to the spell, Alan hadn't noticed Cassandra taking the wallet, and he was oblivious to the fact that it was spread out on the bar.

"So - what did you learn?" Alan asked, his tone indicating he was waiting for the 'punchline' to whatever joke she was playing.

Donna, however, assumed a thoughtful look - but her 'empty gaze' was actually focused on the contents of the wallet.

"Let's see..." She said, hesitantly, playing it up for all she was worth. "Your name is Alan... Alan Gottleib."

Alan blinked, then leaned forward slightly. "how...?"

With more confidence, Donna continued. "You're... Twenty-nine years old. No, wait - thirty. As of last April. Sometime mid-month..."

"The sixteenth..." Alan verified, brows lowered in confusion. "But how did you...?"

"You were born in Minneapolis Minnesota." Donna continued, letting her eyes flick over other documents as well. "You're a member of the Eastside Athletics Club, an organ donor, and have a Triple-A membership. Your blood type is O-Negative, and..."

"Okay, okay!" Alan said, holding up his hands and looking at her with a slightly wild look.

"...let your library card expire two years ago..." Donna muttered.. and Cassandra, grinning, began to refill Alan's wallet with his stuff, slipping it back where it belonged. The younger witch threw Donna a wink, and Donna had to struggle to keep from grinning back at her.

"No offense, Donna.. but I think the fact that you might actually be psychic even scary then when I thought you were just a little.. well, you know." He cleared his throat, nervously. "Uh... I think I'll just go sit over there..."

"Don't bother." Donna said - and she used a cool tone that made two unseen witches and one very confused man blink in surprise. With feigned disdain, Donna rose from the stool.

Then, with a slightly disgusted look, she stared down from her full height.

"I also found out about that dirty trick you played on that girlfriend a couple years ago."

Alan went pale, eyes widening and jaw dropping, as Donna turned and stalked from the bar, as if offended... with quite a crowd of men staring after her.

One look at Alan's face kept any of them from trying to stop her and have her 'demonstrate' her talent with them.

The two witches had to hurry to keep up with her as she 'stormed' out of the bar... and once they were outside and Donna's stride had slowed, she finally risked glancing to either side, seeing nearly identical faces flanking her.

The green-eyed one on her left was looking at her with an awe-filled gaze, lips twitching in an irrepressible grin...

...which was matched by the one on the dark-eyed face on the other side.

Donna had expected it from Cassandra - but to see Eloise so amused, despite her 'loss' of that round, was somewhat of a surprise...

Then the more powerful witch broke out in honest-to-god laughter.

"Dear God, that was priceless...!" She howled, having trouble keeping to her feet. "It never even occurred to me you could use our invisibility to and the look on his face after that parting shot!

Beautiful! You didn't have a worry about the other guys wanting a try "

Cassandra was now laughing, too - but she forced out the question. "How did you know ?"

Rubbing a hand over her face to hide her lips and keeping her voice low, the blonde muttered. "At some point, every guy has done something unfair to an ex - and we all know it, too "

That sent Cassandra into the same barely-able to stand gales of laughter that had enveloped Eloise.

Donna feigned great interest in a poster in the window of a nearby store while the witches slowly regained their composure. Though 'proud' of herself for having successfully passed the first hurdle without cracking, part of the new woman was upset that she'd passed. Part of her found itself wishing that she hadn't been able to do it, that she'd been 'man' enough to be too disgusted to go through with it - much less so easily and so 'well'.

While the sisters got control of their laughter, she struggled to understand the mix of emotions she was feeling, and get a handle on the guilt she felt.

Finally, all three women - two of them centuries old, the other new incarnated - had gained as much control of their diverse emotions as they were going to.

"So, Donna - does your 'psychic abilities' give you any clue as to what comes next?" Eloise asked, grinning. Donna felt her stomach contract in nervous anxiety as her brief respite from this little 'contest' passed by, and she shook her head in the negative.

Cassandra gestured towards the nearby phone booth. "Call a cab, dear. Tell them you're heading up to the Pussycat lounge on Fifth and Lexington."

Donna blinked, searching through her mind to see if she recognized the name or location - but she couldn't recall ever being in that part of town. Swallowing nervously, she swayed atop her heels to the phone and placed the call. It was only after the dispatcher asked that Donna realized that she didn't know exactly where she was now, and had to turn to Cassandra and have her look at the street signs at the nearest intersection to provide the information.

With a start, Donna realized that she really didn't know the city where she lived and worked. She'd never realized how much of a 'slave' she'd been to her own routines and fears, shutting herself away from the world at large. It seemed an odd time to realize that her own life - thus far - was far more cloistered and alone than she'd ever truly appreciated...

...but it also helped bolster her flagging determination. She realized, now more than ever, just how much she needed a 'reward' to set her life back on track. She filed a mental note away in the back of her mind - as well as 'perfect eyesight' and (of course) financial rewards, she'd have to make sure to get Eloise in a good enough mood to throw something that would make it easier for 'Don' to interact with people into the reward. Perhaps a mild sort of empathic power, so that Don could know what people were thinking, in a general way...?

It was hard to devote her mind to working out the exact reward she should ask for. Most of her mind was taken up by nervous - and useless - wondering about her next 'challenge'. Whatever it was, it put a wicked grin on Eloise's face... and when Cassandra asked about it, and received a whispered reply, it made the younger sister look startled - and then giggle.

It in no way served to calm Donna, who found herself nervously pacing up and down the sidewalk past the invisible sisters, trying to brace herself for whatever was to come.

When the cab arrived, Donna climbed into the front seat. Even if the sisters hadn't been under a spell to be 'unnoticed', the driver might have missed them sliding into the back seat - his eyes were focused on the tall, lushly-endowed body of his passenger, a look of awe and lust on his face before he managed to get it under control. Though it made Donna extraordinarily uncomfortable to be looked at in that way, she could hardly blame the poor guy - after all, it could hardly be a common occurrence, having a towering, buxom, tawny-haired woman climb into his cab.

Donna, however, was glad she didn't (yet) have the ability to read people's emotions. It was no secret what the cabby was feeling, and she didn't want to feel that emotion.

"So... I haven't seen you at the Pussycat before." The Cabby remarked, surprising Donna.

"Uh... This is my first time there." Donna replied, nervously, wondering what type of place the Pussycat was.

The Cabby eyed her again, and grinned. "Well.. I might just have to swing by more often..." Donna frowned slightly, but kept her silence...

...until the cab pulled into the parking lot of the Pussycat Lounge.

It was a strip club. The brightly-lit sign had a marquee section at the bottom, where feature dancers or specials could be advertised. Currently it announced that tonight was (to quote) 'AMLTEUR NITE!!!'

"Oh, no..." Donna whispered, hoarsely. "Somethin' wrong?" the cabby asked.

Donna coughed, and managed a 'smile' that looked more like a grimace of pain. She had absolutely no illusions as to why she was here - and her heart was thundering and her palms were sweating while she wrestled with the mix of emotions she felt.

"First night jitters." She managed to get out - while Cassandra and Eloise chuckled from the back seat, unnoticed by the driver. Hands shaking, she paid the fare and climbed out of the cab, the sisters sliding out from the back seat. Donna, nervously shifting her weight from foot to foot, watched the taillights recede in the distance.

"So - wanna just give up now?" Eloise asked with a grin. "You can, you know. Anytime you want, you can say 'enough', and we'll go back to my place for the rest of the twenty-four hours..."

'...and you lose your chance at a reward,' went unspoken. Nervously, not trusting herself to speak, the new woman shook her head - which took more willpower than she knew she had. Every instinct - every born-and-bred-as-a-male instinct - was shouting at her to cut and run. Back to the same, dismal life she had before.

"Well, then - why don't we go in?" Eloise suggested with a wicked grin, pointing towards the door.

Donna looked at the door, biting her lower lip - which didn't help, since she tasted lipstick, which only reinforced what she was going through.

"C'mon, Donna - it's not that bad." Cassandra told her, encouragingly. "I admit, I'd be nervous, too - but that's not even your real body, so why should you be modest about it? Besides... don't you think you have a body men would love to see? Hell, if I were a guy, I'd want to see you on stage..."

Eloise had started to frown at Cassandra's encouragement. Of course, she was enjoying humiliating Don/Donna - but another part of her wanted to 'win', get Donna to give in. Now, however, her smile returned, more wicked than ever.

"Hmmm... that sounds like a good idea - and you just volunteered." Eloise said, and her sister turned to frown at her.

"Volunteered to what...?" She asked... then gasped, eyes going wide...

Donna's eyes widened as she watched the marginally younger sister twitch... and then begin to change. Like her own transformation, it was rapid, almost too quick for the eye to follow - but, unlike Donna, Cassandra's clothes also changed.

In the space of a few seconds, Cassandra's appearance had completely - and radically - altered. In place of the beautiful woman now stood a tall, broad-shouldered man with a 'Kevin Sorbo'ish mane of loose, dark hair... which matched his new 'Herculean' body, which was packed into a tight black T- shirt and nearly skin-tight faded denim jeans...

...which bulged almost disgustingly at the crotch.

"Eloise!" The new man said, shocked, running broad hands over his tanned, muscular new body. "You...! Change me back!"

"Do you realize you're shouting?" Eloise asked, smirking. "At somebody nobody else can see, for that matter?"

"I don't care!" Cassandra said, hands hesitantly touching his ridiculously outsized 'package', and then flying away quickly. "I never...!"

"Oh, but you did, dear brother." Eloise chuckled. "Besides, you know I can do physical changes without consent - it's only mind-altering that's forbidden. Just relax and enjoy it - Carl."

"Enjoy...?" The new man's deep, rumbling voice faded as his mouth worked silently in indignant anger. Eloise chuckled again. "Well, don't you think you two should go inside?"

"Eloise...!" Cassandra/Carl said, angrily, while Donna shook nervously...

...and then both gasped as Eloise made a gesture with her hand - and faded from sight. "What...?" Donna said, looking around nervously. "Where.. Where did she go?"

Eyes narrowed, the new man sighed angrily. "She's extremely powerful, but all this is taking it's toll," She said. "It's easier for her to keep the 'unnoticed' spell going if there's no 'exceptions'... so we won't be able to notice her until she wants us to."

"What.. what do we do now?" Donna asked.

"Well, it's all up to you. Either you go through with it, or you back out - either way, we won't see Eloise again until this is over."

"Oh..." Donna said, looking from the club to 'Carl', and then back again. She took a long, deep breath and let it out with a sigh. "Well... Here goes."

Carl's angry look faded slightly as he reached out and gently lay a hand on Donna's arm. "Good luck."

"Thanks." Donna said, smiling weakly. Turning, she strode towards the performer's entrance, beside which a sign indicated all Amateurs were to use that door, while Carl - muttering angrily under his breath to his unseen sister - headed towards the customer entrance.

Both were walking awkwardly, and in both cases it was because of a magical gender change - with it's 'side-effects', in Donna's case, nervousness...

...and in Carl's, anger - and the fact that the tight denim over his crotch was uncomfortably compressing the massive endowment that had been forced upon him.

Donna didn't have time to feel pity for the new man - and, in fact, felt a tinge of satisfaction at the unwanted transformation, a carry-over from her anger at the 'giggle'. Meanwhile, most of her mind was taken up with forcing her body to move as she reached the door and - very nervously - pulled it open and stepped through...

It took her a second to realize something had changed as she stepped through the doorway. In fact, she'd taken two steps past the door before it registered on her preoccupied mind that things were somehow different...

Then, with a start, she realized that her clothing had changed, instantly, when she'd crossed the threshold of the doorway.

Gasping, she looked down and took stock of her new ensemble.

Her shirt had changed, becoming a crisp white blouse, custom-tailored to mold to her top-heavy new figure. Under the crisp, tight fabric, she could feel the confinement of a perfectly-fitter brassiere, though she was unable to see the new foundation garment.

Her shirt was still a red miniskirt - but now it was red leather, fitting as tightly to her full ass and wide hips as if it were painted on.

Her shoes had undergone the most radical change. Now she was balanced disturbingly easily atop red platform shoes with a three-inch high platform and slender heels that had to be at least a good nine inches tall - exactly the sort of thing a stripper would wear, as a matter of fact.

'Eloise...' Donna muttered under her breath in mixed anger and humiliation... and then, taking a deep breath, forced herself to ignore it, pressing forward. The gentle sway of her hips and the joggle of her confined bosom only served to accentuate her anxiety as she passed the changing room towards the back-stage area, where a man was waiting to sign her in for the show. A gaggle of other women waited, chatting brightly - some in anticipation, some in eager anxiety. Donna tried not to let her nervousness show as she neared the sign-in table, several of the other would-be strippers shooting her looks, some friendly, some not.

The man behind the table eyed her openly - and grinned.

"Well, well - what do we have here...?" He said, winking at her. "You sure you fall in 'amateur' standing, Miss...?"

"Yes..." She said - and her voice was barely audible, hoarse and cracked from her anxiety. Flushing, she cleared her throat and tried again. "yes - this is the first time, I.. uh..."

Her nervousness verified her amateur status more than her words ever could. Waving her closer, the grinning man fixed his eyes on her straining blouse and told her to sign up - she'd be on next.

"Next!" She squeezed, eyes wide - while several other women said the same word in tones of outrage.

"Yes, next." He said, firmly, silencing all forms of protest. Quivering, Donna signed, showing her identification as proof-of-age.

"So - do you want to use your real name, or a stage name?" the man asked.

Donna chuckled, nervously, and said to go ahead and announce her 'real' name - which, of course, was a merely a gender-matched alias for her new body. She had an actual moment of levity as she imagined giving her real 'real' name to be announced...

...but the moment faded quickly, leaving only fear and discomfort as she waited for the woman on the stage to finish her routine.

* * * * *

Sitting next to her 'brother', Eloise grinned at the way 'Carl' shifted around in the chair, trying to find a comfortable spot. Eloise had over-endowed the new man, then crammed him into a badly-tailored, skin-tight pair of jeans to ensure that no such position existed - and her own power was so much stronger that there was no way Carl could just 'whip up' a more comfortable outfit. He, of course, had tried, perhaps hoping that the concurrent spells Eloise was holding would have weakened her enough but going completely 'unnoticed' gave Eloise enough power to hold Carl trapped in form and clothing, though it had been a bit of a strain on her abilities.

It was worth it, though. Eloise couldn't remember the last time she'd actually enjoyed herself so much. Oh, but was that Mortal going to get such a wonderful reward when this was over, no matter how well 'she' performed - not that Eloise would let her know that, of course. It would take some of the fun out of it.

The truth was, she was becoming quite fond of Donna. It was getting harder and harder to pretend that she was being 'cruel' - though she was sure that both Donna and Carl were miffed with her. The truth was, she doubted she could do anything that would truly 'hurt' Donna, and of course she couldn't even imagine doing something truly nasty to Carl/Cassandra - who knew it, which is why he hadn't objected more strenuously. In fact, this wasn't the first time Cassandra had been male, though never as well endowed as he currently was. Indeed, sometimes a male body was the 'alternate' form Cassandra chose to keep the effects of aging to a minimum. It was the fact that it had been forced on him - and the over-endowment, of course - that annoyed him, rather than the fact he was male.

So, no real harm done, to either - just as there'd be no real harm done by this little 'striptease' act. However, it was sure to be fun - because she'd made a few... modifications to Donna.

Though she wasn't allowed to alter her actual mind, Eloise had permission to change Donna's body, skills, habits and tastes - and that gave her more leeway than Donna ever imagined. Eloise had, of course, given her all the skills she needed to be a stripper - but had also made some modifications to her 'habits', as well as her body chemistry.

Though Donna might not appreciate them, Eloise was sure they would be.. entertaining. Likewise, what she planned to do with Carl would be 'fun' as well... if a little strange. Neither of them quite conformed to accepted 'morality' as seen by Mortals, but what she was planning still felt a little.. uncomfortable. Not enough to keep her from doing it, of course...

Then the too-skinny girl who was on stage finished her routine, and Eloise focused her attention on the stage as the DJ's amplified voice rang out.

"Okay, guys, put your hands together for the next lady, a gal more than 'qualified' for tonight's entertainment. Let's see if we can't convince her that, whatever she's doing for a living now, it's the wrong line of work. The Pussycat Lounge..."

* * * * *

"...is proud to debut the never-before-seen uh... 'talents' of Miss... Donna... Wannamaker...!!!"

"Okay - that's your cue!" Gary, the stage-manager who'd signed her in hissed, giving her a small push in the small of her back...

...which was like pushing on a statue. Not only didn't she move, but her muscles were taut and hard with tension. The only sign of life in her was her rapid, nearly hyperventilating breathing - which didn't help her state of mind, since it caused her huge tits to be compressed rhythmically inside the as-yet unseen bra that had appeared on her chest.

"Damn it, Donna - go!" Gary said, a little louder, and put a little more effort into his push.

Almost against her will, Donna found herself taking that step forward, her heart beating so hard inside her ribcage that it felt like it would explode - and she almost wished it would, and put her out of her humiliation and fear.

Then she took a second, hesitant step, more out of 'habit' than any true desire or willful control - and the curtain parted, the floodlights bathing her body in their glow as she looked out at the sea of men staring at the stage. She heard the rustling as they shifted in their seats, the gasps and muttered comments as her tall, massive-busted body registered...

...and then her fear was swept away in new sensation, sensations she'd never thought she'd feel, in this body or her own male one.

Even as they washed through her, she knew the came from Eloise's power... but that didn't mitigate what she was feeling.

Pride. Joy. Eagerness. Excitement...

...and arousal.

Eloise had altered her 'habits' and 'likes' so that she was an exhibitionist. Somebody who enjoyed flaunting her body - and that was what she was about to do. More than that, though, she'd tied this new 'habit' into her hormonal system... making her horny as well as happy, eager and excited and turned on, her emotions too powerful to sustain the fear she'd felt a mere second ago.

She didn't want to feel this way about getting naked in front of a roomful of horny men - but she couldn't help it. Truth be told, part of her didn't want to be able to stop it - not only did it make it enormously easier for her to go through with something she'd decided to do anyway, but it actually made her feel... good. Happy. Excited.

Better than she'd felt in a long time, as a matter of fact...

It was a thought that would have bothered her, if she'd bothered to dwell on it any longer - but the music for her routine was thundering through the opening riffs, a heavy bass beat driving it - and thought shut down as new 'instincts' and skills took over, and she sway and jiggled happily out onto stage, her hips already 'bump-and-grinding' with the incredibly smooth, sensual stride she used...

* * * * *

Carl watched Donna stride out onto the stage to the approving shouts and cheers of the crowd...

..and was shocked to see a huge, obviously genuine smile on the ex-man's face as she writhed and gyrated to the music, long-nailed hands coming up to run provocatively over the crisp, skin-tight material straining over her massive bust-line. Her moves were smooth and easy - and filled with eager, happy energy.

She was obviously having the time of her life as she danced up on the stage, throwing kisses out into the crowd, body moving in ways calculated to arouse every man in the room.

Even more shocking was the fact that Carl found that it was working - on him!

"What the...?" Carl gasped to himself, stunned, as he felt his ridiculously out-sized male equipment stir and begin to harden with disturbingly pleasant discomfort inside his too-tight jeans. He found his breath becoming short and rapid - and found it nearly impossible to tear his eyes away from Donna's happy, provocative gyrations on the stage.

"No.. I shouldn't..." He whispered to himself, feeling his heart racing in sexual excitement. He couldn't control the strange - and pleasant - sensations thundering through his body as he watched Donna's routine - and when she ripped off her top to expose her massive, firm globes barely encased in a lacy white bra, he found himself imagining his currently male hands caressing and fondling those massive, delightful globes of softly firm flesh...

...or his huge, thick cock sliding back and forth in her chasm-like cleavage as he tit-fucked her happily...

"Oh, my Goddess..." Carl whispered, eyes wide.

Was he really a 'lesbian' deep down, inside. Unlike Eloise, Carl had never actually 'done it', though during puberty she'd certainly spent a lot of time playing with conjured dildos of all shapes and sizes. Could it be...?

He just didn't know. All he knew was that he was currently more aroused, as a man looking at a huge- breasted woman, then he'd ever been before...

* * * * *

It was even more strange-feeling then she'd anticipated - and more fun.

Eloise was pressed close to Carl, one hand stroking his crotch to keep his cock hard as she whispered into her 'brother's' ear.

"Look at her body." She whispered. "Look at those tits! They're huge.. and so firm. So inviting. You're so damned horny for her, you can't think straight, aren't you. God - wouldn't you love to get your hands on her body? Or perhaps you'd like to get your lips on it, kissing it all over - especially those huge, thick nipples..."

Yes, it definitely felt weird to be doing this to her own 'sister', even if Cassandra was currently male - but knowing what she was doing to him was even more exiting (in a very guilty way) and there was no way she was going to stop. Instead, she kept up a line of patter as Donna went through her act, getting more and more graphic with Carl as Donna worked her way out of her clothes, until finally she wore nothing but her high-heels, her huge-breasted figure gyrating under the lights, hands roaming all over her own body in near-orgasmic enjoyment, lips curved in a huge grin of near-mindless pleasure.. just as Eloise had planned...

Or maybe not...

* * * * * "Donna..."

Eloise's warning tone made Donna aware that she was doing it again. Almost as if they had a mind of their own, her hands had begun to toy with the hem of her shirt, slowly pulling it upwards... as she'd gazed with a mindless happy grin at Carl, who was staring back at her, hungrily, a matching grin on his own face.

They were walking along the sidewalk, nearly to the sister's house, and the entire time, Eloise had been forced to remind Donna - once more back in her original outfit, except this time with less 'sexy' underwear, complete with a heavy, full-cup cotton bra - not to get undressed.

Donna wasn't sure what had happened to her on that stage - all she knew is that she wasn't ready to let it end. It had taken an incredible force of will to take the first step out on to that stage - but once she'd felt the sheer, sexual joy that stripping had provided, she had to force herself to leave the stage and the admiring, lust-filled gazes of the men, including Carl - at the end of the set.

Forcing herself to get dressed again, back stage, had been one of the hardest things she'd ever had to do. Even the fact that Gary had refused to pay her, claiming that there was no way she was an 'amateur' hadn't bothered her - who cared about money when you felt this fabulous?

It had been almost physical painful to be fully dressed again, and leaving the club she felt ready to burst into tears - until she'd found Carl waiting at the back door of the club, eyes caressing her body as he complimented her at great length and in great detail - and the massive hard-on that was clearly visible in his skin-tight jeans proved they weren't empty words, which gave her that wonderful, excited feeling again. It wasn't straight exhibition that turned her on - but the fact that she was arousing men. The fact that she turned Carl on made her feel fantastic - and she was so glad that Carl was using every ounce of power in his possession to keep Eloise from changing him back into a woman. Even going wholly visible hadn't given Eloise enough power to break through Carl's 'block', which was using everything he had to give.

Part of Donna was worried and confused about these feelings. It wasn't like she was 'brain-washed' or anything. She knew that she was 'really' a man, and finding Carl's obvious, sexual attraction for her exciting was uncomfortable, weird, even sick - but that just added a 'guilty' edge to her pleasure. Like the time when she was young and had tried pot for the first time. Knowing that it was illegal had just added to the excitement - and the sort of dazed joy she had felt from the pot was similar to what she felt now, as well, though this was definitely more sexual in nature.

That incident with the marijuana was one of the few things 'Don' had ever done that was exciting, even dangerous, and had been one of the 'highlights' of her sad, lonely life. Now, she was feeling something even better than that, and she didn't want it to end, even if it was sick and twisted.

Obviously, Carl was in a similar state, uncomfortable with his own reactions to her - but not enough so that he wanted it to end. Indeed, he was doing all he could to keep that from happening.

Eloise, on the other hand, had a worried look on her face - but the two of them barely noticed, as they couldn't seem to stop looking at each other's incredibly endowed, gender-reversed bodies.. and wondering just how far they could dare go with these new and wonderfully strange feelings they were experiencing.

Neither of them were blind to the fact that the feelings were... well, 'fake' wasn't quite accurate, since they were really feeling them. 'Imposed' would be a better word. They'd managed to figure it out for themselves even before Eloise had confessed as to what she'd done to them, in hopes of convincing them to let her undo what they'd done. What Eloise had failed to take into account, however, was the quiet, boring, pitiful little lives both 'Don' and 'Cassandra' had lived. Now, as 'Donna' and 'Carl', they felt enjoyment and pleasure like they'd never felt before, imposed or otherwise - and, like blind people suddenly granted sight, they didn't want to give up this 'gift', no matter the 'downside' to it.

Donna knew that what kept Eloise from openly panicking at their 'strange' behavior was the same thing that was frustrating her attempts to 'help' Donna - their deal. Eloise had planned all of this out ahead of time, making all these alterations to Donna at the outset - since their deal specified it that way. Without Donna's agreement (which she wasn't willing to give), Eloise could do nothing to Donna until the twenty-four hours was up... at which point, Donna would automatically revert to the original 'Don', something that now filled her with disgust and horror, the thought of going back to that short, meaningless little man with a short, meaningless little life.

Carl, on the other hand, could remain the way he was almost indefinitely, despite the fact that Eloise was much stronger as a witch. After all, the initial 'spell' had come from Eloise, and all Carl was doing was 'holding' it - a much easier task than reversing it.

Finally, they reached the house, and Eloise let them in with a sigh of relief.

"Okay, we're alone..." She said, not even bothering to close the door behind them. "I think it's time we had a talk and..."

"Later, Sis..." Carl rumbled, his eyes never leaving Donna's buxom figure. "Donna and I want to get... better acquainted."

Donna grinned widely, even though nervousness and uncertainty tugged at her like... like a virgin about to...?

Maybe that was a more accurate metaphor than she thought. She wasn't sure if she was more scared or excited by the prospect.

"But..." Eloise tried to protest.

Donna and Carl ignored her, as if they hadn't even heard her. Eyes still locked on each other's face, they moved towards the living room, hands reaching out and grasping each other tightly.

They settled onto the couch... and leaned into each other, not needing words to discuss what they were doing. Two hearts beat rapidly in mixed excitement and anxiety as their lips met in a deep, passionate kiss. Gently, Donna rolled towards Carl's firm, strong body, pressing her huge tits into the side of his chest and allowing him to slowly and sensuously run his hand over her bare, smooth legs, their tongues dancing in an age's old manner as they surrender themselves to the guilty pleasure they each desired...

* * * * *

Eloise was ready to panic. This isn't what she wanted - not at all. It was all wrong...

The strangest part of it was that, just a few hours ago, it was what she wanted. Then, the idea of Don becoming a lust-filled woman who couldn't control herself with a man would have filled her with delight. It wasn't until she allowed herself to see a 'mere Mortal' as a real, living person that she'd realized how much she'd been denying herself. Two centuries of arrogance had led only to loneliness and bitterness. Now, she had found joy in life, and wanted to share that joy with the person who had made it possible - and, instead, had gone overboard and locked both Don/Donna and her own sister/brother into a stare of emotional and physical overload that she wasn't able to break. Pain and self-hatred pulled at her... especially since she knew it was the last vestiges of the 'old' Eloise who had let this happen. She'd been arrogant and angry when she'd set up Donna's new skills, desires and hormones, and had overdone it. Even worse, she could have kept this from happening by stopping the 'contest' and admitting to Don/Donna what she'd discovered - that she truly liked him./her, and was willing to grant her that reward without her having to go through with this stupid, twisted game. Instead, she'd let the last, fading vestiges of her cruel humor carry her on the path she'd initiated - and it had led to this, not only ensnaring Donna but Cassandra, as well.

She'd discovered happiness - and now she felt like the most miserable excuse for a sentient being on the face of the planet. Facing up to her own pointlessly arrogant, cruel existence was painful, almost enough to drive her to despair - but what she'd done with that persona was worse, much worse.

She watched as the gender-swapped couple settled onto the couch and embraced, kissing passionately as their hands roamed each other's body - and felt as if she was about to burst into tears, a sensation that she'd never really known until now.

Almost ready to give into her self-loathing, Eloise felt her mind slip and slid from one point to another, afraid of facing up to what she'd done...

...and found a possible answer in her memories.

She'd always been incredibly powerful for a witch. Most witches needed a good century of schooling to bring out their power, whereas she'd always been able to bring it forth by willpower alone. Her sister, however, was one of those who'd needed 'aids' to make things happen, needing the extra power gained through herbs and potions and other mixtures of once-living things, drawing on their inherent power to bolster her own. Eloise had never bothered with it, never seeing the need - but her sister had all the books and items in her room, and if they amplified Cassandra's power, they should do the same to her own.

In one case, she was trying to override Cassandra's magical power, and she didn't know what it would take to do that, never having bothered to fathom the true depth of her sister's power, knowing that she was more powerful and being content in that. Now, that fact shamed her - but she had to push that aside. There was a good chance that she could break Carl's will if Donna was restored to her original body - and it was her own spell that was holding her in that form. She didn't have to be stronger than Cassandra/Cal - she had to be stronger than herself. If the usual implements of witchcraft could give her even the slightest extra power, she could override her own spell...

Turning quickly, she hurried up the stairs towards her sister's room, hoping she'd be able to find what she needed in one of the spell books she'd never even bothered to glance through before now.

* * * * *

When she felt Carl's hands begin to remove her top, Donna felt a thrumming rush of excitement, pleasure...

...and fear. Hesitation pulled her to a momentary stop, and she pulled her soft, full lips back and stared into Carl's eyes, who was staring back at her.

"Is.. Is this the right thing to do...?" She asked, nervously. "I mean, we both know who we really are, and..."

"I know." Carl said, gently. "Honey, from where I sit, it feels strange, too - but the way I see it, we're a man and a woman, and if we're both in the 'wrong' gender, then it's still a man and a woman. It might be different if I was born male, or you female, but..." He stopped, and lightly squeezed her hand with the one not halfway under her top. "But if you're not sure, or not ready, then we won't."

Donna slowly smiled. "I didn't know it until now, but that's all I really wanted to hear. I wanted to know that either of us could stop, if we felt that we needed to badly enough. We know we can stop - the fact that we aren't means that we're not under an uncontrollable compulsion... but making a decision that's no more clouded or confused than that of any other aroused man and woman about to... for the first time, I mean..."

"I know..." Carl replied softly - and they leaned in again, for a short-but-passionate kiss...

...and then they separated to allow each other unrestricted access to each other's clothes, fingers shaking with nervous desire as they worked to undress each other, their haste and emotions making them awkward and uncoordinated...

Donna laughed. A sweet, welcome sound that mellowed both their raging hormones with dissipating their desires. Carl also laughed at their teenager-like awkwardness.

"It's always so easy in the movies..." Donna giggled.

"I know." Carl chuckled back. "Maybe we'd better undress ourselves, or we'll be here all night..." Donna blinked - then grinned wickedly. "Speaking of 'night' - your backyard is walled off, isn't it?" "Yeah..." Carl said, frowning at the change in direction... and then grinning as he got her drift.

Rising from the couch like a couple of eager teenagers, they hurried towards the back door of the house, shucking their clothes as they went. By the time they emerged from the kitchen door into the silvery light of the full moon, they were naked, their bodies turned to quicksilver under the celestial satellite.

"You'll have to catch me first...!" Donna said, tossing her bra aside into the bushes as her firm, powerful body darted across the lawn, mingling with the shadows the trees and shrubs of the yard provided. She felt young...

No - she felt like everything was new again, which for her it was. This is the life she wanted, the reward she'd hoped for, and the knowledge of where this would lead would only made it that more wonderfully deliciously. She ran through the yard, trying to avoid Carl...

...but not too hard. It wasn't long at all before she squealed in startled delight as he slipped from behind a tree and wrapped one muscular arm around her waist, sending them both sprawling to the lawn in a delightful tangle of bare, warm flesh.

Slowly, Donna's giggling tapered off, and she looked up at where Carl loomed over her, grinning in the silver light of the moon.

"Now..." She whispered, spreading her arms and legs invitingly. "Take me now..."

"Donna..." He whispered, caressing her bare stomach up to one full, globe-like breast, his hand gently but firmly grasping the full breast and making her gasp in pleasure. "i.. I started to fall in love with you when I was a woman and you a man - and now I think... No. No - I know. Donna - I love you."

"I love you too..." Donna whispered - and then she cried out in soft pleasure as his hard, throbbing manhood slid tenderly yet firmly deep into the welcoming recesses of her new womanhood, moist and ready for his throbbing organ, enfolding it like a fine leather glove would fit the hand it was made for.

"Yes...!" She moaned with passion as he buried himself in her, as if they were made to fit together. With rising passion, they began to move as one, their mingled cries of passion increasing in volume and frequency even as they lost coherency, their bodies rocking back and forth on the grass in steadily increasing rhythm.

Their rhythm and sound increased to a fever pleasure, pleasure like neither had ever felt before thrumming through their bodies as they moved in passionate embrace towards orgasm...

...and reached it, twin screams of orgasmic pleasure splitting the night as they collapsed into each other's loving embrace.

* * * * *

"What the hell...?" Sergeant Roger Gilbreth said, listening to the fading echoes of the scream. His dark uniform barely visible in the night, the police officer looked around, trying to pinpoint the origin of the noise.

"Uh Probably an open window." His rookie partner, Corporal Linda Slobowski said, glad that the darkness hid the blush she felt coloring her fair skin, her one point of pride in a body she felt was too mannish. It was one of the reasons she'd joined the police force - being rather blocky and thick-boned, even muscular, she didn't feel all that attractive as a woman, awkward and uncomfortable around men, especially handsome ones...

...like her partner, though she tried very hard not to think about that. "Uh - a bedroom window, if you know what I mean" She added.

Roger grunted. "Well - we should probably check it out, just in case." Taking the lead, he moved toward what he thought the source was. It wasn't long before he realized that the only possible source was the somewhat spooky old house on the corner.

With his partner in tow, he approached the front door of the house - and found it wide open, light spilling out of the doorway. It was unusual enough to find any house's door wide open in the middle of the night, and doubly so in such a run-down and dangerous area. Sharing a look with Linda, he led the way into the house.

"Hello ?" he called. "I'm a police officer. Is anybody home?" the sprawling, soundly-built old home seemed to soak up the words only a few feet beyond him, leaving the house in dead silence as he shared another look with his partner and gestured at her to follow him.

* * * * *

Her chant rising to a crescendo, Eloise finished her spell - then slumped, breathing hard and barely able to hear anything through the pulse thundering in her ears.

She'd never realized just how complicated casting a spell was 'the other way', and her estimation of Cassandra went up another few notches.

Hopefully, it was 'Cassandra' again. She'd found a spell that, while not perfect, was as good as she could hope for. If everything had worked, Don was once again male, and Cassandra female. Oh, they wouldn't be the same as they were originally, since it was basically a type of gender-change spell, but it should have been enough... assuming that the side-effects of the spell hadn't screwed anything up. After all, this particular spell was supposed to be a 'curse', and she'd bent it to her own purposes.

Well, the only way to find out was to go take a look. If nothing else, the spell caused a few minutes of paralysis as it took full effect - if she hurried, she could catch them in the final stages of the change.

Taking a deep breath, she hurried down the back steps, planning to cut through the kitchen and into the living room, hoping to see...

She never got that far. Instead, she came skidding to a halt, mouth dropping open in shock as she stared at Donna and Carl coming in the back door, naked as jaybirds. They were holding hands, and looking into each other's eyes with what could only be love.

"Eloise..." Carl said, smiling warmly. "I know you're worried, but trust us - things turned out for the best."

"Yes," Donna agreed. "this is more than I could ever have hoped for. I don't need a reward - I've found love, and that's all anybody could ever ask, isn't it?"

Eloise looked at them - and slowly relaxed. "Well. I won't say I don't find it a little strange - but if you're both truly happy, then so am I." She laughed a little. "It's a good thing I didn't know that you'd left the living room, though - otherwise, I might have screwed up your happiness, and I guess I'd hate myself for that if I'd succeeded."

"Huh?" Carl asked, confused.

Eloise shrugged. "Well, I cast a spell - but I cast it on 'the man and woman in the living room', because that's where I thought you..."

Suddenly, a high-pitched scream ripped through the air, and the three of them shared a startled look at how close - and loud - the feminine scream had been. Turning as one, they dashed through the kitchen and dining room to the living room, coming to a screeching halt in the doorway.

A very confused man was standing in the middle of the room, his body rippling with bulging muscles. Collapsed in his arms was the body of a very buxom blonde woman, obviously the one who'd screamed - just before fainting.

Both were wearing very ill-fitting police uniforms, ripped mostly asunder by the force of their bodies transformations.

"Roger's a woman..." The man said, in a numb tone. "And I.. I'm a... a..."

'He' never finished the sentence. Instead, his eyes rolled back, and he tumbled to the ground, insensate, his newly-feminine partner landing across his waist.

In the resulting silence, the three still-standing individuals in the doorway shared a long, long look.

"Eloise..." Carl said, slowly. "Please - tell me that you didn't use the spell on page one-fifty-two of 'Goret's Phantasmal'."

Eloise swallowed and slowly nodded. Carl sighed and closed her eyes, lowering her head.

Donna, confused, looked at the two of them, then glanced over at the two cops collapsed on the floor.

The tall, incredibly muscular, and almost offensively well-endowed male one, and the tall, slender, huge-breasted female one. The ones who looked exactly like Donna and Carl.

"Oh, boy..." Donna said, slowly. "This... might be a problem..."

The End

BACK TO FUN ZONE

SUMMARY: Two scientists discover a strange artifact which emits radioactive energy and turns them into two sensuous woman who must escape others who want the treasure.

The Artifact

By Gunslinger

Despite three layers of thickly branched trees blocking out the sullen sky above, at least some of the tremendous downpour reached the green floor of the jungle, water falling in columns and patches wherever it could find gravity's power beating the haphazard placement of branches, leaves and vines. It was as if the rain were a sentient creature, determined to soak anything that lay under the scope of the dark, laden clouds that blocked the sun.

In at least one part of the jungle, however, the rain was stymied by a large tarp strung on a series of aluminum poles. In the humid protection of the make-shift tent, two unshaven men worked at a trench dug into the fertile soil, stripped to waist to receive the maximum benefit of the relative coolness of the daily rainfall.

With a soft groan, Carl stood straight. With a grimace, he placed his hands on his waist and arched backwards, trying to relieve the muscles that had been strained by his meticulous digging in the trench. Hauling himself out of the trench, the rangy auburn-haired archeologist walked over to a large Coleman cooler, keeping a careful watch for snakes.

"Hey, Lee - heads up." Carl called, lobbing an cool can of Coke towards the trench.

It was almost comical. Knowing Carl as well as he did, Lee popped up quickly, hands coming up even as his eyes searched for the can, sure to be in flight already.

It was. This time, Lee managed to catch the red-and-white projectile. Holding it, Lee climbed from the trench, his golden skin smeared with dirt and debris, and slumped with a sigh to a pile of tailings. Ostensibly pointed the can in Carl's direction, the Asian-American popped the top, releasing a spray of foam.

"Nice catch." Carl congratulated his colleague, slumping on top of the cooler. "You're getting better."

"Thanks... I think." Lee replied. "I still owe you for all those times I 'caught' it with my forehead, though." A flash of his white teeth revealed Lee's amiable nature.

"Hell with that - we're even." Carl retorted. "You made me eat that slop you call food, 'member?"

The tall, slender Asian laughed. He might have been Dr. Lee Wazakuzi, the second youngest person to graduate from Brownell, and a 'whiz kid' in both archeology and computer operations, but he'd be the first to admit that he couldn't cook worth a damn.

"Okay," Lee capitulated. "We're even. But any more Coke-can bombardments, and you'll have to eat my world-infamous Chili."

Dr. Carl Lauder - the youngest to graduate from Brownell - made a theatrical grimace. "Whoa - I think that's forbidden by the Geneva Convention."

"Hey!" Lee protested. "Nobody's ever died from eating it!" He paused for a second, then added. "Sick, sure - but no deaths."

The two men were in week five of a twelve-week dig in the heart of the South American jungle, and Carl was still amazed by his partner's unflagging good humor, even in regards to his own deficiencies. Lee had one of the quirkiest senses of humor

Carl had ever seen - which was a blessing, as Carl was a little 'eccentric' himself. A common side-effect to genius, as Lee had 'assured' him after being caught by Carl's first practical joke.

Finishing his Coke, Lee tossed it into the garbage pile. As Carl watched, open mouthed, his slender, golden-skinned companion held his nose shut and, imitating a scuba diver, rolled backwards off the tailing and into the trench. There was a muffled thud, and a less muffled curse, as he came down on one of the supports keeping the sides of the trench in place. There was a brief crack, then a soft, sliding sound.

Shaking his head, Carl trotted over. "Hey, you okay?"

"I think I broke my dignity." Lee reassured Carl with a smile, standing and dusting himself off. The wall of the trench had collapsed, coating him with the rich, dark earth of the jungle.

"That, and the supports. It's going to take a good..." Carl broke off, his eyes sweeping over the collapsed section of the trench. "What's that?"

As Carl jumped down beside him, Lee was already turning to where Carl had pointed, his smooth forehead wrinkling slightly as he caught sight of the same thing Carl had.

"If that is what I think it is - then there's no way it could be what I think it is." Lee said.

Despite the inherent contradictions of the comment, Carl knew exactly what Lee meant. He shook his head, equally befuddled. "Well - let's dig it out and find out."

The two men picked up the smaller trowels and began to excavate the blocky object with a sense of unreality. The dull sounds the steel blades made when they hit the object, the cool feel of it under their hands as they brushed it off and lifted it down - all verified the objects reality - yet, logically, it shouldn't be where it was.

Lee grunted as they placed - dropped - it to the floor of the trench. "God, it's heavy." Carl nodded. "Yeah - so I guess it is what it looks like it is."

Lee frowned. "Yeah - but what the hell is a chest made of lead doing way out here, six feet under?"

Carl just shrugged, as bemused as Lee was. "I don't know. Come on - let's get it topside and have a look."

"Oh, my aching back..." Lee complained, grasping the corroded steel handle on his end. Thankfully, it was still strong enough to let the two men manhandle the two-foot long, excessively weighty chest out of the hole. After a brief break to rest, they climbed out and knelt beside the chest, eyeing it with distrust.

"Spanish. Sixteenth Century, or thereabouts." Carl finally said - more to break the silence than anything else.

Lee grunted agreement. "Definitely Spanish design - but it should be iron - or gold leafed. Why lead?"

"Good question. Maybe it was supposed to be gold-leafed, and they used lead so it would feel like solid gold. Here's a better one - why did some long-dead Spaniards bury a lead chest in the middle of the jungle?"

Lee snorted a laugh. When Carl glanced over questioningly, the Asian shrugged. "Sorry - I just had a mental image of a bunch of Zombie Conquistadors digging a hole."

Carl smirked. "Now there's a thought." He regarded the box. "So... Now what?"

Lee reached out and tapped the corroded lock holding the box shut. At the touch of his hand, scales of rust dropped away. "Well, I don't think this is going to stop us, if we want to open it."

Running his hand through his unkempt mop of reddish-brown hair, Carl frowned - then shrugged. "Yeah. Okay - let's see what's inside."

Suiting action to words, the archeologist slid the handle of his trowel into the space between the hasp and the body of then four hundred year old lock and, with one swift jerk, snapped the lumps of rust inside the lock that were posing as tumblers. Working the rusted piece of metal from the eyelet in the lid, Carl grabbed the top of the chest and lifted the heavy lid, revealing...

"Good God Almighty." Carl breathed.

"And the horse he rode in on." Lee agreed, staring into the interior of the chest.

Even in the dim light, the gold doubloons glinted with a warm, mellow light. Scattered in among the large, golden disks, pieces of silver and a smattering of jewels shone. A few golden and silver pieces of jewelry were scattered through the mix, overshadowing...

"What the hell is that?" Lee asked. Reaching forward, he dug into the gleaming trove, retrieving a small chunk of metallic ore, holding it up for inspection.

Carl did likewise. Mixed in with the wealth, a good ten percent of what lay in the chest had to be the odd, blackish metal ore. It lay in Carl's hand, oddly weighty for its size.

Lee was looking at his chunk with a critical eye. "I don't think this is its natural color - I think it's oxidized." The Asian said, turning the piece over in his hand.

Looking closer at the chunk he held, Carl scratched a nail across the surface. Some of the blackish- purple outer layer thinned, just enough. It was some sort of tarnish.

"But what metal tarnishes this color?" Carl mused aloud, frowning. "Silver goes black... it's too heavy for silver anyway. Feels like it's lead, or gold - but neither tarnish..."

"Hold on - let me get my lap-top." Lee said. Putting his chunk on top of the pile of glittering coins, the archeologist trotted over to the pile of equipment beside their tents, and extracted his small yet powerful computer. Flipping the screen up, Lee turned the computer on.

Nothing happened.

Lee punched the button twice more, but the screen stubbornly stayed dead.

"Confucius say - Computer no work, check battery, jerk." Lee muttered to himself as he changed the battery for one of the many spares he'd brought.

Still nothing. Three more battery changes proved that it wasn't a fluke. "What's up?" Carl asked, having noticed the lengthy delay.

"The computer's dead." Lee replied. Putting the useless collection of plastic, glass and metal aside, he turned towards the radio. "I guess we'll just have to call home and ask them for some long- distance analysis."

He reached out and flicked the power switch to the large transmitter.

With a yelp, the slender man yanked his hand back as the set crackled. The speaker howled for a second as electricity arced, then the set went permanently silent, accompanied by the distinct odor of fried electronics.

"Shit!" Carl swore. "You okay?" "Uh, Carl?"

The odd tone of voice got Carl's full and undivided attention. "Yeah?" "What affects electronic components like this?"

Carl frowned. "Moisture? God knows it's humid enough..." He stumbled to a stop, knowing that their equipment had been designed for the humidity of the rain-forest. Instead, he watched as Lee opened an equipment box that, until now, had been untouched. Lifting out the device inside the padded container, the Asian flicked a switch and began waving a wand-like protrusion over himself and Carl.

Almost immediately, the Geiger counter began to chatter angrily.

The two archeologists stared at each other - then Carl swore and ran back to the chest. With a violent motion, he slammed the lead lid shut, then backed away from the box as if it were a dangerous animal, waiting to strike.

"Well..." Lee said. "That would explain it being buried in a remote location."

For a second, Carl wondered where it would have come from - a meteorite, maybe? But that wasn't important, not right now, and he pushed the thought away. "How... how much exposure do you think we got?"

Lee shrugged. "The counter's graduated for several different freqs of radiation, and I don't know all the dosage levels for them." He took a deep breath, then - incredibly - smiled. "Feel like a stroll in the rain?"

Carl blinked. "Huh?"

"Well, with the radio dead, calling for help - or the 'copter - is out of the question. The nearest hospital is a good ways thataway..."

Carl nodded, bowing to the unpleasant reality. "Okay - let's take only what we need."

Though neither said it, both archeologists added the mental addendum "...and hope we make it."

Then, to Carl's amazement, Lee did the bravest thing Carl had ever seen. Knowing what was inside the box, the Asian still didn't hesitate as he opened the box and quickly but methodically extracted enough of the gold coins to fill a sock he'd grabbed.

"What are you doing?" Carl asked as Lee closed the lid to the chest again.

The Asian shrugged, and waved the wand of the Geiger counter over the bag. There was almost no chatter from the sensitive counter.

"Gold doesn't irradiate easily. So, the coins are safe enough - and it never hurts to have something extra to bargain with, 'specially in a strange country."

Carl had to admit it was a good idea - they hadn't exactly brought a lot of cash with them on their dig, and if they needed money...

But right now, the russet-haired archeologist wasn't sure that they'd have a chance to spend any money ever again.

* * * * *

"Wait - I... " Carl paused to take a deep breath. "...I need to take a break."

Lee looked back, then nodded. Lowering the machete, the slender man removed his pack and tossed it on the ground, taking a seat on it. "Sure - I could use one too."

Carl wanted to throttle the Asia. They'd been walking for two and a half hours now, and Carl was wiped. Some of it was understandable - the heat and humidity, the twenty-minute turns spend breaking the trail with the machete, the heavy backpacks - but some of it was less attributable, and more disturbing. Like the all over, deep seated itching, that seemed to extend right into his bones. Or the strange aches, the mild nausea... Strangest of all, the way his shoes seemed to be fitting worse and worse as time went on.

Yet, aside from the occasional facial twitch, the good-humored Asian seemed unaffected. Oh, he was feeling it just as bad as Carl was, but he simply wasn't showing it - and his imperturbable nature was driving Carl nuts.

"Well..." Carl said, getting his breath back. "I'm going to use the bushes while we're stopped." One of the things that even the inscrutably good natured Lee couldn't hide was the uproar in their bowels - they took breaks for bathroom stops fairly often.

Trotting behind a bush, Carl undid his belt. Despite the heat, both archeologists wore full-length pants, to ward off the mosquitoes, and high, hard-leather hiking boots to guard against snakes. It was said there was a hundred different varieties of snake in this jungle. Ninety-nine were poisonous.

The hundred would eat your ass whole. Lowering his pants, Carl looked down...

...then, with a muffled, breathless shriek, stood bolt upright. Pulling his pants back up, he stepped back into the trail, Lee already on his feet, his normally placid face creased with worry.

"What? What is it?" The Asian asked.

"Um..." Carl said, his hands shaking. "Maybe you should... take stock of yourself." Frowning, Lee stepped into the bushes. He reemerged a second later.

"Well?"

Lee sighed. "Well - loss of hair is one of the signs of radiation poisoning. " He agreed. " So far, we haven't lost any hair on our heads - but all my body hair has loosened, and fallen out."

Then, amazingly, the Asian smiled. "Look at the bright side..." Lee said. He ran his hand over his face, and in seconds the weeks-old stubble had fallen out, leaving his face smooth. "Shaving just got a hell of a lot easier."

Carl gaped at Lee. "How can you joke about this?" He asked, shocked. "Besides - what about the...?"

"Reduction in genitalia size?" Lee finished, expressionless. "If it's about the same for you, we're about half our normal size. I don't know enough about radiation to explain it." He shrugged. "As for joking - would you rather I panic?"

"Yes!" Carl said - then, sheepishly, smiled wryly. "No. I'm sorry - you're right. It's just that, well..."

"I know." Lee assured him. "After all, I'm going through it too - humor is just how I deal with it." He leaned down and shouldered his pack, then handed the machete to Carl. "Your turn."

Taking the bladed instrument, Carl took the lead and began hacking through the foliage, arms complaining immediately. He was a remarkably fit man - for field work, you had to be - but this was tiring him faster than he'd thought possible - an effect of the radiation, he was sure.

That started him worrying at the speed that his body seemed to be breaking down. What if they didn't find a road before they got too weak? If they'd stayed at the camp, at least the searchers would know where to look...

Lost in his dismal thoughts, Carl's attention wasn't on his work, and he cursed as his arm brushed one of the thorny branches that sometimes intertwined with the other foliage. The thorns cut across his long-sleeve khaki shirt and scored his flesh.

"Ouch - that looks painful." Lee remarked. "Here, let me get some lemon juice for that..."

"Very fun, wise-ass." Carl retorted out of habit. He undid the button on the sleeve and rolled it up for a better look...

"What the hell?"

The two men stared at Carl's arm. Where sinewy muscle should have been, the arm was smooth and softly rounded, completely devoid of body hair and the tight muscularity it should have had. It didn't look wasted or slack - in fact, his arm was smooth and healthy, with soft contours, aside from the shallow scratches of the thorns.

"I... it looks..." Carl said, frowning. "Lee - does this make any sense to you?"

The Asian shook his head. "Me no unnerstand, kemosabe." He said. "Maybe that's not even your arm - somebody might have switched it when we weren't looking."

Carl shout Lee an irritated look, bordering on angry - then stopped. "When?" He asked.

Lee shrugged. "Ten minutes ago. I was hot, so..."

Carl shook his head, looking at the arms protruding from Lee's rolled sleeves. Like his own, the once sinewy arms were soft, smooth, and gently - gracefully - proportioned. Only now did Carl really, really look at the hands that he was gripping the machete with, noticing the way they were slimmer, less angular, with nails that were somewhat longer than...

Something that had been in the back of his head, trying to get out but being forced back by denial, finally came forward in Carl's mind as he looked at his friend, then back down at himself. The shirts they wore had become baggy on their frames - more so on Lee than on him, but still quite noticeable. But they weren't evenly baggy - they were slightly tighter across the chest, and looser at the waist.

"Lee... we're shorter." Carl said, slowly.

"Well, I definitely am - you've probably lost less than an inch." Lee agreed, having noticed some time earlier. Just as he'd noticed Carl's next point.

"We're thinner, too."

Lee shrugged. "Well - we're more slender. It's not like we're gaunt, or underfed - it's as if our body shape is different, more slender."

Dropping the machete, Carl moved like a man in a dream as his fingers rose towards the buttons on his khaki shirt.

Lee lifted a hand. "Uh, Carl? I don't think you're going to like "

Carl hesitated, then unbuttoned his shirt and opened it.

Riding on his chest were two small mounds of flesh, tipped with larger, slightly lighter colored nipples. Although small, there was no more denying what he'd been trying - subconsciously - to ignore.

He had tits. Woman's breasts, about an A-cup.

Still stunned, Carl slid a hand into his pants, only now admitting that they were fitting too loose in the waist, but actually tightening across the hips and ass. When his hand slid across an almost perfectly smooth crotch, with only a slight bulge of flesh where his cock and balls should be, he gasped.

Then, yanking his hand away, he whirled on Lee, feeling the humid air move across his bared, enlarged nipples.

"Why didn't you say something?" He asked, enraged. "My good - we're turning into... into " He clenched his fists, unable to give voice to the nightmare. "And you didn't say anything!" "What good would it have done?" Lee asked, calmly.

That derailed Carl a little. "What?"

Lee shrugged. "There's nothing we can do about it, not right now. They say ignorance is bliss - so I decided to let you have all the bliss you could."

Carl's anger faded as he realized that Lee was right. He had had an extra twenty minutes or so of denial in a situation that he had no power to alter - it wasn't something to blow up at Lee over.

Still...

Carl slowly sank to the dank earth, his eyes taking on a tortured look as he finally accepted the impossibility that was happening to him. The way his body was changing left no room for doubt.

Somehow, he was turning into a woman.

Looking down at the perky mounds rising from his now hairless chest, Carl began to sob 'Oh God' over and over again, rocking back and forth on his firmer, fuller - more feminine ass.

"Carl! Snap out of it, buddy!" Lee said, standing over his partner.

For a moment, Lee didn't think the auburn-haired man had heard, then Carl turned an anguished face up to his shorter, slimmer companion.

"Lee - we're turning into women! Oh merciful God - how can this happen? Why?"

Lee's face became commiserate. "Carl - I don't know how or why, except that it must be some strange sort or radiation mutation in our DNA. But I can tell you one thing "

Carl looked into Lee's eyes, which seemed larger and darker in his altering face. "What?" "We'll never rag women about PMS again." Lee said solemnly.

For a second, Carl just stared at his friend. "Huh?"

Lee smiled, his teeth framed by lips that were fuller than they'd been that morning. "Hey, man - I know how you feel. But face it - it's not the end of the world."

Carl gaped at his friend. "But women, Lee!" He said, as if it were akin to saying water was wet.

Lee shrugged. "Yeah - women. But Carl, more'n half the world's born female, and you don't see them going on about it, do you? The way I figure, we were sure we were going to die - now, we're going to live. Sure, maybe it'll be as women, at least for a while - but can you honestly tell me that this is - literally, mind you - a 'fate worse then death'?"

Carl thought about that one. His instinctive reaction was one of horror and shame that he was becoming 'the weaker sex'. That he was loosing his manhood, that which had defined his life so far.

But he was still alive, and looked like he would be for some time. More - he was still healthy, albeit becoming a healthy woman - this wasn't an illness, a debilitating radiation sickness. It was a change - one that wouldn't be easy to deal with. But compared to death...

"I I guess you're right." Carl admitted, finally. "I know, intellectually, that it isn't really a living hell - but emotionally "

Lee nodded. "I know, Carl - but if you don't give up, we can get back to the States - where there might be a chance to reverse it. Hell, we tell some Chief Bottle Washer at Hawkings or Pasadena Bio, they come out here and grab the stuff for study "

Carl nodded, grasping onto that hope like a drowning man would grasp a rescue line. No matter what happened, no matter what was in store for him, it wouldn't be improved by sitting her crying. Feeling embarrassed at his collapse, Carl stood, buttoning his shirt over the hateful sight of his budding endowments.

"That's more like it." Lee approved. "Come on, we have some ground to cover before nightfall."

Taking a deep breath, Carl squared his slimming shoulders, rucked up his pack, and followed his friend as he set off into the jungle once again - and into an unknown future that neither had ever foreseen.

* * * * *

Four hours, fifty-seven minutes later, the bushes at the side of a minor Brazilian highway rustled, and two disheveled figures emerged from the foliage, streaked with sweat.

The one in the lead was Asian. She was somewhat taller than average for an Asian woman, but not terribly so. She was slender of build, although her features and limbs were vaguely masculine, a little too square and prominent. A shaggy, shoulder-length mop of dark, sweat-matted hair framed her cheerful-looking face, and the ill-fitting men's clothing she wore hid her figure from view, with the exception of a pair of breasts - somewhere in the C-to-D-cup range - pressing against the khaki material. A large backpack rode on her shoulder, and - oddly - her tightly-laced boots seemed ready to fall off her small feet.

Behind her was a taller woman. Dressed much like her companion, the tanned Caucasian woman had a slightly shorter mop of russet hair framing a face that was downcast and somewhat tragic. Her rumpled shirt fit better than her companions, fitting well over her smaller bust, but her pants were tighter across her more curvaceous hips and derriere. Like her companion, she too was a little too masculine to approach beautiful - not that any woman, dressed like them and as sweaty and dirty as they were, would ever be overly attractive.

"Well - no more cutting through jungle." Lee said, letting go of the machete and flexing on slender, dainty hand. As their figures had continued to alter, it had been more and more of an effort to make headway.

"Yeah." Carl agreed, listlessly. He winced at the sound of his own voice. Although still fairly deep, it was now a feminine voice - although he consoled himself that it wasn't as high and vaguely 'powerless' as Lee's had become. Uncomfortably, Carl rolled his much slimmer shoulders and plucked awkwardly at his khaki shirt. Soaked with sweat, it molded to his now B or C cup breasts, outlining them in such a way that Carla was constantly reminded of them. Not that he could forget, he thought sourly. Now they were large enough to move with every step he took, jiggling slightly in a very... distracting manner.

"So - now what?" Carl asked. "Pick a direction and start walking?"

"I don't think so." Lee said with a grin. "We seem to be catching a break."

Carl followed his friend's pointing finger and saw an aging but well-maintained Citroen truck coming towards them. Lee began waving, and the vehicle agreeably slowed, pulling to a stop near them.

The driver's door popped out and a small, sturdy man with dark eyes and expressive Latin lips that seemed to be locked in a perpetual cheerful grin hopped out. Dressed in faded but clean clothes and with his hair slicked back beneath a company cap, the driver somehow exuded a sense of cheerful, unassuming competence.

"Buenos días." The driver's etched grin widened as he tipped his hat slightly in their direction.

"Por favor, señor, necesito su ayuda." Lee said, and Carl tuned out of the conversation. Aside from ordering a Taco Bell Combo, Carl's Spanish was limited to reading archaic pre-seventeenth-century Spanish. While Lee would never be mistaking for a native speaker, at least his stilted Spanish was understandable - and, more importantly, he could understand the answers he got.

After a couple of minutes of slow conversation, Lee turned to Carl with a smile.

"We're in luck. Hernandez... " The driver smiled widely at the mention of his name "...is heading in the wrong direction, but he says there's a village about six miles back where we can catch a bus to Cuiada. Not only has he offered to give us money for the fare, he's offered us the pick of his cargo."

"What's that?" Carl asked, sourly. "Lemons? Oh, no, I know - tampons, right?"

Hernandez might not have spoken English, but he was smart enough to realize the thrust of Carl's question. He patted the side of the truck and pointed at Carl's feet.

"Zapatos." Hernandez said, making a 'come hither' gesture as he moved towards the back of the truck.

Carl followed a grinning Lee, and discovered that the bonanza was a welcome one, indeed - within a couple of minutes, the two altered men found themselves wearing brand-new name-brand cross- trainers. Ones that fit their now-smaller feet.

As the driver held out a wad of cash for the fare, the two archeologists looked at each other, having the same thought at the same time. They'd hoped for some assistance, but this short, friendly Brazilian was performing above and beyond the expected.

"Well?"

Carl nodded. "Go ahead."

As Carl took the money from the man's work-worn hand, Lee rooted through his bag and extract a single, glittering item.

Hernandez's eyes widened as Lee pressed the heavy doubloon into his swarthy palm. For a moment he stared at it, amazed, then hesitantly lifted it and bit lightly into the coin.

When it came away, he eyes the imprint it had taken easily. Not only had it been ductile enough, the indents showed no sign of a baser metal, such as lead, beneath a gilded coating. Eyes wide, the Brazilian thanked the two 'men' profusely. For him, a change to fulfill his duty as a good Christian - at a small but acceptable price - had resulted in a good-sized reward. For the devout Catholic, it was reinforcement of all the lessons he'd learned in church about 'bread cast upon the waters'.

As they watched the man climb back into his vehicle and pull away - still thanking them - the two friends managed to forget, for a brief moment, their own plight and bask in the pleasure that they'd managed to bring to such a deserving man.

Then, as the dust of Hernandez's departure settled around them, they returned to the skewed reality they found themselves in. With a suffering look, Carl settled his pack more firmly on his shoulders, the turned and began to trudge down the sun-baked road, head down.

Without a word Lee fell into step beside his moody companion, and they walked onwards towards the village in the distance, and it's connection to the resources of the larger cities beyond.

* * * * *

"Okay - we'll spend the night here."

Carl watched, open mouthed, as Lee dropped his back-pack in the light growth a little behind the village and out of sight of the population of the shabby settlement.

"What... Lee, the village might not be much, but... food. A bed, maybe. Why in God's name would we..."

"Because you don't have a cunt, sister mine." The answer stopped Carl dead.

Lee smiled at his friend's confusion. "Look - we're not finished changing, and we can't afford to spend time in public yet. How do you think people would react if we spent the night, and woke up in the morning looking different?"

"Uh..."

"Right. So, drop your load and settle down, Carl." Lee frowned. "Oh - that reminds me. To avoid confusion, I gave our names to Hernandez as 'Lei' and 'Carla' - we might as well use those for now, to avoid awkward questions."

Carl frowned, but had to admit the logic. "Okay. I guess so."

Lee winged. "Good. So, Carla - you want the tinned beef, or the tinned beef for dinner?"

And despite everything, Carl was amazed to find a hint of humor had managed to survive in him, too. "No way, buddy - this whole 'being changed into a woman' thing is bad enough. I'm not putting up with your cooking too."

Lee - Lei - laughed. "Fair enough. Let's see what you can do with tinned beef."

After a quick dinner cooked over a can of Sterno, the two friends prepared for the nights, tying a tarp to four trees, with a fallen branch in the center as a support post. They unrolled their sleeping bags, light summer-weight ones with the necessary mosquito netting.

Grimacing slightly, Carl began to undress for bed. He was dealing with what was happening to him - but it was not enjoyable, and he didn't particularly want to see his altered body in all it's glory.

Naked, he forced himself to look at his mostly feminine body. He could already pass as a woman, but his crotch was still not fully formed, indicating there was still more to come. In place of genitalia, his crotch was smooth and sexless, with only a slight indentation where - he shuddered at the thought - there would probably be a vagina by morning.

Sighing, Carl brushed his lengthening auburn hair back and slid into his sleeping bag and pulled the mosquito netting in place.

Laying in the bag, Carl tried to get comfortable - but discovered a problem. No matter where he put his hands, it felt like he was fondling a woman.

He tried with his hands at his side, but then they were sitting on a smooth, feminine outer thigh. Higher, and they rested on a soft, slender waist. Crossing his arms just pressed them against a pair of firm, soft breasts and the sensitive flesh transmitted the feeling of being touched...

Almost without thinking about it, Carl cupped his new tits, feeling their warmth, their texture. He squeezed lightly, biting at his fuller lower lip at the sensation created by the action. Then, closing his eyes, he began to lightly fondle his new tits, pausing now and then to lightly squeeze the now- engorged, feminine nipples tipping the breasts. Part of him found what he was doing slightly perverted - but in a day gone so horribly wrong, he was willing to accept any pleasure he could, even if it did come from something that he didn't even want to have - a pair of firm, round breasts.

Still fondling his new tits with his increasingly delicate hands, Carl finally drifted off into a deep, dreamless sleep.

* * * * *

The morning sun rose over the plains and hills of central Brazil, causing mist to rise in the valleys and jungle floor.

In a grove of low trees, under a spread tarpaulin, a figure stirred. Groggily, it unzipped the sleeping back that encased it and slowly sat up.

The woman was of about average height. A massive mane of auburn hair, tangled and mussed by sleep, framed her face. Her full, soft lips split wide in a yawn, and her dark eyes were still heavy with sleep.

She stretched, her long, slender arms rising above her head as she used her long, sexy legs to kick the sleeping bag aside. Swiveling on her firm, full ass, the woman drew her legs upwards, chilled by the mist...

...until her knees hit her massive, firm, large-nippled breasts. Her eyes flew open, and she gaped down at the massive, medicine-ball-sized breasts thrust from her slender ribcage. One hand flew downwards, and her dainty, slender hand lightly touched the folds of her vagina.

She screamed - a strangled, weak sound that was enough to rouse the other figure under the tarp.

The second sleeping bag slid open, revealing an oriental woman. She was tiny, with the slender hips and waist and dainty features expected of an Asian woman, so fine and delicate in every way, from her bow-like lips to her long mane of silky black hair. The only thing on her tiny, slender body that was out of proportion was the massive, golden globes of breast flesh thrust out from her tiny ribcage.

Quantitatively, they were about the same size as the russet-haired woman's breasts - but on a much more diminutive frame, making them look absolute gigantic on her otherwise petite figure.

"Lee!" Carl cried - then clapped her hands over her mouth.

The voice that had emerged had been a rich, feminine contralto, with absolutely no resemblance to her old, masculine voice.

"Don't panic, Carla." Lei said, soothingly - and her voice was also completely dissimilar, a high pitched soprano that was denied any real strength by the tiny size of her diaphragm.

"Don't panic?" Carla demanded, gesturing downwards. "Look at these... things. They're huge!" Lei laughed. "You call those tits huge? Look at these." She lifted her own massive tits up a bit, and Carla realized that she wasn't the only one who'd been over-endowed during the night. The sight of her even-more-busty friend dealing with her massive, gravity defying boobs was enough to get Carla to calm down a bit.

"You're right - I'm sorry." Carla said, slumping. "But this is all too weird. I mean - being turned into a woman is bad enough. But why... this?" She waved a slender, feminine hand at her massive new bosom.

"I don't know. Probably due to the level of exposure we got, or something." Lei said as she began to gather up her clothes. "Looks like it's going to be a hot one today, huh?"

Carla gaped at her friend. "How can you be so calm?" She asked Lei - but it was more of a plea to understand than an accusation. Carla envied Lei's ability to keep and even keel through anything, and wished she knew her secret.

Lei shrugged, doing truly interesting things to her massive new tits. "Dunno."

Carla watched as Lei used the machete to turn the khaki pants into a pair of shorts, and to remove the sleeves of the shirt. It helped a bit, but the clothes still fit poorly on her tiny frame when she pulled them on.

Taking a deep, calming breath, Carla followed suit, trimming her clothes to make them as comfortable as possible. They clothing was now skin-tight across her wide, womanly hips, flat crotch, full, sexy ass and huge tits, but loose on her slender waist. Still, she could get everything on - another inch anywhere, and the clothing would have been impossible to fasten, leaving her naked.

"Now you see why I insisted we don't go into the village." Lei said with a grin. "Can you imagine their reactions if we had of?"

Carla had to grin wryly at the thought. "We'd have been burned for witchcraft or something." She agreed, staring down at where her shirt was tented over her massive new tits. Even living through the experience, it was hard to accept. If anyone was to have seen any of their strange plight...

Shaking her head, Carla finished struggling into her clothes, then sat down to put on her shoes. Right away, she began to appreciate the problems that were associated with having massive, MMM-cup tits thrust roundly from her chest. She had to sit and draw her knees painfully tight against her huge tits, then lean forward slightly so she could see her feet and tie her shoes.

"Damn." Carla swore - partly due to the trouble that her massive new tits were giving her, but mostly because her feet were even daintier than they were yesterday, and the shoes that had fit so well last night were once more too small - but thankfully, only by a size or so.

She immediately swore again when her massive mane of long, russet hair fell in front of her eyes, obscuring her view. Brushing it back out of her face, the new woman looked around.

"Where's the machete?"

Lei looked up. "I left it back where we met Hernandez. It's frowned upon by the police to walk around with a long, sharp sword-like object. Why?"

Carla sighed. "This damned hair - I was going to hack it off."

Lei smiled, and forced her already high voice up an octave, lisping outrageously as she spoke. "But dahlink, you have absolutely mah-volous hair."

"Not funny." Carla groused - but her full, soft lips curved slightly upwards.

"Hang on - let me give you a hand." Lei said. Digging a comb and some twine from her bag, she moved behind Carla - who couldn't help notice how easily and gracefully she moved. Lei - who had studied martial arts - had always had an almost feline grace in his movements when he was trying to balance, and it came in useful in dealing with her newly-altered center of gravity, but when she moved in such a graceful - hell, sexy - manner, it was hard for Carla to remember that this gorgeous Oriental doll was his friend and colleague.

It got even harder as Lei brushed out and braided Carla's hair. She was directly behind Carla, and the archeologist could feel Lei's huge, firm tits brushing against her back. Carla found herself flushing as a strange warmth spread through her, accompanied by a slight tingle in her crotch. If Lei noticed the slight odor of Carla's first feminine arousal, she tactfully kept silent about it.

After Carla's ass-long mane of hair was neatly done in a complicated braid, Lei turned her attention to brushing out her own massive mane of silky black hair and putting it into a pony tail.

Pulling the long, woven mass of surprisingly heavy hair over her shoulder, Carla looked at the complicated weave Lei had put in.

"Where did you learn to do that?" Carla asked, surprised.

Lei grinned. "Actually, I learned the weave pattern from my Grandfather - it's an old weave done on the handle of Katana swords. But I have experience weaving it into hair, too."

"Oh?" Carla asked, honestly intrigued. Despite Lei's gregarious nature and open demeanor, the Asian rarely spoke of her past for some reason.

"Four sisters - two older, one a fraternal twin, and one younger." Lei explained. Carla blinked. "You have a twin sister?"

Lei laughed. "Well, in age, yes. We looked a lot alike, before - but she doesn't look anything like the way I look now." Lei looked down at her massive tits. "In fact - I think she'd be envious."

Carla cocked her head. "Of more than those monster boobs of yours. I mean - you may not know it, but you're absolutely gorgeous."

"Why - thank you." Lei said, fluttering her long, dark lashes, and Carla blushed. Lei smiled. "You know - you're not exactly ugly either. Here..."

Carla took the mirror that Lei dug out - and gaped, open-mouthed, at the woman who looked back at her.

She was incredibly cute, in a sexy way. Full, sexy lips, a pert nose, and large, dark eyes. Her cheekbones were a little too weak and her jaw a little too long to make her beautiful, but she was definitely cute. Sort of like a cross between Sarah McLachlan and Phoebe Cates, but with fuller lips and incredible, reddish-brown hair.

And tits the size of Montana, of course.

Stunned by the woman she now was, Carla handed the mirror to Lei, who looked at herself in it. She lifted one slender, arched eyebrow at the reflection in the small piece of silvered glass. To Carla's eye, the altered Asian looked stunning, with the defined cheekbones she lacked, a pointed chin, and a smaller, bow-shaped mouth. Combined with the tiny button nose, the huge, dark eyes and the cheerful cast of her new face, Lei could have been the poster girl for a perfect Geisha.

With tits the size of Montana, of course.

"Well, enough admiring myself." Lei said, putting away the mirror. Despite her jocular tone, she seemed slightly shocked - or amazed - at the beautiful woman she'd become.

"Yeah - let's get going and get this over with." Carla agreed.

Packing up their belongings, the two new women headed towards the small village, Lei moving with a natural grace and Carla stomping along behind her.

* * * * *

Lei stepped down from the sagging lower step of the ancient bus and looked around, her now pert nose wrinkling at the faint but ever-present stench of human waste.

"Welcome to lovely Cuiaba." Carla said, joining her co-sufferer. The tall, huge-breasted new woman placed her hands on her hips and stretch backwards. She was discovering one of the banes of having breasts the size - and weight - of medicine balls.

Lei pointed to a sign. "Actually, Cuiaba proper is still four miles up the road. This is the... slums, I guess." She said - still bemusing both of them with her now prototypically 'Japanese-girl' voice, so high and 'weak'. Despite the massive difference in tones, it still managed to convey her good natured acceptance of whatever life threw at her.

Also in the realm of 'massive differences', she seemed less annoyed by the even more massive mass of breast flesh she was lugging around on her otherwise petite frame. Carla couldn't help noticing this with a faint hint of embarrassed envy. Pushing the thought aside, the new woman sighed. "Well, it looks like more walking, I guess."

"Yeah, looks that way. Another hour or so, and we'll be able to rest our weary feet - and backs."

Somehow, the admission that this was affecting Lei made Carla feel better as they set out, their massive new tits bouncing and jiggling annoyingly. Even more annoying was the looks garnered by the people they passed on their way into the city proper - the sight of two massive-breasted women in ill-fitting men's clothing and expensive, brand-new running shoes wasn't exactly an everyday occurrence.

"You know - this feels so strange to say, but... I'm dying to find a bra big enough for these monsters. Their movement of them makes their weight even worse." Carla finally admitted with a wry chuckle as they began to enter the city proper.

Lei smiled. "This, from you? Well, that's the end of an era - I thought you liked women who walked around braless."

"Hey - that's when I never even considered the possibility of being in this... hellish situation." Carla retorted.

Lei cocked one fine eyebrow. 'Oh? I'll tell you what would be hellish - if you had to act, dress, and be exactly the way you'd like a woman who looked like you to be."

Despite everything that had happened, despite the fear and disgust and awe and shame that the transformation had caused, it was Lei's simple remark that stopped her dead.

"Holy shit..." Carla breathed, stunned. "I have been a sexist bastard - haven't I?"

Lei laughed. "No - you've just been a man, my friend. Comes with having testosterone, I think." She placed a tiny hand on Carla's back. "Don't be too hard on yourself - it was only a little harmless fantasizing. Sexist is actually trying to get women to act out you sick, twisted, demeaning fantasies."

"Thanks. I think." Carla said, but found herself thinking an odd thought.

Never, not ever, had she ever considered anything like this happening to her - but now that it had, she had managed to find the one person whose presence allowed her to deal with it without going completely off the deep end. In a situation so bizarre to even accurately express, it was one consolation - and a surprisingly big one, at that.

Having reached the downtown section of Cuiaba, Lei began to ask around, finding a dealer in coins and gold, and finally managed to get vague directions. It took a while, but finally they managed to find the small shop that had been indicated by the passer-by.

When Lei and Carla entered the store, the proprietor came them a long, lewd look over with a greasy smile, letting his eyes linger on their huge tits. Carla was still trying to figure out whether she was more angry than ashamed when Lei launched into business with the narrow-eyed shopkeeper.

The man's eyes lit up at the mention of oro, and he actually managed to drag his eyes away from Lei's enormous bosom as they haggled. When the coins came into view, he all but drooled.

Carla wandered around the shop, looking at the various coins and gold jewelry, more out of boredom than anything else. He wasn't able to follow the haggling, and hoped Lei would get a fair price for the coins.

Finally, they seemed to reach a deal. Lei handed over the coins, which promptly vanished - probably to be sold to 'special' collectors at a huge mark-up. The man then handed Lei a wad of cash, and she gestured at Carla that they were leaving.

"So - how did it go?"

Lei shrugged. "Not bad. We didn't get their true value, but we did all right." Carla nodded. "Good. Then I know what the next step is."

"Oh?"

"Buy some new clothes, then get a hotel room. I'm dying for a bath."

Lei smiled. "Tell you what - let's split up. The owner said there's a hotel two miles that way - the 'Hotel Moderno'. They speak English there, so you won't have any trouble checking in. Get a room under the name 'Carla Lauder', and I'll meet you there after I pick up some 'necessities'."

It sounded good to Carla. Accepting half the cash they'd just received, Carla set out for the hotel.

The desk clerk - a darkly handsome young man - also seemed to have trouble keeping his eyes off of her, Carla found with embarrassment. However, in this man's case, it appeared to be her long, shapely legs and firm ass that kept drawing his gaze. Paying for the room with cash, Carla gratefully escaped to double suite she'd just paid for. Alone, she shed clothes as she crossed the room, and started the tub filling with warm water.

With a sigh, Carla lowered herself into the water, feeling it embrace her altered body. For a few minutes, she merely lay there, letting the warmth and comfort soak in. Then she picked up one of the small bars of soap provided by the hotel and began to wash.

It proved to be an interesting experience.

She started with her arms, which was no big deal - but then she began to soap up her massive, firm tits. Recalling the pleasure that she'd received last night, she couldn't resist the urge to fondle herself as she washed, and was amazed to find that it felt even better today - her huge new tits were even more sensitive, and the massive nipples were so much more sensitive when they became engorged that it was amazing.

It took little time for her to feel that warmth in her crotch, and realize that she was getting really, really turned on by fondling - and by now, sucking - on her massive new tits. She flushed at the sensation, but that didn't make her stop.

In fact, she found herself, almost unconsciously, sliding one hand down her body to her crotch.

Her hand hesitated at her crotch for a second, then Carla - flushing a deep red - began to slide the palm of her hand over her new mound. She bit her lip at the sensation the pressure caused, then, taking a deep breath, slowly slid a finger into the warm wetness of her new cunt.

She gasped at the sharp sensation of pleasure that resulted. She hesitated a second, then began to probe with a slowly pistoning finger, searching for - and finding - the spot where the friction produced the most pleasure.

Closing her eyes, Carla sank back in the tub a bit, one hand fondling one massive breasts, while the other she used to masturbate. The moaned low in the back of her throat as the sensations built on one another, finally culminating in a sharp burst of pleasure that made her gasp.

Blushing furiously, Carla sat upright in the tub.

"What the hell am I doing?" She muttered to herself, then quickly finished washing, trying to ignore the way her soft, supple female body felt under her roaming hands. She had just finished toweling off and was pulling on one of the big, fluffy hotel robes when she heard a knock on the door.

She crossed the room. "Who is it?"

"George Washington" Lei's voice returned, and Carla let her in.

"Here's your stuff." Lei said, handing Carla one of the large, bulging bags she was carrying. "Find something and put it on - I'm going to grab my bath now."

As the tiny-yet-huge-breasted woman padded off to the bathroom, Carla opened her bag and began to sort through the clothing Lei had bought for her.

"What is this - a joke?" She called through the closed door, a frown on her new features. "Nope." Came the high-pitched new voice of her friend, muffled by the intervening door.

"What the hell were you thinking buying this... this... stuff?" Carla demanded, going through the frilly, feminine clothing.

She heard muffled laughter than only served to anger. Then Lei's answer came through the door, and that anger immediately shamed the new woman.

"Take a good look in the mirror, honey - with figures like ours, we have to buy whatever fits, no matter the style."

Carla sighed, knowing she should have trusted her friend a little better than that. After all, Lei was right - the hardly made clothes for extremely buxom men, did they? And woman who were slender- yet-hugely endowed were usually that way by choice, so all clothing was designed with the idea that the wearer would be proud of the surgically enhanced figure.

Suddenly, Carla snorted. "Hey, Lei - let's start a new fashion line. Clothing for the radiation-caused gender reversed."

Lei's voice held real admiration. "Carla, my friend, it's good to hear that your finally getting a handle on the situation."

Which was true - over the initial shock, she found she could cope with the fact that she'd been changed into a massive-breasted woman.

Cope with - but that didn't mean she had to enjoy it. Just as she had to cope with the clothing she had, but didn't have to enjoy it.

Quickly, Carla sorted through the clothing and put together an outfit, not caring if it clashed or not. The underwear was simple - she had her choice of black, white or beige, and it was all fairly skimpy French-cut briefs in a somewhat plain style. She picked beige - whose package, inexplicably, was labeled 'nude' instead of beige - and pulled them on.

Not surprisingly, there was no bras - such massive brassieres would have to be custom made, Carla bet. But Lei had come up with the next best thing - a couple of spandex crop-tops that - considering the size of her massive endowments - served well enough, if not providing as much support as tits that big should have. At least the crop-top cut down on the movement of the massive boobs.

Over the ad-hoc underwear ensemble went a pair of black jean shorts and a off-white blouse with short sleeves. The sleeves went almost to her elbows, and it was baggy at the shoulders, but the size of her tits pulled it to a remarkably comfortable fit, if you didn't mind the fact that it clearly defined the difference between her slender waist and massive tits.

Carla, of course, did - but there was absolutely nothing she could do about it.

The final touch was shoes, and she didn't have much choice. She went with the summery sandal- styles shoes with a two-inch heel, or there about. It was good enough, but Carla definitely felt strange about wearing heels, no matter how high - or short - they were. Still, these weren't much worse than cowboy boot heels.

Moments later, Lei emerged from the bathroom and began to dress, and Carla was once again struck by the picture of over-done eroticism that Lei presented - it reminded her, forcibly, that she wasn't all that different. Sighing, Carla shook her head and averted her gaze - but it wasn't as simple to ignore the heft of her own massive tits, constant reminders of her altered state.

When she turned back, Lei was dressed in a vaguely oriental-style top and silk pant ensemble, and was wearing shoes similar to Carla's. Smiling, the huge-breasted Asian tossed Carla a purse - which was surprisingly heavy. Opening it, Carla was amazed to find there was some pieces of heavy gold jewelry inside. As she looked up to ask, she saw Lei putting similar jewelry on.

"What are you doing?"

Lei smiled. "Brain flash - it might look weird to walk around with that much cash - and since we have to find somebody - some criminal body - to doctor up fake passports for us, I want to leave half the cash here. But if he demands more, we can - regretfully - part with some very expensive jewelry. It'll raise less questions." She shrugged. "You don't have to wear it - you can just leave it in your purse if you'd like."

"Then why are you wearing it?"

Lei cocked her head. "Just thought it'd look more... convincing if I gave the necklace from my neck - reluctantly. You know, for bargaining purposes."

Carla shrugged - then choice some of the less 'flashy' pieces out of the purse and put them on as well. It seemed reasonable.

After putting away the rest of their purchases - and hiding the other half of their cash very, very well - the two women set out. Carla had no idea how one would go about finding a passport forger, but Lei seemed to have a plan, and Carl tagged along.

The plan seemed to involve visiting many of the local bars - and not the nice ones either. While Carla sat, nursing a drink, Lei would wait for a while, looking around, then seem to find what she was looking for in a particular guy and go and talk with him. After several minutes, she'd return - shaking her head.

After several such failed attempts, Lei pulled Carla aside in a deserted alley. Carla was surprised - no, shocked - to notice her unflappable comrade was flushing brightly.

"What's up?" Carla asked, worried.

"I... uh.. figured out why I'm not having any luck." Lei confided. "Oh?"

"Criminals are naturally paranoid people - if anything seems 'hinky', they clam up." Carla shrugged. "Yeah, so?"

Lei coughed and - if possible - her blush deepened. "Um - would you say we're acting the way women who looked like us would act?"

Carla blinked, then sagged. "Oh - shit."

* * * * *

An hour later, they were trying another bar, after having gone back for a change - and a make over.

It had been Carla who had come up with a convincing 'cover story' that they could play-act. Carla and Lei were a couple of semi-wealthy American collage girls with a rebellious streak who had - without their parents knowledge - flown down with a couple of guys in a private plane. There had been an argument, they guys had taken the plane and gone home - and had 'accidentally' taken their passports so that the girls would have to get help from the embassy, which in turn would mean their parents would find out and get them in trouble.

So, they'd decided to outsmart those 'jerks' by getting forged passports to get home on.

However, this perfect cover story created a small problem - they had to play the roles to perfection, all the time. It would be bad if they slipped mid-act - as Lei put it, criminals who got suspicious quite often took 'direct' methods.

So, it had to be picture-perfect - and that meant dressing and acting like the perfect American girl with a rebellious streak...

Carla was now dressed in a white cotton blouse that had been tied close just under her massive, white-spandex-crop-top-encased tits, and with the sleeves rolled up. She wore a pair of tight jeans and was walking on white open-toed pumps with a four-inch heel. She wore sunglasses, and somewhat more jewelry.

Lei had opted for a midriff-baring gray silk top over a black crop-top, and a lighter gray short skirt. She wore similar shoes, but in black. Both had also had to have make-up done, courtesy of Lei, who 'had seen his sisters do it often enough to figure it out'. It was surprisingly good for a first effort, and as silly as Carla felt wearing make-up, she had to concede the necessity.

As she had to concede the new, feminine stride they'd adopted. Carla was concentrating every minute on being exactly who her cover persona would be, trying to keep one jump ahead on deciding what 'Rebellious Carla' would do at any given time. As strange as trying to act perfectly feminine was, it was also somewhat exciting, a hint of 'cloak-and-dagger', like she was in some sort of twisted Bond movie.

They started the same routine - picking a table in a place where they could see most of the room, and ordering a couple of drinks. As in the other bars, they started to garner some speculative - and lewd - looks, and Carla almost, instinctively, dipped her eyes to the drink and hunched over, as she had done before. However, and instant before she acted on that impulse, she realized that that would be the wrong response to the situation.

It took a tremendous amount of willpower, but she forced herself to keep her head up and talk to Lei, occasionally glancing around causally. When she caught a man eyeing her, she forced herself to consider objectively - no matter how weird it felt to do so - whether her 'persona' would find the leering man attractive. If not, she'd meet his eye just long enough to let him know he'd been noticed, then she'd sneer ever so slightly or roll her eyes a bit, then pointedly turn back to Lei. If it was a guy that she thought 'Rebellious Carla' would find attractive, she forced herself to give the man a 'once over', then either a small shrug or a slight grin before turning back to Lei.

Whatever she did, though, she was careful to keep her body language feminine - and sending out all the signals he'd ever gotten from women that meant 'not interested.'

Again, Lei found a likely-looking candidate - in this case, two men at a bag bar who 'Rebellious Carla' had decided were mildly handsome. Lei wandered over, doing a semi-provocative stride. Only because she was already in a hyper-aware state did Carla notice the way Lei leaned to talk to the men - in the more feminine manner, unlike the stand-offish way she'd unconsciously done it in the other bars.

After a moment, she slid into the booth with the men and waved Carla over.

Forcing herself to move like Lei had, Carla jiggled and swayed over, forcing herself to 'unconsciously' evaluate the size of the men's 'packages' as they rose to let her and Lei into the back of the booth, between the two men. It was obviously intended to be slightly intimidating - but for Carla, being hemmed in on her right side by a slender yet muscular man who kept eyeing her massive tits and the ample cleavage on display, it was less intimidating and more.. well, disgusting. She forced herself to stay in character, wishing that she'd known that these two would be the ones Lei decided to try - she would have given them the 'not good enough' sneer earlier. Now, she was locked into the role that she found them at least mildly attractive.

Lei was talking animatedly with the other man, using her hands occasionally as she cheerfully mangled the Spanish language. Meanwhile, Carla was left to 'socialize' with a darkly handsome man who was doing his best to appear both darkly threatening and yet sexually acceptable in a mating dance that would have been funny if not for two things. The first was that Carla was at the receiving end of it.

The second was the fact that he'd done something similar himself, many a time. For the first time he was getting a chance to see just how big a fool even a tough man would make of himself over a nicely displayed pair of tits and long, sleek legs.

"Mi nombre es Carlos, Senora." Carla's new friend said, surprising her with the similarity in names. She forced herself to curve her full, sexy lips in a non-committal smile and tap her chest above her mountainous tits, saying "Really? I'm Carla."

"Carla?" He smiled, revealing a mouthful of even, white teeth. "Usted es muy atractivo."

Carla managed to puzzle that one out for herself. She wasn't sure whether she wanted to blush or slap him - instead, she forced herself to smile a little more broadly and say "Gracias."

The man's eyes dipped a bit, and he made a cupping motion with his hands. "Usted pechoes es tan muy grande, Carla. Muy bein."

Carla didn't need that one translated, either - but was at a loss in terms of a response. She didn't have to - Lei smoothly snapped back at the man for her.

"Gota muerta, cerdo."

The other man laughed, and Carlos joined in a second later, leaving Carla wondering what she'd said. Lei didn't explain however, going back to her conversation with the other man.

A couple of minutes later, the one she was talking to - Jose - said something that she didn't like, and they began to argue. Carlos jumped in, and they had a three-way discussion for a few minutes before the two men went off for a bit.

"What? What's going on? They said no?" Carla asked, wondering if it was all for nothing.

"Not exactly." Lei said. She named a figure - which she could pay with their half-stake, if they 'cashed in' some of the jewelry - then hesitated. "There's more though. The guy who will do the actual passports works out of a back room of a club that Jose owns. It would take a couple of hours to have them made up, and the only way Jose would agree is if we agreed to be... um... 'trophy dates' for those hours."

"What?" Carla stammered. "What do you mean?"

Lei sighed. "You know - sit with them, hang off their arms, appear to be completely infatuated with them - and let them fondle and occasionally kiss us."

Carla's jaw tightened at the thought. Lei noticed and sighed again. "It's a stipulation he's adamant about - it's that or nothing. If you don't think you can handle it, we can wait until tomorrow, and catch a buss to another city and try again. Jose's the head honcho around here, and if we turn down his offer, we won't find anyone else in town who'll risk helping."

Carla sighed. "I guess we can handle it for a while - if that's what we need to do to get home."

Lei held up a hand. "Wait - before you agree, you'd better hear the complete agreement you'd be making."

"What is it?"

Lei took a deep breath. "You'd be Carlos' date. That means a couple of things. First - you wear what he wants tonight. Second, you must always be smiling and polite - don't pull away, don't get angry, and don't refuse anything in the 'grope-or-kiss' category. Also "

Carla didn't like the way Lei said 'also'. "What?"

Lei cleared her throat. "Um, his club - De Oro El Perro - is, um, well " She cleared her throat again, then finished in a rush. "It's a strip club, and we'd have to do a set together." Carla gaped at her friend. "You're kidding, right?"

Lei blushed. "No. It's a firm part of the deal as well. However - the upside, if you want to call it that, is the fact that Jose will throw in some 'extras' with the passports. Namely, a free trip to the airport tomorrow, plus he'll pay for the tickets home."

Carla opened her mouth to refuse - then stopped short. "How good is the price he gave, do you think?"

Lei looked down. "I considered that - if we did go elsewhere, and had to pay full price, plus airfare... Well, we would make it to Miami, but we would be broke."

Broke, with no access to their bank accounts, and half a country to cross before they could reach people who would have half a change of believing their story - but only if it was told face to face.

Closing her eyes and taking a deep breath, Carla let it out explosively. "All right - let's get it done and get home."

* * * * *

Placing the box on the bed, Carla looked down at it, wondering if she could actually go through with this.

They were in their hotel room, having packed everything after bathing - they were dressed in the hotel bathrobes. A bellboy had just delivered their clothes for the evening, and Carla was afraid to open the box and see what Carlos had sent for 'his date' to wear tonight. But a they'd bee by to pick them up in forty-five minutes, and if Carla wasn't ready in the outfit supplied - if she was anything less than the perfect date tonight - the deal would be blown.

Taking a deep breath, Carla opened the box and looked at what had been sent.

She was mildly surprised - it was actually not as bad as she'd feared. It wasn't great, but it wasn't super-slutty, like she'd expected.

Lei caught the relieved look. "Oh - I could have told you it wouldn't be that bad." "Huh?"

"Put yourself in their place - would you want to be seen with a woman who looked like a whore - or one who looked drop-dead gorgeous, out of any normal man's league - and she's on your arm?"

Well, that made sense. Mentally gritting her teeth, Carla dressed.

First came the lacy black panties, whose tight nature emphasized the lack of a bulge at her crotch, and clung tightly to her reshaped ass. Next came a pair of black nylons with seams down the back, and elastic tops to hold them in place on her silky thighs.

Along with that was a black stretch-velvet dress, low-cut at the neckline and backless to her ass. It was fairly short, but not obscenely so.

With the dress came a pair of black velvet-covered pumps with six inch heels. As she slipped them on, Carla only hoped she'd be able to keep from falling off of the spiked heels, but it was all or nothing. She noticed that Lei's outfit was similar, but in lined silk and with out the nylons.

Lei once more did their make-up and hair, and they picked some jewelry. They finished getting ready just in time, as the bellboy came up to inform them there was a car waiting.

Fighting to make her high-heeled stride look natural and graceful, Carla followed Lei into the elevator while the bellboy followed her, carrying their luggage. As he loaded it into the trunk of Jose's car, Carla slipped into the front seat with Carlos, who was apparently Jose's bodyguard/chauffeur/lieutenant. The dark-skinned man smiled broadly at her, and she couldn't help but admit to herself that he actually cut a debonair figure in his dark suit. She smiled back at him, and made an approving nod, fighting not to show her distaste at the concept of being some guys date.

The pulled up a few minutes later at a rather up-scale club, and Jose led them inside. Carla forced herself to take Carlos' arm and smile up at him as the crossed the floor of the club. It wasn't as bad as she feared, hanging off a guys' arm and being admiringly ogled by a crowd of men - she was too busy concentrating on walking with an appropriately sexy, feminine sway.

The stopped in the back room long enough to get some photo for their passports, taken by a short, weaselly-looking man, then they were led back into the main room, where they were escorted to a booth that overlooked the floor and the stage, where an attractive woman was gyrating to the music in her bra-and-panties.

Sitting beside Carlos, Carla got her first real taste of the evening to come when he slid a hand around her shoulder and leaned into her - sliding his hand down enough to lightly run his fingers over the exposed portions of her enormous tits. Carla refused to let her smile slip an inch as his fingers slid smoothly over her soft flesh, creating a disgustingly pleasant sensation.

Lei and Jose started chatting, and Carla was sorry that she didn't know enough Spanish to do likewise, to take her mind off things.

Carlos made a signal in the air, and with amazing speed, drinks appeared before them. Carla took a healthy draught of her somewhat bitter beer to reinforce her courage.

Then Carlos leaned towards her, and she forced herself to lean in as well for her first time kissing a man.

Keeping the thought that this was a necessary evil firmly in mind, she closed her eyes as his lips met hers. The smell of his after shave was mixed with a somehow primal masculine scent as her pressed his lips firmly against hers, and she found her body responding to the pleasant sensation, despite her own emotional state. She didn't want to enjoy the kiss, but she found that it was, physically, pleasurable. When Carlos' tongue slipped into her mouth, she found herself responding out of habit, and the kiss deepened, their tongues moving in an age-old dance that was as pleasurable from the female perspective as it had been when she was male. She hated to admit it, but Carlos was a good kisser, and she found it disgustingly easy to continue kissing him with more and more physical enjoyment even as her disgust was enhanced by the very fact that it felt so good.

Likewise, when Carlos took advantage of the fact that their positions allowed him to fondle her firm, full ass, she hated the way she enjoyed his skillful caress of her buttocks, and was shocked, ashamed and disgusted by the fact that she didn't have to fight all that hard not to pull away from the 'disgusting' touch of 'another' man.

When the kiss finally ended, it was Carlos who broke it, and Carla sat back, a smile fixed on her face to hide her tumultuous thoughts. She wasn't supposed to enjoy a man's touch, damn it! She wasn't some fag.

But nevertheless, she couldn't deny the simple truth - it had felt pretty damned good.

She finished the rest of her beer quickly, and another one magically appeared to take its place. Seeing that the drinks would be re-supplied instantly, Carla reminded herself to be careful - getting drunk and doing something stupid would not be a good idea.

Especially since she was no longer sure if 'something stupid' would be pulling away at the wrong moment - or doing something altogether different.

Carlos said something to her that she didn't understand, but that became moot as he reached across his body with his arm to openly caress her right tit. Like when she'd done it to herself, it felt fantastic, even through the cloth of the dress, and she found herself - disgustingly - getting that warm arousal from Carlos' touch. She made a low moan in the back of her throat as he focused in on the engorged nipple poking a dent in the dress' fabric, and to hide the sudden wave of revulsion at her enjoyment, she forced herself to kiss him before she said the wrong thing.

She conveniently forgot that he wouldn't have understood the words anyway as she let his tongue once more perform its magic with her own, causing that strange, painless fire in her crotch to burn a little hotter.

Over the next hour, Carlos' moves became a little more bolder - he slid his hands over her nyloned legs, lightly squeezing her silken thigh. He 'played footsies' with her while he idly caressed a hip, and he kissed down her neck to the ample cleavage on display in the dress. And all of it felt so nice, while causing untold emotional turmoil in Carla, who didn't know how to deal with the fact that another man was getting her aroused, physically if not emotionally.

It was so confusing, so unnerving, that Jose's announcement that it was time for their act actually came as a relief. Compared to being fondled and kissed - and enjoying it, a small part of her mind insisted on adding - merely being ogled would be a relief.

Lei and Carla rose from the booth and headed down to the floor while Jose announced them.

"Okay - just remember every strip-tease you've ever seen, and I'll follow your lead." Lei said, and that almost brought Carla up cold.

"Why should I lead?" She demanded.

"Would you rather be the one who has no idea what your partner's going to do next and have to constantly improvise - without looking like you're improvising?"

"Good point." Carla conceded, still finding herself almost panic-stricken.

Then they were on the stage, the music was starting, and she could either have time to dance or panic - not both.

So, she danced.

The song was - appropriately - American. In fact, it was 'Simply Irresistible', which Carla knew well - which was a God-send, because she could actually plan ahead a bit to match the song.

She started out by forcing herself to strut down the stage with a sexy sway, Lei matching her stride-for- stride, one pace behind and to the left. Reaching the end of the stage, Carla stopped and turned around, slowly grinding her hips twice before strutting back up the stage. While she did that Lei stayed at the far end, doing a modified grin, sliding lower each time and sticking her pert ass further and further out before slowly rising the same way. She timed it perfectly, coming back to a fully upright position as Carla reached the far end of the stage and turned to face her.

The two women began to walk - strut - slowly and sensuously towards each other, slowly sliding their hands up and down their bodies, caressing their curves. Lei hit every cue perfectly - while Carla's hands were going up, hers were coming down, and vice versa.

When they met in the center of the stage, Carla wrapped her hands around Lei and began fondling her ass, while she responded in kind. Carla was gratified to not that this aroused her as well, as she bent her head for a quick, showy kiss with her shorter companion.

Then she turned around so she was back-to-back with Lei, and braced against each other, she sank to the floor. Hoping Lei could see enough in the mirrored walls, Carla began sensuously lifting her leg, and was glad to see Lei copy the move.

Carla lifted her leg up keeping it straight, then let it slowly bend at the knee, dropping the leg until she was sitting with her legs outstretched in front of her, crossed. She then rolled to her right while Lei did the same, until they ended up face-to-face, perpendicular to their last position.

They then slowly spread their legs apart, then slowly pushed themselves up into a crouch. From there, they rose to their feet.

Theatrically grasping Lei's face, Carla pulled her in for a long, hot kiss. While they kissed, each woman's hands slid down to the straps of the dresses the other wore and slowly lowered the dress to the ground, kicking it back to the back of the stage. They were now in panties only - with Carla in her nylons - atop their heels, their breasts still hidden by being pressed against each other, but the swelling sides of their breasts hinting at their massive size.

Slowly, Carla walked forward, pushing Lei backwards towards the end of the stage. The taller woman then slowly bent the shorter woman over backwards, keeping their breasts squashed - oh-so- pleasurable - between them as they finished the move then straightened.

With a touch on her shoulders, Lei knew to slowly slide downwards - revealing Carla's massive tits. As a crouched Lei fondled her legs and ass, Carla fondled her own massive tits, actually enjoying the sensations.

Then Lei turned around and straightened, revealing her own endowments. She bent forward, shaking her huge tits, and Carla fondled her firm ass as she did so. She then spread her legs wide, and Lei went into a push-up position, then slid between Carla's legs to end up behind her, to stand and fondle the now-bent-over Carla's ass.

As the crowd of men clapped and cheered, the two women faced each other as the song neared the end. Quickly, they stepped a pace apart, then bent over and slid their panties down. They kissed again as they wiggled their asses at the crowd, then they turned and faced the crowd, gyrating their hips while fondling the inside of their thigh with one hand and the other woman's massive tit with the other.

Then the song - mercifully - ended, and Carla dressed quickly, blushing at what she'd just done. And how well she'd done it.

And how... fun it had been.

In an exhilarating, perverted, confusing way - that had ramped up her physical arousal amazingly. She still didn't know whether she should be grateful that she was still turned on by a 'woman' - or disgusted that she was finding Lei so sexy.

They returned to the table to find another round of drinks waiting for them. They sat down and began sipping at their beers as the applause for them slowly faded away - including Jose's and Carlos'.

They were just finishing their drinks when Jose smiled and said. "You are very good at that, ladies."

Carla almost choked on the last sip of beer, as Lei gaped at Jose, open mouthed. "You speak English!"

Jose waved a hand negligent. "But of course - we do much business with Americans."

"Yes, much business." Carlos agreed, enjoying the look of surprise on Carla's face. His English wasn't as polished as Jose's, and had a heavy accent - but it was still enough to surprise Carla.

"Why...?"

Jose smiled engagingly. "I find it best not to reveal all my secrets at the outset, my dear - it makes bargaining easier." He brushed at his lapel. "And speaking of secrets... While you were dancing, one of my patrons approached me with an interesting story. About how you two, rather ragged looking and without luggage, appeared in his shop with a good number of gold coins to sell. Spanish gold coins.

That seems unusual behavior for two American ladies who had 'a little trouble with their boyfriends', wouldn't you agree?"

Stunned, Carla tried to rise - and found that she couldn't. She became aware of a growing warm numbness spreading through her body, and a strange lethargy claiming her mind.

"You... you drugged..." Lei said, thickly.

"I'm afraid so." Jose replied, sounding genuinely regretful. "You see, I'm interested in discovering where those coins came from - and if there is any more. This is merely the most... efficient way."

Lei made an attempt to speak, but her mouth wouldn't work. She managed a few muffled grunts - then her eyelids slowly sank shut.

Seconds later, Carla followed suit.

* * * * *

Carla came awake to find herself jostled by movement. For a second, she had no idea what was happening - then she sat bolt upright.

She was in the back of an older, but lushly appointed Land Rover, traveling down a familiar road. She was belted into the back seat, beside Lei who was slowly stirring.

"Ah - I see you are awake!" Jose called back jovially from the front seat. Carlos was at the wheel, guiding the vehicle down the road out of Cuiaba. Sandwiched between the two of them was the man they'd sold the coins to, who looked at them with greed and not a little lust. "I'm glad that it is so - I am soon going to need some directions from you."

"Where are you taking us?" Lei asked, angrily, her dark eyes flashing in rage - and fear.

"Oh, no, my dear - it is where you are taking me. I require some directions - I wish to know the origin of those coins you sold Hector here."

Carla looked wide-eyed at Lei - after all they had done, they were being taken right back to where it had started, losing all the progress they'd made.

But Lei was smiling. "All right - we'll take you to the coins."

Carla was stunned. Go back to the campsite? Expose themselves to...?

Then she realized what Lei was smiling about. They had no idea what another dose of that strange radiation might do to them, and it scared her silly - but she was pretty certain what it would do to the three men in the front seat, and suddenly it didn't seem like such a risk anymore. They were these men's prisoners - in fact, she could see the shoulder holsters both Jose and Carl wore - and there was probably little chance of escape. Even if they did escape, they had no money, and only the clothes on their backs. If they had to be these men's hostages, there wasn't a finer, more ironic fate that could be meted out than the one that was in store.

The thought of 'the clothes on their backs' caused Carla to assess what she was wearing. Since it was now morning, she assumed she'd been unconscious all night, and they'd obviously taken the chance to change her clothing into a more suitable outfit. Both she and Lei were wearing superbly fitted female versions of the clothing they'd had at the campsite - khaki pants and shirts, and hiking boots - albeit with one-and-a-half inch block heels.

They stayed on the main road until they passed the small village where they'd caught the bus, then Lei instructed Carlos to slow and look for the path they'd cut through the jungle. They found it easily, and Carlos pulled the vehicle over to the side of the road and cut the engine.

The men - similar attired in a masculine version of the clothes - climbed out, then unlocked the belts that held the girls in place - after tying their hands together behind their backs. The men each pulled on a large back-pack, Jose and Carlos doing so efficiently, Hector the coin dealer complaining about the weight, and the straps, and why couldn't the women take it...

With no change in his mildly amused expression, Jose back-handed the dealer, cutting him off mid- word.

"These ladies are about to lead us to wealth, Hector - wealth that I am generously going to allow you to share, if you do what you are told. So, please - a little courtesy to the lovely ladies."

Carlos took the lead, and Jose half-bowed to the women. "Carla, Lei - if you will follow my companion?"

Silently, the two huge-breasted ex-men did as they were told, trudging along behind Carlos as he followed the clear trail into the jungle. Not having to hack a trail, they made much better time than the two transforming men had made on the way out. Still, it was well into the afternoon before they reached the disheveled camp that the two snared archeologists had last seen as men.

"Hmm..." Jose murmured, looking at the camp. "Some fine equipment... Digging tools... radio..." HE walked over to the set and wrinkled his nose at the stench. "Well, that would explain the attempt to get back to America through other means."

"Where's the gold?" Hector demanded, looking around - then his eyes lit upon the leaden chest, and he took a step towards it...

Carlo's strong arm stopped him short, and he said something to Hector in Spanish. the dealer pouted and watched sullenly as Jose continued his slow inspection of the camp.

"So - professional 'artifact' thieves, I would assume?" He said at last, smiling brightly. "I though I recognized a fellow professional, Miss Lei - and it certainly explains your choice of exit attempts. The Bolivian Government would frown upon helping you leave with some of our 'cultural heritage'."

Lei didn't debase Jose of his misinterpretation of the 'evidence'.

"Still, I find it unusual that such... endowed woman - and beautiful, as well - should be in this line of work. Surely, there must be easier ways for women such as you to earn money."

Lei shrugged. "Easier? Perhaps. Also less exciting - as we've already discovered." Carlos laughed shortly. "Yes - you seemed very... talented last night."

Carla flushed at the memory, but remained silent. Despite her dread, she found herself willing these men to open the chest - and claim their 'prize'.

She got her wish - Jose finished his survey of the camp, and finally motioned the two other men over to the chest. Carlos tied the two women to a stub of a tree, and went over to where his boss and the coin dealer were practically drooling over the chest.

Eagerly, Carlo's lifted off the lid of the chest, and the men's eyes lit up at the sight of the splendor that lay inside.

"Madre Dios..." Hector breathed. "It's a fortune!"

"Yes - I think it will be worth quite a sum." Jose agreed. Carla felt a burst of vengeful satisfaction as all three men ran their hands through the gold, silver - and bits of radioactive ore. "Hector, I'm going to be kind and let you count the money. I'm sure I can trust you to divide it evenly."

Hector's eyes glittered at the chance - then his eyes narrowed and he looked at Jose. "Come, Senor - I do not trust you to trust me so easily - and we both know it."

Jose laughed. "True, my friend. However, I feel I can trust you to split it evenly into three sacks - because Carlos and myself are going to choose our sacks first. So, you see - stuffing one sack with more only gives you a one-in-three chance of getting your extra plunder. And, should I find so much as a single gold coin on your person after you are finished separating them, I shall kill you on the spot and take your share."

Hector swallowed - then smiled. "Ah, Senor - as usual you are the epitome of shrewd. I can live with a fair share of this, I think - with the wealth that I shall get from being honest in the split, it makes no sense to risk death to get a few pesos more."

"I thought you'd see it my way." Jose agreed. Turning from the dealer, he smiled toothily at Lei and began untying her. "Come, my dear - let use go into this tent and discuss a deal. Perhaps you and will walk away from this alive, well - and a few gold coins richer."

Carla pulled against the bonds that held her as Jose lead Lei towards one of the two tents. "Hey!"

"Don't worry - you will not be left out." Carlos said, leering at her. "However, it is with me that you must strike a deal."

Carla shrank back as Carlos untied her. Knowing what sort of 'deal' Carlos was thinking of, she considered trying to fight - but she had no chance of winning against the powerfully built man. She forced herself to decided whether what was in the offing was truly 'a fate worse then death' - then gritted her teeth and allowed herself to be lead into the tent with the muscular man.

He let her go and turned back to zip the tent's flap. Silently, rubbing her wrists where the rope had been, Carla watched the Brazilian seat himself on the camp stool and run his eyes lewdly over her.

As she bore his lustful gaze in silence, she began to feel strange, and wondered if it was a reaction to his gaze - but that didn't feel right. Then she realized that it must be some sort of reaction to the radiation that must, even now, be seeping into the tent through the radiation-transparent canvas. She began to feel slightly light-headed, and slightly detached from what was going on. From her point of view, the strange reaction was a God-send, making it easier to deal with what was sure to come.

"You are quite a woman, Carla." Carlos said, running his eyes over her massively-endowed figure. "And I have seen how seductive you can be..."

Carla remained silent, feeling the effect of the radiation increasing slightly. She wondered what, exactly, it was doing do her - whatever it was, it was completely different then the effect of the first exposure.

"Such magnificent breasts - you must be so very proud of them, Carla."

Carla shuddered inside as a strange wrenching sensation in her mind occurred. She realized, with a burst of horror, what had happened - the radiation was, somehow, making her very suggestible right now, and the Brazilian man's choice of words - 'must' - was basically a command to her. Although she didn't feel that way at all, she now realized that she'd have no choice - from now on, she'd have to act as if she was extremely proud of the massive breasts she now possessed.

"And your legs - so long and sexy..." Carlos continued, with no idea how his words were effecting his captive audience. He read the horror in her eyes, but believed it to be a product of the situation, not having a clue of what was causing the horror in Carla. "Wearing clothes and shoes that show them off to their best advantage must be something you do often."

'It will be, now.' Carla thought with despair, as she felt another wrenching in her mind. "Carlos.." She began to beg.

"Shh " Carlos soothed. "You must not interrupt me, my lovely."

So - she couldn't.

"I look at you, and I know what type of woman you are, Carla." Carlos taunted. "You must love being so sexy - and showing it. You must get turned on every time you see a man admiring - lusting after - your body. I bet you must have sex so often that you don't even know what it feels like to be horny for any length of time. You get horny - and some man would have sex with you right away."

As wrench after wrench ripped through her defenseless mind, Carla mentally begged Carlos to shut up, feeling her needs and persona being reshaped by the man's careless words.

"And you must love it." Carlos hissed. "You must love driving men wild with your body and sensuality - and you must love proving your incredible sexuality by fucking and sucking men dry."

Then, sneering, he unzipped his pants and drew out his limp, dark cock. It was huge, even limp, laying flaccid in the palm of his hand.

"This must be driving you crazy with a desire to suck me off, right, Carla?" He taunted. It was a toss-up as to who was more surprised by the answer.

"Yes, it is." Carla found herself saying, helplessly. The thought of giving him a blow-job utterly disgusted the transformed man - but right now, she was beset with an overpowering need to be a woman who was so proud of her sensuality that it was the center of her existence, and could only be validated by the ultimate proof - the ability to make men have sex with her.

"Agree to let me go, Carlos - and I'll give you the most mind-blowing blowjob you've ever had " She promised him in husky, sensual voice.

What made it worse was the fact that she was still in control - sort of. It was an intense compulsion, and addiction - but it wasn't running her body. Part of her knew that she could refuse to do this thing - but that the need to do it would drive her nuts if she fought it. So, she was giving in - but she was able to make sure that it wasn't a mindless surrender, and she was going to use her need to her advantage.

Carlos smiled. "Well - so, I was right after all. I'll tell you what - you do real good, and not only will we let you go when we're done, we'll pay you a little something."

She found herself growling in the back of her throat - the sensuously leaned forward. Her long, slender fingers began to stroke the huge cock, which immediately began to respond. Carla looked up at Carlos with a sensual smile and licked her lips - then bent her head and enveloped his massive cock in her warm mouth.

'Eagerly' she began to work, using her hands, lips, tongue and a touch of suction in an erotic symphony. All the tricks she'd ever had used on the male him were now employed in the purpose of giving Carlos the most intense blowjob of his life.

"Oh, God - so good..." Carlos moaned as she worked. "You must really be a cum-hungry cock- teaser."

Well, she was now. Her actions increased slowly in speed, bringing him closer and closer to the edge then slacked of, bringing him back before he came. To her horror, Carla now found that she was loving the taste, smell and feel of his huge cock - she was loving giving a man a blow-job. But knowing that it was disgusting didn't change the experience, any more than knowing that cocaine was illegal and dangerous stopped a addict. She needed to be a cock-sucker - and now, despite her feelings, she found she wanted to be one, too.

Even as she worked at the massive shaft in her mouth, Carla felt the radiation making some physical changes as well. The faint gag reflex she was feeling faded as the interior of her mouth and upper throat altered to better accommodate the act of sucking cock, while her tongue lengthened and became more supple - and sensitive. Now the act of giving a blowjob to Carlos was becoming pleasurable in the physical sense, as well.

A sensation that increased as her already full, sexy lips also became more sensitive to pleasure. The radiation was affecting her, making her into the world's most perfect cock-sucker, and the reaction from Carlos, who began to moan and praise her incredible technique, proved that it was working.

Finally, Carla let Carlos cum, driving him over the edge she'd brought him to so many time now. The man cried out as he flooded her mouth with his warm, salty cum - and she was horrified/overjoyed to find that her taste-buds had been altered, making the flavor of cum gushing down her open throat absolutely wonderful.

As she licked the massive organ clean and pulled back, Carla licked her full lips, her body thrumming with desire. She was both gratified and horrified to discover that Carlos' massive dick refused to soften after she'd drained him - he was obviously ready to cum again, probably an effect from the radiation.

But it wasn't the only one. Carla saw, with intense satisfaction, that all of the man's body hair had already fallen out, although Carlos was too 'busy' to notice. It was some measure of satisfaction she could take, even as she felt a desire filling her body as her womanhood became warm and moist.

Carla realized that it wasn't an overwhelming desire - apparently, the blowjob had been enough to mute her need to prove her sexual superiority. But, she was horny - and she needed to keep Carlos distracted from what was happening to his body.

"Come on, Stud" - she said, making the choice. "Let's fuck."

Ripping off her clothes, she hauled Carlo's pants and underwear down. She found herself impaling herself onto his massive tool with a horrifying eagerness, as the man began to fondle and suck her huge tits.

Using her long, erotically muscled legs, Carla began to drive herself up and down on the seated man's huge tool, feeling the interior of her womanhood altering to maximize the pleasure of the act - and doing an incredible job. Intensely erotic sensation rocked her body as she fucked Carlos with a rising passion.

"Oh, oh... What the..?" Carlos cried, his eyes flying open as he felt a strange sensation running through his body. He tried to move, starting to push Carla off...

Carla didn't want to stop - not now. "No, Carlos - let me finish..." She grated through teeth clenched with pleasure - and, horrified, the man found himself helpless to do anything but obey.

Unlike Lee and Carl, Carlos was actually having sex while being irradiated, which definitely altered the effect. The first difference it made was to speed up the process. The second - like Carla - was the 'suggestibility factor', which in his case was a lot higher than hers had been.

The third was the fact that his massive cock wasn't shrinking.

A fact that Carla helplessly appreciated as she drove herself towards orgasm. She also appreciated - vengefully - the swelling masses on Carlos' chest, pressing outwards at a remarkable rate, even as his waist pinched inwards. The horrified man was helpless to do anything but sit and be fucked as he experienced the rapid alteration of his body.

Finally Carla orgasmed, screaming at the top of her lungs as she came. As the last of the orgasm ran through her body, she lifted herself off the transformed Carlos with a smile.

"Don't move." She told him before he could attempt anything. Then, with a genuine smile, she looked over the effects of the radiation.

A tall, athletic-looking woman with rich, dark skin sat in the remnants of Carlos' clothing. Her erotically muscled body was none the less feminine for its musculature, broad shoulders and slim hips.

Part of that was the two massive breasts that thrust firmly from her chest, nearly equal to Carla's own massive tits. About the only thing spoiling the image of an incredibly fit, sexy athletic woman was the massive cock that was only now beginning to soften between her silky thighs.

Carla smiled cruelly as a thought occurred to her. "What's your name, buxom?" She asked with a smile.

"Carlos - Carlos Del Santos." The new she-male spat out in a rich, husky voice. "What is happening to me - what have you done.."

"Shut up." Carla commanded, and Carlos helplessly did.

"Your name is not Carlos Del Santos." Carla to the altered man. "Your name is Carolita De Casabas, and you usually use the short form of 'Lita'."

Lita felt the wrenching sensation in her mind, and realized what was happening - and what she'd inadvertently done to Carla moments before. But it was much too late to beg for forgiveness - and Carla was in no mood to hear it anyway.

"My, you have quite the body.." She said, slyly. "From now on, you will desire to show off that body in tight or revealing clothing. In fact, you will be so proud of your body, that your only desire in life will be to let anyone who wishes to have sex with you - in any way - experience the absolute perfection of your body."

Lita felt like crying as the path of her life became set firmly in her psyche - but was unable to express anything at all of her true feeling from this day forth.

Laughing at the sudden sensual posture of Lita's body - and the pain in her dark eyes - Carl gave her last command. "You will be unable to attempt to harm or cheat any person from this day forth - you will only try to provide yourself with physical pleasure, and to give you perfect body to the gaze, touch or desire of any who wish it. Now, begin your new life."

With that, Lita was free to move - but completely unable to give life to her fondest desire and strangle Carla. Instead, she stood and began to sensuously feel her new body, smiling seductively at Carla.

Carla sneered and turned on one heel, leaving the transformed Lita behind her.

The sight that greeted Carla as she stepped from the tent was almost as satisfying as the one of the altered man she left behind.

The person who had been Hector had gotten a massive dose of the radiation, having been playing with the pieces of radiation-laden ore. Now the altered ex-man lay beside the closed lead chest, beside a pile of gold coins. The tiny, massive breasted woman with the massive mane of platinum blonde hair and pale skin was staring mindlessly up at the sky while she masturbated furiously, the over-dose having left her a true blonde bimbo with tits even bigger the Lei's on a body of similar stature.

Well, with breasts as big as Lei's had been> For the Asian woman's new breasts were smaller, about a triple-EEE cup, turning her from a massively over-endowed sexual freak to a stunningly beautiful oriental woman. She was smiling at Carla, which was how Carla was able to tell it was here - the exact clone of her - although with the original, outside tits - was frowning at Carla as she helplessly fondled her massive new endowments.

"Josette here tried to entice me into sex by licking my pussy," Lei explained, confirming her identity. "I think that had a definite affect on how she turned out."

"I think so." Carla laughed. "She leaned back into the tent and 'asked' Lita to come out. The new she-male did so, her nude body glistening.

At the sight of the she-male, Josette's eyes locked on the massive cock, and Carla knew that there had been some mental changes made to Jose as well.

"Hold on - no sex yet." Carla commanded. She turned to Lei. "So - what do we do now? Head back into town?"

Lei considered it. "No - I think we should have them go back to town and let them deal with their new lives. We should stay here - I should think that a helicopter should be by in the next day or so, to see why we're out of touch."

Carla nodded - it made sense. She found herself hoping it wouldn't be too long - not only did she want to get back to the states, but she found herself 'eager' to begin her new life as a sexual goddess as, from the look on her face, did Lei. Carla wondered what mental changes her friend had undergone.

But first things first...

"Okay, you two take Blondie over there and start heading back to the car. Leave your packs here." She instructed the two once-men. "I want you to drive back to town and pick up our stuff. Get yourself some clothing out of our money, then get our stuff back to us. After that, you're free to go.

"Are you sure it's wise to let them spend our money?" Lei asked - then slapped her forehead as she looked at the fortune of safe coins in a pile beside the safely closed box.

"Get going." Carla ordered, and the two ex-men dressed and - supported the mindlessly masturbating 'Blondie' between them, headed out. Carla found herself wishing they'd hurry - she really needed some sexy clothes to wear.

Turning back to Lei, she smiled. "You realize that we may have trouble convincing the helicopter crew who we are?" She asked.

Lei laughed. "Hell - after we fuck them silly, they'll fly us wherever we want. I'm sure that, once we're home, we can convince the authorities of the truth."

"I hope so." Carla agreed.

Lei laughed. "Come on - if worse comes to worse, we'll just hand them a chunk of ore. After being turned into a woman, I think they'll believe our story.

Carla laughed at the thought that occurred to her. "You realize, the military will probably confiscate it all. Think about it - imbed a chunk in a bomb and drop it on enemy troops. A day later - they're a bunch of women."

Lei giggled at the thought, then looked around at the camp> They were obviously not going to be doing any more excavating. "So - what do we do until the helicopter arrives?"

Carla smiled and approached her gorgeous friend> "I have a few ideas..." She admitted, huskily. As they embraced, Lei giggled suddenly.

"What?" Carla asked, fondling her friend's firm ass.

"Well - it took some time for us to change completely, right?" Carla murmured agreement as she licked at one of Lei's nipples.

"Well - that means that they're probably not finished changing yet..." Carla smiled at the thought, and opened her mouth to reply...

..but, as it turned out, neither woman said anything coherent for quite some time, with the occasion exception of the phrase 'Oh, God - more "

* * * * *

"Brownell One to Base - we're landing at the site now. " The pilot of the civilian Huey reported over the radio.

"Roger that, Brownell one. Let us know what you find, over."

The pilot acknowledged as he brought the aircraft to a brief hover before setting it down. He shut down the rotor, looking over the apparently deserted camp. She climbed out and was met by his co- pilot, who had exited the other side and walked around the nose.

"Hello?" The co-pilot called out.

There was a muffled sound as the zipper of a tent opened, and the aviators' jaws dropped as two woman stepped into view.

The first was a massive-breasted woman with auburn hair. She was made up artfully, and dressed in a sexy-yet-tasteful beige skirt and tight khaki short-sleeve blouse, with the top buttons undone to reveal the creamy swell of her massive tits. She balanced easily - and seductively - atop brown suede knee-boots with five-inch heels.

Her companion, dressed in tight black shorts and a tight white silk blouse, was a tiny, gorgeous oriental woman who was also smiling at the two men.

"Have we got a story to tell you..." The first one said, wiggling a finger at them. "Why don't you come in and discuss it ?"

The two pilots looked at each other and decided that finding out where the archeologists were could wait a few minutes...

BACK TO FUN ZONE

SUMMARY: After a rich businessman cuts off funding to a promising artist, the artist kidnaps him and, using advanced science, goes about sculpting him into subservient woman.

The Artist

By Gunslinger

The high-ceiling room echoed with the low hum on many conversations, with the occasion clink of champagne flutes being taken or deposited from the sterling silver trays carried by the impeccably dressed waiters circulating the spacious gallery floor.

Richard M. Carstairs, the third, was suitably impressed. Not by the gathering itself - even with his highly reclusive nature, if he had a dollar for each such affair he'd attended, he'd double his already sizable fortune - but by the quality of the artwork presented by the young artist hosting the event. Of course, he'd known of the remarkable talent of the artist before investing a dime - as amiable as he was in his private life, Richard was ruthless when it came to business, and left nothing to chance. Still, seeing this much of the artist's work in one place reaffirmed his initial decision to fund the young man.

At the moment, he was eyeing one of the painting adorning the white-washed walls. This particular piece was striking. Depicting the head and shoulders of a woman, it was quite unconventional - the woman's eyes were obscured by a wide metal band. Moreover, the painting was done in subdued colors - except for the lips, which were a bright, vivid red.

"Ah, admiring some of my work I see."

Richard smiled and turned to face the up and coming new artist whose work this was.

"It is quite a striking painting." He acknowledged. He held out his hand. "Richard Carstairs."

Steven Pratt took the outstretched hand and shook it. "Of course! We've often spoken on the phone, and I've received your checks, but this is the first time we've met face to face." He paused and eyed his somewhat mysterious benefactor. "You know, Mr. Carstairs, I suddenly feel like I'm meeting a long-lost brother."

"Call me Richard, please." Richard said, laughing. "And I know exactly what you mean."

The two men bore a remarkable resemblance for two unrelated men. Both had fit, somewhat broad bodies, with the same shade of dirty blond hair and dark brown eyes. They were even the same age - 27. There was only one major difference between the two men.

Whereas Steven was about average height, Richard was several inches shorter. Still, the resemblance was remarkable.

"I notice that, all though you work in a lot of mediums, the subject matter of all of them is the same - the feminine form." Richard said, waving an arm to take in the paintings, photographs and sculptures, all by Steven, and all depicting a woman of some sort.

Steven laughed. "Actually, this is just a small sampling of the many different types of artist I am - but yes, I do work exclusively with the female subjects."

Richard looked interested. "Why is that?"

Steven shook a finger. "Oh, no. You may be one of my major contributors - but I still insist on keeping a few secrets."

Suddenly, to Steven's surprise, Richard's face became emotionless. "Actually, I was wondering if I could speak to you about that funding. Privately, of course."

Steven felt a prickle of worry, but managed, by dint of effort, to maintain his smile. "Actually, I hardly think it would be appropriate for me, the host, to vanish in the middle of my own party. But if you have no pressing business, I'd be glad to talk to you after the guests have left."

Richard wasn't used to being put off, and barely managed to repress a scowl. Then, as was his rather unique ability, he switched from his 'business' mindset to his 'social' mindset, and was once again a soft-spoken, charming guest. "Of course, Mr. Pratt. Whenever you're available."

Steven nodded, then vanished into the throng, mingling with his potential clients.

Snagging a flute of champagne, Richard moved about as well. It took all of his not-inconsiderable will to maintain his facade of cheerfulness in the crowded room.

Although a major 'mover and shaker' in the business world, very few people recognized Richard's face as he 'worked the room.' Highly reclusive by nature, he only attended those 'social' events that had some connection to his dealings. He hated the falseness of the people around him. Some, the wealthy entrepreneurs, were here to buy some of Steven's work as 'status symbols', or as investments. The famous - movie stars and sport figures - were dressed more flamboyantly, and were here to see, and be seen, by others in their social stratum.

To Richard, the party seemed to go on forever, although only an hour and a half passed before the last of the other guests finally made their good-byes and departed through the separate entrance to the gallery Steven maintained in his new mansion. Shortly after, the hired help - the caterers and bartender - also departed, leaving the two men alone.

"Well, thank you for waiting, Richard" Steven said, untying his bow-tie. "Why don't we go somewhere more comfortable and have that talk?"

Richard nodded, and followed the taller man. Using a key, Steven unlocked the door that connected the semi-private gallery to the rest of the mansion, and stepped through. Locking the door behind Richard, the artist led him down a short hallway into a large, spacious and quite comfortable rec-room.

Paneled in black walnut, the room boasted a wet bar, a pool table, and a circular couch around a free-standing fireplace. Waving Richard to a stool, Steven walked around the bar and began fixing himself a drink.

"Can I get you anything, Richard?" he asked.

"A martini would do just fine." Richard replied, which, to his mind, was the extent of 'small talk' he was willing to endure. As the artist mixed the drink, Richard got down to business.

"Earlier, you mentioned that I'm one of your major contributors. I'm afraid that's not quite true."

Steven stopped for a second, and regarded Richard for a second before continuing to mix the drinks. "What do you mean?"

Richard leaned forward. "The other 'contributions' you've received have all been from subsidiary companies owned by me. I've been your ONLY contributor."

Steven frowned. "I don't understand."

Richard smiled tightly. "I'm a businessman, Mr. Pratt - I only do things that benefit me financially. You showed great promise, and so I did what I'd do in any other business situation. The technical term is 'hostile takeover' - I assume you're familiar with it?"

Steven's frown deepened. "What, exactly, are you saying, Mr. Carstairs?"

"The land that this house is built on is owned by me, through interlocking companies. The money used to build it came from me. Everything you have right now, in one way or another, is due solely to one person - myself. And, now it's time to start turning a profit on my investment." Reaching into his pocket, Richard removed an envelope. "I've already worked out what you'll need to do for me. I've contacted several major Ad agencies, and from now on, you'll be doing product illustrations - albeit, with your own, distinctive style."

Steven didn't take the pro-offered envelope. "I have no idea where you got this insane notion." He replied angrily, "But I'm an artist - and I only create that which I'm inspired to. I DON'T do commercial illustration, on demand and like clockwork."

"I don't think you understand." Richard replied coldly. "You WILL do what I tell you - not ask, mind you, but TELL, - because if you don't, you'll be back on the street, with nothing, in less than twenty-four hours."

Incredibly, Steven became remarkably calm and self possessed. "You can't threaten me."

"Oh, I'm not threatening." Richard replied smugly, downing his martini. He rose to leave, "I'm promising you. Now, be a good lad, and deliver those signed paper to me tomorrow at my office."

"I don't think I can." Steven replied calmly. "I don't believe you're going to be IN your office tomorrow - and anytime soon, for that matter."

"What are you..." Richard started to say - then swayed on his feet as his vision began to dim. Horrified, he stared wide eyed at the artist. "You... you poisoned me!" he slurred thickly, losing control of his tongue.

Steven watched the shorter man crumple to the rug like a marionette with it's strings cut. As from a great distance, the entrepreneur heard the taller man's reply.

"Not poisoned, Mr. Carstairs - drugged."

And then a wave of darkness reached up and claimed Richard, dragging him down to oblivion.

* * * * *

Not surprisingly, Richard had never been drugged before. Or, considering, his business methods, it was surprising that none of his enraged competitors had done something similar. In either case, Richard was completely unprepared for the pounding headache that came from spending three days sedated.

Groaning, he opened his eyes, his mind sluggish. For a few seconds, he couldn't recall what had happened, and gazed about in confusion.

He was laying on a minimally padded stainless steel table, completely naked. The table, elevated at a forty degree angle, was equipped this heavy leather straps that restrained him at his wrists and ankles, holding him immobile.

Looking wildly around, his mind barely noted the details of the vaguely medical looking room, with it's unidentifiable machines and equipment, gleaming under the harsh florescent lighting.

Then the heavy steel door to the room opened, admitting Steven, and everything came back in a flash. "You!" Richard growled, his voice dusty from disuse. "You're not going to get away with this!"

Steven laughed. Dressed comfortably in slacks and a turtle-neck sweater, he was completely unintimidated by the naked, restrained businessman.

"Oh, but I already have." He laughed. "You've been out for three days. I've had plenty of time to arrange everything." "What do you mean?" Richard asked warily.

Steven smiled toothily. "Well, the police showed up early in the morning. It appears that you were driving home when you ran off the road. Your car hit a propane tank at a gas station, and was destroyed in the explosion. Of course, I testified that you'd left here after having a fair amount to drink." He sighed theatrically. "What a tragic end for the rich and powerful - and, incidentally, much hated - Richard Carstairs."

Richard's eyes narrowed. "You're lying." He stated flatly.

"Am I?" Steven asked. "The police found several champagne glasses with your finger prints - not to mention the martini glass. I, of course, testified that you'd had three of them during our private chat before leaving."

Richard felt a shiver that had nothing to do with the cold air on his naked flesh. The scenario that Steven had outlined was entirely plausible. Worse, Richard had made many enemies in the police department over the years, and they wouldn't be inclined to probe too deeply into his demise - many held a long standing belief that he was better off dead, after all.

"What are you going to do?" Richard asked. "If, I'm dead, ransom or blackmail isn't an option."

Steven's face tightened in anger. "You smug, stupid bastard. I know all about you. Born into money, you've spent your life adding to your fortune by any means." He hissed. "I, on the other hand, had no such luxuries. I got where I am by talent, hard work - and raw ingenuity. Then you tried to take it away. Well, it's Time to bring you down more than just a few notches, my 'friend'."

"How? Drug me again, the dump me penniless in Mexico?"

Stephan laughed. "Oh, no. That would lack...artistry. You asked me once why I only did the female subject. Well, here's the answer - I used to be a woman."

"What?" Richard gasped, stunned.

Steven laughed. "I was born Lisa Stephanie Pratt. But, I was getting nowhere in a world dominated by macho, sexist pigs like you. So, I followed the advice - 'If you can't beat 'em, join 'em. I painstakingly developed new techniques, and remade myself into the man you see today."

"I...I don't understand." Richard managed.

Steven smiled wickedly. "It was our resemblance to each other that gave me the perfect revenge. I think it's about Time for my 'sister', Lisa, to resurface. Don't you - dear sister?" And he laughed, his high, crazed peals driving into Richard's brain as he stared, horrified, at the madman who held him captive.

* * * * *

Richard had no chance to try and talk his way out - Steven's first action was to place a red rubber 'ball gag' into Richard's mouth, silencing him.

Then the real work began.

First, he pushed a button on the side of the table. The straps retraining Richard tightened and lifted on hydraulic arms, lifting him from the surface. A few seconds later he hung suspended, spread eagle, a foot above the table.

Humming cheerfully to himself, Steven pulled on a pair of latex surgical gloves, and picked up a large container of foul-smelling gel. Working methodically, the artist applied the odoriferous compound all over Richard's naked body. Richard moaned in the back of his throat and tried to thrash, but the straps held him painfully still. Once Steven had coated Richard completely, aside from his scalp and eyebrows, he started a small digital timer, then helped himself to a cup of the coffee brewing in the corner. Fifteen minutes later, the timer buzzed, and Steven used a bucket of water and a stiff sponge to scrub the gel off.

Everywhere the gel was removed, Richard's body hair came with it. Each swipe of the sponge revealed more smooth, hairless flesh, where the cool air quickly raised goose pimples.

That task completed, Steven moved on. Pulling an IV stand over, he hung a large bag on the arm. With skilled dexterity, Steven inserted a needle into a vein and taped it in place, as the drugs began to drip into Richard's bloodstream.

Immediately, the world seemed to soften to Richard. His senses dimmed, especially that of touch. His body wasn't exactly numb, but none of the sensations he felt had any immediacy. Instead, his horror and outrage faded as his mind drifted aimlessly.

Having accomplished that task, Steven set about transforming Richard physically.

With a slightly demented grin, the taller artist fitted a special apparatus around Richard's body. The top part covered his denuded chin, and was the negative form into which Richard's breasts would grow. Basically a mold, it would shape and size Richard's new bust line.

And the way it would do that was via a series of small tubes that began to pump destabilized animal fat into the cells of his chest. Entering at a regulated rate, the fat would slowly enlarge the layer of subdural fat already present, to form the utterly natural breasts.

The bottom half of the same mold was basically the same thing, wrapped around Richard's buttocks, hips and legs, gradually reshaping them by adding or subtracting fat and/or muscle cells where needed.

Satisfied that his little device was working properly, Steven then placed the specially designed machined around Richard's hands and feet. Unlike the other molds, these were compression devices. They worked by creating millions of micro-fractures in the bones, and slowly compressing them back together into their new shape. A similar device was employed over Richard's face for a similar purpose.

Now came the hard part - forming a vagina for Richard. While his automated devices worked on the rest of Richard's body, Steven assembled his instruments and set to work on Richard's crotch.

Using a special monofilament fiber-optic cable, Steven could actually use a camera to see inside Richard's abdomen. By doing so, he was prepared for the 'surgery'.

First a second monofilament, this one carrying a laser beam, carefully cut the testicles free from the anchoring tissue without actually removing them. Then with two super-fine metal rods, he repositioned the testicles deep within Richard's body.

Next, he used the laser to make millions of tiny, self cauterizing cuts along Richard's penis. The technique opened up the penis, turned it inside out, and cauterized the edges to the new slit formed by the cuts, forming a function, almost natural looking cunt. The only two differences were small - the new pussy was tighter than an average woman's, with a larger, longer 'clit' that extended deep inside the newly formed cleft.

The immediate effect of the surgery was slightly gruesome. The tissue would need several days to heal properly. Which was perfect, as the process of altering Richard's figure would take approximately a week. Luckily, that part was completely automated.

Laughing to himself, Steven left the computer-controlled molds to their work, and headed off for some lunch.

* * * * *

Over the next week, Richard floated in a vague sea of drugged consciousness, only dimly aware of what was being done to him. Every day, Steven stopped in and checked to make sure everything was going correctly, and to ensure Richard was receiving enough intravenous nutrients. Day by day, Richard's body continued to become more and more feminine.

Finally, everything was ready. Smiling, Steven disconnected the molds and removed them, then lowered Richard back onto the table. Eagerly, the artist disconnected the IV drip, and injected Richard with the final drug.

As Richard began to stir, Steven elevated the table to stand upright, and wheeled a full-length mirror in front of Richard.

"Awake, sleeping beauty, and look upon what I have wrought", Steven chuckled evilly, as Richards eyelids fluttered - and opened.

Richard blinked blearily as the last of the drugs washed out of the system, and it took him several seconds to realize that he was, indeed, looking into a mirror.

"Oh my God!. NO!" he gasped, eye's going wide. In horror, he gazed at the reflection gaping back at him. Or rather, at HER.

She'd never be called beautiful, exactly. Her hips were a little too slim, and her waist and shoulders a little too wide. Her face's features were too strong. But she was definitely female - and would make 'sexy' with no problem.

Under her incongruously short, sandy blonde hair, her face was - striking. The same strong, square jaw remained, as well as the largish nose. But now, they shared the same face as higher, fuller cheekbones, full, rich lips, and sensuous, smoldering eyes.

She retained the same broad shoulders, but now they led smoothly to softer, feminine arms and shapely hands. Even the broad shoulders didn't look out of place though, as they offset admirably the firm, soft 49 DDD-cup breasts hanging from her chest. Unlike silicone implants, her new endowments weren't perfectly spherical, but a sort of oval shape almost. Thrust proudly from the apex of each breasts was a large, dark nipple, standing at attention from the chill air.

Her legs were now shapely dancer's legs, lightly muscular but well formed. They led up to the new sex between her legs, where the folds of her vagina nestled. Her new ass was full, firm and round.

The strange sensations of her new body were disconcerting. The weight of her large new tits. The cool air against her smooth, silky skin, hard, sensitive nipples, and new womanhood. She struggled to come to grips with it all.

"Good morning Lisa, how does it feel to be a woman?" Steven asked sarcastically.

She turned her head and her eyes narrowed, glittering dangerously. "You bastard." She hissed - not surprised to hear it come out in a rich, feminine voice, - "I'm going to kill you, you fucking maniac. You're DEAD, you hear me?"

Steven laughed and shook his finger. "Tsk ts. Not very nice. But, I don't think you'll kill me." "Why not" the new woman said, sneering.

Steven laughed. "The drugs I've been pumping into you have a very interesting side effect - they make a person remarkably suggestible. Basically, from now on, your subconscious mind is highly vulnerable to stimuli. Let me demonstrate..."

Stepping closer, Steven looked her right in the eye, and held up a Driver's license. The person in the photo had longer hair, and made-up on, but otherwise was a dead ringer for Richard. The name on the license was 'Lisa S. Pratt.'

"Now," Steven said, "You can't be Richard Carstairs, because not only is he a man, but he's dead. But you look just like the person in this photo. So, it must be you, right? So, tell me, what's your name?"

She sneered at whatever he was trying to prove. Just showing her some I.D. wouldn't change her name. She was still...

Her eyes widened as she struggled to frame the thought. She KNEW what her name really was, but couldn't quite get it. The thought fought to stay hidden as the other name - the one he wanted her to same - tried to force it's way into her mouth.

"Nnnn....aahh...Lisa. Lisa Pratt." She sobbed, helpless to fight it. No matter how hard she tried, that was the name that forced itself into her mind now. Her lips curled in rage, and Lisa glared murderously at Steven.

Steven leaned closer, his voice becoming softer. "Oh, come now. You're Lisa Pratt, and I'm Steven Pratt. We even look much alike. In fact, you're my twin sister. All your life, you've trusted me, and obeyed me. You'd never try to argue with me, because you love me as your brother."

"No...no..." Lisa moaned, as Steven repeated the mantra over and over. No matter how hard she tried, her rage slipped away from her replaced with other feelings. She knew the truth, new what had happened - but couldn't help herself.

Smiling, Steven released Lisa from her restraints. While, intellectually, she knew she wanted to strangle him for what he'd done to her, emotionally she felt only admiration and love for her 'brother', and she couldn't bring herself to harm him.

"Come on Lisa, I'll show you to your room."

Meekly, the new woman followed the artist, walking with a decidedly masculine gait. With every step, her new breasts bounced, reminding her what exactly had been done to her, and her own impotence to change it. Steven noticed her discomfort, and suppressed a smile as he led her through the mansion to a large, airy bedroom decorated in a decidedly feminine manner.

"Now, why don't' you get dressed and go out for a while?" Steven said, dropping the I.D. - and a rather large wad of cash - into a purse. "It's fairly early, and you can enjoy your first day en femme, as it were."

Lisa caught her breathe, hardly daring to believe. That was it? He was just going to let her walk out of here? Slowly, not daring to speak, she nodded, and Steven left the room.

Quickly, Lisa began to dress, eager to get while the getting was good. The large walk in closet was full of many different types of clothes, and she picked the ones she felt most comfortable wearing.

First, out of necessity, came a simple set of white cotton bra and panties. It took three tries to get the bra in place over her large, firm tits, and she felt damn silly wearing a bra, but it was a necessary evil.

Over that went a pair of blue jeans and a gray sweatshirt, both somewhat baggy. For footwear she chose a pair of leather strap sandals with a one and a half inch block heel.

Dressed, she snatched up the purse and purposefully headed to the front door. There was no sign of Steven, but she didn't begin to relax until she was guiding the Jeep Cherokee that the keys in 'her' purse started down the long, curving driveway.

Not having a specific destination in mind, she drove aimlessly until she reached the outskirts of the nearby city. Silently, Lisa reached a decision. Picking a hotel at random, she checked in. As she paid for the room for the night, she quickly counted the wad of cashing, discovering she had in excess of seven hundred dollars.

Her next step was to go to the mall. She was planning to get as far away from Steven as possible, and that would require some clothing, and luggage to pack it in.

It took several minutes for her to be able to enter the mall. It was just unnerving to be in public as a woman. She'd managed all right at the hotel, but that was handling a single clerk, not this thronging mass of humanity that ebbed and flowed within the enclosed confines of the mall. Finally, with a deep breath, she pushed open the door and entered the building.

All though eager to get this over with, she didn't head directly for the department store. Instead, she went to the food court. A week of intravenous feeding had left her famished, and she felt that if she didn't get some solid food, she'd probably pass out.

After a fairly large meal, she felt much better, and moved with a firm - and masculine - stride towards the department store, eager to be done with it.

Finally, heart pounding wildly, she decided she was ready.. A young man, probably a collage student, was just coming out, and he stopped to hold the door for her. He gave her a long look she'd never had directed at her before, and her heart leapt into her throat as she waited for him to demask her as a freak - then realized, with an odd, fluttery feeling in her stomach, that he was 'checking her out' - and liked what he saw. Unable to deal with this immediately, she simply ignored it, and walked on, her mind churning.

Immediately inside was the make-up counter. The attractive brunette behind the counter smiled at Lisa and said "You know Miss, we do sell hypo-allergenic make-up."

Lisa hadn't even thought of make-up before this instant, and caught by surprise at the new thought, said "Oh, I'm not allergic." The woman frowned slightly, and Lisa realized she had missed a perfect excuse.

The make-up woman smiled professionally. "You should let me give you a makeover." she said firmly. "You'll be pleased with what we can do for you." She held out her hand. "Hi. I'm Karen."

That's when Lisa discovered the true horror of what had happened. With her hyper-suggestibility, she was instantly and uncontrollably obsessed with getting a makeover.

"Girl, you just come with me. I'm going to teach you everything you need to know about make-up" Karen said, leading Lisa by the arm. Unable to help herself, she followed.

For the next half hour, Lisa got complete make-up instructions, as Karen did a complete makeover on her. Mascara made her eyelashes long and sexy. A soft pink lip-stick emphasized her full, kissable lips. Eye shadow brought out the incredible blue of her eyes. With her perfect, milky complexion, no blush or foundation was needed. She was amazed at how the makeover increased her beauty. Karen also assembled a bag of 'feminine basics', as she called it.

Lisa thanked Karen, trying to hide her inner disquiet at wearing make-up. She took her new make-up kit, and headed for the jewelry counter to pick up a watch. She got the watch - and, completely unable to turn down the saleswoman, walked away with a small bag of jewelry, and long golden earrings dangling from her newly pierced ears. It began to circulate through the staff that the woman was on some kind of spending spree, and helplessly, her will subject to the unknowing whims of the sales staff, Lisa was 'programmed' by them.

It was everything. As the stylist did her hair, she made small talk. Girl-girl type chatter. Including the comment that 'she must be proud of her breasts'. And, as soon as that was said, Lisa WAS helplessly, permanently proud of her stupendous bosom.

Another woman, in the shoe department, noticed Lisa's masculine walk. Soon after, Lisa was doing a definitely feminine walk - in four inch heels.

When she finally managed to escape, it was only because the entire wad of cash was gone. Several of the staff helped Lisa load her purchases in the Jeep as she looked on, inwardly sickened.

She was dressed in a red lace dress, revealing her muscular legs from the mid-thigh down. Her large tits pushed firmly at the low-cut neckline. She was balanced atop red spike-heel pumps, and various pieces of jewelry adorned her body. She was stunningly sexy.

Climbing behind the wheel of the Jeep, Lisa turned the vehicle back towards Steven's mansion. She realized the truth now. She couldn't escape. Every moment she spent in public was fraught with the risk that an innocent comment would further alter her mind, and there was nothing she could do about it.

Arriving at the mansion, she pulled up behind a Jag parked in the driveway and entered the house. Steven was passing through the foyer, and he smiled as he saw her new outfit.

"Well, well." He murmured cruelly. "Look at my dear sister now." Lisa was simply unable to reply to her 'brother' the way she wanted.

Steven beckoned his head. "Since Mr. Carstairs is dead and gone, I'm pitching a new manager. Why don't you grab the papers for my presentation and bring them up to the study. Mr. Williamson is waiting for me to pitch to him." Steven's smile widened. "And when you come up, I want you to do EVERYTHING you can to help me close the deal. Got it?"

Helplessly, Lisa nodded. Running down to the studio as fast as her heels would let her, she grabbed the papers and brought them up to the study, letting herself inside.

Steven was standing beside a tall, ruggedly handsome man. Steven smiled, and said to the man, "Mr. Williamson, this is my sister, Lisa, my assistant". Helplessly, the stunned Lisa found her body smiling welcome as she stepped forward and shook Mr. Williamson hand.

She gave the notes to Steven.

Mr. Williamson sank into a leather chair as Steven began his proposal. But, Mr. Williamson wasn't listening to him. Because 'Lisa' smiled helplessly at him - then sensuously knelt before him, and unzipped his pants. His rapidly hardening cock sprung free.

As 'Richard' screamed helplessly inside, Lisa began to expertly lick and caress the man's cock, then slid her soft lips around his shaft, and began to expertly, 'eagerly' give him a blowjob. He gasped, and placed his hands on her blonde hair, moaning softly at her unbelievable technique. As her long, supple tongue traveled the veined shaft, her long-nailed hands caressed his ball. It was no quick blow-job, and she expertly brought and held him at the edge for the entire twenty-minute proposal. She kept him close to cumming as Steven stepped forward. He held out a contract, and without reading it, Williamson signed. The instant he finished, Lisa applied a little more speed and suction - and was 'rewarded' with a flood of hot, salty cum, which she swallowed 'eagerly'.

They watched Mr. Williamson leave, then Steven turned to Lisa and said "Perfect, love. You got me hard watching you perform."

Lisa tried to stop the sexy body he now wore, but couldn't, as she smiled and said "We'd better take care of that." Slowly, she slid her dress off, revealing her hot, wet cunt and, setting her magnificent tits free. He sat in the same chair Williamson had, and his 'sister' lowered herself on his hard cock with a gasp of pleasure.

Steven gasped, and his hands began to massage her mountain of tit-flesh as she rode up and down his hard dick, moaning in pleasure. Lisa and 'Richard' were united in a brief instant, both of them crying out in pleasure as she began to orgasm, her spasming pussy pushing her 'brother' over the edge, and he shot his load into her.

Inside, she began to sob as Steven lightly stroked her hair and whispered "From now on, I thing my parties are going to be much more interesting, thanks to my insatiable, slutty sister."

And she knew, unwillingly, that he was right.

BACK TO FUN ZONE

SUMMARY: While jogging one man witness his old nerdy classmate transform himself into a hunk; thinking that he could do the same he sneaks in to use the invention only to discover that the switch is in the wrong direction.

Asleep At The Switch

By Gunslinger

Lungs straining to draw more oxygen from the chill fall air, Marcus Montaigne forced every muscle in his lean body to work even harder. Sweat slicked his sandy mop of hair to his head, and large, dark patches adorned his aptly-named gray sweat-suit as his sneaker-clad feet slapped a staccato rhythm on the cracked and canted sidewalk. Less than two blocks ahead lay his him, the end-point of his run...

...but, yet again, he was going to fail to make it the full distance. Though each day he grew closer to matching his planned target, Marcus' thirty-three year old body simply wasn't able to match the same feat he'd accomplished, seemingly effortlessly, a decade before. Lungs seeming to clench painfully around each deep breath, pain shooting up and down his legs and digging a deep stitch in his side, Marcus gasped out a curse and slowed his pace, the side-to-side stagger mute evidence of an athlete pushed beyond his endurance.

Both glad he'd decided to stop the slow decline and yet cursing how hard it was to get himself back into shape, the one-time high-school track star staggered painfully towards the corner, gasping for breath and shakily wiping away the rivulet of sweat that stung his eyes. Feeling as if he were about to collapse completely, the tall, lean man with the dark, intense eyes ignored private property laws and staggered across a narrow verge of autumn-browned grass. With a grateful gasp, he reached his goal - the rough, faded boards of a barn-like garage, once white-washed but now faded and peeling. Aware of the risk of splinters from the time-roughened wood, Marcus didn't let himself simply slump against the boards, but carefully eased his body to lean against the rough surface.

Leaning against the side of the barn, he worked at getting his ragged breathing closer to something resembling normal - and that's when he heard the sound.

'The sound' - that was the best way he could have described it, had he been pressed to do so. A self-acknowledged 'jock', Marcus took a perverse pride in lack of anything remotely resembling intellectual pursuits - not that he was stupid, precisely, merely willingly ignorant. In any case, his vocabulary was limited - too limited to accurately describe the thrumming eight-tone octave-shifting cyclic susurrations that met his ears.

Whatever the sound was, and whatever was making it, was coming from within the garage from which he was currently drawing support.

That fact, in and of itself, was hardly remarkable, at least to any of the local residents. Like everybody who lived within about a six-block radius from this particular street-corner, strange sounds, odd occurrences, and even the occasional explosion were all part-and-parcel of the local 'background' - for the somewhat run-down home and large, barn-like outbuilding belonged to Jerry Tubbs.

In fact, Marcus had been at the same high-school at the same time as 'Tubby' had attended... but, even then, barely knew him to see him, as they had traveled in completely different social circles. More accurately, 'Tubby' - known as such more for his portly build than his last name - hadn't moved in any social circles at all, being the epitome of utter nerdness. Now, living and working at home, Tubby eked out a living on the scant few of his inventions that; a) Didn't blow up, b) Actually worked, and, c) Whose purpose was actually useful enough that somebody would pay money for it.

Tubby was an inventor, all right - but not a particularly good one. Oh, there was no doubt at all that he was smart, perhaps even genius level smart - but actually building things was another thing all together. Even the ones that worked tended to have a very 'slap-dash' feel to them.

All of this Marcus knew, more from anecdotal stories he'd picked up than any real interest in learning anything at all about Tubby. After all, Marcus was proud of his ignorance, and had little curiosity about 'scientific things', as he mentally labeled what Tubby did.

Unfortunately for Marcus, 'little curiosity' was a world away from 'no curiosity'. Had his indifference been total, things would have turned out very differently indeed for Marcus, as he would have caught his breath and simply continued on his way...

...but that didn't happen.

Instead, what little curiosity he did have pricked by the strange sound he heard, Marcus doomed himself by leaning forward slightly, raising himself up on tip-toe, and peering through the dusty pane of glass that served as a window.

The second fact that sealed Marcus' fate was that it took him a few seconds to realize what he was seeing. If, in the instant of that first glance, he'd realized he was looking at Tubby sitting naked in some sort of 'souped-up' chair, Marcus would have immediately looked away in disgust.

However, as it took him those few seconds to realize what it was that he saw, it meant that Marcus also saw enough to see Tubby getting... less tubby.

In fact, in front of Marcus' shocked eyes, the short, dark-haired and previously overweight man was shedding pounds by the second.

More than that - the weight wasn't just melting away, but seemingly converting at least some of that mass into musculature. As Marcus watched, slack-jawed, the figure twitching and vibrating against the straps that held him into what looked like a highly modified barber's chair was rapidly gaining a god-like physique.

Stunned, Marcus simply stood at the window and stared in shocked amazement as the process completely itself, and the chair's straps automatically released Tubby....

No - Jerry, for if there was one thing he no longer was 'tubby' would be it. Though no taller than he was before, and so more than just a little on the short side, the figure the pulled itself out of the chair had the hard-muscled body any Olympic-class athlete would have envied - and he'd acquired it in the few scant minutes Marcus had been watching at the window.

If his muscle-packed new body was the envy of any athlete, then his new manhood would have been any male porn-star's...

"Holy shit " Marcus whispered to himself - and then, quickly, yanked his face away from the window before there were any chance that Jerry - currently occupied in admiring his own physique - could possibly notice.

Careful to keep from being seen, mind turning the idea that had come to him over and over, Marcus crept on silent feet away from the garage...

* * * * *

As a chill autumn darkness closed about the neighborhood, Marcus slipped on stealthy feet through the trees and shrubbery marking that back of Jerry's lot, every nerve on high alert as he carefully watched to make sure he traveled unseen.

He reached a dark, shadowed corner of the lot and paused. Carefully, he pushed a low-hanging branch out of the way - and cursed.

The dilapidated house was completely dark, while from the dusty windows of the garage, light streamed.

For a second, Marcus considered his options - but, not being an intellectual giant, found he didn't have very many of them to consider.

Well, if stealth wouldn't work...

Boldly, he strode from the trees and walked confidently towards the barn-like building. Rounding the back corner, he continued along the side of the barn furthest from the street, trying to mix boldness with a certain amount of 'deniability' in case things went wrong. Reaching the front of the building, he banged hard and fast on the door - but, nervous about being seen, he didn't wait for Jerry to open the door, and quickly opened it and stepped through himself.

"Hey!" He said in a loud, boisterous tone. "Jerry, my man, was just going by and..."

Marcus stopped in mid-sentence and -stride, eyebrow rising as he took in the scene in front of him.

'The chair' - or whatever Jerry called the jury-rigged device he'd created - took up the center portion of the concrete floor. Some distance away, in the back corner of the structure, was a long folding table, on which rested a variety of electronic equipment, including two computers and a large wide- screen plasma display. Seated in front of this table, in a rolling 'executive' chair, was Jerry. A pair of old-style headphone, so huge they seemed to envelope his head rather than simply cover his ears, were turned up so loud that the soundtrack of the 'T&A' movie playing on the screen was clearly audible...

...and yet, despite that fact, Jerry, his hard-bodied new physique rapped in a tattered plaid bathrobe, was slumped forward, headphone-encased head cradled by the crossed arms that, in turn, were resting atop a decidedly haphazard-looking control board.

From both posture and the loud, unmusical snoring, it was abundantly obvious that Jerry was sound asleep.

"HEY, JERRY!" Marcus screamed at the top of his not-inconsiderably lungs. "WAKE THE FUCK UP!"

Jerry twitched twice, rhythmic snores faltering for a second - and then he snorted twice, and went right back to snoring.

Marcus grinned.

Making absolutely no effort to be quite, much more interested in getting this over and done with as quickly as possible, Marcus began to strip. He'd wondered how he was going to convince Jerry to let him use the machine, and had settled on the threat, (or, if necessary, the application), of physical force. As things had turned out, the situation was positively ideal - if Jerry slept through the mere minutes-long transformation, he wouldn't even know Marcus had used his machine.

The idea of wondering about such things as 'settings', 'safeties', or even how the device was activated not even occurring to him, Marcus settled himself into the chair - and got incredibly lucky...

...though whether it was incredibly good luck or incredibly bad was open to debate.

As usual, the safe and easy use of the device he was building hadn't even been a factor in Jerry's 'design' - which, in and of itself, was a description-begging term, since Jerry never actually designed his inventions. They practically 'grew', in an almost organic manner, as he simply bolted, soldered, or screwed the next piece in wherever it occurred to him to do so. For that reason, the 'activation switch' was more random chance than planned control - indeed, the jury-rigged console on which Jerry now slumbered was the actual control panel of the chair....

...and it was in the 'on' position, just as Jerry had thoughtlessly left it when he'd finished his own transformation earlier that afternoon.

That being the case, when Marcus sat down in the chair, the pressure-plate under the seat cushion registered his weight, and activated the pre-programmed cycle - also the exact same on Jerry had used that afternoon.

All in all, by pure luck, everything was going just as Marcus could have wished. The device was on, the settings already configured - though for a 'little too much of a good thing', had Marcus but known it, for it had been set to change the considerably less fit and lesser endowed Jerry.

The seat was fitted with automatic restraints - a necessity, as the electrical surges that the machine sent through the body as part of the process would have knocked the person right off the seat had they not been there. They snapped closed, and the machine started up a cycle that, had things just gone they way they were, would have made Marcus a hyper-muscular, hyper-endowed caricature of masculinity...

...had it continued as it was.

As the machine began it's cycle, however, and even as Marcus exulted at actually being able to feel his muscles hardening, his manhood swelling, the rhythmic cycling of the very sound that had first attracted Marcus' attention earlier that day filled the room.

Like Marcus' shout, the sound managed to stir Jerry, without waking him. His snores faltered, he twitched violently twice - and then settled back into sleep once more.

One of those twitches, however, had shoved a short control lever, previously set about one-third of the way towards a very crudely drawn stick-figure of a man, all the way to the other end of it's track.

Just as Marcus had been able to feel the hyper-masculinity the machine was feeding into his body by whatever unknown means by which it operated, so could he feel it stop and reverse itself. He couldn't help but know what was happening to him - which is to say, he knew that it wouldn't be a 'him' that it was happening to much longer, since he could feel his body rapidly becoming more feminine.

Which, in and of itself, caused it's own problem - for his mind was changing, too - literally. As the bones and muscles of his face began to change, so did the actual, physical brain inside - and, as it was 'rebuilt', certain thoughts, the most intense ones, were so strong that, instead of being re- formed as temporary pathways, such as any random, fleeting thought might form, they were being 'hardwired' into his new brain...

...and, unfortunately for the person Marcus was becoming, those thoughts being hard-wired all had to do with Jerry.

With 'attracting him', getting his attention, making him be closer to Marcus physically...

...with needing Jerry, in other words.

While Marcus wasn't aware of this particular change occurring, he-becoming-she was all-too-aware of the other one. Due to the fact that this was a much greater transformation in scope than Jerry's had been, it was taking much longer - but that very fact seemed to draw it out, make it all the more torturous...

...and giving him/her all the incentive he/she needed to scream much, much louder than she/he ever thought possible, in an androgynous voice that was nevertheless more than enough to cut through the steadily more torturous sounds the rapidly overloading machine was making.

"JEEEEERRRRRRYYYYY!!!!!"

"Huh... Whazzit...?" Jerry stammered fuzzily, sitting bolt-upright in his chair as the scream registered. He whirled around - and stared in wide-eyed confusion and growing horror at the figure thrashing helplessly in the grip of his invention.

The inventor had no idea what was going on, how somebody had ended up in his transmatron, or who that person was - but two things were at least blindingly obvious to his quick wits:

The person in the chair was, barely, still male, but rapidly becoming less so...

...and his machine, which he'd envisioned as making men more masculine or women more feminine, had never been designed to make a man feminine, and was well past the 'red-line' and still pumping ever-more power through sizzling, snapping, arcing circuits.

"Holy shit!" Jerry blurted, quickly reaching towards the control board. His hand made contact with the metal control panel - and Marcus watched in horror as a bolt of electricity slammed through Jerry's massively muscular body, throwing him backwards, right out of the chair and sprawling on the ground.

Even as she/he watched this, she felt the last bit of masculinity flee her body, leaving her boyishly feminine - but not for long, as more and more power surged through her rapidly altering body.

Then the control panel exploded in a burst of sparks, and flames began to run down the melting casing of the over-heated wires that nevertheless continued to power the machine, and Marcus' rapidly increasing transformation.

The increasingly feminine woman watched with growing despair as Jerry shook his head and staggered uncomfortably to his feet, staring at the spreading mass of flames engulfing his workshop. She watched as his head turned, and she could see where he was looking - at a big red switch marked 'Sprinkler System'.

She knew, KNEW that she was going to die - and, worse, die as a woman. With the casing melted off the wires, electricity surged everywhere, and when Jerry hit that switch, the resulting conductivity of the falling water would fry her like... well, she didn't even want to picture it, which was lucky for her, as it would have been indelibly printed on her now unbelievably susceptible brain.

Instead, that incredibly suggestible mind turned to utter despair - which, a split second before that despair would have been forever imprinted on her mind, turned to utter awe and amazement as Jerry, having reached the same conclusion as Marcus, ignored the big red switch - and, instead, threw himself unhesitatingly into the flames and showering sparks surrounding his invention, and the emphatically feminine form trapped within.

Knowing that she, herself, would never do it made her admiration for Jerry's selflessness all the greater - and imprinted it all the more firmly on her changing brain as Jerry manfully waded through sparks that stung his back, face averted from the heat of the flames licking around him.

Though touching the electricity-laden chair caused him to jerk and tremble, Jerry used his massive new musculature to tear open the restraints and free the woman Marcus had become. Stumbling and staggering, with the new-woman's form protectively cradled within his strong arms, Jerry made his way over to the door beside the big red switch and, at the same moment, slammed through the door while hitting the switch with one broad hand.

Even as the sudden inrush of oxygen from the opened door began to fan the flames, the high- pressure sprinkler system sprang to life with more than enough power to save the structure itself, if not any of the inventions or equipment that had been inside. The sudden blast of high-pressure water only served to push Jerry more quickly through the opening, gasping in shock at the ice-cold water against his super-heated skin. Even as the sprinklers began to douse the fire, Jerry eased Marcus' emphatically feminine body to the ground...

...and then he passed out cold.

Marcus, naked and shivering in the cold night air, sat up and looked down at herself. One look was all it took to realize the full extent of the change that had happened to her, one look at one attribute of her new body and horror rushed in as she knew what she'd become. She opened her mouth to let out a piercing scream at the horror of what had happened, a horror greater than anything she'd ever felt - a horror that came from the deepest, darkest nightmare her basically chauvinistic brain had ever conceived of.

Except that scream never emerged.

The instant before it would have burst full-force from the new woman slender neck, her eyes happened upon Jerry's soaked body shivering even more violently in the cold air, going ever deeper into shock...

...and her 'worse horror' became nothing in the face of the overwhelming compulsive-thoughts that her rewired brain made absolutely necessary.

With no thoughts at all about herself, Marcus rose gingerly atop her dainty, shapely feet and made her way over to Jerry's prone body. Being oh-so-careful not to gouge Jerry's skin with her long nails, she gently, nay, lovingly took hold of him with her slender hands.

Though Jerry was a massively muscled model of masculinity, and she a fragile feminine figure, she was still the good foot taller than he, as the transformation didn't affect height at all. Though delicately formed in many ways, her new female body was nevertheless perfectly physically fit, toned if not muscular - and none of that mattered, as, regardless of form, she would still have begun dragging Jerry's body towards his house, as she now did.

She was incapable of doing anything else. After all - Jerry was her God.

Not that she consciously thought of him that way - for, in her hard-wired brain, this was her truest, most basic 'known fact'. She wasn't even aware of the fact that her entire worldview had shifted in order for Jerry's new divinity to take central stage, for she was utterly incapable of even questioning the thought.

She needed Jerry. He was everything, she was nothing. Without his attention, without his 'perfect' presence, she would die.

This was not her 'thought' - it was unquestioned fact, for her malleable brain, while in the chair, had imprinted on the situation at the time. She would have died had she not had his attention, if he had not come to her, lifted her from the chair - but while the situation had changed, her mind was now incapable of changing it's hard-wired 'knowledge'. So, no other thought at the moment was possible other than saving her God, for she knew if she failed, she would die.

It was a long, slow struggle - and not once did she think of calling for help. That hard-wired part of her brain made any subsidiary thoughts impossible - for then next twenty minutes, nothing went on in her mind but the obsessive need that drove her.

The corner lot was dark. The high-pressure system had both doused the flames and finished off the electrical system in the garage, and the house had been dark when she arrived. Though the smell of electrical smoke hung in the air, the dissipating plume from the open door was invisible against the darkness of the night, and, in any case, people in the neighborhood were used to strange goings-on.

Which, in it's own way, was a real shame, for not a few of the men in the area would have very much liked to be present at the scene, would probably have liked to help her with the burden she was lugging around...

...and it wouldn't have been Jerry's limp body they'd meant.

It was the truly stupendous 'rack' that would have seemed the more important 'handicap' to help her with.

She was blonde. She was incredibly busty... and she was about as far from a 'bimbo' as you could get.

Six foot, two inches tall. Fine-boned and delicately jointed, supple and well-toned like an incredibly leggy gymnast. Broad, well-rounded hips and an hourglass waist. Facial features looking like a blend of Charlize Theron and a blonde-complexioned Elizabeth Hurley. A thick mass of loose, honey-blond hair - and magnificently firm, round breasts like a ripe pair of melons.

In fact - the woman Marcus had become bore a startling resemblance to the idealized woman portrayed in modern comic books...

All in all, a thoroughly gorgeous, incredibly sexy example of womanhood - which explained Jerry's first reaction when he regained consciousness.

In fact, it was an utterly understandable reaction as his slowly-rousing mind became aware of various sensations.

The first thing he became aware of was the fact that he was completely naked.

The second was that he was warm and really remarkably comfortable. Part of that was the fact that he'd been laid on the worn but comfortably broken-in couch near the fireplace, which was putting out both a welcoming warmth and a flickering, golden light.

A golden light that seemed to caress the flawlessly smooth skin of his second and much more immediately noticeable form of warmth - the 'living blanket' of the woman cuddled close to him, long legs entwined in his own, slender arms clasping him close - and a pair of stunningly spectacular breasts pressed firmly against his chest.

So, in all fairness, it wasn't the least bit surprising that Jerry's muddled, bemused mind might have jumped to the conclusion that he was still mostly asleep and simply having an incredibly vivid sexual dream. After all, not was there an impossible sexy woman pressed up against his body, but that body itself was hard-chiseled and muscular... and, at the moment, the memory of himself being changed into this form wasn't sharp enough to combat his instinctive self-image of his 'real' body...

...so, he pulled the warm, lush body closer, and kissed her.

Now, of course, Jerry had been unconscious, and so the 'break' in his linear awareness meant that he was seeing/experiencing the situation fresh, without the anchor of continuous awareness.

Marcus, on the other hand, had been aware the entire time... sort of. Though conscious, her overriding need to care for her 'God' had limited the actual mental experience... until, having started the fire, stripped him down, towed him dry, and cuddled up to him to provide him with her body- heat. Once that was done, her mind, realizing Jerry was out of danger, had allowed new thoughts to once more begin to form - and that had allowed her to realize that she was pressing her naked body against a man's, and she had begun to feel decidedly uncomfortable about it.

It was at this point, when her just-realized mind was realizing the sexual implications of holding her new form tight against Jerry's now emphatically male body that the still half-bemused Jerry cupped one hand behind her head, burying his fingers in her wealth of honey-wheat hair... and kissed her.

That's when, with growing horror, she discovered the other aspect of her mental deification of Jerry. She couldn't resist him.

That was the most literal truth. Whether she wanted to let him kiss her or not - and, in fact, she most decidedly did not - she still didn't have any choice in the matter. Locked into her brain was the fact that Jerry was her God, that his will meant everything and hers meant nothing. So, when God kissed you, you not only let him - you kissed back.

She simply couldn't stop herself. Though her eyes were wide in horror, her lips and tongue moved easily, as if she were kissing him back willingly, rather than 'forced' to do so. In movies, to make the point that somebody 'brain-washed' or 'hypnotized' or otherwise working against their will, the motions were either slow and unemotional, or jerky and barely coordinated. In reality, however, her unwilling response to his kiss seemed as utterly natural as if she were a willing participant.

As the kiss deepened, growing more passionate, Jerry placed one hand on the smooth, warm flesh of her hip, then slowly let it move upwards, caressing her supple flesh, until it reached the firm curve of one full, softly-firm breast, and there it began to lightly squeeze and fondle her sensitive new endowment.

Then, as he came more awake, both caress and kiss faltered as Jerry began to realize that this was, in fact, real - and who, exactly this 'dream goddess' was...

...or, more to the point, who she'd been such a short time ago.

It was, however, far, far too late for Marcus - for she'd realized something herself.

She didn't - couldn't - know where her obsessive need for Jerry came from. She couldn't understand the origin of her compulsion to be near him, her strange certainty that, without him, she would die... but she was aware of it, oh yes. Though her mind rebelled at it, tried to convince her that it wasn't true, her emotions were now 'hard wired', and she couldn't break the chain of thought that left her with a helpless, compulsive certainty that she NEEDED to be with Jerry.

That, in and of itself, wasn't in any way overtly sexual - but Jerry had been most obviously enjoying her body, kissing her and touching her with a very obvious sign of his enjoyment as his remarkable new manhood had swiftly hardened.

Had he not already touched her, that wouldn't have mattered much, for the new 'mind-set' wasn't precisely that of a 'slave' - while she was helpless to resist Jerry, she hadn't been 'pre-programmed' to need to please him in any particular way. She 'merely' couldn't have actively acted in any way that she knew would have displeased him...

...and therein lay the rub.

As Jerry's mind came fully awake, she SAW the dawning realization in his eyes - and, thanks to her compulsion to be near him at all times, her mind couldn't help but swiftly leap into high-gear, quickly considering what Jerry might be thinking and feeling at that particular instant...

'He's realizing who I really am, or at least who I was - a man,' she thought.

'He finds my new body incredibly sexy, and enjoys touching it - but he's quickly becoming uncomfortable at the knowledge that I wasn't born female,' she surmised.

'He's confused, because I didn't react the way he expected,' she realized as she watched his brow knit, all in that 'slow time' that came from the hyper-speed at which her mind was working at the moment.

'That 'inexplicable fact' is the only thing keeping him from immediately pushing me away in disgust,' she considered.

'So - he must find my new form so incredibly sexy that, if I were willing, he'd be at least willing to consider continuing to act sexually with me... but if I in any way reveal how I actually feel, or even hint that I was in any way 'enslaved' or acting of anything other than my own free will, he'd definitely be disgusted and horrified. He's too fundamentally decent to 'take advantage' of a woman consciously, and to think he'd done it unconsciously would be almost like torture for him...' She concluded.

...and since that led straight to the possibility that he might not be able to bear being around her, if that happened, her 'pre-programming' forced her onto a single course of action, the only one she could come up with that would guarantee that he wouldn't withdraw from her - and it didn't matter in the least that that course of action was, in and of itself, a form of living hell for HER.

Well - other than the fact implicit in her realizations meant she could never, ever give any hint of the time of hell she was going to be experiencing.

All of this flashed through her mind in but an instant - and once she'd reached her conclusion, her compulsive need for Jerry meant she had absolutely no choice but to 'play out' the fate she'd just planned out for herself.

"Thank you..." She whispered, doing her best to sound both utterly sincere and remarkably sexy. She kissed him again, hungrily, hating what she was doing, but having no option in the matter. "Oh, Jerry, thank you, thank you, thank you..."

She kissed him again, this time almost hungrily... while her slender hands began to roam over his body in a decidedly sexual manner, despite the soundless sobs of horrified disgust that sounded in the vaults of her mind.

"Wh... I..." Jerry stammered, as she broke this, his body responding almost against his will to her touch. "Marcus... what the hell...?"

"Marci - call me Marci..." She murmured lovingly into his ear, nibbling lightly at his lobe with her full new lips. "Marci Mountains."

"Marci... Mountains?" He repeated in a stunned voice... and then he drew back, actually cringing from her.

A wave of near-panic swept over her... and, at least for a moment, any hesitation, and doubts or disgust, anything that might have interfered in keeping her close to him vanished, and she WAS the person she was 'pretending' to be...

"What... a little too blatant?" She asked, with a soft, sweet chuckle. "I mean, I know it's a bit, shall we say... 'evocative' - but all these years, in all my hopeless dreams of someday finding a way to make my deepest, most secret fantasy come true, the type of woman I've always wanted to become was the super-sexual type who would quite willingly have such a name."

For the moment, she actually believed that to be true - she actually, honestly, and completely believed that she had willingly come to Jerry's lab in order to turn herself into a woman. At the moment, she actually felt the overwhelming joy of having a life-long and, until now, utterly unobtainable dream finally come true.

"Jerry, my love, my sweet, my... my living God..." She muttered sensuously in his ear - with utter, loving conviction. "Thank you, thank you so much, for finally letting me be the person I've always wanted to be - the person I've dreamed my entire life of becoming, always knowing it was an impossible dream, until you came to make my fantasy a reality."

"You... You wanted to turn yourself into... this woman?" Jerry said, stunned - but with a note of consideration in amongst the confusion.

Jerry, asleep, hadn't known it was accident that had changed the slider's position - and so, bright as he was in many ways, if he accepted her very sincere-sounding words, then it was quite possible that she'd been in the midst of willingly transforming herself into this bombshell blonde...

"Oh, more than you could ever imagine..." She assured him "...and you're the one who made it possible! Thank you, my beloved, my sweet dream-maker. Thank you so much... and, while we're at it, thank you for this..."

She gave his rock-hard new body a little squeeze - and smiled wickedly.

"It was just sooo considerate of you to give yourself such a hot body..." She cooed seductively. "I mean, I'm so unbelievably grateful for what you've done for me, I would have let you do anything you wanted with this wonderful new body you made possible. That's all it would have been, though - gratitude. This body, however... now, this body turns me on, gets me hot..."

Since she actually believed all of this, at least at that moment, she was, in fact, highly - and quite obviously - aroused, something Jerry couldn't help but notice.

"...but best of all, my love..." She whispered, as she shifted her body around, rising above him even as she grasped his wrists and brought his hands up to her magnificent breasts.

"...you turned out not only to be a genius, and now an incredibly hot, sexy genius - but, though I should be sorry for burning your lab, I can't be, for it also showed me what a kind, wonderful, giving man you are. The type of wonderful man that even a new-minted woman like me couldn't help but falling madly, passionately, head-over-heels in love with."

"...love...?" Jerry squeezed in a wanting-but-not-daring-to-believe sort of voice.

"Yes, my dearest, sweetest, most wonderful; selfless darling - love." She whispered back with such utter conviction that Jerry couldn't help but be convinced - and then she showed him a wonderful wicked smile, and continued; "...and since you are such a wonderfully giving man, I know you wouldn't even think of denying me what I want most at this very moment."

"What's that...?" Jerry asked, confused, mind trying desperately to catch up to what should have been an utterly 'impossible' situation.

"This..." She whispered - and settled the oh-so-ready warm dampness of her new womanhood to envelop his hard, throbbing shaft.

Then lovingly, tenderly, sweetly - she fucked his ever-living brains out.

Jerry had never experienced anything like it. Hardly a ladies man, he'd at least had a few sexual experiences, but they'd been the fumbling, uncertain, 'too aware of his own faults and failures' type. This time, there was no chance to even consider himself in that - or ANY - light... as every move, every moan, every whispered endearment Marci gave him was too utterly full of the conviction of love for him to doubt that she was enjoying it every bit as much as he, physically - but even more-so on an emotional level!

Which was completely accurate - for, as she rocked atop him, his hands caressing her feminine new figure, she was in such an utterly content state of happiness of a kind she had never even dreamt existed, something so rare and purely powerful that perhaps one person in a billion ever got to experience such total and utter love...

...and then, as her first female orgasm ripped through her and she knew, KNEW, that she was his and he hers, the need for 'Marci' vanished, and 'Marcus' was allowed to return - return to the most hellish realization of all.

To be cast into your worst hell, to spend the rest of your life in a situation seemingly designed to cater to your worst fears, was one thing - but to have been shown a taste of heaven, one that you knew would never occur again, was something else...

...but the very worst thing of all was that, even as she settled into his arms with a warm smile and whispered endearments, was the fact that she was now and forever incapable of in any way expressing the hellish horror that the realization brought.

No - she was 'Marci Mountains', and it was her final and forever fiendish fate that she must at all times exact exactly as if her own personal hell was, in fact, heaven.

THE END

BACK TO FUN ZONE

SUMMARY: A wanna be script writer cast a spell so that all his lines are used and that all his work will be "attributed" to him, little does he know how his own words will change him.

Attributed Lines

By Gunslinger

When you're fifty pounds over weight, nearly fish-belly white from a nearly complete lack of exposure to the sun, and have the loose, sagging skin that came from a near-total absence of exercise, nudity is not your friend.

Yet, Jake Conte was nude. Not only was he nude - but he was sitting, stark naked, in the center of his living room, feeling both ridiculous and stupid.

Even stranger than the dark-haired man's state of undress, however, was that it had little to do with his emotional state.

No, the twenty-nine-year-old man was feeling utterly ridiculous because he was sitting dead-center in a pentagram he'd chalked on the hardwood floor, surrounded by a ring of black taper candles...

...and he was feeling particularly stupid because he'd just cast an occult 'summoning' - and there'd been absolutely no effect.

"Geez - I am such a dork..." Jake muttered, blowing out the candles and awkwardly rising from his crouch. Shaking his head, he quickly wrapped the bathrobe he'd tossed on the sofa around his pudgy frame, and began tidying up the mess.

Jake couldn't believe he'd actually tried it. That, of course, was bad enough - but he'd actually believed it would work, which was worse.

Shaking his head again, he picked up the heavy, black-leather-bound old book he'd taken the 'spell' from. It was one of many 'occult' items in his eclectic collection - a collection he maintained was for 'business purposes'.

Jake, after all, was a scriptwriter. He wrote horror movies. Oh, certainly they weren't 'classics', and many people tended to denigrate them as being 'T&A' films, but they paid well enough that Jake not only made a fairly good living, but could afford to keep expanding his collection of 'mood and inspiration props', as he called his collection.

"You've been doing this too long, Jake ol' boy..." He muttered to himself, returning the book to the shelf from whence it came. "You actually thought it would work..."

Though making a good income, Jake had steadily been finding himself wanting more from his job. Not a lot more, as he thought of it - in fact, as he'd come to believe, not any more than his due. He'd been involved in steadily more bitter arguments with the studios over the way they were 'trashing' his work, editing out parts of it. Equally as bad, quite often the studio would then claim that the work was so heavily edited that it be attributed to 'Lou Slee' - the 'trade name' for a committee-created script.

Annoyed, Jake had been moved to try something as preposterous as casting a spell that specified that '...not only would every single line from his last script get used, but that it would be directly attributed to me'.

Well, it hadn't worked any better than the arguments he'd made to the studios. He'd cast the spell, exactly as outlined - but there'd been no fireworks, no sudden thunderstorm centered directly over his house, not even an 'eerie breeze' to blow the candles out.

In fact, there'd been absolutely nothing. Zip. Zilch. Nada. Dick-all.

Snorting at himself, Jake decided that what he really needed was a drink. Since he typically didn't keep any booze in the house - the temptation of which might have interfered with his writing - he headed off to get dressed so he could head down to the local bar.

WISHMAKER IV - Final Edit (Scene 2)

TAMMY

Geez, girl - are you doing your make-up, or painting the Sistine Chapel? Come on, we're going to be late!

CINDI

Okay, I've got my make-up on. I'm ready, let's go...!

Paying the driver, Jake then stood and watched as the yellow cab disappeared into the night, its tail-lights vanishing as it turned the corner.

Though the faded brown leather flight-jacket he wore over his jeans and denim shirt were adequate even against the chill of the autumn night, he shivered nonetheless.

Every time he came down to the bar here, the area seemed spookier and spookier. Most of the businesses were boarded up or empty, and the few that were still operating were, to put it nicely, 'run down'. This time of night, the place seemed a veritable ghost-town, and the cab's disappearance had only heightened the impression.

The door to the seedy bar behind him swung open, and the spill of light and sound broke the spell. Turning, Jake watched a man dressed in tattered old army-surplus clothes stagger out. Jake stepped towards the door that was swinging shut...

"Okay, I've got my make-up on." Jake found himself telling the drunk. Confused, and wondering why the hell that had popped out of his mouth, Jake ignored the other man's drunken, slurred response, not even really hearing it as he slowly opened the door and stepped inside.

Why the hell would he have said something like that...? Mind mulling over the strange comment - and the even stranger way it had just popped out of his mouth - Jake made his across the dark, smoky, nearly empty room to the bar...

"Hey, you...!" One of the few men at the bar slurred angrily, staring at him. "This ain't that kind of bar. Get out."

"What...?" Jake said, startled. "What are you talking about? Look, I just want a drink or two..."

The bartender, an older woman with too many hard miles on her, wandered over. With a cynical look, she gave Jake the once-over, then pulled the dangling cigarette from her lips.

"Makes no never mind to me, honey..." She said, with a shrug. "You got money, I sell you booze, an' I don't care how you look. What'll it be?"

"Beer, thanks..." Jake said, even more confused. She went off to get it...

"Fuckin' sissies drinkin' in my bar..." The man who'd accosted Jake said, getting up and heading for a private booth. Jake watched him go, wondering what the hell that was all about...

"Here you go, honey..." The bartender said behind him, and Jake counted out the cash and handed it to her. He lifted the bottle to his lips...

...and sprayed a mouthful of beer over the bar.

He'd just caught sight of his reflection in the mirror behind the bar.

"What the...?" Jake gasped, staring wide-eyed at the pale apparition that aped the expression in the mirror.

He was wearing make-up.

Bright, hot-pink lipstick, glossy and outlined in an even deeper shade. Mascara and eye-liner. fuchsia eye-shadow. Even blush. Not a subdued scheme to begin with, the make-up stood out like neon against his pale skin.

Even his eyebrows had been tweezed into thin, high arches. "Holy fucking shit...!" Jake blurted.

WISHMAKER IV - Final Edit (Scene 3)

BILL

(Fumbling with the Jade Box)

Damn.. I can't get this damned thing open...

LISA

Here, I'll do it (Waggles hands)

I've got nice long nails.

"Somethin' wrong with the beer, honey...?" The bartender asked, dryly, wandering over. Jake turned to her, opened his mouth to exclaim...

...and said: "I've got nice long nails."

He blinked, stunned. The bartender glanced at his hands.

"Yeah, you sure do, honey..." She said, one penciled-on eyebrow rising as she calmly took another puff of her cigarette.

Jake looked down at his hands - and his already bulging eyes nearly popped from their sockets. Each finger was now surmounted by a long, oval nail.

Each painted the same glossy, bright pink shade as his lips had inexplicably become. "I..." Jake said to her, mouth gaping. "But..."

Giving up on trying to explain the inexplicable, Jake turned and fled to the bathroom.

Banging through the door into the small, foul-smelling room, Jake hastily ripped a handful of course brown paper towel from the dispenser. Standing in front of the mirror, he began scrubbing at his face.

The make-up didn't even smear.

Heart pounding, head swimming, Jake sprayed water onto the towels and tried again. With the same lack of results.

"What the fuck is going on here...!" Jake shouted at his reflection.

WISHMAKER IV - Final Edit (Scene 3)

LISA

(Urgently)

Hurry up, Tammy! We've got to tell Bill about this before he opens the box!

TAMMY

I'm going as fast as I can!

LISA

Why the hell did you have to wear such high heels!

TAMMY

I love the sexy wiggle in my walk that six-inch stilettos give me!

The toilet in the center stall flushed noisily, and the door banged open.

A skinny black man with red eyes stepped out, accompanied by a fragrant whiff of marijuana. Blinking, he gazed blearily at Jake.

"What's all the yellin' about...?" He asked, vaguely. Jake turned....

"I love the sexy wiggle in my walk that six inch stilettos give me!" He exclaimed to his own horror...

...and, even more horrifyingly, ,he found his view-point shifting, the room seeming to shrink slightly but that was merely an illusion.

It was that his eyes had risen to a higher vantage point. Gloss-pink lips gaping loosely, Jake stared down at his feet.

Feet that were clad in black leather shoes that were a highly modified design of the 'Mary Jane' style. Though retaining the strap just forward of the ankle, and the rounded toe, they were radically arched upwards to accommodate the six-inch tall stiletto heel each shoe boasted.

A second later, what was even 'more wrong' with the shoes registered. They were too small, too narrow to have ever fit his feet.

His feet had shrunk to a 'suitably' feminine dimension, as well. "Oh, shit !" Jake screamed.

"Whoa " the pot-head said, pulling a thick doobie out of his shirt pocket and staring at it. "This is some powerful shit "

Jake had to get home. Somehow, this had to be related to that spell he'd cast. The things he'd said.. well, he hadn't memorized them word-for-word, but he was pretty sure they'd been in his script - and magic was the only 'logical' explanation for the illogical situation that was happening.

Turning, he headed out of the bathroom...

...and found himself walking with that 'sexy wiggle', but jiggling ridiculously as his hips swiveled and swayed with every mincing step he took, high-heels clicking on the linoleum floor.

Unable to face walking through the barroom in this fashion, Jake turned right, instead of left, and pushed open the back door that led into the dark alley that ran behind the bar.

As quickly as he could manage with his sexy, sissyish new gait, he hurried down the alleyway, being chased by the echoes of high heels meeting cracked pavement.

WISHMAKER IV - Final Edit (Scene 4)

CINDI

Oh, damn it - another rejection! It's my voice, they said...

BILL/THE DJINN

(Chuckles)

Are you saying you wish your voice was different...?

CINDI

Hell, yeah! I wish my voice was a lot more distinctive...

BILL/THE DJINN

Very well, my dear - Granted.

CINDI

What's that supposed to... (Clutches throat)

My voice.. what's happening to.. It's... It's getting so high pitched. I.. What's happening? My voice is so high pitched! I sound like a bimbo!

(Voice continues going up into an incoherent squeal. Glass table shatters. BILL/THE DJINN laughs...)

Hesitating at the corner, Jake carefully peeked around to make sure nobody could see him.

Satisfied, he wiggled his way to the phone-booth, grateful that the overhead light in the small enclosure was long-dead.

Picking up the phone, he cursed the long, blood-red nails as he jabbed out a number on the dial pad. When the bored voice on the other end of the line identified the cab company, Jake opened his mouth to get a cab...

"My voice is so high pitched!" Jake told the dispatcher in a voice that was really, really high and breathy. "I sound like a bimbo!"

"...excuse me?"

Jake had only faintly heard the startled question - because his long-nailed fingers had uncurled around the receiver, letting it drop, and were now curled around his slimmer throat - one that lacked his perilously prominent Adam's apple.

"My voice... oh my God, my voice...!" Jake gasped, hearing that high-pitched, undeniably 'girlie' voice emerge from the altered throat again, slipping past his glossy lips.

Snapping out of the shock that voice induced, Jake grabbed up the receiver.

WISHMAKER IV - Final Edit (Scene 5)

LISA

(Bitterly)

Nobody's listening to me. I feel like the 'unattractive geek girl' in all those 60's B-movies.

STEVE

(Distracted)

Hmm...? Did you say something...?

LISA

(Snort)

Apparently not. Look, I don't think we should split...

STEVE

Okay - so we'll split up. I'll handle Lewis, and you walk over to the library and check out that book. I'll pick you up there and drive you home.

LISA

(Muttered)

Yup - I'm the girl with the huge bouffant hairdo and the horn-rimmed glasses... (To Steve)

I'm soooo glad you have everything so firmly under control, your Lordship. You know, maybe I'll just walk home - and see if I can't pick up a couple of cute guys along the way...

STEVE

Lisa, are you mad at me...?

"Hello...?" Jake said urgently into the phone. "I need a cab - are you still there...?"

"Yeah..." The dispatcher acknowledged, warily. "Where are you, and where are you going...?"

"I'm at the corner of Thirty Six and Vine..." Jake said - and, horrified, felt his new, high-pitched voice run away on its own again: "Yup - I'm the girl with the huge bouffant hairdo and the horn-rimmed glasses..."

"Ohhhh-kay." The dispatcher said, slowly. "And where will you be going...?"

Jake didn't answer immediately - he was staring in horror at the ghostly reflection in the glass of the phone booth.

A reflection that showed a massive pile of silky black hair, done up in a ludicrous, ornate mass atop his head.

A reflection that he was peering at through a pair of sixties style 'cat eye' horn-rimmed glasses, with three little cubic-zirconia 'diamonds' clustered at the upper corner of each 'horn'.

"Miss...?" The annoyed voice prompted over the phone.

Helpless to stop it, Jake heard his new, bimbo-ish voice supply the answer. "You know, maybe I'll just walk home - and see if I can't pick up a couple of cute guys along the way..."

"Fine, Miss - whatever..." The dispatcher said - and there was a 'click' as he hung up. Both horrified and infuriated, Jake went to redial the number...

...but, instead, helplessly found himself turning, and leaving the phone booth. He didn't want to - but he couldn't stop himself.

He was compelled to 'accept' the line as being true as it referred to him. When he'd mentioned himself being such-and-such a way, it had happened - and now, horrified, he realized that when he was going to do such-and-such a thing... he had to do it.

Sissy-stepping down the sidewalk, swaying atop his high, slender heels, Jake felt a flush of utter humiliation suffuse his made-up face as he saw a man standing on the next street corner... or, rather, as the man saw him.

Saw a fat man with a huge hairdo, stark make-up and high-heels, mincing down the street...

WISHMAKER IV - Final Edit (Scene 6)

MRS. LINDERMANN

Unfortunately, honey, a few extra pounds come with age. This outfit would have fit two of me when I was your age.

BILL/THE DJINN

You sound regretful of that, Mrs. Lindermann. Would you wish to change that, if you could...?

MRS. LINDERMANN

Sonny, I wish I was wearing the same size clothing today as I was twenty years ago.

BILL/THE DJINN

Well, if that is what you wish...

MRS. LINDERMANN

(Gasps, looks down at her feet...) What the...?

BILL/THE DJINN

Gain a shoe size in the last two decades, Mrs. Lindermann...?

MRS. LINDERMANN

Yes, but I don't - oh, my skirt! It's shrinking! (Tries to hold down hem of skirt)

It.. It's too small! My skirt doesn't even cover the top of my stockings...! My panties - they're so small, they're up my ass crack.. and my... my pussy!

(Skirt continues to shrink. MRS. LINDERMANN releases hem, fumbles at the waist.) No, no! Stop! It's too... Gasp ...tight!

(Button pops, as skirt reaches final size, but even open it's cutting into her. She struggles to pull it off.)

It's... so small... Ungh.. it won't come off, too.. tight...Hips.. so wide.. ass.. so big... and the waist band can't be more than fifteen inches!

BILL/THE DJINN

Come now, don't exaggerate. It's eighteen inches, the same size as you were in college - but that blouse isn't...

MRS. LINDERMANN

WHAT...? Oh, no...!

(Shirt starts to shrink)

No, no - stop! Oh, no...! My tits are almost too big for my shirt, they're almost ready to pop out...!

(Shirt tears, revealing shrinking bra.)

Why is my bra shrinking! My tits are the same size! I wore a DDD-cup in high school!

BILL/THE DJINN

What, lies for vanity, even now? Come now, Mrs. Lindermann - we both know you got implants seventeen years ago. Before that, you weren't even an A-cup...

MRS. LINDERMANN

Oh, God... It's... shrinking... that much...? My tits are now six sizes too big for that size bra!

Please.. hurts.. please, stop...

BILL/THE DJINN

It does look painful. I guess those implants don't have much give...

MRS. LINDERMANN

Oh, God - it hurts! My implants are too firm...! Please, make it stop...!

BILL/THE DJINN

(Chuckles)

Oh, I don't think so...

Wishing he could die, Jake helplessly had to keep closing in on the man, who gaped at the spectacle...

...and then Jake realized the man's slackening grip was around a cell phone. Jake couldn't stop walking - but perhaps he could still call for a cab, anyway.

As he drew abreast of the man, Jake quickly reached out, wrapped his long-nailed fingers around the phone, and yanked it away from the man.

"Hey!" The startled man shouted, recovering. "That's mine, you freak!"

Jake turned to explain that this was an emergency - but, instead, said: "My skirt doesn't even cover the top of my stockings...! My panties - they're so small, they're up my ass crack.. and my... my pussy!"

Still walking, unable to stop even for this, Jake let out a gasp as his lower clothing suddenly writhed...

The plain athletic socks still filling the shoes shot upwards, rapidly becoming smoother and finer material as they transformed themselves into a pair of white nylon stockings with a seam running up the back, and lacy, elasticized tops, each of which sported a hot-pink bow.

A bow easy to see, since the pants had also altered, becoming a spandex-miniskirt in red-and- black plaid. A skirt that didn't cover the tops of those nylons - nylons that reveled long, sexy, and unmistakably feminine legs.

Legs that went well with the new vagina that formed between the soft thighs - a tight, perfectly formed cunt whose lips were spread by the front of the tiny string-bikini panties his boxer-briefs had become, the back of which ran up the crack of her small, firm new feminine ass.

A tiny g-string that rubbed with disgustingly delightful sensation over the swollen nub of her new clit as she helplessly continued walking, trim hips swaying sexily. Tears leaked from behind the horn-rimmed glasses at the unwanted change in gender.

The man she had taken the cell-phone from staggered backwards, eyes widening.

Helplessly, she continued speaking, hearing the very words she had written come back to haunt her.

"Hips.. so wide.. ass.. so big... and the waist band can't be more then fifteen inches!" She shouted in her girlish voice...

...then gasped again as her trim hips swelled dramatically, the motion of her walk becoming more exaggerated by the extra mass of her now very-much-womanly hips - actions that increased the unwanted pleasure the g-string was creating in her cunt.

Those womanly hips now supported an equally womanly ass - a firm, full, spectacular version of a womanly ass, to be precise.

Above hips and ass, her waist had crunched itself into the incredible diameter of a mere fifteen inches, a mere hands-breadth for her still-male hands.

"You.. You can keep the phone..." The man muttered, backing away in preparation for turning and fleeing.

"My tits are almost too big for my shirt, they're almost ready to pop out..." She informed him, helplessly - which, seconds later, was merely the truth, as the shirt she was wearing shrank down into a short-sleeved, fine-weave blouse tied at the front, displaying the new 'C' cups she boasted by straining tightly over the...

...the soft, naturally-shaped DDD-cups that resulted as she shouted, "I wore a DDD-cup in high school!"

Staring at her swelling tits, them man tore his eyes from her suddenly deeper cleavage, and began to run.

"My tits are now six sizes too big for that size bra!" She helplessly shouted after him, even as her shirt swelled out, remaining just-barely-big-enough to contain the massive, saggy JJJ-Cup breasts now painfully swaying and wobbling on her chest. The enormous nipples, in keeping with the scale of the heavy, hanging breasts, were quickly - and horribly - becoming erect as the cool air penetrated the thin material of the shirt....

...and the tiny 'bolero'-style pink leather jacket her flight jacket had become did nothing to help, simply hanging open as it was.

"David...?" A tinny voice from the phone asked. "What's going on...?"

"My implants are too firm...!" She informed the man on the other end of the phone - as her once- sagging tits suddenly popped out into almost freakishly perfect spheres, each massive globular breasts surmounted by an equally enormous nipple whose thumb-sized length and breadth were clearly visible in the material that continued to just barely enclose some of her massive new mounds.

She was a jiggling, swaying, bouncing parody of a woman. Mincing along atop her high, slender heels, her massive, round tits proceeding her by a good foot, she was a cartoon render of a 'geeky- but-erotic catholic schoolgirl' brought to horrifying life...

...by her own words, and her own spell. She'd done this to herself.

The smallest, faintest ray of hope that she could hold onto was that, somehow, she could undo it as well. If only no direct mental changes were made, if only she could make it home, if only she could find the right spell...

If only...

The best and the worst words in the English language.

The hope, faint as it was, slowly began to grow, as she wiggled and jiggled her way ever closer to home...

...up her driveway...

...and in her door. Unchanged.

The instant she was home, the urge to 'walk home;' was satisfied. Though still cursed with her mincing step, Jake was now free to move as she willed - and she hurried towards her living room, eager to check that book of spells...

...only to stop dead in shock, eyes bulging at the threshold.

"Hi, honey..." Jake said from his comfortable seat at the desk in the corner. "How was the walk...?" "Who...?" The female Jake asked, gaping in disbelief.

The figure seated at the desk was a dead ringer for the original male Jake in every detail - even the grin that crossed his face as the spluttered question was the one Jake would have worn.

"Why, I'm Jake." He said, pleasantly. "I have to be, since you're in no position to be Jake anymore - and somebody has to be around to take full credit for the changes to Jake's work..."

The male Jake held up some recently-printed sheets of paper that the female Jake recognized as his/her latest script.

"Not long after you left, I called and convinced the studios to give me unlimited creative control and complete acknowledgment on all my work." Jake said, smiling. "Now, as to your question - perhaps you should have asked what I am - for though I'm Jake, I'm not a human Jake, despite my appearance..."

"Wha... Who... How...?" The human-female-Jake spluttered, wide-eyed.

"I'm the demon you summoned." Jake said, casually. "Silly you, you made a mistake. You were supposed to sit outside the circle, which was supposed to confine me within. Instead, you got it backwards. My powers are still limited to what you asked for - but it is I who control how to interpret them, not you. As I'm sure you've noticed, I've been exercising that power by some very careful editing of your last script..."

"No..." Jake said in denial, shaking her head.

"Oh, yes..." Demon-Jake smiled back as he picked up a pen and chewed thoughtfully on the end.

Female-Jake began to cry, tears leaking down her lovely new face at the knowledge that, even should she run, the Demon's power would reach out to find her.

"Yes, I think this should come out..." Demon Jake said, slowly, as he touched pen to paper....

* * * * *

The clicking of her heels announced her arrival well before she actually appeared, allowing Jake plenty of time to turn from the computer and watch her enter the room.

With the mincing steps that were her trademark, SissySlut SexSlave wiggled and jiggled her way into the room.

"Hi, master !" She said with a giggle, as she posed in the doorway. "I just finished my hair - what do you think ?" She sucked one finger in an absently erotic way, awaiting her master's judgment.

Jake smiled as he eyed the massive, unbelievably elaborate mass of much-bleached hair, now a platinum shade that went well with the gold chains woven into the intricate bobs and curls of the massive 'do, considerably more massive than it had been when the new woman had first acquired the hair three months ago.

"I like it " He said, finally. "I love the way those chains match."

"Isn't it cool ?" She agreed, with a giggle. Her fuller, collagen-injected lips curved in her brainless smile, SissySlut reached up and jiggled her enormous tits, causing the golden chains joining her nipple-rings to jingle.

The tits behind those enormous nipples were also larger then they'd been, since Sissy Slut had been to the doctor's office three time, each time getting her saline implants further pumped to keep the freakishly spherical shape from fading as the skin gradually 'accepted' the implants. Her originally JJJ-cup tits were now MMM-cups, and the hot-pink leather 'semi-bra' supported them without covering them.

The leather was both matching and complementing the white-and-pink leather corset tightly constricting her waist down to an amazing thirteen inches.

The only other thing SissySlut was wearing, aside from her outrageously ornate glasses, were a pair of platform pumps with a two-inch platform and a nine-and-a-half inch heel. With the help of a pair of 'foot corsets', she was slowly but surely training her feet to the point where she'd be able to wear the pair of platform ballet boots she had in the closet.

"I wanna suck your cock now, Master.." SissySlut said, eagerly. "Can I suck your big, thick cock, please...?"

"Are you sure you want to...?" Jake asked. "Remember, you asked me earlier not to let you. You know what happens..."

"I know, but I want it so bad..." She said, pouting. "We've played with my big boobies all day, and I've darned near wore out my dildo. Please, master, I need your cum in me..."

"All right..." Jake sighed. He unzipped his pants...

..and exposed a massive cock with a strangely-shaped head. The cock itself was dark black, and the veins that pulsed in it were a deep emerald green.

"Oh, I just love your demon-cock...!" SissySlut enthused, dropping to her knees in front of it. Eagerly, , she wrapped her hands around as much of the shaft of the rapidly hardening organ as she could, then began lapping at it's rough, ,almost scaly surface, enjoying the slightly sulfuric flavor of the organ that provided her with such a wonder mix of pleasure and pain.

Finally, the organ was rock-hard, and she bent her head and pressed her lips against it. Shoving hard, she managed to force the head of the organ into her mouth, loving the way she practically had to dislocate her jaw to fit it in.

With her mouth full of the massive head, lips spread painfully tight in a seal around it, she eagerly began pumping her hands up and down the massive shaft.

It didn't take long at all before a wonderfully thick flood of the dark, turgid liquid that was Demon- cum flowed thickly down her throat, burning almost like alcohol as it sluggishly oozed down her throat and filled her stomach.

Eagerly, SissySlut gulped down the last, wonderful drop of cum...

...then, suddenly coughing and gagging, thrust herself away from Jake as she changed...

...into Jake.

But not into an exact copy of the male Jake at whose feet 'she' knelt - oh no, not quite. The SissySlut curse had definitely had an effect.

'SissySlut SexSlave' was the female alternate to Jake. Over time, Jake slowly 'morphed', body and mind, into the mindless sex-slut...

...and the only thing that could reverse the effect was Demon-Jake's cum entering his/her body.

Two or three 'willing' blow-jobs a day would have left Human-Jake 'male' - but he'd fought that, and slowly SissySlut would take control...

...and whatever changes she made to their shared body stayed, regardless.

The Jake now on the floor was as heavily made-up as SissySlut had been - but on his old, male face. Likewise, the three extra cup-sizes SissySlut had gotten gave him a nice pair of C-cups. Even his waist was slimming, thanks to SissySlut's obsessive use of a corset...

...and thanks to Sissyslut's obsession with pumping herself full of female hormones every chance she got, the 'male' Jake was well on his way to womanhood.

"You know, another blow job, right here, ,right now..." Demon Jake said, casually, "..and you'd get two full hours before you'd start to revert.

Still trying to spit the taste of cum from collagen-inflated lips, Jake looked up at his counterpart sourly.

"Fuck you..." He said, in a voice already slowly rising in pitch.

"That's the idea..." Demon-Jake laughed. "Unless you do anything to stop it, eventually 'transgender Jake' is going to be the only one of you left, neither as fun to be fucked as the 'real' female body of SissySlut, yet not the man you want to be. The 'middle ground' of the two poles you're switching between now. Maybe you should think about that..."

"Forget it..." Jake said, pulling off his shoes and climbing to his feet. "Last time, I lasted nearly eight hours, mentally, even as my body got steadily more SissSluttish. I'm going to find a way to take control of both aspects, so it won't matter, you bastard."

"Oh, you certainly are trying, I'll give you that..." Jake said, with open admiration. "I never thought you'd do as well as you are."

"Gee, thanks, 'Master'..." Jack retorted. "Well, I'm going to get out of this ridiculous outfit, wipe off this disgusting make-up, and be 'Jake' for as long as I can, so don't expect to see me any time soon..."

Turning, Jake left the room, head held high. He was going to put on jeans and a t-shirt, sit down with a good book, and enjoy as much time as he could milk out of being 'himself'. SissySlut could stay locked away for awhile, because he wasn't letting her out - and he sure as hell wasn't sucking down any of that disgusting demon-cum that SissySlut liked so much. Jack would never willingly wrap his mouth around that freakish demon-cock, no matter what happened. That thing was disgusting, not like a 'real' cock at all.

Jake bet that the guy working down at the gas station's cock didn't look - or taste - anything like that freakish thing Demon-Jake sported. No, the cute hunk had a real cock, one that could actually be enjoyable to fuck...

Unconsciously licking his lips at the thought, Jake didn't even notice as his tits suddenly and 'willingly' blossomed two more cup-sizes...

BACK TO FUN ZONE

SUMMARY: A down on his luck piano player stumbles into a strange bar looking for work, little realizing that the owner has magical powers which she uses to transform him into a sultry female singer.

The Audition

By Gunslinger

"Uh... hello? I, uh, was wondering... um..."

The woman turned from the paperwork she was doing on the bar, and gave me a look that could have frozen a bottle of hot-sauce.

"Who are you..." She asked, her voice as chilly as both the look in her eyes and the look of her trim, tall body in it's tailored, severe black suit, "...and what are you doing in my club?"

I winced, and almost apologized and fled the building - when the owner gives you the cold shoulder, things aren't exactly looking rosy.

I was so desperate, though, I decided to give it my best shot.

"I, uh... I'm looking for work." I said, surreptitiously wiping my damp palms on my pants before holding out my hand. "I'm Paul Lindstrom - I play the piano."

She ignored my hand and looked me over like I was a side of beef. I knew what she saw wasn't impressing here - an unprepossessing guy of average height and build, with mid-length brown hair and a short goatee.

"How did you end up in my club?" She asked, as I lowered my hand.

"Uh... random chance, I guess." I said, flushing - I almost hadn't entered. In fact, I almost passed the building by without recognizing it for what it was. On the outskirts of town, the exterior was a large, if somewhat weathered, brick bungalow with red tile roof. There were no signs, no neon or obvious markers. I'd only clued in when I noticed three oddities about the building - the excessive amount of parking space, the black-painted windows, and the two empty beer kegs near the dumpster at the side of the house, waiting to be picked up.

So, I'd taken a deep breath, and decided to make one last stab before giving up and heading back to the tiny cracker-box apartment I call home...

...which would only be mine for another three days, if I couldn't come up with a source of income to pay for rent, among other necessities.

The owner slowly looked me up and down again, this time with a little more interest. "Nobody directed you here?" She asked, in a thoughtful tone of voice. "You've never heard of this club at all? You just... stumbled across us?"

"Yeah." I admitted, with a shrug.

She tapped her pursed lips with one long, slender finger. "Well, then..." She said, softly and thoughtfully, to herself. Then, to me: "Perhaps we might be able to use you, Mr. Lindstrom, in one capacity or another."

"I hope so, Miss " I left it hanging, expectantly.

Her strong features darkened slightly, eyes narrowing - then she relaxed and smiled in a way that didn't seem quite right, to me. "I go by Mistress, actually - Mistress Black." She cocked her head. "I trust that you'll have no trouble addressing me as such?"

It was unusual, to say the least, and I hesitated for a second before answering, thinking about the club's odd anonymity. However, despite its dilapidated exterior, it was amazingly elegant inside, as was its rather severe-looking owner - all of which bespoke real money. For a good wage, I was willing to do quite a bit.

"Of course not." I reassured her, then - to prove it - added her preferred form of address.

"Good..." She said almost purred. "Well, then - why don't we see what talents you have to offer?"

"Sure." I agreed, as she gestured at the stage that took up a good portion of the interior. "If you'll find a "

I had instinctively started for the stage at her gesture, but it had taken my eyes a second to shift to my new heading - and by the time they did, I'd already started asking about a piano.

Now, both me and my voice stumbled to a halt, and I gaped. There was a piano on the stage.

I would have sworn that there wasn't one there when I'd come in - it was one of the very first things I look for. Yet, without any noise or obvious man-handling, a grand piano now sat on the stage, a little left of center.

As I slowly approached it and lowered myself to the seat, my amazement increased - it wasn't just any piano, but a Steinbeck Concerto.

Now, I don't know if you know anything about pianos, so I'll explain. Steinbeck is a very small company, just twenty employees. They make, on average, one piano a year - at great expense. They are worth a small fortune in their own right, and the workmanship is of the highest quality and precision.

Remembering where I was - and why - I snapped out of my daze, managing a sickly smile in the direction of Mistress Black, who'd seated herself at a table near the stage and was watching me thoughtfully.

I almost felt as if me - a mere mortal - playing such a masterpiece of musical machinery was a sort of blasphemy, but that's what it was there for. I took a second to consider what piece of music would be best for the situation...

...and was horrified to find myself drawing a complete blank.

Well, nearly. I could remember the pieces I've known for years, but the ones I'd studied intently in the past six months, specifically for landing a job at an upscale club like this, had vanished. I couldn't remember a single piece.

I shot a side-long glance at my potential employer - and didn't like what I saw. She was obviously losing what little patience she might have, and that didn't bode well for me.

Near panic, I decided I had nothing to lose, and fell back on the easily remembered repertoire of my long-time favorites.

Laying my fingers gently atop the real ivory keys, I took a deep breath...

...and started the opening bars of Joplin's immortal 'The Entertainer'.

The slow opening notes of the rag-time classic peeled through the room with crystal clarity, each note perfectly formed and perfect pitch as the perfect design of the piano amplified them and made them richer, fuller, more vibrant. I had played this song hundred - maybe thousands - of times in my life, on dozens of pianos and even more electronic keyboards - but never had it sounded like this...! the I let all other considerations slide from my mind, and let myself flow into playing the music, the bright, lively melody of the music rolling out from the piano as my fingers danced over the keyboard.

I was just getting into the music, a small smile beginning to form on my lips as I rolled into the 'verse' with feeling and pleasure....

...when Mistress Black spoke.

"Not bad, I suppose - but let's see you sing something." Wincing, I opened my mouth to explain that I didn't sing...

...except, then I did. I blinked as words wrapped in notes flowed from my lips and throat, the sound of my own voice shocking the hell out of me. What the hell?

Even more confusing then the fact that I'd inexplicably started singing - was the fact that I was singing perfectly in key, something I'd never managed to do before in my life.

The song, I realized, was the old pool-hall standard 'Long Drink Jake', and I was bemused to note that my fingers, unbidden, had segued perfectly from the rag-time to the new song, matching my pitch with the perfect key. I could feel my fingers on the keys, moving in the familiar way, and I could feel my mouth and tongue and lips working as I sang - yet none of this seemed to have anything to do with me, really - I hadn't planned to sing, and even now I wasn't putting any conscious effort into either singing or playing - yet I continued to do both, flawlessly.

As Vincini put it, it was utterly, completely, and in every other way, 'incontheivable'.

Nevertheless - it was happening. My fingers continued to tickle the ol' ivories while my voice rollicked along with the slightly risqué song, belting out the lyrics with gusto.

I was in a state of befuddlement, and was just beginning to come to terms with the odd - and wondrous - impossibility of the situation, when mistress Black spoke again.

"No, that's not quite right." She mused. "Perhaps Jazz?"

After what had just happened, a change in musical genre was a small thing - but it bemused me all over again as my fingers once more segued easily - and without my conscious direction - into a slower tempo, and my voice matched the drop in speed and key, becoming more mellow as I began to sing a Jazz song that, as far as I knew, I didn't even know. My lack of knowledge in no way detracted from my odd performance, as if I were some sort of human CD player, the music being generated through me without any intellectual interaction.

At the same time, a phenomenal sound-system kicked in, producing the rest of a jazz quartet. Flawlessly, the drums, bass and sax matched my piano and voice, creating a rich, mellow sound that floated through the air with such amazing fidelity that it sounded as if all four people were present and playing live.

In fact - I did a double take, checking for the unseen musicians. After what had already happened, the rest of the combo simply appearing out of thin air would have shocked the hell out of me - without actually surprising me, if you take my meaning.

But, no - the stage remained empty except for me and the piano, and the 'magic' of the sound seemed to be more mundane, a high-fidelity sound system that such an upscale club like this would boast.

Mistress black had been listening, with her head cocked and a thoughtful expression on her face, and now she shook her head. I knew this, because I was watching her - both my fingers and my voice continued fine, even if I wasn't paying attention, and this situation was just to know and wondrous for me to waste it staring at my fingers.

Now, Mistress black looked at me thoughtfully, and spoke.

"You know..." She said, slowly. "I think this piece would sound better if it was a woman singing it. You know - a woman with a smoky, bedroom voice."

Damn - and I was hoping that I would get the job... Then my mind seemed to derail.

I should have stopped playing in shock - but since my fingers and voice were singing without any input from me, they were beyond my control, even the involuntarily actions.

So - I wasn't even able to gasp as I felt my body begin to change.

As I said, I didn't have to watch my fingers, and I hadn't been - I'd been looking around. I'd already noticed that the room was extensively mirrored, with the most noticeable expression of this reflective fetish being the huge, unbroken mirror that made up the back wall of the stage. When I'd first seen it, coming into the club, I'd thought that it did a fabulous job of making the somewhat small room seem much bigger, but must make performance lighting a nightmare. Now, I was grateful for it (sort of), as I could turn and stare at it, wide eyed, as my body - still singing and playing the moody, mellow Jazz piece - began to change.

As I watched in shock, the hair surrounding my face began to slowly lengthen, becoming finer and silkier as it slowly curled down my neck with a tickling sensation, seeming to reach for the collar of my shirt.

Framed by the slowly lengthening medium-brown mane, my face was also slowly changing. I could see the bone underneath my skin slowly shifting its shape, my squarish jaw slowly narrowing as my cheekbones moved upwards and outwards, becoming better defined. My nose was slowly shrinking in on itself, a fact that was further emphasized by the way my lips were slowly swelling outwards.

My voice was also changing, at the same rate - and it was definitely changing to something more feminine.

It wasn't, however, rising in pitch, exactly. Instead, it was becoming smoother, more rich - some of the low-end of it was seeping away as a new range of higher notes crept in, with a tremolo that ran throughout the range, making the voice somewhat husky, without becoming the least bit rough or unfeminine. If anything, it was more mellow.

At the moment, though, my voice was the least of the changes holding my attention. I was not only watching the changes, in the mirror, and hearing them, in my voice, but feeling them - all over my body, at the same time, trying to draw my attention to every inch of my body.

However, the strange sensation at my crotch was the one most pressing to my mind. It felt as if somebody had pressed a vacuum cleaner against my skin and was slowly increasing the pressure of the vacuum on the flesh, slowly causing it to pull into the nozzle.

However - it felt as if that nozzle was inside my body...

I looked down at my crotch, staring at the fabric covering it. Slowly, the fabric was sinking downward, the average-sized male bulge I'd had since puberty slowly retreating, leaving nothing to support the fabric.

The fabric itself was also changing, I noticed - and the fact that I noticed such a 'minor' thing was because my mind - in shock - was struggling to deny the changes to my body, and focusing on the relatively harmless changes to my clothes were more 'acceptable' to my shell-shocked mind at the moment.

I had been wearing simple, olive-drab trousers when I'd entered the club. Now, the fabric was a rich forest green, and continuing to darken., the crotch of my pants - aside from it's steadily more 'deflated' appearance - was also stretching downwards, fusing the legs of my pants together without the slightest hint of a sea. The fabric itself was also becoming thinner, lighter, of a different nature altogether.

The shirt I was wearing was also changing. Originally a pale beige cotton shirt tucked neatly into my pants, it now hung loose, and the fabric was also becoming finer and softer as it darkened. For a second, my attention focused on the lower-most button, which was in the process of becoming a lighter color, as well as shrinking.

Then my attention was pulled rudely from that simple button, as the fore-ground of my view drew my attention to my chest - which was slowly pushing outwards. I'd been aware of the sensation in my chest, of course - an odd sort of pressure, as if somebody had managed to insert balloons beneath the skin, and was slowly filling them with body-temperature water. Now, I watched as the steadily filmier material was being shaped outwards into a hill-like mound, rising with less speed and definition than the two higher points on either side - points that I could not pretend were the shape of the breasts that must be forming underneath. I could even see the slowly growing points in the fabric where my steadily swelling nipples were pushing out, slightly ahead of the main mass of my breasts.

There was no doubt, no denying what was happening. Even as I helplessly continued to perform the song, my body moved its way to becoming fully feminine, to match the new voice that was singing the unknown lyrics that flowed from my fuller, softer lips.

I shifted slightly on the bench, adjusting - almost unconsciously - to the pressure as my ass slowly swelled outwards into more feminine contours. The added flesh almost made it seem as if I were sitting on a padded bench, rather than a bare wooden one - but no pillows would have transmitted the actual sensations of pressure and touch, as did my plumping ass.

At the same time, my hips were also swelling into more womanly dimensions, as the reasonable trim waist I'd always had became even trimmer than ever before.

Within the space of a few minutes, the strange sensations had run their course, both beginning and ending before I could finish the song. As I headed towards the end of the song, I could only stare in helpless shock at what the mirror showed me.

I was a woman.

My face bore a resemblance to the one that had always stared back at me from mirrors - but it was a distorted reflection of what I was used to seeing.

It wasn't 'me' as a woman, exactly - I wouldn't have been this attractive, I think. No, the face that stared back at me in shock was definitely a looker, if not gorgeous. Her jaw - my jaw - was now rounded, coming to a slight point at the tip, giving me features a slightly elfin cast, an appearance reinforced by my higher, better defined cheek-bones, making my once squarish face more triangular in appearance.

My nose was a mere shadow of what it had been, a small, up-turned snub with a shallow, sharp ridge and finely curved nostrils. Below that nose lay my altered lips - lips so full and sensual that they almost bordered on being too-much.

My eyes had darkened as the lashes surrounding them had lengthened and thickened, giving me a heavy-lidded, sultry look. The once-bush eyebrows above had thinned considerably, becoming finely arched over my feminized brow.

The hair that had once been unremarkable had become a thick, rich and slightly wavy mane of mahogany tresses that tumbled around my slender shoulders. Those shoulders led to slender, slightly pale arms that were revealed by the rolled-up sleeves of the black silk blouse I now wore. Actually a little too thin (for a woman, that was), the arms led to slender wrist and fine, long-fingered hands with short, unadorned nails that were perfectly proportion for the keys.

Pushing out the silk over my chest was a pair of firm breasts, probably a healthy C-cup from the look of them.

Not that I'd ever tried to judge the size of breast from quite this angle, you understand.

I was much slimmer then I had been before, so if I were trying to guestimate the actual size bra my new body would wear, I would guess a 34C or so - but I couldn't check the tag of my bra, as I wasn't wearing one. I could feel the unrestrained weight of my new breasts from the inside, the weight of them not unpleasant - but definitely unwelcome. The cool fabric of the blouse rippled ever so slightly with every breath I took, lightly sliding over my new nipples, which were swollen from the cool air and the light friction.

My waits was now nearly invisible to me without the aid of the mirror. With my new body having such a slim build, and further exaggerated by being slightly underweight for it's bones structure, my waist was nearly non-existent.

A black skirt now clad my lower half, running from the black leather belt cinched at the top, to my new ankles. It was slit up the one side, allowing me to see a slender and middling-attractive leg whose skin was smooth, as if freshly shaved. That leg led to slightly bony ankles, then on to my feet - which were clad in sandals that were little more then a series of black leather straps attached to a black sole, with a short... (...three-quarter inch? ...One inch?) ...heel.

My nails were done with a dark-blue polish, and I was wearing a beaten silver anklet.

I was just trying to cope with this radical, horrific, inexplicable change to my basic self...

...when I finished the song, and found that I was no longer compelled to do anything at all.

In other words, I'd regained complete control of my body - even if it was no longer 'my' body, if you know what I mean. Unprepared for the sudden release of this body back to my conscious control, I reacted instinctively.

I gaped at Mistress Black, my new eyes wide and my altered jaw slack, while one hand cupped a new breast through the thin fabric (creating an.. intriguing sensation), and the other sliding through the slit in the skirt and gliding over the soft fabric of the feminine panties I was now wearing, tracing the area where my new womanhood resided.

Then I pout my new, richly feminine voice to good use. "Oh... My... God..." I whispered huskily....

...as my eyes started to roll back as the world around me began to dim.

"Oh, stop that." mistress Black said, in annoyance. She snapped her fingers - and, suddenly, the world snapped clearly into focus, and I no longer felt faint.

"What ?" I stammered, yanking my hands away from my altered body and holding them out imploringly. "How...? Why?"

"As articulate s ever, I see." She replied, dryly, while I tried to make my mind work in some fashion approaching normality.

It wasn't easy. I figured a sudden change from masculinity onto a fairly attractive specimen of femininity was a good excuse for being a little vague, however.

With a faint smile, Mistress Black explained - while I sat in stunned silence, trying to deal with the impossibilities she was telling me while I tried to cope with my sudden change of gender.

"By chance..." She explained, with a raised eyebrow. " you happened to find my club - 'the Source', as it's known to it's patrons. Patrons which, I may add, form a very exclusive group. A group that spans the continent. A group consisting solely of those who, like myself, have the ability to wield magic."

I would normally never have accepted this silently - however, certain recent events had stripped away any skepticism I might have harbored.

"Now, we value our privacy - incredibly. Not only do we maintain a low-profile exterior to the club, I have employed 'wards' upon the building. No person not wielding a certain amount of magic can enter the building."

"But "

She looked me over again. "Yes - you entered. That's what caught my attention about you, of course. I wondered if you might not be all you seem - and so decided to test you. That is what just happened - a test." She held up her hands. "Obviously, you have no great powers, and no control over any of them. Considering the skill of your playing, I would guess that your musical ability, itself, is of high enough potential quality that it is, itself, a magical ability - if rather weak, in absolute terms. Just enough for you to be able to enter, apparently."

"So you thought I might be the magical equivalent of a stick-up artist, or something?" I asked, slowly beginning to function again - though the sensations from my radically altered body were still

'interfering' with my thought processes. Just speaking was an act of will, as the sound of that feminine voice emerging from my new throat was definitely... disconcerting.

A faint smile flashed across her narrow lips, then was gone. "Something like that." The tone of voice indicated that I'd something monumentally stupid, out of ignorance.

"so... now that I'm not a threat..." I said, hope blooming in my (now feminine) chest, "...you're going to turn me back."

She sighed. "No - I can't do that."

"What!" I shouted, rising from the piano bench. "You.... I "

She held up a hand. "You don't understand - I can't!" She took a deep breath, then explained. "People with magical ability are kind of like batteries. We store magical energy, draining it off when we use it.

In this case, I've filled you with energy when I changed you - which is how I know you're not in control of your latent ability. If you were, you could just take that energy, and drain it off in another direction."

Well, that explained her laugh at my 'stick up' comment - using magic against another magic-user wasn't a threat. You'd just be 'charging' them up. However, my mind wasn't on the finer points of magical defense at the moment...

"You mean I'm stuck like this?" I asked, breathlessly, slumping onto the bench again.

She hesitated. "Well - after about a month, you'll have naturally lost enough energy that you'll revert back to normal."

"A month!"

"However " She said, hesitantly. "Let me explain why this club exists. Those with strong magical abilities see more than an unpowered human - we see 'magical' wave-lengths, I guess you could say. For us, 'normals' are two dimensional. So, you see, even the most erotic, exciting porn, performed by 'normals', does nothing for us - it's like watching cartoon sex. This club caters to the needs of magic-users by finding people with enough magical energy to be perceptible to us completely - either naturally, or through the addition of magical energy, like what I've poured into you. Rather than spend a month in that body you could work here."

"What!"

"There's more." She said, looking for the right words. "you see - you're not quite past that threshold, yet. For you to work here would require more changes - more energy - to make you fully 'visible'. The extra energy means that you'd be in that new form for at least a year."

"You must be nuts!" I shouted, shocked and outraged. "Do you really think I'd let you change me further so that I could be some sort of whore? For a year? No way!"

She took the outburst calmly. "The current contract is two-point-five million a year, plus accommodations."

My slender jaw dropped. "two.... and a... half million?"

This time, the smile was full-bodied, if not really humorous. "With our unique abilities, we have certain advantages in life. Most magic-users are great financial successes. Just look at Bill, and that computer company of his."

I stared at her, flabbergasted. Then I shook my head, feeling my longer, silkier hair brushing over the nape of my slender neck.

"no... no, I... I can't..." I protested, weakly, my mind whirling. Already, I was sentenced to spending a month in this new body, a fate brought about by random chance. the thought of voluntarily agreeing to...

Then my brain screeched to a halt as a thought suddenly popped into my head - a thought so outrageous, so impossible, so utterly out-of-place from my inherited point of view that it took me by storm and shook me to the very core.

But... it might just work...

"You..." I said, hesitantly, afraid to voice the traitorous thought - or admit that I was considering it. "You said that I'd need to have a considerable amount of energy... 'dumped' into me...?"

Mistress Black blinked. "Why, yes. Quite a bit, actually - we'd have to do extensive changes. Make you shorter, perhaps. Change your face and hair, maybe even your race - and probably..." She made a gesture, as if cradling a pair of melons in front of her chest.

I winced. Then taking a deep breath, ignoring all the instincts and inbred 'morals' that told me that I was wrong to even consider this offer, I asked the question that had popped into my mind.

"What if ?"

* * * * *

The house lights slowly dimmed, and as the lights faded, so did the chatter of the patrons of The Source, their eyes going to the darkened stage, eagerly waiting the appearance of the club's newest headline star.

The silence seemed to stretch for an eternity - then, a sound began to rise from the stage, low at first - a mournful wail of a saxophone, moody and slow.

Then a heavy beat started, accompanied by the sound of an electric guitar, very moody and rhythmic. The beat of the drums rolled out over the crowd, setting the sound nearly that of a deep, percussive heart.

Then, one either side of the stage, rows of torches flared in sudden life, a sooty orange glow replacing the darkness, reflected into eternity in the mirror behind the stage.

Between the glowing torches at the very rear of the stage, a woman stood revealed in the flickering light. Tall, for a woman, she was dressed all in black. Black ankle-boots enclosed her feet, disappearing under the hem of the long, flowing black skirt she wore. Above that, a shimmering swath of black silk formed the blouse she wore, the flickering light and the shimmering, dark fabric refusing to clearly define the figure that filled the blouse.

Then, as the music slowly rose, she began to walk towards the front of the stage, moving with a slow, sensuous glide that matched the beat of the drums. As she moved with a slow, sensual strut atop her six-inch spiked heels, her long, gleaming chestnut hair billowed from her shoulders in an unseen breeze, fully exposing a face that was sexy and seductive, with dark, smoldering eyes.

Behind her, two identical men stepped from the shadows and flanked her walk, a half-step behind her on either side. Darkly tanned and tautly muscled, their nearly nude bodies - clad only in leather loincloths - glistened with oil as they paced her slow, sensual glide downstage.

Then her full, dark-red lips parted... and an incredibly rich, smoky voice emerged as she began to sing.

When I look out my window, many sights to see.

When I look in my window, so many different people to be. It's strange.

So very strange.

The woman had reached the end of the stage, and now she turned and - still singing - began to slowly, sensuously slide her hands over the body of the man to her right, her body swaying slowly and sinuously to the music as her hands roamed his taut body.

You got to pick up every stitch. You got pick up every stitch. whoa whoa whoa....

She paused her singing to kiss the man, hungrily, her tongue diving deep into his mouth as she ground her body slowly against his - but, even as she did so, she was humming, low and deep in the back of her throat, her pitch perfect as she finished the quick - but hungry - kiss, and continued singing.

Must be the season...

....the season of the witch.

Must be the season of the witch.

The sax went into a solo, it's rich, throaty tone nearly matching the singer's own voice as she swayed to the center of the stage...

..and lifted her arms. Continuing to sway sensuously, she didn't look at the crowd or her assistants, seeming lost in the music - as the two gleaming men stepped forward and undid her blouse, each of them peeling back their side of the blouse and slowly sliding it down her arms, tossing the garment aside.

The torso that was revealed was perfect.

The upper half of her hourglass-figure had an extra twenty minutes thrown in for good measure, her breasts firm and round and full, a perfect pair of double-D cup breasts if any had ever existed. Taut yet soft, the round mounds were tipped with large, dark, and fully engorged nipples that were as utterly perfect as the rest of her mouth-watering endowments.

Her waist was amazingly slender, leading the eyes downward, to where her long, flowing black skirt began....

...the skirt that her assistants now removed, revealing long, toned legs that seemed to go on forever. Her hips were womanly, without being too much of a good thing, and nestled between those silken, taut thighs was a tiny, neatly trimmed patch of pubic hair that surround her cunt.

Still swaying to the music, it was almost as if she didn't notice as her assistants began to fondle her nude body, each one taking half of her body to slide their strong hands over, fondling her full, proud breasts, her firm, full ass, her long, glorious legs - their hands roamed over every square inch of her body as the solo ended, and she once more sang.

When I look over my shoulder, what do you think I see.

Some other cat looking over, his shoulder right at me.

Now she was caressing her own body, as well, her hands making the circuit from her taut, round tits to the vee between her silken thighs, stroking gently over the surface as she continued to sing as is lost in a (now erotic) trance.

And it's strange. Sure is strange.

You got to pick up every stitch. Beatniks are out to make it rich. Oh no.

Must be the season of the witch. Must be the season of the witch.

This time, it was the guitar that went into an extended solo, the rest of the instruments fading into back-up for the slow, rhythmic music...

..as she sank to her knees in front of the man on her left, peeled off his loincloth to set his large, throbbing organ free, and opened those full, glorious lips of hers and went down on him.

As she sucked at his cock, more than just her head and hands moved - her entire body continued to move, to the rhythm of the music, as she sucked away at cock with a slow, sensuous sway.

While she sucked - she hummed along with the music, the sound rich and evocative as her lips and tongue moved with incredible skill and timing.

The man stiffened - the rest of him stiffened - under her ministrations, his head thrown back in a soundless gasp...

...as he came, spewing a thick stream of cum like a human firehose.

She had pulled back, and - still seemingly lost in that trance - swallowed a good percentage of the thick white jet of jism, but she purposely let some of the cum splatter down her neck and chest, coating those magnificent breast with a coating of gleaming semen.

Rising, she used her hands to spread a glossy coating of warm cum over her torso as the solo faded and she once more took up the lyrics.

When I look out my window, so many sights to see.

When I look into my window, so many different people to be.

As she sang, she slowly sauntered and swayed over to her other assistant - who was reclining now on a black silk sheeted mattress that had risen from a trap door in the center of the stage.

Still lost in that trance, she slowly swung long, shapely leg over him - and slowly slide her hot, wet cunt down onto his hard, thick cock, never dropping a note as she began to ride him with slow, long strokes that matched the beat of the music perfectly.

You got to pick up every stitch. Rapids running in the ditch.

Beatniks are out to make it rich. Oh no.

Oh oh no.

Must be the season of the witch. Must be the season of the witch.

She repeated the phrase a couple of more times over - as the music slowly picked up tempo, her thrusting body matching the increasing rhythm perfectly as she road the now-twitching, writing man.

Then the music stopped, and she continued a capella, her long legs flexing to drive her faster and harder atop her partner's throbbing organ.

The words themselves faded, as well, becoming a fast-paced, gloriously rich series of musical moans, her voice spiraling higher and higher in the register as her cum-and-sweat coated body pounded rhythmically atop the glistening man, her breasts bouncing with the force of her thrusts.

Then - at the perfect moment - they came simultaneously - and she hit the high note that shook the room with the force of it's intensity, her perfect pitch never faltering as she sang her way to orgasmic ecstasy.

Then the drums came back in for a coda as she collapsed atop her partner and the torches blinked out, plunging the room into darkness.

There was an instant of silence - then the audience began to applaud madly.

* * * * *

Mistress Black was waiting for me outside of my changing room, a slightly stunned look on her face. "Paula..." She said, using my chosen moniker for the next year. "That was... incredible."

I smiled. "Well, thank you - I worked hard on coming up with that one. 'Season of the Witch' just seemed... appropriate, somehow."

Mistress Black smiled. "I guess so. What's your song for the late performance?" I grinned back. "Tonight? 'Spellbound'. I'm going with a theme."

"I like it - and so does the audience." Mistress Black said, gesturing with her chin towards the main room, where the applause was just dying down.

"Wait 'till tomorrow." I suggested. "I'm doing a different theme, - '2 Become 1' for the early show, and 'If You Wanna Be My Lover' for the late."

She seemed startled. "How many different themes have you got on tap?"

"Six - I'll run through them randomly, to keep the clientele from getting bored." She shook her head. "You.. are incredible."

I laughed. "Hey - just the outcome of a good idea. After all - I love my work."

Which was the absolute truth - there's nothing in life that I loved more than being a woman and working at The Source, having sex to entertain the patrons.

After all - that had been my brain-storm. Rather than devote all that magic to changing my body, we'd 'perfected' my body - then used a ton of magic to alter my mind and emotions for the next year.

It felt... strange. I mean - I knew that I had been a guy, and I knew that the guy I had been would be utterly disgusted with what I was doing for a living right now. I knew that, eventually, I'd have to deal with this, once I was back to being (ick!) a man.

Of course, I had no desire to be a man ever again, and was sort of pissed off at myself - my old, male self - for making sure Mistress Black would refuse to 'renew' my contract. No matter how hard I argued, I was going to go back to being male at the end of the year.

I understand why, of course - with my mind altered, magically, so that I love this life, my view is biased but, then again, wasn't my old, male view as equally biased? I really don't think this is fair, not at all.

Maybe... After all, 'I' did agree to this in the first place. Maybe, once I'm male and my mind 'normal' (ha!) again, I'll decide to get changed back to a woman. After all, I'll have had a chance to see how wonderful being a woman is. Oh, I don't expect that I'll have myself mentally altered to want to do this job again, even though - right now - I think it's the very reason I was born. I do realize that it's a magically instilled thing, after all.

But how on earth could I decide to stay male, after experiencing the joys of being a woman? Speaking of which...

"Excuse me, Mistress Black. " I said, sliding past to the door of my dressing room. "I have to go... rehearse..."

With a slow smile and I wink, I slid through the door....

...and grinned at Ron and John, my 'assistants', dedicated to doing anything at all I instructed them to do - and to pleasuring me as thoroughly and completely as possible at all times.

God - I love my job!

BACK TO FUN ZONE

SUMMARY: A writer of TG fiction finds a book of Latin spells and decides to see what it REALLY like to live as a woman, but an ex-girl friend has her own ideas of permanence.

The Author

By Gunslinger

The older 486-66 hummed along quietly, the bluish-white glow from it's fifteen-inch SVGA monitor lighting the small room. The gentle strains of Enya flowed from the speakers attached to the CD-ROM, filling the room with Celtic-inspired sound and beat. The spare bedroom which served as the computer room was at peace, relaxing and tranquil.

A far cry from the individual inhabiting it.

In his late twenties, tall and slender, but carrying more than a little extra weight in the middle (an unfortunate side effect to all the hours spend at the computer), Chris paced in short circuits between the bookcase along one wall, and the fraying old couch along the other. One hand nervously stroked the short, dark, neatly trimmed goatee he wore, which was several shades darker than the light brown mop of hair pulled back into a ponytail. He was dressed, as usual, in faded blue-jeans, and one of his many gray T-shirts, this one with a blue-trimmed v-neck. His stocking feet made no sound on the vinyl flooring, but he more than made up for that with his habit of verbalizing his thoughts...

"Another blonde bimbo?" He asked himself, then paused in mid-step to consider it before resuming his pacing. "Fun to write, but... How do I know that the readers aren't getting tired of them? Hell, sometimes I think the readers don't really exist - I barely get any response from them..." His voice trailed off as he considered his options.

With a heart-felt sigh, he dropped into the chair in front of the computer, which groaned in protest. Resting his elbows on the desk, Chris leaned forward and put his chin across his interlaced fingers.

"Jeez..." he muttered, worried. "Am I running out of ideas? God, I hope not..."

For the past six months or so, Chris - a part-time graphic artist who worked from his home (well, cheap apartment) - had supplemented his income by writing stories for a transgender fiction site on the internet. The money was a welcome addition to his meager business, and he hoped he'd be able to keep at it for some time to come. Still, he had to keep the stories fresh and interesting - there were lots of TG stories available on the internet, and to get paid for his, he had to keep the quality and ingenuity of them up. Let that slide, and he'd be out of his 'secret' job.

The door to the computer room swung open, and Chris looked up as his roommate and best friend of ten years stuck his head in. "Hey, Chris, how's it going?"

Jeff was the anti-thesis of Chris. Where Chris was taller than average, Jeff was considerably shorter - but almost as wide as he was tall, a walking mass of muscle. Which explained why he worked as a bouncer at Stage's Nightclub, which was directly below the third-floor apartment the two men shared. Like many bouncers, Jeff kept his head cleanly shaven, but the rather unruly 'walrus' mustache he sported revealed that the missing hair was a sandy shade of blond.

The two friends also differed in temperament and interest. Chris was the artistic intellectual, somewhat shy around other people, but with a great flair for the dramatic, and an insatiable curiosity. Jeff, on the other hand, was outgoing and popular, and, while not stupid by any means, not terribly interested in intellectual pursuits, preferring to stick to the athletic milieu.

Despite of - or because of - their differences, the two men were the best friends, getting along famously. They also relied heavily on each other - Jeff kept Chris involved in some sort of social life, constantly introducing him to women in the hopes of something developing. Jeff's own love-life consisted of a constant parade of attractive women, and their 'relationship' was always strictly physical - mostly because Jeff simply didn't understand woman all that well (how did?), and the few attempts at a lasting relationship always ended quickly and violently, making him rather 'gun-shy' about relations.

On the other side of the coin, Jeff relied on Chris' uncanny knack for solving problems mechanical, electronic, financial and personal. It was one of the great ironies of life that Chris was an expert at romance and interpersonal communication - on a theoretical level. Too shy to apply his artistic knack for romance himself, he supplied Jeff with all sorts of little 'scenarios' that worked wonders with the women Jeff saw. That had been one of the things that had cemented their friendship - in a 'Cyrano De Bergerac'-ish style, Chris had helped Jeff get one of the more intellectual beauties of the school to go to the prom with him, a resounding success for all concerned.

Jeff was also one of the other two people in the entire world who really knew that Chris Kozantski, Graphic Artist, and 'The Rifleman', purveyor of TG fiction, were one and the same. The other person was the owner of the site, who had to know who to make the checks payable to.

In response to his muscular friend's question, Chris sighed in frustration. Jeff smiled, knowing exactly what that meant.

"You do this every time" Jeff said with a grin. "You worry and sweat over the story, trying to make each one a work of art - then finish it off in record time, send it in - and never hear back from anyone as to how good it was, which drives you nuts."

"Hey, I've gotten five different response to my stories." Chris said, defensively.

"And you've written... What, fifty of them? One out of every ten. Don't bother to deny it bugs you - I'm the one who always has to listen to you bitch about it."

Chris frowned. "I just wish I could get some feed back from the readers. After all, they are the only ones who can tell me what they like, and whether or not I'm delivering." Then his frown faded, and he chuckled.

"What...?" Jeff prompted.

Chris got up from the chair and headed towards the door. Jeff stepped aside to let him pass as Chris answered with a grin.

"As long as I keep getting checks from the site, I can assume that somebody likes my work." He grabbed his faded blue ball cap from the peg near the door and slipped it on, pulling his pony-tail through the hole above the size strap.

"That's one way to look at it." Jeff agreed. "So, where you off to?"

"Just going to walk around, look for inspiration." Chris said, slipping his wallet into the inside pocket of the denim jacket he slipped on. "I'll be back later."

Jeff waved goodbye as Chris stepped through the door, then gleefully ducked into the computer room. Between writing and graphic arts, Jeff didn't get much time on the computer, and he was only two levels away from finishing Ultimate Doom....

* * * * *

"oh, sorry " Chris said as he almost walked right into their next-door neighbor. Their doors abutted, with about six inches separating the two door, which sat at right angles to each other. She was stepping out at the exact same instant as Chris, and they nearly collided. "Sure." Nicki said with a faint smile.

She had the right to smile - if they had collided, it would have been the worse for Chris. Nicole 'Call me Nicki' was as tall as Chris - and much more muscular. A rather radical feminist, she was a fitness and body-building nut, and her musculature nearly matched Jeff's.

Despite her self-proclaimed 'man-hating' tendencies, she seemed more well, not exactly 'feminine', but at least friendly around Chris.

He had the uneasy feeling that she like him, and was ashamed to say so out loud. In his case, it wasn't only his awkwardness with women that kept him from finding out - he also didn't find the tall, masculine woman all that attractive - and her pro-feminist attitude grated on him whenever they got involved in a conversation that went beyond mere pleasantries.

To avoid that situation now, Chris politely excused himself and walked away, wondering why she was still giving him such an odd look. Shrugging it off, he trotted down the stairs and out the door.

Chris wandered around downtown, idly browsing through stores of various kinds, watching the women who walked by, looking for something to inspire him. When he wrote, he generally needed some image or idea in his head that formed the basis of the story - and sometimes, that inspiration came from odd sources. One of his stories had been inspired by nothing more than an old felt fedora. That had led to thoughts of the old-fashioned 'private dick' stories - and the musing of what one of these 'gumshoes' would do in a case involving TG. That had led to a full-blown story - all from one old hat in a second-hand shop.

He walked down a side-street he rarely ventured down, enjoying the warm fall sunshine on his shoulders, and looking in the windows of the small shops that lined the narrow, twisting street.

One of the stores was a book shop. Chris peered through the dusty window at the dark interior, lined with shelf after shelf of books, then pulled open the door - which squeaked - and went in.

Idly, he browsed through the stacks of books, not even sure what he was looking for - until he saw it.

It was old, its leather cover faded with age, but well cared for. The pages, a heavy, parchment-like material, were as faded, and the entire thing was in a bastardized version of Latin - which Chris, being an insatiable learner, knew a bit of. Enough to make out the title of the book, at any rate.

It was a book of spells.

Well, at least that's what it purported to be. Chris didn't believe that it was actually anything of the sort - but it was also too good to pass up - especially since the book was tagged at a mere five dollars.

Happily, he paid for the large, heavy tome, and carried it with him back to the apartment, idly flipping through the pages and laboriously translating the titles of some of the 'spells'.

He was so absorbed in the book that he nearly hit Jeff with the door when he came in. Jeff had been screwing a coat hook into the wall behind the door, and Chris, lost in the book, pushed the door open without paying attention.

"Oops, Sorry Jeff." Chris said shame-faced. Jeff looked up at his taller friend with a half-smile. "No damage done. So, what's got you off in la-la land?"

Chris held up the large book. "This - it's supposedly a book of spells."

"Really? Cool..." Jeff said, taking the book and flipping through it. "What's it written in? Greek?" "Nope, Latin." Chris said, hanging up his coat and following Jeff into the living room.

"Really? Can you read this stuff?" Jeff asked. "What's this one?" He pointed to the page it was open.

Chris looked over, and had to laugh as he puzzled out the title. "Hey, great! That's just what I need! It's a sex-change spell!"

Jeff laughed. "Yeah, right." Striking an impressive pose, he pointed over-theatrically at Chris, and began to read off the gibberish words of the 'spell' in a booming voice. Chris smiled at the ridiculous sight, and Jeff barely managed to keep from laughing until he was done reading, and put the book aside.

"There you go - one sex-change spell, so that you can write your stories better. That'll be twenty bucks, plus tax."

It started at his feet. Chris was the only one who knew, at first, as his shoes kept Jeff from seeing it happen - but Jeff couldn't miss Chris' startled exclamation as the shoes suddenly became looser - although they stayed the exact same size they'd always been. It was Chris' feet that had shrunk.

"Holy Shit!" Chris exclaimed - and that clued Jeff in on what Chris was feeling. Chris, usually urbane and soft spoken, only swore when extremely surprised, very shocked or terribly frightened. Right now, it was a mixture of all three on Chris' face as he looked up at Jeff and said, "Something's happening!"

"What?" Jeff exclaimed, worried. This was just supposed to be a joke - could Chris be pushing the joke farther? But that wasn't Chris' style...

"My.. My feet just - shrunk." Chris said, staring down at his feet. "And now, my legs are tingling."

There wasn't much outward indication of anything as the tingling moved up Chris' legs - the denim blocked any view. That is, until it reached his crotch.

Chris gasped as he felt his cock pulling back into his body, and his ball shrinking away to nothing. He had the sneaking suspicion that a fully formed, functional female vagina now lurked beneath the pants.

"Holy CRAP!" Jeff said, staring at his friend. Before his disbelieving eyes, the denim jeans slowly began to fill as Chris' hips and ass expanded. The fabric became skin-tight, stretched taut over wider hips and a full, womanly ass. Chris grunted in mild discomfort at the tightness of the jeans.

The waist band of the pants began to sag slightly as the waist inside of it narrowed somewhat, as the change continued moving upwards. Both of them stared at Chris' chest as the gray T-shirt began to bulge at the front, pushed outwards by to firm, perky breasts the grew to a firm C-cup in size before stopping.

The change swept onwards. As it reached Chris' shoulders, it not only narrowed them then continued upwards, but ran down his arms, leaving them smooth and feminine in it's wake. His fingers narrowed even as his nails lengthened, and his wrists became more delicate.

Chris could feel the change moving over his face, but was unable to see the effect. Jeff, however, could watch open-mouthed as Chris' features became softer, finer. The nose shrank and became pert, while his lips became slightly fuller. At the same time, his jaw narrowed and became rounder. His eyes remained about the same, but the lashed grew thicker and longer while the eyebrows above became finer, and more arched. Even his ears weren't spared, becoming somewhat smaller, and with a smoother curve to them. About the only think that remained exactly the same was his hair, his light brown ponytail looking perfectly at home on the body it now grace.

"Holy shit..." Chris said. It was the same sentiment that he'd expressed moments before. But it sounded completely different now, as it emerged in a definitively feminine contralto.

"Holy *fuckin'*shit." Jeff agreed, gaping. "It... it actually worked. You're... a girl."

"I... I have to see this in a mirror. It's unbelievable." Chris said in his... her new voice. But before she could move, she felt the strange energy at her feet again - although it felt different this time, on the surface only, not deep like before.

"Wait - something else..." Chris began - but that was unnecessary, as Jeff took a step back and pointed at Chris' feet. "You... Your shoes!"

They gaped down at Chris' feet as if looking at the Eighth Wonder of The World - and perhaps they were. For the simple white sneakers that Chris wore were writhing - and changing.

The tongue slid down and disappeared even as the sides of the shoes separated, part joining a thinner mass at the top, while the rest joined the sole - which itself was changing, the back rising upwards. The laces became wider and of a heavier material as their spacing changed. Within the space of a few seconds, Chris's white socks could be seen through the white patent leather 'Mary-Jane' pumps with the two inch heel that her shoes had become.

Then the socks began to change - as well as the pants that covered them. The cuffs of the pants began to move upwards, the legs widening in the middle until they finally joined as it reached her knees, now forming a knee-length denim skirt. The socks had also stretched upwards, thinning as they did so, becoming white knee-high nylons, trimmed with lace at the elasticized top. A small, cute bow was at the top back of each nylon that showed her now cute, smooth legs.

The change continued to ripple upwards, altering the clothing as it flowed. The waistband of the jeans narrowed to match Chris' now slender waist, and underneath, unseen by either, but felt by Chris, his briefs became a pair of white cotton women's briefs, with high-cut legs. Her T-shirt faded in color, becoming white, and tighter, forming itself to her firm, conical breasts. The v-neck of the shirt, once blue, slowly faded to a pink, as did the elastic areas on each short sleeve. The cheap watch on her right wrist became the feminine model of the same watch, smaller with a thinner band.

And still the changes continued.

A fine, slender fourteen karat gold necklace formed around Chris' slender neck, a small heart-shaped pendant resting in the hollow of her throat. Matching heart-shaped earrings appeared in the delicate lobes of her now-pierced ears, and the simple rubber-band holding back her hair rippled and became a pink scrunchie restraining her ponytail.

The final series of changes rippled by so fast that Jeff couldn't watch each happen, but could see the effects when they were done. A pale pink shade of lipstick appeared on Chris' fuller lips even as a very pale blue eye shadow applied itself over suddenly mascara coated lashes. A faint hint of blush appeared, highlighting her cheekbones' fine structure even as the faint but definite odor of a nice, but inexpensive, perfume wafted from Chris' altered body.

"Holy..." Jeff started

"..shit" Chris finished. Then, they looked at each other - and couldn't help it. Despite the impossible thing that had just happened, they were both, emotionally and mentally, the same people they'd been before - and as always, their eerie habit of finishing each other's sentences made them laugh. That simple action broke the eerie mood that gripped them, and they relaxed.

"I saw it - but I don't believe it. Jeez, Chris - we've found a book of spells that really work!" Jeff said, shaking his head. He picked up the leather bound tome, and began to flip through the pages. "Just give me a second - I'll find the counter spell."

Chris held up a hand - then paused, eyeing the slender appendage and its longer nail. Getting back on track, she said. "Hold on a second - I want to see what I look like before you change me back." She turned and headed towards the bathroom - and found that she moved easily in her feminine body, as if she'd possessed this form for her whole life. Stepping into the bathroom, she looked in the mirror.

She looked like... Well, if Chris had a sister, that's what she'd look like. A cute sister, at that - although not stunning, Chris' new form was definitely cute, which was played up by the clothing she now wore. Shaking her head in disbelief, Chris started to turn away - then paused. Flushing a bright red, she turned back to the mirror - and slowly pulled up her shirt, revealing the two perky C-cup breasts thrust from her chest. Smooth and creamy, they were topped by small, pink, somehow...

virginal nipples. Embarrassed, Chris brought her slender hand up and cupped her new endowment, letting her thumb slide over the nipple, which immediately swelled slightly. Chris shivered slightly at the new - and pleasant - experience.

"Hey, Chris - you gotta see this!" Jeff's voice came from the living room. Startled, Chris yanked her shirt back down and tucked it in, feeling like she had been doing something wrong - although, since she was in this body, technically there was nothing wrong with feeling her own tits.

She went back into the living room - and found Jeff holding an altered wallet. Similar to her old one, it was somehow more feminine in nature.

"Get a load of this." Jeff said, handing over Chris' own I.D. Confused, Chris looked down - and blinked in surprise. The picture show was of her new, feminized face, and the name beside it was 'Christine Kozantski'.

The two friends looked at each other in surprise. "Wow - that's some powerful magic." Jeff finally said.

Chris looked thoughtful - and Jeff was embarrassed to find that he found the look extremely cute. "Come on..." Chris said, heading towards her room. "I want to check something."

Jeff dutifully followed - and flushed when he realized he was looking at her cute ass. Averting his eyes, he stepped into her room - and gasped.

The room had changed to match Chris' new gender. The decor, the clothing in the open closet, - everything now matched perfectly with the new Chris.

Shooting Jeff a meaningful glance, Chris walked over to the phone, clicked on the speaker-phone, and quickly dialed her parent's place. After two rings, her Mother answered the phone with a simple "Hello?"

Feeling very strange, Chris cleared her throat. "Hi. It's me." The pause before her mother replied felt endless, then...

"Christine, honey! It's about time you gave us a call - I swear, sometimes I think you've forgotten dad and I even exist." That was the cincher. Not only had she changed - the entire world had altered to match.

"So what do I owe the honor of this call...? Wait - don't tell me. After ten years of 'living in sin', you and Jeff have finally decided to get married, right?" Chris... Christine's mother asked, unaware of the half-startled/half-laughing look that her 'daughter' and Jeff were sharing.

"No, Mom - trust me, Jeff and I haven't been discussing marriage." Chris said - and Jeff had to clamp a hand over his mouth to keep from laughing out loud. Chris, herself, was riding on the ragged edge of laughter as well. "I Um, Jeff and I were wondering what to get Dad for his birthday this year."

Christine's mom 'harumphed' - "The couch potato, you mean? Ever since we got the satellite installed, he barely moves at all. You want to get him a great gift? Buy him one of the treadmill things - he can use it while he watches the tube."

"Okay Mom, thanks. I gotta run." Chris said, certain that this was the weirdest conversation of her life. It got weirder.

"Okay, honey. Call me soon - and give Jeff a big kiss for me, too."

Face muscles straining painfully, Chris hung up the phone, looked over at Jeff - and the two of them burst out laughing like loons. "Good God!" Jeff said between gales of laughter. "You're my girlfriend?" She shook his head. "This is really too weird, Chris."

Chris batted her eyelashes outrageously. "Does this mean you don't want that big kiss from my mom?"

That sent them back into gales of laughter. When they'd laughed themselves out, they headed back to the living room. The sheer absurdity of the situation - that, as far as anyone was concerned Chris had, not only, always been female, but was his girlfriend Well, it was weird.

"Jeez, do you realize the power of that thing?" Chris said to Jeff, pointing one slender finger at the innocent-looking book on the end table. "It just altered history to match me being female! We've got a book of spells, with nearly unlimited power!"

Jeff shook his head. "Yeah - I didn't think of that." He frowned slightly. "How come we still remember you as being a guy?"

Chris looked thoughtful, tapping one long-nailed finger against her pink-glossed lips. "Well, I guess that since you cast the spell, and I was the one changed, or memories weren't altered. Otherwise, what good would the magic be? I mean, if our minds changed, we wouldn't have noticed anything different - and would have thought the spell didn't work."

Jeff made a funny face. "Yeah - I guess so. I didn't really think about that. Still, maybe it'd be better if you were the only one who could tell - I'm having kind of a hard time dealing with the fact that my best friend is a cute girl that everyone thinks is my girlfriend."

Chris snorted - which, in her current form, was cute as well. "It's not exactly easy for me, buddy - I am the cute girl, remember?" She grinned, showing that there was no barb in the comment.

"Yeah, well, let's take care of that, okay?" Jeff said, opening the book. "This is just a little too weird for my taste."

"Go ahead." Chris agreed, and Jeff read off the spell. They watched with the same awe as the process reversed itself - first, he became his normal male self, then his clothes changed back to match. Chris also assumed the rest of the world had changed to normal as well.

"That's a lot better." Jeff said. "So, what other things can this book do?"

Chris shook his head. "I don't know - I'm going to have to study it for a while, take my Latin-English dictionary and do some translating." He rose, and held out his again-masculine hand. "In fact, why don't I start on it now?"

Jeff nodded and handed the book over. "Okay - but if you find a spell for world domination, don't forget who your best friend is."

Laughing Chris carried the book to the computer room and fired up the translation program. Shortly, he was deeply engrossed in translating the archaic, bastardized version of a dead language.

* * * * *

Hours later, he pushed the chair back from the computer desk, rubbing at eyes sore from staring at the computer monitor.

Jeff had left for work some time ago, leaving Chris alone to concentrate on the book. And concentrate he did - the version of Latin used was so bastardized that he only got one word out of three, on average.

He'd done as much as he could with what he had on hand. He'd just have to seriously study Latin and all its off-shoots before he'd be able to translate the book completely. But he'd gotten enough to be amazed - the spells that's he'd managed to put a name to were amazing, and they were about a fifth of the total spells in the book.

He'd also deciphered some of the 'rules' regarding spell-casting. For instance, the reason that both Jeff and he had known the truth after the sex-change spell had been cast was very simple - anyone who had knowledge that the spell was being cast wouldn't have their memories changed to match the new reality. Another rule was the 'multiple magic' rule - every time more than one spell was cast on the same person, the effects were cumulative, each new spell over-riding the reality of the past one.

Stretching, Chris got up from the chair. He looked down at the innocuous looking tome, still awed by the power it contained. He picked it up and carried it over to the little fire-proof lock-box he used for his important papers, planning to put it inside - then stopped.

Feeling embarrassed, he looked down at the book in his hand, then around the room. He had no plans for the rest of the night, and Jeff would be gone until very late. If he were to spend the evening as a woman - well, nobody would have to know, would they?

Feeling embarrassed, excited and nervous, all at once, Chris opened the book to the right page and just stared down at the words for several minutes, debating. Then, before he could change his mind again, he carried the book over to the bathroom. You had to be able to see the person you were ensorcelling, according to what he'd managed to translate. So, a mirror was necessary for self-spells.

Feeling a mix of emotions, he pointed at himself in the mirror, and quickly recited the spell.

It happened exactly as the first time, his body shifting its shape from the feet up, followed by her clothes. Within minutes, Chris looked at herself in the mirror with a wry grin, still feeling a bit like a pervert. Her cute feminine form looked back at her from the reflective surface, and Chris had to admit that she looked good as a girl - not that she had any plans to stay this way. It was just for a while.

Placing the book aside, she started a tub of water running - then, feeling guilty, she added bubble-bath to the water. Jeff and her apparently kept it around, although it hadn't existed before the change. She then slowly undressed, her heart pounding. She knew that no-one was going to walk in on her - and, even if they did, the spell would ensure that they wouldn't question Chris' gender - as far as anyone else could know, she'd been born female. Still, she thought she'd die of terminal embarrassment if anyone did see her while female - because she knew she was really a man. But the chance to actually see what life was like for a woman, to live the stories she wrote, was too good to pass up - if nothing else, her writing would definitely ring true after this.

Shutting off the water, Chris climbed into the warm water with a sigh, finding that it felt nicer on her now silky-smooth skin. Laying back, she closed her eyes - and let her hands slowly roam over her transformed body. Being shy and awkward around women, Jeff had never really had a chance to feel a woman's body like this - now, she could fondle to her heart's content - and, she could feel what it liked to be fondled as a woman, at the same time. She was startled to find how good her new body felt when it was touched. Especially her perky breasts - her hands kept returning to them, again and again, as she found that it not only felt good to feel them fondled, but it was very erotic and pleasurable for her male mind to fondle and touch her tits.

In fact, she was really, really enjoying the way it felt to fondle her tits - she'd had no idea how good it felt. Even though they were larger than the average B-cup size, she found herself idly wishing that she could fondle a large pair of tits, that being one of her male mind's long-standing fantasies...

Suddenly, she stopped and looked over at the book laying on the counter. "Well ?" She asked herself quietly. "Why not?"

Blushing furiously, she dried off and let the tub empty. Hanging on the back of the door was a robe, bra and pair of panties. She slipped into the white, high-cut cotton briefs, and enclosed her new endowments in the matching bra, then slipped on the pink terry-cloth robe.

Picking up the book and a small hand mirror, she padded bare-foot into the living room, and curled up on the couch.

Her face red from embarrassment, she flipped through the book until she'd found the spell she wanted. Propping up the hand-mirror so that she could see herself in it, Chris took a deep breath and quickly read the spell.

Unlike the first transformation, this time the clothes she wore changes at the same time as her body.

First, the robe softened. It was still pink, but now it was smooth, somehow erotic silk that enclosed her cute, feminine form.

The plain white panties became lacy pink satin - and a lot less of it. It barely covered the small patch of hair around her vagina, and narrowed to nearly nothing at the sides before disappearing into the crack of her cute ass.

Likewise, the bra also became lacy pink satin - as it changed to match what the spell's primary function was doing.

Chris' tits were growing. They were getting heavier as their mass increased, and also were beginning to fill out into a spherical shape. Chris gazed down at her swelling endowments as they passed D-cup, then DD, finally halting when they were nearly perfect, firm DDD- cup breasts, filling the soft satin bra enticingly.

Laying the book aside, Chris leaned back and closed her eyes as she began to fondle her firm, large tits through the bra, moaning softly at how good it felt - both physically, as a woman having her tits fondled, and emotionally, as his male mind fondled a large, firm pair of tits. She was mildly amazed at how sensitive her larger tits were, compared to the smaller one - and the new, large nipples were fantastic. Within short order, she'd undid the front clasp on the bra, and was slowly, sensuously fondling and squeezing her large, creamy tits.

After quite some time enjoying the sensations, she re-closed the clasp on her bra and stood up. She had begun to wonder what other changes to the universe at large had been caused by her simply enlarging her breasts, and walked into her room to find out.

Well, if nothing else, 'her' taste in clothing had subtly altered, she learned from a look in the closet. The shoes all had slightly higher heels, and the tops seemed to be made to show her larger breasts to a better advantage. Feeling silly, she decided to try on one of the outfits. Leaving the underthings she already wore in place, she pulled some items from the closet and began to dress.

She had picked a very basic outfit - a tight white-leather skirt that hung to just above her knees, and a peach-colored silk blouse. Slipping the clothing on, she hesitated - then stepped into a pair of elegant white pumps with a three inch heel. Walking over, she admired the cute-but-elegant look created by the clothing on her cute-but-busty figure. Shaking her head at her own foolishness, she 'completed' the outfit with a pair of circular gold earrings and a matching necklace. Deciding that the outfit looked good on her, she figured it couldn't hurt to leave it on - when she changed back in a few minutes, it would alter back into whatever masculine attire it had been. Her high-heels clacking on the floor, she walked back out to the living room...

...and stopped dead, her elfin jaw dropping in shock. "Nicki?" She asked in her feminine voice. "What...? How...?"

Nicki was lounging on the couch, the book of spells in hand as she looked at Chris with an odd, angry look.

"So - this is what you're really like, huh?" She asked, acidly. "I have a hard time understanding why anyone lucky enough to be born male would want to become a weak, pathetic woman in this male-dominated society. But, being a typical man, you also think all woman's tits need to be bigger, too."

Chris was stunned. How could she know any of this?

That was answered by Nicki, who noted the confusion on Chris' face.

"You know, I used to like you - so much so, in fact, that the week-end you and stud-boy left town, I snuck in and installed little video cameras all over your apartment. I saw everything."

"Look, Nicki..." Chris' said, pleadingly, taking a step closer...

...and Nicki quickly read off the spell that the page was open to, then snapped at Chris "Hold it right there!"

Instantly, Chris was unable to move, and with a sinking feeling realized that she'd cast the spell that forced him to obey any order she cared to give. Now, she slowly and languorously rose to her full height, and read off another spell.

"I just used a spell that makes me invisible and inaudible to everyone, unless I want them to see or hear me. Right now, the only person in the world who can see and hear me is you." Nicki explained with a devilish grin as she approached Chris. Nicki flipped through the book until she found the spell she was looking for.

"So, you like big tits, do you?" she asked with a cruel grin. "No!" Chris said - pleaded. "Don't..."

The protest was in vain. Ignoring the feminized man's plea, she slowly and maliciously read of the spell she'd flipped to.

Immediately, Chris' already large tits began to swell again. The clothing she wore also changed at the same time, to better match the person who wore it.

The shoes shifted and lifted her higher as they re-formed into a pair of white platform shoes with an unbelievable eight-inch stiletto heel. The skirt shrunk upwards to a micro-mini, it's white leather clinging to what little it covered like a second skin.

And the blouse changed into a sleeveless pink spandex crop-top that clung the curve and swell of Chris' now bra-less GGG-cup breasts, whose amazingly firm, spherical masses thrust proudly from her chest.

"Nicki - please Don't do this to me!" Chris cried, feeling the heavy weight of her huge new tits. That plea was also in vain, as the muscular feminist had wandered over to the window and looked out.

"Oh, goody - Jeff's right on time..." Nicki said. "Now, Christ, Sit on the couch... no, no, cross your legs and lean back slightly... perfect. Now, smile seductively "

Helplessly, Chris obeyed the commands, seating herself in a provocative pose and affixing a sensual smile to her face. Moments later, the door swung open, and Jeff entered.

"Who, Christi - now that's something great to come home to." Jeff said, eyeing the huge-breasted figure looking at him with such a sexy smile. For a second, Chris was confused - then realized that Jeff's mind had altered with the rest of the world, and he found nothing odd about the situation. He couldn't see or hear Nicki, and truly believes that Chris was - and had always been - Christi, his huge-breasted girlfriend.

That's when Nicki rattled off a spell, and faded completely from the awareness of the room's occupants.

Christi rose from the couch, her huge tits swaying with each step. "About time you got home, lover." She said with a warm, loving smile as she walked over to him. As she always did, she pulled herself tightly against her boyfriend, loving the way her huge tits felt against his muscular chest as she brought her full lips to his, and they kissed with their usual, deep passion. Finally, he broke the kiss, but continued to hold her tight.

"Christi, you sure now how to make a guy feel welcome." He said with a grin. Christi returned it, and they walked hand in hand to the couch, settling onto its cushions with warm familiarity. Christ leaned into his strong embrace as he clicked the TV to life.

"So, how was my best girl's day?" he asked, stealing another kiss.

"Oh, not too bad - did a little cleaning, but spent most of the day writing." She replied.

Jeff laughed. "What do you think your loyal fans would say if they discovered that their favorite writer was a big-titted woman like the ones 'he' writes?"

Christi pulled away and slapped him playfully. "Hey! The ones I write are all bimbos - and I'm not." Leaning back against him, she continued. "Still, I get really good response from my stories - they really like my huge-breasted nymphomaniac characters." She pulled a face. "It pays the bills, and I'm really good at it - but I still can't believe I'm writing these stories. I happen to like my men as men."

Jeff hugged her closer. "Yeah. I don't have any urge to be a woman either. Still - there must be something to being a woman. You certainly seem to enjoy... parts of being female."

Christi looked up at her boyfriend with a seductive grin. "Oh, yeah, there is one or two high points to being a woman."

Leaning down, Jeff kissed her again - but this time, one hand slid around to fondle her firm ass. Halfway through the kiss, he lifted her in his strong arms, and carried her into the bedroom. Laying her on the bed, he finally broke the kiss as her hands pulled his shirt up and over his head. He returned the favor, peeling her tight crop-top from her huge, firm tits. Bending down he began to caress her huge endowments, and when his lips and tongue began to work her nipples, she moaned softly and arched her back as she slid her skirt and panties off.

Still kissing her large, sensitive nipples, Jeff dropped his own pants and climbed onto the bed. Slowly, he worked his lips up until they were on Christi's own sexy lips - he straddled her and slid his hard, throbbing cock into her waiting cunt.

Christi moaned in pleasure as her long-time lover entered her. With the skill born of much practice, they began to move together, Christi beginning to pant as she neared orgasm.

Suddenly it overtook her, and she screamed in ecstasy as he body shook from the power of her ecstasy. Jeff, his face tense, kept the rhythm, pushing his lover into multiple orgasms before he himself came...

* * * * *

ONE YEAR LATER.

"Hmm... Good morning, my darling wife." Jeff said, padding bare-foot and naked from the bathroom, his hair still wet from the shower.

His wife of eleven months smiled up at her husband from where she sat on a comfortable cushion on the floor, also naked. One hand was lightly rubbing the bulge of her eight-month pregnant belly. "Your daughter's a feisty little thing." Christi said with a chuckle. "I think she'd wearing cleats." Then her tone of voice changed as she eyed the massive hard-on her husband was sporting. "Speaking of feisty, I think you could use some help with that thing..."

Jeff looked down at his rampant erection. "Well..." he said, still a little uncertain. "You don't have to..."

"Shut up and get over here." Christi commanded. "I'm looking forward to being able to have sex again, too. But until then, I'll settle for second best."

Walking over to his very pregnant wife, Jeff closed his eyes and tilted his head back as she took hold of his huge cock and guided it to her hot, wet and very willing mouth.

Skillfully, expertly, she began to blow him, teasing him with her rhythm. She'd never understood why some women didn't like blow-jobs she loved the feel of his huge cock filling her mouth and the taste of his cum was wonderful. Her hands, lips and tongue worked in unison, bringing him higher.. then slowing.. then bringing him even higher...

Finally, he couldn't hold off, and moaned in the back of his throat as his amazing flow of cum gushed into his loving wife's eager throat and she gulped hungrily at the warm, salty liquid, not wanting to waste a single drop. Finally he stopped gushing, and Christi carefully licked his huge tool clean.

"Hmm... That was wonder..." she started - then stopped, cocking her head. "Do you hear something?"

Jeff looked confused, and they both looked around the room. Although they were alone, they seemed to hear a female voice speaking some sort of gibberish...

Then, just as it finished, both Christi and Jeff suddenly regained their original minds, with full and complete memories of the past year....

The two best friends stared at each other, horrified - then Christi promptly screamed in shock as Jeff's knees suddenly refused to support him and he crumpled beside her.

"My god... Chris.. we " Jeff muttered, horrified. He gazed down at the massive sixteen inch cock thrust from his crotch, realizing for the first time that it was twice as big as it had been when he and 'Christi' had married.

Chris was staring in disbelief and anger at her huge, KKK-cup tits and swollen belly. "That bitch." She said in a cruel tone. "Who?" Jeff asked, not knowing how this had happened. Chris explained shortly.

"What do we do know?" Jeff asked when she was done, staring with great sympathy at his huge-breasted, pregnant, ex-male wife.

"I... I guess we have no choice." Chris answered slowly. "We'll never find the book again, so I'm stuck like this. Legally, we're married and I'm pregnant. Somebody will have to care for... our daughter."

Jeff shook his head with a tortured look. "I... can't. I'm sorry, but... I can't live with this, I can't deal with it. I hate myself for what I've done to you. I... feel like I just want to die. I wish I could atone for everything I've done... having sex with you..."

Suddenly, Chris flushed brightly and looked away. "Actually..." she said in a low, embarrassed voice. "I... I..." "Yes?" Jeff asked, confused.

Chris looked Jeff straight in the eye, and found the courage to speak boldly. "I didn't plan, or want, this to happen. I'm horrified how it happened, and I'm disgusted by some of it, like ending up pregnant - but after a year of being a woman, I'd never want to go back to my old life. I love having sex as a woman. I love sucking cock. I want to stay female for the rest of my life, and have sex often - you have no idea how good it all feels. I just wish I wasn't pregnant - or nearly so buxom."

Jeff averted his gaze from her bold eyes. "I... I'm sorry, Chris... I can't deal with this. I hate myself and my life. I just wish we could... go back to being best friends again..." He looked at Chris again. "Is it really so wonderful being a woman?"

Chris nodded slowly. "The physical part is - I mean, the body is much more sensitive, and sex is just incredible. But, I didn't appreciate as much when I was thinking as a woman, because without my male memories, I couldn't compare the experiences."

Jeff looked at his best friend, wife, and soul-mate with sorrow. "I I can't bring myself to even wish of depriving you of such happiness. If you want to stay female, if it's so wonderful then I want that for you. But - I can't deal with being married to you, or finding you attractive. I just want to be your best friend again."

Suddenly, Nicki's voice sounded from thin air, heavy with sorrow and regret. "I... had no idea that you two were so I'm sorry. I just wish there was some way I could set things right."

Jeff looked down at Chris, then hesitantly spoke. "There.... maybe a way "

* * * * *

ONE MONTH LATER.

The PII-333 hummed along quietly, the bluish-white glow from it's twenty-one-inch SVGA monitor lighting the small room. The gentle strains of Enya flowed from the speakers attached to the expensive, state of the art sound system, filling the room with Celtic-inspired sound and beat. The spare bedroom which served as the computer room was at peace, relaxing and tranquil. A far cry from the individual inhabiting it.

In her early twenties, tall and slender, but carrying more than a little extra weight in her firm, full DD-cup breasts, Chris paced in short circuits between the bookcase along one wall, and the leather couch along the other. One hand nervously stroked her long, sandy- blonde hair. She was dressed, as usual, in a faded blue-jean skirt, and one of her many white T-shirts, this one with a pink-trimmed v- neck. Her nylon-clad feet made no sound on the vinyl flooring, but she more than made up for that with her habit of verbalizing her thoughts...

"Should I finally write it?" She asked himself, then paused in mid-step to consider it before resuming his pacing. "Fun to write, but... Well, no one would believe it was true - it would just be another story, right?" Her voice trailed off as she considered her options.

With a heart-felt sigh, she dropped into the chair in front of the computer, the leather surface enfolding her trim, sexy ass. Resting her elbows on the desk, Chris leaned forward and put her elfin chin across her interlaced fingers, deep in thought.

The door to the computer room swung open, and Chris looked up as his roommate and best friend of eleven years stuck her head in. "Hey, Chris, how's it going?" She spoke diffidently - even after being in her new form for this long, she was unused to how her own voice sounded to her.

"Actually, Jen, I was thinking about using what happened to us as a basis of a story." Chris said, using the femme name Jeff had chosen.

Jen shook her head and stepped into the room, crossing her slender arms over her enormous, firm FFF-cup tits. "I can't believe you still write those things. I thought becoming a successful novelist would be enough for you." The petite woman with the muscular, but feminine, body and enormous boobs shook her head again. "I swear, I'll never understand..." She broke off as her watch chimed, and she looked down, her face turning a bright red.

Chris smiled. "Let me guess - another date with Steve?"

"Uh... yeah..." Jen admitted sheepishly. "I... I'd better go get ready." She headed for the door, and stopped at the threshold, turning back with a sly smile. "By the way - you're right - sex is better for us now..."

Chris laughed as Jen blushed and stepped out. Despite her awkwardness in her new form, she'd quickly discovered that she enjoyed sex as a woman. The first time, she'd had sex merely to atone for the year with Chris, feeling that she owed Chris that much. From then on, she'd done it for herself...

Still chuckling, Chris went into MS-Word, and began to type, her slender, long-nailed fingers flying.

'The older 486-66 hummed along quietly '

BACK TO FUN ZONE

SUMMARY: A wish by his friend and roommate turns one man into his buddy's dream girl.

Awoken

By Gunslinger

Yawning hugely, Danny pushed the covers down and sat up, sleepily scratching at his scalp through his sleep-tousled mane of hot pink hair as he swung his legs over the edge of the bed.

Pushing himself up off a mattress still inviting 'just a little bit longer' sleep, he stretched his arms over his head and clasped his tiny wrist, rising up on tip-toe and working the little kinks and flutters out of his muscles before he slipped into a pair of pink denim shorts and a white tank-top against what was sure to be yet another scorching summer day. Still blinking sleep from electric-blue eyes, he opened the white-painted door to his bedroom and stepped out into the second-floor hallway of the mid-nineteenth century house he shared with his 'housemate', Ryan. Pausing, he looked at the door that led into the bathroom, contemplating brushing his teeth to lose his morning breath - but wafting up the stairs was the rich odor of fresh-brewed coffee, and the siren's call of caffeine won out over hygiene, and he padded down the much-varnished oak floorboards and down the steep, narrow back stairs that led directly into the old house's kitchen.

Ryan was standing at one of the golden-oak counters, his broad back turned to Danny. His muscular ebony body was clad only in a pair of black boxer briefs that he quite often paraded around in for the first hour or so in the mornings - something Danny was convinced was done solely to show off his larger-than-average 'package' in a silent boast about the 'myth' of black endowment.

Though this early in the day it was still cool, sweat gleamed on Ryan's shaved scalp and hard-packed physique, indicating he'd probably just finished his morning 'reps' down in the basement he'd outfitted as their own personal gym, and he was 'cooling down' while waiting for the coffee to brew by standing in front of the open window over the sink, letting the cool morning breeze run over his twenty-four year old body.

"Mornin'." Danny said mushily through a suppressed yawn, as he walked over to the cupboard to grab a coffee mug.

To his bemused amusement, Ryan startled violently at the greeting - then scuttled sideways until his was half-hidden behind the waist-high butcher's block that took up the center of kitchen floor.

"Oh, I'm sorry." Ryan stammered, obviously flustered. "I didn't realize that anybody else was here." Danny's eyebrow rose as he poured himself a mug of coffee.

"Gee, Ryan - my being here's never made you embarrassed to be seen walking around in your show'em-off's before." He commented, taking an appreciative sip of the steaming black brew. "What's with the sudden attack of modesty, man?"

Ryan blinked, startled, and then his brow crinkled in confusion. Oddly, he kept staring at Danny - then he'd glance away suddenly, as if embarrassed, only to have his eyes slide back to look at him again, almost as if against his will.

"Miss...?" Ryan said in a thoroughly confused, questioning tone of voice. "I, uh... I would think I'd damned well remember if I'd ever met you before..."

It was Danny's turn to blink - and snort, shaking his head.

"What the hell is that supposed to mean?" He asked his roommate, in a 'waiting for the punch-line' tone of voice.

"What do you mean, what do I..." Ryan started, even more confused - and then he paused, his eyes narrowing while a faint smile began to twitch at the corners of his lips. "Oh, okay, I think I know what's going on here. Danny put you up to this, right? It's a gag of some sort, right? Okay - what's the punch-line?"

"That's what I'm waiting to find out..." Danny replied, with a bemused half-grin of his own. "Look, Ryan, God knows you've pulled a few good ones on me - but you know better than to hit me with anything before I get at least two cups of coffee in me. Mess with me before coffee, and I'm liable to bite you're friggin' head off."

Ryan's head jerked, as if he'd just been struck a blow. "Geez, you sound just like..." Then he stopped - and the smile resurfaced, this time much stronger.

"How the hell did he find you on such short notice?" Ryan asked, a tone of grudging admiration in his voice as he openly eyed Danny in a way that Danny had never seen him do before - at least, not towards him. The look in his eyes made Danny shiver, though he wasn't sure why.

"Excuse me?" Danny asked. "What the hell are you talking about?"

"Oh, right..." Ryan said, knowingly. "Veeerrry funny. Excuse me for a minute, will you?"

Turning, the compact, muscular black man headed out the same doorway Danny had come in by, taking the steps two at a time.

"Danny!" He shouted as he leapt athletically up the steep stairs. "Gotta hand it to you, buddy - this time you really pulled out all the stops. Where the hell are you hiding?"

Equally bemused, amused and confused, Danny followed his prank-loving roommate at a much more sedate pace, shaking his head and sipping his coffee as he went back upstairs. In the upper hall, he found Ryan. He was leaning against the doorway of Danny's bedroom, and shaking his head in admiration.

Catching sight of Danny from the corner of his eye, Ryan turned, his white teeth gleaming against his chocolate skin.

"Okay..." He said in a tone of open admiration. "Him finding you literally overnight was impressive - but how the hell did he move all his stuff out and all these clothes and furniture in without waking me?"

"What?" Danny asked, thoroughly confused by whatever gag this was. "What the hell are you talking about, Ryan?"

Reaching the bedroom door, Danny glanced around Ryan's shorter, but much more muscular frame...

"What the hell...?"

The room was exactly the way it had been when he'd climbed out of bed, finding absolutely nothing unusual about it as he'd stretched and dressed and headed out of it for coffee - and yet it was all wrong.

Wondering how on earth it was possible for him to have missed the fact that somebody had removed all his furniture, clothing and belongings and replaced it with much more feminine items, Danny gaped at the unfamiliar room he'd walked blithely out of just a little while ago.

"Okay, fun is fun." Ryan said, still shaking his head in admiring disbelief. "Where's Danny?" Confusion spawning annoyance, Danny turned to glared at his roommate and friend.

"Knock it off, Ryan. It's not funny." Danny said, waving a hand at the redecorated bedroom beyond. "Where the hell is all my stuff?"

"No, you knock it off..." Ryan countered with a grin. "Where's Danny?"

"Goddamn it, Ryan - I'm Danny, and you damn well know it!" Danny said, sharply.

"Oh, riiiight!" Ryan snorted sarcastically. "Hey, I may not be the most observant guy in the world, but I sure can tell the difference between a guy and a girl - especially when the 'girl' has a rack like that one."

"What's that suppo..." Danny started, angrily, his eyes almost instinctively dropping to follow where Ryan's hand gesture had pointed...

...stared at the apparent mile of deep cleavage the creamy skin of the two massive, round breasts formed in the straining, low neckline of the tank-top, thinking with proud amusement that it was definitely a note-worthy 'rack'...

...and then he screamed, coffee mug dropping from suddenly insensate fingers as he stumbled backwards and slammed up against the wall opposite the door to his changed bedroom.

"I've got tits! Huge, round tits...!" He screamed - and only then did the high-pitched, accented voice the words came out in register, as did the slender arms that rose to bring dainty, slim hands up to grab those tits in disbelief that couldn't be sustained in the face of the sensations the grasping hands caused. "I.. I'm a woman!"

"Yes, you do, and yes, you are." Ryan chuckled. "...and, yes, you do look very much like a manga babe would look like, as a 'real' woman. I get it. You can drop the act."

"I'm not acting...! It really is me, Ryan - I'm Danny..." He - no, most definitely she - screamed, hysterically - then what he mean by his 'manga babe' comment registered, and she gaped.

Last night, Danny had come across Ryan cruising the internet on their shared computer, visiting his usual book-marked raft of sites - including the ones with anime- and manga-style artwork featuring 'unrealistically proportioned' women. When chided about 'filling up the hard-drive' with such images, Ryan had retorted by saying that he had a roommate like these women.

Which meant that, inexplicably...

"It came true!" Danny screamed at Ryan, hands still clenching her massive new breasts. "Somehow, your joke 'wish' came true and... Holy shit, Ryan, you've wished me into a girl!"

"Really?" Ryan laughed, not taking her seriously. "Gee that's fantastic! That must mean you're also my loving, happy-to-please-me-anyway-you-can girlfriend too, right?"

His words bringing the rest of his wish to mind, Danny found her eyes almost helplessly drawn to the front of his boxer briefs, which was slowly starting to tent as he continued looking at her über- buxom figure...

...and her lips curved into a dreamy smile at the thought of pulling down his underwear to set his cock free so that she could wrap her warm, wet, and oh-so-willing mouth around his hard, throbbing manhood and...

"Holy crap...!" She screamed breathlessly, gagging at the thought she'd so easily - and happily! - entertained. "What the fuck did you do to me!"

Rolling his eyes, Ryan sighed.

"Look, you're a hell of an actress, I'll grant you that. You're playing it so well that it'd almost be believable - if the very idea itself wasn't utterly impossible." Ryan said in an exaggerated tone of patience. "Now, look, knock it off, and tell me where Danny is..."

"I am Toshi...!" She screeched - then her already huge blue eyes widened even further as she realized what had popped, unbidden, out of her cupid's bow lips. "I mean, Danny! I am Danny!"

She hesitated - then said, in a soft voice of stunned wonder: "Toshi Kuragatsu. 'Toshi' means 'Mirror Image', which I guess could be an appropriate name, all things considered... but how did I know that?"

Ryan was no longer looking at her as if he didn't believe her - now he was looking at her as if she were just plain nuts.

"Okay, 'Danny'," He said, voice dripping sarcasm. "What's my 'lucky shirt'?"

"The black one you wore that night you met Kari." She replied, almost vaguely, as her mind tried to trace down the odd 'knowledge' that seemed to have sprung up in it over night.

She continued answering his steadily more arcane questions in a similar voice, as she slowly began to realize that, whenever she was consciously thinking about something, she was 'Danny' - but whenever it was something instinctive or unconscious, it was 'Toshi' who's thoughts responded.

"B1ghty65", She answered, vaguely, to the question about their log-in password on the internet.

"Okay, then..." Ryan said in a decidedly odd tone of voice. "One last question. If you really are Danny - then why are you fondling my cock...?"

She blinked - then her eyes widened in horror as she realized that, lost in thought, she'd slowly moved steadily closer to him during the questioning, until she was pressed firmly against him, her huge tits pressing firmly into his shoulder as her amazingly slender, fine-boned hand lightly stroked the fabric covering his now almost fully-erect cock.

Hurriedly, she yanked her hand away and stepped back - and shivered at the momentary feeling of regret that ran through her as she pulled herself away from him.

"I.. didn't realize I was doing it..." She stammered. "I have the memories and thoughts of 'Danny', but the instincts, emotions - and body! - of 'Toshi'. If I'm not consciously thinking or doing something, then it's Toshi who 'decides' what to do. That's why I didn't notice anything strange about myself or my room until you pointed it out, and made me consciously think about it."

The odd look stayed on Ryan's face as he considered this - the look of somebody caught nearly believing the unbelievable, on the fine edge of doubt and belief and wondering which way to slide."

"But... how could such a thing happen...?" He asked, his phrasing keeping it well within the 'hypothetical' realm, not admitting to anything.

"Well, we were at the computer.. I was looking over your shoulder, drinking a beer..." She said, unaware of the fact that one hand had rising to begin lightly caressing her massive bust as she concentrated on the memory. "You were looking at the screen, playing with that pendant of..."

She stopped dead, and stared at Ryan's chest - and didn't realize what she'd been doing with her hand until she pulled it away from her tit to point.

"You're pendant!" She said, blushing and flustered as she realized she'd been fondling her new form. "It's different now!"

Startled, Ryan lifted up the small, crystal pendant he'd found on his way home the day before - and realized that the crystal was no longer clear, but milky.

Shocked, he realized something else, as well:

As impossible as this whole scenario was, it was also more believable than the thought that Danny had somehow found a woman who looked like a Manga babe brought to life, taught her all the answers to any question he might have asked, and also somehow completely changed around the bedroom, all in one night.

"Holy shit...!" Ryan gasped, eyes wide. "Danny...!"

"Bingo." The new woman said, sourly. "Look - try wishing me back, okay? Wish I was a man again, okay?"

"Oh, uh, sure..." Ryan stammered - though a very small part of his mind was snidely pointing out how much more enjoyable 'Toshi' was to look at than 'Danny' was... "I wish that you were Danny again!"

She waited, breathlessly - and Ryan was ashamed to feel a bit relieved when nothing happened. "Come on - why didn't it work!" Danny demanded, angrily hefting her huge new bust.

"I wish I knew..." Ryan said, guiltily...

...and he did.

"It can't directly reverse any previous wish!" Ryan exclaimed, stunned, lifting up the pendant anew and staring at the even-milkier crystal. "As soon as I said I wanted to know, I did - and I know that it can't undo anything I've wished before!"

"What...!" Danny screeched, horrified. "You mean I'm stuck like this?"

"I don't know..." Ryan started to say - when the long-legged, pink-haired woman with huge tits his friend and roommate had become suddenly punched him on the arm - hard.

"You did this to me, you bastard!" She shrieked, angrily - though it was an over-blow anger born of fear. Fear - because of the sense of happy relief she'd 'instinctively' felt at the thought of being forever female, courtesy of Toshi's emotional outlook, defined by Ryan's wish. Of course, a part of her knew that Ryan hadn't expected for the wish to come true - much less in the 'literal' sense of turning his existing roommate into his requested one, rather than creating a whole new one.

It didn't matter - because, angry and afraid and simply overwhelmed, Danny (or Toshi, for that matter) wasn't thinking in anything even remotely resembling a logical manner. Sobbing - and further upset by her 'womanly' tears - she beat at him with her small, delicate fists.

"Look, Danny, even if we - ow! - can't undo it, maybe - ouch! - there's a way to _stop it! - get around..." Breaking off his attempts at heart-felt reassurance, Ryan angrily pushed the garish-haired woman away...

...and, without thinking, said angrily: "Geez! I wish you'd just calm down until we figure out a way to turn you back...!"

That's the point at which the crystal he still held crumbled into dust.

"Oh, shit." The huge-breasted, wasp-waisted new woman said - calmly. "I guess that means I really am stuck like this, permanently."

Ryan stared in horror at the empty tarnished-brass frame that had held the crystal, then at his feminized friend.

"Oh, shit, Danny..." He said, horrified. "I didn't mean.. I just didn't think, and..."

"It's okay, Ryan." She assured him with a sort of wry calm. "It's really my fault. I wasn't thinking straight, and I made you mad enough to blurt something out."

He blinked at her. "Um..."

"Thanks to your unintended wish, I'm thinking straight now." She said, still with that oddly calm, almost resigned sense of wryly bitter humor. "Since there's no chance of me 'turning back', I'll probably be calm for the rest of my life, too. Well, I guess that means if I kill you, I won't be able to get off on a 'temporary insanity' plea..."

Ryan continued to gape at her.

"That was a joke, you know." She informed him, with a sad little smile. She paused, then looked down at the cooling puddle of coffee on the floor. "Let's go downstairs. I really need that caffeine..."

More than just a little numb, Ryan followed his feminine roommate's damnably sexy new ass down the hallway and stairs into the kitchen, wishing that he could stop finding her manga-brought-to-life figure so damned sexy.

It certainly didn't help that, as she walked, the movement of the hips on which that spectacular ass was mounted continued to become ever-sexier, achieving a steadily more 'Toshi'-driven sway.

The final straw came when, having poured herself a coffee, she struck a decidedly sexy pose, bracing one elbow on the counter in a way that caused her tits to thrust even more noticeable from her slender chest while she put all her weight on one incredibly long leg, the other going en pointe and causing the muscles to become taut and even more enticing.

"Uh, Danny..." Ryan said, uncomfortable with how aroused he was over his recently-male roommate's body and pose.

"Toshi." She corrected him, calmly sipping her coffee and eyeing him. His jaw dropped. "Huh?"

"I guess I should use 'Toshi' from now on." She explained. "Nobody's going to accept that I'm 'Danny O'Shea', though I suppose they might buy 'Dani' - but, judging from the way my room and all my belongings changed into feminine ones, I'm betting that I'll find ID for Toshi Kuragatsu, as well - though I don't look particularly Japanese, other than the fact I'm living Manga."

"Oh, uh..." Ryan stammered, then shook his head. "Um, Toshi, then - you probably don't realize it, but the way you're standing..."

"Is turning you on?" She asked, calmly, looking at his bulging crotch, "Yes, I realize that." "You... do?" Ryan blurted out in shock.

She shrugged - doing truly interesting things to her massive, firm bust. "Yes. Since I have to remain calm, the thought of being female doesn't horrify me. Though I do feel an intellectual sense of disquiet over it, especially because it's so new to me, my calm thinking has inexorably led me to the obvious conclusion that there's nothing inherently terrible about being female. After all, my gender was just an 'accident of birth', and I could have easily have been born female."

She paused for another sip of coffee, while Ryan continued to gape at her.

"Further more, the wording of the wish that did this gave me all the skills and 'instincts' of a woman - 'Toshi', to be exact, so it's not as if I have the problems I would if I'd simply been made physically female. I have all the skills and abilities I would have had I been born female - more or less." She continued, with a calm resignation. "Which brings us to why I'm standing like this - because, with my 'Toshi' instincts and my enforced calmness of thought, I simply can't come up with any 'good excuse' not to indulge the Toshi-emotions that provide a certain sense of pleased satisfaction that come from knowing I am doing something that pleases you."

"Oh..." Ryan mumbled. "Are you saying.. I mean, is this, um..." She chuckled. Dryly - 'calmly' - but with some real humor in it.

"The thought of being exactly the woman you wished to have doesn't - can't bother the 'Danny'-me, and does cause intellectual and emotional pleasure in the 'Toshi'-me. Without your 'calm' wish, of course, horror and disgust and other definitely

'un-calm' emotions would decided the issue - but because of the situation, I can't feel those emotions, though intellectually I know I would, had you not made that wish. I can feel the satisfaction you wished me to feel when I please you, though - and, after calm consideration, it simply makes sense to feel 'satisfaction' then not, doesn't it?"

Then, before Ryan's disbelieving eyes, she began walking towards him with a calm sensuality - while peeling her top off over her bright-pink hair, revealing massive, round breasts boasting large, thick nipples of almost the same improbable shade.

"Now, of course..." She continued, as she dropped the top and began to undo her shorts, "Calm, rational thought also leads to the inarguable conclusion that a life spent generating not only that intellectual satisfaction, but the varying levels and types of physical enjoyment a woman can experience while pleasing a man would be much more inherently enjoyable then a life spent denying myself those physical and intellectual pleasures."

Now completely naked, she reached where he stood in awed, aroused shock - and wrapped her arms around his neck and kissed him.

Not exactly passionately, but with a cool dedication to generating the most amount of pleasure a kiss was capable of providing it's participants - and she did so in such an effective manner that Ryan found any confusion or doubt powerless in the face of it, and he began kissing back energetically, his hands filling themselves with the taut flesh of her ass as she pressed her new body firmly against his.

It seemed an eternity before she broke the kiss - at precisely the right instant, the fine line separating 'just enough' from 'too much'.

"Yes, that was indeed quite pleasurable." She noted, almost clinically. "Don't you think so, too?" "Oh, yes..." Ryan agreed, stunned but fervent. "Very."

"The way it felt having you alternately caress and squeeze my buttocks without any set pattern certainly enhanced the experience." She informed him. "I appreciate it."

"No problem..." He replied with a chuckle that verged on being a hysterical giggle.

"Shall we see if it's equally, or perhaps even more, enjoyable to play with my tits, or would you prefer going right on to having sex?" She asked with a coolly polite tone.

Feeling a strange sense that he hadn't awoken at all that morning and was simply dreaming this whole thing, Ryan giggled and cocked his head in mock thought.

"Well, hell, why don't we just do both?" He 'suggested', unable to accept completely the reality of the unreal situation.

"That would be ideal." She agreed, taking his hand and leading him over to the table, where she pulled out a kitchen chair and turned it around. "I think you'll find that if I sit astride you and take on the majority of the task of sexual intercourse, you'll have ample opportunity to fully enjoy these breasts."

"Oh, of course..." He agreed with another giggle bordering on hysteria as she shimmied out of his underwear and sat down.

Nodding calmly, Toshi positioned herself, one long leg on each side of him, hands over his shoulders and grasping the back of the chair - and then she lowered herself onto his big, throbbing black cock.

"This may be even more pleasurable than I anticipated." She informed him with a calm note of surprise in her voice - as she began rising up and down on the cock that filled her tight, wet new cunt, her grip on the back of the chair allowing her to lean back to provide ample access to her bobbing, swaying tits. "You may start fondling my breasts any time."

"Sure..." HE gasped, no longer caring whether this was real or not as he reached out and began squeezing and caressing her tits while she steadily increased the rhythm of her thrusts. Calm, cool and thoroughly collected, she considered every single move and action she performed, aiming for the most mutual pleasure without letting - unable to let - her severely toned-down emotions or anything-but-reduced physical pleasure affect her calm performance of sexual intercourse.

"Yes..." She said, her voice only slightly tinged by the intense pleasure thundering through her body. "Considerably more pleasurable than I'd expected."

Ryan only grunted in reply.

"Though..." She noted, now thrusting hard and fast, sweat starting to trickle down her improbable figure. "The pleasure you are feeling seems to be detracting from your ability to fully appreciate my tits. I'll have to try that part of it separately some time."

"So.. rry..." He grunted out, inanely, hands still grasping and twitching on her huge, bobbing tits.

It was only when she reached her thundering orgasm, simultaneous to his - as planned - that she lost even a fraction of her calm manner - in the form of a few quite, restrained gasps of orgasmic pleasure.

"Yes - quite pleasurable indeed." She remarked, calmly smoothing her sex-tousled hair into place as she rose up off his spent cock. "I can see that my obvious decision to embrace the pleasure inherent in a life of full, emotionally-unaffected sexuality is certain the right one. It seemed self- obvious, of course, but there's always satisfaction in the empirical proof."

"Sure." Ryan grinned, goofily, watching as she took a dish-towel and wiped her body clean, then began to dress. "You, uh... finished for now, huh?"

"Oh, certainly not." She said, calmly, as she finished dressing. "However, despite however illogical the law might be on the subject, it nevertheless is a law in effect, and I do not wish to be arrested for indecent exposure."

Ryan blinked, grin fading. "You're.. going out?"

"Yes." She said, zipping up the shorts. "Obviously, there is no way any single man could possibly provide the near-constant physical pleasure that I, as a woman, am capable of experiencing."

Though I won't feel that same 'intellectual satisfaction' I will feel during sex with you, the physical experience will certainly be on par with any man I engage in sexual intercourse with. Objectively, it only makes sense that I find enough lovers to experience as much of this pleasure as possible."

"What?" Ryan gasped, stunned. "You.. You mean you're just going to go around, fucking men at random...?"

"Of course not. I'll choose ones who are best suited to provide the maximum pleasure." She said. "I will, of course, return here quite often, as you can offer me that emotional satisfaction that my other lovers will not be able to. You should be able to provide full sexual satisfaction as many as four or five times a day, I would think - though that is, of course, theoretical, and I'll be sure to arrange my schedule more securely as I gather empirical evidence either way."

Stunned, Ryan simply sat there, trying to wrap his mind around what his recently-male-now- emotionlessly-sexy-female friend was doing, not stirring until Toshi had gone upstairs, then come back down with a purse slung over one shoulder, and balanced atop the slender heels of her white platform shoes.

"You can't do this!" Ryan protested. "You can't just expect me to suit around, waiting for you to drop by for some sex while you're out fucking other men!"

"That's regrettable, but understandable, given the emotions and preconceptions that cloud your thinking." She said, heading for the door. "Still, logically, there's no choice between a slight increase in quality and a large increase in quantity. Nevertheless, Ryan, be assured that I will recall with pleasure that 'quantity' as I'm enjoying the 'quantity;."

Ryan gaped at her form as, hips swaying, she 'click-clacked' her way down the hall, out the front door - and out of his life.

"I don't believe this..." Ryan muttered, slumping back down onto the chair and shaking his head. "I wish I knew how the hell any heterosexual man could turn into a huge-breasted, outrageously sexy woman, and 'logically decided to be a slut!'"

As he felt the metal that had framed the crystal dissolving away into dust, Ryan had a barest instant to remember that old saw about assumptions as his hair began to spill down his face and his chest began ballooning rapidly outwards...

...and then Keiko, calmly swayed towards the stairs, considering different strides as she mounted the steps and walked down the hallway, until reaching the one that seemed to suggest itself as being the most 'arousing'. Satisfied, she stepped into

Toshi's room and considered the possible combinations of sexy clothing she could 'package' the body that, except for the purple hair, was in every way identical to Toshi's figure....

THE END

BACK TO FUN ZONE

SUMMARY: A covert cultist plans a way to get rid of her husband and plot revenge at the same time in an elaborate scheme to allow her child to become a High Priestess in the order.

Babes In The Woods

By Gunslinger

Over the past two hours or so, Chris had been thinking more and more about his hiking boots. The ones with the thicker, heavier-tread soles and extra interior padding. The ones that, right now, were sitting in the back of his closet at home, since he'd chosen to go with his well-worn army-style boots, figuring that the Garrison boots were already broken in, whereas the hiking boots were relatively new and unused.

At least, that was the excuse he'd given himself, silently willing to accept the somewhat less- comfortable Garrison boots because they just went so much better with the army-surplus jacket, backpack and cap that he wore along with his faded black denim jeans. For the past two hours, however, he'd been regretting his vanity, wishing instead that he'd gone with the comfortable, retrospectively-obvious choice...

...because he wasn't on the 'short hike' he'd originally planned when he'd left town. As a matter of fact - he was thoroughly lost.

Christopher Wakel had two days a week off from the mill where he worked - but, given the strange shift he worked, it was Friday and Saturday he had off, instead of the weekend, like most of his friends meaning that Fridays tended to be rather boring for him. So much so that he'd actually gone ahead and done something that, for him, had been quite radical...

He'd begun to read.

He wasn't by nature a 'literary' man. In fact, reading the sports pages was about the extent of his usual reading habits - and yet, finding himself with his Fridays off in a small Maine town where most of his contemporaries were working, and working hard, the twenty-seven-year-old had needed to find something to do, something that would get him away from his house...

...where 'The Bitch' waited.

'The Bitch' had once been Elizabeth Perlins, the head cheerleader of John F. Kennedy Vocational Collegiate, and the most chased-after girl in school, cute, sexy, and daughter of the town's Head Selectman. Every guy had vied for her attention - and Chris had been the one to get it, dating her with smug smile on his face, strutting around town with her on his arm, enjoying the compliments about how 'perfect' they looked together - her, trim and blonde and lovely, him ruggedly handsome and broad-shouldered.

Then he'd managed to screw up his entire life. He'd gotten her pregnant.

He hadn't meant to, of course - but he had meant to get into her pants, especially since, 'girlfriend' or not, she was 'frosting' him, as the then-current slang had gone, and so he'd found a good excuse to get her drunk on some Akavit he'd had a friend pick up in Augusta, the clear alcohol deceptively smooth, and even more potent...

...and the fact that he'd had to match her, drink for drink, to get her to keep going had meant that he, himself, had been pretty well plastered that night - and had forgotten to use a condom.

Just like the old saw said, 'Once is enough', and the next thing he knew he was standing in front of the altar, his very-slightly-swelling and not-so-blushing bride standing at his side, his father-in-law to be standing very close at hand, his features rather hard for what the preacher had called 'This, the joyous of occasions...'.
.

It had been a 'formal wedding' - Pop-in-law had painted the shotgun white...

Okay, so it was metaphorical - but, sometimes, Chris wished it wasn't. He would have been a lot happier if there had been a gun involved - and somebody had used it, on him or her.

Since then, life had gone steadily down hill. Backed by the power of her father, Lizzy had made sure his life was pretty well a living hell, not to mention damned near celibate. There were times he didn't even feel like a man anymore, and he wished he had the guts to stand up to his shrewish (and slowly expanding) wife, the guts needed to take her in hand - and to take her in bed, taking control in sex the way a man should.

Instead, he'd chickened out, purposely finding ways to avoid going home, except at night, when he could crawl into bed and pretend to fall asleep almost immediately, thus being spared having to actually deal with his wife in any meaningful way.

It was while 'hiding out' in the library, driven by boredom, that he'd actually begun to read - and what he'd been reading was a book written by a local author and printed at a vanity press, a place where the author paid to get published. There were only about a dozen copies of the book in existence, one of which had been donated to the library, and it contained all sorts of local folk-lore and legend...

...including one about some sort of local 'cult' that had worshipped out in these woods.

Not much was known about this cult, since it had 'flourished' in the 1800's, then simply vanished. Apparently consisting mainly of women, it had apparently been Druidic or something - nature worship of some sort, at any rate. Since they dozen or so worshipers always vanished into the woods, there's been speculation of some sort of church or chapel in the tangled forest outside of town, but cursory searches by surveyors and the like had never turned anything up.

So, with nothing better to do with his time, the athletically-built young man had decided that he'd go take a look for himself - especially since spending a day in the woods, especially in the unseasonably warm spring weather, was a hell of a lot better than sitting in the towns' small, stuffy library, trying to ignore the overpoweringly floral scent of Mrs. Detweiler, the librarian.

It had seemed a good idea at the time - except for the fact that Chris wasn't exactly a woodsman. Though athletic, it was 'sports' athletic, except for the fact that it was his work at the mill that kept his 'Star Running Back' body in shape these days.

Neither football nor mill work had really given him much in the way of woodcraft skills, and he'd never been a boy scout - and so, wandering in the woods and looking for something that possible - probably - wasn't even there, he managed to get himself well and truly lost.

Now, the sun was sinking towards the tree-line, evening drawing steadily closer - and he was out wandering in the woods, without so much as a sleeping bag, much less a tent, not knowing where the hell he was going - the best he could do was pick up what appeared to be a faint old trail that wound through the trees, nearly invisible other than the fact that the growth was thinner and shorter than that filling the rest of the forest, allowing for somewhat easier traveling - and with his feet killing him inside his poor choice of footwear, he was willing to take the risk that he was heading the wrong direction.

Though the trail wound around the trees, it seemed to run in one general direction, and he hoped that sooner or later it's come to a logging road, county road, or even a stream - any of which he'd then follow until he eventually ran into something vaguely resembling civilization.

Though the tract of woods he was walking through was fairly large, it certainly wasn't the boundless forest of yesteryear, and even walking in the opposite direction of town would eventually end up with him hitting one of the outlying farms or communities. So, maybe he wouldn't get home tonight, which would mean having to listen to The Bitch harp and whine for a couple of days about how 'worried' she'd been about him - when, in fact, he knew she probably wouldn't care if he vanished altogether. As a matter of fact, she'd probably prefer it - but if he did show up, eventually, she'd play the whole 'wounded wife' routine, upset that he hadn't told her where he was going or what he was doing, actually sneaking out of the house before she awoke so she wouldn't know what he was up to.

After all - what she didn't know, she couldn't sabotage...

...though, at the moment, he almost wished she had sabotaged it.

Pausing for a second, the rangy man looked up at the interlaced canopy of growth above him and considered the possible outcome of today's little jaunt. Aside from the obvious, that he was going to be exhausted and sore from all this walking, and the fact that he was going to get bitched at when he got home, he thought maybe it all might be worth while if he did end up in some outlying town - because then he'd have a good excuse for not heading straight home, since by the time he got anywhere there was people, it would be late, and he'd have a good excuse.

('Oh, god, honey, I'm just so exhausted from all the walking...' He imagined himself saying into the receiver of a phone in a hotel room, huge grin belying his tone as he made frantic shushing motions at the hooker he'd hired for the evening, a nice, compliant woman who'd be more than willing to let him take control in bed...)

Yes - that might be worth it all, after all. A night in a town that wasn't under the thumb of The Bitch's father (Dubbed, of course, 'The Bastard' in Chris' mind), finally able to get some nookie.

Yeah. Yeah - the more he thought about it, the better he liked it. It was about time he finally had somebody - a nice, compliant somebody - share his bed...

"Oh, I think I can find a bed for you, cutie..."

Wrapped up in his own thoughts, Chris almost had a heart attack when the voice came out of nowhere - but despite being keyed up, he didn't make any move to attack as he whirled to confront the owner of the voice - because his mind simply wouldn't accept the idea that anybody possessing such a warm, sexy female voice could possibly be a threat to him.

The owner matched the voice.

She was almost as tall as he was, but three inches of that height came from the block heels on her knee-high leather boots, worn over a pair of tight jeans that molded themselves to trim hips and a firm, round ass - just the kind Chris liked, as a matter of fact. He was also highly appreciative of the way her black turtle-neck sweater clung to her slender waist and her small, firm bosom. Tall and lean and supple, the dark-haired woman had the build of an Olympic gymnast or figure-skater, firm yet graceful and the face of a fashion-model, her strong, memorable, features well defined, from her high cheekbones to her slim, fine-bridged nose.

She was gorgeous, glassy and sexy - and Chris wondered what the hell she was doing standing in the middle of the woods, dressed in classy clothes, all brand-name designed stuff that fit her trim figure as if hand-tailored for it.

In fact, he was so startled by her appearance, both what she looked like and where it was that she was looking like that, that he certain other questions that should have been uppermost in his mind sort of just... 'slipped by'.

"Uh..." Chris said, eyebrows going up slightly as he gazed quite appreciatively at her supple figure. "What's a nice girl like you doin' in a place like this?"

She laughed - a bit of a hard-edged sound, but still rich and sexy. "Well - that's the most original use of that line I've ever heard, I must admit." She cocked her head and slowly licked her clear-glossed lips. "My name's Morphia. I live here."

Chris blinked. "I didn't know anybody lived in this part of the woods."

She laughed again. "Really? Frankly, I was under the impression that you weren't even sure which 'part of these woods' you were in anymore."

"Well..." Chris said, flushing slightly in a mixture of shame and anger - shame at his own contribution at getting lost, anger at Jack for his part in the situation. "I guess I don't, really."

Morphia's dark eyes were slowly sliding over Chris' rangy build, a thoughtful purse to her lips. "Now, I believe we were talking about beds. Were you looking for some nice, peaceful sleep in a comfortable bed - or were you looking to have lots of hard, hungry sex ?"

She asked it in the tone of a woman offering a choice between Pepsi or Coke, and Chris took a second to clue in - and then he just gaped at her, startled.

"Well?" She asked, a bit impatiently. "It's not a tough question, Chris. Did you want to have sex ?"

Chris blinked twice, took a deep breath....

"Yes, please "

"Well, then - walk this way..." Morphia said, her grin oddly triumphant as she turned and began to walk towards a thick wall of undergrowth that he hadn't even considered trying to push through - until he'd found a very powerful incentive, that was...

Namely, the pert sway of her taut, full ass packed into skin-tight denim. Practically entranced, he followed the 'piece of ass' to the wall of growth, discovering that there was a spot where two overlapping layers appeared to be solid from any distance greater than a foot or so, but actually formed a short passage with a ninety-degree bend at the end, like a wild-looking hedge maze.

Aroused, startled and a bit confused, Chris failed to realize that she'd used his name - without having bothered to wait for him to introduce himself.

She turned the ninety-degree corner at the end of the short foliage hallway, and he followed quickly, already envisioning what was to come...

...and so he rounded the corner and took a good four steps further before he realized that the slender, shapely woman had, quite simply, vanished.

Chris stopped dead, looking around in confusion. He was in the center of a clearing, one that was roughly thirty feet square, framed on all sides with that thick, wild undergrowth, but with a grassy center as lush and neat as any lawn.

However, few people used a huge, antique-looking foUr poster bed as lawn furniture.

It sat in the dead center of the clearing, hunter-green silk sheets and gleaming cherry-wood picking up the low-angled light that came over the tops of the trees surrounding he clearing and fell on the bed as if the entire scene had been staged to look utterly perfect at this precise moment in time. A large sign, carved cherry-wood on a brass post, was mounted right beside the bed, the scroll-carved script letters on it reading: 'To Sex and Town'.

The little hand icon carved below the words were pointing directly to the bed.

"What the fuck...?" Chris said, his arousal now mixed with anger. He looked around the clearing with a slowly lowering brow, now getting the feeling that he was the star of some practical joke - because there was no sign of Morphia, and nowhere she could have easily vanished. Even the bed sat high enough off the ground that the fitted silk sheets let him see beneath it, and there was no sign of the supple woman.

"Morphia...?" He called, an edge in his voice as he slowly stalked towards the bed. "This ain't funny "

There was no reply. As a matter of fact, if Chris had been a little more alert and a little more knowledgeable about woodcraft, he would have noticed that it was too silent, not even the sound of birds or other wildlife disturbing the calm silence of the forest glade.

Reaching the bed, he stopped and looked around, wondering what the hell was going on. If this was a practical joke, it was a hell of an elaborate one - since about the only way Chris could see to get the obviously expensive bed into the glade would have been to air-lift it in by chopper, and he hadn't heard any helicopters all day.

"This is..." Chris paused for a second, considering the best word for the situation as he took a step to the side and turned around, starting to fall backwards onto the bed as he finished with the less-than- perfect word: " weird."

If 'weird' was the best he could do for the situation at that point, then he was shit out of luck when it came to finding the correct term for what happened next.

The instant his ass touched the bed...

...everything changed. Everything.

In a society that drew heavily on movies and television, there was sort of a subconscious assumption at work, one fostered by the fact that Hollywood special-effects artists not only wanted big and flashy, but also great build-ups and detailed camera coverage to best display their efforts. In the movie and television industry, this was completely justified - since, after all, it was entertainment, and the people who produced such extravaganzas had a right to be proud of their work. They certainly didn't want it to flash by in the blink of an eye, to fast for the human brain to grasp in situ.

That, however, was exactly what Chris experienced - and his brain, not having had a lot of 'practice' at this sort of thing, had to deal with the changed flow of information as best it could, actually receiving all the sensory input in one instant, but needing time to sort it out and process it, leaving Chris 'lagging behind' reality as he tried to cope with the fact that there was a sharp discontinuity between 'a second ago' and 'now'.

First of all, he was no longer outside. As a matter of fact, he was staring at a pretty standard Eggshell-white wall, on which a large, sexy photo was centered above the black lacquer bureau, whose glossy top sported two white ovoid vases with synthetic flowers in...

...but his attention had already shifted downwards, to the thick, black, deep-pile carpet that covered the floor, and on which all the furniture...

...including the bed - which was still four-poster, but now gloss-black lacquer...

...with red silk sheets...

...which meant it matched the black and red leather of the corset that was pulled painfully tight around his tiny waist, the garters holding up the black nylons that enclosed his long, smooth, shapely legs, and...

Right about then, his over-stressed brain decided that it needed to go back and verify something - and it wasn't the decor or layout of the room, either. It was the fact that he didn't seem to be himself anymore that sort of got his attention.

Quite understandable, really. What was a little less understandable was why he didn't freak out as he.. she... stared down at the lace-trimmed tops of the thigh-high nylons - and, centered between those smooth, creamy thighs, a perfectly formed little cunt, it's pink folds unmasked by any pubic hair.

In fact, it was downright amazing that Chris wasn't freaking out - since to see that view, she was looking down past the firm, taut mounds that filled the demi-cups built into the corset, the flesh of her healthy C-cups creamy and smooth and undeniably, absolutely, almost definably feminine...

...and in every detail matched that in the photo above the dresser...

...except, on second look, it wasn't a photo, but a mirror - something her brain had refused to process at first, since the image reflected was completely unlike what she'd expected to see...

...so why was it that a second look at the reflected image produced a sense of... of, well, of familiarity? The woman reflected back in the mirror was tall and supple and well-toned, athletic without being any the less feminine for it. In fact, her lean, taut frame perfectly matched her sharp-featured face, pale with blood-red lipstick and heavy black mascara, her already sharp features further brought out by the fact her glossy-black hair was pulled back up on her head, drawn tight by the three chrome rings that it wound through before falling in a tight-curved ponytail down her toned back.

Brain still spinning, Chris slowly rose to her feet - and gained more information for her over-stressed brain to handle.

Like the fact that she moved with a sexy, powerful grace.

Like the fact that she was moving that way atop a pair of black platform heels with six-inch metal spike heels.

Like the fact that there was some sort of strange liquid burning sensation in her crotch, one that wasn't actually painful, but more... demanding.

"Demanding..." She whispered, as if hearing the word for the first time - at least, in the cool, smoky new contralto that it came out in...

A sound from behind her caused the new woman to turn, her brain somehow still not seeming to comprehend the.. the impact of what was going on - as if it were too busy experiencing to waste time thinking.

Which was why she didn't think anything was particularly odd about the fact that Steve Duchamps, the foreman of the mill, was tied up on the bed.

Naked.

D-rings mounted on the head- and foot-board allowed him to be trussed up as neatly as a calf at a county rodeo, his body stretched full out on the bed. Thin red welts covered his body - and it was right about then that Chris realized that she was holding something in her right hand.

Specifically, a whip. A whip that looked like it's be just right to cause those sort of welts, as a matter of fact.

A whip whose handle also doubled as a magic marker, she saw - which would explain the red magic- marker letters printed on Steve's stomach in a sharp-angled feminine hand:

Property of Mistress Christine.

"Oh..." Mistress Christine said, vaguely, cocking her head as she stared at the naked man, who was looking back at her, wide-eyed, making muffled sounds around the black ball-gag strapped into place around his mouth - not that she was looking at that part of his anatomy, her eyes fixated on something much lower.

Something that looked like it could fill the demand that she was feeling...

"But it can't do that unless it's hard..." Christine muttered to herself - an astounding logical leap for somebody whose brain had been short-circuited so that sensation and desire now took the place of thought and intelligence...

...and, repeating the comment louder and more angrily, it never occurred to her that maybe she really didn't want to straddle the guy's knees and almost angrily start fondling his cock, making it slowly swell into full erection. After all, she had a desperate need - a demand - to satisfy, and that's all she was currently capable of dealing with.

So, it only seemed to make sense to her that once he was hard, she rise up, scoot forward - and plunge herself down on the restrained foreman's cock, fulfilling her need.

"Oh, Yes...!" She cried in intense satisfaction at having her cunt filled, creating all the wonderful sensations she was craving.

The one she was, in fact, addicted to - but she didn't realize that, not at the moment. All she knew was that having a cock buried deep inside her hot new cunt felt wonderful -and it only got better when she began to flex her legs, riding him hard and fast, trying to satisfy her needs...

...without the slightest bit of consideration for him.

Then again - she also didn't have the slightest consideration for herself, at least in terms of what she 'liked' and 'disliked' - she had an overwhelming urge to satisfy her lust, and she was taking care of that urge - which was so strong that it was all she could think about at the moment, riding atop him hard and fast, her chest heaving as she gasped out phrases of pleasure and satisfaction.

"Oh, God, yes.." She moaned, riding him, legs flexing to drive her up and down and create that wonderful friction, her position and his lack of mobility allowing her to find just the right angle to drag his cock across her clitoris in perfect position to generate the most pleasure - and that's exactly what she wanted, the most pleasure possible, in the fastest way - 'Damn the torpedoes, full speed ahead...'

...until she hit the torpedo, and was hulled square amidships by the blossoming white explosion of orgasm, coming hard and fast and without warning - well, due to her lack of experience in the female body, Christine missed the warning signs, not seeing them for what they were - but, then again, it didn't really matter, since she'd gotten exactly what she needed - her hard, fast orgasm...

...which, satisfying her lust and momentary slaking her rampant sexual needs, allowed her brain to come something close to normal function.

Chris screamed in horrified realization of what s/he was, frantically shoving with those long, toned legs to separate from Steve, doing so hard enough that s/her practically leapt off of his cock...

...just as he came, his seed flying up in an arc that splattered back down on his groin and lower chest, denying him the final, intense pleasure that came at the moment of climax if still fully 'enveloped' by a warm, wet pussy - and making it all the more 'dominatrix-ish' for the poor, confused man, who moments ago had been asleep on his couch at home, taking an after dinner nap, only to wake in this strange situation...

...which only got stranger as the lean, supple woman who'd just 'raped' him cried out in horror... "I just fucked a man...!"

It was the sound of horrified realization, the shout of a woman disgusted by what she'd done... but even as it came from her mouth, there was an odd look growing on her face. It was a look that somebody who'd been afflicted with poison ivy probably would have recognized immediately.

It was the look of somebody with an itch that they really, really wanted to scratch, even as they knew it was the worst possible thing they could do.

"I.. I just fucked.. a man..." She repeated in an odd tone, the desperate hunger in her eyes once more giving her sharp-featured face a 'lean and hungry' look as she unconsciously licked her lips, her momentarily sated lusts once again rising towards the threshold level...

...and then past.

"I fucked a man.." She said, smugly. "...and it was fantastic..."

Looking down at the slave tied to the bed, she smirked, knowing he wouldn't be any good for satisfying her lusts, at least not for a while. That was no big deal, at least not in her current condition - as her rising hunger continued to grow, she'd do anything she needed to do to satisfy it...

Anything.

...and, after she did, she'd have a moment of horrified reaction to what she'd done, not only that time, but this - and so on, forever, each few seconds of clarity allowing her to see what she'd been driven to do by her new, insatiable needs...

...before the whole cycle started all over again.

A cycle of 'lots of hard, hungry sex' - just as she'd been promised.

Leaving Steve where he lay, the helplessly new nymphomaniac dominatrix wrapped a long, SS- Uniform-inspired black leather coat around her lean and limber body, then swiveled atop her high heels and headed for the door, her mind once more fixated on one thing, and one thing alone.

Sex.

So, as she went out the door, she was in no position to even think about her wife and child...

...not that she'd really thought of them very much as a man, either.

However, just as he stepped out the door, an 'odd' thought zipped through Mistress Christine's head:

'Well, I'm finally in control when it comes to sex...' she thought, smugly, a little confused as to why that seemed so important to her...

..and not realizing that, in fact, it was completely untrue, in the most basic, fundamental way possible. She'd realize it soon, however - and often.

Every time she got fucked, as a matter of fact.

In fact, though her life was now radically different in many ways, there were still many things that held true:

Christine still had almost no control over her sex life - it just went in the opposite direction now, too much instead of too little.

She was still saddled with a life that she'd never expected to have, and with no end in sight.

Most of all, though, she was still spending every 'free' moment of her life (in her new life, that had a new, more accurate meaning) looking for a way to escape The Bitch...

...except, now, The Bitch was her...

...'till Death did them part.

* * * * *

'Morphia' watched in the scrying-bowl she'd set up in the kitchen of her house, having hurried back to watch the adventures of her little 'toy'...

...and, so, she'd seen everything 'Christine' had done, verifying that her little plan had worked.

With a smile, Lizzy - a descendant of one of the original 'Cultists', inheritor of the lore, legends and secrets of their secret order - resumed her lovely own original form - not the 'fat' one she'd been slowly working on as part of her long-term plan to seduce and get impregnated by an unsuspecting - and unknowing - descendant of another one of the cultists, one who hadn't been told about his heritage...

...but who had plenty of power in his genes, and thus able to give her a child that would surpass even herself.

Of course, she'd been disgusted at having to let a man touch her - but, it was necessary, as necessary as keeping the stupid piece of shit around long enough for him to continue 'broadcasting' a dampening field, by virtue of his mere gender, that kept their daughter from making use of her power when she was too young to control it. Now that Sophia was old enough to start training, Chris had been a liability - and, elaborate as her plan had been, it had worked out perfectly, not only ridding her of his presence, but allowing her to get revenge on him.

And for the mother of the next High Priestess of Elath, life was very, very good...

THE END

BACK TO FUN ZONE

SUMMARY: When his friend comes into the possession of body suits that transform your appearance, one man decides he would like to see what it feels like to be female, he just doesn't count on liking it so much!

Bawdy Body Buddy

By Gunslinger

Giving off the distinctive syncopated growl of a genuine Harley Davidson, the motorcycle's engine revved briefly higher as it's rider twisted it's throttle and urged the gleaming black and chrome machine up the steep, concrete-slab driveway. Rumbling it's way up the inclined drive, the motorcycle reached the circular 'turn around' at the level spot at the top of the hill.

Pulling to a stop in front of the somewhat dilapidated barn-like garage, Terry swung one heavy- booted foot down to pop the kickstand into place, then killed the engine and let the Sportster cant sideways onto it's support. Swinging one jean-clad leg back over the bike's saddle, the broad- shouldered young man pulled off his helmet and hung it from the handlebars.

Running his fingers through his fairly long, sandy-blond hair to get rid of 'helmet head', Terry headed towards the back door of the good-sized house filling the summit of the hill-top lot.

A sprawling, two-story structure in the Craftsman style, the house had wood-shingle siding that had weathered to a pale shade of gray, and the white-and-green trim could have used a sanding and repainting - a detail Terry really couldn't help noticing.

After all - he was the one who should have been doing that sanding and repainting.

Shaking his head, Terry had to smile at himself in amusement as he mounted the steps to the kitchen door. The owner of the house had been more than just 'understanding' about Terry's dream of being a musician. He was more than happy to let Terry set his own hours, doing the reno work when it was most convenient than on any set schedule, and never taking Terry to task for how long the on-going project was taking. In fact, the only person taking Terry to task over his 'lazy' work habits was... Terry himself.

"that's what you get for having an over-developed work ethic..." Terry chuckled to himself, turning the knob on the back door and pushing it open without bothering to knock. Terry had quickly learned that Josh, the owner of the house, preferred not to have Terry knock. Depreciatingly calling himself a 'self-made thousandaire', Josh made his money doing computer programming, and hated being disturbed in the midst of a creative spell.

The fact that Terry had come over specifically in response to an excited, nearly frantic telephone call from Josh didn't change anything. Aside from doing renovations, Terry's job was as a 'man Friday', doing all sorts of things, from going shopping for Josh to test-playing the game levels the 'quintessential computer nerd' made his living developing. It wouldn't be the least bit out of character for Josh to have had a 'great idea' during the twenty minutes between the phone call and terry's arrival, and he'd hate to be interrupted in putting that idea to use.

Shrugging out of his leather jacket, terry tossed it negligently across the bench seat of the built-in breakfast nook, and then puttered around the kitchen to get a pot of coffee brewing. Josh was a real 'coffeeholic', and sooner or later would come into the kitchen for a cup.

Since Josh had inherited the house free and clear, and had few interests (and practically no social life) beyond what he referred to as his 'well paid hobby', Josh tended to stretch the money he earned even further that might be expected from his income statements. Aside from paying Josh to take care of all the niggling little 'real life' details that distracted him from his beloved computers, Josh's only other real expenditures were for his sole remaining 'interest'... which meant that there was plenty of porno mags scattered across the surface of the table. Plopping down on the bench seat next to his jacket, Terry picked up a copy of Big'uns and began to flip idly through it's glossy pages.

A naked stranger burst through the kitchen's swinging door.

A sudden surge of adrenaline yanked Terry to his feet, a startled oath coming to his lips as his head jerked in the direction of the unclothed intruder.

Though somewhat shorter than Terry, the naked man was at least as broad across the shoulders, and more heavily muscled than the athletic blond. Moreover, as he was naked, it was easy to see that the dark-haired man was also considerably better endowed than Terry was - and the blond had never had any complaints in that particular department.

The dark-haired man's head swung towards Terry, who was bemused to note that the stranger wore thick, horn-rimmed glasses - glass that were, in fact, identical to the ones that...

"Terry!" The man exclaimed, cutting Terry's thought short. "Holy shit, terry - can you believe this...?"

Though considerably deeper, the voice sounded startlingly similar to another one Terry was familiar with, and the phrasing and breathless excitement was also quite recognizable - and terry's eyes, widening rapidly, flicked to the man's face...

"Josh...?" Terry asked, numbly. Though brow and jaw were broader and more strongly defined, the face grinning boyishly back at him, electric-blue eyes shining behind thick glasses, was - impossibly! that of his employer and friend. "Josh, is that.. you?"

"Yeah!" The muscular man shouted, with a chuckle rumbling in his deep, barrel-like chest. "How frickin' cool is this?"

"But.. but..." Terry stammered, actually reaching up to rub at his eyes with balled fists. "How the hell...?"

"Come on!" The inexplicably changed young man exclaimed, gesturing eagerly with one massively- muscled arm...

...and sending the toaster flying as the ham-like fist at the end of that arm inadvertently connected.

"Oops..." The heavily muscled man muttered, blushing brightly, as he brought both arms in tight to his chest, as if afraid they'd start lashing out on they're own unless he held them tightly in check. At the same time, he hunched his hulking shoulders, tucking his chin down into his neck, while he shifted his legs, turning the knees inward.

It was then that Terry accepted what he was seeing, impossible as it should have been to believe. Perhaps a 'rational' explanation would have been that this man was Josh's long-lost twin brother who'd spent a life pumping iron where Josh had been pounding keys... but the look on the man's face and the instinctive way he moved weren't that of somebody who had grown up with that muscular body and was used to it's strength and size. No - the expression and motions were pure Josh.

"Holy crap, man!" Terry blurted. "What the hell happened?"

Josh's smile resurfaced, and his eyes began to sparkle once more with his typically unrestrained enthusiasm.

"You gotta see this!" Josh said, gesturing again - but this time with such exaggerated care that it was unintentionally comical. "Come into the living room!"

Not even waiting for a response, Josh pushed back through the door he'd burst through moments before. As he walked with a sort of loose-limbed gait that seemed strange for such a powerful body, his mouth ran on with it's usual 'mile-a-minute' breathlessness;

"I ordered them online, from this site, where they sell stuff, like surplus or promo or bankruptcy sort of stuff, y'know, and the listing said they were sex dolls, so I ordered them, because they were cheap, only they just got here today, and I opened the package, and they looked like sex dolls at first, really good ones, and I got all excited, but then I took a closer look, you know, and they weren't dolls at all because you couldn't blow them up, and they seemed to be suits instead, so, I finally decided to try one on, and I did, and then it got warm and then really tight and..."

Forced to pause for a breath, Josh stopped in the doorway to the living room to smile back at Terry over on broad shoulder.

"I don't know how... but it became real!" Josh exclaimed. "Come on - I'll show you." Terry, more than just bemused, followed his altered friend through the doorway.

Josh was never what anybody would call 'neat', and between his almost childish air of excitement and the packaging material strewn all over the place, there was a very 'Christmas-morning' feel to the living room. At least a score of brightly-colored boxes were stacked in three hap-hazard piles, and half a dozen more had been torn open in the space cleared in the center of the room by a coffee-table hastily shoved aside.

Laying in five of the six opened boxes were what, at first, appeared to be deflated sex dolls.

All of the exposed 'dolls' were female, and had the faint sheen that seemed to suggest they were some form of plastic - but a slightly closer look revealed them to be unusually detailed for sex dolls, with surfaces texture and coloration a far cry from the uniform 'flesh tone' of most inflatable sex- toys.

"See?" Josh crowed, excited. "Get a load of this - I found it after I put the suit on..."

Grabbing a piece of paper off the couch, he handed it to Terry. Feeling suitably stunned by the situation he found himself in, the blond had to blink twice before his hazel eyes would focus on the paper.

It seemed to be photocopied rather than printed, and somehow projected a certain amateurish quality, as if whoever had created it was trying their hand at it for the first time. The graphics for the letterhead at the top looked, well, cheesy.

It read 'Bawdy Bodies, Inc.' - and the 'B's were done to look like breasts, and the 'I' an erect penis.

Below that, with the occasional misspelling, were the 'user instructions' for 'Male Body Model 008b - 'BigBoy'".

All in all, they were incredibly simple.

According to the instructions, the suits were one-time-use 'fantasy bodies', with various options for the different models. Some, like the one Josh had chosen, were body-only, while others also came with 'heads'. Regardless of the model type or style, however, the instructions made it quite clear that all Bawdy Bodies were complete physical transformation devices. Once they were put on, you would not just look like the type of person the suit represented, but became them - at least, physically. The suits in no way altered the user's mental state at all, 'just' their physical body. It could be worn for as long as the user wished, with absolutely no side-effects - but once any particular body was removed, it became inert and could never be used again.

"You wanna try one?" Josh asked, after Terry had finished re-reading the sheet for the third time.

Terry was momentarily startled - his brain hadn't quite made it that far yet. Still trying to catch up with what had happened, he hadn't made the leap to what could happen - until Josh had suggested it.

The thought, once spurred, hit him like a blow from a sledge-hammer.

A cascade of thoughts, fears, possibilities and doubts ran through his mind in rapid succession, all of them tugging at his consciousness in a tug-of-war.

"Well..." He said, uncertainly. Putting the piece of paper down, he began almost diffidently poking through the collection of mostly-feminine 'bodies', his face caught in lines of hesitation.

Even if they were safe, did he really want to try becoming a different man? Oh, he could certainly understand Josh's motivation for trying on 'BigBoy', given the scrawny, pale body the self-proclaimed 'proto-nerd' had possessed. Terry, however, was already fairly handsome and quite well-built, though nothing like on the scale of Josh's new body. The few male models available all seemed to be variations on the 'hunk' or 'stud' theme, and quite frankly, would really be more of a change in degree than in kind for Terry. It would have been more interesting had there been a 'nerd' body in the mix for him to try, that being as big a change for Terry as 'Bigboy' was for Josh. Heck, for Terry to exchange his own well-toned body for one like that Josh had until recently possessed would have been nearly as big a leap as if Terry were to put on one of the...

The thought, simply popping into his mind as casually and unforced as any other random thought, nevertheless stopped him dead in his tracks. An expression of shocked surprise crossed his features as he stared down at the boxes around him.

"Uh... Terry?" Josh said, confusing on his own face as he stared at his friend, standing stock-still in the center of the room.

"Well... why not?" Terry asked himself, oblivious to Josh's inquiry. "I mean... how often do you get a chance to see what it would be like? It's not like it would be a permanent change or anything, and they don't mess with your mind..."

"Terry? What are you talking about?" Josh wanted to know.

In a voice stunned by his own decision, Terry answered: "I think I'd like to see what it's like to be a woman..."

Josh gaped at his friend, shocked... and then, as the thought percolated through his initial, almost knee-jerk reaction, a slow smile formed on his face.

"Cool..."

* * * * *

"Are you sure...?" Josh asked, a bit doubtfully. Perched on the edge of a kitchen chair that creaked alarmingly under his weighty new body, he was now 'dressed' in a pair of once-baggy 'shorts' formed from a cut-off pair of dark green sweatpants. Now, they bulged across his massive new thighs, seams protesting almost as loudly as the chair.

"Not really..." Terry admitted, with a wry chuckle. Ever since he'd admitted the thought that had come to him, his face had acquired a tendency to flare into a blush, and it was doing so now - approaching the concept to voluntarily transforming a red-blooded heterosexual male into a woman wasn't the sort of thing a guy could approach with equanimity, much less so in front of an audience.

After slightly more than an hour of dithering, he'd finally chosen a body to wear - if he went through with this, that was. The body in question wasn't necessarily designed to make that consideration any easier.

Oh, awkward and even embarrassing as it felt to admit it, Terry really had been caught by the thought of seeing what it would be like to be a woman. It might have been a guilty excitement he was feeling, but undeniably excitement for all that. The main part of the problem was the fact that, if he was going to do this, he figured he might as well go 'whole hog'... and that brought him back to the body he'd chosen, one of the three 'deluxe edition' sets in the pile.

"Okay..." He finally said, swallowing thickly. "Let's do this."

Before he could 'chicken out', Terry quickly stood and began stripping out of his clothes. It felt a little strange to do so with Josh watching him... but, oddly enough, it was also the fact that he had Josh as an audience that helped him keep the nerve to go through with something that his socially-ingrained 'instincts' told him was more than a little perverted. It was pure egotism, but it was also effective - as long as Josh was there to know, Terry couldn't let himself chicken out.

All too soon, there was no more clothing for him to 'delay' himself further with. With much the same expression of a man about to 'get it over with' by plunging into a cold pool rather than easing into it, Terry grabbed the chosen 'Bawdy Body' and began to pull it on.

As a deluxe edition, the 'body' came complete with clothes already on it, and that included shoes on the feet the sheet claimed were 'optimized' for high heels. This meant that Terry had to sit down to slide his feet into the legs of the suit. When he got to the hips, it was a bit of a struggle, since he couldn't very well stand up on the seven-inch high heels of the black patent-leather 'Mary Jane' platform pumps. Once he got past the short, pleated skirt, (gray plaid with red and white piping), however, things got somewhat easier. Pulling the silver-gray sweater-clad torso into place required him to slip his arms into the 'sleeves' of the suit, and it was these 'skin-clad' arms that he lifted towards the attached 'head' hanging limp from the neck.

"Well..." He said, a bit breathlessly. "Here goes..."

Taking a deep breath, he pulled wide the slit half-hidden in the long, gleaming black 'hair' of the head, and pulled the face portion into place. He let go of the slit, which ran all the way down the back of the figure...

There was no way Terry would have been able to later describe the sensation that followed. It wasn't pain, it wasn't pleasure, and it wasn't pleasure - and yet, somehow, there were aspects of all three involved, without quite every fulfilling the promise of it. One instant, he was a man in a amazingly flexible 'rubber' suit that was clinging tightly to his body... and the next, he was a woman.

"Holy shit!" She gasped - and dark, almond eyes widened further at the sound of the high-pitched and undeniably feminine voice the exclamation emerged in.

Very, very slowly, the new woman lowered her gaze to the silvery fabric covering her chest.

"It really worked!" She screamed - and she herself wasn't quite sure if it was a scream of excitement or of horror. "I'm a woman!"

"Holy crap..." Josh muttered, staring at the diminutive form now sitting on the couch. "I knew you'd be.. I mean, I saw the suit before you.. but I never..."

"I think..." the new woman laughed - giggled - nervously, hands hesitantly roaming over her new form. "I think maybe I went a little far for a 'first try'..."

Of course, that had been the whole reason why she'd chosen that particular suit - because it was about as far from her 'real' form as it was possible to get.

The 'Mei Phuc Yu' body was, unsurprisingly, Asian - and now, so was Terry.

If the new woman had risen to stand atop the slender heels of her gleaming black shoes, the top of her head would have come to exactly the five-foot mark, and not even a fraction of an inch higher.

Every single bone in her altered body was delicately formed, leaving her with not only a slender body, but one almost doll-like in it's perfection... and yet, small as she was, she wasn't the least bit childlike, for the petite figure she possessed was also womanly. Though hands and feet were small and slender, ankles and wrists delicate formed, her hips, though 'boyish', were nevertheless feminine, and made all the more so by the combination of slender legs that were long for her height, and a tiny wasp-like waist that made her hips seem wider in comparison.

Her breasts, likewise, were of a womanly scale - nearly 'huge' for the Japanese average, they really weren't all that big in total terms. In contrast to her small body, however, the breasts - domes hovering on the edge of rounding out in to spheres - were large enough to qualify as full DDD-cups. Her face, a heart-shaped, golden-bronzed image of doll-like perfection, boast perfectly-shaped cupid's-bow lips, a tiny little nose, and exotic, upturned eyes so dark as to look as black as her long, silky fall of straight, black hair.

In the space of a few transformative seconds, the once broad-shouldered, blond-haired, All- American boy had become a petite and downright delicate 'Japanese' girl.

"So..." Josh wanted to know, still gaping shamelessly at the tiny new woman's slender body, "What's it feel like?"

"Weird." Was her answer. She cocked her head, hands lightly cupping her full new bust in it's encasing layer of soft fabric. "I mean, it feels different... but not 'strange' different, like I expected it two. Somehow... I don't know. I guess I expected to feel like myself, but with 'fake tits' pressing against my chest, and 'pussy panties' pulling at my crotch. Everything about this body feels different than my old body did... and yet, it also feels, uh 'normal', too, at least for this body. As if, with a woman's body, it's all natural, you know?"

She grimaced - prettily - at her inability to explain it better, but Josh was already nodding in understanding.

"I know what you mean." He agreed. "When I first changed, I expected to feel real heavy, what with all this extra muscle mass and everything - but that was because I was thinking like I was still 'me' under a heavy suit. The muscles make moving this heavier body about as easy as my old one, so the weirdest thing about the way I feel is that it doesn't feel as weird as I expected."

"Yeah - that's it exactly!" Terry agreed in her high-pitched new voice.

Very, very carefully, the tiny new woman rose from her seat on the couch. Thanks to feet that were 'formed' to her shoes, her arched feet felt as natural to stand on as if they were flat - but she hadn't gained any practice in heels, or a better sense of balance, so though it felt pretty 'natural' to stand in high heels, she still had to consciously keep her balance, wobbling very slightly atop the slender spikes the shoes boasted.

"This really does feel weird, though.": She said, very carefully starting to walk around. "I mean, I feel 'fine', like nothing hurts, or pulls, or pinches... but everything does feel different. Even the way some of my muscles move feel really weird - like I'm all tensed up, or something."

With her coloration, it was difficult to tell she was blushing, but the way she was speaking revealed a conscious effort to push past the emotional awkwardness she was feeling at having voluntarily assumed the form she now 'wore'. Understanding,

Josh decided to 'play along', treating this with nearly the impersonal sort of 'science experiment' tone the new woman had adopted.

"that may be because you are holding muscles tense." He said, eyeing her as she carefully navigated around the room atop her slender new heels. "I mean, you're walking kinda the same way you did as a guy, and it looks funny. Try... try letting your hips move more when you walk."

Terry looked over at him, frowning a bit at his suggestion - which amounted to 'walk more like a girl'

- and then suddenly laughed at herself. After all, given the situation, it was hardly as insulting as it would have been to suggest a man act 'girlish'.

"Okay, I'll try it." She said - and to surprise, it worked.

Since she didn't have 'body habits' for walking like a girl, she had to pay conscious attention to walking, which seemed really strange to her - but as long as she did, purposefully letting her hips sway and swivel more than she ever would have as a man, she did all right.

Well, after she caught on to the fact that she had to move her shoulders in a light side-to-side swivel in order to counteract the additional motion of her hips, that was.

Josh, watching her practice, suddenly smirked - because the stride that Terry had hit upon was one that looked almost like a parody - hands held a little out from her side, wrists cocked, as she took short little steps with a lot of side-to-side motion of her hips and torso in countering directions.

Wisely, however, he decided not to point this out to her.

For her part, the new woman was busy trying to deal with what was going on - not 'with her', but within her.

The idea of becoming female for an unspecified by definitely temporary period had been both exciting and 'weird' when it had struck her. Now that she'd actually made herself go ahead and do it, however, the balance was rapidly changing. Though still blushing over what she'd done, and probably willing to die before telling anyone else but Josh that she'd done it, she was nevertheless finding it all very... interesting.

Every sensation she felt was 'normal' yet different. Licking her lips contained all the same physical and sensation components as when she'd been a man - yet the tongue was slimmer, and moving over a fuller and considerably reshaped surface. It was easily identifiable as a tongue moving over lips - but this was a new tongue moving over new lips, and that somehow made it all much more interesting. An action she'd performed perhaps a million times before, as a man, without really even noticing it, now become a new and intriguing experience.

That was but one tiny example - an example of a phenomena that was multiplied a dozen times over in every minute, where every movement, every motion, produced similarly same-yet-different sensations to be experienced.

All in all, it brought up one comparison, one type of situation in life that produced similar experiences in the past:

'The hunt'.

That's what Terry had always called it; the period of time between seeing a woman he found himself attracted to, and bedding her - or not, if he happened to fail. Which wasn't all that common, but happened often enough that 'the hunt' didn't become boring as a 'sure thing'.

It was almost precisely the same mix of emotions. Excitement mixed with a little fear, a sort of confidence that he could do this, with the spice of 'maybe not' thrown in. The awkwardness at having to 'expose' himself to some degree, in a way much more intimate than the physical, but also feeling the sense of...

Arousal.

That was the other thing the new woman was beginning to feel. It came partially from being able to look down at herself and see what her male mind would unmistakably term a 'cute chick'.. and yet part of it also was the fact that 'he' was being infinitely more intimate with this cute chick than would have been possible any other way. In a very real sense, Terry now had a cute, sexy little Asian woman who would - could only - do exactly what Terry wanted her to do... and the fact that 'he' would feel the sensations of whatever that thing was only made it that much more exciting.

"Well..." Josh said, breaking into the new woman's reverie. "I've got to get back to work. I'm assuming that you're just gonna hang here until you're ready to change back, right?"

Terry blinked - she hadn't really given that much thought. Well, even if she were comfortable with the thought of being female in public - which she wasn't - it wouldn't have mattered. She couldn't very well ride her motorcycle dressed like this, and her old, male clothing wouldn't fit her new body, so...

"Yeah. I guess I am." She admitted, feeling embarrassed by the fact that she'd completely forgotten Josh's presence while she coped with her body's new sensations. "Thanks, Josh."

"No prob." Josh replied - and, geek-like to the core, he was giving her the patented 'hot babe' ogle of his, without even really being aware he was doing it.

Terry wasn't didn't even begin to know how to feel about having Josh look at her in a way that made it clear that he thought she had a sexy new body - especially since even Terry herself couldn't argue against it.

"If you need anything, just holler." Josh tossed over his shoulder, heading for the stairs.

"Sure thing." Terry agreed, as he disappeared up the stairs. After practicing her 'femme walk' for a couple more minutes, she very carefully swiveled-and-swayed her way into the kitchen, then plopped her cute new derriere down on the bench.

Taking a deep breath that caused some truly intriguing sensations to occur under the sweater, the new woman held it, cocking her heart-shaped face to one side and listening intently.

With the wood sub-frame and wooden flooring, it wasn't hard to track Josh's progress by sound alone. Soon, she heard the sound of his battered computer chair creaking under his new weight, meaning he'd settled himself in front of the computer...

...and he would be there for awhile.

Letting the breath out in a sigh, Terry found herself looking around almost furtively. For some reason, she felt as if she could expect to see neighbors, news media and complete strangers all crowding at the window, as if the whole world somehow knew what she'd done and wanted to see the guy who'd turned himself into a woman.

There was, of course, no such thing. She was completely alone and unobserved. So, licking her full new lips nervously, she reached down and peeled off her sweater.

Underneath it, her new body wore a bar encasing her breasts - but it wasn't for support, since her firm new mounds didn't need it. No, it was a purely decorative item - so sheer as to be translucent, and trimmed in lace.

Reaching up, the new woman repeated one of the first movements she'd performed in her female body cupping her breasts - and as surprisingly good as it had felt at the time, it felt even better without the fabric of the sweater in the way.

Lightly biting her full lower lip between even white teeth, she began to knead and massage her impressive new bust, amazed at how sensitive the flesh could be. Ever slight squeeze sent little shocks of pleasure through her body, and even hefting them or placing her hands flat over them and pressing lightly inwards felt pretty damned good.

If it felt so much nicer without the sweater, though, then...

It took a couple of minutes for her to get her bra off. Though she had plenty of experience removing a woman's bra, none of it was from this particular position, and she had to contort herself to get at the hooks at the back and get them undone. Finally, though, the back-strap let go of the final of four hooks, and she slid the straps down her arms and dropped the bra on the table.

Somehow, that act made the low warmth in her new crotch flare. The sight of a feminine hand 'discarding' a bra, and knowing 'he' could make it do that whenever 'he' wanted, just got 'him' really turned on - but it was her body that became aroused.

So, the large, dark nipples were fully engorged when her dainty new hands returned to caressing her breasts - and she was right.

It felt much nicer without the bra in the way...

She'd intended to take 'experimenting' with her new body slowly - in part, to maximize the experience, but mainly because she just found it to 'embarrassing' to feel like she was rushing to 'embrace;' her femininity.

So, she was surprised when, after a few minutes, she found her skirt flipped up, and her hand down inside her frilly panties, lightly rubbing back and forth over her feminine mound.

"oh.. God..." She gasped in the high-pitched new voice, feeling like her face was on fire... but her body was even more aflame. She'd been completely unaware of how 'all inclusive' the female experience of arousal was. As a man, his had been very intense, but localized, whereas this was more generalized, center on her new womanhood, but extending through her entire body.

She felt as if she were driving across black ice, sliding out of her control. In the space of a couple of minutes, she'd gone from 'mildly aroused' by just being female to being intensely aroused by a few touches and caresses.

"No wonder.. women... like foreplay..." She gasped, wide-eyed, her breath hot in her throat as her hands seemed to roam her new body of their own volition.

"oh - what the hell..." She gasped, letting herself loll back on the bench - and slipped a finger deep into the moist embrace of her new vagina.

It was.. intense.

The feeling of being penetrated was the first 'real' new experience she could claim about being female, one that had no exact comparison in her male life. The other sensations that accompanied it, however, like when her finger brushed smoothly across the sensitive nub of her clit, were easier to compare - because it felt as if the head of her old cock had been shrunk down, packing the same number of nerve ending in a much smaller space.

She gasped, ass wiggling on the bench, as her finger began to work a little faster in her sopping cunt, her other hand now almost mauling her own breasts.

The female arousal was more diffuse, as if her entire new body was the shaft of her old cock... but the actually physical sensation from her clit was even more localized, no more intense then rubbing the head of her cock would have been, but crammed into a much smaller physical location.

The entire sensation as her finger thrust, rubbed and twirled in her cunt created a sensation who's dichotomy meant that, while actually nor stronger than a male sexual experience, was infinitely different.

As her trim new hips began to writhe and buck beneath her hand, she regretfully stopped squeezing her tits with the other so that she could jam one dainty knuckle between her teeth. Biting down on it almost hard enough to break the skin, she closed her eyes and simply let the 'instincts' of her body take over as the building pleasure began to shoot off those familiar 'warning' tingles up and down her spine...

...and then the orgasm hit, and if not for the fact she'd taken the precaution of biting down on her knuckle, the scream that tried to rip from her throat probably would have brought the house down.

It was a 'good' orgasm, but like the rest of the experience of feminine pleasure, not really all that different from the male one in total pleasure...

...except for the fact that it was followed closely by two more quick orgasm, shorter but no less intense, as she bucked writhed and jiggled all over the vinyl bench.

"Whoa..." She gasped, pushing a lock of silky black hair away from her face. "That was... intense." Withdrawing her slick hand from her sodden panties, she sat up...

...and found Josh standing in the doorway, shorts practically bursting under the force of his all-too- obvious erection as he gaped at her, wide-eyed.

'If my finger felt that good, I wonder what it would feel like to have...' rose unbidden to her stunned mind, before the momentary paralysis broke, and with it, that particular train of thought.

She squealed, hands almost automatically dropping towards her still-covered crotch before she caught herself and started to bring them up to try and hide her bared breasts...

...and then, with a sigh, she just let her arms drop to her side, her coloration hiding just how deep the blush that seemed to burn her face was.

"Hi, Josh." She said, wryly.

His face, already somewhat flushed for a completely different reason, went a bright red. "Coffee. I was coming... uh, going for some... and you... I didn't... I wasn't..."

"Whoa, whoa - take it easy!" She told him. "It's okay, I understand." "Uh... oh." Josh said, licking his lips dryly.

There was a momentary pause.

"Are you just going to keep staring at me?" She finally asked, archly.

His response to the 'subtle hint' that he was staring caught her completely off guard:

"Terry - you're gorgeous!" Josh blurted out. "I mean, drop-dead, jaw-dropping, total-hot-knockout gorgeous!"

"What?!"

"I mean, I've seen pictures... watched videos... spent hours upon hours on the internet... but I never thought... never imagines..." Josh babbled, apparently completely unaware of what he was saying. "God, you... It's... You're just so incredibly gorgeous!"

He was still staring at her half-naked body - only now, she was staring right back at him.

"Josh. Josh!" She shouted, rising carefully to her high heels and clapping her hands together twice, sharply. "Yo, wake up!"

Josh shook himself violently.

"Oh... Oh, God - I'm sorry, Terry!" He said, starting to back out of the room, a look of utter mortification on his face. "I just... I couldn't.. you were... I'm so sorry."

"Josh..." She asked, voice quietly serious. "Have you ever seen a naked woman in the flesh before?"

The question stopped Josh dead in his tracks, his ass pushing the dual-swinging door half open. He suddenly looked away from her from the first time since entering the kitchen... and then, slowly, shook his head.

"You're a virgin." She finally said - after a pause, because she'd just barely kept herself from blurting it out as an incredulous question that probably would have shattered Josh's ego completely.

There was another long pause - and then Josh very slowly nodded.

She'd known that Josh was a 'loner', of course - darned near a hermit, in fact. Still, in this day and age, it just really hadn't even occurred to her to wonder if a twenty-six year old man was still a virgin.

"Oh, God... this is so embarrassing..." Josh said, hanging his head. "I mean... you finding out I'm still a virgin..."

"So am I."

The words caused Josh's head to snap up, with a shocked look on it that would have been comical in other circumstances.

"In this body... as a woman... I have never had sex with a man." She told him, quietly. His flush returned, as deeply as before.

"Thanks, but... I know you're trying to help, but it isn't the same thing at..." "So why don't we take care of that little inconvenience for both of us?"

Her voice had gotten no louder - but Josh jerked as if she'd suddenly shouted.

"Wha.. huh?" He gasped, staring at her. Slowly, he began to shake his head, not even aware he was doing it. "You.. I almost thought you were saying..."

"I would like very much for you to have sex with me." She said, quite clearly and distinctly. "But you're a... I mean, you're not really a... You can't.. We couldn't..."

Suddenly, she smiled.

Her insides were roiling. Her stomach was clenching. A clammy sweat had broken out in her palms

- yet her body was suddenly tingling, and a moist warmth was building in her crotch...

...and none of it mattered. Good or bad, pro or con, the physical sensations and emotions she was experiencing did nothing to either add to nor detract from the simple fact that she knew - knew - that this was the right thing to do.

"As a new woman, I would like very much to experience what it feels like for a woman to have sex with a man." She told him - a half-lie, since she wasn't sure if she believed it herself, but the thought was certainly there. "I would like very much for that man to be you. Will you do me the favor of taking me upstairs to your bedroom, undressing me the rest of the way and, after some appropriate fondling, kissing and touching, have sex with me?"

With a slow, smooth step that included a lot more hip-swaying than was strictly called for, she crossed the kitchen. Gently, but quite firmly, she wrapped one dainty hand around the fabric straining over his erect cock.

"Since you seem to be having trouble finishing full sentences..." She told him, smiling up at him as warmly as her own internal chaos allowed. "Try just saying one, single word - the word I want very much for you to say..."

She kept that smile on her face - until finally, staring down at her, Josh managed a faint, squeak of a sound: "Yes!"

"Then let's go..." She said, releasing his cock and gently pushing him to turn around and proceed her towards the stairs...

...and as he did so, the smile slipped from her face, and her mind raced as she wondered if she could actually go through with this. After all, in the abstract, she was beginning to wonder what it must feel like to have 'actual' sex, as compared to the surprising orgasm she'd already experienced

- by the abstract was a long way from the reality she'd just proposed, quite explicitly, to Josh. Josh - who was the quintessential 'nice guy', and who was seemingly slated to, indeed, finish last.

Right then and there, she told herself this was going to have to be an all or nothing proposition - when they reached the bedroom, she was either going to convince him that this is what she wanted more than anything else in the world, or she was going to chicken out completely. Come what may, there was simply know why she was going to even so much as hint that this might be a 'mercy fuck'...

The trip to the bedroom seemed to take an eternity - and through that eternity, she had plenty of time to think, and to wonder...

She'd never really given much thought to the 'relationship' she had with Josh. It was one of those great many things that 'just was', that had happened without effort, and that she'd taken 'as is'. It was only the strange shift in her view of the world that came with her new gender that had caused her to re-examine things... and that's what lead her to this.

Without considering any of the ramifications, she'd always sort of known that 'Josh the geek' was a loner, without any friends... except Terry, but Terry hadn't even really thought of it that way, not at the time. Just as Terry hadn't considered that he, himself, had been as much as a loner as Josh.

Oh, sure, the-then 'he' had plenty of sex with chicks his good looks or his 'mystique' as a struggling musician had attracted... but they hadn't been relationships. Even the other members of his band were only associates, as a matter of mutual convenience. People Terry talked to, liked spending time with... well, the closest to anything like that was josh, and that still had been a somewhat distant relationship.

Josh was desperate for human contact, but didn't know how to get it. She, as a man, had found human contact easy to come by - so much so that she'd never thought to hold it.

Then, suddenly, they were at the door to the bedroom, and that eternity suddenly seemed to shrink until it seemed that the trip from kitchen to bedroom had lasted no more than an instant...

"Well, here we are..." Josh said, eyeing her over his shoulder.

"Yeah." She agreed, struggling for some semblance of calm. "Here we are..." Josh pushed open the bedroom door - and she followed him in...

Terry - once a well-muscled Caucasian male, now a petite-yet-womanly 'Japanese' doll - had never been inside of Josh's bedroom. It was an eclectically cluttered space, with bits and pieces of computer equipment, some half-disassembled, vying for space with porn of various sorts, unwashed clothing, and empty cola cans.

Among this mess, half-buried in drifts of blankets that had slid almost to the floor, was the bed.

It was a perfectly ordinary bed. Queen-sized, set on simple bedrails without the benefit of a head- or foot-board. All in all a perfectly, completely, utterly ordinary bed in every way...

...and yet, it seemed to draw the new woman's eyes, seemed to dominate her mind, until it seemed to loom so large and inherently significant that all else in the room shrank away to nothing, and the spacious room itself suddenly seemed to small to contain much more than the bed.

In fact, the bed's presence was so overwhelming, so space-filling, that it also seemed to crowd all the oxygen out of the room - because the new woman found she was having trouble catching her breath.

