It was time she showed them that they didn't have to be unhappy any more. It was time she repaid her debt to them for the life she'd inexplicably been happy in.

It was time to show them how pleasurable their new, feminine life could be.

Sliding her hand around Jack's neck, Svetlana pulled his lips down to her own, and kissed him.

She had to fight her male portion's urge to stiffen and thrust the man away, forcing herself to relax into the kiss that the surprised man began return eagerly after a moment's hesitation. She forced herself to fight the 'male' urges that insisted this was wrong - and, in doing so, forced them to find out the obvious.

It felt good. Very good.

As the kiss deepened, and the pleasure increased, she released Jack's neck, certain he no longer needed the extra encouragement. Instead, she used her nimble fingers to quickly undo the straining buttons of her shirt, and pull the taut fabric of the undershirt up over her breasts, setting the free.

Making sure that Jack wouldn't miss the 'hint', then proceeded to guide his hands to her wonderful full, huge breasts, while she brought the other down to caress the firm, taut flesh of her thighs.

Pleasure thrummed through her - and the queasy/unhappy/disgusted feeling in her male side began to recede, caught up in the pleasure generated within the body they shared.

Pleasure that, given the fact that the body was female, wasn't 'wrong', wasn't 'homosexual' - but clear and sharp and oh-so-right.

As Jack eagerly groped at one thigh and one breast with his hands, she mirrored his touch with her own hands on the other breast and thigh, moaning low in the back of her throat at the pleasure their combined touch brought, mingled with that of the hot, passionate kiss they continued in. the combined male parts of her new person finally stopped resisting what she was doing, letting themselves 'go with the flow', enjoying the sensation she was providing for them, showing them that it was all right to not only leave their long seclusion - but to accept, even participate, in their new, feminine life.

As if dawn were breaking, she felt the persona themselves come forward, entering the conscious stream of her thoughts...

They increased the eager hunger of the kiss, reveling in the pleasure, living 'in the moment' with awe and wonder at the taste, texture and touch of the man they were kissing with their full, so- wonderfully-sensitive feminine lips.

She broke that kiss, feeling their body alive with eager excitement and sexual demand, thrumming with both pleasure and need...

"Jack..." Svetlana said in her rich female voice.

"Make love to me." Doug said, with a charmingly hesitant eagerness, feeling their body thrum with desire.

They paused, even as Jack gaped at her in hopeful doubt.

"Make me... feel like a real woman..." Ivan confirmed, even more hesitantly - but with equal desire.

Sveltana lay back on the couch, the simple act of spreading her taut thighs causing the too-tight, too-short skirt to ride up, exposing their wet and ready womanhood.

"Fuck me." Svetlana demanded.

Doug and Ivan suddenly had second thoughts, a lifetime of male upbringing and behaviors suddenly breaking through the wonderfully pleasant cloud of feminine arousal...

...but it was too late, as Jack hurriedly hauled down his pants and underwear and eagerly slithered up on the couch between their taut thighs. She only had enough time for a quick, sharp in-draw of breath that could have equally been eager excitement or the preparation of a demand to stop - and then Jack, with great willingness no but particular skill, thrust his hard and ready manhood deep into the wet, silky embrace of her pussy.

"Oh, god, that feels amazing!" She cried, unsure what male side of her was so stunned by the realization, while the female part of her followed it with a knowing chuckle.

Jack, however, took it as encouragement, his thin hip begin to buck eagerly.

"Oh, my dear god in heaven!" She cried, the intermingled response of all parts of her as the pleasure of her sensitive cunt embracing his hard cock washed through her body. "Oh.. Oh, um.."

Only a third of her wanted to cry out an unrestrained 'Yes! Harder!', and so she had to settle with more ambiguous sounds emerging from her shred throat...

...but that didn't make the incredible pleasure of sex any more ambiguous. It was sharp and clear and real...

...and not even two thirds of her mind wanted it to stop, though the division certainly wasn't cleanly along gender lines as both male brains struggled to deal with the fact that they really did want - that they really were enjoying - being fucked as a woman.

The internal struggle and mix of emotions wasn't painfully obvious to an outside observer - and Jack was hardly at his most observant at the moment. Not terribly skilled or experienced, sexually, he was making the most of this unexpected sexual windfall, driving away for all he was worth with little in the way of technique...

...but it still felt utterly fantastic.

"Oh, umm, oh.." She gasped in unnoticed ambiguity - while the two male portions of her mind tried to deal with the internal information from her female part that told them that sex could actually feel much better then it currently did, for a woman.

It didn't seem possible. It didn't seem survivable - as the triad of her mind was breaking own momentarily in the rising wave of pleasure, each mind degenerating to a sort of bestial level as the primal pleasure of orgasm quickly approached.

Then, like a bolt of lightning from a clear blue sky, it hit...

"Oh, holy god, this feels fuckin' fantastic...!" She screamed at the top of her lungs, back arching as her orgasm tore through any boundaries of propriety or gender and briefly re-united three minds that, currently, weren't so much thinking, as experiencing. "Yes, yes, yes! Fuck yes! Fuck me, fuck me, oh, yes...!"

Trembling, she rode the knife's edge of orgasm for as long as she could, almost unaware of the way she was frantically grinding her hips against the now-rigid Jack as his own orgasm hit, trying to make the eternal instant last just a little longer...

...and then it was past, and she was slumping back on the couch with Jack on top of her as her mind rebounded back to its new triptych, and she tried to make some sort of coherent sense of what her three-way mind was thinking.

"My God..." She whispered to herself, stunned. "that was.. incredible..."

Then, and instant later, she flushed a bright red, and squirmed out from underneath Jack.

"I.. I can't believe I just did that!" She gasped, yanking down her skirt and frantically trying to get her clothes in order., "I can't believe I talked myself into.. I mean, I don't even know "

She found herself giggling even in the middle of her embarrassment, her female third laughing at the two male portions' attempt to distance themselves from the eager desire they'd just indulged in.

"I.. I can't.. I have to..' She stammered, her mouth receiving cross-instructions from her minds as she staggered to the door. Spotting a pair of old sneakers near the door, she gestured at them, nearly frantically. "Can I...?"

Stunned, still trying to catch up to the strange woman babbling at him, Jack nodded, and she quickly jammed her feet into the slightly too-small shoes - and then literally flew out the door of the apartment and away from the man she'd just finished fucking.

"What the hell were you thinking...?" She demanded from herself. "I shouldn't have.. that wasn't... we can't..."

Once more, her self-dialogue broke down under the attempt to say three separate things at once, and she fell into a stunned, ashamed, and disgustingly self-satisfied silence as she tried to bring the three parts of her mind around to some sort of agreement as to what had just happened - and what they were going to do, now that they had a new life shaped by three very separate persons fused into one.

"It.. did feel good..." She murmured to herself, thoughtfully - then repudiated herself: "But I acted like.. like some slut!"

Caught up in her own internal dialogue, she didn't notice the startled double-take her comment drew from a man she was passing on the sidewalk out front of Jack's apartment.

"I.. wouldn't usually act like that...' She reassured herself - and it was a half-and-half proposal.

"I won't do that again!" She said, more sharply - only to modify it immediately with: "Not like that..."

Softly, she questioned herself: "Am I supposed to be celibate for the rest of my life...?" Then, hesitantly, "Well, no, but..."

No part of her could come up with anything adequate to finish the thought. Pausing to try and sort herself out, she glanced around idly...

...and found herself looking at a slender, trim young woman leaning over to unlock the door of her car.

Leaning over - and drawing her jeans tight across her full, firm, taut ass.

Svetlana found herself looking at that ass - and smiling slowly and warm, her body beginning to tingle with arousal...

"What the hell am I doing...?" She whispered to herself - as a strong surge of reaction came back from the other parts of her.

It wasn't words - but if it had of been, it would have been 'Turnabout is fair play'...

...and then Svetlana blushed furiously as she realized that she'd continued to stare at the woman, who'd finished unlocking her car and had started to slide in - and caught sight of Svetlana's intent, nearly hungry gaze.

The woman looked back at her with a raised eyebrow.

"I.. was wondering if I could ask you for help..." Svetlana said, finally having settled on a more immediate matter that her new life was going to need her to pay attention to. "I forgot my purse at the hospital. I hate to ask.. but could I possibly get a lift? I'd be happy to pay you something, once I get my purse back..."

"Oh - no trouble at all...!" The woman said, brightly, gesturing at the passenger's side of the car. "Please, hop right in."

"Thank you..." Svetlana said, gratefully, walking around and sliding into the passenger's side of the car - and blushing anew as she found her male selves making her take another long - and highly appreciative - look at the lovely young driver. She forced her eyes away as the woman started the car and put it in drive.

"I.. really appreciate this.." Svetlana said... and found her eyes sliding over to the hint of cleavage the other woman's blouse displayed before she could drag her eyes away again.

A light, feminine touch made itself known on Svetlana's bare thigh.

"I don't mind helping a lovely lady like yourself at all..." The driver said, smiling knowingly as she lightly traced on finger over the taut flesh of Svetlana's thigh. "I don't suppose, after you pick up your purse, you might like to go for a drink... or something?"

Slowly, two-thirds of Svetlana smiled warmly back at the woman.

"That sounds quite.. enjoyable." She said, lightly licking her own lips - and then reaching over to return the light caress on the other woman's denim-clad leg.

This new life of hers, all three parts of Svetlana mused at the same time, could get... interesting. Complicated, confusing, and awkward...

...but definitely interesting. THE END.

Summary: A top fashion designer with a condensing attitude, is tricked by his female assistant into submitting to experiments where he is turned into a willing female model for latex and leather

Model Prisoner

By Gunslinger

The lulling sounds of crickets floated through the warm spring evening as the stars began to shine in the darkening sky. Accustomed to the comings and goings of man, their song altered not a whit as the hunter-green Mercedes limousine glided quietly down the long, tree-lined drive.

As the elegant vehicle rolled further down the drive, the soothing spring sounds gave way to the muted sounds of a large gathering of people. The drive terminated in a circular lot in front of a large, elegant mansion. The louvered windows were opened wide to take advantage of the cool evening air, and it was through the open casements that the jocular sounds, accompanied by fans of light, spilled forth.

The luxurious German-made vehicle pulled to a halt before the pillared entrance to the mansion, and a liveried footman hastened to open the door. Not deigning to acknowledge the servant's presence, the man in the rear of the spacious vehicle slowly stretched and stepped out, his expensive Italian leather shoes 'clocking' quietly as he strode towards the front door. The butler, taken unawares by the man's quick, firm stride, barely managed to pull the heavy oaken door out of the way. At no time did the darkly handsome man break stride, supremely confident that the door WOULD be opened before her reached it.

They always were.

Greta Mueller, hostess to this little 'soiree' looked up as the man entered. She immediately recognized him, of course. A few years beyond her prime, and not aging gracefully at all, the wide, false smile Greta forced to her over-done lips did little to improve her negligible beauty.

"Mr. Goldman! I'm so glad you made it!" Greta gushed insincerely. The man's cold, aristocratic features remained impassive as he shook her out-stretch hand.

"Of course." He murmured neutrally. One of the richest, best connected man in the fashion industry, Kurt Goldman often wore a neutral expression, the better to deny any information to his rivals. And, to Kurt, everyone he met was a rival, be it past, present, or potential.

Dressed in an extraordinarily well-tailored suit from one of his London shops, Kurt wasn't actually a designer. For that he was heartily thankful - it seemed to him that the more talented and successful a designer was, the less attractive they were. Such as Greta Mueller.

Kurt was anything but unattractive. Tall, broad shouldered, and yet deceptively lithe, he had a slightly dusky skin tone and a full, wave head of deep black hair. Amid this dark coloring, ice-blue eyes brooded beneath dark brows, in a consistently watchful gaze.

As he strode deeper into the room, conversations withered and died in the cold light of that gaze. Every person in this room owed their living to the fashion industry, and as Kurt moved through them, fear and unease gripped their bowels. More than one found fortification in the downing of whatever alcoholic beverage they held. To a soul, every man and woman in this room feared the man suddenly in their midst.

And for good reason.

Kurt Goldman, 'Le Enfant Terrible', was THEY main motivator in the fashion industry today. Young for a man with his wealth and position, he'd been even younger when he'd taken his gamble, and sunk every cent of his hard-won money into struggling fashion designers, struggling models, failing Advertising Agencies, and collapsing factories. Now, Kurt literally owned the designers, whose clothes were produced in his factories, worn by his models, and advertised by his agencies. He held an iron fist about the pulse of today's fashion.

And not only 'haute couture.' Kurt's influence and ownership stretched from elegant evening wear to sexy dance wear, to unique - and expensive - fetish wear. If it was worn, Kurt had a hand in it.

Reaching the geographic center of the large room, Kurt slowly turned in place, assuring that he had the complete and undivided attention of everyone in the room.

"Ladies and Gentlemen..." he began, not raising his voice above his usual, conversational tone. People on the fringes strained to hear. "All of you here were invited by Miss Mueller because you are part of the 'haute couture' divisions of my companies. Now, I know she has invited you here to celebrate the spring line's showings, but since I need to speak with all of you anyway, I will take this opportune moment."

You could have heard a pin drop. Without even looking, Kurt held out a hand imperiously, and the closest person who could place a snifter of Glenlivet in his hand. Kurt took a sip before continuing.

"Due to a severe drop in the sales of our higher end lines, both in North America and abroad, I have decided to discontinue all lines except for our active wear, club and dance wear, and our, ahem, 'intimate' apparel."

The silence grew thick with shock. But, even in their shock, not one voice rose in an automatic 'you can't do this.' Although Kurt was secretive and reclusive by nature, every one of his employees knew that he could, indeed, do this.

"Now, I am not firing you tonight." He said, ignoring the slowly rising mutterings of consternation. At the sound of his voice, those in the back shushed the others, seeing a glimmer of hope held forth.

"I am allowing a six-month grace period. By the fall showing, I expect each and every one of you to have come up with a Fall line that will fit our new strategy. Those unable to shift their creative talents into the new field will, of course, be let go after this six-month period. That is all."

Ignoring those trying to get his attention, Kurt strode from the room as his employees, most of them watching their careers and livelihoods fall down around them, watched him leave in a mixture of rage and despair.

As the heavy oaken door slammed shut behind him, (propelled by the anger of Miss. Mueller's butler), Kurt heard the anger, despair and panic in the voices spilling out of the open windows. Completely unmoved by it, he walked up to his waiting vehicle. The servant, not having heard the news, was polite and courteous as he opened the door to the Benz, but Kurt ignored the politeness as thoroughly as he'd ignored the butler's anger. Settling back into the soft, cream-colored leather seat, he clicked on the intercom and ordered "Home, James."

His chauffeur slipped the car into drive and it rolled forwards towards the winding lane. He wondered what bomb-shell his boss had dropped on the group inside - of course, he hadn't deigned to inform James of his purpose in coming here. James just knew it wasn't to socialize. Mr. Goldman NEVER socialized.

For that matter, James wasn't even the name the chauffeur had been christened with. Born Robert Douglas Whaley, he'd been desperate for a job to support his family when he'd applied to Mr. Goldman. However, the wealthy, handsome man refused to be driven about by a chauffeur named Robert, or - God help us - 'Bob'. So, Robert, needing the money, had swallowed his pride, and legally changed his name to James.

It just proved how insidiously Mr. Goldman's power wormed its way into every facet of his employees lives.

Arriving home, Kurt climbed the marble steps to his home and unlocked the door. Surprisingly for one of his station, he had no butler, or other live-in help. He simply did not trust anyone to the extent of allowing them to share the same home as him, even if they would have been quartered in the separate servant's quarters. And so, his huge, sprawling mansion was dark and silent as he made his way to his luxuriously appointed bedroom.

Performing his nightly rituals, he then crawled into bed and shut off the light. It wouldn't be accurate to say that his conscience allowed him to sleep soundly.

Kortland Alexander Goldman, the second, simply did not possess anything as mundane, as COMMONPLACE, as a conscience.

Kurt walked into the reception area of his office the next morning, his face set in its usual inscrutable expression.

Behind the desk, his secretary Maeve looked up, forced a smile. She was a slender woman, with a clear, open face and a mane of long, red hair.

"Good morning Mr. Goldman." She said brightly. "You've got several messages waiting for you from your designers."

Kurt waved a hand negligently. "Throw them away." He said. "I want you to call Ms. Crater up to my office. After you've called her, come in. I have something for you to do."

Maeve suppressed a grimace. "Of course, Mr. Goldman." She said, forcing herself to sound cheerful.

Satisfied that his instructions were being carried out - as usual - Kurt waited for Maeve to open the mahogany door to his private office, then went in.

The room was large luxuriously decorated, with expensive Persian rugs on the hardwood floors and a massive redwood desk, hand-carved out of a single piece of wood, dominating one side of the room. Crossing over to it, he lowered himself into the custom-made leather chair, and began to flip through this month's financial reports.

A moment later, the door opened and Maeve entered. Forcing her smile to remain in place, she crossed the room, her high-heels clicking as she crossed the hardwood flooring.

Kurt pushed the chair out from the desk a bit, allowing enough room for Maeve to kneel. Expertly, she undid his trousers and extracted his limp penis. She set to work using her slender, delicate hands and full, soft lips to get his large penis hard.

Kurt sighed softly as her warm, experienced mouth encircled his rapidly hardening cock. She hadn't been very good when she first started. But, he'd purposefully hired her because she was an illegal immigrant, with no money, and no family in this country. She couldn't go to the law - she'd find herself being deported, as well as fired and broke. Now, only two months later, she was extremely proficient at pleasuring him.

Kurt always preferred fast learners.

The ornately carved doors to his private office swung open, and Lynda Crater, his Vice President, strode in. She was a tall, muscular woman with her sandy blonde hair pulled into a tight bun, and a severely cut suit in a beige fabric hid her strong, but definitely female, body. She strode up to his desk with a firm step, showing none of the deference of his other employees.

"So, I assume you told them?" she asked. She completely ignored the fact that her boss was getting a blowjob. She was used to seeing such things during their private meetings.

Kurt nodded. As always, he was still slightly surprised at his choice of second-in-command. Until he'd met Lynda Crater, he'd trusted no-one with that much power, and the thought of giving it to a woman would have made him laugh. Until then, he'd always considered women second-class citizens, who were dangerously emotional and unintelligent. As far as he'd been concerned, women only had two good points - their use for sexual playthings, and the fact that 87% of his sales were to women.

And then, Lydia had entered his life. Never before had he met anyone, male or female, with his same cold, emotionless intellect and staggering business sense. For all intents and purposes, Lynda was practically a female clone of himself. She thought, acted and spoke almost exactly the way he would have in any given situation.

Of every person he'd ever come in contact with in his life, including his now-dead parents, Lynda was the only person he trusted. Only she knew every detail of his empire, including the secret side of it. Only she knew of the illegal acts, the hidden corporations, the sidelines. In fact, he'd split his illegal - and highly profitable - businesses, and allowed her to run half of them, with no oversight at all by him, aside from checking the profits they brought in. Although he still handled the gun running, the illegal gambling, and the prostitution rings, Lynda handled the pornography, drug deals, and illegal medical research for him.

Kurt gasped slightly as he came, his cum gushing into his secretary's warm mouth. Dutifully, she swallowed, then excused herself and left. Kurt watched her trim legs as she exited the room, then once more turned to business.

"I don't think they were happy to hear the news." He said sarcastically, zipping his fly.

Lynda shrugged. "Who cares what they think." She said indifferently. She tilted her head to one side. "I came to discuss one of the medical projects I'm running."

Kurt rose and walked to his well-stocked bar and poured himself a scotch. "You have complete control over everything. The reason I gave you these things is so I wouldn't be bothered by them." He said, not quite threatening. He sipped his drink.

Lynda nodded. "Of course. However, this is something very, very big. I think you should definitely come take a look at what we've developed. The implications, the chances of profit, are so huge, I think it will take both of us to milk it dry."

Kurt's eyebrow rose. "Oh, I see. Well, then by all means, let's go take a look, shall we?" He started to put his glass down.

Lynda waved a hand. "Not like that, Kurt." She said. "This is so big, I gave it the tightest security I could. That means we have to do it differently."

Kurt knew what she meant. With some of his gun-running, he'd had to use that sort of security. Like the shipment of plutonium to Japan. If she'd done such a tight security on this project, it must be really big. He trusted her enough to accept that she wouldn't ask him to follow such elaborate precautions unless it was worth it to him.

"This is what you'll have to do... " Lynda said, and began to explain.

Slowly, the 1996 Dodge Viper crept across the gravel below the bridge, and pulled to a stop, its powerful engine idling in the deepest shadow. Then, the engine was shut off, and the silence that reigned in the hours just after midnight regained its mastery.

Kurt climbed out of the powerful roadster and looked about. Unusual for him, he was actually following the instructions of somebody else. Lynda had given him extremely precise instructions, and he'd followed them methodically.

Now, he stood and watched as a lonely tug, pulling a huge barge, slowly made its way to the breakwater near where he stood. Kurt had been suitably impressed when he'd heard of Lynda's ingenious method for hiding a high-tech lab. The huge barge was a box-like affair on a shallow hull, rusting and decrepit. But inside the steel walls was a top-of-the-line medical research facility, two stories tall and totally self-contained. As it drew abreast, a man appeared on the deck and lay a gang-plank out. Moving quickly, Kurt boarded the still-moving vessel, which then pulled back towards the middle of the river. Following the uncommunicative crewman, he entered the secret lab.

The door closed behind them before the lights came on, so that anyone passing by wouldn't spot light spilling from the open door. Inside, the barge was clean and well appointed, if somewhat Spartan in its decor. Lynda was waiting for him.

"Just follow me." She said to Kurt, after dismissing the crewman. The billionaire followed the muscular woman down a down the carpet hallway, to a handleless door. Lynda punched a code into the key-pad beside it, and it slid open. She gestured Kurt in, then followed him.

Instead of a room, they were in a short hallway with another door at the end. The door they'd entered by slid shut, trapping them in the small space. Two guards, armed with Uzi's, watched stone-faced behind a bullet-proof window with firing ports built into the wall on Kurt's left.

Lynda ignored the armed men and approached a scanner set into the wall. Stepping up to it, she placed her hand on the screen and waited as it read the whorls of her fingerprints before the light turned green. She then punched another code into a keypad, and the second door slid open, allowing them access. Kurt was impressed with the security of the site - even the CIA was easier to get into than this.

Past the second door, a state-of-the-art lab was revealed. Gleaming medical equipment filled the room, most of which Kurt was unfamiliar with. Lab-coated technicians worked purposefully at various work-stations, as a short, well dressed oriental man in the obligatory lab coat approached them.

"Ah, Lynda. This must be the famous - or perhaps infamous? - Mr. Goldman. Welcome to our little science project." The diminutive man said, smiling. He made no effort to shake Kurt's hand.

Lynda smiled. "Exactly. Kurt, this is Dr. Choi. He's our top man here."

The oriental nodded. "That's why I get paid the big bucks." He said. He waved a hand around. "As you can see, we're very busy. We're preparing for our first full-scale human test of the complete set of procedures."

Kurt heard the door behind him his open, but he neither turned around, nor stepped aside to let whoever had entered pass by. "I see." He said to Dr. Choi. "I assume that's why I'm here? To observe this test?"

Dr. Choi's smile widened revealing perfectly white, even teeth. "Not exactly." He said.

Kurt never felt the special injector as it pumped the drug into his bloodstream. The tall black man who had come in the door pocketed the injector and stepped past Kurt, nodding to Dr. Choi as he passed.

Choi waved at the equipment behind him. "Using techniques we've developed, we can no modify the human body in any way imaginable, and even in some ways that aren't. We can alter a body cosmetically in every way a plastic surgeon ca, yet no doctor would ever be able to distinguish it from natural process." He informed the impressed billionaire. Kurt's mind began to total up the worth of such an awesome ability, and even for him the value was staggering.

Then, an incredible pain gripped his chest, and he began to gasp, barely able to breath."

"Kurt!" Lynda exclaimed, grabbing his arm. It was no use, as his vision began to dim, and his knees buckled. He sprawled on the floor, trying desperately to breath. As his vision darkened, he heard the oriental doctor calling for help, saying "Can't you see he's having a heart attack?" Then everything went black.

Dr. Choi watched at the drug finished it's 'heart attack' phase, and became a strong sedative. Kurt's breathing evened out as he passed into the deepest levels of unconsciousness, completely detached from reality. Lynda leaned over him, a predatory smile on her lips. "You ARE our test, Kurt darling."

Kurt awoke. At least, he thought he was awake - all he could see, or not see, was an impenetrable blackness. He tried opening and closing his eyes, but was unable to tell any difference between the two. Also, he could hear no sounds at all around him. Not the slightest sound intruded, not even the sounds of his own body - the rush of blood in his ears, his own heartbeat, nothing. He realized that he was completely blind and deaf, and wondered if the stroke had done it to him.

Then it dawned on him. He also couldn't feel anything. No sensations at all. Not the weight of his own body, not even his own breathing. Every single one of his five senses was completely and utterly dead. His mind spun as he tried to reason out how it was possible that he had absolutely NO sensations whatsoever. He couldn't even feel his tongue in his mouth.

Lynda pulled out the chair and settled into place beside Dr. Choi. She looked at the console in front of her, it's displays showing a bewildering display of data, then at the oriental doctor.

"Everything going okay?" she asked.

Choi nodded, smiling. "Perfectly. The subject has just regained consciousness. I wonder how Mr. Goldman likes the Tank?"

'The Tank' was the Sensory Deprivation Chamber, or SDC. A chamber of special liquid, Kurt floated inside of it in a completely neutral buoyancy. He was uncased in a specially made suit that completely deadened all sensations, including sound (with special headphones), sight (With special miniature LCD displays in the helmet before his eyes), and the others.

"The great thing about the Tank" Lynda said, "Is the speed. With no input, the brain can't keep track of time. To the subject, seconds feel like hours, and minutes feel like days." She shivered slightly, recalling her own try at the tank. Unlike Kurt, she'd known what was going on, having helped design the tank. But knowing where she was hadn't mitigated the 'time factor.' She'd lain inside as time stretched on. She'd begun to worry that they'd forgotten her, then began to panic after almost twelve hours, realizing that something must have happened - everyone must be dead and she was trapped inside, with no way out. She was going to starve to death, trapped inside a tank of...

And the, Dr. Choi had helped her out of the tank. Incredulous, she'd looked at the timer - she'd been inside for just under a minute. That's when she realized just how powerful a tool the SDC was.

"I still can't believe that the little shit bought my act." Lynda said, still trying to cope with some of the things she'd done to maintain the pretense. Well, it had all been for this one chance to get revenge of the slimy son of a bitch. She was just glad that some of the employees at the company had had enough courage to come - secretly - to her Feminism lectures, and spill the whole story to her. No, it was time for her to exact payment.

Leaning forward, she picked up a microphone.

As the time passed, hours stretched away, and Kurt was forced to come to grips with the truth - he must be dead. Limbo was the only explanation for his current state - nothing else was possible. He had always rejected the possibility of God, of any higher power than himself, and so far he still held that belief - but Limbo, the empty nothingness after life...

And then, a tiny sound reached him. Under any other circumstances, it would have been impossible to hear, but now every mental fiber of his brain strained to make out the voice. It came from every direction at once, and held an odd timbre, neither male nor female. He strained to make out the words, as the voice slowly got louder.

"Kurt." It said, passing the threshold and becoming audible. "You must listen to Me. You have sinned against Me." The voice was gaining power now, and he didn't need to strain to hear it.

He tried to shout his denial at the voice. He believed in no deities, no gods. Yet - here he was, and SOMETHING was talking to him.

Only, the voice had gone silent. He waited for it to speak again. As the time stretched on, hours passed on into days. Slowly, he found his mind beginning to deteriorate. With no sensory input, it began to wander and become confused. Coherent thought became difficult unless he focused on one thought. His mind began to create memories and images, distorting them as if seen in a funhouse mirror. And the most horrible part was, Kurt KNEW he was slowly going mad.

He began trying to talk to the Voice, but got no response. He went to cursing insulting the Voice for doing this to him. But as the days stretched on into weeks, he slowly changed, pleading, then begging, then finally, praying. He repented, crying out each and every sin he could remember, then repenting of it. With infinite time, he delved deeper and deeper into his mind to dredge forth every smallest infraction, and beg forgiveness for it.

And finally, just as he hovered on the brink of insanity, the Voice spoke again.

Lynda spoke into the microphone, knowing it was distorting her voice electronically. After delivering her lines about sin, she slowly sipped at a cup of coffee and nibbled on a Danish as she watched the timer count off eight minutes. Since the time factor depended solely on each individual's brain, converting 'Tank' time to real time was only a 'guesstimate', but eight minutes would equal roughly a month, give or take a week.

Finishing her coffee, Lynda put her mug down, and leaned back to the microphone.

"You have sinned, but I am merciful" the Voice said, and Kurt wept with gratitude for its return, and its mercy.

"I am a Just and Merciful God." The Voice said. "I shall grant you a second chance. If you fail Me, your fate shall be worse than you can possibly imagine."

Kurt cringed mentally and swore he'd not fail again.

"I shall instruct you." said the Voice. "Heed my words, and obey."

Inwardly, Lynda smiled as she moved on to her, or rather 'God's' instructions to Kurt.

"You must not speak of this to anyone. My plans for others dictate you must act if this is solely and completely your own will." She said, reveling in the power she wielded.

"As you must Do Onto Others As You Would Have Them Do Onto You, now you must reap what you have sown. I shall return you, and you will renounce you business and earthly goods. You will give them all to Lynda Crater, to do with as she sees fit." She smiled at the thought of the shear wealth she was about to inherit.

"Then, to atone for your crimes, you must experience what you have done. You will go to Lynda, and beg her to use her influence to make Dr. Choi change you. You must become the very woman of your fantasies. You must have your body molded to be her, and you must dress and act how you would wish of such a woman. In every way, shape and form you must BECOME your fantasy woman. Only then shall you be atoned."

Kurt's mind whirled in shock and dismay. Give up everything he'd earned? Become a WOMAN? Never! He refused to do such a thing. Women were weak, emotional creatures. Their only purpose was to provide service and pleasure for men. He could never become such a subservient person. It was unthinkable.

Choi frowned, and pointed to a screen displaying Kurt's EEG and EKG data. His brainwaves were peaking, and his heart rate had increased dramatically.

"It would seem that our subject is rejecting your kind offer, 'God'" Choi said. "Shall I?"

Lynda nodded. She leaned forward and said firmly, almost angrily. "YOU MUST SUBMIT!", as Choi twisted a control, sending electric shocks into the special suit Kurt wore.

"YOU MUST SUBMIT!" the Voice boomed - and Kurt was overwhelmed with pain, the likes of which he'd never endured. It screamed down every nerve and synapse of his non-existent body, and the agonizing torment was more than he could bear - but he couldn't even fall into the comfort of unconsciousness. The pain just held him in it's grasp, and he screamed and sobbed, willing to agree to anything as the never ending pain continued - as it might for all eternity.

And then, it was gone.

"Yes, yes God!" Kurt sobbed. "Anything! I shall obey you!"

"And I shall provide you with new instructions later" the Voice told him. "I shall give them to you through Lynda Crater. She will not know when I am using her body, but you will, for she will give commands in My name. She will not even remember doing so, and you shall not tell her. You will submit to these, or I shall return you to purgatory for all eternity."

And then, everything faded out.

Choi smiled as the EEG and EKG indicated that Kurt had capitulated. Pushing a button, a strong sedative was injected into the man's body, and plunged him into a deep sleep.

Lynda and Choi watched as two husky men removed Kurt's limp form from the SDC, and stripped off the suit. They then carried him to an empty room, much like a hospital room, and lay him on the bed.

"You ready?" Dr. Choi asked, raising an eyebrow. When Lynda nodded, Choi injected Kurt, who slowly came around.

"Oh, Kurt, I was so worried." Lynda said, touching his hand and injecting just the right note into her voice. She thought to herself that she could make a fortune in Hollywood.

Kurt looked at her uncomprehendingly. In his own mind, he'd experienced months of Limbo, and a direct commandment from God - it took him a second to bring his mind up to speed, to the here and now. "What... Where am I?" he said, sitting up.

"You're still in the lab. You collapsed over an hour ago. Heart attack." Dr. Choi said. "Luckily, our process to modify the human body includes the heart - we've altered your damaged heart. You're as fit as a fiddle, and ready to leave."

Lynda smiled at Kurt. "Just think!" She said. "We cured you from heart attacks. Do you know how much this will be worth?"

Kurt started to smile at the thought of the riches - then he forced himself to stop, as his heart raced at the thought of an eternity of pain. "Uh... yeah. Look, we should get going." He said awkwardly. Lynda (of course) didn't argue. Soon, they were back at Kurt's car, and he was giving Lynda a ride home.

Lynda decided now was a good time to test Kurt's new 'religion'. Turning to him, she smiled. "I'm glad to see you're feeling..." she said, then suddenly forced her face completely blank. "Your God commands you to inform her of your decision for a new life." She intoned in a flat monotone, then resumed her speaking as if nothing had happened. "... better. You had me worried for... Hey, what's wrong. You've gone as white as a sheet!"

Kurt gulped, his throat suddenly dry. "Uh... I'm fine. It's just that..." He swallowed again, then plunged ahead. "That heart attack made me think. I've been hiding a secret all these years, and now I've decide to let it out."

"Oh?" Lynda said, inwardly exulting.

"I've... um ... always wished I was a woman." Kurt said awkwardly. "Now with your technology, it'll be possible. I, Uh, want to give you complete control of my assets and the company, so I can start my life over, um, as a . a. woman."

Lynda feigned surprise. "Really? Well, if that's what you feel you need to do, I'll support you."

Kurt was flushing a deep red, but fear of God kept him going. "I. . I want you to call the department heads." He said, handing her the car phone. "I need to announce this to them."

Lynda picked up the phone to make the call - and turned her head away, so that Kurt wouldn't see her exultant smile.

Kurt and Lynda watched as the board of Directors filed out, their expressions ranging from bemused to unbelieving. Finally, the last had filed out, and they were alone in the ornately appointed meeting room.

Kurt looked down at the two documents he'd just signed, drawn up by his - now, now it was Lynda's legal department. For the first one transferred all business assets to her. The second, all of his personal assets.

Lynda rested a hand on Kurt's arm. "Don't worry." She said 'consolingly'. "I'll make sure you're not cut adrift in your new life. We'll get you a job in the company somewhere, and provide you with a place to live.

Kurt took a deep breath. "Thanks, Lynda." For the first time in his life, Kurt Goldman was having to rely on somebody else. He didn't like it - but the memories of the unbelievable pain of 'purgatory' ensured he'd obey.

"No..." Lynda started - then her face went completely blank. "You God commands that you must first practice being female." She intoned deeply. "You must learn to dress and act female before you may be permitted to be female. Inform Lynda, and she shall assist you." Then. Her strong features became re-animated. "...problem." she finished.

Kurt was staring at her, incredulous. Finally, he took a deep breath. "I...I guess if I'm going to be female I should...practice." he said, forcing the words out.

Lynda's sculpted eyebrow rose. "Practice?" she asked, feigning confusion.

"Yeah." Kurt said, flushing. "um, you know. Dressing like a...a woman. Doing makeup. That sort of thing."

Inwardly, Lynda enjoyed his extreme discomfort. "Well, if that's what you think... We'd better get started then, shall we?" Swallowing heavily, Kurt nodded.

Lynda rose, and Kurt followed her as they headed out to the elevator. In silence, they rode down to a lower floor, where the dressing rooms were for the occasional fashion show the company put on. As they walked through the hallways, employees turned to watch Kurt's passing, the news about his 'change in lifestyle' already running through the company like wildfire. His embarrassed flush deepened as their eyes followed him.

Finally, Lynda opened a door, and waved him into one of the rooms. He ducked inside, glad to be away from the scrutiny of the employees who were now Lynda's.

"First of all, you have to get rid of that body hair." Lynda told him. She handing him a bottle of hair depilatory, and gestured towards the attached bathroom. "Just cover yourself with this,, wait fifteen minutes, and rinse off."

Taking the bottle, Kurt ducked into the washroom. Closing the door, he hesitantly disrobed, the began to coat his body in the cool, creamy gel.

Shivering, he timed out fifteen minutes, then turned the shower on and stepped under the warm jets of water. He watched as the gel was rinsed off, taking his body hair with it. When he emerged, dripping wet, his skin was silky smooth from the eyebrows down. He quickly toweled off, tossing on the bathrobe hanging from the back of the door.

"Okay, that's done." Kurt said, staring at his feet. "Now what?"

Lynda indicated a pile of clothing she'd gone and acquired while he was in the bathroom. "Let's get you dressed." Sighing, Kurt submitted himself to 'the will of God', and let Lynda help him put on the first female clothes of his life.

First, she had him put on a matching bra and panties set. Plain white cotton, they were unremarkable, but to Kurt, they were more tangible a sign of his new life than signing the papers had been. He hesitated - then, closing his eyes, shucked off his robe. Quickly, he pulled the panties on.

"You should tuck that thing away." Lynda said, looking at his crotch. Flushing, Kurt adjusted his cock until it no longer bulged the front of the panties. The next step was the nylons. The ones Lynda had brought him were thigh-high black nylons, with an elasticized lace pattern at the top of each. She showed him how to roll each one up, slide his toes in, the slowly pull the material up his now silk-smooth legs, smoothing the translucent material as he went. He repeated the process with the second one.

Next, she held up a black leather corset, and he paled. "Surely, that's not necessary..." he said, almost whining.

She carefully hid a smile. "I'm afraid that, with your figure, it is." She said 'regretfully'.

Kurt took the garment and wrapped it around his torso. Lynda went behind him and began to lace it up.

Unseen behind his back, her face was wreathed in a terrible, wicked smile. Pushing her knee into his back for leverage, she used all of her not inconsiderable strength to tighten the heavy lacing.

Kurt cried out in pain as the form-altering garment compressed his waist viscously. His cry died to a whimper as he found great difficulty drawing breath as the heavy shaper compressed his waist by nearly ten inches. Pain shot up and down his spine, complaining at the mistreatment.

"It's too tight!" Kurt gasped painfully.

"Oh, no. It always feels that way at first. You'll just have to ignore it." Lynda lied serenely. She stepped back and eyed him contemplatively.

"Hmm..." she said. "With you slender body and the corset, you're doing pretty good. But with those broad shoulders, we're going to have to do something drastic to 'disguise them.'" She said, as if she was just thinking of it. In truth, she'd meticulously planned the whole thing out for maximum embarrassment for Kurt - including what she was about to do.

Opening an unmarked box, she removed something. Kurt's eyes widened at the sight of two realistic, massive breast-forms. He opened his mouth to firmly quash this - then snapped it shut as Lynda's face went expressionless. "You must submit to the will of God." She said woodenly, then 'God's presence' vanished, and she approached with the breast forms and a bottle of adhesive.

She'd ensured that the custom-made forms were exactly the same shade as Kurt's skin. Unlike 'commercial' breastforms, these had been created by a top Hollywood make-up man out of latex. They were exquisitely detailed and weighted for perfect realism, and the latex 'feathered' at the edges, becoming impossibly thin, so that when glued into place - as she was now doing - no possible way of detecting they existed. Kurt winced as their heavy weight settled onto his chest, driving home the fact of what he was doing.

When she finished, Kurt now had two massive, round, heavy tits hanging from his chest. From a spectator's point of view, they were absolutely undistinguishable from real tits. Having to force herself to keep from smiling, Lynda helped him into the custom-made 55- GGG bra.

For most women, the 'easy' way to put on a bra was to put it on backwards, below the breasts, then rotate it and snuggle it in place. For Kurt, that wasn't an option - he couldn't see below the massive false tits hanging heavily from his chest. So, Lynda had 'taken pity' on him, and supplied a front-closing bra.

Between the impossibly tight corset and the heavy weight of his 'tits', Kurt moved awkwardly as he strapped the plain white cotton bra into place and shifted his gargantuan endowments to fit snugly in the cups.

Then it was time for the final pieces of clothing - a tight, low-cut white angora sweater, and a tight white-leather mini skirt. The only thing that kept Kurt from toppling over from the weight of the tits was the fact that the corset wouldn't allow him to bend forward. He had to balance awkwardly on one foot at a time to get the skirt on. Finally, he stepped into the pair of white leather pumps with the 4 inch spike heels. Wobbling in the footwear, he followed Lynda's instructions to go sit at the make-up table. His massive tits bounced and swayed with every awkward, clumsy step he took.

Sitting in the chair, he spent the next two hours learning to 'put on his face.' Lynda showed him what to do the first time, then washed his face off. He then did it himself four times, until Lynda judged he'd gotten it right.

Needless to say, Lynda had chosen anything but a subdued color scheme. The careful use of the gloss red lipstick created the illusion of full, womanly lips, while Lynda's instructions on mascara and eyeliner created dark-rimmed, 'hooker' eyes above his strong nose.

Bright red press-on nails adorned his fingers.

The final touch was a massive, wavy black wig that Lynda lowered onto his head. Finished, she led the 'en femme' ex-millionaire to a full-length mirror.

He'd never pass as a beautiful woman - but he'd definitely pass as a slutty one. Nobody could tell that this huge-breasted, garishly made-up creature was really a man. He looked like a cheap slut. Kurt's face flamed as he surveyed himself in the mirror, yet he dared not refute his 'God'.

And, he was disgusted to find, his own cock was stirring at the sight of his transformed, huge-breasted body. "That's the dressing part." Lynda said. "Now, I guess you have to learn to act female."

The first order of business was his voice. Using a tape recorder and an oscillator, brought specially for the purpose, they spent the next two hours training Kurt to speak with a husky sort of 'phone sex girl' voice. Kurt was ashamed to be learning such sultry, slutty tones, but Lynda merely shrugged and said that was the best they could do with his masculine voice. Finally, he had it down so pat that he did it without even thinking.

By now, it was just after five, and the building was starting to empty. Lynda judged it was time for 'Kyla' to go public, that being the name 'God' had told Kurt to use.

Teetering on 'her' heels, 'Kyla' followed Lynda out of the room with mincing steps. Following instructions, he wasn't staring shamefacedly at his feet, as per his inclination, but was walking head up, impressive bustline thrust forward, with a particularly brainless smile forced on 'her' lips.

Lynda used the excuse that 'Kyla' needed to get used to the heels before leaving the building to take 'her' floor to floor and parade 'her' around in front of the remaining staff, ensuring that they knew who 'she' REALLY was.

At that moment, Kurt wanted nothing more than to die. Several times, he hesitated, and almost stopped. But his fear, and his memories were too strong, too recent. Helplessly, he put forth an surprisingly convincing act that he really did want to be this air-headed, huge breasted bimbo. He forced himself to talk to his one-time minions, trying to sound as feminine as possible in tone and words.

Finally, Lynda decided it was time to leave, and Kurt followed her. By now, he'd gotten used to the heels, and walked with a disgustingly sexy stride (at least to his mind,) that caused 'her' enormous endowments to sway fetchingly.

"Come on, let's get something to eat." Lynda said, as they slid into the limo. James leered at 'Kyla', and 'she' had to fight a blush at the lavicious look.

They pulled up at one of the swankier restaurants. Lynda, with a sort of inner viciousness, left Kyla at the bar, while she went off to 'make a phone call'.

Kyla sat awkwardly on the stool. It wasn't until 'she' realized the odd look the man next to 'her' was giving 'her' that 'she' realized 'she' was sitting in a masculine posture. Blushing, 'she' crossed 'her' legs at the knee in a more demure, feminine manner.

The man smiled wolfishly at 'her'.

"Hi." He said. "Name's Rob. Buy you a drink, miss?"

Kurt was a bout to retort angrily...then forced a smile to 'her' glossy red lips. "Uh, yes please." 'She' said in her husky, sexy voice. "I'll have a beer." Shame burned deep inside his masculine soul, but none if it showed on 'her' face.

Lynda returned. Seeing 'Kyla' fielding the attentions of Rob - somebody she'd planted here for this moment, she 'innocently' suggested he join them for dinner.

As they walked to their table, he put his arm around 'her' artificially slender waist - then slowly, deliberately, lowered his hand and fondled 'her' ass.

And Kurt, once one of the most powerful businessmen in the world - let him. * * * * *

Three days later, Kurt, in his masculine 'persona', once more stood on the deck of the disreputable looking barge. His heart pounded and his knees trembled as he considered what he was about to do - but, he also was unable to consider disobeying. The programming he'd received, combined with the 'messages from God' provided by Lynda, ensured that he really had no choice in the matter. Over the past three days, he's been kept 'en femme', spending the days as a 'French Maid', and serving Lynda in the house that use to be his.

"Are you sure you want to go through with this?" Lynda asked 'solicitously' as she led Kurt through the security doors to the main lab.

"Uh...Yes. Yes I am." Kurt said, his throat tight. Sweating, he followed the heir to his fortune as she led him over to where Dr. Choi waited patiently. The short oriental man smiled politely. "Are you ready to begin, Mr. Goldman?" he asked, gesturing towards a large console display. Apprehensively, Kurt sat down on the chair, flanked by Lynda and Choi.

Over the next two hours, they carefully mapped out the woman that Kurt 'wanted' to become. Using a large display, they mapped out Kurt's new genetic structure.

Finished, Dr. Choi led Kurt to the machine itself, a booth-like affair with a large, reclining couch. Leading him inside, Choi positioned him carefully, then withdrew. Satisfied, he engaged the machine.

Lynda and the doctor watched at the machine flared to life and began to effect Kurt. Based on the same principles as a microwave oven, the device used thousands of 'Rasers' - Lasers that used radiation rather than light. Each one was capable of tuning itself to incredibly accurate standards, and the beams carefully penetrated Kurt's body, 'mutating' each cell as per the commands from the console.

The two spectators, even though having seen it before, still watched in something approaching awe as Kurt's body changed. The beams started at his feet, moving steadily upwards.

His feet shrank, become daintier, as his ankles became more shapely. The roving beams reshaped his unremarkable legs into long, smooth shapely legs, well defined and very feminine.

Reaching his groin, fat cells expanded, firming and enlarging his ass, as his hips widened. His penis and testicles slowly shrank and vanished, to be replaced with a new, fully functional vagina, complete with internal organs.

His waist, still bearing the imprints left by the corset, shrunk, becoming delightfully slender, as fat swelled on his chest, blossoming into fully functional breast. The beams then went on to alter his - or her - face, and even her hair.

Minutes later, the beams died. Choi opened the door, and Lynda went in and helped the transformed ex-millionaire to her feet, guiding her to a full-length mirror to survey the new body she possessed.

Kyla blinked her new, ice-blue eyes and stared at her transformed flesh. She was tall and slender, with long, shapely legs and a remarkably slender waist. Two firm, C-cup breasts rode proudly on her narrowed rib-cage. Her face was exotic, a model's dream. High, sharp cheekbones and a pointed chin outlined a face with a pert, upturned nose and voluptuous lips, presided over by large, ice-blue eyes under high, arched brows. Her complexion was milky, matching her long mane of naturally wavy, golden blonde hair.

"I'm...I'm really a woman." Kyla muttered, touching her sensitive nipples, which immediately sprang to attention. Her voice was richly erotic, a sexy contralto.

Lynda smiled wickedly. "Well, not quite my dear. There's one last thing before you're TRULY a woman."

Kyla looked at her uncomprehending, as Lynda withdrew a large black plastic strap-on Dildo. She blinked, then shook her head violently. "No...NO! You can't...I won't..."

Lynda's face went into 'God' mode. "KYLA! YOU BELIEVED WOMEN WERE BUT SEXUAL PLAYTHINGS!" she boomed in her most impressive voice. "FROM THIS DAY FORTH, YOU SHALL ACCEPT ANY FORM OF SEX OFFERED TO YOU, BY ANYONE ONE!"

Kyla paled and shuddered as Lynda 'returned'. Theatrically, Lynda began to put away the dildo. "Well, If you don't want to..." she said.

Kyla sobbed, then lowered her head and submitted. "No, please Lynda, will you...will you fuck me?" she asked, tears rolling from her new eyes.

"Of course, Kyla." Lynda said. She took the new woman's hand and led her, still nude, to a compartment she'd had prepared. It was a small room, containing only a bed.

Roughly, Lynda pushed Kyla onto the mattress, then hurriedly disrobed. Strapping the black dildo in place, she spread the unresisting woman's legs, and smiled wickedly as she entered her new womanhood.

Kyla cried out in pain as the dildo entered her unlubricated cunt. Lynda had no intention of making this easy for Kyla. This was the apex of her revenge. With an evil grin, she fucked her ex-boss with viscous, painful strokes.

Mingled pain, humiliation and pleasure filled Kyla as she built towards her first female orgasm. She started to shudder as she neared the brink - and Lynda withdrew, leaving the sobbing, violated woman unfulfilled.

Negligently, Lynda tossed the dildo aside and began to dress.

"Dr. Choi will show you a place to get ready." She said off-handedly. Kyla choked back a sob. "Ready for what?"

Lynda looked at her watch. "We're having a show of the new line in two hours. You're going to be modeling on of our new line of outfits." She smiled wickedly.

Sobbing, Kyla bowed her head and submissively followed the oriental doctor to begin her new life.

Two hours later, Kyla trembled in her soul as her new body stepped out onto the runway with a sexy, smooth step.

She was dressed in the new line of clothing. Her feet were encased in knee-high platform boots, made of black leather. The slender spike heels she walked on were impossibly high seven-inch spikes, accenting her own long legs.

The matching leather panties she wore not only sported a huge, black dildo on the front, but contained two internal vibrators - one up her ass, the other her cunt. Contrary to federal regulations, both were turned on, on Lynda's orders.

Her bustier bared her firm tits, allowing all to see the small, gold-plated clamps affixed - painfully - to her swollen, engorged nipples. Kyla might have cried out - but the huge 'dildo-gag' in her mouth prevented it.

And so, shaking in mixed pain and pleasure, Lynda's newest model showed off the very line of fetish wear that he, as Kurt, had authorized.

Senjii Choi walked into the reception area of his office, his broad oriental face set in it usual cheerful expression. Since Lynda was now the top-dog in the company, her position as Vice President had been open, and Senjii had been given it as a reward for his invaluable assistance.

Behind the desk, his secretary, and part-time model, Kyla, looked up, forced a smile to her full, red lips. As usual, her slender, shapely body was tightly encased - today, it was spandex, instead of the lycra or leather it sometimes was. During the day, Kyla worked for him, while in the evenings, she went home with Lynda to serve as her maid.

"Good morning Dr. Choi." She said brightly. "You've got several messages waiting for you from your designers."

Senjii waved a hand negligently. "You take care of them." He said. As ex-president, Kyla's still-intact business sense made her an extraordinary executive secretary. "I want you to call Ms. Crater up to my office. After you've called her, come in. I have something for you to do."

Kyla suppressed a grimace. "Of course, Mr. Goldman." She said, forcing herself to sound cheerful.

Satisfied that his instructions were being carried out - as usual - Choi waited for Kyla to open the mahogany door to his private office, then went in.

The room was large luxuriously decorated, with expensive Persian rugs on the hardwood floors and a massive redwood desk, hand- carved out of a single piece of wood, dominating one side of the room. Crossing over to it, he lowered himself into the custom-made leather chair, and began to flip through this month's secret reports from his lab. The technique that had worked so well on Kurt was now being applied to a select few other business figures, mostly competitors of Lynda's illegal side-lines.

A moment later, the door opened and Kyla entered. Forcing her smile to remain in place, she crossed the room, her high-heels clicking as she crossed the hardwood flooring.

Senjii pushed the chair out from the desk a bit, allowing enough room for Kyla to kneel. Expertly, she undid his trousers and extracted his massive penis. A session in his own machine had transformed his unremarkable endowment into a massive, thick cock without equal. Kyla set to work using her slender, delicate hands and full, soft lips to get his enormous penis hard.

Senjii sighed softly as her warm, experienced mouth encircled his rapidly hardening cock. Using her warm, supple tongue, she coated the entire length of his throbbing cock with her saliva. Taking the engorged head of his huge prick into her mouth, she swirled her tongue over it as her long-nailed hands caressed and stroked his thick, veined shaft. Under her expert touch, he soon gasped as his cock spasmed, and began to pump an unbelievable amount of hot, salty cum down Kyla's throat. She swallowed desperately, trying to keep up with the gushing jet of cum, but, as always, she failed, the excess running from the corners of her full lips and spattering down on her cleavage.

When he finally ran dry, she licked him clean before restoring his softening member to the confines of his pants.

"Thank you." she said, as she'd been trained. "you taste wonderful." Sensuously, she used her fingers to get the 'wasted' cum, lapping up every last drop.

Senjii smiled, admiring his handwork. He'd done very well with Kyla. She hadn't been very good when she first started. Now, only two months later, she was extremely proficient at pleasuring him.

Senjii always preferred fast learners. THE END...

SUMMARY: A husband finds that his wife has been transformed into a old time southern belle by the inhabitants of a strange town, when he tries to object, he to is transformed.

Modest And Dignified

By Gunslinger

By the time the sign advertised the turnoff to 'Chesterton', Chuck Magneer was practically jumping around the inside of the '92 Sable - and not all of that was due to the five cups of coffee he'd had since leaving Atlanta, either.

It was over a week since Chuck and his wife had been transferred from the New York branch of Finestco to the Atlanta office in what was known as a 'parallel promotion' - same pay and position, but in an office where the cost-of-living was lower and the perks better. So, they'd been relocated down south - or, as Bobbi, his wife, put it 'back home'.

While he'd spent the last week finalizing the transfer of goods to their new company-purchased home, and gotten 'on track' at the new office, Bobbi had taken the opportunity to visit her aunt in Chesterton, South Carolina...

...which was the oddest damn town Chuck had ever heard of, and which he was sure his wife was just itching to get out of, after a week's exposure.

Chesterton, South Carolina, was - quite literally - a town out of time. Every building, every detail, was a near-perfect replica of what a town in that part of the country would have been like during the Civil War. Aside from a few anachronisms necessitated by public health and safety, the town was a perfect throwback to the 1880's - and every resident was a nostalgia buff who'd agreed to live within the confines of the town's era. The fashions, the jobs, the lifestyles - all as authentic as could be, down to the slightest detail.

Bobbi was a southern girl - but hardly the proverbial 'Southern Belle'. Tomboyish, strong-willed, athletically-built and short-maned, she was a fierce individualist and a middlin' feminist - a far cry from the type of woman who would reside in a town where, by the standards set by the assumed time period, women were little more than decorative ornaments and functional housewives. As a visitor, Bobbi was exempt from having to 'play the role', of course - but a week spent with such women must be driving her nuts.

Pulling the metallic-cream sedan into the large parking lot that lay a distance from the town itself. Chuck shut off the engine and looked out at the town in the near distance. It seemed to exude an air of quite grace, surrounded by rolling farmland marred only by the dirt road, the telegraph poles, and the shining steel tracks that served the town's fully functional - and utterly necessary - steam locomotive.

Sliding out of the car and locking it, Chuck considered his options,. It was about a mile into town - a fifteen minute walk, roughly. Or, he could choose to pay for one of the buggies to give him a ride, which was fairly expensive. His last choice was to catch a dirt-cheep ride on the train, when it came by on it's thrice-daily run of supplies and food - but a quick check of the time-table posted informed him that it would be a long wait.

Shrugging. Chuck decided to go shank's mare. Though no fitness nut, he was in fairly good shape for a thin, pale 'desk-jockey', and it wouldn't hurt him. Besides - he'd have to pay for the buggy ride back, since they'd be bringing Bobbi's luggage with them. It didn't make sense to pay for both ways, as far as he was concerned.

Shrugging out of his spring jacket, he tossed it over his shoulder and hooked a finger around the collar to hold it in place, then headed off down the dirt road, keeping an eye peeled for road apples, while admiring the bucolic serenity of the location, and the brightly-colored, well-maintained clapboard buildings he was steadily drawing closer to.

It was a beautiful late-spring day, and Chuck didn't begrudge the 'wasted' time as he wandered into the outskirts of what was, by mid-1880's standards, a fair-sized town. Looking around at the anachronistic buildings and the pedestrians dressed in period clothing, he shook his head at the realism of the image presented - he felt as if he'd stepped back into time.

Looking around, he spotted a general store, and headed over - having noticed that finding his way around might have been a bit of a problem, since systematic street-signs didn't seem to be a turn-of- the-century necessity.

Pushing open the wood-and-glass door, he walked into the dimly lit interior of the store and paused, to let his eyes adjust.

"Can I help you, sir?" A voice to his right said, and Chuck's eyes slowly made out the figure of a slender, weathered man sitting behind the counter, wearing a white shirt and black vest, complete with gold chain and fob across his sinewy belly. The old-timer's accent rendered his inquiry as 'Kin ah he'p yew, suh?'.

"Well..." Chuck said, feeling slightly embarrassed as he grinned apologetically. "I'm sort of lost. I'm looking for..."

Digging into his pocket, he extracted the piece of paper he'd written the information down on. "...21 Primrose Rd."

"Well now, sir, we don't have ourselves no Primrose road heah 'bouts - but we do have a Primrose Lane." The old man said, sucking at the end of his handlebar mustache thoughtfully. "Number twenty- one there would be the widder Hanshaw - and if it's the address you're a lookin' fer, that must make you the Yankee boy that married her niece then."

Chuck blinked, and his grin widened involuntarily. "Well, yes - I guess it would."

The old timer didn't match his grin, however. "Most people 'round here don't have much use fer Yankees, y'know. Myself - I sells to anybody with the money, s'long as it's good metal cash and not that paper script they're pushin' around."

Chuck's grin faded slowly. There was such a thing as too much realism, sometimes. "Well, I'd be happy to buy something in exchange for some directions. Something to drink, say?"

The old man nodded. "Yup - that'd do 'er. We got some fine local beer, iffing that's to your likin'." Chuck agreed that it was...

...then stared, slack-jawed, as he was handed a rough, hand-blown bottle of beer - for the 'enormous' sum of thirty-five cents. The beer was warm, and almost flat, and of a richer shade and flavor than he was used to - but it was pretty good, highly alcoholic, and cheap.

It also came with a complete set of directions to his destination, 'courtesy' of the shop-keeper. Sipping at the beer, Chuck headed off towards his wife's aunt's place.

Before too long, he found himself heading down what he assumed was the right street - and he'd even managed to get part way into the spirit of the town. Though he lacked a hat of any sort, he made the motion of tipping one to every lady he passed, which invariably provoked a restrained, polite smile in return...

...except from the latest one, a stunning beauty in a long, wide off-white bustled dress with white petticoats and a huge-brimmed hat atop her long, sandy-blonde curls. She seemed to be trying to hold in laughter as she nodded politely in response to his 'hat -tipping'. Despite the fact he was still searching for street-numbers, her odd attitude drew his attention away from the street and back to her...

"Oh.. my.. God..." he breathed, eyes widening as comprehension sank in. "B.. Bobbi...?"

His wife finally gave in and laughed - and the laugh was one he'd never heard from her, a warm, trilling sound so bright and cheerful. Slowly, he began to smile widely, shaking his head in disbelief as he eyed his wife in her turn-of the century finery.

He couldn't fault himself for not recognizing her immediately - she hardly seemed the same woman. He was used to seeing her in jeans and a sweat- or T-shirt, no make-up, with her fairly short hair.

Now, she was wearing a wig that gave her the appearance of a long, full head of hair, makeup - and that incredible outfit...

...right down to the underwear, since he'd swear she must be wearing a corset, something he'd never have believed if he wasn't seeing in with his own eyes. Between the corset compressing her waits, and the huge, hoop-skirt of the dress, her boyish figure was now hour-glass in shape - and even gave the illusion that she was fuller-breasted, something he'd noticed on his walk in. He'd never realized that the style could so alter perception, and had actually begun to wonder if the women in the town were all extraordinarily well endowed - but he knew for a fact his wife was a 'B'-cup, and here she looked to have a healthy 'D' cup, at the very least.

"Don't take this the wrong way, Bobbi - but you look great!" Chuck said, amazed, as he stepped forward.

"I don't believe there is a wrong way to take such a heart-felt compliment, Charles." His wife replied - and once again, Chuck's jaw dropped.

Born in Georgia, his wife had what he considered the cutest little accent, even if she'd learned to mute it somewhat - now, the accent was so thick that you could have bottled it and poured it on your flap- jacks. Shaking his head in disbelief, he leaned forward for a kiss...

...and she put a lace-glove-clad hand in the middle of his chest and stopped him. "Not heah, silly." She reproved him, quietly and sweetly. "There are people about."

"What?" Chuck asked, eye-brows climbing. "Bobbi - isn't it about time to drop the act?"

"Act, darling?" She asked. "By the by, deah - I've decided to use my full name from now on. Please be so kind as to address me as 'Roberta Anne' - though I would accept any endearment you might choose to apply, if it isn't to vulgar."

Chuck stared at his wife for a long moment - then had to restrain a smile. "Of course, my dear." He replied, pushing his voice lower and 'more manly'. He made a movement, as if doffing his hat, and made a low, sweeping, bow. "A thousand apologies - I don't know what could have come over me."

As his wife sedately took his arm and escorted him inside, he had to keep from laughing. Though he loved her deeply, he'd always thought that Bobbi tried to hide her femininity too much, with the short hair and unisex clothing. He'd almost come to believe that was her nature - yet, get her in a 'romantic' environment like this, and she became as starry-eyed and 'silly' as any other woman.

Well, if she wanted to play 'Southern Belle' for awhile, he'd enjoy it for as long as it lasted. Sure, it wasn't 'really' the woman he'd fallen in love with and married - but it was fun to play at, for awhile.

Once inside the house, Bobbi... 'Roberta Anne', that was... introduced Chuck to her aunt, Marilyn, then led him into the sitting room.

"So - are you all packed and ready to go?" Chuck asked her, as he settled onto a fancy-looking but rather stiff couch.

His wife paused, an odd expression crossing her face. "Charles, dear - we need to talk." "Oh? About what?" Chuck asked, frowning in puzzlement.

His wife took a deep breath. "I... don't wish to leave Chesterton." She said, refusing to meet his eyes. "I wish to live here for the rest of my life."

"You're kidding!" Chuck exclaimed, stunned. "What - is this some sort of joke?"

Roberta Anne shook her head, slowly. "No, darling - I am utterly serious. I love this town, and this way of life. I know you might find it difficult to accept, but the person I was before I came here was... not the real me. This is who I wish to be, and where I wish to live. It is so genteel here, so polite and wonderful society, where I can finally be free to be the woman I really am. I have never been so happy before in my life."

Chuck shook his head in disbelief - this just wasn't possible. He'd thought that the clothing, the accent, the way she was acting, was some sort of game. But this...! It just couldn't be. Chuck had known Bobbi for over ten years, knew her thoughts and ideals - and he just couldn't believe what she was saying. It wasn't possible.

"Bobbi, what the hell's wrong with you?" He asked, concerned. "If this is a game, I demand that you drop the act right now. If it isn't - then tell me what's going on here!"

She winced. "Please - I'm serious about this, Charles. I really am. I'm also serious about using my full name from now on - the sound of that other name is painful to me. Abhorrent. Please... try to understand..."

"I don't understand!" Charles said, tightly. "I don't understand anything! How can you want to live here, in this... anachronism? How could you want to play 'little missy', all frilly and sweet - and useless?"

What's come over you - and what makes you think I'd ever agree to this, anyway? You honestly think I'd drop my career and come live here, wearing some sill costume day in and day out?"

Roberta Anne looked up at him. "No - no, I don't believe you wish to stay. It wouldn't matter if you did, in any case - the Council would never accept a Yankee living among us. They screen their new arrivals very carefully, and only select men are allowed to stay."

Chuck's jaw dropped. "Wha.. what are you saying, Bobbi?"

She winced again at the sound of her 'old' name. "Roberta Anne, Charles - Roberta Anne... Hanshaw."

Chuck stared at her, comprehension slowly filtering in. "What?!"

"I cannot stay married to you, Charles." Roberta Anne said, sadly. "I know, now, that you are not the right man for me. No, I need a man from this town, a gentleman who will know how to treat me as the lady I am. A man who is firm and manly, who will be the husband for me that I desire. You and I... are through."

"No!" Chuck said, rising to his feet in stunned anger. "No! This isn't possible. Look, Bobbi - I don't know what's going on, or what's been done to you.. but I am NOT going to take this laying down. Now, you get your stuff. We're leaving, and I'm going to find somebody to help you..."

"She's not going anywhere, Sir." A voice said, coldly, and Chuck whirled, his face red with anger....

...which faded to an ashen pallor at the sight of the large muzzle aimed directly at his forehead. The old-fashioned Colt New Army revolver was held in the grip of a man in the uniform of a Confederate colonel, and his bewhiskered face showed nothing but resolve.

"Sir, Miss Hanshaw has already had your marriage annulled by out town's catholic priest. You are no longer her husband." The man said, his weapon never wavering. "As such, you no longer have any claim to her attention - and she wishes for you to leave."

With the barrel of the gun, he gestured Chuck over to the door, where two younger men in the butternut uniforms of Confederate non-coms were waiting, 'Brown Bess' muskets unslung and ready.

"These gentleman will escort you out of town, sir." The colonel said, with a stiff formality. "I would suggest that you abandon any thoughts of returning. This town, despite it' attraction to tourists, is a private town, with it's own laws and police services. If you return, you will be arrested, charged, and punished. Save yourself - and us - the trouble, and give in gracefully to the young lady's wishes."

Chucks hands were clenched in fists of rage as he glared at the erstwhile colonel, to angry to trust his voice. Shooting one last look at Roberta Anne, the woman he thought loved him as much as he loved her, he found her looking, not at him, but at the colonel - with adoration in her eyes and a flush on her cheeks.

Suddenly, something became utterly clear to Chuck - somehow, this Colonel had found a way to change Roberta's mind. Her very personality - so that he could have her for his own.

Jaw clenched, Chuck ground the words through his teeth. "You name, Sir - might I inquire the name of the man who holds me at gun point, and has replaced me in the heart of my.. of the woman who was once my wife?"

The civility of the words and tone galled him - but, old-fashioned or not, the gun the colonel held was lethal, and Chuck wasn't going to provoke him into using it.

"Colonel Richard S. Hooker, sir." The colonel replied, coolly. "Commander of the First Carolinian Regiment, town councilman and chief constable of the Chesterton Militia."

"Very well, Colonel Hooker." Chuck said, tightly. "I believe I shall take my leave of you. However - I demand that you reserve me the right to call you out at a later date, if I should feel that honor demands it."

The colonel managed a wintry smile. "Very well, sir."

Turning on his heel, Chuck strode through the door, ignoring the two privates who struggled to keep up with his rapid pace as he stormed off towards the edge of town, a veil of red in front of his eyes as he swore that the so-called Colonel and his cohorts wouldn't get away with whatever they'd done to his wife.

In the darkness, the wind moaned across the tilled fields around Chesterton, the cool wind rustling the foliage as the clouds scudded low and thick in the sky, their gravid masses blocking out the moon and the stars.

Despite the distinct change that he'd get soaked to the skin when the threatening rain finally materialized, Chuck was grateful for the clouds, and the pitch-black darkness they provided. He felt nervous as hell as it was, and the lack of illumination was the only thing that allowed him to hold on to the ragged edge of sanity as he belly-crawled through the field, doing his best to slip between the stalks of growth without any noise or visible movement.

He never thought he'd be in this situation, not in a million years - dressed in a replica Confederate uniform whose woolen fabric scratched at his body while he crawled through a dark field towards a town full of people living more than a century in the past.

Of course - he also wouldn't have believed his wife would end up as one of those people, either - until it had happened.

That disbelief - and anger - he'd felt had provided the drive that had taken him to the police...

...who had informed him that, without any evidence of duress, there was nothing he could do - except for forwarding a request for an 'informal' investigation to the local authorities, of course. Since Chuck had the feeling that a good part of the town's 'authorities' were in on whatever was going on, that wasn't very comforting.

He'd tried a couple of other routes, as well - but all had proved fruitless. Most people, 'official' or not, thought the inhabitants of Chesterton were nice people, polite and extremely capable at minding their own business.

So, here he was, on Plan 'D'. He'd purchased himself a replica Confederate uniform of the right era - though he'd been forced to accept one that didn't fit quite right, necessitating that he use a considerable length of material to bind his gut in enough to fit into the uniform. He'd also dyed his sandy hair to a dark black, and acquired a huge walrus mustache to complete the disguise. All in all, that had been fairly easy.

Harder had been purchasing a gun. There was no way he could have gotten the 'correct' gun for his uniform, a replica musket, on the short-notice black-market of firearms. Just finding something 'acceptable' had been tough - if he'd wanted an automatic or modern revolver, it would have been as simple as pie. Instead, he'd had to do a bit of searching for 'third best' - a Ruger Single Six, a modern version of the famous Colt Peacemaker. Not quite right, historically speaking - but it would pass casual inspection. (He hoped.)

He'd rather not have to use it, if possible - hopefully, his disguise would pass inspection, keeping him from needing to pull the gun from its holster. Just in case, though, the gun was loaded with five .45 caliber rounds, the one under the hammer left empty for safety purposes.

Hardly the athletic type, much less the 'macho' kind that would usually be associated with dead-of-the- night commando raids, Chuck felt utterly ludicrous - but that didn't deter him in the least. He knew something strange was going on in that strange, archaic town, and he planned to do something about it - at least to the extent of getting his wife out of the town and away from whatever had turned her into the unreal person she was now.

Reaching the first outbuildings at the edge of town, Chuck paused long enough to scratch at himself under the uniform - the wool itched, especially now that he'd started to sweat, despite the reasonably cool air. As he scratched, he surveyed the quiet, sleepy town, and decided that his chances were as good as they were going to get.

Taking a deep breath, he stood up and smoothed his uniform. It was an odd fact of life that a person trying to 'skulk' looked more suspicious than a person who acted like they belonged there, and his best chance of 'sneaking' in was to act as if he had every right in the world to walk the streets. Taking another deep breath, Chuck straightened his shoulders and strode out onto the street, walking with a confident-yet-weary air that was wholly feigned - he definitely wasn't confident, and sleep was the furthest thing from his mind. His pulse was pounding, and he expected disaster to befall him any second now.

"Don't be silly." Chuck muttered to himself, quietly. "You're doing fine, and nobody has any idea that you're even here. Just get Bobbi and get out ASAP, and you'll "

In an instant, Chuck's heart-rate tripled, and all the moisture in his mouth drained elsewhere, giving him an incredibly powerful urge to urinate.

He'd rounded the corner into a square - and found himself facing a squad of men, muskets' leveled directly at him, the large-caliber bores looking as big as the Lincoln Tunnel as they pointed unwaveringly at his head.

Standing at the forefront and center of the line was none other than Colonel Hooker, looking about as smug as was humanly possible, his arms crossed over his broad chest as he watched Chuck's fear and confusion flash across his face.

"Mr. Magneer." Hooker sneered. "Do you really think we wouldn't notice you sneaking into town? We might be outdated in your eyes, but we're not stupid - we have sentries posted around the town to prevent thieves or other undesirables from sneaking into town at night."

Chuck struggled to swallow around a tongue that was suddenly as dry as the Sahara. "Okay - but did you really think I'd just walk away from my wife? Just give up? I know that you've done something to her, so her 'choice' doesn't mean a damned thing to me."

Hooker's sneer faded slightly, and he inclined his head in grudging respect. "Perhaps we do not see eye-to-eye, especially considering that we are working at cross-purposes. Nevertheless - I admire your bravery and dedication. I can see that you will not willingly abandon this 'quest' of yours to reclaim Roberta Anne."

"That's right." Chuck nodded, trying to control the trembling that was running through his body as he very, very slowly slid his hand closer and closer to his holster....

"So - I'm afraid we'll have to resort to more direct measures." Hooker said, lifting his chin and making a gesture with his hand...

Too late, Chuck realized that Hooker, well-aware of his approach and having plenty of time to set up this ambush, would never leave an 'opening' in the line. Chuck had just started to spin, hand diving for his gun, when the soldier who had crept up behind him lifted his musket high into the air and brought the butt of the hardwood stock crashing down on the base of Chuck's skull.

Chuck had just enough time to wonder if he'd ever awaken again, then the darkness washed over him and dragged him down into the Stygian abyss.

Darkness slowly parted, like a curtain rising at the beginning of a play. For several seconds, all the new images were nothing more than wavering blobs of shape and color, then his eyes slowly adjusted, and he found himself staring up at a very concerned - and, not to mention, beautiful - female face, lit with the golden glow of candlelight. Her full lips were tight with worry, and her dark eyes anxious.

"Oh, thank god you're all right." She said, in a low tone, relief spreading across her features. Accompanied by the sound of stiff crinoline, the shapely blonde woman disappeared from view for a moment, then returned with a glass of water, which he accepted after forcing himself into a sitting position, wincing at the heavy throb in his head.

Sipping at the cool water, he tried to stare at his benefactress without actually staring, a slight frown on his features. Something in the back of his mind was niggling at him, insisting that he knew this woman, yet he couldn't quite put his finger on...

...anything.

His eyes widened, and he nearly dropped the glass from fingers that had suddenly gone numb, as he cast about inside his own head, trying to place anything about him. Suddenly heedless of the woman, he looked around wide eyed.

He was in a room with steeply sloping ceilings that came almost to the unvarnished floorboards. A candle furnished the flickering, golden light, outlining the pallet upon which he was laying, and the small table and chair nearby. He could place the objects and their functions, for the most part - but there were a couple of items he couldn't quite remember, and about his companion - and himself - absolutely nothing registered in his memory.

"Where am I?" He asked, noticing the way his voice different from the slower, heavier tones of the woman's speech. "Who are you? Who am I? How did I get here?"

The woman's hand flew to her generous mouth. "Oh, I was so hoping Dr. Nicholas warned me that amnesia was common with a head injury."

"Amnesia?" he said, brow furrowing. Slowly, the thought wormed it's way through the Swiss-cheese his memory had become, and connected with the concept attached to the sound.

"I've lost my memory " he said, hand coming up to gingerly touch the swelling at the base of his skull.

"From some sort of blow to my head."

"That's right." The woman said. Gracefully and demurely, she sank to sit beside him, legs curled decorously under her large, heavy skirt. "My name's Roberta Anne Hanshaw, and I'm a supporter of the Northern cause - though, of course, not many know that. It wouldn't be healthy. Despite what has happened to you, you must think yourself lucky - doubly so. Not only did you sustain a relatively minor injury, all things considered, it was on property belonging to my Aunt, and we found you before Colonel Hooker's men did."

He stared at her in confusion, most of the words slipping past him. Though he understood their meaning, more or less, he couldn't find a way to fit them together so they explained anything.

"I'm sorry, Miss Henshaw - I still don't understand. What happened - and who am I? Where am I?" He started to rise...

Roberta Anne gasped. "Please - you're in no condition to get up yet. As for who you are... I don't know your name, sir. I truly wish I did."

He closed his eyes for a second in frustration, taking a deep breath at finding that he was currently something of a non-entity.

Albeit one with a massive headache, though.

"You're in the attic of Madame Larue's... house." Roberta Anne said, blushing. "I hope you're not offended - but it was the safest place to hide you."

Once again, the words themselves had meaning, but he failed to make anything of the sentence. "Why would I be offended to be in this house? And why am I being hidden?"

Roberta Anne looked startled. "Oh - you mean you don't remember anything?" "Apparently not enough to figure out what the hell's going on!" He said, frustrated. Roberta Anne blushed and averted her face, then turned back to him.

"You are a Union soldier." She said, slowly and distinctly, as if explaining to a child. "We are in Chesterton, South Carolina - putting you far behind Confederate lines. If you are caught, you will be put into a prison... or perhaps killed. Being a Yankee in these parts can be fatal, after what happened to Savannah."

Out of nowhere, an image floated into his mind's eyes, of an old gentleman in a white shirt and a black vest, speaking with the same thick accent as the woman - 'Most people 'round here don't have much use fer Yankees, y'know.'

His stomach dropped as he realized that he was a soldier, in the middle of a war. He still couldn't remember much, but some of the terms had vague meanings for him...

"Oh, shit "

Roberta Anne gasped. "Sir!"

He blinked - then flushed as he realized that his cursing had offended her. "I'm sorry - I don't know why, but it just slipped out. I guess I must curse a lot."

Roberta Anne folded her hands, primly. "I have heard that many a soldier falls into using.. blunt language, what with the pressures of battle and all. I guess I can forgive you using such in the presence of a lady, seeing as you have quite literally forgotten yourself - but, please, try and restrain yourself, if you can."

He nodded, mutely, color rising in his face at having offended such a lovely lady.

"Well, now - we must have something to call you, sir. Since you are unable to remember your own name, perhaps you'd accept another, for the time being?"

He shrugged. "Might as well - you can't go on calling me 'sir' all the time."

She smiled demurely, but delightfully. "Perhaps... John Smith? A bit trite, perhaps, but easy enough to remember."

He nodded slowly, trying the name on for size. "John... yes, that will do fine, I guess."

"Very well, Mr. Smith. I suggest you rest, while I see about getting you some more fitting clothing. Then we can attempt to tackle the more serious problems."

Rising, Roberta Anne left the room with a rustle of skirts, leaving the newly christened man to lay back and probe his memory for anything at all...

...in vain.

* * * * * "Well?"

The doctor in the white smock glanced up as Hooker leaned over the electronic console, incongruous in the sub-basement beneath the barn the held the town's hidden equipment, labs and hospital.

"So far, so good." The doctor said. "It helps that Roberta Anne was reprogrammed to believe this is truly real, which will help keep him convinced - and the memory blocks we put in place on him seem to be working splendidly. He doesn't seem to remember anything he shouldn't."

"Good..." Hooker said, smiling thinly. When he and the eleven other men who'd started this town had sunk their personal fortunes into the venture, fear had played a big part of their lives - fear that the authorities would catch them in their work. That fear had slowly faded as they'd slowly added more and more 'willing' people to the secret rebirth of the South - though it was a job that probably wouldn't be finished in his lifetime, even with the planned expansions. There was just so many people who had to be retrained to think the 'right' way.

This was the first time they'd worked on a 'Yankee outsider' though, and it could get dicey. Which is why they'd decided to try the most extreme solution they could think of. Though it was risky and difficult, if it was done right - if they succeeded - nobody would ever be able to find the missing Charles Magneer...

...including Chuck Magneer himself. If their plan worked, it would be the ultimate solution for 'troublesome' individuals - without even the problem of disposing of the corpse that 'simple' murder would have caused.

"Okay - keep up the good work." Hooker said. Straightening, he took several deep breaths and let himself slip back into character before leaving the secret complex - except for his 'Captain', all his troops firmly believed they were living in the late 1880's, and - although instructed to 'ignore' any anachronisms - had less 'troublesome' thoughts if things were as authentic as possible.

When Roberta Anne returned, it was carrying a bundle of clothing - and with her face a bright shade of red.

"I'm sorry..." She apologized as she lay the clothing down beside him. "Madame Larue simply doesn't have much call for keeping male clothing on hand."

Looking through the bundle, John discovered that it was, indeed, feminine clothing - which he 'recognized', even though some niggling sensation in the back of his mind seemed to indicate there was something odd about it, though he couldn't put his finger on it.

"You can't expect me to wear this!" He objected, pushing the clothing aside. "Why can't you get male clothing?"

Her blushed deepened. "Questions would be asked if I tried to get men's clothing... and you can't expect to find it laying around a... house of ill repute."

"You mean this is a ..." He barely managed to keep from blurting out 'whorehouse', catching himself in time to substitute "Bordello?"

"yes." She agreed, glancing away. "I'm sorry - but that's all that's available. Besides which - you have to admit that it does, indeed, make a fine disguise, at least until we figure out how to get you through the Confederate lines."

John frowned - but there was simply nothing he could do. Roberta Anne excused herself, leaving him to figure out the clothing on his own.

He peeled off the white cotton nightshirt he was wearing - only to replace it with a very similar garment, a white cotton 'shift' with short sleeves gathered by lengths of pale blue lace. Muttering, he slid the garment on, then lifted the hem to pull on the panties that had been laid out - white cotton with strange ridges of lace. The garments continued to strike him as 'unusual', but he quite easily put that down to the simple fact that he definitely wasn't enjoying having to wear them. He tried to skip the heavy canvas corset that had been in the pile - only to discover that the dress itself wouldn't fit unless his waist was considerably smaller. He went to the door, intending to ask Roberta Anne for help - only to find a very large black woman waiting for just this purpose.

The woman - Nettie, as she introduced herself - was a big, silent woman who spoke maybe a dozen words as she had him lean over the table and grip it tightly. He didn't speak any more then she did - because he didn't have the breath necessary to form words as the surprisingly strong woman laced him into the corset in several stages, drawing it tighter each time. He had to fight to keep from begging her to stop as she did the final tightening, bracing one big knee in the small of his back and hauling in the heavy strings of the corset like she was trying to rein in a wild horse.

Of course, he doubted if he could have said anything, even if he'd wanted to - he could swear that every last cubic inch of air had been squished from his lungs as the corset was finally tightened around his waist, shrinking it to a truly frightening diameter, leaving him disturbingly wasp-waisted - though not quite as much as Roberta Anne's delightfully slender waist.

Nettie also helped him with the dress - a red-and-black thing that, from her few words, he discovered was somewhat 'immodest' and showy. It had a huge skirt that was mostly held in place with many layers of petticoats and the internal strength of its own stiff brocade fabric, but a metal bustle helped define it and give it a backwards-facing flare that also exaggerated his newly shrunken waist. He did little to either help or hinder the silent woman, working on just standing still and taking shallow breaths.

The dress was a dark red silk with black brocade stitching, and it seemed to weigh a ton - most of it the skirt, since the top was 'immodestly' revealing. Though it had long sleeves and a high, black-lace collar with a cameo necklace around it, the front of the bodice was open in the 'Provincial' style, designed to display cleavage...

...which, John was surprised to find, he had a small amount of. The corset was shaped at the top to help uplift, and the transplanted mass of his flesh from the super-tight foundation garment created the illusion of small breasts, with a hint of pubescent cleavage. You could almost believe a small pair of budding breasts lurked in the key-hole of the dress, if not for the chest-hair that marred the illusion.

As bad as the rest of the outfit was, the boots were the worst - too small, made of stiff white leather, and with a four-inch heel. Again, Nettie put her strength to use, cramming them onto his feet and lacing them up, causing minor agony to flair in his crushed feet.

When she'd finished helping him dress, Nettie had to help him walk out of the room, teetering atop the heels.

"You'll be stayin' here today." Nettie said, stringing together more words than he'd heard her use so far. "Miss Roberta has to go, but she'll be back first thing tomorrow. Meantimes, Madame Larue said you're to have the run of the servant's quarters and the kitchen, just so long as you don't let none of the customers get a look at you."

It wasn't exactly what John would have considered a spectacular way to spend the day - but he really didn't have a choice.

Which is how he found himself dressed up in women's clothing, spending the day in the company of whores. He was bemused to find the 'working girls' and odd blend of gentility, coarseness and weariness. They moved with the same gentle grace as Roberta Anne - but with more straight-forward motions in the presence of men, alluding to the obvious in ingenious ways that left the actual 'impolite' words unspoken. However, when they were 'alone' - in this case, just with themselves and him - they were explicit and expressive, in a strangely lady-like manner. They also went to great trouble to 'include' him, in what seemed to be a running joke at his expense, treating him as if he were just another whore. He had to grit his teeth and bare it, as it was made painfully obvious that some of them - most of them - weren't terribly fond of Yankees, and were itching for an excuse to be so forward and unladylike as to turn him in - and odd hesitancy, all things considered. Still, he had no choice but to 'play along' and keep his skin intact...

...even if that skin was currently compressed into a dress undoubtedly 'borrowed' from the wardrobe of one of the working girls.

By the end of the day, he was happy to escape back up to the attic and get undressed. Carrying the glass of port given to him for his nightcap, he eagerly fumbled his way out of the clothing and back into the nightshirt, stretching mightily and taking a dozen deep breaths, glad to be free of corset. A day's worth of walking had made him able to manage the heels with a small degree of skill, but he thought his feet might never be the same after spending more than twelve hours crushed inside the too-small footwear.

Laying down on the hard pallet, he finished the glass of port and blew out the candle, rolling over and quickly falling into a deep, dreamless sleep.

Twenty minutes later, the door to the attic opened, and the team of doctors from the hidden lab who were in charge of his case slipped in, not bothering to be quiet - they knew the hypnosedative was strong enough.

"Okay - we'll start in on him." the head of the team said to the bulk of the group. "The rest of you work on the rest of the girls. We get three whole days to work on him - not that he'll realize it, or remember the liposuction and other minor surgery. You, however, only have a few hours to get this done, so let's get moving."

Nodding, his team spread out to start Stage Two...

"Johnny, wake up - Madame Larue says that you've been abed long enough, amnesia or no."

Blinking, John.. Johnny..? frowned up at...

Lindsey. That was her name - though he couldn't remember much else about the slightly chubby blonde. He could remember that he knew her, that she was one of the working girls, and her first name.

"What...?" He asked, groggily, sitting up.

"You're back on duty today, running drinks for the customers." Lindsey said, sighing. "Let me guess - you don't remember any of that, either."

"No..." He admitted, looking around the feminine decor of the bedroom. Slowly, bits and pieces came back to him - not much, but some. Especially when Lindsey began laying out a pile of women's clothing on the bed. Though he couldn't remember why, he knew that he had worn clothing like this before, and apparently was expected to again.

He tried to ask Lindsey about it, but she was obviously in a rush, and only made some vague references that didn't help much - other to reawaken a stark fear of Confederate soldiers catching him.

Uncertain, but unwilling to go against the vaguely remembered 'history' that matched Lindsey's instructions, he let Nettie - another 'remembered' person - help him dress, so that he could start his duties. Spending the day playing barmaid was certainly no picnic, but it made sense to him that he'd have to pay from room and board in exchange for safe haven.

He was also less than happy when Madame Larue herself brought the 'good news' that they'd finally gotten some fresh blades for the straight razors, and he should have Nettie help him shave off the hair that had regrown since 'the last time'. He certainly didn't remember having his body shaved smooth - but there was a lot of things that he didn't remember, and he was in no position to argue.

Even if he'd been inclined to do so, he didn't think he could - he felt strange fuzzy as he went through his day, a common side-effect to a head injury, he was told by the doctor Nicholas who showed up in the late afternoon to check him over. Apparently, he'd had an accident a week ago and hit his head something fierce, resulting in the amnesia and fuzzy thinking - and, as proven by his confusion, Dr.

Nicholas' warning that mild short-term memory loss might occur while he slept was right on the money. The doctor appeared only slightly concerned about it, though, claiming it would slowly fade, and memories would start seeping back in.

Johnny certainly hoped so - he certainly couldn't find anybody who had the time to fill him in on his life to date each morning. He started the day asking question after question, but it so annoyed the working girls - and put him at risk of being turned out to face the wrath of the Confederate Army - that he gradually stopped asking questions and 'went with the flow' trying to sort out the 'how' and 'why' of his situation as best he could from vague comments and references made about him in casual context.

It didn't clear much up, and he was feeling confused, out-of-sorts and put out as he finished off his habitual glass of nightly port and drifted off into a surprisingly deep, dreamless sleep, wondering what he'd remember when he awoke in the morning...

* * * * *

"Joanna, you get yourself out of bed this instant - you've got work to do."

Blinking blearily, Joh.. Joanna? Opened his... her? Eyes - then sat up with a start, mind racing...

...Until he/she remembered the amnesia, and the 'minor' loss that happened during sleep. Frowning, Joanna tried to place herself, wondering why the feminine pronoun felt so wrong to her.

He/She found out pretty quickly. Despite a mildly feminine build and a small, firm pair of breast, his/her body possessed a definite set of male genitalia, leaving him/her feeling confused.

He/She just couldn't think of a way to ask Lindsey the 'obvious' question. He/She gave it a shot with Nettie as she helped him/her dress, but the woman remained as enigmatic and uncommunicative as he/she remembered.

Though it seemed strange to him/her, parts of it began to be familiar - he/she could remember having a cock, and he/she could remember seeing a small amount of cleavage in a dress when he/she had looked down - though he/she couldn't place the memories themselves. Feeling dazed and confused, Joanna nevertheless refrained from pushing for answers, knowing what the ultimate penalty could be. Instead, he/she got on with his/her vaguely remembered duties, feeling lost and more than a little frightened. It came as no surprise that he/she was looking forward to his/her nightly glass of sherry and a good night's sleep, hoping that not too much would be lost before awakening tomorrow...

* * * * *

"Come on, Jenny - rise and shine."

Jenny rolled out of bed, wondering when her amnesia was going to pass - she didn't like the odd, disconnected feeling it brought to everything.

Even her own body. Though she couldn't 'remember' why, it felt odd to her, though it looked fine in the mirror. Fine being a relative term, since she couldn't clearly remember what she looked like, her own reflection almost a surprise to her.

Part of it was probably the fact that she wasn't exactly stunningly beautiful, though she was not ugly either. She was a little too rough-hewn in her features, though.

Oddly, the two parts that bothered her the most, inwardly, was her womanhood and her breasts - although she couldn't figure out why. Her womanhood was a little tender, especially since she had been - and still was - on 'other duties' because of the accident. Maybe, deprived of her usual 'diet' of men for the past week, she'd gotten herself off too enthusiastically last night - but she couldn't remember.

On the other hand, her breast, emotionally, seemed too large to her - though they were about the same size as Lindsey's own, completely average, bust.

Not willing to discuss this with anyone, she just shrugged it off, vaguely remembering that she'd felt equally odd about herself every morning for the past while. Instead, she let herself find comfort in her usual routine as she let Nettie help her dress...

"I am so nervous."

Lindsey smiled. "You've done this hundreds of times, Jeanette - even if you don't remember." "Maybe so, mon amieé - but zat does not make feel any bet'air." Jeanette eyed herself in the mirror, patting the last of her long, luxuriant brunette tresses into place. It was her first day back at 'work' - as opposed to work - since the accident, and she hoped that, when the time came, her amnesia wouldn't affect her performance...

Looking at her figure in the mirror, she sighed slightly, feeling - as usual - that her breasts were freakishly outsized. Of course, technically speaking, it was true - she was by far the most endowed woman in the House - maybe the country. Surely, not many other women out there had been cursed with breasts the size of their heads, requiring custom-made clothing to contain them. Still, they - along with her tiny sixteen-inch waist and her French heritage and accent - were her major 'selling points', allowing her to be as successful as a woman could be, monetarily speaking. So, her dark-red brocade dress was, as all her clothing, fitted with a cleavage-displaying keyhole to display her 'assets'. She felt a moment longing for the half-remembered days of her youth, when her breast had just begun to bud and she didn't know what fate had decreed for her bust-line.

Sighing again, she turned away from the mirror and smiled at Lindsey, then headed for the door, heart still beating rapidly. Moving with her accustomed grace in her high-heeled ankle boots, she headed down the stairs, pausing outside the 'parlor' for one last deep breath and to fix a smile on her face.

Then, as ready as she'd ever be, she pushed the door opened and entered.

"My dear - it's good to see you among us once more." Leroy - a regular - said with a smile, his eyes fixed on her prodigious bust.

"I am zo glad to be zeen, alzo." She said with a smile, leaning forward slightly and drawing back her shoulders. "Perhapz we could zee more of each awzzer..."

"Jeanette!" A voice called, interrupting her 'pitch', and she suppressed a frown as she glanced up...

...then smiled broadly at the sight of the handsome man in his uniform. "Colonel Hooker! Zis iz truly a zurprise!" the Colonel smiled. "I know that I don't often frequent this establishment - but when I heard that you were once more about, I found myself so sorely tempted to finally pay a visit that I couldn't help myself."

Instantly, Leroy took a back-burner, and her nervousness doubled while being mixed with pleasure - all the girls talked about being the first to get the famous Colonel, and here her damnable injury was finally revealing its silver lining.

"Well, I muzt take you on zee grand tour, zen." She said, batting her lashed. "Perhapz you would care to see the upztairs, Colonel?"

"I'd be delighted." Hooker took her arm, and she lead him out to the staircase, heart running a million miles an our in confused emotions.

"Zo, tell me - the ztories about your father, the Zheneral. They are true, non?"

Hooker laughed. "Yes, I must admit they are - his... harem is famous far and wide. Why, it's gotten so that when a woman arrives in a town anytime close to my father's passing through it, men will go up to them and ask them if they are Hooker's - which has occasioned more then one slapped face, I understand."

"I would imagine." Jeanette agreed, leading the Colonel into her room. "Zo..."

The Colonel seemed a little stiff and ill-at-ease, as if he was also experiencing mixed emotions. In her case, it was her nervousness at performing acts she didn't remember, coupled with a strange feeling that this was 'wrong' - which, she knew, it was, since being a harlot was hardly the most Christian form of employment. On the other hand, the Colonel almost seemed... reluctant? No - it was almost as if he was disgusted by her, and the realization was sobering. Did he find her repulsive? Was it her ridiculous bust? Or was the fact that she was a lady of the night?

No - she must be imagining it. He was just nervous, this being his first time here. After all, if there was some reason that he found her unattractive as a woman, why would he be here? What possible motivation could there be for him to have her perform sexual favors for him if he was repulsed by her in any way? It was a thought that made no sense, and she chided herself for being so nervous and awkward.

"Why don't you let me help you...?" the Colonel suggested with surprising directness, then matched word to deed and slowly helped her undress, his actions stiff and awkward. Finally, she was naked before his gaze, her heart pounding and feeling slightly nauseous, though she didn't know why.

She made a move to embrace him, but he, instead, reached out to her huge breasts, surprising her. She'd had men focus on her monumental bust before, she supposed - but it still felt as if he was rejecting her advances, and instead merely eager to 'use' her for some obscure 'pleasure' she didn't understand.

Indeed, he seemed to take great satisfaction in fondling and squeezing her massive tits - almost painfully, truth be told - but there seemed little joy there.

Finishing with his rough man-handling of her firm tits, he slowly undid the buttons on his trousers, and she reached for his tunic buttons...

"no, no." He said, hastily - and almost imperiously. "I don't want to lay down with you." "Colonel?"

"I want you to suck me off." He said - commanded, actually, and now the way his eyes were glittering with some inner fire was scaring her - not to mention his directness at requesting fellatio was startling to say the least.

Still...

"Of course." She answered graciously, sinking to her knees. The feeling that this was all wrong had doubled and redoubled, but she knew that much of it was from Hooker's strange behaviors - but, in her line of work, none of that mattered. When you got down to brass tacks, she was simply here to perform whatever the customer wanted.

So, she took a deep breath and reached into his trousers, extracting his limp cock.

It confirmed part of her fears - he definitely wasn't aroused by her. Which made everything that much stranger - why was he doing this at all? She couldn't take time to dwell on the question, though.

Instead, she began to use lips, tongue and hands to bring him to erection. Where her 'feminine wiles' had failed, direct physical manipulation succeed, though slowly - Hooker's cock swelled to erection, finally ready for her to service.

She glanced up before truly 'starting' and was surprised to find him staring at her intently, as if impatient and eager, anticipation and something else dancing in his eyes.

Trying to ignore it, she bent down, open her mouth, and slid her full lips around his throbbing shaft...

...and instantly knew why she'd ended up where she was, though her memory was still gone. For, the instant her mouth slid onto his cock, she found herself wanting - needing - to make him cum. the strength of the sudden rush of desires that flooded her scared her - but the fear was buried deep beneath an avalanche of need, and her left hand wrapped around the base of the colonel's cock as her right began working his spittle-coated shaft, her head bobbing eagerly to let her mouth slurp hungrily at his delicious man-meat, muffled sounds of desperate pleasure coming from deep in her throat.

Hooker watched with a mixture of satisfaction, pleasure and disgust as the ex-man hungrily slurped away at his cock, lost in her own desperate need. It disgusted him to let 'her' touch him, much less suck him off - but he'd wanted to put this final change to the test for himself, and make sure that the implanted needs, cultivated by long hypnotic sessions 'she' had spent in front of a big-screen TV showing one porno tape after another, had truly taken hold. It was obvious that they had - and know that they were 'triggered' the new slut would spend the rest of her life with a desperate need to replay all those scenes out in real life, with her as the star. Though she'd never consciously remember why, she'd be driven to perform all those different sexual acts, over and over, harnessed only by the equally strong need to be 'proper' in public. A lady on the street, but a nymphomaniac slut behind closed doors - the test was an absolute success.

Especially since, transformed male or not, she was incredible - despite knowing the truth, Hooker was disgusted to find that he was getting the most enjoyable blow-job of his life from 'her'.

Finally, Hooker came, and she gulped hungrily at the cum flooding down her throat, loving the taste and texture of it - but torn by the desire to have cum splattered all over her face, body and hair - and, especially, her tits. Thank god she had a job where she could do that, later - and also have sex other ways too, because she also wanted to feel a man deep in her ready womanhood - and even, (unheard of!) from behind, in her 'other' whole. In fact, she wanted to feel every part of a man's body on every part of her body - she couldn't get enough of men, in every way, shape and form.

As Hooker's cock ran dry, he withdrew and rearranged his clothing with insulting haste - but she didn't notice. He was drained, and in the amount of time it would take him to get hard again, she could get a fresh man up here. Leroy was already waiting, for example...

As Hooker left, she chafed at the time it took to dress - but she couldn't conceive of going naked, no matter how much time it would save. Besides - it wasn't like there would be any shortage of men lining up for her services, now that she knew how eager she was to please....

SIX YEARS LATER

Jeanette struggled against the urge to break into a run. It just wouldn't do - even though she was wasting valuable time away from Madame Larue's - and the clients - on her bi-monthly run down to the store for new clothes.

The craving was as strong as ever - she'd never felt truly satisfied, not even during or immediately after a sexual act, because there was always all the other ways she could have done it that she hadn't. She didn't care about the lack of satisfaction anymore, though she'd gone through a period when it had almost driven her crazy. That frustration had led her to wonder what the use of it all had been, and she'd stopped...

..for the worst seven hours of her waking life. She realized that there was something far worse than getting 'unsatisfying' sex - and that was no sex at all. She'd thrown herself into her work with renewed enthusiasm, and had been working as eagerly ever since, having found the alternative much, much worse.

So - she hated the three hours spent making the clothing run, but it couldn't be helped - she could hardly send somebody else for the final fittings, as nobody came close to matching her dimensions.

Still.. there was no reason she couldn't walk a little faster...

Picking up the pace, she pushed the edge of 'ladylike', saved only by her cultivated grace and posture at all times, even at a near run. Mind already on the sex she'd be having when she got back, she hurried up the half-dozen steps leading to the door of the clothing shop...

...noticing, at the last instant, Colonel Hooker's svelte blonde wife emerging from the shop. Jeanette struggled to halt her hurried forward motion as Roberta Anne looked up, startled...

..and smacked into Jeanette, not having seen her in time.

Jeanette's arms windmilled as she fought for balance - but, graceful or not, the laws of physics reigned supreme over her decidedly top-heavy form, and she went flying backwards off the steps, her head smacking against the cobblestones on the roadway with a resounding 'thwack'.

Horried, Roberta Anne dropped her purchases and hurried down the steps, nearly suffering the same indignity. Catching her balance, she knelt beside the unmoving figure on the roadway, gratified to see the woman's enormous bust rising and falling regularly.

"Miss? Miss, are you all right?" Roberta Anne asked frantically, leaning over the woman. The woman's eyes slowly fluttered open, and she stared up with a dazed and unfocused look for several seconds before her eyes finally focused on the woman leaning over her. The fine, arched brows slowly drew inwards in confusion.

"Bobbi?" She said, in an odd tone of voice. "What the hell have you done to yourself?" "Bobbi...?" Roberta Anne repeated in confusion.

The other woman didn't seem to notice - her frown had deepened, and she began to lift her arms towards her throat, as if surprised by the sound of her own voice - her she was holding her arms to low to her body, and they couldn't clear her enormous chest...

She suddenly sat bolt upright, nearly smacking Roberta Anne in the head as she stared down at her chest in horror.

"Tits!" She screamed, her hands flying to her chest and squeezing her huge endowments. "holy fuckin' shit, I've got gigantic fucking tits!"

Roberta Anne gasped. "Miss!"

The woman didn't notice - and odd look came over her face, replaced by what looked like a mixture of comprehension and horror.

Then she screamed, long and loud, hands roaming over her body and jerking away, again and again.

"What's going on here?" A male voice asked, with authority, and Roberta Anne looked up to see one of the Yankee carpet-baggers who often came through town.

"I'm not sure..." Roberta Anne started to answer.

"they turned me into a fuckin' woman!" The other woman screamed. "Oh, my God - I've been... I still want to... I need to.. oh, holy shit..." Her words degenerated into helpless sobbing.

"Miss?" The man asked the sobbing woman, confused. He pulled an odd black folder from his pocket. "Miss, perhaps I can help - I'm Agent Daniel Jenkins, FBI. I'm supposed to be on vacation, but if you need help..."

The other woman didn't seem to notice, moaning over and over again the same disturbing words. "Oh, god... I still want to have sex... but they made me a woman..."

"Miss, do you know what she's talking about? Was she raped?" the strange man asked, startling Roberta Anne.

"I.. don't think she was... violated." Roberta Anne said, stiffly. "My Husband, Colonel Hooker, is across town. He is the local militia commander. Maybe I should go get him."

The man pulled something out of his pocket. "That's all right, I have my cell-phone - what's his phone number."

"What?" Roberta Anne asked, confused. "What's a phone?"

The man's expression became guarded. "Look, I don't know what's going on here - but I think we should get to the bottom of this." Manipulating the strange object in some way that cause odd, slightly musical tones to emerge from it, he began to speak into it, holding a one-sided conversation full of strange phrases...

Behind the attractive Eurasian anchor, the small screen flicked from the station's local to a picture of a courthouse steps, where a crowd of reporters fought to get microphones near a dozen men heading into the building.

'In our top story, an appeal verdict has finally be returned in the bizarre Chesterton trial. The Supreme court has upheld the initial ruling that the complete and total erasure of a person's life, with no way to restore it, can indeed be construed as murder. Accordingly, all twelve men now face additional life sentences for the 'murder' of Charles Magneer, as well as the other sentences already conferred upon them for the hundreds of State and Federal laws violated by the brainwashing center they operated in the 'reconstruction' town of Chesterton, South Carolina. This brings so-called 'Colonel', Richard Hooker, to a total sentence of two-hundred and forty years, making him eligible for parole sometime in the next century.

In a related story, Mark Nickson has a special interview with Jeanette Doe, the former Mr. Magneer, who - along with his one-time wife Bobbi Ann Hanshaw - have received the entire town of Chesterton itself as partial compensation for emotional damages suffered, and now run it as a non-profit refuge for transsexuals, sexual addicts of both genders, and the remaining population of the town who could also not be fully 'deprogrammed'. This story, and more, right after these words from our sponsors...'

BACK TO FUN ZONE

SUMMARY: While one man is completely transformed into a woman against his will, his transformation is discussed in detail by the scientist who is leading the change.

Monologue

By Gunslinger

Ah, good - I see you're awake.

Perhaps you're feeling a little groggy. Don't worry - that's merely a side effect of the tranquilizer dart my security personnel shot you with when they found you... 'snooping around', I believe the phrase is.

Who am I? Oh, here I am being rude. My name is Doctor Leah Transom. I, of course, already know who you are - I took the liberty of checking the identification in your wallet while my men stripped you.

My, my - what language. As a matter of fact, I do have the right to strip you naked and restrain you on a gurney. Call it one of the prices of getting caught engaging in industrial espionage.

I realize the company you work for must be dying to find out what an internationally-known bio- technology company and a world-wide consortium of medical and pharmaceutical companies could possibly have joined together to produce in a out-of-the-way plant in the middle of Minnesota. Well, my dear boy, you're in luck - you're going to get a first-hand view of what we're developing here.

You see, we're in the final stages of preparation, as it happens. Right about ready for human testing, you could say...
...and you just volunteered.

Oh, come now - no need to make such threats.

Especially since you have no hope of ever carrying any of them out...

Well, to keep you in suspense would certainly be too cruel. Why don't we go ahead and get started, then...?

What am I going to you? Why, my dear boy - I'm going to turn you into a woman.

Oh, stop it. The way you're carrying on, you'd think I'd suggested the proverbial 'fate worse than death'. I've been female my entire life, and I assure you, it's no specific hardship.

Indeed - many men wish to become female, hence this plant. I'm sure you realize that there are surgeons out there that specialize in Sexual Reassignment Surgery, and make quite a good living at it. The procedure, however, is less-than-satisfactory for many of the clients, who submit to it solely because it is, as far as they are aware, the best 'alternative' offered to the unbearable male life genetics and fate curse them with. There are even more transvestites and transsexuals who would also undergo a feminizing procedure, if the result wasn't such an ersatz facsimile.

Think of the money we'll make with a procedure that produces an end product nearly indistinguishable from that produced by Mother nature herself.

Stop it! If you keep struggling like that, I'll be forced to use an inhibitor that would leave you conscious, but immobile. That's better...

Now, I'm actually quite glad this happened. You see, I'm justifiable proud of what we've done here. Not only capable of producing the physical transformation, we also provide complete lifestyle adjustment training and rapid skill acquisition. All in all, I've just been itching to show off what we can do - and you give me just that chance. So, as we go through every stage of the process, I'll be right beside you, explaining exactly what's happening.

My dear boy, if I were your mother, I'd threaten to wash your mouth out with soap.

To return to the topic at hand; As you can plainly see, the six-point restraint system you're in has been attached to the support-frame on the overhead conveyer, lifting you into the vertical position. This makes the process fairly easy - practically automated, actually. Just as an auto assembly line produces cars from assorted components, our procedure is very similar - a man goes in one end, a woman comes out the other.

Ah, here's the first station. Those eight robotic arms with the spray nozzles are 'painting' you with a depilatory chemical. We actually have two such chemicals. One allows the hair to grow back after a time, albeit a much finer, softer hair. This is the chemical you're getting sprayed on much of your body. Optionally - and as we're doing in your case - we can use the stronger chemical mix, the one that causes permanent hair loss. Oddly enough, many transsexuals prefer to grow that finer, feminine leg-hair, just for the 'ultimately feminine' task of having to shave or wax their legs occasionally.

Don't worry - it's not something you'll have to worry about.

Well, between application and the rinse cycle there's a bit of a wait, so I think I'll go grab myself a coffee. I'll meet you at the next station. Oh, and by the way - when the rinse cycle starts, please note that the water is warmed for your comfort.

We try to make our clients happy.

* * * * *

Well, well - the 'bald' look sort of suits you, doesn't it...?

Oh, don't worry about that. It'll be taken care of a little bit further along. Right now, we need the body completely bare of any hair at all.

Yes, those are a type of laser, actually. How perceptive of you.

These special lasers are basically 'tearing off' you outer layers of skin, while using a faint ultraviolet radiation generator to cause the inner cells to 'mature', just as if you were going through the natural shedding process - only much faster, of course.

The biggest difference is the fact that the new skin hasn't had time to acquire all the little creases and wrinkles that mark a normal person's skin. The result: Smoother, finer-patterned skin that also happens to be more taut and elastic.

There you are, my dear - a complexion many women would kill for.

Of course, many of these procedures will also be offered to 'natural' women, as well - but in a less 'industrial' setting than this plant.

Moving right along...

This next station is where a large part of the 'reshaping' of the physique comes in - and the single largest improvement out process offers over conventional surgery.

These 'probes' you see can create a special electromagnetic field that affects the structure of the human bone. In fact, it can increase the density of the bone up to thirty-three percent - with a matching reduction in size, I might add...

Yes, I know - this is the most uncomfortable part of the process, though it's well below the threshold of what would be considered actual 'pain'...

As you can see, we're decreasing the diameter of each of your bones to the maximum, give you a much finer bone structure for your height - with the exception of the pelvis, which we want to remain the same size as before. I assure you, compared to the finer structure of the rest of you, it gives you a fine, womanly pair of hips...

You see? A lovely, fine-boned structure that is downright 'girlish'...

...except, of course, for that unsightly thing hanging between your legs. That's the problem this next station is...

Stop it!

Doctor Ludwig! Sedation, stat...! Hold him! Hold him still...

Ah, much better. We couldn't have you struggling like that. Not that you could break out of the restraints, of course, but you might have damaged that lovely new skin we've given you.

Oh - and a nice side-effect of the bone-density procedure: You were never at risk of breaking any bones. Given the new density, they're almost as strong as carbon steel now...

Oh, stop whimpering.

Okay... As you can see, this cup-like device is now closing over you crotch. I said, stop whimpering!

Anyway...

The devices in that cup have 'softened' the flesh that makes up your penis and scrotum. Even as we speak, it's basically 'inverting' your genitalia, pushing both your penis and your testicles back into your body - though, of course, it's more complicated than that, mostly in terms of the cosmetic affect we wish to achieve....

You know, that whimpering is really starting to get on my nerves.

Where was I...?

Oh, yes - as well as the physical and cosmetic changes, there's also some changes being made to your ability to produce semen, to more closely match that of a woman's arousal system. You will be producing much more fluid, but one that is much thinner - a much higher water content, you understand. Also, it will not be directly related to the orgasm, though during an orgasm the flow will briefly increase considerably. Think of it as sort of a massive flow of pre-cum that will begin almost the instant the correct arousal hormones trigger it - which, in your case, will be often, as we're ramping your ability to produce the liquid about twice what we normally would, to match the fact we're lowering your threshold to about half that of a normal woman.

You might find yourself spending quite a bit of your time 'hot and wet', as I believe the phrase goes.

Oh, for goodness sakes! We didn't even actually remove anything, you sniveling little baby. It's all still there, just in a somewhat different form...

Oh - and a much more sensitive one, as well.

This is one of the big selling features of our procedure. The actual 'reshaping' is really a more advanced version of what conventional SRS does - but our ability to actually cause your body to grow extra amounts of nerve tissue allows for a man to actually experience sex the way a woman does: That is, we make you multi-orgasmic capable, with all the correct matching sensations.

Indeed, we've removed the male limitation on arousal, allowing you to experience female-like sexual arousal, where you can become aroused - and perform - just seconds after the previous bout of intercourse.

Actually, in your case I've taken the liberty of vastly increasing the amount of nerve tissue your body will be replicating. I wouldn't want to skim on your ability to experience one mind-blowing orgasm after another, after another, after another, after...

Well, I'm sure you get the idea.

What? Nothing to say? No foul-mouthed insult?

See, you're much more tractable now that your body's ability to produce testosterone has been so greatly limited...

Oh - there's a spark of the dear boy I've come to know and despise...

...except that I should probably say 'dear girl' now, shouldn't I? My God - are you crying?

I knew men were such babies. One small part of them holds such inordinate importance in their view of the world. Well, now that it's the feminine equivalent, maybe you'll actually have to start thinking with you, ahem, 'other head'...

Now, now - that's hardly lady-like.

Besides; that particular pejorative now applies to you, as well. Ah, well, onto the next station on our little 'assembly line'...

...although, from the way you are carrying on, one might think it a 'disassembly line'. Come, now - it didn't hurt. I know that for a fact, since a local anesthetic is included.

In any case: this next station is designed to give you some wonderfully feminine facial features. The bone restructuring has already done much to enhance your face, of course. What, with the slimmer jaw-line, the finer nose, and the better-defined cheek and brow, you could already pass as a 'cute' young woman, as you can plainly see in that mirror right in front of you - however, we wouldn't want to settle for merely 'cute', now would we? No, not at all - and at this station, we can do the fine-tuning of your features to provide everything from classically beautiful to stunningly striking, and everything in between.

For you, however, I've had the machine programmed with a very special selection...

Oh, don't worry - that laser is nothing but a mapping laser, which is sent to the processing system to create...

...that plastic mask that just covered your face, holding it perfectly still. We wouldn't want you to move while some of this was being done, now would we? With that light sedative I gave you wearing off, you might decide to do something stupid...

Ah, here we go. Those arms, there, have pressure-injectors that are implanting special cellular material into lips, to make them fuller and firmer. It's a synthetic cell, but one the body will absorb and assimilate, creating a permanent, living tissue in a matter of mere seconds. As you can see, it's wonderful for pumping up your lips, giving you that delightfully 'bee-stung' look...

...and, while we're at it, we're also increasing the nerves in your lips as well, to make them somewhat more sensitive.

Don't try to talk, dear.

The other little 'arms' are doing work on the flesh around your eyes, doing micro-surgical procedures in less time than it takes to tell you about it... Ah, see? We've made your eyes look larger, more noticeable. More 'doe-like', I think, especially considering that wonderful hazel-brown 'color film' being injected into your iris...

Oh, it's quite permanent, I assure you. What a lovely look - so wide-eyed and innocent...

..and that lovely little up-turned nose just goes so perfectly with it all.

Now that mask comes off, and it's on to the next stop in our production line. Here we do your throat and voice...

Oh, don't mind that. As should be obvious, it forces your mouth open to it's limit and holds your jaw and neck perfectly still while the micro-arms go inside you throat to perform their jobs...

Yes, I now it feel like somebody pouring fine sand down your throat. That's the feeling of your Adam's apple being reduced, as well as 'clipping' and 're-anchoring' of your vocal chords to provide a higher pitch and range. Unlike normal surgery, we're not limiting the overall sound produced by your voice-box, just altering pitch and tone...

This is going to take a few seconds longer then most people's procedure would. The higher you raise the voice, the longer it takes, you see...

There, all done. Go ahead, say something...

Well, I can't say I appreciate the sentiment - but you can hear the lovely new soprano voice we gave you.

Such a lovely voice...

...but I don't think it quite matches the body we've given you so far. Oh, well, not a problem - we'll just have to make a few more changes.

This is the second-to-last station on the 'physical' side of our transformation procedure. It actually combines technology used in two of the stations you've already been through, but on a larger scale

- it creates new flesh, you see.

In your case, I do indeed mean 'on a larger scale'. Even now, more of the artificial cell suspension in being pumped into your body at selected points - and, since the pressure injectors are busily working away, I'm sure you know that they're working on your legs, buttocks and chest.

The ones on your legs are basically adding a thin layer of 'padding', to soften and thus further feminize the contours of your legs - but, in the interest of aesthetics, it's not an even layer. Extra tissue is being built up to emphasize your calves.

Considerably more padding is being added to your posterior. We want to give you such a nice, firm, ,round derriere, so utterly delectable - and, with the added nerves being grown in that permanent tissue, it'll be somewhat more sensitive...

...but that's small potatoes considering what we're doing to your chest.

Yes, they are big - and getting bigger, my dear girl. Right now you're only a 'mere' DDD cup... Oh, come now - I thought men liked big tits.

Oh, and they will be so firm and sensitive... especially those big, thick nipples we're giving you. We could, of course, make your breasts look more natural, if we wished, but we thought the 'firm, fake' look would be so much more suitable for you - so big and round...

My, they really do stand out from your smaller ribcage, don't they? Like a couple of flesh-colored volley-balls...

...oops, I guess I should have said 'soccer-balls'.

No, that's not right, either, now is it? Amazing how quickly we can convert a perfectly flat chest into something so stupendous, isn't it...?

Back to whimpering, are we?

Ah, there we are, your final size. Absolutely massive, aren't they? Just for the record, your new bust-line is a staggering fifty-six inches, compared to the thirty-two inches of your ribcage, the eighteen inches of that deliciously slender waist of yours, and the thirty eight inches across your hips.

Your new bra size is 32-MMM - except, of course, they hardly sell that sort of thing 'off-the-rack'.

You might consider having an NN-cup bra made, though, for the comfort - especially for those big, thick nipples of yours are going to spend as much time erect as I think they are.

Of course, your new tits are so wonderfully, artificially round and firm, you barely need a brassiere at all.

Well, ,now - on to the last of the physical stations.

As I'm sure you're aware, hair itself is not alive, though the cells at the follicle end are. What we do here is use more 'artificial' cells bonded to individual hairs that are then implanted into the skin, where they 'take' - and the specific cells we use allow us to give you any hair color, which will continue to grow that color - and that style - from now on.

In your case, we're giving you a lovely head of golden-blond hair...

...yes, that's the hair there. My, it is quite 'big', isn't it? Yes, my dear, you'll have a massive, thick head of silky, wavy golden-blond hair that would do any B-grade movie star of the Eighties proud. Even 'Barbarella' didn't have such a luxurious head of hair...

There, that didn't hurt, did it...? Oh, stop it.

Now that the physical transformation has been completed, we'll move onto the mental side of it.

Most of the new skills you're going to need as a woman are already in our Cray supercomputer,

,where we've take every-day skills -0 and a few more exotic ones - that a woman would ever need, reduced them to the matching nerve-impulses that accompany each motion, and fed them into a device that can 'imprint' them on your own mind. It can even erase unneeded or conflicting neural patterns to allow just one set of 'thought patterns' to be laid on the brain.

Oh, yes, I'm quite aware of the illegal and unethical possibilities of such a device, which is why it will only be used on very special clients - like you. Most of our other clients will be 'taught' using the Advanced Neural Eraser and Imprinter's 'poor cousin', a device that does the same thing, but more slowly and mechanically, with no possibility of erasure.

A perfect example is right over there - those funny looking 'shoes' and the tread mill? Those shoes have telescoping heels that slowly rise as the patient walk on the treadmill, and the 'enhancer' makes the neural imprinting of the action so much stronger then would naturally happen that taking six steps at each slow increase in height has the same effect as if the patient had spent sixty hours walking in that height of heel...

...but that would take much too long for you. Your skill in heels will be imprinted with the ANEI, just as such skills as make-up and couture - complete with your new 'taste' in each.

We don't want to let you go without demonstrating at least one of the more mechanical skill- implantation devices, ,however, which is why we're...

Well, yes, technically, those are dildoes - but the most advanced dildoes in the world. Not only do they feel exactly like real male penises, and not only are they body temperature, but they 'ejaculate' a simulated semen with the same texture, flavor and consistency of the real McCoy.

Why, yes, dear. We are, indeed, going to make you 'fuck' those - and more...

Those electrodes just attracted at the top of your spine and at each temple are linked to that Cray computer I mentioned. What it's going to do is send electrical impulses into your spinal column, mimicking those sent by the brain - in other words, for the next little while the computer will 'hijack' your body, playing you like a marionette. As it runs through all the sexual skills we want you to learn, the neural enhancer will imprint those lessons on your brain with the same power as I mentioned regarding the high-heel machine.

You're going to be a sexual expert by the time this finishes...

Ah - no response. That, of course, is because our computer now has complete control of your body.

Well, we're going to begin with something nice and basic: Straight-forward sex just barely one step up from the infamous 'dead ass' technique. This actually takes little skill, since you're basically just going to lie there and take it, with just some basic hip movement - but it's sort of the introductory level. I assure you that things will get a lot more complex as we go along...

Okay, that's perfect - on your back, legs spread with lifted knees, baring that tight little cunt we gave you - and, yes, you are a natural blonde now, aren't you?

Here comes Mr. Cock...

Was that a little gasp of pleasure at having a big, thick, warm cock slipping firmly into you tight, hot, wet new cunt?

Of course it was - the computer was programmed to make you do that - just as we've overridden the normal settings to full-force imprint it, so that - no matter what happens - you'll make little sounds of pleasure when a cock penetrates you.

Just as you'll do what you're doing now as the cock slides back and forth in that rhythmic pumping motion. Oh, ,I don't just mean the way you're moving your hips in a counter-rhythm, enhancing the length, power and timing of the thrust, though you will do that too, of course...

How's that feel, anyway? Having a cock thrust into you, over and over again, I mean? Oh, of course I know what it feels like for me, but then I've never had a chance to feel it any other way. How new and different this must all feel for you. Instead of plunging an external part of you, you're now the one being penetrated.. filled... pumped. I wonder if, like me, it seems to magnify the very existence of your womanhood, making you feel as if you are hollow, just an empty, yearning mass being filled by something much bigger than the reality of that cock...

Well, I digress - what I was talking about was all those phrases you're saying - a bit woodenly now, perhaps, but you'll be much more convincing next time you yell things like 'Oh, yes, I love your huge, thick cock', and 'oh, fuck me harder, fuck me like the slut I am...'

Of course, or regular patrons don't get this particular subset of programmed responses...

...unless they ask for it.

Enjoying your first fucking as a woman, dear...?

Oh, here you go, a real treat - your first female orgasm.

Yes, ,look at the way you're shaking and shuddering. That's not the computer - that's you. there's no way any computer signal could possibly override the sheer power of that orgasm ripping through your body right now, especially with the increased sensitivity of your new vagina.

Of course, you've also lost the ability to be coherent, as well. I wonder what words you might be wanting to use right now, instead of those incredible, nearly mindless screams of pure, overwhelming physical pleasure. Would you still be trying to curse me...?

...or does this mind-blowing orgasm actually feel good enough that you'd be thanking me over and over again?

Oh, well - I guess we'll never know...

The computer has once again established control, and here we are moving on to the next phase of your sexual training - the basic blow-job.

First, of course, you 'assume the position', kneeling as if in front of the hypothetical man that would be attached to that cock.

Of course, all this frantic begging you're doing to please, please be allowed to suck down a load of wonderful cum is, once again, non-standard. In your case, ,however, it just seemed the thing to do - that wonderful, high-pitched new voice of yours is just so perfect to use in begging for sex.

How's it feel to wrap your hand around a cock, dear? To 'eagerly' grab a man's hard cock, telling 'him' how wonderful it feels to touch his huge dick? Smiling up at 'him', telling him how much you love sucking cock, and how you're going to give him a blow-job he'll never forget? Pressing your firm, pouty lips against the head of his cock and slowly pressing forward, enveloping the head and part of the shaft in your warm, wet mouth...?

I, ,personally, don't enjoy giving a man head as much as you're being programmed to display - but, since men like getting blow-jobs so much, I figure it only fair they should show as much eagerness to give one...

You see how well we've coordinated the action of lips and tongue, head and hands? Even though this is just the basic blow-job program? Trust me, ,dear, we've done our research. A few prostitutes and a few pornographic starlets, a few 'regular' women, and - perhaps our most valuable resource - gay men. All to develop the 'perfect' oral technique, of which you're a recipient.

You should feel proud, dear. By the time we're done, you're going to be as expert a cocksucker as you are going to be an eager one.

Okay, and now...

...that's it, dear - gulp it all down, every drop. Make a little moaning sound in the back of your throat, as if gulping down a load of hot cum is causing you exquisite pleasure. That's right, babble profuse thanks for being allowed to suck 'his' cock between licks to clean the cock of every drop of cum...

Beautiful, darling - just beautiful.

Well, you have a lot more sexual training to go through.

All of it, ,in fact - we're putting you through all the paces, and... excuse me...

Mark? Mark, can you 'cycle' the program back again...? I want to hear her say that again... Perfect... Mark? One more time...?

Sorry about that, dear - it's just hearing you say 'Oh, yes, shove that cock up my tight little ass' in that new voice of yours really does something for me.

Anyway, as I was saying: We're giving you the complete list of sexual programs, and that will take awhile.

By-the-by - Personally, I think the last simulation in the sequence is completely gratuitous. I mean, really, how many times are you going to be able to find all the equipment - and patience - necessary to put you in the only position where it's possible for you to be tit-fucked, ass-fucked and cunt-fucked, all while simultaneously giving a blow-job and two hand-jobs?

Then again - in your case, it might be a commonly-used skill. You might even have the contraption permanently assembled in wherever you end up living...

As it may be, I'm not going to stand here and wait for your training. Right after you finish having the entire series - including all the orgasms that entails, may I point out? - you'll be taken to ANEI training, where the rest of your new skills will be implanted.

Oh, and your new personality, too. Can't forget that minor detail, can we now? So, I guess this is good-bye. Oh, when you come out of ANEI, I'll be there...

...but you won't.

* * * * *

Okay, Kimmy, let's get you out of these restraints...

Oh - they were necessary during your Advanced Neural Erasure and Imprinting procedure.

Advanced Neur... Never mind, dear, it's complicated - and you don't remember any of it, anyway, right?

Here, let me help you up....

What?

Why, yes, your 'big, huge boobies' are beautiful. Yes, Kimmy - I'm sure all the boys will think so, too. I've got some clothes for you here...

You know, I thought you'd think this pair of black leather pants with mesh inserts up the inside and outside of each leg would be 'so hot'.

Well, of course I didn't bother bringing any panties. You might need them when wearing skirts, just to absorb all that cunt-juice...

No, dear, it's quite all right. A janitor will clean it up.

No, I understand completely dear. Just thinking of how hot men are going to find your ass in these pants would turn any girl like yourself on.

I also got you this...

No, dear, you have to wear it. Policemen don't like you walking around without any top on...

Yes, I know how much you love letting men stare at your huge boobies, because it makes them so eager to let you fuck them and suck them. That's the very reason why the police want you to wear a top when you're in public. It wouldn't do for you to have orgies in the middle of the street...

It just wouldn't, dear. Take my word on it.

Besides, as you can see, this barely even covers your nipples, and it ties here.. here.. and here, for easy removal.

Yes, just like that...

What?

Okay, here, just let me... Please, dear, hold still... Okay, there.

Just have some man help you tie it back on next time you take it off.

No, dear, I don't think any less of you because you're too dumb to even tie a bow. Yes, dear, that's right - you're just a dumb little fuck-bunny.

Don't worry - no laces on your shoes. They're classic pumps with a six-inch heel, you just step into them...

...why, yes, I think you're right. I think some people do call these 'fuck-me pumps'... I thought you'd like that.

Okay, and here's your purse, dear. All your make-up is inside, and you can do your face in the cab that'll take you back to the city - it's waiting just outside. I don't mean to rush you - I just know how eager you are to get back to work.

Just make sure you remember to make the men pay you, okay? Yes - I know you don't know how to count.

Don't worry about it, Kimmy.

I'm sure you'll make out all right, no matter what. Sheer volume of business would guarantee that, I would think...

No, no - you don't have to 'eat me out' to show me how much you appreciate me giving you such a wonderful new body.

It was my pleasure.

BACK TO FUN ZONE

SUMMARY: A successful male attorney goes to sleep one night and wakes up to find that he has been transformed into a hooker, but the "how" and "why" baffle him until his new memories slowly start to trickle in.

Mysterious Awakening

By Gunslinger

The lights of New York City lay below, sparkling like tiny stars brought to Earth. The concrete canyons were filled with the fire-fly movements of cars, headlights and tail-lights shining in a never- ending ballet of motion.

Richard looked out over the panoramic view from his eighteenth floor apartment with satisfaction. Born and bred in New York, he loved the city, it's bustling crowds, it's own unique flavor and style. He was by no means blind to it's faults, but over all, he enjoyed living in the heart of the city, and wouldn't leave New York to live anywhere else.

Which is why he was alone in his large, well-decorated apartment, looking over the teeming city with a faint sense of regret and loneliness.

The tall, slender man let his eyes focus on the faint mirror image of himself that was projected against the darkened glass. Neither particularly handsome or ugly, he possessed a sort of rugged masculinity that some women found appealing. One such woman was his wife, Linda, who he'd met during one of his few forays to other parts of the country that were occasionally required by his job as an attorney. They'd fallen in love, and married quickly, falling into an easy life together.

But Linda was a successful and prosperous Ad exec. Although she'd had no problem finding work with one of the large New York firms, her work still required her to see clients all over the country, and she spent quite a bit of time traveling. So, Richard was left to stare out over the city, thinking longingly of his beautiful, talented wife who was sitting alone in some distant city, thinking of him.

Running his fingers through his mop of curly black hair, Richard turned away from the window and walked over to his bed. Slipping out of his bathrobe, he settled into the large bed, looking forward to Linda's return, when the other side of the bed wouldn't be so cold an empty.

He was soon so deeply sleeping, that he didn't even hear the faint scratching sound at the front door of the apartment, nor the gentle 'click' of the lock being released...

* * * * *

Richard snorted sleepily and stirred, climbing from the unusually deep sleep he'd fallen into. His eyes blearily blinked open....

...and he sat bolt upright at the sight of a cheap, acoustic paneling ceiling completely unlike the stucco ceiling of his bedroom...

...and the sudden movement drove home the awareness of a heavy weight on his chest that shifted as he moved, causing him to look down...

...and the scream that tried to claw it's way out of his throat never made it. Like most people, Richard exhaled when sitting up, and there was simply no air in his lungs to support the full-fledged scream that instinctively tried to claw it's way from his throat at the sight of the absolutely enormous tits thrust proudly from a chest that was completely unlike his own.

He stared down at the slender ribcage sporting to immense breasts with shock, horror and disbelief. It took the growing pain in his lungs to remind him to take a breath as he gaped at the enormous endowments hanging from his chest.

His chest? No - her chest. Because, when he hesitantly lifted a hand to touch them and see if they were real, he found him staring at a slender, dainty, feminine hand with long nails with a bright, glossy red nail-polish coating.

"What the Hell...?" She said - then stopped, her hands flying to her throat, at the sound of the breathy soprano that the words emerged in. Horrified, she tore the cheap, stained comforter off of her body and stared down at the shapely, if somewhat muscular, feminine legs that were revealed.

"Holy Shit!" Richard gasped as the truth hit home. "I I must be dreaming." She tried to reject the truth of her situation. After all, it was completely impossible for a man to wake up one morning as a huge-breasted woman...

...wasn't it?

It had to be a dream, she decided. All she had to do was reach up and touch the massive tits - and she'd wake up. Fitting action to thought, she brought her smaller hands up to the massive round tits hanging heavily from her chest...

...and shuddered as she felt, not only the huge tits in her dainty hands, but the pleasurable sensation of her hands through the nerve endings in her massive new endowments.

"Dear God..." Richard whispered, horrified. "It's not a dream "

Stunned, she finally got around to looking at his surrounding, and immediately deduced that she was in a small, extremely cheap hotel room, with worn, mismatched furnishings and sickly yellow drapes over the window beside the door exiting the unit. The only other doorway opened onto what Richard assumed to be the bathroom.

Swinging the smooth, feminine legs over the side of the bed, she stood up - and was surprised to find that she did so easily. Her new body was completely different in weight and balance than her old one

- if nothing else, it was a lot more top-heavy - and she'd expected to find standing awkward, as if somebody had strapped heavy feather pillows to her chest. Yet, despite all that, she not only moved easily and confidently - but with a very feminine grace, as if she'd been in this body her whole life, and had that lifetime's worth of experience of moving in it.

Confused, she padded bare-foot to the bathroom, inexplicably moving with sexy feminine stride that she couldn't help using. The sensation of her huge tits swaying with every step was annoyingly pleasant, as was the cool air moving over the small, pink nipples that crowned her new tits. The cool air quickly caused them to become fully erect, another completely new experience for Richard. She also noted that everything looked subtly off - because she was seeing everything from a lower perspective than she was used to. She realized that she must be shorter than before.

Reaching the bathroom, she snapped on the light and looked at herself in the mirror.

The person staring back with a horrified expression bore absolutely no resemblance to Richard Widmark, Attorney-at-Law.

She was on the short side, even for a woman - a big difference from his old, taller-than-average height.

Her face would never be called 'beautiful', or necessarily even 'pretty' - it was a little too square, the features a little too prominent. But there was no problem labeling it sexy. Her lips were full and soft, and her eyes - a little too wide spaced - were large, bright blue, and framed by long, dark lashes. Her face was framed by a massive mane of 'bottle-blond' dirty-blond hair with black roots that hung in curly waves down her back and over her slender shoulders.

Oddly enough, the face seemed somewhat familiar to Richard - although Richard was positive that he'd remember meeting somebody with a figure like this one.

Her figure was considerably more top-heavy than she'd appreciated in the bed, as the huge tits had blocked her view of some of her body. That area was now revealed, showing her the unusually narrow hips that supported the firm, shapely female ass, above which rose to a waist that was amazingly slender. In fact, over all she was an extremely slender woman, with narrow shoulders, small hands and feet, a long, slender neck, and that amazingly pinched-in waist.

A body that slender wouldn't usually support such enormous tits. As a matter of fact, a six-foot eight, two-hundred and forty pound woman wouldn't usually support such immense boobs. Her full lips set in a small frown, Richard eyed her immense tits in the mirror - and a light dawned at the sight of two small scars, one under each nipple.

Not only was the body she was in the wrong gender, the wrong genetic background (vaguely Scandinavian looking, as opposed to the Italian genes that Richard's original body had possessed), but she was also quite a bit younger. As a man, Richard had been in his mid-thirties - now, her body appeared to be in her early twenties.

Finally, Richard let her eyes drift to the one part of her body she didn't want to look at. Although she knew what she was going to find, she'd put it off, hoping against hope. Now, her eyes slid down to where her shapely legs met...

...and she flinched at the sight of the soft folds of her vagina, unconcealed by any pubic hair.

The room seemed to spin as the edges of her vision began to dim. Richard had to brace her new body against the sink until the dizziness passed, aware that she'd come very close to passing out. Straightening up, she left the bathroom with an unsteady step - but the sexy sway all the same, damn it!

Looking around, she noticed that there was very little in terms of 'her' personal effects - a purse and some jewelry on the cheap dresser, and a single outfit of closed on the door-less closet. Walking over to the dresser, she picked up the purse. Sitting on the bed, cross-legged, she dumped the contents of the black vinyl purse onto the bed in front of her.

A compact, some make-up, a tube of lipstick... Some tissues, some gum, a pen and a small pad of note paper with the letterhead of 'The Body Shoppe, Los Angeles, Calif.'... thirty-eight dollars in bills, and some loose change...

...and I.D. Picking up the Age of Majority card, she stared at the grainy photo of her 'own' face staring at the camera, the hairstyle shorter, but definitely her.

The name on the I.D. was 'Wendy Cummins', and gave her age as twenty-one. The place of birth was listed as Los Angeles.

Richard stared at the I.D. for a long moment. Somehow, seeing the Government-issued document made it real. Somehow, impossible, he was now a huge-breasted twenty-one year old blonde woman named Wendy.

Richard shook her head - and was annoyed by the feel of her long, thick hair brushing over her shoulders. However this had happened, it meant that, somehow, there must be a way to undo it. She would just have to find it - and she couldn't do that sitting naked on a bed in a cheap hotel room in....

For the first time, she realized that she had no idea where she was. When she'd awoken, she'd assumed, subconsciously, that she had still been in New York. But, Wendy was from L.A....

Climbing off the bed, she walked over to the sole outfit of clothing - and frowned with distaste. A quick search of the dresser revealed she had no choice in the matter. It was wear this, or stay naked.

Grimacing, she began to dress.

First, the lacy black panties. Stepping into them, she slid them up her smooth legs and settled them around her narrow hips, feeling their soft, lacy fabric tightly encase her now-smooth crotch and full, firm ass. She was mildly disgusted - and intrigued - to discover that the soft, lacy fabric was much more comfortable than her regular men's cotton briefs.

Next came the absolutely massive black bra. Despite the lace trimming and decorative stitching, there was no hiding the heavy-duty nature of the massive foundation garment. Out of interest, she looked at the label, finding that it was a custom-made bra - and its size was 32MMM.

It took Richard a couple of tries to get the bra on her massive tits. Having seen Linda dress, she tried that method, pulling it on her huge endowments, and tried to do up the clasps at the back - and found it almost impossible. She could open it that way, but there was too much pressure from her huge tits, and not enough leverage in that position, to get it done up.

After a few more false starts, she finally figured it out. She hung it around her amazingly slender waist and did up the clasps with it backwards, then rotated it. Pulling it up, she awkwardly maneuvered on arm at a time into the shoulder straps, then tucked her massive, sensitive mounds into the cups, feeling both vaguely embarrassed and vaguely aroused - and disgusted at finding the feel of her hands on her own huge tits so pleasant.

The next thing to go on was the black garter belt - which, in turn, supported the black nylons with the seams running up their back. Richard had seen Linda put on pantyhose enough times to know that she had to sit on the bed, ball up the nylons, and slide it up her silky smooth legs, smoothing the tight, sheer fabric along her legs as she went. What she didn't expect was how good the nylons felt once they were on, making every movement strangely erotic - she had nothing to compare to the experience of air moving of nylon-clad legs.

Next came the dress. Black 'hologram' spandex, it was high-cut at the hem and neck, practically a turtle-neck, although it was tight around her slender, swan-like neck, rather than baggy. The stretch material fit her body like a glove, its shimmery surface highlighting her outrageous figure, the long sleeves fitting like a second skin to her slender arms, and the fabric was even able to make the transition from her massive, bra-encased tits to her amazingly slender waist. It clung to her narrow hips and sexy ass.

A gold-tone belt went around her amazingly narrow waist, then she looked down with a frown at the last thing she'd have to wear - and the last thing she ever wanted to put on.

The shoes were black leather pumps with six-inch high spiked heels, the bottom half of which were gold-toned metal. With a sigh, Richard slid the high-heeled shoes onto her diminutive new feet, and wasn't sure whether or not to be surprised by the fact that she stood and moved easily in the extremely high heels. She did now she hated the way it exaggerated her already sexy stride into a blatant 'come-hither' walk. Yet, no matter what she tried, she couldn't alter her sensual movements on iota.

Picking up the purse, she dumped everything into it - including the jewelry. She had no intention of wearing the earrings or bracelet - although she did slip the slender gold-tone watch onto one slender wrist.

Taking a deep breath, she walked across the room to the door, opened it, and for the first time entered public as an outrageously large-breasted, sexy, erotically-clad blonde woman...

...and stopped, looking out over the deserted parking lot and the sere landscape surrounding it. The two-lane black-top that stretched from the horizon and past the parking lot traveled another five miles or so across the arid landscape before entering the garish city against the mid-morning horizon. That single glance immediately placed Richard - because there was no doubt that the city was any other than Las Vegas.

Looking around at the lifeless terrain, she sighed and began walking, cursing whatever had done this to her. Not only was she now a ridiculously proportioned young woman - but she was walking in the desert dressed in an all-black outfit.

However, that turned out to be a situation that didn't last very long.

She heard the car long before she saw it - the open, desolate land allowed wonderful long-distance acoustics. Which was about the only thing to recommend the arid, undifferentiated landscape.

The bass roar of the big-block engine rolled forward over her when the only other sign of the approaching vehicle was a plume of dust. Then the dust-cloud developed a twinkle at it's head, which resolved itself into the vehicle as it came cruising up the two-lane blacktop and pulled to a halt in front of her.

It was a big, mid-sixties GMC pick-up, painted dark blue. A real piece of Detroit Rolling Iron, with a throaty, big-block engine under the hood and a front bumper capable of taking on a Sherman tank - and winning.

The man who leaned over to the passenger's side window fit the vehicle perfectly. Under the worn Stetson he wore, his face was lean and weathered, prematurely aged by the wrinkled, leather-like surface created by a life-time of the ceaseless desert sun. More than a hint of American Indian descent showed in his dark, tanned skin, high cheeks, and long, dark hair shading towards silver.

"Howdy, miss." The man said - drawled, actually. Somehow, he made 'miss' into a two-syllable word. "Need a lift?"

Although she was wary of climbing into a vehicle with another man - at least, wearing this top-heavy female body - Richard's dainty feet were killing her. Six inch stilettos aren't exactly hiking boots, after all. So she barely hesitated.

"That would be great, thanks." She said with honest relief, still wincing at the soprano voice that she answered in. She pulled open the door - an effort in her new body - and climbed up onto the worn seat.

"Sorry about the heat." The man said, dropping the big pick-up in gear and accelerating. "All I got is two-sixty A/C."

"Two sixty?" Richard asked.

"Two windows down, at sixty mph." The man chortled. He actually pronounced it that way - 'emm- pee-aitch.' He took one hand from the steering wheel and held it out. "Name's Don Fleetfoot."

Richard took the proffered hand - and paused. It took a second for the name on the I.D. to come to mind, and there was a noticeable lag before she replied "Wendy Cummins."

Don gave her a side-long look at the pause, but didn't comment on it. "So, what's a young woman like you doing hitching through the desert?"

Richard shrugged - which did truly interesting things to her massive endowments. "I bussed in, and am bussing back out, but the hotels in Vegas are too expensive, so I stayed at the one you passed before picking me up."

Don nodded. "Yup - them Vegas hotels, they'll charge you an arm and a leg - and leave the rest of you for the casino."

Richard agreed, not really knowing one way or another. She'd never been to Vegas, and had just used it as a reasonable-sounding excuse. Personally, she was trying to figure out what the real 'Wendy' had been up to. Did she have a job in Vegas? Friends? Anything?

It didn't really matter to Richard - he had no intention of living life as 'Wendy'. What he was going to do was get back to New York, and find help. But that was going to cost more money than 'Wendy' had, and it would have been nice to know if she'd had any way to get more. It would also have been nice to know where - and how - she could get some clothes other than this outfit. And, it would be nice to get Don to fuck her. Plus, she'd have to find a way to get to New York...

Suddenly, her mind screeched to a halt and she went dead pale as she realized what she'd just thought. Unbidden, the image of Don's hands - strong, dark and tender - caressing her huge, firm tits...

She quashed that thought too - but was afraid, disgusted - and aroused. Richard wasn't gay, had never ever had the slightest interest in another man - so where were these thoughts coming from. And why was she getting turned on by them?

"So, Miss Wendy, where can I let you off?" Don asked, breaking into her thoughts. Quickly, Richard composed her mind.

"Oh, anywhere along the main strip would be fine." She answered in her feminine new voice. "I'll just walk up to where I'm going."

Don looked over at her, and again the unbidden images flashed through her mind. Then, Don shrugged and pulled the big pick-up over to the side of the road. "Sure, Miss Wendy."

Richard started to reach for the door handle - and was stopped by Don's gentle hand on her slender shoulder, causing a disturbing shiver of lust to run down her spine. She turned to face him.

"Here - take this." He said, writing something on a tattered envelope. He folded the envelope over and pressed it into her hand. Before she could see what it was, he'd reached across her - causing more unwanted, lustful thoughts - and popped the door open for her.

She stepped out of the vehicle, hating the sound of her high heels hitting the concrete sidewalk, then had to use most of her strength to close the heavy door. Her mind was still whirling, trying to deal with these new thoughts, and before she could thank Don for his kindness, he'd already pulled back onto the street, the powerful big-block growling as he headed away.

Confused, scared and unsure, Richard walked over to the shelter of a building's overhang, out of the sun, and looked at the envelope that Don had pressed into her hand.

The Envelope had originally contained a bill or something similar, and had Don's Los Vegas address typed on the front. Written beside it in pencil was the added notation. 'Miss Wendy - If you need help, you can reach me here. I hope everything works out - Don.'

Inside the envelope were ten crumpled twenties, two tens and a five.

Slightly stunned, Richard looked in the direction that the truck had vanished, then thoughtfully tucked the envelope into her purse, and started walking.

Half a block away, she spotted a newspaper machine. Leaning down, Richard read the top-half front- page that was displayed...

...and had to grasp the edges of the machine to keep herself upright as her vision narrowed and her mind whirled in confusion and fear.

The date on the top of the page was almost a year later than the date that her mind insisted it should be. Somehow, between going asleep as a man in New York and awakening as a woman in Los Vegas, eleven months had passed.

Stunned, Richard slowly straightened and mindlessly let her feet carry her onward while her mind spun in circles, trying to grasp the reality of having lost a year of his - her - life.

And there wasn't anything she could do about it.

The hot desert sun pounded down on her, the black clothing absorbing the heat and amplifying it. Already she felt like she was broiling, and it was still early in the day. After twenty minutes she was beginning to fill limp, like she was melting.

A woman stepped out of the store Richard was passing, and a burst of cold air followed her through the door before it swung shut. Without even looking at the storefront, Richard pulled the door open and stepped into the air-conditioned interior, willing to pretend to 'browse' while cooling down.

Looking around, she found herself in a women's shoe store. Sighing, she began to fake interest in the various footwear while enjoying the mechanically cooled air on her soft skin.

Then her eyes fell on a pair of thigh-high black leather boots with an impossible nine-inch spiked heel and an outrageously arched sole to meet the heel.

And suddenly, her mind threw her somewhere else...

He was strapped to the table. Pain was his constant companion, especially in his waist, hips and legs.

Slowly he lowered his gaze to his legs. They were encased in a pair of bright red patent leather boots with a seven inch heel, as they had been for the past month, ever since the alterations on them.

"Aren't they lovely, my dear Wendy?" a female voice asked from beyond Richard's sight.

"No." Richard said bitterly, his voice sounding wrong to him - too high, too feminine. "And my name isn't Wendy, damn you!"

"Oh, naughty girl." The voice cooed. "We'll change that, though. By the time we're done, you'll love wearing such sexy boots..."

Then a terrible pain lanced through his body, as a images of exotic, sensual footwear flashed through his mind and a voice cooed something into his ear....

Shuddering, Wendy shook her head No! Richard! She was Richard! Richard shook her head and looked around.

She was blocks away from the shoe-store, having covered the distance while in the daze (memory) without realizing it.

And she was balancing atop the abnormally high heels of the black leather boots that encased her legs. In her hand she held a bag from the store, which contained her other pair of shoes, and a receipt from the store. A quick check of her purse verified that her funds were depleted to half of what she'd had, the money spent on these (sexy, perfect) boots that she didn't even want (to ever take off), with their ridiculously (erotic) high heels.

Richard (Wendy) squeezed her eyes shut and tried to regain control of her thoughts, which seemed to slipping away from her, ideas and thoughts she didn't want to think intruding.

Truly frightened by what was happening to her, she staggered a short distance down an alleyway and sat on an upturned crate, trying to think. To disguise what she was doing, she took a compact from her purse and opened it, as if she was touching up her face. She was startled to find that her face, reflected back in the small mirror, was fully made up, with mascara, eye shadow, and a gloss red lipstick. Sometime, during her daze, she must have applied it.

Pushing the revelation aside, she blankly stared at the mirror while her thoughts turned inwards.

The episode in the store had been a memory. Even though it was a fragment, with nothing surrounding it, and no other memories to support it, Richard believed that it was, indeed a memory. Something had happened during that missing year.

The reason that the face in the mirror had looked familiar was simple - it was hers. Somehow, impossible, it - and her entire body - had been changed, reshaped, made younger, female, and different, but it was still her original body, severely altered.

Her mind, also had been changed - and it was more than just the lost year. New thought, ideas and - urges had been implanted in her.

Somebody had done this to her. She didn't know who, or why, but she was going to...

"Whoa - now that's a nice pair of hooters!"

She looked up, startled. She'd been so involved in thought that she hadn't notice the young man, about eighteen, coming down the alley. The youth - with long, dark hair and matching goatee - was openly ogling the amazing cleavage that her dress displayed, especially with the height difference from his standing position to her seated one.

Stung, Richard opened her full lips to retort...

"You should be proud of such big, sexy tits, Wendy" Mistress' voice said in his ear as the drug coursed through his veins, short-circuiting his will. "Such great tits will allow you to get what you want

- like sex "

"I'm glad you like them, handsome." Richard helplessly found herself saying, to her horror. She dropped her compact into her purse and slung it over her shoulder - unwillingly caressing a huge, firm tit as she did so - and rose to her impossibly high heels, preparing to escape.

"So - thirty for a blow-job?" The young man asked.

He was on his knees, his tender new tits hanging heavily from his chest. Mistress was behind him, instructing him on technique as his collagen-inflated lips encircled the cool plastic dildo that was strapped to the mannequin, protruding from the open zipper with her long nails, then gently pulled his boxers down, letting his throbbing hard cock spring free from it's fabric prison. Richard was horrified that he was on his knees before this young man, her gloss red lips closing around his warm, thick cock as her hands worked at the smooth shaft of the dildo, Mistress making comments and corrections as she worked on the phallus, learning the art of cock-sucking. She could almost hear the sound of the 'man' as he moaned in pleasure at her incredibly skillful technique. Her mouth, tongue and hands worked in unison teasing the young man. She brought him close to the brink, then slowed, then back near the brink again, knowing that he would " be coming soon, if that was a real cock. Now, some woman don't like to swallow - but you, Wendy, you love to swallow the delicious warm cum from a man when he " shot his load into her waiting mouth, and she gulped hungrily at the delicious, salty warm liquid, taking the entire load with delight. Licking his cock clean, she gently arranged his clothes for him, then rose to her feet, licking her full, red lips.

"Wow..." The youth said, breathlessly. "That was amazing." He handed her a fifty dollar bill. "Keep the change - it was worth it."

"Thanks." Wendy said huskily, folding the money into her cleavage. "Maybe I'll see you around some time."

"I hope so." The youth agreed as he headed off. Wendy waited until he'd turned the corner at the end of the alley, then dropped the money into her purse and began swaying sexily down the alley.

Then suddenly bent over and threw up, barely missing her boots, as she realized what she'd just done.

"I I just sucked a cock." Richard whispered, horrified. She spat, then pulled out a pack of gum and popped three pieces in her mouth to help get rid of the taste - not only of the vomit, but the disgusting/wonderful taste of the man's cum.

Frightened, confused, and lost, Richard hurried down the alley as fast as possible on her sky-scraper heels, ass swaying seductively, huge, firm tits jiggling invitingly, and her 'bottle-blond' hair billowing out behind her.

Needing to go somewhere, do something - although not sure exactly what - Richard ducked into a casino, joining the swirling ebb and flow of humanity that filled the large, sprawling building. The noise, a mix of slot-machines, dice, cards and people, seemed to fill her with energy and purpose, as if she belonged here, surrounded by strangers and the hollow, flashy glitter of Vegas. Helplessly, she found herself eyeing the men she passed, rating them. No matter how hard she tried, she couldn't stop herself from doing so, her eyes invariable sliding at some point to their crotches.

Then, like a message from God, the PA crackled, and a barely heard voice echoed out 'Would the owner of the Purple Dodge Econovan with the New York plates DCF5483 please move your vehicle?'

New York - the words echoed in Richard's head. Hurriedly - well, as fast as she could on the extreme heels, - she rushed to the front doors and watched to see who owned the van. When the slender young man moved the vehicle and re-entered the casino, she followed him.

He joined two other young men who - judging from the New York Yankee's caps they wore - were from New York. They were playing craps.

"Hi..." Richard said in the sultriest voice she could manage - and hating having to do so. "I couldn't help noticing that you seem to be New Yorkers" She pronounced it 'N'yooo-k'rs"

"Hey - yeah!" The one with the glasses said with a smile, eyeing her firm, extremely full tits.

All three were thin, but two were tall, and one short, and one of the tall ones wore thick 'Coke-bottle' glasses. It was the tall, slender, bespectacled one who spoke, but all three were obviously enjoying the sight of the huge-breasted blonde.

"I'm trying to get to New York. I don't suppose you guys could help a poor girl down on her luck?" She asked, ashamed at willingly making the question sound so suggestive. But, if it got her to New York...

For an instant, a line from an old movie zipped through her head - I have always relied on the kindness of strangers, spoken in a soft southern drawl - and then was gone again.

The three young men shared a look. Again, it was the bespectacled one who spoke. "Sure, miss. We're leaving tomorrow morning, if that's okay."

"Of course." Richard agreed, introducing herself as Wendy.

The tall one with the glasses turned out to be Carl. The other tall one was Robby, and the shorter one was Mike.

Girding herself for the task, Richard settled onto Carl's lap. "Why don't I just hang around with you guys for a while. Sort of a good luck charm."

And, of course, they agreed. Every so often she would switch to another of their laps - giving each of them a chance to not-so-surreptitiously fondle her massive tits for a bit while her firm ass rested against the swelling bulge in their pants.

And she was absolutely disgusted to discover just how good having her massive, round tits fondled could feel.

After several hours at the different tables, the guys were done for the day. It wasn't much of a job to get the three youths - who were flushed, not only with having a huge-breasted babe pay attention to them, but the fact that they'd collectively won several thousand dollars - to invite her out for a fairly expensive dinner - and then back to their room for the night.

As Richard jiggled and swayed towards their room, the closer they got the tighter her stomach contracted, feeling like a ball of lead. She wasn't sure she could trust herself - not with the weird thoughts and urges she'd been having - but she also was short on cash, and needed a place to stay. And the guys were willing - more than willing - to let her spend the night 'so they could get an early start'. She was sure that wasn't the only reason.

When Mike unlocked the door to their suite, she almost turned and bolted. Steeling herself, she walked into the large room, forcing a her face to stay neutral, not revealing her fears.

Shutting the door, Mike turned to her and said "Well, hear we are. The biggest suite in the Dunes. We have the tree guest-rooms, which we're using, and the master bedroom, which has a huge bed. You can use that. Okay?"

Richard forced a smile. "A huge bed. Sounds like a bed is meant to be used, Wendy." Mistress said with a grin. "And the bigger the bed - why, the more guys can fit in it. Just remember, honey, that a man needs to rest between sex - but a woman can just keep going and going. So, if you get two - or three, or four - horny guys, and have a big enough bed, why, find a way to get them naked, and into that bed so that they can fondle her enormous tits, his hand eagerly gliding across her naked face.

She smiled dreamily at Mike's enjoyment of her massive firm tits - and enjoying the wondrous sensations it provided. And speaking of wondrous sensation, Carl seemed eager to kiss her. And it felt so good to kiss him back, passionately. Wendy couldn't exactly recall how they'd all ended up in bed, naked, but the guys were enjoying themselves - and so was she. Everything was wonderful.

Then her smooth brow furrowed momentarily. She was moving her hips in a slow circle to increase the pleasure, and was enjoying the intense pleasure, but for a second she found herself thinking something was wrong with the fact that Robby had his smooth thighs, eagerly - and skillfully - using his tongue to eat her out, but that's just an 'aperitif', Wendy. It's not the main dish. If a guy's enjoying it - well, enjoy it for awhile, then find somewhere else for that hard-on of his, like your mouth as she licked at it's throbbing shaft. Her long-nailed fingers came up, one hand around the rest of his throbbing cock, the other one around his balls. It was so nice of Robby to prop her head up with the pillows, so he could sit on her chest while she gave him the cock-sucking of a lifetime. God, did she ever want to drink some cum! Her throat felt parched.

But it was hard to concentrate on the cock-sucking she was giving Robby, because just behind where he sat, the other two guys had each claimed a tits, and were industrially sucking, licking and fondling her huge mounds as her hands, lips and tongue worked their friends shaft. But she didn't let the pleasure in her tits distract her from the important task of bringing Robby off, and it succeed. Soon his hot cum was filling her mouth, and she swallowed eagerly, loving the taste of his man-seed.

But if everything felt so good, then why did she feel weird having three guys are a lot of fun, Wendy. Let me tell you how you do it. First, fondle their cocks a bit, to get them all ready. Then, you get into this sort of crouch-like position, and if you do it just right, then you can have Carl laying at the very bottom of the bed, his hard cock standing straight up. Wendy gasped slightly as she settled down onto the cock, and wanted to fuck it, but restrained herself, to let the other two position themselves.

Her ass was sticking out, and Robby came up behind her, eagerly smearing his hard cock with the Vaseline as he positioned it just behind her ass. Then with a slow, even stroke. He slid the hard cock into her ass, a silly grin on his face.

Meanwhile, Wendy was facing Mike, who was getting into position as well - kneeling beside Carl, where Wendy could suck his cock. With everything ready, Wendy began.

She eagerly used her long, smooth legs to dive her hips up and down, shuddering in twin pleasure as the movement caused her to ride up and down on two cocks. Once she had the rhythm she wanted, she began to give Mike a blow-job, deep-throating him and face-fucking his ready cock.

The cock in her throat stifled the moans of ecstasy that tried to rise from her as she rode the two cock, one in her cunt and one in her ass. The sheer enjoyment of the triple-fuck was quickly bringing her to orgasm - then it his, like a train slamming into her.

At the same instant, she pushed the tree guys over the edge, and all three cocks spewed their loads. The wonderful feeling of being wet-and-filled in her ass. The orgasm in her cunt. And the wonderful taste of the cum shooting down her throat.

She was disappointed when the guys admitted that they were done for the night. She had no problem extracting promises of repeat performances from them, though.

Lying on the bed, Wendy masturbated twice, quickly, then fell asleep fondling her huge, perfect tits.

"Wendy, you've done very well" Mistress said from behind him - her. "I'm sure you're ready to try your skills on the real world now. It's time for you to start your new life."

And Mistress walked around in front of her.

In her sleep, Wendy jerked, a low moan emerging from her throat.

"You're ready to live life as Wendy." Mistress Linda said with an evil smile. "For eight years now I've faked being a loving wife so that you would get to this point. Now, the day has finally come - the payment for all those years of having to pretend to love you, to let you slimy, male hands touch my body. Now, finally, is pay-back. Goodnight, Wendy - and when you awake, you'll be the woman all men want - a big-titted, cum crazed slut."

The knowledge that it was Linda, his wife, that had caused all this, that had done this to her, finally unhinged Wendy's life. Richard, the husband of the 'loving' Linda, died, and Wendy, the sex-starved nymphomaniac was all that was left.

Wendy, who would shortly go to work as a professional stripper - and an amateur hooker in the streets of New York.

Wendy, who - once in a while - would hear a small, male voice in her head would cry out in pain and horror, but so quietly that Wendy never heard.

But Linda knew that voice was there - and that wasn't really the point, wasn't it?

SUMMARY: After jumping into a mysterious lake on a camping trip, one man transforms into a mythological nymph.

Myth Conceptions

By Gunslinger

"Whoa - talk about humidity..." Jerry said, wiping at his brow. He shifted his pack to a - slightly - more comfortable position. "You never said that it was going to this humid when you invited us, Jesse."

The lithe young man of obvious Italian descent made a small shrug, barely visible under the straps of his own massive back-pack. "Hey

- how was I to know. Besides - one good thunderstorm and it'll be gone. Have you looked up recently?"

Bill snorted. "Oh, even better - in a forest during a thunderstorm. What ever happened to 'don't stand under a tree?'"

Guiseppe DeMarco smiled wryly. "Hey - if I'd know all you guys was gonna do was bitch, bitch, bitch, I woulda come camping by myself. It woulda been a helluva lot more peaceful."

Bill, his big-boned frame and extra height making him the only one who carried his equipment easily, made as if to sprint off in the direction they'd come. "Does that mean I can go back to civilization - where there's women and cold beer?"

The slender Italiano shrugged. "Sure - but it's a long walk - 'cause I still got the car keys. 'Sides, unless somebody found it, that cache of stuff I left last year when I canoed in should still be there."

"I hope so." Jerry said. The rangy youth wiped at his brow again. "A cold beer would go down real nice right about now." He paused. "How much farther "

He didn't have to finish the question - because at that moment they broke out into a clearing beside a large, fresh-water spring, crystal clear and looking so very inviting. On the other side of the clearing there was a thinner screen of trees that extended perhaps a hundred yards before arriving at the river that was visible in bits and pieces through the thinner growth.

With sighs of relief, the three young men dropped their packs by the ring of fire-blackened stones left over from Jesse last trip. They sat down to relax a bit after filling their canteen full of cold, clear water.

"You're right, Jesse." Bill agreed after looking around. This is the perfect campsite. So - where's this cache of stuff?"

The other two youths groaned when Jesse revealed it lay four feet deep - but they helped dig up the two large plastic coolers, revealing a hoard of booze, cigarettes and a few other 'luxuries', such as skin mags. Soon they were spread out around the large tent that they'd toted in, watching the sun slowly making it's decent towards the horizon while they sipped at the drinks they'd chilled in the frigid waters of the fresh-water spring.

"You know, I feel like I'm a scuz-bucket." Jerry said, shrugging his shoulders in discomfort. As the day was tending towards evening, the youth was finally beginning to feel comfortable as the humidity dissipated with the day's heat - but he was still sweat and a little grimy from the trek in, plus setting up. "I think I'm going to wash down a bit."

Jesse rolled his eyes. "Aw, c'mon - let us relax for a bit before we set up the camp shower man. It ain't the work of setting it up - it's the hauling the water up here and heating it."

"Hey - I don't need no stinkin' shower." Jerry said with a smile as he rose from where he was sitting and peeled off his shoes and shirt. "Uh, Jerry - whatcha doing?" Bill asked, blinking blearily from where he sat, well in the bag.

"Just cleaning up, Bill." Jerry said, turning towards the trees that screened the river and taking off, shedding his pants as he ran so he was clad only in his boxer briefs. Behind him, he heard Jesse calling after him, but didn't bother to stop and see what he wanted as he reached the bank and hurtled off it, describing a smooth arc in the air before plunging beneath the cool surface of the water.

Surfacing, Jerry saw Jesse had trailed after him, and was now standing on the bank, doubled over in laughter. "What's so funny?" Jerry called.

"You... jumped..." Jesse spluttered, holding his knees as he forced the words out. "Trying.. to clean..."

Frowning, Jerry wondered what the hell his friend found so funny - then saw it, and stood up in the silt bottom of the shallows, slapping his head and groaning.

The river had been slowly sinking in level all summer as the heat had evaporated the water with no rain to replace it. Stretching between the water and the grassy bank was a good six feet of thick, gooey mud.

"Whatcha gonna do, smart guy?" Jesse called from the bank, then bent over in fresh gales of laughter. "I'll think of something, wise-ass." Jerry muttered, eyeing the mud between him and the bank with a glare.

Jerry shivered as his toe touched the ice-cold water of the spring-fed pond. "Geez - it's, like, two degrees... Kelvin." "Don't be such a wimp, man." Jesse taunted. "You wanna spend the weekend as a mud-cake?"

"Well. " Jerry said, swishing his already numbing toes in the ice-cold pond.

"Hey - you do, you ain't sleeping in my nice, clean tent." Jesse said, deciding Jerry.

"All right, all right. " Jerry huffed. Taking a deep breath, he held it in - then sprang forward, diving into the chilling waters of the slate- gray pond.

In the first instant, as he hit the water and all the air rushed from his lungs, he thought the strange sensations he was feeling were related to the diving into the frigid water - the way his cock and balls were trying to recede up into his body, the sudden shock that trembled through his system, the way his hair floated around his head in a white cloud while unpleasant sensations galore ran through his body in time to a growing tightness in his chest...

...then the sensation doubled and redoubled, becoming something he'd never felt before, and he frantically launched himself off the silt bottom of the fifteen-foot-deep pond, frightened and scared, already eager for the light of the summer day as...

Jerry wasn't yet aware of the changes that had wracked his. her body in those few seconds - but his two friends had watched through the crystal clear water, wide eyed and unbelieving, as Jerry's form had rippled and changed into something altogether new. Now they were staring at the new woman, their eyeballs bulging from their sockets and their jaws hanging agape.

The first real sign Jerry had of her changed state came when she spoke. "Geez guys, what are you..." She trailed off, and tried again. "What are. "

The voice that was emerging was an almost disgustingly 'cute' female voice, a richly feminine soprano with just a hint of an unknown accent that almost made each word sound like it was spoken in the middle of a giggle, high and sweet and girlish in the extreme.

Out of shock, Jerry's hand instinctively flew to her throat, and she barely had enough time for the image of those tiny, slender, dainty hands breaking the water before her head went under as she unthinkingly stopped treading water.

Then she broke the water again - only, this time she was screaming, a high sound full of panic as she tried the impossible task of staring at her transformed body while treading water. Amidst the splashes and ripples created by her frantic thrashing, quick views of her transformed body flashed in front of her eyes - the long, sexy legs with then tiny, arched feet at the ends. The huge, firm tits thrust from an incredibly slender ribcage. The tiny, barely-there waist above woman hips, and resting in the center of the 'Vee' between her silken thighs, a small patch of ice-blond hair around the unmistakable shape of a woman's vagina.

Jesse and Bill watched her desperate thrashing in slack-jawed shock, too stunned to move - and if they'd been able to move, they still wouldn't have dived in to save their floundering, feminized friend, not after seeing what had happened when shed entered the water.

By happenstance more than design, the new woman's frantic movements served to drag her to the edge of the pond, and she hauled herself out, now-freed hands flying to different parts of her anatomy as she continued to scream in wordless horror at what each question touch brought.

Jesse and Bill, however, merely continued to stare wordlessly. They watched the slender, tinsy woman - she was less than five-feet in height - with the long, platinum blonde hair and large, firm tits feel herself up frantically, impossibly long, sexy legs spread out in front of her as she screamed.

Hesitantly, his voice thick and almost two octaves higher than usual, Bill said. "J.. Jerry?"

The shrieking woman's cries cut off as sharply as if they were a recording and somebody had hit 'stop'. Her huge, luminous blue eyes turned to look at the two gaping men through the long, fine lashes that shadowed them.

"I'm a woman." Jerry said in that clear, trilling voice, her tone almost conversational as her hands roamed the surface of the melon-sized tits thrust from her altered ribcage.

Then the huge, clear blue corneas of her eyes rolled up until nothing but white showed, and she passed into a dead faint, her body slumping limply to the ground and looking appealing even in a boneless slump.

Jerry stirred two hours later, feeling the warmth of the fire warming one side of her body as the chill air of the late-summer night prickled across the other. She opened her eyes and blinked up at the concerned faces of her friends, who had crowded over her at her first sign of motion.

"I just had the weirdest dream..." Jerry began - then sat bolt upright, firm, spherical tits bouncing on her chest as her eyes went huge and wide and she gaped down at her transformed body.

"Oh... shit." She said, the oath coming out as sweetly and trilling as all the other words she'd spoken. Her large, bright pink nipples stirred and thrust themselves defiantly outwards in the cool air, and Jerry shuddered under the sensation that created. The world began to swim in and out of focus, and she began to sway back and forth, her eyes beginning to roll up...

The sudden slap brought her firmly back to reality, and she stared in shock at Jesse as her tiny hand reached up to touch the reddening hand print that was almost twice as large as her own tiny, slender appendage.

"Sorry." Jesse said, holding up his hands in apology. He was struggling not to gape at her perfectly spherical tits, and his face was slowly reddening at the awareness of his own efforts. Bill was less circumspect, gaping openly.

"Jerry...?" Jesse asked, hesitantly. "Is... is that really you?"

Jerry shuddered and drew her long, shapely legs upwards, cradling her knees against her impossible perfect globes, her eyes wide in horrified shock.

"Oh... my.. god..." She whispered as realization sank in. "I.. I.. I. " Tears began to leak helplessly down her smooth, flawless cheeks, and she felt shame at crying in front of her friends - but all things considered, she felt that she was entitled.

"What.. what happened to me?" She whispered, shaking like a leaf as the thousand new and disquietingly pleasant sensation of her altered body impinged on her consciousness. She felt alone, weak, vulnerable - womanly.

Shaking her head, she leaned forward and let herself absorb the strength from Bill's taut body as she pulled herself tightly against her chest, her crotch tingling and warming as she thought how good it would be to...

...screaming, she thrust herself away from her friend, horrified at the thoughts running through her head - the thoughts and urges, the mental images of herself having sex with them...

"Jerry - calm down!" Jesse tried - futilely. Horrified but what she had felt - was still feelings - the new woman was rapidly pushing herself away from her friends, eyes wide in horror even as her body thundered with desire and her mind reeled with thoughts and images that both sickened her and excited her at the same time.

"No!" The new woman screamed, her eyes unfocused as she shook her head in violent negation. "Noooooo!"

"Jerry!" Jesse tried again to get the hysterical new woman's attention - and failing miserably. He started to move towards her...

...and a bright, unfocused smile appeared on her lips and she leaned forward for an instant...

...then the smile disappeared completely, replaced with horrified realization. Leaping up with inhuman dexterity and grace, she spun on one tiny foot and ran into the woods, completely unaware of the wordless, impossibly look shriek of mindless terror that trailed after her as she sprinted with unbelievable speed and sexual grace into the depths of the wood, losing her body among the dark-clad trees even as she lost her mind in the depths of the horrified hysteria that had temporarily claimed her.

Jerry never knew how far she ran that night, dodging around trees and bushes with inhuman dexterity as she bolted deeper and deeper into the wilds, trying to outrun the horror that had happened to her. She pushed herself faster and faster, sprinting through the trees at speeds faster than Olympic sprinter's bests, while the trees flew past her on either side, clear and sharp in her vision.

It was the fatigue that finally drove her to stop, collapsing onto the leaf-carpeted forest floor, staring up at the trees that blocked out the faint light from the starry, moonless night...

It was then that several different things began to impinge on Jerry's consciousness. A state of mindless terror can only be held so long without an external threat, and almost unwillingly Jerry's mind began to function in a manner somewhat closer to 'normal' - but it wasn't quite ready to deal with the situation itself, so it instead turned to the oddities that she was now noticing.

Like the fact that, while she felt weak and exhausted, her muscles didn't show the slightest trace of ache, and her breathing was only slightly faster and deeper than it had been when laying still.

Like the fact that she'd moved faster, and with more feline grace, than any human being should be able to.

Like the fact that, despite the Stygian darkness of the night around her, she was seeing the trees and vegetation easily in a strange, monochromatic brightness that she'd never seen before.

It was almost as if...

"I... I... I'm not even... human..." Jerry said out loud, stunned. The petite, buxom blonde held her hands up before her eyes, seeing herself in that strangely bright black-and-white vision she was looking through. Although it horrified her to be in this extremely, undeniably female body, she couldn't deny the fact that it appeared to be human - an extremely attractive, petite, buxom female human, but human. Yet, she was cataloguing the things that she was able to do, like the incredible endurance, the amazing dexterity, the night-vision - even the strange, not-purely-physical exhaustion she was feeling. None of it quite added up - not if you were trying to fit it somewhere into the standard human genotypes.

Then her mind began to push back farther, to the strange thoughts and urges she'd had. Her mind tried to shudder away, and she shivered in the night at the thoughts, disgust and longing rising up within her, but she forced herself to examine the feelings as dispassionately as she was able to, feeling again that strange urge, that new...

"...hunger?" She asked herself, frowning - yet the thought seemed to fit. It was almost like the sensation of being famished, of craving food - but it hadn't been food she was craving. In fact, in terms of food, she wasn't even the slightest bit hungry...

...although she should be starved, especially with the amount of energy she'd burned...

It hit her like a blow. Jerry had always been the studious one of the group - Bill was the handsome football star, and Jesse was... well, he was just Jesse. But Jerry had read a wide variety of books, studied an eclectic mix of subjects - and now, something in her mind made a series of connections that snapped together into a neatly solved puzzle.

One that almost pushed her over the edge of insanity on horrified realization of what had happened to her - and what lay in store for her, if she was right.

"But..." She stammered to herself in denial. "It's just a myth! There are no such things as."

Her voice failed her at pronouncing sentence on herself, but her mind relentlessly plowed onwards and supplied the word she dared not say:

Nymphs.

Mythological creature that looked like petite, attractive human women. Beings whose name was the root of another word describing an psychological sexual obsession, because the creatures of myth were supposed to have fed, not off the more mundane sustenance of mortals, but from the energy of sex. Creatures with incredible stamina, energy and agility - if they were kept fully 'fed' through lust and sexual intercourse from mortal men.

And Jerry was now one of those creatures. A being whose source of life...

Jerry shuddered under the thought, her mind filled with loathsome images - but the pieces had all fallen into place, and she could no longer deny the truth. No matter that it should have been utterly impossible - the fact was simple. There was no way around it.

She had somehow become a 'mythical' creature, and the only source for life for her would be to have sex with men - in short, her future lay in something she found utterly repulsive. But, despite the old cliché, it wasn't a 'fate worse than death' - for her will to live was still strong and bright, and she knew that, no matter how repulsive, how disgusting the thought of having sex with men was, it was less abhorrent than the thought of the final darkness.

"Oh, God..." Whispered the new woman - and it was as much prayer as curse.

Pushing herself wearily to her feet, she was shocked at how weak and tired she felt. She began making her way back towards the camp, weaving on her feet and pausing often to lean against the rough bark of a tree, her blonde hair spilling in front of a face bowed in exhaustion. It took her nearly three hours before she saw the glow of the fire through the tree, and she stumbled into the clearing on legs that felt like rubber.

"Jerry!" Bill exclaimed, jumping up from where he sat and bouncing hesitantly from foot to foot, watching her painful progress out of the tree-line.

She swayed - and began to crumple. Bill's natural instincts overrode his hesitation and general state of confusion over the events of the day, and he leapt forward, catching Jerry as she fell, his strong arms lifting her easily and cradling her to him. Immediately, Jerry felt a small thread of energy winding through her system, and knew that it was Bill's lust for her petite but curvy new body, muted in deference to the strangeness of the situation and the conflicting emotions he was feeling, but there nonetheless.

"God, Jerry - you're freezing. " Bill said, stammering - and even before she looked, Jerry knew that Bill was blushing deeply, trying - and failing - to ignore the way she felt in his arms, the way her swollen nipples were pressed into his chest, the way her smooth, soft, sexy flesh felt in his hands. She knew by the sudden rush of energy that ran through her in a dizzying wave.

Enough energy to push herself away from him violently - but she didn't. Instead, she asked to be let down, in a soft, embarrassed voice, and Billy let her down.

"We were worried sick about you. What the hell is going on? How did you.... what. ?"

"Yeah - what the fuck's happening?" Jesse asked, emerging from the woods, carrying a large Coleman lantern. He was sweaty and bedraggled, and Jerry felt a burst of appreciation as she realized he'd been out in the woods, searching for her.

Flushing deeply, Jerry lowered her head. "I... I think you guys should sit down. " She said, and as the men seated themselves around the fire, she explained her thoughts and conclusions in her sweet new voice, feeling the small flow of energy leaking through the air as the men couldn't help but become aroused as she described how she needed to feed, and what it would take...

"God, Jerry - you mean that we have to... That you need..." Bill stammered, stunned.

Jesse let out a low whistle, shaking his head. "Man... I mean, that's really, really weird - but..." The Italian began to blush. "No offense, but - you are a really hot girl now, and the thought that... you know..."

All three were blushing brightly, embarrassed, confused - and aroused. Even Jerry, deeply disgusted by this, was helplessly aroused - although, perhaps 'hungry' would be a better term, all things considered.

"No offense taken..." She said - trying for dryly sarcastic tone, but unable to convey the subtleties she wished in her new voice. The sweet, trilling tones she was stuck with simply were not suited to such things.

The two men were practically glowing in the dark, they were flushing so brightly. "So - what do we...?" Bill asked, delicately.

Jerry was flushing almost as brightly as her two friends, her fair new skin practically glowing as she forced herself to say what she had no choice but to say....

"I... need to... have sex with you. " She said, swallowing thickly at what she was about to force herself to do - but, now, having sex was as necessary for her as eating was for the two guys. She had no choice - it was have sex, or starve to death. As disgusting as the thought of having sex with her friends was, it was still infinitely preferable to the thought of death.

Bill cleared his throat, then said.. "I... don't think I can. "

His body was definitely displaying a contrary opinion, but Bill wasn't speaking of a physical problem, but an emotional one - and, despite the odd circumstances... or because of them. Jerry appreciated Bill's reluctance.

For the same reasons, she felt a wave of disgust wash over her as Jesse shrugged and said. "Hell - I can." He smiled at her. "Jerry, I liked you okay as a guy - but now that personality is housed in a drop-dead gorgeous body - and you're a nymphomaniac, to boot. It's a fuckin' fantasy brought to life, man."

And he moved towards her, his hands reaching....

It took everything Jerry had in her not to scream and run away. Nevertheless, she couldn't repress a small shudder of revulsion as Jesse closed the distance between them, and Bill 'tactfully' faded away into the tree-line, his face still a deep, ruddy color from the flush that claimed it.

Then Jesse's hands touched her...

...and everything changed.

It was as if most of her mind simply shut down - while her body came fully alive for the first time. Urges thundered through her, unchecked by any moral dilemma of disgust - because she no longer cared about anything else other than satisfying the needs thundering through her. Who she was - or had been - faded away, and thought was replaced with instinct and desire.

Jerry was lost - and what replaced 'him' was a being that had not walked the Earth for a thousand generations.

The nymph pulled herself tightly against Jesse's body, feeling the warmth of his flesh even as she felt the energy of his desire flooding through her. Her small, nimble fingers roamed over the dusky youth's body, undoing snaps and catches as her full, soft lips pressed against his and their tongues did an erotic dance. Jesse's hands encircled her and lifted her, her firm, round ass filling his hands as he held her off the ground, lip-locked in a passionate embrace while she peeled her clothes from his lean body. Then they were naked, bare flesh to bare flesh, and the current of energy running through her became a waterfall of power and vitality - which she put to good use. Wrapping her long, shapely legs behind Jesse, she crossed her ankles behind his knees, and ground her body against his, working herself into position. Jesse, divining her intent, moved awkwardly towards the tent.

Then the nymph found what she wanted - and she pulled her hips back, using her legs and arms for leverage - then thrust forward, impaling herself on Jesse's hard, throbbing cock and crying out in pleasure as his tool filled her wet womanhood, and his sexual energy fulfilled her need.

Then Jesse - now barely able to move as she thrust her body as best she could in short, awkward stokes - managed to back into a the tent and collapse gracelessly backwards onto a sleeping back, the Nymph riding him downward. She uncrossed her legs at the last possible second and moved them out of the way, lifting her tiny body upwards so that her cunt barely encased the purple head of Jesse's cock - then they landed, and gravity gave her an incredibly deep, powerful stroke that let her take the whole of Jesse's cock to the hilt, and she laughingly shouted in pleasure as she began to use her sensuously muscled legs to drive herself up and down on the cock she was impaled on.

Pleasure like none she'd ever felt washed through her as she drove herself up and down on the cock - but that pleasure was matched by the energy she was drawing out of Jesse through the sexual act. For his part, the swarthy young man was simply laying there, experiencing the best sex he'd ever had in his life, but completely unable to move, as the energy she was draining out of him left him weak and limp...

...well, except for one part of his anatomy, which was far from limp. It was this piece of anatomy that was all the nymph really cared about keeping 'alive' - and she did it with greater skill and ability than any mortal woman could.

She was laughing and smiling with shear joy as she rode atop Jesse, and the sensations were absolutely incredible, both physically and emotionally - and she had no plans for letting it end too quickly. Parts of her inherent ability came to life, and Jesse managed a groan of ecstatic agony as his cock swelled even larger, becoming bigger and harder then it had in his life. It was incredible - the pleasure was more intense than any he had ever felt, even if it did feel like his cock was being inflated from the inside, like a balloon, and even if the pressure in his balls was more intense than any he'd ever felt before as his body quadrupled it's normal production of semen.

And still the nymph continued to ride his, the pleasure building and building, far past the point where a merely human woman would have achieved orgasm. Grasping Jesse's hands, she lifted them up to her tits and began to caress and fondle her own huge, bouncing tits with his hands - and that increased the amount of sexual energy Jesse was putting out, and she absorbed it eagerly.

Jesse, limp and powerless to do anything of his own accord, was laying in a pool of his own sweat, his face becoming drawn in exhaustion even as he moaned in pure ecstasy. But the Nymph was completely unfazed by the energetic effort she was putting into fucking Jesse's brains out - she appeared as relaxed and fresh as if she were laying in a hammock, rather than thrusting herself vigorously upon the still-swelling cock that filled her hot, wet cunt. No sweat matter her golden halo of hair, and she seemed unaffected by the amount of muscle strain that - in a human woman - would come from spending so long in that position and using that much of her calf muscles to support her and thrust her up and down.

She looked like she could do this all not - and if she had been given the chance, she would have.

But her lover was merely human, and there was a point when extended, uninterrupted ecstasy almost become pain... "Please..." Jesse gasped, each word a battle to pronounce. "I... can't.. take.. it. "

So - reluctantly - the nymph let them cum.

They screamed in unison as the most powerful orgasm they'd felt claimed their bodies. It seemed to Jesse that the nymph should have shot into the air, propelled like a champagne cork from a bottle, so powerful and long was ejaculation. There seemed to be an endless supply of cum that just kept flowing and flowing as they writhed and jerked under the power of the incredible orgasms that racked their bodies.

Although it seemed to last forever, it was 'only' a few minutes before the mind-boggling orgasm subsided. Jesse, overcome with exhaustion merely lay like a puppet with it's strings cut as the nymph finally pulled herself off his cock with a wet slurping sound.

Jesse's cock was hugely distended, and a deep purple in color. Almost twice as long and thick as normal, it was absolutely massive - but, already, it was beginning to soften, becoming smaller. It would end up being about a third longer and thicker than usual from now on

- under the ministrations of a human woman, that was. Under the attention of a nymph. it would become longer and thicker the longer she spent arousing him.

For the moment, however, he was completely unable to appreciate the temporary size of his massive manhood, as he slipped into a deep, exhausted sleep.

The nymph, on the other hand, was brimming with energy and vitality. This had been an unusual sexual experience, because she'd let her reserves get so depleted before feeding - a normal feeding would only be a little more intense than normal sex would be. But now, she walked from the tent, practically bouncing at the energy that filled her, a wide smile on her full lips as she savored the fading afterglow of the orgasm...

...then she collapsed to her knees and began to dry-heave as the realization of what she'd just done hit home. With the intense need of her body slaked - at least for now - Jerry's mind reasserted itself, and she shuddered at the memory of what she'd done - and how much she'd enjoyed it.

She knew many things now, things that seemed to have seeped into her consciousness when her nymph nature had taken hold. Like the fact that she would have to feed two-to-five times every day, the exact number dependent on how much 'free' energy she absorbed just by making men around her aroused. If she did her best to be the most utterly sensuous woman around, made every move and action she could to turn on the men she met during a day, she could get by on two 'feedings' a day. If she locked herself away from men, kept herself aloof and shied away from acting the way her new body looked - then she'd be forced to feed much more often.

"Oh... God..." Jerry said, shaking at the thought of how her life would have to be, if she was willing to live it. The only other option was death - and even that would be long and distended, as she would have to seclude herself, away from any possible 'free-floating' sexual energy while she slowly faded away over a period of years. It would only take a couple of days without feeding before she was too weak to move - but it would take years before her body finally quit. And, if any time during those years, somebody came across her and was aroused in any manner - she'd bounce back and have to begin again.

She doubted she had what it took to try the prolonged suicide even once. The thought that she might have to do it many times before succeeding was just too much to bear. She shuddered and felt the pain and self-loathing at what she'd become well up in her - but she was unable to express it, as she discovered yet another facet of her new life.

Nymphs cannot cry. "Jerry...?"

Bill's voice was hesitant, and correct was plain on his face, even as Jerry felt the thin thread of lust that ran through the air between them. Even now, even in these circumstances, even with her best friends - that desire for her body ran through the situation like an undeniable undercurrent tugging at the fabric of her life.

Then Jerry frowned slightly, realizing something - the sensation she was feeling from him wasn't the same as the one she'd felt from Jesse. At first, she'd thought that it was a variation in... well, 'flavor' would be a good way to explain it. And, somehow, she knew that there was truth behind that assumption, as she knew - without knowing how she knew - that each person she fed from would have a slightly different 'taste' to them. But the deep, complexly textured energy that was flowing from Bill was much different than that variation in flavor. Before, all of this had been obscured by the amount and type of energy flowing off of Jesse, but with the Italian youth out cold and not 'broadcasting' anything, Bill's energy was crisp and clear, like the taste of the cool water of a mountain spring.

Then, like a bomb exploding soundlessly in her mind, the new woman understood something else. Something that changed a great many things in her mind, that stunned her and made her sit bolt upright and stare in shocked amazement at Bill.

She understood that sexual energy wasn't the only thing she could feed off of - although it was, by far the most powerful.

She could also feel the other side of the coin - or rather, the second half of the same thing. Her being sexy enough to arouse men would make the other women around her jealous, and she could also feed off that envious energy, although not nearly as well.

But the real bombshell was - that was the energy flowing of the broad-shouldered, heavily muscled man standing in front of her now. Bill wasn't really all that sexually aroused by her body - he wanted her body in a much more literally sense...

"Bill?" She asked, incredulous, and Bill must have read the comprehension in her eyes, because he blushed furiously and looked away - but, now, so many things became clear to Jerry. Bill's lack of girlfriends, his quiet demeanor, his reactions to the 'revelation' that she 'wanted' to have sex with them....

She'd thought it was all out of confusion and embarrassment. But the truth was - Bill wasn't really interested in her in that was at all - now, if anything, it was Jesse that had created that faint sexual undertone she'd tasted from him earlier. When he'd held her, he wasn't turned on by her being held against him, so much as the thought that what had happened to her could also happen to him - and that's what had turned him on. Not the thought of having sex with a woman...

...but the thought he could be a woman and have sex with a man... "Oh..." Jerry said, stunned. "Oh, my..."

Then, helplessly, she began to giggle. She couldn't stop herself, and seconds later, Bill's baritone chuckle joined hers.

Unwanted as it had been, what had happened to her had been 'magical' in the most real sense of the word. And the sheer irony of it all - the fact that it happened to her, a person who had been horrified and ashamed by it, when there was somebody else right there who would have welcomed it, who would do it voluntarily, was one thing. But, the knowledge that Bill was.. well, basically asking her permission to join her in her new life, the thought that she wasn't going to be stranded in this life, alone and outcast, was what had sparked the giggles. Here she was, wondering how she could possibly live her life as a female, thinking that there was no solution, that nobody could deal with it - and, now, she discovered that one of her closest friend had been secretly considering the question of how to live as a female for...

"How long?" Jerry asked, and Bill's eyebrow went up in confusion. "How long have you... felt this way?" She clarified, and Bill blushed.

"Uh - since I was old enough to notice the difference between me and my seven sisters..." He said, blushing. "About twelve years." "And...?"

The blush deepened. "Well - I think I can see a way to swing this. It'll definitely take some getting used to, on your part - but I think you'll see why I think it's a good idea..."

She was shocked and outraged at the beginning when Bill began to explain - but soon she saw the logic in his proposal, and agreed that it was the best way of salvaging the situation.

As she stood beside the pond and watched Bill throw himself into the waters with no hesitation, Jerry wondered how they were going to explain this to Jesse...

...and whether or not he would be 'up' to keeping them fed until they got back to the city....

A month later, a new duo-act hit the strip-club circuit, and instantly became one of the biggest draws in the industry. When Jeri Juggs and Billi Balloons performed at a club, it was to a fully packed house filled with enough testosterone to kill an elephant. The fact that the women seemed tireless in their twice or thrice daily performances was remarked on with awe, as was the sheer sensuality of their act - especially from the huge-breasted, Amazonian Billi.

Also remarked on was the fact that they almost always took a fan or two up to their rooms at the end of a performance - but several police 'sting' operations quickly verified that no money changed hands for what occurred next, so they were left alone - much to the delight of their fans. Even their manager, an slender Italian youth, didn't seem upset over his girl's promiscuity - in fact, when they first started performing, they're manager had looked as if he were suffering from some sort of illness, ten pounds under weight and with listless, tired movements. As time passed, he soon regained his former health, and there was rumors as to why he was so happy to have a plenitude of men trying to satisfy his star's apparently insatiable sexual appetites.

Even the fact that the duo went to a lot of time and money to buy a specific lot of land out in the middle of nowhere, then even more money to have a custom-build mansion constructed directly over a spring-fed pond was mentioned and pondered over - with no concrete results.

But nobody connected the duo to the small but very efficient private detective service that was soon formed, the one that never seemed to have time for any cases that people who stumbled across the firm tried to hire them for. Nobody even noticed the fact that the firm's checks all seemed to come - through a torturous route - from a bank that also held the accounts of the two stars.

And the fact that the Italian manager of the duo seemed to be slowly expanding his stable of girls with more incredible endowed, sexually insatiable women was definitely an item of talk...

...but not once did anybody ever notice the fact that it seemed to coincide perfectly, within a few weeks, with the 'disappearance' of people who - if they were very closely investigated - might turn out to have been harboring transsexual tendencies....

The Nature Of Man

By Gunslinger

'You want to know about Man, Geordi? I'll tell you about Man. He ain't a Rational animal, like scientists claim - he's a rationalizing animal. Man's the only animal that feels the need to make excuses...'

-Lieutenant John Deepwater in 'The Long Dark', by Michael Teague

A half-breed Native American with a mix of Cajun thrown in, John Deepwater was the toughest, most cynical cop in New Orleans, a lone-wolf maverick who went through partners the way most men went through clean socks, and he didn't need anybody's help, except maybe from Jennie Thorton, reporter from the Register and a maybe love-interest.

John Deepwater was also in deep, deep trouble. While investigating the murder of a prostitute, he'd found himself in the middle of a jewel heist worth millions, and the gang had him cornered in an alleyway. John Deepwater wasn't afraid, though. John Deepwater always had a way of getting out of a seemingly inescapable situation...

...except that Michael Teague had no idea how to get Deepwater out of this one.

"Awww, shit..." Mike sighed, staring at the white-on-blue screen of his word-processing program, the last paragraph of the next Deepwater novel staring at him accusingly, begging him for a solution to the problem.

Pushing his somewhat battered (but oh-so-comfortable) chair back from the desk, Mike slowly rose and stretched, his lanky, somewhat pale body making various cracking and snapping noises as he released several hours of tension and immobility. Leaving the unfinished scenario up on the screen, Mike headed towards the kitchen to fix himself a cup of coffee, hoping the caffeine would stimulate his brain.

God knew he needed something to kick his brain into gear...

Tall, lanky and with a shock of dark-brown hair that was usually a tumbled mass that trailed down his back, Mike wasn't exactly the popular image of a somewhat-successful Novelist - which always left him both amused and bemused whenever somebody gave the standard 'You don't look like a writer' response when he announced his occupation. As far as he'd been able to determine, nobody really knew what a writer was supposed to look like - they just knew that he wasn't it.

He'd never let it bother him, of course. Whether or not he looked the part, he was a writer, and one doing well enough to live off it's proceeds, comfortably if not extravagantly. Most of all, perhaps, was the fact that he loved his work, enjoyed the technical and mental aspects of writing...

...except when he wrote himself into a corner, that was. When he'd woken up this morning, he'd thought he'd had a viable solution to a suspenseful scene that cumulated in an alley. The only problem was, he'd made it right down to the bottom end of the scene before realizing that he'd made a mistake - this scene contradicted an earlier scene he'd written. The problem was, both scenes were really good scenes, and he knew that one or the other of them had to go for this to work out... and he didn't want to loose either of them.

Instead, he was trying desperately to come up with an ex deus machina, a method of reconciling the seemingly impossible contradiction, and still have the story work out to a believable conclusion.

Having filled the hopper of the small two-cup coffee-maker with filtered water, and the basket with Celebes Kona Gold coffee, Mike flipped the switch to start the little machine brewing. He picked up the remote and turned on the 42-inch TV, throwing it on the local station in hopes of a weather report while he was waiting for his coffee. Putting the remote down on the counter, Mike walked over to the big glass doors that led out onto the deck and stared out at the late-afternoon scene spread out before him.

An older 'A'-Frame house, Mike's home was located on three acres of land bound on one side by a river that stole a good acre or so of that every spring, when the low-banked river flooded due to runoff, sending a shallow-but-wide 'lake' spreading across the lower end of Mike's property. The spring run-off had finally subsided, and once again the water had returned to the usually shallow river, leaving behind a seasonal 'marsh' on Mike's property, one which would slowly drain away in the next few weeks.

After which, Mike would spend a good week cleaning up the mess left behind by the floodwater. It always amazed him what washed up on his property after the run-off. Items of every sort and description that had been tossed in the river or along it's banks could - and did - end up in a tangled pile at the base of three old trees right near the water's edge, where they'd catch as the flood waters drove the junk forward at it's crest.

Now, he stared out at the flood-plain without really seeing it, his mind working on other things as his muddy-brown eyes gazed out towards the river.

Then, slowly, it began to register on his preoccupied brain that there was a steady, bright light shining at him from the trees at the edge of the water. Slowly, his brain wandered from the fictional universe and returned to the here-and-now, truly seeing the light for the first time.

It wasn't actually a light-source, of course. It was the lowering sunlight gleaming a red-gold off of something metallic or reflective... which was enough of an oddity to attract Mike's attention. Sure, the occasional bottle or metal object had washed up in a flood-tide before - but always rusted, or coated in thick mud. Even bottles only partly cloudy lacked the sharp-shined luster to provide such a sharp, bright reflection.

Turning away from the window with a thoughtful frown creasing his narrow features, Mike poured himself a cup of coffee. Adding cream and sugar, he carried the mug back to the window and stared out at the sharp 'light' near the river, knowing that it was sheer luck he'd seen it - the only time it would reflect like that was when the sun was at the angle it was now, which only happened once a day.

Mike sighed, then put the coffee-mug down on the windowsill near the door, quickly jamming his feet into a pair of rubber boots. He knew that he'd find out what was reflecting the light when he cleaned up in a couple of weeks - but he couldn't go that long without satisfying his curiosity. Animals might be able to 'ignore' something if it didn't fit into their 'fight or flight' world... but higher intellect brought with it the curse-and-blessing of curiosity, the desire to understand, to see for yourself... even if the thing you were looking for was dangerous, which many, many people throughout history had discovered. Still, Mike knew he'd never be able to get his writing done, not with something like this minor mystery nagging at him in the back of his mind.

Grabbing his coffee, Mike pushed the sliding door open and stepped out onto the deck, the cooling early-summer air washing over him. Warm enough in a pair of jeans and a red-and-black flannel shirt over a tattered white undershirt, Mike took another sip of the coffee as he descended the three steps down from the deck and set off down the gentle slope that led to the river.

Pausing at the edge of the seasonal quagmire, Mike finished his coffee while looking at the shiny object, trying to determine what it was. Unfortunately, it didn't lend itself to easy recognition at this distance, and Mike sighed.

Placing the empty mug on the stump of a tree cut down long before he'd owned the property, Mike started across the sodden ground in the direction of the sparkling object, his boots squelching with every step as he neared it's location. Already it was fading to invisibility as the sun continued to set, the rays no longer striking it straight on. Mike had to walk a bit out of his way to keep from losing sight of the object in his own shadow.

He finally arrived at the object's location and leaned over, now only inches away from the shiny object - and he still had no idea what he was looking at.

"What the heck...?" Mike asked himself quietly as he grabbed the object and withdrew it from a tangle of twigs, grasses and various pieces of garbage.

About twelve inches long, the object had a rounded, flatish arc-shaped head atop the gracefully tapered shaft, which ended in a 'pommel', a rounded bauble part of the base of the shaft. The object was mirror-bright and silver in color, but too light to be actual silver

- it weighed about the same as an aluminum object would, but it was neither hot nor cold to the touch, though it was as hard and unyielding as solid steel.

"Hmmm..." Mike muttered, softly, turning and beginning to walk back to the edge of the 'swamp', carrying the strange item with him. "There's markings on it - but they don't look decorative. Too non-symmetrical, too dissimilar - though some of them match up. It almost looks like some sort of foreign language. "

Looked like a foreign language, perhaps - but Mike, as a writer, had seen many foreign languages, even if he couldn't read them, and this didn't look like any script or font he'd seen before. Too angular for Hebrew or Arabic, too complex for Greek - almost like they were pictograms, like Chinese or Japanese writing, though it was neither of those...

Still puzzling over the odd piece of metal, Mike picked up his empty coffee mug and continued up to the house, feeling vaguely cheated. Here he'd come out to solve a minor mystery, only to have it lead to another mystery, as if it was a false lure - something that...

"That's it!" Mike said, eyes widening as his thoughts jumped from the object he was holding to his novel. It was possible to reconcile the two scenes if what appeared to be happening in one scene really wasn't...

Hurrying up the stairs to the deck, Mike didn't even notice the tracks of mud he left across the deck and just inside the door. Kicking the muddy boots off and shoving them aside, he negligently dropped both the mug and the strange object on the counter, then hurried down the hallway towards his computer...

"Yooo-hooo! Mike, buddy - you home...?"

The familiar-sounding voice, echoing through the halls, roused Mike from his creative daze. Blinking like a man awakened from a deep sleep, the slender writer glanced down to the bottom right hand corner of his screen, where the little clock was...

..and swore. Hastily, he began to type a quick series of notes to himself at the bottom of the work he'd done so far, so as not to lose the train of thought he'd been working on. As his fingers flew frantically across the keyboard, he half-turned his head towards the door of the room and called out to his expected visitor. "Hang on a sec, Dave - I'll be there in a second. "

"No problem..." His buddy's voice replied, and Mike devoted his whole attention to what he was doing at the moment - Dave and he had been friends for ages, even roommates before Mike had made enough to afford his own place, and Mike knew Dave understood perfectly.

Finishing up, Mike saved and closed the file, feeling a sense of satisfaction at getting Deepwater out of yet another scrape, then rose from the chair with a series of cracks and pops from his stiff body. Massaging a particularly stiff muscle at the back of his neck, Mike ambled out of his 'den' and down the hall to the living room, where Dave was already leaning back in a chair with a cold beer in hand, watching a cheap 80's 'T&A' flick.

"You still watching that crap?" Mike said, jerking his head in the direction of the TV, causing his long-time friend to turn and grin at him. "Hey, do I bitch about the movies you watch?" Dave asked.

"Constantly." Mike replied, grinning at the shorter, lighter-haired young man. "How you doin', buddy?"

"Not bad, not bad..." Dave allowed, rising. An aspiring musician, David Johannsen was a broad-shouldered young man with a mane of nearly-white blond hair that revealed his Scandinavian heritage as much as his chronic - and to his friends, hilarious - inability to tan.

His ice-blue eyes were warm and crinkled in good humor, and he gave Mike a 'punch' on the shoulder, the masculine equivalent to a woman's 'hello' hug.

Mike, straight almost to the point of homophobia, almost would have preferred the hug - Dave was a great guy and a great friend, but he didn't know his own strength. Despite the fact that he was a little shorter than average height, he was quite muscular - though it came from genetics rather than body-building, so his muscles weren't all that well-defined, giving him a deceptively 'pudgy' look when he was fully clothed.

Unfortunately, Dave was also a very 'set in his ways' man, and always used the same amount of power in his 'buddy-punch', no matter how solid - or, in Mike's case, lanky - a friend was...

So, Mike was sort of braced for the impact, and only staggered back a step or so, immediately regaining his balance and, ruefully, rubbing his shoulder.

When he'd first met Dave, and learned his habitually greeting 'punch', Mike had actually tried 'dodging' the punch. It didn't work - it just made Dave think you wanted to get into a 'boxing match', no matter what you protested.

The bulky, blonde young musician was in, as he put it, 'an alternative punk band heavily influenced by classical music.'

Mike didn't really care for most of Dave's music. Still, he liked the beer-swilling, pot-smoking, rough-and-tumble musician and self-proclaimed 'biker'. (Dave owned a 1978 Harley-Davidson Soft-tail Classic, in cream-and-red... which he kept in his garage and polished on the weekend with a 'no-scratch' cloth.) Dave had a 'do-or-die' attitude that was actually the original inspiration for John Deepwater... although the fictional detective was a lot more refined than Dave - not to mention a hell of a lot less... crude.

"So, You've had a busy day, haven't you?" Dave commented casually, as he picked up his beer.

"Uh... Excuse me...?" Mike asked, frowning slightly - and wondering why Dave had put down his beer to punch him. Once Dave got a beer in his hand, it usually couldn't be pried out of his hand until the last drop was drained dry. Yet, he'd put it down rather than let go of what was in his other hand, a shiny object about a foot long, with a rounded-arc of a head and...

"Well, duh, the alien probe that contacted you this morning..." Dave said in a mocking tone. "I know all about it, of course..."

As confusing as Dave's apparently nonsensical comments should have been, it was nothing to the surprise that Mike felt to hear himself say: "Yeah, of course it would have talked to you, too. Geez - telepathy is kinda cool, isn't it...?"

Mike, however, wasn't the least bit surprised by any of this. he was, however, downright shocked to find that the reason he wasn't surprised about any of this is because he knew just what was going on...

...because the shiny object Dave was holding was a sentient, telepathic alien probe.

Matt knew this because, in the space between one breath and another, the alien probe had inserted all this information directly into his brain, telepathically. In that instant, Mike knew that the probe had tried to 'communicate' with him when he'd first found it, but had no frame of reference through which to learn the 'language' of an earth mind. He knew that, by leaving it in the same room with the TV, it had learned what it needed to know - and so, had been ready to 'tap into' the mind of the first person it encountered...

...which had been Dave. So, now, Dave was the focus of some sort of 'experiment' that the alien probe was running on the first human it encountered. Dave was the test subject - and so, he wasn't aware of what was going on. The probe had control of his mind, and it would be convincing him that he was doing nothing wrong - so, the probe wasn't telling him any of this.

It was telling Mike this because it didn't matter - Mike was supposed to be a 'supporting actor' in this little play...

...so he was helplessly aware of the fact that his mind was being directly tampered with, even if he couldn't tell exactly what was changing. All he knew was that he felt... compelled. He had a need to act 'natural', without knowing why... but the need was so strong that he couldn't withstand it. Instead, he grinned and 'played along' - even as he wondered why he was doing it.

"Fuck, yeah!" Dave gave enthusiastic respons to Mike's comment/question. The change in Mike's mind had happened so fast that Dave hadn't spotted it - which was the whole point. The probe wanted Dave's 'real' responses, so though it was 'monitoring' every aspect of his mind, he wasn't being 'messed with'. The probe was lying to him - and it was using Mike to reinforce that lie.

What really bothered Mike was the fact that he knew this... but he simply couldn't tell the difference between the truth and the lie. The proba had no problem messing with him.

"So - you owe me..." Dave said himself saying in a 'mock-serious' voice. He wasn't quite sure why he was saying it, even - he just had a feeling that, for some reason or another, Dave did 'owe him big'...

"Why...?" Dave, halfway through the act of sitting down again, paused and blinked at Mike.

Mike was really glad he'd asked that question - he'd been wondering it himself, and was glad to find out that the answer was: "Because I waited for you to get here before I decided to try the other abilities it talked about."

Oh. Well, that made sense. Wishing to test the incredible abilities of an alien probe until your friend got there was a pretty big favor...

"Screw you." Dave snorted, with a grin. "It told me about that, too - and I know there's got to be two people involved, so you had to wait."

Hmmm. Well, there went that debt...

"Yeah, okay - so you caught me." Mike 'admitted', not wanting to let Dave know that he'd actually forgotten about that part...

...or, was it that he hadn't heard it before? But, no, that was...

Mike would have liked to mull that one over - but he really felt that taking a few minutes of 'deep thought' would be inappropriate right now, so he forged right on ahead.

"So - now that you're here, let's try out some of the things it told us about." Mike said, excited - he really was anxious to see what 'special abilities' this thing had even if he'd technically lied when he said 'us', because the probe hadn't told him a damned thing about 'other powers'. However, right now just didn't seem like the time to make that distinction, for some reason...

"Yeah!" Dave agreed, just as eager as Mike to do this. "So... what should we try...?"

"Hmm..." Mike said, thoughtfully, wondering just what the alien probe could do, so that he'd have even the slightest inkling what to suggest...

...when a thought popped up so suddenly that it just sort of.. popped out: "Hey - let's turn me into a woman!" Dave gaped. "Are.. are you sure...?"

Mike blinked - but, for the life of him, couldn't think up any better ideas - and he really, really wanted to see if those 'extra abilities' actually worked. "Yeah - turn me into a woman, Dave."

Dave licked his lips, nervously. "Well, uh... what... what do you want to look like? You know... as a girl?"

Mike rolled his eyes - he couldn't care less about what he looked like. He just wanted to see the probe work. It seemed very, very important that he do so, in fact. "Just make me into.. well, your fantasy girl would do fine."

Dave blinked. "Are.. are you sure?"

"Yeah, yeah..." Mike said, waving a hand impatiently. "Hurry up, Dave - turn me into your fantasy woman..." Dave hesitated, his face slowly flushing. "Umm... I dunno. I.. I have some really kinky fantasies, and.. uh..." He just sort of tapered off - and an odd thought slipped through Mike's head...

'That's part of it...' He thought suddenly and with absolute conviction. 'His fantasies are so kinky that he can't fulfill them in real life - so the probe is finding a way to play them out for him - and since it's a fantasy, it's finding a way that won't make him feel guilty...'

Then there was a strange.. sensation in his brain - and the thought was literally gone as if it had never existed. No - as if Mike's brain were wired up in such away that it could never have existed at all...

.and Mike was unaware of the fact that the rewiring had been done in such a way to make it seem completely logical, acceptable - and even exciting - to say to Dave: "C'mon, Dave - I want to see just what that thing can do. The stranger your fantasy woman, the better - so lay it on me."

Dave looked at Mike - then slowly began to smile, closing his eyes and concentrating...

There was an almost subliminal hum, as if Mike were standing close to an underground transformer station - and then, without warning, all of Mike's clothes dissolved.

That gave Mike a bit of a pause - but, for some reasoning, mentioning the loss of his clothes didn't seem important enough to break his silence. Instead, it seemed much more urgent that he watch himself change.

He looked down at his nude body - just in time to see his hair go drifting down, detaching itself from skin that had suddenly become silky smooth - almost 'ultra-feminine'.

Which would make sense, given that he was changing into Dave's fantasy woman. The thought seemed a bit troubling... but, even now, as his feet began to writhe and change, Mike simply couldn't come up with a better idea...

...and seeing the probe work it's 'magic' was more than he could have hoped for. He was just so excited to think that an alien probe was using its unfathomable powers on him! If it turned him into a woman, fine - just as long as he was the focus of the changes. Of that incredible power...

...and, since he was, he felt wonderful as he watched his feet 'solidify' into their dainty, feminine new shapes. They were perfect female feet - and Mike just loved that fact that the power had been used to give them to him.

Not to actually have them, of course - being excited by that would be sick. It was okay, of course, to be unbelievably happy that his feet had been transformed at all - so it was fine that the sight of those wonderfully dainty feet made him so happy. Just like he was allowed to be so excited as he watched the changes move up his silky-smooth legs, leaving them long, toned and sexy.

"Man.. aren't those just the sexiest legs you've ever seen?..?" Dave breather, reverently.

Mike looked down at the sensuously-curved contours of his feminine appendages, and had to agree. "Oh, yes - they are. What would your fantasy woman wear on legs like these, Dave? What type of shoes? Nylons? Don't tell me, Dave - show me..."

Oh, this was just so exciting. He was getting turned on by having been given such long, sexy legs - and that excitement only grew as he was pushed upwards atop the shoes that formed on his wonderfully dainty new feet. They were hot-pink in color, and they boasted a four-inch platform and ten-inch heels that just did so much to enhance the already sexual curves of her calves and thighs...

...except it was hard to admire how sexy his new legs were when he was struggling wildly for balance. It only made sense for him to beg Dave to use the probe to give him all the skills his fantasy woman would have for standing and walking in her perfect heels.

Dave, of course, complied, and immediately Mike was able to balance easily in the heels, knowing that he now had the equivalent of a lifetime's experience in such delightfully high, slender heels.

"Perfect..." Mike said, heart beating rapidly at the sheer magical quality of what was happening. "Go on, Dave - go ahead and finish making me into your fantasy woman, with every little detail..."

Dave, caught up in the excitement himself, barely heard Mike's eager request - but since that was what he was planning to do anyway, it didn't really matter. In fact, nothing on earth could have stopped him now, his eyes glazed with excitement at arousal as he continued to transform his friend.

Mike gasped slightly as his hips expanded to wonderfully womanly dimensions - and along with wider hips came a full, firm and sexy ass. He had just enough time to watch his cock get sucked back into his body, painlessly replaced with a cunt that he knew must be hot, tight and wet - and then a super-tight, hot-pink spandex micro-mini formed, hiding his - her? - new womanhood from view...

Caught up in all the excitement, Mike begged eagerly: "Don't stop...!"

'Stopping' was the furthest thing from Dave's mind. Her waist pinched inwards to a mere eighteen inches - and then she gasped again as a pink leather corset formed, cinching her waist to a wonderfully painful fifteen inches in diameter.

"More... change me more..." Mike begged, and Dave complied.

Her ribcage shrank inwards, becoming slimmer - but something else was growing at the same time - her tits. Her wonderful new tits...

The now-hairless flesh of her chest rose outwards, ballooning rapidly, gaining weight and mass with startling speed as her breasts shot through the alphabet of cup sizes, going from small to big, then right into huge - and onward into enormous...

":Wow...!" Mike breathed in stunned admiration, lightly cupping and fondling her massive, beach-ball-sized breasts with hands that were already in the process of becoming more feminine. The breast cradled by her changing hands were as big as beach-balls, but not nearly as round, having a much more realistic heft to them...

...if anything about those gigantic breasts could possibly be described by the term 'realistic'.

So caught up in her new breasts was Mike, she almost didn't notice her face becoming a vapid caricature of femininity, huge blue eyes complimenting a tiny button nose and a set of full, gloss-red lips, all surrounded by a mane of golden hair so 'perfect' it looked almost like a wig - the same way her new flesh was becoming so unrealistically smooth and slick as to look almost like carefully tinted plastic rather than human flesh.

All of this excited her - the more she was pushed from her normal form, the better - and this was getting about as far from her old form as you could get...

Seconds later, the changes were complete, leaving Dave to stand, open mouthed, as he gazed at his own fantasy brought to life.

She was six feet tall, a lot of which was made up by those incredible legs of her. She was every inch a woman, with more than a few extra inches thrown in up top. Her face was almost unrealistically 'bimboish', her eyes glazed and wide, her permanent smile vapid and thoughtless...

...as she found herself settling down to the floor. For a second or too, she couldn't think why she'd be laying down on the floor, her hands continuously fondling her massive new endowments as she spread her long, sexy legs - which forced the skirt she was just barely wearing to ride up, exposing her tight new cunt.

Thankfully, she didn't have to figure out why she'd do something like that - Dave was more than happy to explain it for her, without bothering to use any words. Still grinning happily, he stripped out of his clothes...

...revealing a massive, thick cock that was three times the size it had been before.

Mike was ecstatic. Dave had given himself a huge, thick cock! Of course, the reason Mike was so excited was because it was another magical change - but Dave was actually going to be kind enough to let her feel what an 'impossibly' enlarged cock would feel like as he fucked her! What a true friend...

With literally breathless anticipation, she waited for him to do exactly what he did next - drop to the floor, position himself between her spread and slightly bent new legs, and slam that massive monster dick of his deep into her cunt...

She didn't feel a thing. The massive cock must be stretching her new cunt to the limit, but there was no physical sensation at all. in fact.. she suddenly realized that she couldn't feel anything in her new body, not even her massive new tits, which she was still rhythmically caressing.

She tried to ask Dave what was happening - but realized that she wasn't able to. [part of it might have been from the fact that she didn't seem to be breathing anymore, either...

...and yet she didn't feel the least bit 'suffocated' as Dave continued to drive into, her eyes glazed as he fucked her without any sensation at all.

She tried to give him some indication that something was amiss - but she couldn't seem to do anything but fondle her breasts and rhythmically drive her hips. She tried to do something - anything - else, but it was as if her new body had a mind of its own.

Right about then, Mike began to worry> After all, as exciting as being magically transformed was, this wasn't quite what she'd hoped for...

Not that she had nay say in the matter. As Dave spasmed and pumped and incredible load of cum deep into her new body, she could do nothing but continue the exact same actions, over and over again...

...right up until Dave hit the button on the silver-colored remote-control device that the alien probe had reshaped itself into, shutting down 'Michelle', the ultra-buxom version of the highly-detailed, animatronic love doll.

"Damn..." Dave sighed, rolling off Michelle as his huge, thick cock went limp. It felt so damned good to have sex with something other than Ma Thumb and her four daughters - most guys would have thought having a gigantic cock would be great, but they didn't seem to realize that most women didn't really enjoy being penetrated by something so long and thick that it caused great pain - which, of course, a love-doll, no matter how sophisticated, could never feel.

Rolling to his feet, Dave quickly dressed, then headed down the hallway.

"Hey, Mike - thanks for letting me, uh.. 'burrow' your..." He started - then slowed to a confused stop as he realized that Mike wasn't in the den, writing.

In fact - Mike didn't seem to be anywhere in the house.

Dave frowned - then shrugged. A brass band could have marched through while he was gratifying himself with the love-doll, and he wouldn't have noticed. Mike must have felt embarrassed, and decided to give them some privacy.

Making a mental note to get Mike one hell of a Christmas gift this year, Dave started to head for the front door - and then realized he was still holding the remote.

Flushing slightly, Dave put the remote down beside the love-doll.. but he didn't think anything of the fact that, just before he let go, he murmured to himself: "I wish it was a hell of a lot easier for me to have sex..."

Turning, Mike turned and headed for the door...

...completely unaware of the fact that his sneakers were reforming themselves into a pair of 'Fuck-Me-Red' high-heeled pumps, while his leaned were writhing their way up legs that were becoming smoother and sexier...

Reaching her car, Davidia slipped behind the wheel, starting the car with a quick twist of her long-nailed fingers. As the car idled, she drew the seatbelt across her chest...

...then gasped as the shoulder-belt dug into her firm, round EEE-cup breasts. Wondering how the belt could have slipped it's adjustment so badly, she eased the belt into place,. The dropped the car into drive, thoroughly disappointed that Mike wasn't home to give her the good, hard fucking she so desperately wanted....

"Listen, Lieutenant - you can tell his editor that there's no sign of foul play at his house..." Patrolman Rod Wilkes reported into the radio, looking around the writer's empty house. "In fact, it looks like the last thing this Teague fellow did before leaving was, uh. 'purely voluntary'. "

Despite his lieutenant's slightly puzzled demand for an explanation, Wilkes thought it best not to describe what he meant over an open frequency. There'd be more than enough time to describe the unreal sex-doll laying in the middle of the floor when he got back to the station - and, if this Michael Teague fellow didn't show up anywhere in a day or two, the other cops could see the damned thing for themselves, when the house was turned into a possible crime scene.

Signing off, Patrolman Wilkes approached the unbelievable sex-doll, dropping to one knee beside it as he saw what might be a gun, half tucked under one foam-filled arm...

No, it was some sort of odd-looking remote control - apparently, for the sex-doll. Holding the silver remote in one hand, Wilkes shook his head.

"Damn - I'd love to see a real woman walking around with proportions like that. "

SUMMARY: Two talented researchers at Rysher Laboratories secretly experiment with chemicals to create gender change.

Necessity...

By Gunslinger

The late-night air hung heavy and still over the City of Angels, the day-time blanket of smog turned into a faint haze in the cooler, calmer air. The quick-silver spray of moonlight caressed the folds and ridges of the hills and valleys surrounding the coastal town, the pin-point glimmer of stars spreading across a sky unhindered by clouds...

...but the entire sky was not as crystal clear. Though the weather was serene and still, the effects of mankind's intrusion upon the face of nature was evident. Deep in the folds of one of the valleys, a building burned. A sprawling, modern-looking building just hours before, it was now a brightly-lit pyre of rapidly-spreading flames that caused a thick, roiling cloud of black smoke to rise column-straight into the still air, its base the ugly orange-red of a fire feeding off flammable chemicals.

The strident clang of the fire alarm that had given the building's few remaining employees a few minutes warning were now silent, the wires and machinery already consumed by the fierce heat and blooming flames - but they had been replaced with the high-pitched scream of the fire-engines' sirens, the red strobes tracing the progress of the big vehicles as they hurtled towards the conflagration.

In an alley-way deep within the nearby urban sprawl, another unnatural occurrence was in the middle of taking place. Despite the high, graffiti-marred walls that formed either side of the long, dark alley, a wind was slowly beginning to stir, bits of unnamed-and-unnamable trash stirring under its influence as a low, wavering hum filled the air.

The wind continued to rise, a cylindrical column like some location-fixed tornado coming to life in the center of the alley. The rising hum was now a steady counter-point to randomly-timed crackles of sound accompanying the strange bursts of electricity that came from the center of the spinning mass of air, blue-white bolts arcing and jumping out to touch Dumpsters, fences and metal window bars with equal intensity, a miniature thunderstorm keeping an unnatural tornado company.

Then, with a sudden 'whoomph' of displaced air that was matched in intensity by a sudden, blue-white strobe of eye-searing light, the miniature tornado dispersed outward, shoving trash and a couple of plastic garbage cans skittering down the alley as darkness and silence returned to an alley that was no longer devoid of human life.

A simple glance might not have reveled the fact - the figure huddled at what had been the epicenter of the whirlwind lay still and unmoving, a tattered and stained lab-coat covering a mound that could have been garbage, at least to the eye of a casual observer. Only a second look at the still mound might have noted the mop of dark-colored hair topping the tattered remnants of clothing.

Then the mound stirred, in time with a low, long moan. With slow, stiff movements, the person under the tattered lab coat pushed themself into a sitting position, lightly running slender fingers over face and head, wincing as they encountered a large, tender lump under the thick mate of glossy, dark auburn hair.

Then those hands moved away from the sensitive, swollen lump to two much larger 'sensitive lumps', hesitantly cradling the massive, almost impossibly firm breasts that thrust proudly from a slender ribcage, unobscured by the torn and ill-fitting white dress-shirt that hung off slender shoulders like a tent.

"Well..." the slender young woman with the russet hair said, an oddly humorous tone in her sweet, trilling soprano voice, "...either I'm still alive, or the afterlife smells really bad..."

With that comment, Daniel Webster Trevors, Lab Technician Extrodinaire, unsteadily pushed himself to newly dainty, feminine feet, her unsteady, cautious movements looking nearly drunken in their carefully deliberate smoothness. It seemed to take forever, but finally Danny was braced against the nearest wall, supple new frame leaning almost casually against the dirty bricks, ragged remnants of ill-fitting clothing failing to obscure the smooth, feminine contours she could now call her own. Craning her slender, swan-like neck forward, the new woman looked down at her body as best she could over the massive, round tits that were thrust so proudly into the cool night air, thick pink nipples rigid and swollen by the slight chill.

It was quite a body to look at, too. Despite the fact that her hips were fairly slender, her new body was anything but 'boyish'. Tall, for a woman, a lot of Danny's height seemed to be made up of the long, supple legs that led up to those slender hips that supported an ass that was taut and firm. Her waist was delightfully slender in the dark shadow cast by those massive, basketball-sized breasts, and her shoulders were toned-yet-slender. No trace of her old, male body hair lay anywhere on her smooth new skin, either her body or her cute-and-engaging new face beneath it's mop of russet hair.

"Hmm... Forty percent Jamie Lee Curtis, thirty percent Helen Hunt, a smidgen of Drew Barrymore, and a rack that puts Dolly Parton to shame." The new woman grinned, wryly, an engaging expression on her new face. "It could be worse, I suppose. I could look like Roseanne Barr..."

Then the wry grin flared into a huge smile, and the new woman thrust her hands skyward and began to dance around joyfully, huge new breast bouncing and swaying as she literally leapt with joy.

It was on one of the rotations her whirling, leaping dance of joys that the new woman's dark eyes caught sight of column of smoke that rose into the air, and her cavorting immediately came to a stop, her smile of joy fading into a look of concern.

"Oh, shit..." the new woman said, sadly. "I hope everybody else got out all right..."

Sobered, Danny lowered her head, conflicting emotions broiling deep inside her new frame. On one hand, she was overjoyed with her feminine new body. After all, despite the fact it was considerably more endowed than she would have liked, it was female - just as she'd always dreamed of being. Hell - her dream of femininity was what had led her to work for next to nothing alongside Doctor Lawrence Guthry, whose attempt at creating a Star-Trek-like 'transporter' had revealed an unexpected 'flaw' in the basic design that was a god-send to dreamers like Danny: Namely, that the machine's processors inexplicably tended to 'edit' genetic codes to the feminine equivalent. At least, theoretically - no living creature had been put through the test model Dr. Guthry had been working on, at least not until Danny had become trapped in the fire and had risked the unknown dangers of the device to escape it. To find Dr. Guthry's theories were correct and that Danny was now, indeed, female, was wonderful - but how would she feel if the cost of her new gender was the life of one or more of the people she'd worked with for the past five years, people who she'd laughed and joked with, people who she'd come to like and trust enough to reveal her secret too, to the point that she'd even been allowed to come into work 'en femme' sometimes, despite the fact that her chubby old male body did resemble a auburn-topped version of a certain, bad-tempered actress...

She couldn't rejoice - not yet. Not if the cost of her new womanhood had been much too high. Taking a deep breath, Danny turned towards the entrance of the alley and began to walk swiftly, letting herself adopt a modified version of the feminine sway she had used so many times before in her 'Dana' persona, modified to accommodate her altered center-of-gravity.

It wasn't until her supple new frame was undulating out of the mouth of the alley did she recall that she wasn't dressed for wandering the streets - especially considering how her story would sound to any officer lucky enough to be called for the 'Indecent Exposure' charge against her. With a gasp, Danny - or, as she was thinking of herself, Dana - withdrew back into the shadow of the alley's mouth, looking up and down the street she found herself on.

It was late, and for a moment she feared she was going to be unable to find anything to cover her buxom new body - then she noticed that the area of town she found herself in was hardly the most upscale, with strings of stores and theaters that catered to some of the more base instincts of the human condition. Though not exactly happy with the choices available in such a location, Dana was relieved to find that clothing wouldn't be all that hard to find.

Taking a deep breath and glancing up and down the street, the newly-formed woman dashed across on an angle, aiming towards the sex shop halfway down the block. Her stocking feet slapped pavement as she gathered the tattered remnants of her lab coat around her, creamy flesh showing through the rents and tears in the soot-marred garment. She heard a sharp wolf-whistle from somewhere behind her, but she didn't stop to respond - not that she was quite sure how to respond, even if she had the time and motivation to do so. After all, she'd never had to deal with 'serious' pseudo-sexual situations while in her less-than-attractive alter persona.

Hurrying through the blood-like pool of red cast by the shop's sputtering neon sign, Dana yanked open the brown-paper-covered door and ducked inside.

The eyebrow of the almost painfully thin, leather-and-denim-clad young man at the front desk rose sharply, making her flush, but she ignored the heat in her face and looked around, hoping to find something that would fit her new body - and, with a start, she realized that she didn't know her new measurements. She knew what size women's clothing her old, male body wore, but this body was slimmer, with all that extra weight 'relocated' to the gravity-defying orbs that she was trying, vainly, to hide beneath her tattered lab coat.

She began to look around, trying to estimate her size. While she wandered around the shop, fingers gliding over leather, lace and latex, she rather hesitantly let another human being hear the sweet new soprano she now called her own.

"You haven't heard anything on the news about the big fire up at Rysher Laboratories, have you?" The man at the counter frowned. "What 'big fire'?"

Dana blinked - then realized that it had been only fifteen minutes or so since the fire started. Considering that, in that space of time, her life-long dream had come true, it somehow seemed longer. "You can see it from outside - a big lab back in the hills is on fire."

The greasy-haired young man lifted one bushy eyebrow in surprise, then rummaged around under the counter until he emerged holding a battered and well-used remote.

"Maybe it's on the news..." The clerk explained, pointing the boxy control at the TV mounted in the far corner. Currently, it was 'previewing' a porno-tape with the sound turned low, and when the clerk operated the remote, a buxom blonde (who was nevertheless flat-chested compared to Dana) who was in the middle of a wet, energetic blow-job vanished, to be replaced with the image of a too-perfect oriental woman in a crisp beige suit sitting at a newsdesk, a graphic of a fire truck in the 'blank' space to her right. The clerk turned the sound up.

'...engulfed the entire complex. Fire Marshal R. A. McAvoy is on-scene, and has issued a brief statement...'

The image beside the newscaster now showed a still photo of an older, beefy-looking man in a dark uniform, while a voice that matched the man pictured played, obviously recorded over a phone line.

'According to eye-witnesses, the fire started in lab after a Bunsen burner's valve refused to close. The chemicals in the lab acted as an accelerant, causing the flames to spread rapidly. Thankfully, the alarm system was state-of-the-art, and most of the night-staff managed to escape...'

The newscaster took over. 'Marshal McAvoy went on to say that there is still one member of the staff unaccounted for, but the name is being withheld pending further search efforts and the advising of the missing man's next of kin...'

Dana's heart pounded and her mouth went bone dry. Who was it? Which of the people - friends - she'd worked side-by-side with for the past five years was missing...

...or dead?

For a second, Dana felt like fainting, the thought that her new life was bought at the cost of one of her friends...

...and then, like a light flaring to life, realization hit. They were talking about her!

Nobody knew she'd 'transported' out of the lab. Nobody had seen her. They all thought it was her that was missing-perhaps-dead... She had to go. Now.

She stopped caring about how clothes would look. She just needed something to wear, right now, and she grabbed the first things that even looked close to being the right size for her new body.

"Ring them up." She said, dropping the pile on the desk and stepping back. Hurriedly, she began to rip off her tattered, ill-fitting male clothing, exposing her top-heavy new figure. She paused, staring at the clerk angrily.

"Hurry up!" She said, frustrated and rushed, then went back to ripping off her clothes. The clerk blinked, shook his head as if awakening from a dream, and began ringing up the purchases - with the occasional glance over at Dana's no-nonsense 'strip tease'.

When he gave her the final amount, she shoved cash into his hands, more than enough to cover the cost - and then she began to dress.

She started with the dark-red leather 'crop-top'. Formed out of four pieces of the dully gleaming material, it was laced together at the back, sides, and front. These laces had to be let out significantly for Dana to be able to cram her massive new tits into it - with most of the slack being on the front lace, displaying the incredible cleavage of her massive, constrained breasts. More breast-flesh squeezed up the tight neckline, as if her tits were threatening to burst loose.

Once the crop-top was in place, Dana hastily yanked on the black-leather mini-skirt. It clung tightly to her girlish hips and her taut, sexy ass. A dark-red belt cinched it tight around her delightfully slender waist, leaving her belly bare.

Then Dana unceremoniously dropped to the ground, landing on that delightfully full derrière, and proceeded to haul on the boots. The black leather boots.

The knee-high, matte-finished black leather platform boots with a four-inch high platform and eleven-inch high stiletto heels...

Between the twin handicaps of the impossibly high heels and the top-heavy nature of her new frame, it took Dana a few awkward moments to get back up from the floor - but once she had, she moved atop the sky-scraper-high-heels as if she were completely at home, smoothly and gracefully.

Which could be attributed to the hours 'Daniel-as-Dana' had spent walking in progressively higher and higher heels, wishing for the day when 'she' could actually be a real woman - and now that she was, she was too pre-occupied to enjoy being so graceful and feminine atop the high, high heels.

Now upright, Dana yanked on the form-fitting black leather overcoat. It hung to just below her knees, but tantalized more than it hid, the tailored lower half fitting snugly over her sexy ass, while the waist-belt cinched the coat tight over her slender waist. The lapels of the 'trench-coat', however, were tailored wide - allowing a spectacular view of those straining, rounded breasts and the chasm-like cleavage.

The final item was a hat - a black leather fedora, to be exact. Cramming it down over her dark-auburn hair, Dana grabbed up her wallet and dashed out the door, leaving behind a very surprised - but not ungrateful - store clerk.

Dana stopped a cab by the simple expedient of stepping out on the street and waving her arms wildly. The cabby had to stop to avoid running her down - and when the car had finished coming to a shuddering, squealing halt, he got a good look at what he'd narrowly avoided flattening, and, being a red-blooded Italian-American male, he was very glad he had slammed on the brakes - this chick was a hottie!

It got even better when she forewent the back seat in favor of hopping in beside him, giving him a good look down the wide-open front of her leather trench-coat, displaying her bounteous cleavage.

She gave him an address in a rushed, breathless voice, and the car was in motion before he quite managed to rip his mind off those well-displayed breasts. For some reason, his eyes kept wanting to slide to his right as he pushed the car faster and faster under her repeated and imploring requests.

When the familiar house came into view, Dana's eyes locked on to it like a man in the desert might star at a cool, refreshing spring bubbling from the sands. Her hand started fumbling at the door handle as soon as the car stopped, and she would have been out of the car like a shot if the cabby hadn't cleared his throat nervously and gave her the total fare owing.

She turned to stare at him for a second, then, with a sinking feeling, realized she'd shoved all her cash at the clerk at the adult store. "I, uh, don't have any cash..." She said, hesitantly. "How about if I just blow you, instead?"

The swarthy young man at the wheel gaped at her. "Huh?"

"Instead of paying, why don't I just suck you off?" Dana repeated, urgently. "Uh... Sure..." the cabby said, stunned.

"Great!" Dana said, sighing in relief - and then she was turning around and folding herself up, one knee hanging off the seat as she put her head in the driver's lap, her hands already freeing his rapidly hardening cock from his pants.

Though it was her very-first blow-job (well, from this end, anyway...), Dana didn't stop to 'savor' the sensations - she was in a hurry. She just used hands, lips and tongue to get the driver off as quickly as possible.

Not that the cabby was complaining. He seemed perfectly happy with her technique as he grunted and pumped a thick load of salty, warm cum into her mouth.

She swallowed it all down, barely tasting it, feeling only a salty-tingle over her tongue as she swallowed the load and licked the cock clean.

Then she was out the door, moving as quickly as her incredibly high heels would let her while. Practically having forgotten the cabby and the blow-job, Dana hurried up the sidewalk leading to the bungalow nestled in a small canyon lot.

Reaching the door, Dana began to pound urgently on it, even slamming her hip against the door heavily, almost as if trying to batter her way through. Despite the noise she was making, it was still several long moments before the owner of the house came to the door and opened it, looking out at the cause of the commotion with eyes that were bleary and red-rimmed from tears.

"Please - I don't want to see anyone right now..." Doctor Lawrence Guthry asked in a tired voice.

Larry Guthry was many things. At thirty-five, he already held seven university degrees, some of them from the most prestigious schools in the world. A genius with 'photographic memory', Larry was also a musical prodigy, a concert-level pianist who only played for good friend's of his.

It was almost too much to ask that he was also a complete hunk, with lean hips and a well-toned, well-muscled body that came from his other hobbies: Rock climbing, white-water rafting, and cycling. He had a ruggedly-handsome face and a that of sandy-blond hair. He also had bright green-blue eyes that were usually cheerful and open - but were now red-rimmed and tired.

It was the fear of that look that had driven Dana to get here so fast, desperate to let Larry know: "Larry, it's me - Dana!"

Larry looked momentarily lost, as if the words had no meaning to him. He simply stared at her, uncomprehending.

"I used the transporter to escape the fire!" She explained, urgently, waiting for the light of understanding to fill his eyes. "It beamed me into an alley downtown - and you know about the side effect..."

That's when the light came on, and he stared at her incredulously. "D... Danny?"

"Yes!" Dana shouted, seeing the sorrowful look transformed into one of joyous surprise. "Yes - but I think it'd be more appropriate to go by my 'en femme' name now, don't you?"

Patting him lightly on the cheek with a tolerant smile, Dana wiggled her way past him, into the foyer of his house. He watched her go by, stupidly, then blinked and shut the door... but before his eyes turned away from her, he hesitated for a long, long second, admiring the way the coat fit so snugly over her ass - and well her ass looked, with the coat snuggled over it...

"If... you'd like..." Larry said, awkwardly. "...Dana."

Heading into the living room, Dana paused, turning in the doorway slightly. The foyer itself was dark, the living room lit - and the position provided a mouth watering profile silhouette as she smiled seductively back at him.

"That wasn't so hard now, was it?" She asked, warmly. "Besides, think of the benefits." She was through the doorway before Larry had recovered enough to ask - "What benefits?" Getting no response, he hurried through the doorway, saying, "What benefuhhhh..."

The invention of the new word came from the fact his jaw had gone limp - probably to make up for something else which was going hard, as Dana had shucked off the over-coat and was standing in the middle of the room, swaying slightly, staring with heavy-lidded sensuality at Larry as she lightly fondled her own breasts through their leather coverings.

"Why, the benefits of you and me." She said, huskily, slowly coming towards him as she talked. "First of all, I'm living proof that your machine works - I was transported nearly ten miles away, unharmed."

"Uh, yeah..." Larry agreed, backpedaling slightly - until he hit a wall. She continued to approach.

"Plus, think of all the other people out there like me. They'll be lining up to use your machine, even if you never get that bug fixed..."

"That... That's true..." Larry agreed, still uncertain as Dana took his arms and began guiding him sidewise, towards the couch. He settled on it, stiffly, finding it hard to slide easily from the recent grief to... arousal? But there was no reason for grief if this was Danny... but Danny was a guy...

...except, obviously, she wasn't. Not anymore...

"...and, best of all, I can now do this, too..." Dana finished 'persuading' Larry - by untying the crop-top's front lacing while she dipped her head in for a fast-but-passionate kiss. He was too stunned to respond to it properly, but Dana didn't seem to care as she kissed him, then pulled back - to let him gaze at her huge, firm new breasts.

"Don't think I didn't see the porn web-sites you cruised, Larry..." She smiled. "Five years sharing a computer - of course I know you like women with huge, firm tits... Tits kinda like these ones, huh...?"

Still grinning, she began to fondle her massive, firm breasts, sighing in pleasure... and then she leaned forward and began to slide them over Larry's face, until he reached up to fondle them with his strong, gentle hands while he nibbled and licked each huge, sensitive nipple.

She moaned in pleasure - and now that her hands were free, she reached down and unzipped the side zipper on her skirt, freeing her to spread her legs more - which she did, straddling Larry as she unzipped his pants and hauled out his large, thick, and most-definitely- ready cock, it's massive head nearly purple and pulsating with each rapid breath of his heart.

With a sigh of supreme happiness, Dana lifted herself up slightly - and then sank her tight, wet new womanhood down over his throbbing shaft.

"Oh, dear God - Yes!" Dana sighed, lustfully - and then she began to flex her long, toned legs driving herself up and down on his hard, throbbing shaft - and Larry joined in with her impassioned 'prayers'.

Pleasure like none she'd ever experienced thrummed through her body. She'd tried 'straight' sex when she was younger, and had kept with it without terrible urgency through the years, even after she understood that she'd been born into the wrong gender. She'd never quite been able to get past that instilled 'homophobia' in her, though, to make the move she wanted to make. Besides, she didn't want a gay man - she wanted a straight man.

Which just hadn't been possibly - until now. Now, joyously, she rode Larry's hard cock and was amazed to find that her emotional joy of satisfaction was being eclipsed by the sheer physical pleasure of having sex as a woman.

"Yes, my gorgeous genius, yes...!" Dana cried out in ecstasy as she fulfilled a life-time fantasy, that of having sex as a woman. The second fantasy, that of having sex with Larry, was newer - but no less satisfying in it's fulfillment.

"Not... the.. only.. one..." Larry gasped in pleasure as Dana rode him, referring to the fact that Dana herself was MENSA material, if not as creative or insightful as Larry was.

"That's... another... benefit..." Dana gasped, body writhing in pleasure. "What's... that...?" Larry gasped out.

Dana didn't answer - she was too busy experiencing her first female orgasm, one that ripped through her body, leaving her shuddering in the grip of pure ecstasy. Larry's own orgasm, a second later, wasn't anything to be sneered at, either.

It wasn't until they slumped into each other's arms, spent, that Dana was able to answer the question. "A child of ours would have to be a super-genius..." Dana muttered, sleepily.

Larry's eyes widened. "A child? You mean..."

"Of course I'm fertile, silly." Dana giggled. "Don't sweat it, honey - if you don't want to have anything at all to do with a child, that's fine - you don't have to. But I really want to have a child by you, if you'll let me. More than anything else, that's what I really want. The ability to have a child."

Larry gaped at her - then smiled, softly. "Well, since I'm directly responsible for you being female at all, I guess I'd better make sure that your wishes are carried out." He made a theatrically outrageous 'tragic face'. "I mean, it'll be tough, what, having to have sex with you again and again, but it's a burden I'm willing to bear..."

"Oh, you..." Dana said, with a giggle. "By the way, you do realize what this means, don't you?" Larry blinked, puzzled-but-amused. "no - what?"

"Invention was the necessity of a mother." Dana said, with a grin. "Oh. Oh, that was bad..." Larry said, wincing. "Just for that..."

Then she squealed and leapt from Larry's lap as he tickled her. Balancing atop her high, slender heels, Dana laughed with unfettered joy, then took off, avoiding the grasp of her new lover...

...but not trying too hard to stay away. Not after all she'd gone through to get caught in the first place...

Summary: After accidentally invoking a magic spell that turned him into a woman; the new female finds that she is starting to have sexual feeling for her neighbor.

Neighborly

By Gunslinger

"Oh, um, uh." Jeff stammered, red-faced, as through sheer force of will he managed to tear his eyes from the creamy display of cleavage all-but-falling out of the seriously over-stressed neckline of the too-tight green tank top. "I'm sorry, miss, I thought."

Jeff's stammered explanation died in his throat as he finally managed to look the woman in the eye - and his eyes widened as he took in the woman's face.

"D. duh, duh, duh." Jeff stuttered, unconsciously doing a damned good impression of Morse code before he finally managed to get the one-syllable word out of a suddenly tight throat: "Don?"

The somewhat haughty-looking brunette with the massive rack rolled her hazel eyes and sighed. "Hi, Jeff." She said, a bit sourly.

"Buh. but... but." Jeff stammered anew, eyes tracing down to the jeans pulled what must have been painfully tight over her wide hips and full fundament, back up to the massive, swaying breasts barely encased in the popping-seam top, then back up to the face surrounded by an untamed mass of dark-oak hair. "But you're a girl!"

"Gee, Jeff, thanks for telling me." She said in a tired contralto, pushing herself up from where she was sitting on the low brick wall surrounding a planting and looking down at the seemingly endless display of cleavage with a wry expression. "Otherwise, I might never have noticed."

"But. how?" The tall, spindly-looking young man demanded, unconsciously running his hands through his shock of ebony hair as his eyes once more returned to the massive breasts that jiggled and swayed invitingly with every breath his inexplicably feminine neighbor took.

"You know that really old book I bought at the auction? The one in a mix of Greek and Latin? Well, it turns out it's a book of spells, and one of them lets you change gender." She explained, while trying to assemble her wavy, mid-back-length mane of silky brown hair in a way that kept it out of her face. Certainly not fat, by any stretch of the imagination, the feminine Don shared the same 'beefy' body type as the male version had been - except this big-boned, 'whole lotta woman' look was far more attractive on her than it's equivalent had on her male body. Of average height, she had one of those fully-packed, voluptuous bodies, with broad hips and shoulders, a fairly deep ribcage, and plenty of meat on her bones, but little fat - except, of course, for that in the massive, breasts that her arms-above-her-head position had caused to practically thrust out of their skimpy cloth prison.

Huge and roundly firm, but not to the point that they looked 'fake', but with a natural slight sag and spread, each breast was the size of a basket-ball, pulled high and outthrust on her chest by her motion - and drawing Jeff's eyes back to them like magnets.

"Yo, Jeff - mind not staring at my tits?" The pneumatic new woman asked, dryly. "But. they're huuuuge!" Jeff gasped, undiplomatically.

"Thank you, Captain Obvious." Don snapped, blushing. "I mean, mom was really well endowed, and my dad's mother was too, but when I cast the spell I had no Idea that I was going to end up with freakishly huge tits wobbling and bouncing all over the place."

"They're not freakish." Jeff said in a stunned voice, eyes still drinking in the sight. "They're. spectacular!"

"Huh.?" Don gasped, shocked to find that anybody could find her massive - and damn heavy - new boobs anything but disgustingly oversized. "Look, Jeff - can we not talk about my tits for a little while?"

"Huh? Oh, yeah, sorry." The lanky young man mumbled, snapping out of his bust-induced daze - and realizing what she'd said, earlier. "Wait a second - you mean you turned yourself into a girl on purpose?"

"Yes, I did." Don stated, her voice defiant despite the blush rising to her almost haughty feminine face. "I've always been curious what it would be like, and when I found a way I could experience it for myself, I took it. What of it?"

Jeff was flabbergasted. He'd never had any idea that Don might have thought that way. He'd always seemed so.. well, so masculine!

Not that Jeff really knew Don that well. They'd only met three years previously, and only saw each other about three months out of the year, on vacation. They owned adjoining cottages on a very narrow inlet on a lake, practically a fjord, with steep walls on either side of the finger of water. This forced the cottages to be very close together at the very end of the inlet, and because of the way the cottages faced the water on almost pie-pieces wedges of land, the backyard of each cottage would have gone from small to tiny - and so they'd more or less formed a gentleman's agreement to share the backyards as if it were one. As a result, they'd had barbecues together, meeting each others friends, had played lawn darts or pick-up baseball, and had become 'fair weather friends', quite often hanging out together, drinking and watching sports on Don's satellite TV or playing poker at Jeff's place. They'd even talked quite a bit about women, especially after a few drinks, and Don had always seemed every bit a red-blooded horny American male as Jeff, with similar over-exaggerated tales of sexual conquest.

In fact, this was one of the rare times when either of the men was up at the cottage alone, much less both of them 'stag'. In Jeff's case, it was because he'd just gone through a particularly bad relationship with a woman who'd turned out to be nothing more than a gold-digger, trying to milk the twenty-nine year old computer programmer for his money. He'd come up to the cottage three weeks earlier than usual simply for some time away - and had been surprised to find Don also 'in residence' so early in the season.

Then again, Jeff thought a bit numbly as he took in Don's voluptuous-and-very-attractive female form, Don had also probably been expecting nearly complete privacy as well.

"Um. this is all just a bit. unexpected." Jeff managed, still trying to wrap his mind around the 'impossible' situation. "I just, you know, could never have expected this, and, well."

"It's really weird - and you think I'm sort of faggot freak." Don finished, more than a bit bitter.

"No, no!" Jeff said, quickly, holding up his hands pleadingly. "Nothing like that! Like I said, it all just. took me by surprise, is all."

"Oh, so you don't think I must be some sort of fag or something for wanting to see what being a woman is like, huh?" Don asked, doubtfully.

"Well, um." Jeff said, with a wry grin and a shrug. "To be completely honest, I don't know what to think. I mean, we've talked and stuff, so I know you're not some sort of complete weirdo or nutcase, but I've never really considered the whole thing, myself. Obviously you have, and have decided it's okay, but I haven't even had time to think about it yet, much less come to any conclusions."

"Oh." Don said, blinking. Of all the possible responses somebody might give to finding out her 'dirty little secret', she hadn't expected this one. She gnawed on her somewhat fuller lower lip for a second, trying to figure out how best to deal with this.

She, herself, didn't think there was anything wrong with her interest in 'trying out' femininity for awhile. It wasn't that she was dissatisfied with her male life, not at all - on the contrary, she'd had a somewhat more active than average sex life as a man, and enjoyed it very much. She certainly didn't have any plans of remaining female permanently. Nevertheless, she'd always wondered what life was like for women, wondering if some of the things they did, some of the ways they behaved, were strictly ingrained societal 'habits', or something inherent to their gender.

Having found a chance to find out, she'd taken it. Not that she hadn't 'thought twice' about it - but not because she felt it was wrong, but because she might have to cope with somebody finding out about it who would. That was one of the reasons she'd come up to the privacy of the cottage to try it out.

She'd delayed the transformation for a bit, hoping Jeff would be heading home soon - but, curiosity had finally overcome caution, and she'd gone ahead with it - full expecting that, when Jeff found out, he'd be disgusted by her behavior.

However, though obviously confused and uncertain, he was willing to keep an open mind - which was more than she'd ever expected. In fact, if she'd known that this would be the case, she might not have waited.

A thought that caused a snort and a wry smile. "What?" Jeff asked - while staring at her tits.

She opened her mouth to tell him off - then hesitated.

It was now painfully obvious that Jeff had a 'thing' for big tits. Don knew that certain men subscribed to the idea 'bigger was better', though she herself, as a man, was a 'more than a handful is a waste' kind of guy. Still, there were damned few women with tits as big as hers, and apparently none of them were close, personal friends of Jeff - so, in a way, it might be that his very fetish was making this 'easier' for him to deal with. Sort of 'at least if she's going to be a woman, it's good that she's one with huge tits' sort of rationale.

Besides - though it was a bit uncomfortable for her to admit, if even only to herself, the obviously appreciative way he was looking at her, knowing as she did that he didn't find her as 'freakish' as she found herself, created a guilty sort of pleasure.

.and she wasn't speaking just emotionally, either, because his open enjoyment of her form created a certain warmth in her gut - or a little south of there.

It was more than a little disquieting for Don to realize that her body was providing completely natural responses to a male body that was aroused by her own - but she could tell by the flush and the look in Jeff's eyes that he found his own arousal to be less-than- completely-comfortable, as well, and she was a bit surprised to find just how much she enjoyed the thought of both of them stewing in the strange mix of reactions her change in gender was causing.

After all, she'd become female to see what being a woman was like, and that had included, from the very start, dealing with feminine arousal. Though she certainly hadn't planned on it occurring with anybody who knew her masculine past, she had planned to interact, socially, with men, and see what it felt like as a woman.

.though, feeling guilty and excited and queasy and unsure, all at the same time, she'd never been able to come even close to a 'firm' decision on how far she was going to go down that road.

Still finding that her curiosity and 'perverse' interest was balancing her 'innate' disgust and discomfort, she decided, rather than chew Jeff out again, to say nothing about the way his eyes kept going to her huge boobs, and instead explain what had caused her snort of amusement.

"You know, if it wasn't for holding off to see if you were going to leave before I did this, I might have had to deal with these monsters for a whole week, instead of just a day." She said, putting her hands under her huge tits and hefting them slightly - and, again, feeling that guilty rush of 'forbidden' pleasure at the bulged-eye look her actions caused to cross Jeff's beet-red face. "Originally, I planned on changing the very night I got here, then spending almost all week as a woman before changing back and being gone before Frank, the boss' son, got here Friday. As it is, I'm going to be like this less than twenty-four hours before I change back to make sure I'm out of here before Frank shows up tomorrow."

Jeff look confused for a second - then his face went pale. "Don - what day do you think it is?" He asked, carefully.

"Thursday." She replied, promptly, if a bit confused - and then, seeing Jeff's face pale all the more: "Isn't it.?" "Don - today's Friday." Jeff said, nervously.

"No, it can't be." She tried to deny - even while her suddenly frantic mind cut through the mix of emotions, anxiety, and anticipation she'd been wallowing in since her original plan had been flummoxed by Jeff's arrival, less than half an hour after her own.

"Oh, shit!" She said, her own face now stark white as her eyes bulged. "Jeff - Frank's going to be here any time now!" "You'd better change yourself back - fast!" Jeff urged.

"I can't!" She all-but-wailed, weak-kneed in near panic as she considered the situation. "It takes a couple of hours to prep the spell!"

"Well, then." Jeff floundered, making it up as he went along. "We'll say that you're. Your sister, and didn't know that 'your brother' had let somebody else."

"No, no." Don said, waving a hand. "That won't work! Frank and I have never met, but his dad - my boss - told him quite a bit about me, and vice-versa. Worse than that, Jeff - this is a really big deal! Frank's other plans for 'something special' with his girlfriend on the six-month anniversary of their first date fell through, and I arranged this. Mr. Welland 'owes me big' for this one - and if the cottage isn't available for Frank and his girlfriend, I can kiss that promotion goodbye! Oh, shit, Jeff - I'm screwed!"

Jeff drummed his hands on his legs - then shook his head. "No, you're not. Quick, grab all your stuff out of your cottage, and bring it over to mine. We'll just say you're a friend of mine visiting me - and then, once Frank and his girl are gone. how long are they staying?"

"Just the weekend - They'll be leaving Monday morning." Don supplied, feeling relief seep in. "Fine - so, Monday you change back, after they've left, and nobody's the wiser." Jeff said. "Yeah - yeah, that'll work." Don nodded, sighing with relief. "Thanks, Jeff - you're a lifesaver."

"No problem." Jeff said, as they hurried over to Don's place. Together, they quickly began moving Don's stuff over to Jeff's cottage, to leave the place looking ready for use - and Jeff blushed as he carried a load of clothing over to his place, and handed it over to Don, who paused in the work to change into something more 'suitable'. Belatedly, Jeff realized that he should have expected Don to have this sort of thing if he'd planned to spend an entire week as a woman, but still uncomfortable realizing that the simple skirts and blouses belonged to the same 'guy' he'd sat and drank beers with.

They just barely made it. A freshly-changed Don had only just parked his Explorer behind Jeff's Jeep when a dusty blue CRV hove into view on the rutted access road, bouncing and jostling down the rough pathway until it pulled in to the exact same spot in Don's driveway that the Explorer had filled moments before.

Nervously, Jeff and Don stood at the front of the cottage, watching as the tanned, gym-toned young man climbed out of the car and walked around to get the door for the slender, petite little blonde woman. Catching sight of Jeff and Don, the new arrivals walked over.

"Hey, there." The strawberry-blond man, clad only in a ragged pair of cut-off jean shorts, called as they drew closer. His lean body was deeply tanned, and he moved with all the athletic grace of his healthy twenty-one or -two years could provide. "You must be Jeff, right? I'm Frank Welland. My dad's Don's boss."

"Pleased to meet you." Jeff allowed, shaking the younger man's hand. "I guess Don told you about me, huh?"

"Well, I never met him, actually - but my Dad passed along some stuff when Don said I could steal his cabin for a weekend, and one of the things he mentioned was that we'd be sharing a backyard if you were up here - which you are." Frank said, grinning boyishly - as the 'pretty little thing' he had his arm around squeezed the hand resting on the flat stomach so well displayed by her short denim skirt and bikini top.

"Oh, sorry." Frank said, unabashed, as he squeezed the short, slender, and almost too-cute golden blonde girl back. "Jeff, this is Cindy."

"Hi, there!" Cindy said, her voice as perky as the taut, conical breasts behind the triangles of fabric that formed her small bikini top. Smilingly, practically bouncing on the toes of her pink-and-white sneakers with barely-repressed energy, the vivacious blonde turned her attention to Don - as did her boyfriend.

It would be an understatement to say that the new woman felt flustered by the attention of the two strangers. Though she'd slipped into clothing better suited for her new gender, she still felt hideously conspicuous - for, while the loose, knee-length white skirt fit her pneumatic hips well enough, and the cork-soled sandals were only a trifle loose on her feet, the 'modest' off-white cable-knit sweater seemed anything but, as it had never been designed to house the huge breasts that now pulled it so taut that the front of the hem stood two inches higher and another inch out from the waistband of her skirt, molded even to the underside of her huge tits.

They'd already discussed how she'd introduce herself, when the time came, using a feminized version of her middle name for easy remembrance, so at first she didn't realize why Jeff stiffened slightly at her side when she blurted out, "I'm Jeff's girlfriend, Marci."

"Oh, a couple of couples!" Cindy bubbled happily. "How perfect!"

It was only then that Don/'Marci' realized that she hadn't just said 'friend', as she'd planned - but girlfriend.

Wondering how the hell she'd made that slip, she numbly watched as Jeff nervously agreed to Frank's request to help unpack the CRV - leaving her alone with Cindy.

"This place is just sooo romantic!" The irrepressibly perky blonde said, eagerly. "I can see why guys would bring us girls up here. There's just something about the privacy and the feeling of being surrounded by nature that tends to get us closer to our.. 'primal' selves, isn't there?"

Cindy threw in a wink and a giggle with the word 'primal', but the knowing, sexual look and leer didn't register on a still-flustered 'Marci' until she'd already agreed with Cindy.

"So - how long have you known Jeff?" Cindy asked, as Marci rather numbly led the petite blonde on a tour of the property.

"Oh - for a while now." Marci supplied, vaguely.

"This weekend is the six-month anniversary of our first date." Cindy supplied, with a loving little sigh. "Sometimes, I can't believe how lucky I am. I mean, a lot of guys as handsome as Frank are so cock-sure of themselves that they never bother to learn the right way to please a woman, but Frank's not like that. He's so kind and so attentive, and such a wonderful lover."

As Marci listened, wide-eyed, she had to fight down the urge to act shocked as Cindy blithely described, in overwhelming, intimate explicit detail, just how Frank was a fabulous lover.

"So - how about Jeff?" Cindy finally asked, thankfully oblivious at how stunned Marci was by the frank 'girl talk' from a complete stranger.

"Uh.. we haven't had sex yet." Marci managed.

"Oh? I thought you said you've been together for awhile?" Cindy asked, pouting cutely in confusion.

Still stunned by the incredible detail this complete stranger had just used in describing her sex life, Marci was to shaken to do anything but blurt out 'the truth': "We've been friends for a while, but I didn't even find myself thinking about having sex with him until."

She caught herself, stunned not only to be saying this - but to be feeling this. Shocked, she tried to pin down the very moment when she'd unconsciously started considering Jeff as a valid sexual partner - only to feel even more stunned as she realized what she was thinking, consciously instead of subconsciously now.

Thankfully, Cindy was what Marci's mother would have called 'not the sharpest tool in the shed', and she misconstrued both the words and the expression on Marci's face.

"Oh - and so you came up here for that." She said, almost matter-of-fact about it. "Good for you! I just hope your carnal weekend of exploring sex with each other won't be inhibited by Frank and I being here. The first few days, when you and your new lover try to do just about everything sexually possible for a man and a woman to do together, is always the most exciting part of a new relationship, discovering all the different ways you can give each other - and yourselves - pleasure."

Marci just couldn't come up with a response to that, a bright blush on her face as she considered Cindy's incredibly candid sexual nature. Was she some sort of bubble-headed bimbo - or did most women talk like this when they were alone together.?

"Speaking of which - here come our lover-boys now." Cindy said with a giggle, running ahead to literally throw herself into Frank's arms.

.and as Marci watched Jeff walking towards her, she was shocked to find her thick nipples quickly swelling into full engorgement, as a moist warmth began to build between her taut thighs.

She was getting turned on at the sight of Jeff - really, really turned on, her body almost seeming to burn with a pleasant fire as he grew closer, her breath becoming shorter and faster as her body quite literally tingled with sexual anticipation.

Of course, there was no way on earth that the new woman could possibly have realized that what she was feeling was almost a 'post hypnotic suggestion'. After Cindy's explicit rendition of everything she and Frank did together, her mind was almost inexorably drawn to those thoughts - and, well aware that such actions provided physical pleasure in the female body, it also wasn't completely surprising that she'd begin feeling arousal at the 'illicit' thoughts Cindy had unwittingly started with her assumption as to Jeff and Marci's purpose at the cottage this weekend.

On the other hand, it was marginally conceivable that Marci, had she thought long and hard about it, might have realized that she was a 'hormonal virgin', never before having experienced the powerful effects of female hormones generated during feminine arousal. She hadn't, however - which was she didn't realize that, right now, the two best things she could do were 1) avoid Jeff like the plague, and; 2) take a very long, cold shower or bath.

Instead, she smiled unsteadily at Jeff and followed him towards his cottage, unaware that the previously inexperienced hormones running through her system were causing her to get 'drunk' - and horny.

Which any girl could have told her, was a bad mix - especially when she didn't have the socially-ingrained 'training' on how to cope with this situation. After all, men didn't have to worry nearly as much about the 'drunken sex' angle as women did, and for good reason.

Therefore, Marci had no idea just what she was putting herself into a position for as , feeling light-headed, aroused, and very, very good, despite her confusion, she followed Jeff into the cottage, her body trembling with desire - while her inhibitions were being steadily eroded by her 'hormonal high'.

Which explained why, after shutting the door behind himself and turning back in her direction, Jeff once again almost helplessly stared at her huge tits - and she didn't get angry at him.

Instead, her body flushed with pleasurable arousal, her nerve-endings tingling with desire, and her mind clouded with the drug-like effects of the hormonal surge, she didn't think it a really, really bad idea, merely a nerve-racking one, to hesitantly ask: "Would you. like to see them?"

"Ex. Excuse me?" Jeff blurted, shocked.

"My tits." She offered, blushing - but excited. "Would you like to see them.?"

Jeff swallowed heavily, and tried to remind himself that 'Marci' was really a man - but that didn't help, because men didn't have huge tits, and she most certainly did.

.and, a confirmed tit-man, he certainly wanted to see them.

"Are you sure you want to.?" He asked - and because he hadn't thought 'Don' would wish to be a woman when 'he' had, didn't see this new part of her as being 'out of character'.

Drunk on hormones, neither did she - as she smiled nervously in response - then reached down and, after a deep breath, nervously peeled the sweater off.

"Do you.. like them?" She asked, hesitantly, dropping the sweater on the floor and trying to figure out what to do with her hands as, heart pounding, she waited for his answer.

He stared hungrily at her huge, swaying breasts, well aware of the growing pressure in his pants as his cock began to harden. "Yeah." He said, a bit hoarsely. "They're.. magnificent."

She shivered in pleasure at the rush his words caused to run through her, much too far gone to be worried about the way she was responding to him - or the way she was leading him towards what would be an inevitable destination, had she been thinking that far ahead. Instead, 'drunk', she was letting physical pleasure guide her, more 'doing' than 'thinking'.

"Would you like to.. touch them?" She offered, reaching up and lightly caressing her own, massive breasts enticingly while she smiled at him, even the last traces of nervousness fading in the face of the wonderful 'high' she was getting from being aroused - and, not- quite-mistaken eely, but with too much emphasis, mentally connecting the pleasure she was feeling with the thought of acting femininely sexual with Jeff.

Jeff, however, was having his own little hormonal condition. Having been a man, of course, he'd experienced this situation before, and had a much better handle on his male arousal than Marci did on her female one - but, as Marci was currently undergoing in spades, so had men throughout history let their little head override their big one, even when they were experienced with dealing with the 'pleasure, pleasure!' instinct that came from the hormonal lowering of inhibitions.

In the end, Jeff's well-meaning - but unwittingly useless - decision was 'if she's okay with it.'

Stepping forward, he reached out his trembling hands, and cupped her massive, firmly soft tits in his hands. The both sighed in pleasure.

"Oh, that feels nice." Marci half-sighed, letting her eyes close and her head loll back as Jeff fulfilled his fetish fantasy, massaging and caressing her massive breasts. Without thinking about it, she sagged against him, turning until her back was against him and he was reaching around to continue playing with the huge breasts that overflowed his eager hands.

Without much conscious thought, she started rubbing one hand over her now-soaked cunt - and then, again without much thought, unzipped the skirt and let it, then the panties underneath, fall to the ground to allow better access to the source of that wonderful moist fire that was burning her nerves with anticipatory pleasure.

His hands full of naked, obviously horny woman, it wasn't at all surprising that Jeff had a raging hard-on as he continued stroking her warm flesh, hands now straying over more of her body, though always returning to her huge tits.

.until she turned around and began grinding her damp pussy against his thigh, while he found the taut mounds of her full ass made adequate fondling material, as well.

"Fuck me." She said, hungrily.

Jeff blinked, not exactly adverse to the idea, but uncertain if it was a good idea. "Are you sure." "Yes! She all-but shouted. "Fuck me, Jeff - for God's sake, fuck me!"

She wasn't exactly thinking anymore. Overwhelmed by hormones she didn't know how to handle, not realizing that she was acting strangely, all she knew was a need - a need that could be satisfied if only Jeff would. "Fuck me now!"

Not bothering to wait for an answer, she began dragging him towards the bed in the open-concept cottage, her hands tearing at his clothing.

She was, quite literally, more horny then she'd ever been in her life - more horny then she'd known it was possible to be, since the only arousal she'd ever experienced was male arousal, which in it's way was mostly external, a pressure, a need to 'get rid' of something - while, as an aroused woman, she felt 'hollow' and empty, feeling a desperate need to be filled.

Women, born to it, and experiencing the first tentative types of arousal and desires as they slowly entered into the full bloom of womanhood, got used to it, learned how to 'plan ahead', what to do when they first started feeling aroused so that they could control when and where and how they released it. Marci, with none of this experience, had let her arousal build, unfettered, to a height that any 'natural' woman would never have let happen unless they were already in the preparatory stages of sex - which explained the women's interest in foreplay, the stage where men worked to overcome the oh-so-necessary inhibitions women learned to build into themselves.

Contrary to popular belief, it wasn't that women were less 'turned on' by sex - it was the fact that they were so much more susceptible to it that caused them to be so frightened of it, to the point of near paranoia. That's why they were so neurotic about when and for who they risked lowering their hard-won defenses for.

Marci had no defenses, no inhibitions - and no clue.

She just needed - and so she all-but-threw Jeff onto the bed, no longer seeing him as another person, but as the device to fulfill the raging need she felt.

Eagerly, her mind practically reverted to the primal stage of rutting lust, she climbed up on top of the bed and grabbed Jeff's now-hard cock by it's base as she grinned a feral smile down at him - and impaled her sopping cunt onto his cock with a nearly triumphant howl of physical and emotional satisfaction.

Stunned, Jeff could do little but lay back and let Marci fuck the living hell out of him.

She was like a wild animal. Screaming, panting and grunting in pleasure, she thrust herself on him, rotating her hips as her legs flexed and worked, driving her not only up and down, but forward and back, and even a sort of swiveling side-to-side motion, vastly increasing the wanted - needed - pleasure as her desire, risen to nearly the level of pain, controlled her wildly thrashing body.

The fact that her wild, rhythmic gyrations also created more pleasure for Jeff than he'd ever experienced before wasn't even secondary - it went completely unnoticed by the possessed woman who rode him frenetically, her huge tits bouncing and shaking wildly as her rapidly sweat-slicked hair thrashed and rippled around a face locked in an expression of incalculable sexual satisfaction as he savored every nerve-rendering wave of pleasure that washed through her from her wildly rhythmic thrusting.

When those rapidly mounting waves of pleasure culminated in her first female orgasm, she was anything but shy about letting the world know about it, screaming out in mindless, orgasmic pleasure even as she continued pounding herself atop Jeff's cock, her sopping cunt tightly enveloping it in a slick, warm embrace that, mid-way through her second orgasm, led him to writhe beneath her, pumping his seed into her tight cunt as he added his own voice to hers.

.and still she didn't stop. For her, nothing existed at that moment but the sexual creature she'd become, and orgasms for women weren't the draining influence they were on men. Even as his cock began to soften, she continued trying to increase the pleasure she felt, and only when she couldn't keep the shrinking organ in the warm embrace of her cunt anymore did she stop her pleasure-seeking thrusting.

.to throw herself down with her head buried between his legs, where her warm, wet mouth could begin licking and sucking at his cock to get it hard again.

At first, she wasn't even truly aware of what she was doing. All that mattered was getting the cock hard again, so she could continue fucking it wildly, feeding that wonderful addiction for pleasure that was oh-so-sensible, because if anybody could feel that good, they should.

.but, as her arousal slowly began to wind down in the interval when she was stroking, sucking and licking his cock, she felt hazy, poorly formed thoughts begin to return, and she idly continued sucking on his now-hard cock as she tried to track down these reforming thoughts.

Which was why, lost between a pleasure-addicted thoughtless sex-drone and a self-conscious individual, she was caught off guard by the almost forgotten cock she was still lightly sucking on pumped a small, sticky load of cum into her mouth. Almost instinctively, she swallowed the thick, gooey cum, feeling its warmth trail down into her stomach.

.and then came to a dead stop, mouth still wrapped around Jeff's cock, as she finally realized what was going on. She'd just fucked Jeff.

In fact, she'd not only fucked him, she'd given him a blow-job.

.and, despite the fact that part of her was damned sure she should be disgusted by what she had just done.. she wasn't.

Of course, even with her mind working somewhat again, she wasn't nearly free of the hormonal high, the exotic chemicals still floating around in her blood-stream - which was why she was not only able to look at what she had done/was doing with equanimity.

.but with pleasure, because she was still associating the enjoyable 'high' with sex, which was not exactly true - and the pure physical pleasure caused by sex, which was.

Which was why she was stunned though, 'My God - I love being a sexually active woman!' wasn't completely off base. It was simply several times more emphatic than it 'really' should have been.

.but Marci had no way of knowing that, and so accepted the premise as-is.

"God, that was. fantastic!" She said, stunned, as she finally let Jeff's cock drop from her mouth and turn her stunned gaze on him.

"It sure was." He said, numbly - then blinked and shook his head, looking at her. "Uh.. are you sure you're okay with what just happened.?"

"Okay.?" She asked, brain still working at a sub-bar level. "Jeff, I just fucked - and sucked - you. and I loved it!"

Used to the way male arousal dropped off almost immediately after orgasm, she didn't realize that this lingering feeling of near- euphoria was completely natural for a woman, and would have continued regardless of who had provided her with orgasm, even if it had been herself, alone. Instead, she erroneously connected it to who she'd had sex with, and what she'd done with him.

"I. I guess the reason I've always wanted to see what being a woman was like was because, deep down, I knew that I was really a woman." She finally 'concluded' - without realizing that her conclusions were about as trust-worthy as that of somebody who'd just consumed an entire bottle of Vodka.

.and, of course, the fact that she would feel euphoric every time she did have sex with Jeff would only continue to reinforce the mistaken conclusion.

As she would find out as, given her new 'nature', it would never occur to her not to act on the arousal she'd quite naturally feel whenever something served to make her think of sex.

Which, given Jeff's obsession with her tits, and the fact that the many times a day he stared at them, which of course caused her to think about sex, which led to arousal, all meant that Jeff - who deep down, still felt a sliver of doubt that any man could simply 'find out' that he was really supposed to be a sex-crazed woman who'd fuck you at the metaphorical drop of a hat - never really got around to suggesting they take a deeper look at her sudden 'conversion'.

After all, once male or not, correct or not, even slightly perverted or not, Jeff figured that if his now huge-breasted and female nymphomaniac neighbor-turned-girlfriend insisted that she loved fucking and sucking him, he wasn't going to argue with her.

It just wouldn't have been the neighborly thing to do.

SUMMARY: A rich dying man leaves plans for a new body after his death, but, when he wakes after death he finds that he has been double crossed and now has the body of a female store mannequin.

...Never Prosper

By Gunslinger

Nicholas Robert MacKenzie was filthy rich. Nicholas MacKenzie was dying.

Nick MacKenzie was planning to cheat Death.

As he lay in the silk-sheeted bed in his mansion, Nick stared up at the ceiling, feeling the pain deep in his bones, despite the fairly high levels of pain-killers in his system. Once, even smaller doses had erased the pain completely - now, even the highest doses merely muted it. It was a sure sign that his body was not too far from failing completely.

Yet Nick's sallow, emaciated face beneath its mop of raven hair showed no apprehension at the thought that his body might simply give up and quit on him after forty-two years. The once devilishly handsome man was not the type who took a loss easily - in fact, his fortune had been built on the willingness to do whatever it took to win. So, when he'd first been diagnosed, he set out to find a way to cheat the bony man with the scythe.

In the first year of his sickness, he'd dumped a fair amount of money into funding. Medical research, devoted to finding a cure - plus the bonus of recouping the money if and when the cure was found. But it quickly became obvious that, while a cure might be found, it wouldn't be soon enough for him.

So, Nick had turned to more... arcane avenues. And he'd found the answer. A Golem.

In an ancient text, Nick had discovered a method by one might transfer their 'Anima' - their life-force - to a sculpture or representation of another person - or animal, for that matter. The person's life-force would animate it, bring it to life. Moreover, the 'soul' inside the representation would slowly take on the attributes of the representation - a soul in a statue of a strong, young man, would become a strong, young man.

So, Nick had made some arrangements through his oldest and most trusted friend. "Lewis?" Nick said, now, his voice husky and weak.

"Yes, Nick?" Lewis Sinclair, his oldest friend - and personal Physician - said, softly. "I think it's time." Nick said. "Is everything ready?"

Lewis nodded, picking up a small, ornate, bowl-like object made of various semi-precious metals. "Yes, Nick."

Lewis helped Nick grab the edge of the bowl, then Nick closed his eyes and began to chant in a strange, flowing tongue, one that had not be heard on the planet for centuries. Despite his weakness, the chants become stronger, more compelling....

...and then Nick MacKenzie went limp, his face going slack.

Gently, Lewis took the bowl from the limp fingers and placed it inside his bag. Then he carefully checked for a pulse, and found none. After a few moments, Lewis walked out into the anteroom, where Nick's closest business partners waited, anxiously.

"That's it - I'm afraid he's gone." Lewis said, softly. "How'd he go?" One of the partners asked.

Lewis sighed. "He was completely out of it by the end, I'm afraid - raved about plans to come back after death, transferring his body into a statue or some such." He shrugged. "I humored him, of course - arguments or excitement would just have hastened the inevitable."

Reaching into his bag, he extracted the object and looked at it, shaking his head. "Poor man actually believed that his soul would be held in here until he was reborn." Shaking his head again, he turned to one of the maids. "Maria, why don't you take this? Maybe you can sell it." he shrugged. "If not - just throw it away."

Nick felt the sudden, strange rushing sensation, as if accelerating at enormous speeds without actually moving - and the, sensations flooded his consciousness.

Even as his senses began to report in the data they were receiving, Nick was awed and amazed that it had worked. Even as he'd finished the chant, and felt the strange pulling sensation, he hadn't been sure it would work. At the last instant of conscious thought, he wasn't sure whether he was destined for a new life - or the afterlife.

Now - in Nick's own stream-of-consciousness, a bare instant later - he was feeling what could only be the signs of a new Earthly life.

He was fairly certain that was the case. After all, Hell wouldn't have the 'mild' torture of laying atop a hard object pressing into the small of the back, and Heaven shouldn't have had any discomfort.

For that matter, Nick realized with a start, he shouldn't have been uncomfortable at all - not if everything had gone according to plan. He shouldn't have been laying on something hard and lumpy...

...or feel so damned strange, like everything was out of balance. He'd expected to feel different in his new body - but this didn't feel right at all.

He opened his eyes.

He was in a darkened room of some sort, the dim light that was visible - which wasn't much - providing only vague shapes in the gloom around him.

Worry began to seep through Nick's gut - this wasn't a place he recognized, and it definitely wasn't where he'd expected to be. Quickly, he sat up, relieving the discomfort from his position - but receiving a whole new slew of strange sensations.

He tried to look down at his new body, but the dim light defeated any attempt to survey himself by sight. Instead, he slowly brought his fingers up to his face, exploring by touch.

His face was smooth under fingers that felt too long, too slender. The contours of his face weren't what he'd expected to feel, to softly molded. His hands slid over lips that felt huge - and very sensitive - then across a too-small chin. The moved across a slender, smooth neck that seemed to be too long, sliding around the back...

He stopped suddenly as his hands touched what felt to be a thick, amazingly soft rope. But it wasn't quite rope, and it seemed to be attached to his head - as a quick tug verified.

"What the fuck is...?" Nick blurted in frustration - then came to a screeching halt, eyes wide in the darkness.

"My voice..." Nick said, softly - and again, the word's he'd spoken emerged all wrong. Not in form or structure, not even in comprehensibility - but in tone and texture.

Because the voice that spoke them was a warm, melodic voice that was...

Frantically, Nick slid his hands down his body, feeling silky-smooth skin slide by as his hands crossed the base of his neck, and started down his chest...

He screamed. No - she screamed. Because, as the sound of the rich, feminine voice had hinted, the slim, feminine hands that graced the ends of Nick's new arms had slid down to encounter to firm, unmistakably feminine mounds, tipped with swollen, sensitive nubs of nipples.

"Holy Shit!" Nick swore in shock and incomprehension, the curse emerging in the new feminine voice of this body. "I'm a woman!"

The verdict was verified when she hesitantly slid one hand across smooth, soft thighs and lightly touched the mound of her crotch, eliciting a slight shudder of repulsed pleasure at the sensations that emerged from her new cunt at the touch.

Yanking her hand away, Nick struggled to understand what could have happened, what could have gone so utterly, horribly wrong. There was only one answer.

"You bastard." Nick hissed, his new contralto going from seductive warmth to fearful cold. "You dirty, double-crossing bastard!"

Despite the fact that her mind was whirling with the enormity of what had happened - who she now was - the overriding emotion of the moment was rage - blinding, white-hot rage that was even enough to temporarily blot out the horror of losing her manhood.

Angrily, Nick struggled upright. The instant she rose to her dainty new feet, pain lanced through her feet and up her legs, white-hot jangles of agony.

Barely able to keep her balance in her new form, Nick's arms pinwheeled frantically as she pushed herself up on her toes. For some reason, her new feet were unable to bear her weight, at least flat-footed. The bones and tendons in her feet were in the wrong configuration, forming a rising arch to her feet and forcing her on tip-toe to avoid the pain.

Wobbling, Nick carefully crossed the room, shins already aching with the effort to keep from settling her heels. Finding a wall, she carefully felt along it, having to take to breaks to rest her leg muscles before she finally found the door she sought.

Opening it, the new woman emerged into what was obviously a store, lit by the yellow-orange light from a sodium street lamp outside the store's large front window.

It was obviously a clothing store, racks full of women's clothing of various designs, some of which were displayed on the artificially perfect figures of the...

The thought - conviction - hit like a sledgehammer, managing to make its way through even the haze of rage that filled Nick. Needing to verify the horrid certainty, she turned and had to only move a few painful feet to find a three-way mirror near the change rooms.

Staring back in the orangish light was a perfect woman. From the long, shapely legs to the slender waist and high, firm breasts, every inch of her new body was utterly flawless. Too flawless, in fact - not a single flaw marred the eerie perfection of the new woman. Her alabaster flesh was more than just smooth - it was perfect, without any variation in tone or coloration other than the darkness of the perfect nipple topping her taut breasts. Likewise, her face was pure perfection, a classic - if somewhat aloof - beauty that was enhanced by the perfect, curved eyebrows and flawless makeup. Her lips were amazingly full and perfectly shaped, and her eyes were huge, dark and mysterious. Her braided hair - which Nick had first mistaken as rope - was lustrous, a rich shade of mahogany with highlights of burnt sienna.

"A mannequin. A fuckin' mannequin!" Nick swore, her perfect, slender hands lightly touching her perfectly formed ass and smooth, gently curved hips. Her rage returned with a vengeance - not only had she become a woman, she'd become one that was so startlingly, perfectly beautiful that she couldn't walk anywhere without drawing attention to her new gender and figure.

It was a carefully crafted fate - one so cunning and cruel that it was almost artistic. Nick had life again - and youth and health, at that. But in a body that was completely alien to the mind that it contained, dooming Nick to a life that she not only didn't want, but didn't know how to live. She had a complete life's worth of experience as a man - but none at being a woman.

Moreover, she'd been dumped into the new life 'cold' - with no friends, no past, no identification or history or help - not even any clothes, her perfectly formed figure as buck naked as if she'd just been born in more than the metaphysical sense of the phrase.

She should have just collapsed, pulled down by the shock and horror of what had been done to her, and the knowledge that there was a lifetime of being outcast, of being a misfit within 'her own' body.

She nearly did collapse with it all - but Lewis, that double-crossing son of a bitch, hadn't counted on Nick's pure will. She might be cursed to spend life in this body until - as was probably expected - she committed suicide to escape. But before she let herself sink into the despair needed to kill herself, she had something that needed to be done. Maybe she would give in and kill herself - but she wasn't going alone.

She was going to take Lewis Sinclair with her.

With her sense of purpose burning bright, pushing her to ignore the horror of being feminized, Nick looked around, knowing what her first step would need to be.

What Nick knew about women's clothing - style or size - wouldn't have filled a scrap of paper. But Nick hadn't become wealthy by being stupid - she knew how to get around the problem even as the fact of the problem registered.

It took a bit of work - most of it done sitting down - but she got what she'd wanted. It had been even easier than expected - because the mannequin she'd picked was, apparently, the same style as the one that had received her 'Anima', coming to life like the statue of the Pygmalion Myth.

Having paid careful attention as to how she had taken the garments off the plaster replica of her new body, it wasn't hard at all to get them on her living version of the same figure.

The black, French-cut lace panties were the simplest. But even the ease with which they went on didn't mitigate the strangeness of the situation. As disgusting as wearing woman's clothes was to her, it wasn't the worst part of it. It was the way the panties felt, sliding up smooth, feminine legs. The way they felt when they were settled snugly into place, taut across her shapely buttocks, flat across her 'empty' crotch. The way it felt as it tightened over the soft mound of her new sex was disturbingly pleasant, enticing enough to make this

- for Nick - unnatural act seem less like the torture it was and more like a boon.

Ignoring the sensations, Nick next pulled on the black nylon stockings. Smooth and silky, they also created an oddly pleasant sensation across her now smooth legs. It took several minutes after she'd pulled the elasticized tops in place before she was satisfied with the nylons - they were a style that had a seam running up the back of each nylon, and that time was spent getting the line straight. Part of Nick's mind was noticing just how good the nylons made her shapely legs look, while the rest of her was disgusted by the fact those fantastic legs belonged to her - and she was doing something that emphasized the shapely contours.

Since the mannequin hadn't been wearing a bra, she was spared the indignity of having to put one on. Instead, she slid into the black silk dress, tugging into place over her svelte form. Almost immediately, she found herself wishing she did have a bra to put on - the feel of silk across her swollen nipples was so sensual, so pleasurable, that it almost seemed blasphemous that something about this situation should feel so damned good. In fact, she even, unconsciously, brought her slender hands up and began to massage her firm, taut breasts through the excitingly sensual silk. The sharp sensation of pleasure that resulted made her realize what she was doing, and she yanked her hands away with a muttered curse, disgusted at herself for unthinkingly trying to prolong a pleasure she should hate experiencing.

Blessedly, the next thing she did was step into the black suede pumps the mannequin had been wearing. As weird as it was to step into dainty, feminine shoes with a four inch heel, Nick was gratified to find she'd been right in supposing her feet - shaped to fit shoes like these - felt comfortable in the heels. So much so, it was like she wasn't wearing any. She balanced easily and naturally atop the slender heels, as her feet had been shaped to wear heels, and her balance in the footwear was perfect.

She quickly discovered, however, that the heels did have one effect - they forced her to walk with a smooth, feminine stride. Her first few steps - long, manly ones - almost pitched her on her face. For a second she was furious that she'd have to resort to moving like a woman - then calmed, realizing that it was actually beneficial. If it hadn't been for the heels forcing her to alter her stride, she would have walked the same way she always had, as a man - a sight that was sure to garner even more attention to her. Being a stunningly beautiful woman was bad enough - the attention she would have got as a stunningly beautiful woman stumping around like a man in heels would have been worse.

She paused for a long moment, looking down at the now naked mannequin that bore such a disturbing resemblance to her new figure. She was looking at it because it wasn't truly nude - a few pieces of expensive gold jewelry glittered at wrist, throat and earlobe. After a long internal debate, Nick finally gave into the logic that was so at odds with her preferences. As much as she didn't want to wear jewelry, the gold was valuable, and she could pawn it. Since the silk dress hugged her figure so tightly - so sensuously - there was no where to hide it. With a sigh, she quickly put on the jewelry, finding the hardest part was getting in the earrings. It was also the most painful, despite the fact that her ears were pre-pierced - she couldn't see what she was doing, and it was her first time trying to put in earrings by touch.

Finally, though, she was ready. Taking one last look around...

...she cursed herself for her stupidity. Shaking her head, she picked up one of the many black purses on a nearby rack. She debated taking off the jewelry, but it wasn't worth the effort, not after the pain she'd gone through to get it on. Instead, she picked three other mannequins of their accessories and dumped her booty into the purse.

Heading for the back - and hopefully, a back exit - she stopped and decided to try the register. It would probably be empty, but...

She was in luck. The tray was, in fact, empty of cash. But there was a small stash of cash under the tray. It wasn't much - two hundred and twenty-five dollars - but it was cash.

Taking it into her purse - God, what an unnerving thought, 'her purse' - Nick headed for the back of the store once more, still seething with the need to find revenge on the bastard who'd sentenced her to womanhood.

The cab pulled to a stop outside the Wyndham Club, and a moment later the rear door swung open.

A long, shapely leg, clad in black nylon, emerged from the open door. The slender heel of the black pump that graced the dainty foot settled onto the curb, then the incredibly toned, perfect muscled of the leg flexed sensuously as the weight was shifted onto that foot.

From the interior of the car emerged - no, flowed - a woman. Her perfect, smooth, alabaster skin seemed to glow like pearl under the carriage lights framing the mahogany doors of the club. She rose to her full height with sensuous grace, her dark, smoldering eyes taking in the scene around her as her full, dark-red-glossed lips pursed slightly.

She moved towards the doors, her stride purposeful. It was a stride that was almost masculine in it's power and confidence, but utterly feminine in it's graceful execution.

The tight-fitting black silk dress the haughty-looking woman wore shimmered in the air, light chasing across the highlight curves of her womanly hips and taut breast. In the cool air the shape of her nipples were clearly visible, revealing that her perfectly formed C-cup breasts, a hint of which was revealed by the dresses neckline, needed no extraneous support or enhancement.

Despite the fact that this woman wasn't a member of the club - a woman so utterly flawless would be remembered easily - the guards not only made no move to stop her, but opened the great wooden doors for her. Barely acknowledging their existence, the tall, lithe woman swept past them imperiously. As they let the doors swing shut - regretfully - on the view of an absolutely perfect derriere, the two men shared a look that spoke volumes.

From the way she moved, the expression on her face, and the clothing she wore, the woman all but shouted that she was utter perfection, and new it. In another woman, that might have been offensive.

But in this woman...

It was simply a statement of fact.

* * * * *

Nick looked around the club with a slight narrowing of her eyes. She'd been nervous, thinking she'd have to finagle her way past the guards-slash-doormen. To her surprise, they hadn't even stopped her - her plan to look like she belonged seemed to have worked. That being the case, she decided to keep with an already proven strategy, and swept down the short staircase and into the bar, forcing herself to move confidently and gracefully, as if this was where she wanted to be, where she had a every reason to be...

Nick was all too aware of the looks the mostly male members of the club were giving her as she strode through bar. The sensation of being given several dozen 'once-overs' made the hair at the back of her neck prickle, but she couldn't afford to show discomfort or tone down the 'feminine act' - instead, she continued to act the way she supposed a woman who looked like her would act in this situation.

The 'hair on the back of her neck' was just a phrase, though. She'd discovered something in the cab on the way over - one of the reasons she looked so eerily perfect was the fact she had no body hair at all, aside from her eyebrows. It wasn't like she'd shaved, or even used a depilatory - no, her preternaturally silky skin appeared to be 'naturally' barren of any follicle, inhumanly smooth and soft. It was only one of the differences she discovered that separated her new form from a 'real' woman.

As she neared the end of the bar, Nick began to worry that the person she'd come to see wasn't going to be there, after all. It was with relief that she spotted Douglas Mason sitting alone in an end booth, sipping at a Brandy - and eyeing her with a speculative look.

Ignoring the look, she strode directly to the booth and slid in.

The athletic, sandy-haired man's rugged face registered surprise and pleasure as she slid into the booth with him, his deep blue eyes searching her glorious face questioningly.

"Excuse me - have we met?" Doug asked, smiling roguishly.

Nick ignored his attempt to charm her. "We have now, Mr. Mason." She said, coolly. "You may call me Angela. Angela DeGuerre."

She'd decided not to try and explain the truth - it was simply too unbelievable. Instead, she'd settled on a name that, in French, meant 'Angel of War' - it seemed fitting.

Not at all put off by her cool demeanor, Doug shrugged. "Very well, Angela - how may I help you?"

Nick/Angela tilted her head. "It's good you phrased it that way - because I require your help. There is a certain person whom I wish to completely and utterly destroy, financially, and you are going to be the means by which I accomplish my goal."

Doug blinked, but his smile didn't slip a notch. "I see. Might I ask who this person is - and why you are looking to destroy him?"

Doug's obvious and frank admiration of her body was getting on Nick/Angela's already frayed nerves. She wanted to reach out and smack that lustful, easy smile off his face. Instead, she reined in her temper and gave Doug the story she'd concocted on the way over.

"Lewis Sinclair." She said, shortly. "Until recently, I was... involved with the late Nick MacKenzie, and was to have received a sizable sum from his estate. Sinclair screwed me out of my money."

"Ah..." Doug replied, knowingly. "I see."

Nick/Angela hated the way the story made her seem like a gold-digging whore, but it was the most logical and believable story she could come up with. Besides, it would make what was sure to come next more believable - and powerful.

Sure enough, Doug didn't disappoint her.

"Well, I'd like to help, Angela, but I don't think I can. Unless, maybe, we can work out some sort of agreement. ?"

Bingo - just what she was waiting for.

"Of course." Angela replied, cool yet slightly smug. "You will receive ten percent of the money I take - which will be done in a completely legal manner, so you needn't worry about the dangers of the law."

Doug shrugged. "I'm not particularly worried about the law, miss. However, I was thinking of another arrangement - something not as... tangible as cash."

Angela leaned forward, her full lips curving to display her perfect, white teeth in a predatory grin. "Of course. Shall we say that ten percent. and I don't send a certain envelope, containing the copies of your real 1997 earnings, to the IRS."

That got Doug - he blinked, and his smile faltered in surprise. "How?"

He cut himself short - then his smile broadened and he eyed her with equal amounts of lust and respect. "I see you're a woman after my own heart. Since only I and Nick knew about that caper, you must have gotten it from him. You must be very persuasive."

"I am." Angela replied confidently, having the upper hand. Or, so she thought.

Instead, Doug just laughed. "However, he couldn't tell you what he didn't know. The fact that I doctored that information, for example."

Though it stunned her to the core to discover that her 'Ace in the Hole' was nothing but a pitiful Three of Clubs, Angela didn't let a trace of it show. "Oh?"

Doug nodded. "So. You see, I've always believed that a secret known by more than one person isn't a secret - as you so amply demonstrated. So, I doctored the files. If the IRS ever gets their hands on it, it's Nick who goes - would have gone, that is - to jail, his cash confiscated. "

He trailed off suddenly at the look on Angela's face - then acquired a similar look.

In space of minutes, her plans for revenge had vanished - then been resurrected, stronger than ever.

Because, after all, the person now responsible for that fortune was Lewis Sinclair. Send the files, and...

"It seems we might be able to reach an agreement after all." Doug said, arrogant in his new-found leverage. "Perhaps we should see what you have to offer...?"

Angela knew exactly what that meant - but the thought created such a wave of revulsion she had to stall long enough to find another bargaining chip. Without any forethought, she let the first rejoinder that occurred to her fall from her mouth.

"What I have to offer is worth far more than that revenge." She stated coldly - realizing, even as she said it, how it sounded. Then, to her shock, Doug looked at her thoughtfully - and nodded agreement.

"You're right." Doug said, and it was a struggle for Angela not to show her surprise. "I can't count how many women I've bedded over the years - but they've just been diversions. You... well, you're a lot more than just a spectacular body, Miss DeGuerre."

Strangely enough, she was flattered by the comment. Not necessarily the part about her spectacular body, no matter how true it was - but she was still 'Nick' inside, in personality - and that was what had garnered the praise, even if Doug didn't realize it.

"Very well - what are you proposing?" Angela asked - more to keep from lapsing into a shocked silence than any real desire to hear the answer. She knew what he wanted, and the thought disgusted her to her very core.

Doug was full of surprises, however. "Miss DeGuerre, you have all the chips. I have something you want, but it's not that important to you. You, however, are what I want. So - what will it take to get what I want?"

Still mentally off balance - although she didn't let her cool, confident demeanor crack - Angela used an instinctive ploy to buy more time. She needed it - everything was going so 'wrong' so fast that she couldn't quite keep up. "Perhaps, to make sure that we're absolutely clear, you should tell me what - exactly - you wish to... purchase."

"Hmmm... Yes, I know that you're the woman I've been looking for..." Doug said quietly, eyes glittering with many emotions. He'd expected either outrage or an immediate - almost desperate - offer to get what she could out of a deteriorating situation. But no - she remained composed and cool, ready to take anything and hold her own. He looked at her thoughtfully, knowing what he wanted - but not knowing what he could 'afford'. After all, this was an extraordinary woman, in body and mind, and the only woman Doug felt was his equal - or, perhaps, the yin to his yang.

"I want you, Miss Deguerre. To live with me, to work with me to expand my - our - fortunes. To pleasure me with your body - or let me pleasure you with mind. I don't want a slave, or a concubine. I don't even, necessarily, want a wife. I want a partner, in and out of bed, one who is willing - if, perhaps, not necessarily eager - to complement my every talent with her own. To make each of us more than we could be alone."

Angela couldn't get her balance - this admission, this offer, stunned her. She was expecting sex - but this was much more, a sweeping offer. What he wanted was more than just her for him - it was an 'us'.

Lost, struggling to balance thought against revulsion, a lost past against an unwanted future, Angela did the only thing she could think of.

She answered without answering.

"I see." It was a fight to keep her voice level, a little cool, only mildly interested. "Quite a commitment you're asking. Lifetime? I don't consider that an option. After all - you must bore me quickly."

Doug looked at her, this woman who held no cards at all to bargain with - except the highest card of all, the wildcard to beat all wildcards.

Herself.

Never in his life had he ever wanted something so much - the intensity of his need was frightening. He could have almost anything he wanted - almost. But what he wanted - needed - right now was this, the one thing he knew he could never really own. It was a challenge, an impossible challenge that drew him on. He knew he could never beat her, never be better than her - but he also could not let himself be bested by her. He had to fight this one to a draw. No matter what it cost, his personality demanded he couldn't walk away, and hers ensured he couldn't really 'win' by force, or threat, or money...

So, he gave in. Completely and utterly.

"Fair enough." He agreed, raising one brow. "Here's my offer then - we give each other anything and everything the other one wants. If either of us fail to do so - than it's over and we go our separate ways."

The sheer enormity of the offer staggered the already off-balance Angela. Anything she wanted at any time - or she could ask for something impossible and not get it, thus having the right to just walk away. It was, by any definition, the most generous offer than could ever be made.

But it was a double edged sword - for she, too, would be bound into the agreement, and if she failed, she'd loose that incredible offer of anything she wanted. Having nothing at all right now, no history, no friends, job, home - hell, even her name wasn't really hers.

But the things she'd have to do...

She quashed the thought with a more immediate one. If she agreed, she could make her first request that he turn over the files. Once that was done... then should could leave whenever he made the offer she couldn't stomach, and still be ahead by having accomplished what she'd set out to do.

"Very well." She said, coolly. She stretched one slender, dainty hand over the table, and Doug shook it almost reverently, a strange look on his face.

Still with the strange, unreadable expression on his face, Doug dug his cell phone from his inside pocket and dialed a number.

"Jack? Doug." He said into the phone, his eyes never leaving Angela's face. "You know the 'Double-Back' file? That's right, in the Just- In-Case section. Activate it."

There was a short pause, then Doug's eyes reluctantly left Angela's face to deal with whatever had been said at the other end. "Yes, God damn it, I know! That's why I want you to activate it now." A short pause. "Jack - you don't need to know why, you just have to do it. Got it. ? Good."

He snapped the phone shut, then made a gesture with his free hand while he tucked the phone away with the other. "That's it - tomorrow morning the IRS is going to receive an anonymous file from a 'concerned citizen'."

Angela wasn't positive she could trust that it had been done - but she couldn't act like she didn't trust him, either. Right now, she had to play along until she was either sure he'd gone through with it - or sure he'd conned her. Until then, there was nothing she could do."

"Good." She said, striving to sound satisfied, as if she believed it had really been done - yet also seem to say that, if he was screwing with her, she'd find out. "I think that call for a drink."

"Doug's mouth twitched and he swallowed. "Sure. But why don't we go to my house and. "

Angela cut him short, knowing where this was heading. She wouldn't outright refuse, because that would put an end to this little arrangement - but that didn't mean she wouldn't see how far it would stretch, either.

"Our house." Angela said, holding up a slender finger.

It didn't even phase Doug. "Sorry - our house. I - we - have some very nice Scotch in the cellar, and we can. talk more freely."

Knowing exactly what the hesitancy before the word 'talk' had been, Angela opened her mouth to refuse, to end this dangerous agreement...

...and, instead, smiled coolly. "Sounds acceptable."

The thought had occurred an instant before she screwed up big time. Just before the first word had left her mouth, refusing, she realized, with a sinking feeling, that with little money and no ID she had nowhere else to go for the night. The thought of Doug trying to get her to sleep with him was a compelling reason to get out now - but she had realized what would happen to a stunningly gorgeous woman wandering the streets alone. Suddenly, having to deal with Doug wasn't as bad as the alternative. She was almost positive that she wouldn't have to worry about honest-to-God rape with him.

So, using the last of her willpower, she forced herself to seem complete at ease - almost eager - as she headed for the door.

Of course, not having been a woman for very long, it didn't even occur to Angela to wait 'demurely' for Doug to take the lead, or even walk abreast of him. She merely started for the door, leaving him to hastily drop some money on the table and scurry to catch up.

The unintended, imperious action only served to reinforce Doug's perception of her as a powerful, self-confident woman.

Like no other he had ever met was the way he actually thought of her - and in that context he was absolutely right, if for the wrong reasons.

"No. You mix the drinks - I won't be that long." Angela suggested - ordered - Doug as she turned away and headed for the stairs. Doug's face took on an odd expression, but he didn't argue - knowing what would happen if he did.

Part of Angela wished he would. She didn't want to be tossed out on the street - by having an excuse to end this awkward situation would have been all she'd need.

As she climbed the huge, sweeping staircase, she wished a lot more. Like her old male body back. Even now, some time into 'her' new life, she was all too aware of a myriad of sensation inimical to her new gender. The way she swayed atop the graceful heels, and the way her wider, womanly hips swiveled with each step. The strangely pleasant sensation of air flowing over nyloned legs, and the equally pleasurable - and disturbing - sensation of silk sliding over sensitive, feminine nipples.

But despite her wishes, nothing happened. Her quota of magic for a lifetime had been used up in getting her here, and although it was probably better than being dead she still hadn't come to terms with a life of femininity.

As soon as they'd arrived at the huge mansion, Angela's first action was her decision to explore 'her' new house. It wasn't curiosity. It was a preemptive move to avoid the one request that she was sure Doug was soon to make, as well as to give her time to think, to try and let her befuddlement fade.

It wasn't necessarily a good thing, though. Before, she'd had rage - then confusion - to help fight the feelings of despair, disgust and horror that threatened to seep in. Now, she had to force her facile mind into other tracks before she could dwell on the reality of a life that was to be lived as a woman - and a stunningly gorgeous one at that.

One of the things she forced her mind to turn to was the mystery of Doug. Sure, she was absolutely gorgeous, if a little haughty-looking, in this new form. But she still didn't understand Doug's strange reactions, his desire to 'posses' her. Whatever drove him, it was something beyond her current understanding, and that mystery was enough to distract her from her womanhood - yet, ironically, was intrinsically tied up in her new gender, as well. It was a dangerous tightrope for her mind to walk, yet she had nothing better to occupy her mind, and she desperately needed the diversion.

She was halfway through the upstairs bedrooms when many things became blindingly obvious - all from the simple action of flicking a light switch.

For an instant, Angela's mind didn't really comprehend the images her eyes were receiving as she stared at the items in the once- elegant bedroom, so out of place in such surrounding.

Clothing - sort of. In various shades, formed from leather. Some with spikes, some with chains, some with less identifiable accessories.

Then there was the pictures that covered the walls of the room. Many poses, many different qualities and sizes, they shared a common theme - women (mostly 'butch' types) doing... things to men. Not necessarily pleasant things.

But the one thing that her eyes kept returning to, over and over, was the item in the center of the room that explained Doug's obsession with her.

It was a figure, dressed in an outfit of black leather. In one stiff, formed hand rested a whip, and a leather cap was atop her head. The figure was a department store mannequin.

It was Angela.

The same mannequin that had been the determining factor of Angela's new form was the fantasy woman that Doug kept hidden in his room of perversion. A closet submissive who longed for domination, he'd chosen this unattainable, perfect 'woman' as the centerpiece for his obsession - only, in Angela, she'd somehow appeared in his life, and fantasy and reality had intermingled, presenting possibilities that Doug had never dreamed could come true.

Stunned, Angela approached the figure, her wide, sultry mouth opening in mild shock as she stared at the figure dressed all in black leather.

For a long moment, Angela simply stared - then, like a bombshell, the realization hit. The answer to all her problems - sort of. A guaranteed life - and one of luxury. One where she would have the upper hand at all times, where she would be in complete control, her every whim fulfilled by a man who's ultimate fantasy consisted of being her willing slave.

Yet - the price...

The price would entail, to some degree, embracing her new gender. Of using it, as a tool, to lead a life of... well, a new life. No matter what life she lived from now on, it would be as this woman she'd become. That being an incontrovertible fact, Angela couldn't turn away from this, no matter how uncomfortable - how perverted - it would feel.

Hesitantly at first, Angela began to undress. When she finally stood, her glorious, alabaster form gleaming in the light, it took several minutes before she could work up the nerve to undress the mannequin - but once started, she began to lose her hesitancy, letting herself...

...to fall into the personal that matched the clothes. To force away the masculine revulsion, the second thoughts and disgust, and focus on the clothes she was donning, letting each article help define the woman it enclosed.

Like the black leather panties. As she slid into place around her womanly hips and awe-inspiring ass, she forced herself to think of the caress of the warm, smooth leather as a symbol - a barrier between Doug and what Doug wanted to get at, sooner or later. It was a barrier that he, as her slave, could never breach unless she'd decided he was worthy - and she wasn't going to decide that, now was she?

Then the black leather corset with the built in half-cups. The one that tightened cruelly around her already slender waist as she buckled the large stainless-steel fasteners. The corset was a reminder - a reminder that, though slender and 'weak' in form, it was that very form that gave her such enormous power over Doug - and through him, many, many more.

Then came the black collar with the studs. In place around her throat, the item served to remind her of her feminine voice - and the instrument of command over Doug.

The thigh-high black leather boots that she stepped into had oh-so-high silver stiletto heels. But for the feminine appearance, they were essentially the same as any jack-boot worn by a Nazi officer - for she could crush Doug easily under the heels.

Finally came the hat, a black leather model similar to the Nazi Gestapo hats of half a century past. Like the Gestapo, the cap served as a reminder that the person beneath it may or may not deserve respect and obedience - but demanded it.

Slipping the coiled whip into a D-ring on the corset, Angela - no, she decided as she moved. 'Angela' was wrong. All wrong. Dominique. Yes, that was better. Dominique DeGuerre.

Mistress Dominique.

As she moved through the hallway, her heels rung on the marble floor, keeping time to her powerful - and powerfully feminine - stride. Already, she found herself submerging into the character she'd chosen.

Even as she descended the stairs, a shocking revelation burst upon her.

She was enjoying this. Not necessarily the situation, and not being female - but the sudden feeling of power. The quest for power, for a sort of domination, had been the driving force that made him a millionaire in her old life. Now, that same need, in a new form, had also 'mutated', becoming more focused, more personal...

..and oh-so-enticing.

Her full lips unconsciously curved into a slight, cruel smile as she entered the study, where Doug - facing away from her - was fixing the drinks.

For a second, the scene seemed to stop. A soundless tableau as second thoughts tried to form in Dominique's mind. Before they could form, however, she took the last, irrevocable step. The one that would lead to a bizarre success - or a crushing failure.

"Slave! How dare you!" Dominique said. It wasn't a yell, but an incredibly strong, forceful tone.

Startled, Doug whirled around. The glass of Scotch he was holding dropped to the floor, exploding like a liquid bomb, spraying glass shrapnel across the floor.

"What the...?" Doug gaped - then an awed look came over his face.

"You will kneel when I enter a room! You will not rise until I give you permission. Now, kneel, slave!" Dominique commanded. Doug blinked, then looked down at the floor, which was littered with shards of glass.

Then, smoothly, he sunk onto those shards, making a slight gasp of pain as he knelt, head down, submissive.

At the sight of Doug obeying her ordered, despite of - or, in this case, perhaps 'in addition to' - the pain it bought, Dominique felt a strange shudder of pleasure at the power she wielded.

A power that was hers simply because she existed - as this woman she had become. She strode towards her 'slave' - wondering what the thought of her new gender being the center of her power wasn't nearly as sickening thought as she'd expected - even wanted - it to be.

"You will address me as Mistress Dominique - or just Mistress. Is that clearly understood, slave?" Dominique stood in front of Doug, her gleaming boots on either side of his lowered head.

"Yes, Mistress Dominique." Doug replied, giving her that strange, heady rush again.

And something else. A strange tingling sensation in her half-exposed chest, matched by a warm, wet tingling considerably farther south. She was getting... turned on by doing this to Doug!

And it felt fantastic....

"Lick my boots, slave!" Dominique commanded - and Doug, dutifully bent his head and began to do so.

And she shuddered in delight - and, to her shock, found herself considering what other uses that tongue might be put to...

"You called, Mistress Dominique?"

Dominique smiled at the sight of the once athletic Doug. Now a veritable recluse due to her commands, he had lost that athletic build - partially due to the extremely powerful hormones she'd had him begin taking.

Dressed in an abbreviated French Maid outfit, Doug was balanced atop 'ballet' shoes that had required more than three months of intensive surgery and training to allow him to balance atop. Now, he couldn't walk unless buckled into the near-vertical footwear.

The outfit also showed his denuded body to an advantage. Between the depilatory to remove all body hair, the feminine hairdo and makeup, he would have been the 'quintessential French Maid' if Dominique went any further with feminization.

But she didn't intend to. Being feminized was to embarrass him, punish him, humiliate him - not change him, fundamentally.

No, that was reserved for her other 'subjects'. Mostly philandering husbands, she had a stable of nearly a dozen new slaves in various stages of feminization.

Such as... "Slave, fetch Slave Danni."

"Yes, mistress." Doug replied, contritely. He headed off, taking tiny steps in order to maintain balance. He returned shortly, leading a 'woman' on a chain.

Dressed in an outfit similar to Doug's - with seven-inch platform heels rather than ballet shoes - Danni was one of the first 'girls' Dominique had started on, and therefore fit the outfit much more pleasingly. Almost completely feminine, from the huge blonde 'do to the massive GGG-cup tits that swelled above a severely corseted waist, Danni would have been the vision of pure femininity - if not for the massive cock straining at her tiny black panties.

With a gesture, Dominique had Doug chain Danni to the 'punishment table', bent over with 'her' now-shapely legs spread. "Do you like our little Danni, Slave?" Dominique asked, imperiously.

"Oh, yes - she is quite beautiful." Doug replied, whatever his true feelings about the feminized ex-stockbroker might have been. "Would you enjoy having me fuck you today, Slave?"

"Oh, yes please, Mistress." Doug replied, this time sincerely.

Sighing, Dominique leaned back, spreading her long, shapely legs wide and revealing her hairless, damp pussy. "You must earn such a privilege, of course." She told Doug.

"Of course, Mistress." Doug replied, eagerly.

"Well then - it is time for Danni's lessons in the correct way to give blow-jobs. Why don't you show her how it's done, then she can try her technique on you."

"Yes, Mistress Dominique." Within a few seconds, the sissy slave was kneeling between Danni's legs, his head bobbing enthusiastically. He'd had plenty of opportunity to learn this new skill to perfection.

Smiling at the sight, Dominique picked up the large dildo she kept close to hand at all times. Snapping her fingers, a woman - a real woman, one of her 'sub-Dominatrices' - appeared and began to strap the massive black phallus around her own waist.

Lying back, Dominique refused to show 'weakness' in front of the slaves by crying out in pleasure as the leather-clad woman filled Dominique's cunt with the massive fake cock and began to pleasure her mistress.

As she climbed towards her eight or ninth orgasm of the day - she tended to loose count, even this early into the day - Dominique fondled her pert, perfect breasts and thought, again, that life was...

'Oh, God,' the little chink cunt protested, staring in horror at Danny's massive 14-inch cock, 'It.. It's too big...!'

'Oh, shut up, bitch...' Danny snarled - and, to ensure she did, he grabbed her head, twining his massive, thick fingers in her silky black hair and holding her steady as he forced his massive cock against his lips. The stupid cunt tried to struggle, but she was no match for Danny's massive muscularity. Laughing, Danny forced more and more of his gigantic organ deep into the stupid cunt's mouth, enjoying her useless struggles as he felt his own massive slabs of muscle rolling and flexing smoothly as he force-fucked her face. Not even the slightest hint of effort showed on his square-jawed face, nor did any sweat trickle from his dark crew-cut - after all, he'd spent half of his twenty-six years body-building every single day, and he was more than a match for a scrawny little Jap bitch.

'Oh, you like that, do you...?' Danny laughed as she stopped struggling and began sucking his cock, though not very energetically. She couldn't answer him, but she didn't need too - Danny knew all women wanted his awesome body and monster cock, even if some of them liked to take 'playing hard to get' further than others. Now that this stupid cunt had finally stopped fooling around and pretending she didn't want his perfect body and ideal cock, Danny set about face-fucking her in earnest, setting up a steady rhythm that was nearly mechanical in it's perfection. In fact - it even sounded mechanical, a steadily growing whine that was coupled with a sharp, metallic...

...banging of the garbage truck emptying the Dumpster yanked Danny all the way up from his dream/memory, the grating of metal-on-metal and the whine of hydraulics just a few feet beyond his 'semi-basement' apartment window seeming to cut straight into his brain like a buzz-saw.

"Wadda fuck...?" Danny snarled, angrily, his voice rusty and sounding off to his ears as he blinked up at the ceiling of his living room, wincing as the morning light coming through the gaps in the venetian blinds seemed to spear directly through his eyeballs and into his brain.

Daniel Webster McCaudle was by no stretch of the imagination a 'Morning Person' - but this morning his usual foul mood was made all the worse by a monumental hangover. Usually, Danny handled liquor just fine, able to drink most people under the table - but for some reason, the six-pack of Heineken that dyke doctor had given him as a 'peace offering' had really done a number on him, putting his lights out and leaving him to spend the night on the couch, dressed in his well-deserved 'muscle shirt' and jeans. Now, Danny's unbelievably muscular body was sore and logy from a night of awkward positions, and his head felt as if it were stuffed full of cotton.

"God damned foreign beers..." Danny muttered thickly, staggering off the couch and weaving his way slowly towards the bathroom, eyes closed to bare slits against the dim-yet-still-too-bright morning light. He couldn't remember the last time he'd felt this shitty.

"Least the damned stuff was free..." Danny muttered as he staggered into the bathroom. He and his new neighbor had gotten off to a very bad start. Linda Carson was an athletically-built brunette with an 'okay' figure, especially for a Doctor. She might not have been Prime Pussy, but she lived right next door, for fuck's sake - so of course Danny offered to fuck her six ways from Sunday, letting her enjoy the magnificence that was Danny McCaudle.

She'd gotten all pissed off, and Danny had been ready to blow his stack at the stupid bitch for going too far with that fucking 'hard to get' routine... and then she'd let slip that she was a dyke. Of course, any dyke Danny fucked would be straight afterward, but seeing as Linda was a dyke, maybe she actually believed that she didn't want him - some cunts were screwed up that way. She'd eventually admitted he was right, though - not in so many words, but by the beer she'd dropped off last night. Even if it was some foreign shit that gave you the Mother-Fucker of all hangovers...

Grumbling to himself, Danny glared blearily at the reflection in the mirror, grunting in satisfaction at the sight of his incredible body. Years of body-building (and the occasional chemical 'helper') had given him a body that made Arnie look like a pansy. At six-foot-one-inch, Danny was a solid mass of muscle, every inch of him rock-hard. He even had the perfect hard-angled, square-jawed face that was virility distilled.

As massive as his muscles were, though, and as unbelievable tough as he looked, Danny's greatest God-given gift was 'The Cobra', Danny's massive, thick cock. The one every woman just longed to worship, even if they were afraid to admit it - like Linda, who was afraid to admit it even to herself.

Feeling slow and thick-witted thanks to the hangover, Danny turned away from the mirror and towards the toilet, fumbling with the zipper on his jeans. Sliding one huge, powerful hand into his pants, he began to fish around for The Cobra...

Danny wasn't sure just how long he stood there, groping around in his pants, until he realized that he couldn't find something that should have been straining the seams of his crotch like it had every other morning of his life since puberty. Frowning, Danny undid the button on the jeans and peeled the fly all the way open to let him stare down at his black boxer-briefs...

...which were laying flat against his crotch. No sign of any bulge showed, much less the massive one that should have been there.

"What the fuck...?" Danny said, trying to focus his leaden mind. No matter how hard he concentrated though, he still couldn't figure out how he could 'misplace' The Cobra. Blinking, he pulled at the waist-band of the briefs, staring down at himself. Like many body-builders, Danny shaved his body to accentuate the perfection of his chiseled musculature, so there was nothing 'in the way' down there...

...allowing him to see what looked an awful lot like a woman's vagina, though it was hard to tell - Danny had never seen one from precisely this angle before...

Stupidly, feeling fuzzy and awkward, Danny stared down at the most-definitely-feminine-looking vaginal lips at his crotch, then hesitantly slid his broad, hard hand towards it. He paused - then slid one thick finger downwards...

...and gasped, shuddering, as it slid across what definitely felt like a clit.

"Holy fuckin' shit - I got a cunt!" Danny gasped, reeling back and slamming against the wall. "Oh, fuck - I got a god-damned cu...uh..uh...unnngghhhh. !"

Danny's stunned shout became moans of pain as what felt like bolts of lightning danced through his head, searing his mind and causing him to writhe and twitch in intense mental agony, humiliating tears of pain running down his cheeks as he gasped, his mind unable to complete any thoughts at all through the white haze of agony that thundered through his head...

It faded away to nothing, leaving Danny feeling shaken, disconnected and confused, his mind struggling to get back on track after the 'white out' of the agony. Blinking, he straightened, trying to remember what he'd been doing before the brief-yet-eternal blast of pain.

His heavy brows narrowed together as he realized he didn't have a clear memory of. well, much at all, really. He felt heavy and thick-witted, as well as confused and vague. He was in the bathroom, and from the way he felt, he'd just woken up - but his memories seemed fuzzy, cloudy - and it just seemed like too much damned effort to focus on them, to bring them into sharp clarity...

...especially when he felt so... happy. Joyful, even. Slowly, Danny began to smile, letting even the one sharp memory - the pain - slip away as something in the past, something he could ignore for right now - since he felt so all-fired happy and content, why let something like inexplicable, brain-shattering agony bother him?

It seemed much, much, much more important to Danny to not worry about anything at all - or, more precisely, not to be seen worrying about anything. In fact, it seemed downright imperative that, no matter what happened, Danny continue to act as if everything were perfectly normal. No matter the event, situation or place, Danny somehow knew that it was vitally important - perhaps even life-or-death important - that he remain cheerful and unaffected, as if whatever was going on in that particular time and place was perfectly ordinary, at least in relation to him. He had to act as if everything was. normal.

With a soft sigh of satisfaction at having remained fairly 'normal' through the already barely-remembered blast of pain, Danny started the shower running, letting the water heat to a comfortable temperature before shedding what little clothes he was wearing and stepping under the spray.

Humming happily to himself, he began to wash. Picking up the bar of soap, he started lathering up his broad, manly hands, making sure to get under his short, slightly ragged nails.

From there, Danny worked his way up his arm, lathering thoroughly as he went, especially his clean-shaven armpits. Pausing, he leaned into the spray and washed the thick lather off his arms. Putting the soap back in the showerhead-mounted tray, he vigorously rubbed his arms, getting all of the soap off. Then, still humming contentedly, Danny picked up the soap and began to lather his broad, fairly-muscular shoulders. From there, he did his neck, then moved down his chest and back, enjoying the feel of the soap over his smooth, taut flesh and his reasonably-athletic musculature.

Having finished soaping down to his nice, trim waist, Danny again put the soap down and made sure all the soap was washed off, being careful as his long, oval nails slid over his smooth, silky skin.

"Mmmmm..." He moaned softly in his husky tenor voice, eyes closed with pleasure. The smile on his fairly full lips curled farther as he went on to soap up his lower half, enjoying the feel of the slick soap against equally slick flesh as he lathered up his taut, cute ass, girlish hips and cute legs. With remarkable dexterity, he agilely bent double to wash his fairly small, well formed feet.

Then it was time to wash his crotch, and Danny sighed again in his warm alto tones as his dainty, long-nailed fingers slid around the folds of his tight, already-sopping-wet cunt.

Eyes still closed to better enjoy the warm, sensual, enjoyable sensations that a simple shower were providing, Danny returned the soap to the rack yet again, and proceeded to make sure there was no linger soap residue on his smooth, soft skin. Once thoroughly rinsed, it was time for Danny to do his hair - but he paused while reaching for the shampoo, just long enough to lightly squeeze his nipples, which had begun throbbing pleasantly, literally begging for attention. Careful not to injure his pert, firm B-cup breasts with his long, finely- shaped nails, Danny rolled his firm, aroused nipples between dainty thumbs and forefingers, finally letting go to move on to his hair.

Taking his time to do it right, Danny slowly and thoroughly massaged shampoo into his shoulder-long mane of soft, sandy-blond hair. Then, just as sensuously and luxuriously, he rinsed it clean again, finally shutting off the water with a soft, almost regretful, sigh.

Stepping higher over the edge of the tub then he didn't-quite-remember doing before, Danny stepped a dainty foot onto the bath-mat, it's mate soon joining it. Luxuriously, Danny toweled his body off, enjoying the wonderful sensation the thick, deep, white terry-cloth bath-towel (which he didn't remember not ever seeing before) gave as it moved across his skin.

Finished, Danny loosely wrapped the also-never-before-seen matching bathrobe around his body, letting the front of the warm, comfortable white robe hang open. He stepped up to the mirror...

...and blinked at the complete stranger staring back. The young woman was a few inches shorter than Danny, and really cute - and an athletic way. Dressed in a loose-hanging bath-towel, she had a firm, athletic body and taut, cute D-cup breasts that looked deliciously melon-like in their ripe firmness. She had below-collar length sandy-blond hair, and girlishly-slender hips below a trim, taut waist. Her face, unadorned by make-up, was still cute, with eyes a sort of muddy green color, and a slightly too-large nose above a cute, expressive mouth.

Danny stared at the unmoving woman for several seconds, brow slowly furrowing as he realized something - something staggering...

...and then the pain hit. Danny reeled back and slammed into the tile wall, not really noticing that the sound wasn't as 'meaty' as it had been, the first time he'd done it. The pain lanced through his head, and he felt as if he were going to explode...

...and then it was gone, and Danny straightened, a quizzical smile forming on her lips as she tried to recall what had just happened.

She couldn't - not clearly, at least. There was a faint image, something about stepping up to the mirror...?

Frowning in a good-natured, quirky way, Danny stepped up and looked into the mirror - and, for a second, didn't recognize the person it showed. The slender-yet-fit, golden-blond beauty with the nice DDD-cup rack didn't look the least bit familiar....

"Duh, it's a mirror, silly..." Danny told her reflection with a wry laugh, feeling supremely silly. God, what was with her this morning? Of course the mirror was showing her what she looked like - so what did it matter if she remembered clearly what she'd looked like before or not? The reflection was her - that was all there was to it.

"There's nothing wrong. Everything's okay." She told her reflection, sunnily. "Everything's. normal."

She actually shivered in delight at just how.. right that word was. Normal. Everything was wonderfully, gloriously, joyously normal.

Humming happily to herself, Danny padded out of the bathroom with a panther-like grace, her taut, supposedly 'tomboyish' body swaying in a wonderfully graceful way that caused her wonderfully firm EEE-cup breasts to bounce in pleasant distraction...

...and then she stopped dead, her head lowering as her smooth, rounded jaw rippled, her jaws clamped shut. She bunched her smoothly-muscled shoulders and thrust her arms out, bracing herself on either wall.

"Dammit, Linda..." She grated through clenched teeth, body shivering in the intense pain that was thundering through her mind. "I don't... know.. how... you are doing this, but... I'm not going... Going to.. To. "

Then her defiant, painful words faded away, and the pain overwhelmed her, sending her crashing to the floor as she screamed to the ceiling, her throat aching with the shear, primal fear and agony of that scream...

...and then she stopped screaming, as if a switch had been thrown. A smile crossed her lips as she stared, a little blankly, up at the ceiling.

"Everything's fine..." She told herself in a sweet soprano voice, her tone almost painfully artificial in it's nearly demented perkiness. "Everything... normal. Normal, normal, normal. "

She shivered, once, in a mixture of pleasure and pain- and then the blank look faded, and Dani blinked in cheerful confusion. "I guess I fell down..." She said to empty air. "Silly me. "

Humming softly to herself, Dani smoothly and gracefully rose from the floor, mainly through the use of a near-perfect muscle control that let her rise so smoothly as to seem to float upwards, despite the handicap of her massive, volleyball-sized breasts.

"Graceful, must be graceful..." She told herself, sweetly. "Women like me are supposed to be graceful and sexy "

Dani was grateful that she knew that fact. She couldn't clearly remember anything in her past, but she knew for a fact that she'd held that particular belief for a long time now, though it was stated a little oddly, in her mind. She wasn't sure why she thought 'generically' about it, as in how a 'busty blonde babe' should move gracefully and sexily - but since it was obviously referring to her, she didn't worry about it. It was a belief she held, and so of course she was going to follow it. She wasn't a hypocrite or anything.

With an extremely conscious effort, Dani gracefully and sensuously finished the walk down to her bedroom, not really noticing the fact that the bedroom had been completely redecorated and refurnished in the night. Since she had no clear memory of the room ever having been different, Dani simply accepted what she saw.

Likewise, she just accepted the noises from the living room and kitchen as being normal. If it sounded like a team of workmen were removing or replacing all her furniture, then it must be because she'd wanted it that way, even if she couldn't remember anything about it. After all, she wasn't alarmed by the noise, so it must be expected. Everything was fine. Everything was...

Normal.

Happy as a clam, Dani shrugged out of her robe and walked over to the big, full-length mirror that was in the corner, near her huge, pink-white-and-brass four-poster bed, with its pink-and-white comforter atop white silk sheets. She stepped up to it...

...and gasped.

"no..." She whispered in a tortured voice. "God, no... anything but..." Then she blinked, twice, then smiled at her reflection.

She was tiny - and shy of five feet. She was slender and delightfully dainty - and sexy. She was pure sex, as a matter of fact, compressed in a tiny package that had a little of everything, despite her diminutive stature. For her height, her legs were impossibly long and sexy, perched atop tiny, dainty feet. Her hips weren't that big around, in inches, but on her petite frame they were wonderfully womanly, and perfect for supporting her remarkably full, sexy ass.

Her waist, on the other hand... Even on somebody with her tiny frame, the waist was slender. However, to see that fact you'd have to be able to look past her massive, basketball-sized breasts. Incredibly firm and round, they were tipped with huge, thick, bright-pink nipples that looked delightfully suckable.

Given her height and the average eye-line of the adult human, there were very few who could see past those milky spheres to see that delightfully tiny waist - even if they'd had the inclination to do so. However, her face was much easier to see - and it was worth the look.

It was a heart-shaped face with a pixie-like chin. Her nose was a tiny, cut snub, upturned at the tip, and it separated her huge, bright- blue eyes with their long, dark lashed and high, arched eyebrows from her full, sensual lips.

Her incredibly fine, silky hair was a platinum-blond shade so light as to look practically white - but with incredible gold-toned shimmers that ran the length of its incredibly glossy, silky surface, all the way down to her ass.

"God, I'm incredible..." Dani breathed happily in her giggly, high-pitched voice. Smiling brightly at her tiny, top-heavy reflection, Dani turned away and bounced sexily to the closet, practically exuding in every motion a pert, almost girlish sensuality that was anything but

'virginal'.

"I've got to find a way to control myself..." She told herself, brightly, as she stepped into a pair of white, rounded-toe platform pumps with a seven-inch heel and an ankle-strap. "Linda's turned me into a huge-breasted little bimbo..."

"At least..." She continued, as she pulled a fluffy white-and-pink pleated skirt around her hips, barely covering her bare crotch. "She's made me look like one - and then done something to me so that I have to act and dress the way those stupid big-tit bimbos do."

She smiled and fondled her enormous breasts for a few seconds before forcing a practically see-through white-with-pink trim T-shirt over it. Though the over-strained neckline displayed a mind-boggling amount of cleavage, and the thin white material was nearly transparent, the shirt was technically street-legal, because her huge, thick nipples were 'hidden' behind the less-translucent lettering of the word 'Dynamite!' across the front in pink-spangled letters.

"She won't win..." She told her reflection in the mirror on the vanity table, as she did her long, white-blonde hair up in a ponytail. "She may think I'm buried, trapped in this body and mind - but I'm still here."

Humming softly in her throat, Dani had to stop talking while she did her make-up: Gloss-pink lips with frosted-white liner, pink eye-shadow, and gloss-pink polish for her fingernails.

Finishing up by attaching big, pink plastic earrings to her dainty lobes, Dani rose. She squared her slender shoulders, causing her huge tits to jiggle, and then she strode out of the room with a pertly sexy sort of resolution.

"I'll teach that bitch a lesson..." She muttered to herself, brightly, completely unaware of the unbelievably potent pheromones wafting from her hyper-endowed new body. "I'll show her who..."

She stopped dead as she walked out into the living room - and found herself looking at the two workmen who'd just finished giving her apartment a thoroughly 'girlish' look. The two sweaty, muscular men stared back at her, amazed as well - and then, as her pheromones hit, an oddly feral look came into each of their eyes. One of the guys was a big, black guy, and he looked her up and down and licked his lips, as if a starved man being shown a prime-rib dinner. The other guy, a muscular Asian, just grinned in a way that did odd things to Dani's stomach... or a little bit south of there.

"What are you looking at...?" She demanded pertly, grinning helplessly and adding a giggle to her sweet soprano 'demand'. Neither of the guys answered, verbally - but their blue coveralls were starting to bulge at the crotch.

"Are you staring at my huge, firm, oh-so-fuckable tits?" She demanded sweetly, hefting her huge orbs angrily. "Or is it my perfect, heart-shaped ass - which also happens to be oh-so-fuckable?" Turning, she stuck out her ass and gracefully pointed to it to make her point clear.

"I think it's the whole package, sweetheart..." the black man rumbled, grinning.

Dani was outraged by his blatantly sexual leer. Smiling angrily, she sensuously stormed up to him, a sexy bounce to her furious step. With a sweet, sunny soprano voice, she told him off.

"Don't get any idea, you gorgeous hunk of man..." She giggled. "I certainly don't want to grabbing me and kissing me hard and quick. "

"Oh? So - none of this...?" the black man rumbled, grinning. Grabbing her by the slender arm, he physically lifted her up and yanked her close to him, kissing her hard and quick. As she responded with eager passion, she wished the stupid nigger would get off of her so that she could go have that talk with Linda.

"Anything else you don't want me doing. ?" The man asked after the kiss, and Dani rolled her huge, brainless blue eyes in anger and giggled out an answer. "Well, I certainly don't want you ripping off my top and sucking and squeezing my tits!"

So, what did the stupid black bastard do? He ripped open Dani's shirt and began fondling and squeezing her tits! As Dani closed her eyes and moaned and gasped in protest, she wished this stupid idiot would get the hint. Hell, as soon as she had that talk with Linda, and got her old body back, she'd be more manly then either of these pathetic wimps. Oh, well - since she was a helpless, super horny bimbo for the moment, there wasn't anything she could do but wait until this knot-heads got it out of their system.

"Don't even think about ripping my skirt off, throwing me on the couch, and fucking my brains out..." She warned the black man. "Riiiiight..." He grinned - then ripped her skirt off and threw her on the couch.

"I..." She started to protest - and then he was pulling her long, damnably sexy legs up and apart...

...and sliding his huge, throbbing cock into her cunt. Oh, it wasn't really bigger then average - but Dani was now so tiny that it seemed enormous as it filled her hot, wet cunt.

She screamed. Screamed in pure, orgasmic pleasure as her hyper-sensitive new womanhood was filled by hot, throbbing cock. Her body took over, matching the man's hard, furious rhythm as she continued to scream in unbelievable pleasure that just kept growing and growing and...

The world exploded into a huge white ball of pure ecstasy and then it faded, and Dani was just laying on the couch, the big black dude pulling his cock out of her sopping-wet cunt.

"Gee..." the oriental dude said, having already stripped out of his coveralls, instead of just opening the front like his partner had done. His nude, bronze body gleamed with sweat. "There's not anything you don't want me to do, is there. ?"

Angrily, Dani snapped at the stupid Jap bastard, using her most cock-hardening soprano to make sure he knew just how pissed she was at the stupid question.

"Yes! Definitely don't make me suck your huge, sweet cock!"

To make sure he knew exactly what she meant, she furiously dropped to her knees in front of him and grabbed his cock at the base.

Then the fucking Nip actually leaned forward, and she had no choice but to open her lips and accept his hard, throbbing cock! The nerve of him!

"What's wrong...?" the little chink bastard gloated, staring in delight at Dani's massive, exposed tits. "Is it too big...?"

'Oh, I wish he'd shut up!' Danny thought - and, to ensure he did, she gave him the most mind-blowing blow-job possible, reducing him to moaning, gasping flesh as she used hands, tongue and lips in conjunction with suction and rhythm to bring him to the edge, holding him there for what seemed like eternity before finally letting him dump a load of sweet, delicious cum into her mouth and her highly-modified taste-buds, the one that found cum the most wonderful flavor in the universe.

She released his cock... and, over-stressed by the power of his own orgasm, he passed out. Dani licked her lips, looking at the unconscious man...

...then she turned on the partly-erect black man and sucked him off, too.

When the black man's limp body hit the floor, Dani rose and headed for the door.

"I'm going to miss fucking and sucking once I'm a guy again..." She said, brightly, to herself. "Then again, once I'm a guy, I'll make Linda fuck and suck me like this. I can do it, after all - 'cause she'll still be a stupid cunt, while I will be the most perfect male - with the most perfect cock!"

Angrily, Dani stormed up to Linda's door and pounded on it - as well she could. "Come in!" Linda's voice called. "It's open."

Furious, Dani threw the door open and stormed in...

"Close the door, would you?" Linda's voice asked, and Dani slammed the door before wiggling atop her seven-inch heels to where Linda waited in the living room.

"Look, Linda, I don't know how you did this to me, but you're going to undo it! I want my cock back, dammit!" The athletically-built brunette looked regretful. "I can't give it back. It already has a new home..."

Then, grinning, Linda rose and threw off her robe.

Her naked body was taut and firm - and, nestled between firmly feminine thighs, was a huge, erect cock. Dani's old cock. The most perfect cock in the world...

She had to suck it. She had no choice - she was a huge-breasted bimbo, and it was the most perfect cock. She must suck it, and fuck it - and obey anything it's owner tells her to do.

Something deep inside her mind went 'snap'.

"I'm Ditzzy Dani Dickslut!" She announced in a too-bright voice. Her cunt became instantly, sopping wet as her hormones raced out of control, her pheromone production shooting off to somewhere in the stratosphere. "I fuck and suck every cock I meet!"

Linda's triumphant grin faltered as she was hit by the effect of the super-charged pheromones. Her already hard cock suddenly became painfully swollen, and her mind began to spin as incredible amounts of hormones were dumped into her system, too - but, with her 'special equipment' in place, it was two complete sets of hormones...

"What..." Linda said, drunkenly - just before Ditzzy Dani Dickslut giggled insanely and jumper her, slamming her tight cunt down on that massive, throbbing cock...

She fucked Linda for twelve hours straight, until even their hyper-pumped libidos couldn't handle anymore.

By that time, Linda's messed-up hormonal system had left her looking like Arnold Schwarzenegger - except for the volley-ball sized tits, of course. Oh - and Arnie only wished he was as well endowed as Linda. However, with her tits strapped down, the deep-voiced new Linda could pass as a guy, say, one named 'Lee', who could go out and do all the shopping and stuff...

...which had to happened, since waking up as a freak of nature had derailed Linda completely, and she could only do what Dani told her to do. Dani, despite being completely insatiable and super-obsessed with sex, was at least able to keep 'sane' enough to turn herself into a lucrative source of income - by becoming a porn star.

As for the 'Linda Carlson' and 'Daniel McCaudle', sought by the police after Missing Persons reports were filed... they were never seen or heard from again.

Which was probably just as well, since anyone who'd ever met either one concurred that they were both assholes...

Summary: A scientist volunteers to be the test subject of a new process that can mold the tissue to any form; little did he realize he would end up as a topless stripper!

Not A True Story

By Gerald R. Skinner As told to Gunslinger

Author's Note: The following story was told to me by a very...interesting person. This person showed up at my place, and I taped the story, and have simply transcribed it here...

This isn't true. Of course not. Nothing like this could ever REALLY happen. It would be insane. Still, I'd like you to hear it...

It all started about, oh, about six months ago. Of course, I remember the EXACT date, but it doesn't really matter. I'll try to give the story with only the important parts...

I'm sorry, I'm kind of rambling. I'm not really much of a storyteller I'm afraid. In fact, what I am, or rather, what I WAS, was a research assistant at...well, I shouldn't name the place. Let's just call it 'the Lab', okay?

Well, anyway, I had been working at the lab for about three months, ever since I got out of university. I'd gotten two degrees - a M.D., and a Ph.D. Having put myself through via a student loan, I needed a job quickly to pay back the loan, plus money to live on. So when I was offered the job at the lab, the fact that it was a little outside my field didn't phase me at all - the pay was VERY good. So, I started working as a research assistant to Dr. Malcolm Pierce, in the Bio-Med. R&D division.

I'll be the first to admit that Dr. Pierce is a genius - when it comes to his research, that is. In other things...(ahem) well, let's just say he was a little scatter-brained.

I suppose I should really make some 'introductions, as it were. Kind of the cast of characters, if you know what I mean.

First, myself. Gerald Skinner, age 26. Now, just to keep things, uh, 'documented', here's a photo taken just two days after I joined the staff. That's me, on the left.

No, really. That tall, skinny beanpole with the thick glasses and short, shaggy black hair is me. Honest.

The short, muscular guy in the middle is Al. Excuse me, Albert Scarduci. Incidentally, he's my best friend, and roommate. I've known him since elementary school - we went to the same high school, the same university - and then, the same job.

Yeah, he IS kind of built like a fire hydrant, now that you mention it...

The guy on the right is my boss, Dr. Pierce. As you can see, he's an older man - he's 43, by the way - and could be the proto-typical 'Mad- scientist', what, with his untidy white hair and kind of vacant gaze...

Honestly, his major problem, exempting his actual lab work, is his failure to think things through. He's SO focused on his experiments, that other things tend to slip past him. I've seen him start to make coffee - then forget about it until two days later. And he'll drink the sludge, honestly forgetting that it was started two days ago - in his mind, only a few minutes have passed.

And, he NEVER figures out why his coffee is always so awful... Speaking of which, I don't suppose?...

Anyway, one of the reason's I got that job was because I was able to get a security clearance. My dad had been in the military, an officer, so my background check was easy. No big deal. Same with AI - the reason we went to the same school in the first place is his dad was military too. But the clearance was necessary - we were working on some pretty cutting-edge stuff, and industrial espionage is always a problem in this kind of work.

So, I started working with Dr. Pierce. His current project was re- creating replica's of various human tissues synthetically. As a medical breakthrough, it was unparalleled - just think, synthetic kidneys or hearts, that the body would accept, and would function and look absolutely identical to the original. It was a stunning achievement - if it could be done.

You see, at the time I'm talking about, about four months after my employment, Dr. Pierce and I had made remarkable progress, leading to a breakthrough - but it was a hollow victory, in a way.

What we'd managed to do, in and of itself, was still a awesome discovery, but still far short of our goal of synthetic organs.

What we HAD done, however, was simpler tissues. Dr. Pierce had already created Syntho-skin, Syntho-fat, and even Syntho-hair. The breakthrough we'd made was more advanced - Syntho-nerves, and Syntho- muscles. But, all of these had the major flaw of being non- life-saving discoveries. The first three could make us rich, being used in plastic surgery, if and when they were FDA and AMA approved. And the Syntho- nerves and muscles heralded a new era in reconstructive surgery for patients with say, severe burn damage. But, the more complex - and hence, more important, tissues were still beyond us. Major organs such as the liver, or kidneys. That sort of thing.

And we were getting desperate, because our grant was coming closer and closer to cancellation. If our funding died, so did our research, despite what we had accomplished. You see, the funding committee didn't find our work 'flashy' enough to understand it's TRUE importance.

And for this, the blame rests squarely on Dr. Pierce. As I said, he was a little...eccentric. His presentations to the funding committee were nearly incoherent - when he remembered to go. These days, being a brilliant scientist just isn't good enough. You also have to be a diplomat, PR man, and fundraiser, to get enough funding to continue your work.

So, keeping this all in mind, this is what happened. Or didn't. Because none of this is true, of course.

It was fairly late in the day. I'd already gotten used to the odd schedule I'd had to keep. Dr. Pierce worked when he had the inspiration, any time of day - or night - that it struck. As a perfect example of the type of man he is, he would actually shout 'Eureka!' when inspiration struck.

So, although I was somewhat tired, it was really the depression that held both of us in its grasp that really made our workplace so quiet and lethargic.

"Well, Gerald," Dr. Pierce said to us, toying with his cup of coffee. (Actually, it was a beaker of coffee - he'd forgotten to clean any mugs, as usual, so we made do with what we had - as usual.) "I guess we're just not fated to be the miracle-workers of modern medicine."

Al nodded tiredly. "I guess not."

"Come on guys," I said, trying to dredge up some optimism. "I know that the final meeting of the funding committee is in a week, but maybe we can come up with something by then." Even to myself, the hope sounded hollow.

Al shook his head dejectedly. "No, Gerald. You know that's not going to happen." He bounced a thick, muscular fist off a countertop. "If only we could make them see the value in what we've already done!" He said hotly, fire returning to his eyes. Then, the brief energy faded, and he slumped again.

We'd had this discussion more than once. I turned to Pierce. "Doc, we both know that the only field that they're really useful in is Cosmetic and Reconstructive Surgery. Sure, if we could just show them the versatility and ability of the synthetic tissues we've discovered...but, we'd have to obtain clearance and extra funding for volunteers..." I waved a hand to illustrate the other barriers which, having already discussed at length at other times, I didn't go into.

It didn't seem as if Doc had heard me. Instead, a strange look had come into his eyes, and he was looking at me with an odd expression. I pulled back slightly.

"What?" I asked guardedly.

"Well..." he said slowly, "YOU already have clearance..." Al turned, looking first at the Doc, then me.

"Hey, hold on here!" I said, surprised...then fell silent, as the thought filtered through my automatic objections.

I'd worked closely on this project. I was reasonably sure the synthetics were safe - but then again, they'd never, actually, been used on a living creature. On the other hand, if the funding went, so did my job...and, with it, my apartment, my car...

"Um..." Al said hopefully. "What did you have in mind?"

He blinked, surprised. "Why, I hadn't actually gone that far." He admitted. Typical Doc.

"Let me think about it." I said. I sunk my chin onto my chest and stared at the floor, as ideas percolated through my brain.

It would have to be something very 'showy' - flashy, definitive and non-technical, yet with a clear, immediate use in the 'real world'. Something that would show it's usefulness. Since I was uninjured, it couldn't be actual reconstructive surgery, and I wasn't willing to mutilate myself for this.

So that left cosmetic surgery. I suppose a nose job, or the like..., well no, that's too insignificant. Maybe a couple of small things, like a nose job and...something.

Well, what are the most common - and profitable - operations. Well, there's..., but we'd need a female volunteer for that, and...

I stopped dead, and shoved away the thought that had popped unbidden into my mind. But it kept coming back, until I was forced to consider it.

It would be flashy. And it would have immediate 'real-world' use. And, it would guarantee funding - there's NO way the committee could pass it up.

But I couldn't. Oh, sure, it'd only be temporary. And, it's not like anyone except the committee and Doc would know. But I just couldn't. Could I?

I looked at Doc, then at Al. If was just me, I'd say no...but if I screwed things up for my mentor, and my best friend, too... "Uh..." I said, swallowing. "What if I, uh, were to, um, use the synthetics for a..." I stopped, my face red.

"What? Go on" they urged.

"Well, um, the big thing today is, uh, breast enlargement and I suppose..." I trailed off, then shook my head. "Pretty dumb, huh? A guy with tits." I forced a laugh.

Al snorted - then sat bolt upright. "But, what if you didn't LOOK like a guy?" he asked, and I gaped. "Huh?"

He turned bright red. "Well, you know, if you kind of went a little further, and looked like a woman..." "Hell, no!" I said hotly - and watched their faces fall. "Come on. You wouldn't do it, right Al?"

Al looked me straight in the eye. "For you two? Sure. But" he said, gesturing at himself "look at me. I'd be the freakiest woman..." He sighed. "Look, If you don't want to, I guess I have to."

He turned to the Doc. "So, I'll look like a Russian hod-carrying woman. Can we do it?"

Doc frowned. "Well, our tests say that the synthetics take two to three weeks to bond. So, For a week, you could do it, and still remove the...applications..." he mused.

I knew Al. He was serious. I heaved a sigh.

"Alright." I said, giving in. "But Al's right. I guess I'm elected."

Al didn't try TOO hard to talk me out of it. We decided to get started right away. We figured I could use the week getting used to the new form before the meeting.

Now, don't get me wrong. I didn't WANT to do this. But, it was necessary - and, to be honest, as a scientist it was a valid experiment. So, I was able to put aside my emotions and treat this dispassionately, as a test.

So, we discussed what we needed to do before we started. The only real argument we had was interesting, in and of itself - Doc stated that if we were conducting tests, he'd like to see just how large a purely synthetic breast could be created, and still maintain it's integrity on me. We discussed it, and I agreed, in the interests of science, to allow this to be a test to the maximum size, as well as an over-all look. It WAS valid, needed data after all, no matter how much I disliked the idea personally.

Our first step was to create the necessary synthetics. While they were being made by Dr. Pierce, Al and I set about making the molds we'd need.

Using special medical plaster, we took imprints of various portions of my body, where we'd be using the additions in bulk. Then, we careful added - or rather, since the castings were 'negatives' of my body, subtracted - the necessary portions to reshape my body.

When the molds and the synthetics were ready, we began. First, the insides of the molds were coated with a layer of synthetic skin. Then, we carefully laid out the nerve networks. Not having done this before, we had to guess as to how many filaments to use for each part, to create the correct amount of sensations.

Next came a very thin layer of fat cells - except for the breast forms, which, of course, were filled. Now, the synthetic fat cells, unlike other cells, took a while to 'mature' - the initial size would NOT be the final size, so whatever breast-size I was give would grow. We didn't know how big though - that's what we wanted to find out.

Around this, synthetic muscle tissue was poured, for the legs, ass, waist and, uh, 'vaginal' areas, at least. Other areas, which in normal anatomy lacked musculature, were omitted.

Finally, the basic form was ready, and it was time for me to take my big step. With a deep breath, I lay on my stomach in the 'front' mold, and the back mold was clamped down on top of me. Two small nostril holes allowed me to breath.

For two hours I lay in that damn 'cocoon', while the Syntho's bonded enough to each other, and me, to remain in place. Finally, the darkness was broken as the Doc and Al pulled away the mold, and I slowly sat up, feeling a heavy weight shift on my chest, and looked at myself in the mirror.

First of all, I felt DAMN weird - not only was my balance all wrong, but I knew immediately that we'd screwed up the nerve ratio - every sensation through the network was stronger than usual. Oh well, it was out first 'real' test.

I tell you though - the feel of the heavy weight of breasts on my chest felt extremely strange. I looked at my new, feminine figure in the mirror.

Now, I'll be the first to admit I wasn't beautiful - my face was still a little too masculine, with a strong, squarish jaw and a somewhat patrician nose. My shoulders were a little too broad, and my hands and feet both a little large.

But my figure!

I had been extremely thin to begin with. Now with my legs reshaped, wider hips, and two immense, round tits, not to mention a realistic- looking vagina, I LOOKED completely female. A quick check also revealed a firm, full ass.

"Holy shit." Al whispered reverently. "We're going to be millionaires." Doc was equally impressed with the sheer realism of the results.

"Okay guys, stop gawking" I said, standing up. I took a step forward - and promptly fell on my face. And gasped as my huge, highly sensitive new breasts hit the cold tile floor. Al helped me up, frowning. "What's wrong?" he asked, worriedly.

I sighed. "We should have seen this coming." I said. "My body has habits it's formed - including how it walks. But all my old habits were for a completely different weight distribution - I'm going to have to learn how to walk all over again."

Doc frowned. "That will take some time." he said. "Do you think you'll be ready for the meeting?" I hated to have to say it, but..."There's a faster way." I admitted. "I can wear high heels."

"Huh?" they chorused in unison.

"Well," I explained "I've never walked in heels. My body HAS no habits for that. So, instead of having to fight established habits, I can learn new ones fairly quickly."

Al was giving me a weird look as I explained. I asked him what was up.

"Oh," he said "It's just really weird to hear your voice coming from that body" he explained. I realized how it must be, and so we wondered if there was anything we could do.

There was. After some trying, we constructed a special band of muscle cells that slid down my throat, tightened my vocal cords. We were aiming for a contralto, but ended up with a soprano, which I could live with for a week.

The drawback was that it needed an anchor to hold it in place - my tongue. The finished attachment also extended my tongue by three inches, which felt extremely odd. It also changed my speech pattern, because of the way it fit in my mouth - I had to hold it further back to keep it in, which was no big deal, but it also gave me an 'accent'. All three of us thought I now sounded vaguely French.

Oh well.

That's when we ran into our next snag - clothing.

Now, as odd as it sounds, I didn't FEEL naked - although the new additions were extremely realistic, even to me, in my mind, it was almost like wearing a costume. So I didn't even think of clothing at first. That also brought up a whole ton of other problems.

"Oh boy." I said in my new voice, still unused to its sound. "I have no clothes, plus no VALID I.D., and it's late at night, so all the stores are closed. Any ideas?" I asked.

Al looked thoughtful, then told us to wait for him. Grabbing his keys, he headed out. While we waited, Doc used syntho-hair, matching my own, to give me long, full black hair and long, dark lashes, as well as higher, arched eyebrows. It had all set by the time Al got back.

He had a smug grin on his face. "The company owes me for this." He said, dumping a load of clothing onto a table. "I bought some stuff of the strip club down the road. I think some of this might even fit your, uh, exaggerated..." he gestured vaguely at my chest.

I flushed - but with the syntho skin, it was impossible to see, another thing that hadn't occurred to us. We were gathering TONS of data in just a few short hours. As I scientist, I was quickly getting over my embarrassment, and becoming truly interested in this experiment.

Oh, hold on. Since we're past the classified part, here's the security video from the lab...

There were three people in the lab. Standing by a lab counter near a pile of clothing was a short, broad Italian-looking man in jeans, T- shirt and lab coat - presumably, Albert Scarduci. Seated, beside him, was a tall, sparse man with a shock of prematurely white hair in disarray. His clothing, under the mandatory lab coat, was also in disarray, but was of a good cut.

The third person was the most striking. It was a young woman, mid twenties I'd say. She had a strong, slightly masculine face, and broad shoulders. But, since she was completely naked, it was easy to see her long, shapely legs, which led to full, womanly hips and - if I may say - an absolutely spectacular derriere. Her waist was remarkably slender for her height, which further enhanced her most noticeable attribute - an enormous pair of almost perfectly spherical breasts.

She was standing, awkwardly, beside a strange sort of mold on a table. She was leaning on the table with one hand, as if trying to maintain her balance. Her hair, deep black and straight, hung almost to her spectacular ass.

"...might even be big enough to fit your...uh, endowments." Al was saying awkwardly, waving a hand in the direction of the woman's chest.

"I 'ope zo" the woman replied in a high, trilling voice. Her accent was somewhat muddled, but definitely of French origin. She moved towards the clothing, walking carefully and stiffly. She reached the other table, and grasped it for balance.

"We should have thought this out better." She said, waving a hand towards her chest. "Not only finding clothes for such large breasts, but the way they sway and jiggle is DAMN annoying."

The disheveled man - Doc - looked at her. "Oh, so they're truly uncomfortable?" he asked, sounding disappointed.

She frowned slightly. "Well, to be completely honest, no." She admitted. "They DO feel good - especially when they sway and bounce. But it IS distracting."

They root through the clothing, and she tried various pieces on, seeming unfamiliar with the way they go on. It takes all three of them to find something that will fit her exaggerated figure.

"Hmm, this one fits." She said, as the other two helped her into an extremely large, white bra. "What size does it say on the label?" Doc picked up a pair of glasses and slipped them on, peering at the back of the bra. "Um, 48GG" he replied.

"Holy shit! I'm THAT big?" The woman asked in evident surprise. Al gave a low whistle.

"Here, try these on." Al said, holding out a pair of matching panties. She did, and they seem to fit tolerably, as she left them on. Next, she tried on every pair of pants in the pile, discarding them one at a time as none fit.

"Damn" she said. "I guess I'll have to wear a skirt."

"Then you should probably put these on." Al said, holding up something. "Do you think that's really..."she began, the sighed. "Give them to me."

She then proceeded to put on a pair of nylons. They are black, with an elasticized lace frill at the top. Over this she puts on a short black leather mini skirt, after trying, and discarding, two longer ones.

"I think this is the only thing that will fit over...uh. . ." Doc said, handing her a deep red spandex crop-top. He's right - she tries on the other tops, with no luck. Even the stretchy spandex is strained to fit over her immense globes, displaying a prodigious amount of cleavage.

After that, she puts on a pair of red pumps with what look to be five or six inch spike heel shoes. The rest of the tape shows her walking around, gradually getting used to them. Fast forwarding, we find her walking easily in the heels, hips swiveling, ass working provocatively, and even her restrained breasts are still swaying invitingly. They then shut off the lights in the lab and leave.

So, you see what I mean about the figure they gave me. A little over done - but I got use to this damn heels quickly. I was amazed.

Anyway, it was now almost dawn, and we were exhausted. Since I didn't have a valid driver's license - not for the way I looked now, at least - Al drove us to our apartment. The ride was interesting - the vibration of the car over the rode created some new - and highly enjoyable - sensations in my altered crotch, and every bounce jostled my huge new tits. We finally arrived home, and wearily climbed the stairs to our apartment. I said good night, and tumbled into bed after hastily undressing.

I awoke the next morning, and for a few seconds couldn't remember why there was this tremendous weight on my chest, and all these weird sensations. Then I remembered, and I slowly sat up, feeling my huge tits shifting on my chest.

Because I had to use the washroom, I got up and headed for the bathroom - and almost fell. Cursing, I slipped into the high heels. I also wrapped my robe around me. It was too small for my huge tits, displaying an enormous amount of cleavage, but better than nothing.

The washroom was an interesting experience. I had to sit to urinate. You see, my penis had been enclosed in a false vagina for realism, so I had to use the toilet like a woman to.

I looked in the mirror - and almost laughed at the medusa's tangle of my hair. I quickly rinsed it and brushed it out, then, having no choice, got dressed in the clothes from last night. Today, I'd have to do some shopping - a stripper's taste in clothing wasn't exactly in line with mine, if you know what I mean.

I walked out to the kitchen, and found Al already up and about. He'd put coffee on, and was making some breakfast. "Good morning." I said.

He looked up, and I was surprised to see his face was red. His eyes had locked onto my immense breasts. He forced them away, and they slipped to my shapely legs, before he was able to tear his gaze away and to the side.

"Uh, good morning, um...Gerald" he said awkwardly. I frowned. "What's wrong, Al?"

He sighed. "I'm sorry. It's just...you look like a sexy woman. You sound like a sexy woman. You move, and are dressed like a sexy woman. I just have problems dealing with you being...you. You don't seem to BE Gerald..." he tried to meet my eyes and failed. Again, his eyes slipped to my cleavage before glancing, guilty away. "I'm sorry. This is hard on me..."

It hurt to see my best, life long friend in such distress. I sighed - then a thought occurred to me. As we stood in awkward silence, I worked it out, and decided, for the sake of my friend, to go through with it.

I held out one hand, and forced a smile to my new fuller, sensual lips.. "Hi. You must be Albert. I'm Yvette." He blinked uncomprehendingly.

"I want to thank you again for letting me stay here." I continued, making it up as I went along. "Since I do not no anyone in your country, and have not found a job yet, I am very appreciative."

The tension suddenly drained out of him as he understood what I was doing. As long as I 'played a role', he wouldn't feel like he was dealing with 'Gerald'.

"That's alright. By the way, call me Al, okay?" he said, dredging up his own smile. "Would you like some coffee?" I take mine black - so I said "Double double, please." He glanced at me in surprise, but smiled and complied.

We actually had an enjoyable breakfast. I was surprised to find I was getting a kind of kick out of the role-playing, and Al not only found me easier to deal with, but his natural gallantry came out, and out of force of habit he began treating me like a woman.

Afterwards, we went shopping for some clothes and such for me at the local mall.

I walked in, my heels clicking on the tile floor. Immediately, I became VERY aware of the sidelong glances men were stealing of my new physique. Astonished, I found that I was not only NOT embarrassed by it - but, I found it oddly enjoyable to know I was affecting men this way. It was almost like a sort of...power, I guess. It was DAMN odd, but not completely unpleasant.

I had intended to by some shapeless, baggy clothing at first - but I hadn't counted on something. I'd picked out some loose jeans and a baggy sweatshirt, and gone into a change room. I changed and looked in the mirror - and found myself hating the reflection.

I mean, it was me I was seeing - but my male brain merely saw a sexy, stacked woman in shapeless clothing. Slowly, I undressed and put back on the other clothes - and my male brain enjoyed the sight of this buxom, scantily clad vixen.

Feeling deliciously guilty, I decided 'what the hell'. As a man, I'd never wear women's clothing - but nobody would know it was a man wearing them. It would be a guilty secret.

I ended up buying more than I'd planned, with Al helping me choose clothing appropriate for my altered body. I ended up buying mostly 'pieces' and few dresses, as they weren't really designed for somebody with all the, uh, 'ins and outs' my figure had. The couple of dresses I did buy were spandex.

With the same giddy, guilty, enjoyable thrill, I also let the lady at the make-up counter give me a make over, paying careful attention to what she did. The shade of lipstick to emphasize my full lips. The blush that de-emphasized my nose and made my cheekbones more prominent. The eye shadow.

I left the store in one of my new outfits. A white silk blouse stretched tautly over my massive endowments, the top two buttons undone to reveal some of my inviting cleavage. A pair of tight, black jeans hugged by spectacular ass and long, shapely legs. A pair of suede, knee- high leather boots with six inch heels encased my feet, imparting a certain sway to my womanly hips. Again, I found myself guiltily enjoying the way men watched my pass, and reacted to my presence. Doors opened before me, and men jostled to help me with my bags - which Al stopped by taking them from me. I admit, I almost reveled in this new, odd power I had to turn men into drooling, slobbering slaves.

Don't look at me that way, okay?

Alright, I admit it's weird. But, you see, I'd never been much of a social animal. Tall, gangling, and too smart for my own good, I'd lacked many friends, of either sex, through my life. To go from an unknown, unpopular 'nerd' to the center of attention, literally overnight, is a heady, almost narcotic, sensation.

Trust me.

Anyway, we decided to go get some lunch. I was proud of myself for not once stepping out of character - I even remembered to use the Ladies' room, rather than the Men's. In the same spirit, I only ordered a salad and a white wine.

So it was rather late when we got to the Lab. I suffered the mild indignity of having to be signed in as a 'guest' of Al's - I couldn't exactly claim to be myself, could I?

When we entered the lab, Doc was in a frenzy of good cheer.

"Look, look!" he cried, practically capering around. He lead us to a covered lab table and hauled off the sheet, exposing what was below. It was me. Not the new me, the masculine me, I mean. "What the?..." I gasped, All a heartbeat behind.

Doc blinked. "Oh, yes, I used the mold of you from last night." He said, waving a hand. "But look!"

He pried open the mouth, and I saw teeth. TEETH! I grabbed Al in a joyous hug, - and was shocked by how GOOD it felt to have him pressed against my immense bosom. Also, he cooperated in the hug whole heartedly, which was disconcerting - and very, very enjoyable.

Huh? Oh...the teeth meant Doc had made another breakthrough - calcium based synthetics. Which meant...

"Doc, what about the skeletal structure?" Al asked, reluctantly breaking our embrace, his face faintly flushed from embarrassment.

"Oh, yes, it has a complete skeleton." Doc nodded happily. "Also, all the musculature, subcutaneous fat layer, and epidermal. Even the hair. But, no organs."

Still, it was a hell of a breakthrough. We celebrated, opening the vodka that Doc kept hidden under the counter. When we left that night, he stayed behind to cover the 'body' and straighten the lab.

We shouldn't have left.

Al got the call hours later. Apparently, Doc, being the scatterbrain he was, had left the vodka too close to a Bunsen burner. The alcohol ignited, and our lab had burned fiercely, as some of the compounds used were highly flammable. The Coroner had arrived, and they'd identified the body.

The also identified the second body. Gerald R. Skinner.

Al woke me to tell me. He seemed utterly stricken. I'd gone to bed in my new nightgown, a sheer, silk gown that I'd purchased solely do to the fantastically sensual feeling it created against my new nipples. Now I pulled it tightly around myself in an unthinking reaction. I grieved for Doc.

"You set them straight about me being dead though." I muttered dully.

He hesitated, the slowly met my eyes. "Uh...Yvette." he said hesitantly, and his tone, and use of my 'other' name made me look up. "Gerald Skinner IS dead."

"What do you..." I started indignantly. Then, my voice died as I realized that my life, at least my old life, was irrevocably gone.

You see, a special bacteria is needed to break down the synthetics before they bond. After they bond, they become real flesh, and CAN'T be removed. The only culture of that artificial bacteria had been in the lab.

Sure, other labs could re-create it - but it took more than a month to 'mature'. There was simply no way for me to recreate my male body. I was no 'Yvette' for life.

"Go away." I told Al dully, and sank into my bed, trying to cope with the realization.

Al didn't leave. Instead, he sat me back up, and wrapped an arm around me. "No. We ARE going to get through this. I'll be here for you. I promise."

And I collapsed into his arms, and cried.

The next day, we attended mine and Doc's funeral. I found myself without any hunger at all, so I skipped breakfast and emotionlessly, methodically prepared for the funeral.

I applied my make-up carefully and subdued - after trying three time before getting right. Then, I carefully chose my clothing out of my new purchases.

A pair of black lace panties. I tried the matching bra. Although it had fight tolerably well the day before, now it was too tight. I'd forgotten that the cells in my breast hadn't matured, and were still swelling. So I'd have to go braless.

I pulled on black nylons. Over them went a black skirt that hung to my ankles, and a black cotton blouse, which was now tightly stretched across my swelling breasts. A pair of subdued, 4 inch heels were the shortest heels I'd bought - and I found I had some difficulty walking easily in them, as my new habitual stride was for higher heels.

The final touch was a wide-brimmed black hat I'd bought on a whim, never dreaming I'd be wearing it to my own funeral.

It was odd hearing the few people in life I now eulogizing me, as I sat three rows back from my own coffin. To anyone that asked, I was a friend of Al's who had known 'Gerald' through him, and also the Doc. I cried over the two closed caskets - false tears for the ersatz 'me', and very real ones for my friend and mentor, Dr. Malcolm Pierce.

For the next two weeks I was a complete wreck. Al was the one that pulled me through. He was a pillar I could lean on. It was he who hunted down someone who could - and did, for an outrageous price - provide me with new I.D. I was now 'Yvette DeLaCroix', as far as the Government was concerned, with a birth certificate, driver's license, passport - the works.

Slowly, I recovered. It wasn't easy, but Al was always there when I needed him. Our biggest problem was now finances. So, I swallowed my anger, despair and pain, and went out to find a job.

It wasn't easy. First, I couldn't prove any schooling or previous employment - 'Yvette' lacked any past. Also, my breasts had finally stabilized at their final size - 56HHH. So here I was, and 'uneducated', 'inexperienced' woman with an unbelievable figure and massive breasts, trying to get a job that paid very well.

So, I took the only one I could find - stripping.

Al tried to talk me out of it - but not too hard. We needed the money too badly. Especially since my new I.D. had been the major drain of Al's bank account. My own, of course, had become unreachable with 'my' death.

I'd practiced for a week in my bedroom, not even letting Al see. Now, it was my debut. I stood back stage as the announcer's amplified voice rang out.

"And now, the Body Shop is proud to introduce our new Headline Performer - YVETTE!" And as the heavy, driving beat of the music kicked in, I strode provocatively onto the stage.

I was wearing a custom made 'French Maid', with matching black 7 inch heels. As I began to move sensuously with the music, the men went wild with the sight of my incredible figure.

And something happened.

My despair, my weary acceptance of my new life faded as I began to become excited. The fact that I was doing this to a room full of men, driving their hormones into a frenzy, was sending new energy thrumming through my own, incredibly endowed body. Exotic Dancing went from being a job, to being a nearly orgasmic, narcotic experience. I had NEVER felt this alive, this energetic.

It was incredible.

My moves went from being stiff, formulaic moves to richly erotic, supple, gyrations. I moved to the music, my body flexing and swaying. A new, never before felt heat rose in my now real cunt and I became more aroused than I had ever been before.

Then, the first song neared it's end, and I pulled off the black silk dress. As the second song started, I strutted around the stage clad in the heels, black nylons, panties, corset, bra and cap.

I become more sexual as my hands caressed my own, aroused body. They lingered on my own, huge tits, then moved down and undid the corset, tossing it aside. When I finally removed my bra, setting my enormous, firm tits free, the men literally pushed to stick money in my garters in return for a quick feel of my huge tits.

Then, in the third song, when I removed my panties, small orgasms shook my body as the warm, humid air blew across my aroused, sensitive clit. I finished my set in purest ecstasy.

And, I had signed a contract for two sets a night.

A week later, the manager agreeably changed it - to four.

Then there was the lap dancing. Men eagerly, orgasmically fondling and sucking my enormous breasts as I gyrated on their laps, head thrown back in pleasure.

If anyone had told me a year ago that I'd be living a life as a huge-breasted stripper, completely satisfied with a job that brought me into nightly, intimate contact with men, I wouldn't have believed them

But, my new life wasn't quite perfect. I'd fallen hopelessly, helplessly in love. With Al.

But, how could I tell him? How could I let him know that the one thing I desired more than anything else was to be his wife? To feel his embrace. To make hot, passionate love to him, over and over?

I couldn't ask other women for advice on this dilemma. They'd never been in the situation I was. Al knew my past. He knew who I used to be.

Then, one day, on the internet, I found, by accident, a site called TGStories. I paid for access, and read the stories. And thought.

Look. None of this is true. You know that it can't possibly happen. It just can't. So, don't believe a single word you've read here. Still...

Any advice?...

Oak Court Nightmares

By Gunslinger

Part I: Goin' on Midnight...

On the wall, an old-fashioned mechanical clock, constructed of honest-to-God gears and springs, quietly broke time into discrete intervals with every soft tick of it's mechanism.

Unsuccessfully stifling a yawn, the broad-shouldered, average-height figure clad comfortably in black sweatpants and a dark grey T- shirt stepped back from the work-bench and glanced up at the clock, somewhat surprised to discover it was getting on towards midnight – he hadn't realized it was nearly that late.

Though, he mused with a wry grin, it certainly explained why he felt so exhausted...

Nicholas Long rubbed at his brown eyes, then ran a hand through perpetually-mussed rust-red hair. He'd come out into the workshop he'd made out of the garage, intending to put 'a little time' in working on his latest wood-working project, but had subsequently lost all track of time. What with having installed a coffee-maker out here, as well as a small bar fridge with cream and a few munchable items, it hadn't been hard to just keep puttering along.

Nick gave another wry grin – this time remembering all the times his wife, Cathy, had complained about the amount of time he spent involved in 'D-I-Y' projects. Rather, his EX-wife, which was fair enough – she was just too dense, too wrapped up in her petty and silly little 'girly' interests to understand the concept of self-sufficiency. Indeed, it was all about spending HIS hard-earned money on frivolous, useless things.

Leaning his broad shoulders back against the tool-laden peg-board that ran all along the wall of his converted garage workshop, the five-foot, nine-inch tall red-head let his eyes briefly slip closed as he rolled his shoulders and spread his arms out to either side in a long, satisfying stretch.

Well, he mused, enjoying the interplay of his shoulder muscles as he stretched wide, it was a mistake he'd rectified rightly enough. He'd gotten the house, on the cul-de-sac street of Oak Court, in the divorce, which meant he got to keep his workshop without every again being annoyed by the door into the house swinging open, and a snarky female voice saying: 'Still hard at work, I see...'

The interconnecting door between the garage and the laundry room swung open, and a familiar, snarky feminine voice said: "Still hard at work, I see..."

Nick's eyes popped open, and he stared in disbelief that was rapidly turning to anger as a tall, lithe woman with rich chestnut hair gathered into a ponytail stepped into the garage. Her familiar face was cast in an equally familiar sardonic expression as the woman, dressed in crisp white blouse and tan slacks, crossed her arms just below her rather impressive bust.

"What the hell do you..." Nick snarled, starting to take a step towards his ex-wife – and then stopping short.

Well – being stopped short, as a matter of fact. Grunting in discomfort, Nick looked away from Catherine to survey, in growing confusion, his arms. Somehow, when he'd stretched out, his wrists seemed to have gotten entangled in some extension cords, one to either side. The odds of cords being positioned at exactly arm's reach for him, much less that they'd each entangle him when he stretched, had to be astronomical – especially when he didn't remember those extension cords being there in the first place.

"Oh – I'm just here to admit that you were absolutely right all along – just like you knew you were..." She told him, her voice dripping with some wicked blend of sarcastic malice that only half-registered in his state of confusion as he pulled, in vain, to free his inexplicably bound wrists.

"Huh...?" He grunted, only half-hearing her as his confusion – and fear – grew with each passing second. The situation was just impossible, and...

"All those efforts you made to get me to learn how to do things for myself." She elucidated, seeming not at all surprised by his strange and inexplicable predicament as she walked up to him. She smiled wickedly – and reached out to pull up his T-shirt, exposing his broad, well-toned chest.

"Hey! What the hell...?" Nick protested. "Look, Cathy – just, help me, I can't seem... It's weird, like they're, I don't know, tied or... What are you doing?"

The confused question popped out, not from Cathy having picked up two of his large caulking guns, but the fact that she was now approaching him slowly while carrying them, a wicked grin on her face.

Nick's mind struggled manfully to keep up with the situation – and failed. It was too strange, too implausible – any one element of the situation was bad enough, all of them together was too much for his mind to make any sort of sense out of. Indeed, it seemed like the situation couldn't make sense, it was just too improbable – like the fact that Cathy had never wanted to touch his tools, much less to pick them up from the work-bench...

...especially when he didn't remember putting those large-size caulking guns on the work-bench in the first place. Or loading them up with 10 oz. DAP silicone caulking compound, for that matter...

"I'm going to 'do it myself'..." Cathy informed him with a wicked chuckle.

Then she took the caulking guns, one in each hand, and positioned them to either side of his chest – and shoved the tapered plastic nozzle of each caulking tube into his chest.

Nick screamed – but not in pain, which should have been weird, if 'weird' hadn't been totally overwhelmed by the actual situation. He felt the pressure of the nozzles under his flesh, yes, but not pain – but the entire situation was impossible.

"What? How, what, don't...!" Nick stammered, struggling to comprehend the impossibilities his senses were reporting – and then, with a 'schunk-click' sound, Cathy simultaneously gave each caulking gun a pump.

Nick squirmed within the confines of his inexplicable electrical-cord bondage, letting out another scream of horrified shock – as he felt silicone being pumped into his chest, forced out of the tip of the nozzle and forming small, marble-sized pockets of squishy substance just behind his nipples.

"A 'DIY' guy like yourself practically throwing good money away getting plastic surgeons to do a 'boob job' like the one you talked me into... tsk, tsk." Cathy taunted him, pushing her chest out to emphasize her DDD-cup implants.

...her silicone implants, Nick belated realized in mounting horror, only after she continued speaking: "...especially when, just as you were always telling me, it's so much cheaper and easier to 'do it yourself'!"

She squeezed the handles on the caulking guns – and the tiny little mounds underneath his skin were quite so tiny any more – and less so still when she squeezed again, and again, and again...

"No... No! This... This isn't even possible!" Nick protested looking down at his chest in horror, then around the room, as much to look away from what 'seemed' to be happening to his chest as for any sign of help. His eyes fell once more to his chest – and the unarguably feminine contours the steadily swelling mounds of silicone being injected into him were forming.

"Just keep telling yourself that..." Cathy chuckled cruelly, even as she continued working the 'triggers' on the caulking guns.

On Nick's chest, the impossibly firm mounds of what were undeniably breasts – taut, unmistakably 'fake', silicone-pumped breasts, yes, but breasts nonetheless – continued to swell...

With a jaw-creaking yawn, Bradley Gordon turned his beloved '59 Cadillac Eldorado into Oak Court, the old-fashioned yellow-tinged headlight beams sweeping briefly across the Long residence, on the corner, as he made the turn.

Motoring past Nick's place, the tall, rangy 36-year old glanced over and noticed the lights on in the workshop Nick had turned his garage into. With a wry smile, Brad wished his neighbor full enjoyment of his hard-bought privacy...

...after all, it was Nick's example and advice that had led Brad to divorcing his own wife, Rita. As Nick had pointed out, if you didn't have what you really wanted, why bother to keep it?

Pulling his lovingly restored 'land yacht' into his driveway, Brad put the behemoth into Park, then shut off the powerful engine. Climbing out of the car, Brad stifled yet another yawn as he headed towards the house.

Dressed in a conservative grey suit that matched his eyes, Brad looked every bit the successful business executive he was, from his carefully style ebony hair to his gloss-shined black leather shoes. Unfortunately, one of the responsibilities that came with his position was that, when a project was running behind, you had to stay behind an 'rally the troops', as Brad liked to say.

Now, eager only for a quick shower and some seriously needed sack time, he let himself into his house and trudged upstairs, already pulling off his suit jacket and loosening his tie.

Tossing tie and jacket onto the bed in passing, Brad walked through the Master bedroom to the en suite bathroom. Unbuttoning his Cross dress-shirt, Brad pulled the shirt-tails out of his dress pants, and unbuckled his belt. He started the water running in the shower stall to allow it to warm up, then padded back into the living room to finish undressing. Sitting on the end of the bed to remove his socks and shoes, he let his eyes briefly close, thinking for a second of skipping the shower entirely... and then shook himself back to as close to full wakefulness as possible at the moment, and finished undressing. Naked, he padded back into the tiny bathroom and pulled open the steam-fogged door to the shower stall...

...and blinked tiredly at the naked woman standing under the spray.

Of average height, but with an anything-but-average hourglass figure, the vivacious red-head was lounging against the built-in shower seat in the corner, her slender hands sliding across the smooth, pale skin of the wide hips and diminutive waist that lay in the almost literal shadow of her firm, natural DD-cup breasts.

"Didn't I divorce you...?" Brad asked, feeling a muted sort of confusion. Mostly, however, he felt. strangely numb.

"Sure did, you egotistical bastard." His ex-wife, Rita, replied calmly. "Don't just stand there – come on in."

Numbly, Brad did as she bade, his mind sluggishly churning over the situation. He was dimly aware that there was something very strange about all this, but for some reason, he simply wasn't feeling the surprise, confusion, or even hint of fear that his intellect seemed to think he should be. Instead, he felt almost preternaturally calm as he stepped into the shower with his ex-wife, pulling the door closed behind him.

"If I divorced you, what are you doing here. ?" Brad wondered aloud with a strangely detached sense of curiosity, as she began to rub some feminine-scented cream over his naked body. Obediently, he lifted his arms to allow her easier access as she worked.

"I'm here because you divorced me." Rita explained in a calm voice, seemingly oblivious to when her wet, naked body rubbed against his – as if her were an inanimate object, rather than a person. Part of his mind was informing him he should have found this either terrifying, arousing, or perhaps both, but he still felt nothing as she continued: "I'm here for revenge. You, your buddies Nick and Jerry

– if your wife isn't one-hundred-percent perfect, at least as you define 'perfect', just get rid of her "

"That's right." He agreed. "You were too emotional, too self willed and independent..."

"...not obedient enough?" She asked with a strange little smile his numbed emotions couldn't comprehend. "Oh, well, shame I'm not the ideal little 'old fashioned', obedient type of woman you wanted – don't worry, though, I'm sure a woman just like you wished I'd been is out there somewhere... or soon will be."

"Okay." Brad agreed, numbly, not really thinking about any possible implications of her words as she finished what she was doing...

...which, apparently, was giving him incredibly silky-smooth, pale... feminine skin.

At some point, Brad noted numbly, his hair had seemed to have grown, as well, the wet mass hanging down nearly to his ass as she shut off the water. Obediently, he let her lead him out of the stall, where she towed them both dry, her actions still calm and almost impersonal.

"Come along..." He ordered, and he obediently followed her into the bedroom, where she led him to her vanity. "I thought I'd gotten rid of this." He commented, idly.

"You did." She agreed, sitting him in front of it, and beginning to do his make-up. As she worked, he eyed his masculine reflection as she slowly applied color to it, noting in passing that his hair had not only dried impossibly fast, but had somehow dried itself into a sort of old-fashioned, 'Betty Page' sort of style, with rolled bangs and soft, wavy edges as it fell softly down past his denuded shoulders.

"Now..." Rita said, tugging on his hand to get him to stand up, which he did. She paused for a second, looking over her handwork – the gloss, dark-red lips, that long, dark eye-lashes, the fine, arched brows...

"...lets get you dressed." She finished.

"Okay." Brad numbly agreed – wondering, mildly, why his intellect insisted he should right now be running from the house in a panic...

Joints cracked at the short, athletic young brunet stretched mightily – not the least being his jaw, split in a wide yawn.

With a satisfied grunt Jerry Cole relaxed his muscles, and continued down the hallway. Five feet, five inches tall, with crew-cut brown hair, the blue-eyed young man was dressed comfortably in jeans and a sweatshirt.

As he wandered down the hallways, Jerry's eyes flicked over the shelves he'd build onto both walls. He was a 'collector' – or, as his ex-wife, Natalie, had derisively phrased it, a 'pack-rat'. She'd always been after him to get rid of 'all that worthless old junk'... which meant the joke had ultimately been on her, the 'old junk' he'd finally gotten rid of.

Thinking about his ex, Jerry grinned as a thought occurred to him. He was planning to hit the sack, but perhaps there was something he could do, first...

It didn't take him long to find what he was looking for – the VHS tape containing the video he'd convinced Natalie to let him make on their wedding night. In his basement rec room, he fired up the old TV/VCR combo, and inserted the tape. Flopping his compact, toned frame down on the ratty old couch, Jerry undid the fly of his jeans in anticipation. A burst of static flickered across the screen – then cleared to reveal the nervous-looking figure of a short, slender woman with shoulder-length, golden blonde hair. Dressed in a wedding dress, she was clearly uncomfortable as she eyes the camera.

"I... I'm not sure I want to do this..." She said, hesitantly.

"C'mon, babe – it's just you an' me, and we're the only ones'll ever see this..." Jerry's own recorded voice wheedled from off camera.

Smiling, the here-and-now Jerry began to stroke his long, throbbing cock as he watched the woman on screen hesitantly begin to undress, revealing her slender body with it's pert C-cup breasts.

"I really don't feel comfortable about this..." She said, letting the dress slide to the floor. "Just capturing the moment for posterity..." Jerry's recorded voice informed her.

"Of course – you want to keep everything, always... except for me, of course..." Natalie replied, on-screen. Jerry's smile faltered, and he blinked in confusion. That wasn't right...

"You never wanted to get rid of anything, no matter how useless it was – but you got rid of me damned quick enough, didn't you?" The recorded image of Natalie demanded, staring directly at the screen. "How do you think that made me feel, you bastard...?"

"What the...?" Jerry wondered – and then repeated the words, with a yelp...

...as he tried to stop stroking his cock.

Ignoring him, his hand continued moving up and down the shaft of his long, hard cock - which, considering that things were rapidly becoming less-than-arousing, was strange enough in its own right. That, however, wasn't nearly as confusing – and frightening – as the fact that his cock seemed to be going numb. He could still feel it in his hand, but the feel of his hand going up and down the shaft, against his will, was becoming steadily less distinct.

"I could have just gotten rid of it..." Natalie taunted him, on-screen. "...but I know how much you hate to waste anything. So, I figured you'd be much happier using it – isn't that right?"

"What? I don't..." Jerry stammered – even now, despite the impossibility of the situation, he felt decidedly strange addressing the TV, even though he'd tentatively decided it wasn't his tape playing, but some feed from where Natalie was recording this, live...

...in a room that looked identical to the Vegas hotel room of their wedding night...

...looking exactly as she had that night nearly a decade ago.

It had to be something like that, though, because anything else would be impossible – as impossible as... as... as...

...as his cock somehow turning into an impressively realistic plastic dildo that he was helplessly thrusting into the sopping wet womanhood that now lay nestled between his thighs.

"Oh, God, oh GOD!" Jerry shouted – and, to his shame, it wasn't all in shock and horror, for a good part of it was in pleasure. Horrified pleasure, yes. Unwanted pleasure, undoubtedly – but pleasure nonetheless.

"Feel good, baby..." The recording taunted him. "Wouldn't want to waste your libido, either – so, instead of a horny bastard, you're a horny bitch, now..."

"Please... let... me... STOP!" Jerry panted out between utterly humiliating moans of pleasure and unwilling arousal, even as his body rocked in time to the rhythm of his helplessly pistoning hand.

"What – waste a perfectly good orgasm...?" Natalie chuckled, evilly. "Oh, God, non... no.. no... no..." Jerry cried out in rising ecstasy...

...and writhed in both ecstasy and humiliation as he heard his voice crying out "YES...! YES...! YES...!" as his very first orgasm smashed into and through him in a an unwanted wave of pure, primal pleasure...

"Well, Brad, darling..." Rita chuckled, as he stood in front of the gilt-edge full-length oval mirror.

Dispassionately, the tall, lean brunet surveyed himself. Framed by the soft waves of his old-fashioned hairdo, a face made disturbingly feminine in a sort of strong, firm-jawed sort of way by his pale, silky new skin and carefully applied make-up stared back at him with flat, incurious grey eyes.

Those eyes shifted moving down the reflection to eyes the fuzzy, dark-red sweater that clung to his lean, trim torso before giving way to a pair of black spandex capris. The skin-tight, slightly glossy latex-spandex 'pedal pushers', in turn, revealed that, beneath the pants, lay a pair of old-fashioned back-seamed 'nude' stockings.

His impassive face eyes the reflection - and then, a slightly puzzled frown began to form...

...which expanded into a full-fledged look of horrified realization.

"What the FUCK!?" Brad demanded in horrified anger. His hands flew to his feminine-clad body, even as his mind reeled under the assault of pent-up thoughts and emotions, trying to cope with his strange, uncaring obedience as he let things happen to him that disgusted and horrified. Sickened, his hands flew to the sweater, planning to tear it off in his first step of reclaiming himself – except that his hands refused to obey the order. Oh, he grabbed the sweater – but that was as far as it went. No matter how hard he struggled, he couldn't take it off...

Nor, he found, could he remove the spandex pants...

...or the make-up...

...or even so much as muss his carefully styled hair – when he tried that action, his hands instead carefully patted a few stray strands back into place.

"Holy shit!" He screamed in anger and frustration. Whirling, he stared at his ex-wife, and began to advance on her, anger in his eyes as he lovingly thanked her for making him so very pretty...

Brad stopped dead, Rita laughing at the comical look of surprise on his feminized face as what he'd been saying, and the sweetly loving tone he'd been saying it in, registered. More over, his hands, originally out-stretched as if to grasp and wring her neck, had had folded sweetly together high on his chest as he'd thanked her.

Brad's mind considered the implications of that for a second...

...and then he ran.

With Rita's mocking laughter trailing after him, Brad rushed out of the room, stocking-clad feet pattering on the floor as he fled down the stairs. Pausing only long enough to grab his keys from where they hung on the key-rack at the front door, he fled out into the night....

...and stopped dead, gaping at the sight of Rita, fully dressed despite being naked just a minute before in the bedroom upstairs, leaning against his prized Caddy.

"Say, Brad – know what goes well with tail fins. ?" She asked, patting one slender, wing-like protrusion that arose from the rear end of the big old car.

". nose cones!" She exclaimed, triumphantly, whipping her other hand out from her back. Dangling from it was an old-fashioned 'bullet bra'.

Unconsciously shaking his head in denial, Brad slowly backed into the house. Slamming the door, he locked the dead-bolt, then whirled – to find himself staring at the mocking grin on the shapely red-head's face.

"What the hell is going on?!" He damned, in a voice filled with a strange mixture of confusion, anger and fear – even as his hands helplessly removed the sweater. "This... This can't be real! It's. got to be a nightmare!"

"My dear Brad..." Rita chuckled, as she strapped the beige undergarment that matched the panties he wore beneath his spandex pants into place around his soft-skinned chest. "It's both..."

...and she began to laugh, and laugh, and laugh....

Jerry screamed his way through his third orgasm. It was no more ecstatically pleasurable than the other two, but it was no less orgasmic, either and through sheer repetition, the pleasure was steadily out-weighting the still-present humiliation, confusion and fear.

In short, no matter the fact that he hated it, he was nevertheless slowly finding himself beginning to, well. enjoy it.

Desperately, still fucking himself silly with his cock-turned-dildo, Jerry pulled himself off the couch – only to realize, in renewed horror, that something else was horribly wrong. Sweat-slicked and pleasure-wracked, Jerry realized that he was standing atop the five-inch tapered heels of a pair of leopard-print mules.

Standing comfortably and easily atop the five-inch heels.

Pleasure-induced gasps of 'Yes!' intermixed with his desperate cried of denial, Jerry desperately wished he was staggering out of the room, as, instead, he moved with humiliating grace atop the high heels, hand still relentlessly driving the dildo in and out of his sopping wet new cunt...

...and, on the screen , Natalie began to laugh, and laugh, and laugh....

"Stop..." Nick sobbed, helplessly. "Please, Cathy, I'm sorry, I'll do anything, please, just stop. "

Cathy's hands finally paused in their rhythmic pumping of the caulking-gun grips.

"You want me to stop doing this 'do it yourself' improvement project?" She asked, feigning a tone of shocked surprise.

"Yes, please, yes..." the captive broad-shouldered red-head begged – sobbing as he stared down at the. things thrust from his chest.

The. boobs.

He shuddered as he mentally accorded them that name, but as much as he desperately tried to deny it, there was no mistaking what rode impossibly high and proud on his chest. From his perspective, both physically and emotionally, the impossibly spherical masses of silicone-pumped flesh looked to be as big as a pair of flesh-colored beach-balls grafted to his chest, incongruously tipped with his small, flat male nipples. Of course, they weren't really that big – but they were undeniably huge. Massive mounds of patently fake tit- flesh, dwarfing his otherwise broad rib-cage.

"Well, I suppose I could try my hand at one of the other crafts you were always trying to get me interested in..." Catherine mused thoughtfully.

"Yes, yes...!" Nick agreed, hearing how pathetic he sounded, and not caring in the least.

"Okay..." Cathy said, cheerfully – and Nick sagged in sobbing relief as the buxom brunette, (well – 'buxom' compared to anybody but him), extracted the silicone guns from his massive new tits, putting them down on the work bench...

...and then shoving her hands to the front of his sweat-pants.

Nick screamed, both from the physical sensation, as well as in shock and fear. Her hands emerged – in her slender finger was his large, limp cock.

"What...?! No. !" Nick half-sobbed, half-screamed – and then let out another scream as she bean to manipulate what she held, squishing and molding it like clay.

He could feel it. Feel it as if the cock were still attached – but what should have been painful, wasn't. He felt the pressure, the pulling, even the stretching, but no pain...

...well, no physical paint. The emotional torment was something else completely – especially when she tore the mass in two. "Let's see how I am with sculpting!" She said, brightly, as she slapped the flesh-colored masses onto his huge new tits.

He sobbed. He begged. He pleaded...

...he moaned.

He couldn't help it – as she worked, it felt as if she were playing with his cock – at least, at first. As she massaged and shaped, however, the sensation began to change – it began to feel as if, instead of working with two halves of his cock, she was playing with two cocks...

...and the sensation, instead of feeling like it was coming from his crotch, as it had at first, re-centered itself to feel like it was coming from his chest – which was even more horrifying, since he could now feel a disturbing sort of warm dampness waking in his crotch as she continued 'playing' with the cock-clay on his tits.

"There!" She exclaimed, proudly – and he stared down in still-growing horror at the large nipples atop domed areoles that now graced his massive bust-line. Gently, she ran a hand over the broad curve of one massive tit – and Nick shuddered, for oh-so-many reasons, not the least of which was the sensation.

He'd never had tits before, so he couldn't compare it to what having a tit touched 'should feel like'. Instead, the sensation was a mélange of many other things.

Part of it was familiar – the feel of a hand moving across the skin of his chest. The skin, however, was thrust much further out, was much rounder, much more softly firm, then ever before.

There was also the unfamiliar weight and heft of his new tits – and the strange 'liquid filled' sensation that mass transmitted as her touch caused the tit to shift slightly, rippling through his massive new bust.

Worse, from his point of view, however, was how good it felt. It felt like stroking the shaft of his erect cock – except that sensation originated from his chest, and covered a much larger area.

When her slender fingers reached his newly-formed nipples, he couldn't help but gasp – for if the mass of the breast was encased in 'cock-shaft skin', then the nipples were 'cock-head skin', even more erotically sensitive...

...which increased the humiliation ten-fold as the sensations from his nether regions redoubled at the pleasurable touch, a strangely 'empty' sensation of moist heat that argued persuasively that his 'equipment' now matched his 'accessories'.

To be more blunt, Nick was pretty damned sure SHE now 'boasted' a hot, wet pussy to go with her massive tits.

...and Cathy began to laugh, and laugh, and laugh....

* * * * * Interlude

On the wall, an old-fashioned mechanical clock, constructed of honest-to-God gears and springs, quietly broke time into discrete intervals with every soft tick of it's mechanism.

With a muffled, incoherent little cry, the broad-shouldered, average-height figure jerked fully awake, the brown eyes below the messy that of red hair at first bulging sightlessly, then flicking downwards...

A short, stifled, and oddly gender-neutral scream emerged from the masculine woman's throat as he stared down at the massive tits that strained her grey T-shirt to the limits – tits forced on her by her ex-wife...

...except that part of her was pretty sure she'd gotten the massive tits through multiple surgeries, partly as it made her more money as a 'specialty act', as well as because it offset the shame and humiliation growing up as such as masculine-looking woman that had led her to become a stripper in the first place...

Nick – or was it Nikki? – looked around in confusion.

The room was all wrong. and yet it was also somehow right.

It was still a converted garage – but instead of a work-shop, it was a sort of dance studio, mirrors replacing peg-board on the wall, a brass pole where he-now-a-she (...or always a she-that-looked-like-a-he?) distinctly remembered a work-bench being, even as she somehow felt there had never been one there.

She was dead certain that she'd never been in this particular version of the room before... but, at the same time, it was all so familiar to her, that she felt certain that if she opened the cabinet just to her right, she'd find her collection of dance-music CDs, neatly labeled and sorted.

She hesitated.

She opened.

CDs.

"What... the... fuck?!" Nick/Nikki whispered, closing the cabinet, whirling mind trying – impossibly! To cope with two distinct, utterly separate, and in no way reconcilable set of memories. One, the most vivid, the most complete, insisted she was really a man. She remembered every detail of that male life, remembered crisp and clear the horror she'd just gone through...

...the impossible horror.

The other set of memories was dreamy, hazy, with massive gaps, more like a remembered movie once watched than memories of something that had occurred to her – and yet they matched up with what she saw around her, and were almost prosaically plausible compared to...

Hesitantly, her masculine-looking hands rose and touched her massive tits – her massive, incredibly sensitive tits, with their proportionately scaled, even more sensitive nipples.

Nipples she recalled the ex-wife 'Stripper Nikki' couldn't possibly have forcing upon her... and that were too large, too impossibly sensitive for 'multiple implant' memories to explain.

"What the fuck is going on...?" Nikki asked the empty room....

Brad snapped awake – to find himself sitting at the end of his bed, wearing make-up and dressed in women's clothing. To find himself with clear-cut memories of his ex-wife, Rita somehow doing this to him...

...even as vague memories of being happy to get home so he could indulge in his secret cross-dressing lifestyle insisted he'd never been married.

"What the fuck is going on...?" Brad asked the empty room....

The man who distinctly remembered the video image of his wife giving him a pussy, but was somehow, vaguely, also a woman in the middle of the gender reassignment to become the man she'd always wanted to be, snapped awake in front of the Tv and wanted to know: "What the fuck...?"

Part II: Jus' a little past Midnight...

BACK TO FUN ZONE

SUMMARY: When a group of guys are suddenly confronted by their ex's, who suddenly have the power to transform them into the women they think they should be.

Part II: Jus' a little past Midnight...

Jus' a little past Midnight...

Jerry shook his head, and tried to make sense of what was happening to him...

...like the hazy, but naggingly insistent, set of memories that suggested 'he' was really Geraldine Cole – not a 'short, athletic' man, but an 'average height, overly muscular woman' – an ugly, flat-chested one, one who had come to try and become a man.

"No, damn it – I'm a guy!" He insisted, aloud – and winced as 'honesty' compelled him to whisper: "...was one, anyway."

Hesitantly, a certainly masculine-looking hand ran lightly across the crotch of a pair of jeans that encased a decidedly feminine pussy – and then he (she..?) yanked his(her) hand away.

This is fuckin' impossible – it can't be real, just can't. I.. musta fallen asleep, or something." Jerry muttered to himself, angrily. "Nightmare, that's all it is –a fucking hideous nightmare..."

Glaring accusingly at the TV, which now showed only static, he started to get up from the couch – then stopped, looking down at his feet.

Feet that were smaller then the crisp, clear male memories he had insisted they should be – and which were wearing a pair of leopard-print mules with five-inch heel that argued persuasively for the wearer's femininity. With a curse, he reached down to yank them off...

...and couldn't.

He struggled, yanking so hard it was quite painful, but they refused to yield. Basically a type of high-heeled slipper, they should have been held only loosely in place by the broad animal-print strap crossing his now-dainty(ish) feet just behind the toes... but it was as if the damned things were glued to his feet!

Swearing, he finally gave up on it, and rose hesitantly and carefully to his feet – only to swear even louder to discover that such care and caution were unnecessary. He stood easily, perhaps even familiarly, atop the slender heels... heels that his male memories seemed sure he should wobble, stagger, and perhaps even topple off of, but which his body handled as if it had all the previous experience his hazy, unreal-feeling feminine memories suggested she had.

Hating the feminine stride the heels imparted, but hating even more the feminine body-part the sensations from his crotch insisted on reminding him about, Jerry ankled and swayed his way out of the rec room, easily handling the stairs in his heels as he headed for the kitchen. He reached the top of the stairs, turned and walked around the stairwell wall into the kitchen – and stopped dead atop his slender heels.

His vague, 'feminine' set of memories saw the short, slender blonde as a complete stranger – but his more complete 'male' memories recognized Natalie entirely too well. His ex-wife, comfortably dressed in a cable-knit ivory sweater and tan jeans, legs decorously crossed at her ankles, was sitting at the kitchen table – a table heaped high with red, heart-shaped boxes intermingled with strands, cables, chains, loops and balls of metal that gave forth a golden reflection.

A half-heartbeat of stunned immobility – and then Jerry tried to run away.

He/she failed miserably as his/her mule-clad feet not only refused to carry his/her flat-chested, masculine-looking, but technically female body away, but actually finished the task of walking all the way into the room to have him/her helplessly stand in front of Natalie.

"Hello, Jerry – or, perhaps 'Geraldine' would be more appropriate..." Natalie said, her tone mockingly chipper. "Damn you, bitch – you change me back!" Jerry shouted, shaking one decidedly male fist in her direction. "Tsk, Tsk – such anger!" Natalie admonished him. "Now, now – don't say anything you might regret later..." Then she laughed – and 'not in a good way'...

"Of course, every time you did that in the past, you always 'apologized' the same way." She said, languidly gesturing at the heaped items on the table. "A box of cheap chocolates, and some equally cheap 'gold jewelry'. Say... would you like some chocolate, Geraldine?"

"No, I don't want any damn..." Jerry started, angrily – only to trail off into something that sounded surprisingly like 'eep!', as, against his will, he found himself taking a heart-shaped box of chocolates she offered, and opening it to reveal a dozen little dark-brown confections.

"Wait, I...!" Jerry protested – even as his fingers grasped one of the bon-bons, and popped it into his mouth.

"Mmmf!" he protested, around the melting mouthful of rich, dark chocolate. He swallowed – but his traitorous hands were already bringing another confection to his lips.

"Of course, I never ate the chocolate – considering how often you 'apologized', I would have gained weight like you wouldn't have believed!" She said, laughing, as she picked up a handful of jewelry and walked around behind him.

"Don't worry..." She promised him with a wicked whisper in his ear, as she draped a golden chain around his neck. "In your case, all the chocolate is going to go right to where you like extra weight on a woman..."

Eyes wide, Jerry made more muffled sounds of protest, even as his hand worked like a machine, force-feeding him more chocolate. "Tits and ass, Geraldine, sweetie – tits and ass..." Natalie chuckled, impossibly and painlessly affixing earrings to his lobes.

Still helplessly stuffing his face with chocolate, Jerry's horror-widened eyes rolled, and he looked down – at where, accompanied by many odd and disturbingly 'not-unpleasant' sensations, the front of his blue denim work-shirt was slowly beginning to bulge outwards.

"Rmmf.. In-umf... urrphy!" Jerry gobbled through a mouthful of rich, cloying chocolate, even as the last mouthful oozed thickly down his throat – and, apparently, directly into his chest...

...and, if the sensations coming from his pants were any way to judge, his hips and ass.

Laughing, Natalie ignored his garbled pleas and promises, continuing to festoon him with cheap, gaudy 'gold' jewelry, while Jerry desperately – and futilely – struggled to stop jamming one bon-bon after another into his mouth. The only respites came when he emptied a box – then Natalie would take the opportunity to slip a ring, bangle or bracelet on him before handing him the next box of candy to be devoured.

As his shirt bulged steadily outwards, accompanied by a growing weight and heft to his chest, and his pants continued to grow tighter over his ass and hips, horror flooded through Jerry – so, he can be more than excused for taking so long to notice another pertinent fact:

The hand that was mechanically conveying one chocolate after another to his mouth was, well... getting darker.

It had been hard to tell, at first, because his fingers had soon been coated with half-melted chocolate as he packed weight into his tits and ass via the conduit of his mouth – but, by the third heart-shaped box, there was no missing the fact that his skin-tone was definitely closer to the color of the chocolate coating his fingers than it should have been. Now aware of it, Jerry couldn't help but continue to notice his skin darkening, meaning his horrified consciousness had three sets of humiliating data to try and register.

"That's it, baby..." Natalie cooed, almost lovingly, "...keep packing it away."

Not that Jerry needed the encouragement – he had no choice in the matter. He could only stand there, getting draped with more and more gaudy jewelry, as he bulged in front and behind, his skin getting ever closer to the rich, dark shade of the chocolate he was haplessly force-feeding himself...

"...off, damn you!" Brad swore.

Though the hazy, 'I love wearing women's clothing' memories insisted on staying in his head, Brad was pretty sure they were 'fake' – if for no other reason than the fact the female clothes he was wearing stubbornly refused to come off, just as in his 'nightmare'.

A 'nightmare' that seemed to be all-too-real, given the intractable clothing, make-up and hairstyle that refused to go away – which meant that it was either all 'real'... or that he was asleep, and still in the middle of some bizarre, twisted nightmare.

As he headed towards the stairs, he tried to convince himself it was the latter, that none of this was 'really real'... no matter how real it all felt. It had to be a nightmare, and the fact that he could feel the straps of the bra pushing into his silky-soft flesh, the empty cups swaying loose against his chest, was 'all in his head'.

He tried to convince himself of this... with considerably less-than-perfect results.

In fact, he didn't believe a damned word of it – but the tall, lean man kept pretending he believed this was all simply some horrible, horrible nightmare that he'd wake up from any second now...

The keys to the Caddy were still/back on the key rack near the front door. Brad paused, feeling horribly humiliated at the thought of going out in public like this...

"It's just a dream. Not real. A nightmare..." He argued with himself – while a portion of his brain pointed out that if it wasn't real, he didn't have to 'go get help', so there was no need to leave the house.

Grabbing the keys, he opened the door....

No sign of Rita – just his Caddy, in the drive.

He glanced around nervously as he quickly slipped into the pair of battered black rubber boots he kept near the door for going out to get the mirror. Feeling especially silly over how silly he felt about how the boots must look in conjunction with his 'look', he headed to the car.

No Rita.

He slipped behind the wheel, brought the powerful engine to life. Still no Rita.

Brad put the car into reverse, backing onto the court, then crimped the wheel and dropped it into drive. He drove to the end of the court and stopped at the stop sign, looking up and down the deserted late-night street.

Still no sign of Rita.

Pressing on the accelerator, Brad let the big, heavy old car swing out onto the brightly-lit street, sighing in relief as he watched Oak Court recede in his rearview, all without signs of a supernatural ex-wife appearing, bent on further vengeance.

Not that being turned into some sort of helplessly sissy cross-dresser wasn't bad enough, Brad thought, shaking his head. Under the golden-orange glow of the street-lights, the whole incident seemed steadily more unlikely, and his brain began constructing other, more plausible scenarios.

He'd just about decided that he must have been drugged, with clothes and wig glued onto him, when he noticed the gas-gauge edging on the big, red 'E'. While the Caddy was many things, 'fuel efficient' wasn't one of them.

Aiming the snout of the big behemoth towards the bright island of light that marked a corner gas-station, he rolled across an equally deserted intersection at an angle to roll right into the station lot, pulling up under the overhang and up to the pumps.

Brad reached forward, and shut off the ignition... and even as his hand was twisting the key in the ignition, the tall, rangy, femininely-clad man felt something strange.

Not 'strange' as in the sensation itself, for it was familiar enough to him, but 'strange' as in circumstance – as far as he could tell, there was no reason at all to be getting a 'stiffy'.

A 'woody'. 'Popping a boner'

In other words, a look of confusion crossed his carefully made-up face as he looked down to see an erection straining the skin-tight, slightly-glossy black spandex of his never-to-be-sufficiently-damned pants. Because of the 'layout' of things down there, the tight fabric was holding his upwards-pointing cock tight to his crotch and lower belly, creating a clearly visible 'tube' in the fabric over his hardening cock...

...which was already as 'big' as he was used to seeing... and, impossibly, continuing to grow.

It was, however, growing longer at a much higher rate than it was growing thicker. He'd always had a cock of about average length, but he'd been able to pride himself on how thick his one-eyed trouser snake had been. Now, however, that ratio was steadily changing... as the snake apparently took it in its mind to head northward.

Given the events of the evening, he didn't 'freak out', at least not to the normal degree – he cursed, yes, but didn't scream and gibber as the lengthening cock continued to grow. It had now outgrown just his pants, the head of his ever-longer manhood now sliding up under the sweater, which was so tight that it, too, clearly outlined his member as it pushed its way up his torso, reaching and sliding between the empty cups of his 'nosecone' bra.

The strangest thing was the sensations. He could feel everything, and it felt... well, 'normal' wasn't the right word. It felt, however, exactly as he might have imagined it would feel to have his cock rubbing across his body, the head containing a continuous light friction as it was pushed steadily along by the lengthening shaft, rubbing against his damnably silky-smooth skin.

It felt.. good. Really quite good, in fact – but he was in no mood to enjoy it. As his cock continued to expand, he futilely struggled to pull up his sweater, which failed as miserably as every other attempt to dislodge the garment. Next, he tried grabbing his cock through the fabric – and quickly stopped, because it felt 'too good', the swelling moving flesh sliding through the fabric-wrapped tube his hands pulled about it too much like 'jacking off', as if he were enjoying the impossible situation.

His cock was now 'long and thin' by objective definition – but only because it was so very much longer than it's considerably thicker- than average girth. He could no longer completely wrap a fist around the shaft of his cock, which made it 'girthy' indeed - but it was also now more than two feet long...

...which meant that the head of his throbbing, sensitive cock popped out of the neckline of his skin-tight sweater. By rearing his head back and peering down his nose, he could stare at the head of his own cock at face-level.

...and then a hand reached in through the open driver's-side window, and a horrifyingly familiar female voice cried, "Fill 'er up!" as his head was pushed forward – and his warm, moist mouth was shoved over his hard, throbbing 'monster' cock.

"Umph!" was the best protest Brad could make as the head of his huge, seemingly prehensile cock filled his mouth. His head whipped up – but it was as if his lips were locked around the shaft of the cock. He could pull back far enough so that the edge of his cock-head would hit the inside of his lips – but that was as far as it would go. Pulling back further only brought him pain as his lips stretched against the pressure from his swollen cock-head.

Out of the corner of his eye he saw Rita, dressed in typical 'pump jockey' coveralls, grinning evilly as she watched – but he was more concerned with his own situation as he grabbed the cock threaded up under his feminine clothes and trapped in his mouth. His hands wrapped, as best they could, around the shaft where it emerged from the neckline of his sweater – and not only did he fail to pull the cock from his mouth, but he quickly discovered he could no longer remove his fisted hands from his cock. They could – and did – slide up and down the shaft, but they wouldn't release, nor pull the cock-head from his bobbing mouth's embrace.

In other words – he was helplessly, unwillingly, and humiliatingly giving himself a blowjob.

He mumbled horrified, disgusted protests around his mouth-filling cock – because he was sucking his own cock, dammit! – as he struggled... but he also, unwillingly, issued muffled moans of unwitting, unwanted pleasure, because, well... he was sucking his own cock, dammit!

Helplessly, Brad watched as his ex-wife chuckled and walked over to a very old-fashioned pump on the driver's side – a pump that a small portion of Brad's beleaguered brain noted hadn't been there before, but that was small change in what he was experiencing.

What was considerably more germane was the fact that, when Rita flipped up the arm on the pump, there machine made a humming, chugging noise – and then a bell somewhere within 'dinged'...

...and as the bell tolled, Brad convulsed in disgusted ecstasy as an orgasm rocked his body – and a thick, warm, salty jet of liquid that could only be his own cum gushed from his twitching cock to be forced down his unwillingly throat.

Eyes wide in horror, he slumped back in the driver's seat as the machine chugged, hummed – and dinged.

A second orgasm racked his unwilling body, and once again cum gushed down his throat, even as the pump continued chugging and humming it's way towards the next horrifyingly enjoyable, orgasmic 'ding' – and with every helpless gulp of warm, salty cum, the cups of the 'bullet bra' became somewhat less 'empty'...

Panting slightly, the toned, athletic red-head staggered down the hallway.

Confusion and contractions ruled mind and body, roiling the intellect and emotions of the lithe, broad-shouldered, and enormously endowed person, causing the graceless motions that marked the slow progress down the hallway.

Nick was unused to the hefty weight and bounce of the massive tits trying to pull him forward, off balance, their freedom of motion providing an awful lot of play for them to bounce, jiggle and sway under the straining fabric of his grey T-shirt...

...but Nikki was not only used to the constant, weighty reminder of her deliciously enhanced femininity, but had specifically trained herself to sensuously emphasize them as she moved, preferring a shoulder back, chest outthrust strut that showed off her magnificently silicone-packed attributes.

HE hated the massive, freakishly over-sized and over-firm masses of 'fake' tit-flesh, and even more-so how incredibly pleasure sensitive they huge breasts and proportionately-sized nipples were. Worse was the unwanted warm wetness it roused in his even more unwanted new womanhood, reminding him constantly that he was not only now possessed a body that was technically female, but one whose now-constant arousal reminded it's owner of the implicit possibilities and implications of feminine sexuality. She fought to ignore these aspects, desperately clinging to the tattered remnants of his beloved masculinity, what few reminders of it remained...

...while SHE loved her wonderfully huge breasts, especially how sexy they made her feel – how hot and horny they made her, reminding her that she was, indeed, all woman. The masculine aspects of her body, remembered shamefully and with great humiliation, were consciously balanced by the delightful, exciting thoughts of how exaggeratedly feminine and sexy she'd willing made herself – and increasing her arousal by the mere thought of how men that would have once shunned her would now find her very sexually desirable indeed.

So he/she staggered down the hallway – but the 'he' part was merely in now-conflicting memories of two completely different lives, while the reality was a feminine one. The two sides of her conflicted psyche had different interpretations of what she had once been, but both – albeit one grudgingly, the other one happily – admitted that she was, indeed, currently female.

That was the unarguable reality of the situation. She was a woman. A huge-breasted, highly aroused woman...

...and the part of her that was disgusted and humiliated by this fact not only struggled to retain it's own identity, but also found itself struggling to resist the siren-call of the 'logic' that pointed out a simple fact: If she was going to be female, regardless, wouldn't it be so much easier, so much more enjoyable, to give in and be the persona that thoroughly ENJOYED her female state?

The answer to that 'logical' question came from the 'male/emotional/ side of the conflicted woman...

"No...!" She half-moaned, half gasped, hands starting to rise to joyfully fondle and tease her massive, sensitive breasts, then viciously yanked back down to her side... where they fluttered about, as she fought the urge to perhaps slide a finger or two into the warm, moist embrace of her sopping wet cunt.

She was so damned horny she could barely think straight.

Which explained her destination. Mind reeling even more than her top-heavy female body, she entered the small, white-tiled bathroom and began to tear at her clothes. She could help but gasp in hated/loved pleasure as the quick motions caused pleasure to ripple through her sensory-enhanced body, and the very act of denuding herself drove her arousal even higher, a delicious sort of pain that demanded release.

Rather than grant the release that her whole body – and half her mind – cried out for, her tore open the door to the small shower stall, and all but leapt inside. Yanking the door shut behind her, she reached out and turned the faucet all the way over to 'cold'...

She screamed – a strange cry of mingled pain and pleasure, release and regret, as the ice-cold deluge hit her ridiculously over- sensitive body. She shuddered violently, almost as if in the throes of a seizure, as the icy spray washed over her, seeming to take the raging, moist heat of her arousal and wash it down the drain set into the floor.

She endured the rushing waters as long as she could, the now-stronger 'masculine' part of her delighting in the temporary numbness the icy water brought to her body. Finally, shivering violently, she shut off the water and left the shower stall.

The thought of rubbing soft cloth over her body seemed contraindicated, so she dripped profusely as she walked over to the toilet. Needing a moment to catch the breath the ice-cold water had ripped out of her in that scream, she sagged down onto the toilet...

...except, by the time her ass made contact with the seat, it was no longer a toilet.

In that space of a bare instant, when she'd relaxed her knees to go from a standing position to a sitting one, everything had changed. When she unexpectedly lowered her taut, toned ass onto wasn't the cold toilet seat, but the cool, slick white-vinyl surface of a beautician's chair.

Staring uncomprehendingly at the stunned and confused expression on her face, reflected in the wide, wall-mounted mirror she now found in front of her, she'd barely begun to register the changed locale when there was a series of heavy, metallic thuds. Mind still trying to make sense of what her senses were reporting, she tried to turn around to look behind her – and discovered the source of those sounds was the padded-metal restraints that had snapped into place around wrists, ankles, waist and neck, locking in her into the chair.

"Ah – Miss Long..." A familiar voice chuckled behind her. "Right on time for your appointment. I so enjoy clients who understand the importance of punctuality, Nikki."

The restrained, overly-busty woman who had just been referred to as 'Nikki' was helplessly incapable of looking around – but she would have recognized the voice, even if the mirror hadn't revealed Catherine behind him, her tall, lithe figure clad in a crisp white beautician's smock that matched the beauty-parlor interior that served as a backdrop for Nikki's wickedly grinning ex-wife.

"Oh, God, please, no more..." Nikki pleaded in her gender-neutralized voice – but Cathy, still grinning wickedly, ignored her feminized husbands pleas. She stepped closer to the back of the chair – and then reached out, and with surprising tenderness, began to fondle the massive breasts she'd forced upon her.

A gasp and moan of pleasure were pulled from Nikki's unwilling mouth, and she writhed in humiliation... and pleasure.

"Please... Stop!" She gasped, managing to both hate and love the sensations as Cathy manipulated her massive mounds of mammary magnificence. "Please, no, you... you're getting me all... horny!"

It humiliated her to no end to say that – but it was true.

As Cathy played with Nikki's massive tits, especially her large, turgid nipples, the only comparison Nikki could think of was that of getting a hand-job. except that the sensations was on her chest.

...and she had two breasts, so the sensation was doubled.

...and her tits was many orders of magnitude larger, so the sensation took up much more of her body then a 'mere' cock could have produced.

...and, as unbelievable good – as amazingly arousing – as the sensation was, the hyper-sensitive flesh couldn't reach an actual orgasm, which would have released the growing arousal. Instead, as Cathy continued to squeeze and tease the firmly round masses of hyper-pleasurable flesh, Nikki could only squirm in her restraints, gasping and moaning in helpless pleasure and desire that only continued to grow, and grow, and grow...

"Look down." Cathy whispered lovingly into Nikki's ear. Still moaning, the massively-endowed woman did so – and she whimpered and gasped as her eyes focused on the strange device mounted on the chair between her legs.

Strange – but a single glance identified its purpose, for the chair-mounted hydraulic cylinder was positioned so that its gleaming shaft pointed, like any arrow, towards Nikki's now-sopping pussy and mounted on the end of that shaft was a bright-pink vibrator.

"The button to turn it on..." Cathy whispered, hands zeroing in on Nikki's super-sensitive nipples; ". is just under you right hand."

Nikki's eyes flicked towards where her hand was strapped to the arm of the chair – and couldn't miss the big red button, positioned so that it would be so easy to extend her index finger to push it.

So damned easy.

Cathy's hands continued their devilishly delightful work... and even continued to do so when, nearly fifteen minutes later, Nikki's willpower broke and she began jabbing a finger in desperate, repeated spasm onto the button.

"No, no, no...!" Nikki screamed in a mixture of desire and desire, whipping her head back and forth in negation... even as her finger kept pounding on the button.

The cylinder hummed – and then Nikki's cries became considerably less coherent as the cylinder slid the now-humming vibrator deep into the sopping confines of Nikki's tight, wet womanhood.

As the pink phallic replacement vibrated, the cylinder drove it cyclically back and forth in her cunt – and Cathy continued playing with the now violently writing woman's massive tits until the first orgasm ripped through her buxom new body.

Only then did Cathy take her hands away from Nikki's massive mounds.

"I suppose I should get to work..." Cathy chuckled, watching Nikki's writhing form. "However..."

The cuffs restraining Nikki's hands popped open, although the others kept her locked into the chair. For a second or two, Nikki's strong arms thrashed about wildly – until it registered on her pleasure-besieged mind that her hands were free.

Almost as if drawn by a magnet, Nikki mindlessly brought her freed hands to her stupendous bust-line, and began squeezing and...

ahem ...'man-handling' her heavy, round spheres, all but mindlessly mauling her massive melons in pursuit of pleasure. Laughing in wicked delight as Nikki screamed her way through another orgasm, Cathy went to work...

"Well, Geri, I think we've earned ourselves a break – what do you say?" Natalie asked, brightly.

The curvaceous black woman Natalie addressed the question to didn't answer. Part of it was the way the she was jamming the bon- bons from the last heart-shaped box into her mouth, but more of it came from the fact that her mind had sort of retreated into a comforting nothingness in response to what was happening to her.

"Here, have a seat..." the slender, golden-haired woman said solicitously, guiding the slightly taller – but much more 'emphatically' figured - black woman towards the now-bare table. Stepping out of the pile of emptied candy boxes that surrounded her feet, the chocolate-skinned woman numbly let herself be brought to the table, accompanied by the musical tinkle of her many golden decorations. Natalie's hands eased the woman down until Geri's firmly rounded, almost aggressively outthrust buttocks settled onto the kitchen chair.

Still mechanically shoving candy into her mouth, Geri stared blindly into emptiness as Natalie unbuttoned the denim work-shirt, freeing the dark, heavy breasts that had strained the fabric. Contrasting against her rich, dark skin, the longer of the cheap golden necklaces she wore settled into the chasm-like cleavage between her hefty melons.

As Geri swallowed the final chocolate morsel, Natalie took the now-empty box from Geri's nerveless fingers and negligently tossed it onto the pile. Humming to herself, Natalie began to set some things up upon the table.

Slowly, some consciousness began to seep back into Geri's vacant black eyes as familiarity sparked recognition in her beleaguered brain. The brass four-pipe hookah Natalie had to strain to place in the center of the table was already 'prepped', and the astringent scent of high-quality marijuana immediately caused some synapses in Geri's brain to fire out of sheer, much-used habit – so much so that her hand closed around the end of the hose Natalie held out towards her, despite the fact that the familiar black Bakelite mouthpiece had been replaced by a larger, gloss-red one of a decidedly more... phallic nature.

Dazed eyes went to the 'dildo'-tipped hose, then slowly wandered to the now-smoking brass-and-glass water pipe, and then traveled over to stare uncomprehendingly at Natalie's calmly amused expression.

"It's all right, Geri – go ahead..." Natalie encouraged, as she picked up a bottle of Jack Daniels.

Geri's eyes slowly traveled back to the cock-like end on the hose. A simplified plastic representation of a cock, it boasted a small hole in the usual place at the tip, and Geri's sluggish brain worked out the fact that it would function more or less like a normal mouthpiece, only in a much more humiliating fashion.

While her brain chewed on that Geri's eyes watched as Natalie placed a couple of squat shot-glasses on the table. Dimly, the ethnically-altered woman recognized them as the souvenir shot-glasses from the Vegas wedding. As Natalie began filling the glasses, Geri almost unthinkingly brought the pseudo-cock to her lips and began sucking on it, inhaling deeply of the sharp, aromatic smoke.

Still sucking on the cock-like mouthpiece, Geri watched uncomprehendingly as Natalie slid both shots of Tennessee whiskey over to the edge of the table nearest Geri – and then she walked over beside him, placed a hand against Geri's back, and pushed her quite firmly forward.

Her sluggish, confused reactions much too slow to offer any resistance, Geri bent forward against the pressure of Natalie's hand – and then shuddered involuntarily as a rush of warmth shot through her body, both like and unlike the usual 'burn' of booze, yet welcome in its way from the warm 'fuzziness' it brought as the alcoholic effect hit her bloodstream, enhanced by the growing effect of the potent pot-smoke.

It took a few seconds for Geri's brain to make sense of the considerably less-welcome 'side effect' of the osmotic consumption – for when she straightened in the chair, she found the table in front of her empty, and her nearly-black nipples newly expanded to nearly the size and shape of the missing glassware.

Still sucking on the hookah, as yet unaware of the changes slowly occurring to the lips that enclosed the phallic mouthpiece, Geri whimpered softly as she stared down at the huge, thick nipples now crowning her firmly heavy breasts. She whimpered again as Natalie's slender hands briefly cradled Geri's heavy, but firm endowments – and then slid smoothly up the softly firm slope of her breast to, barely, encircle her squat, swollen nipples...

...and then she sighed in deep satisfaction as Natalie gently squeezed the rubbery nipples.

It was as if they were filled with shots of alcohol that a squeeze pumped into her system, for the wonderfully distancing warm once more ran through her bloodstream with that squeeze. Almost without thinking, Geri began to reach for her thick new nipples – then hesitated, a faint, numb look of confused indecision on her face as the instinctive motion pulled the hookah hose away from her somewhat fuller lip.

"Let me help you, Geri..." Natalie said, sympathetically...

...and it spoke volumes about Geri's battered, beleaguered state-of mind that the dark-skinned woman felt nothing put a vague sense of gratitude towards Natalie as his ex-wife used a leather strap to dildo-gag the phallic mouthpiece firmly into Geri's mouth, freeing her ring-bedecked hands to rhythmically pump more 'booze' into her system with ever squeeze of her massive new nipples...

SUMMARY: When a group of guys are suddenly confronted by their ex's, who suddenly have the power to transform them into the women they think they should be.

Part Three

The world swirled and rolled as the mind vainly struggled to comprehend an overwhelming influx of sensation and information, emotions and experiences...

...and then the world seemed to snap into sharp focus – but, focused as the stark reality might have been, the mind observing the reality surrounding it, besieged and bemused, sluggishly strained to cope with 'mere' reality.

The person who had once been Bradley Michael Gordon twitched violently, gasping for breath like a swimmer breaking the surface of the water after a near-drowning... or as if surfacing from a nightmare.

"Brenda-Mae?" A concerned, and vaguely familiar, male voice asked, almost tenderly. "Are you okay?"

'Gee - that rhymes...' The person who fuzzily remembered being Brad Gordon thought, a soft smile unconsciously forming on her gloss-red, bow-like lips as the big, doe-like brown eyes framed by long, up-swept lashes swiveled instinctively towards whomever was speaking.

It was an boyishly handsome young man, his open, friendly face beneath it's loosely styled thatch of brown hair currently carrying a look of tender concern as he gazed in her direction.

She knew him – sort of. He was one of the company's 'runners', they entry-level position members of the office staff who interfaced with the upper management and the secretarial pool. Gazing at his friendly face, her befuddled mind made an odd association, for some reason forming a mental image of a vacuum cleaner perched atop a massive dam...

'Oh – his name is Hoover...' She realized, the small smile already on her pretty oval face unconsciously growing warm as 'recognition' formed. 'What was his first name, again? Tim...? Tom...?'

"Todd." She said aloud, fuzzily surprised at the sweet, soft soprano voice the single, warmly spoken word emerged in. "It is Todd Hoover... isn't it?"

"That's right, Miss Gordon." He agreed, and she noted again how handsome he was as he smiled at her – and then fuzzily wondered why noticing that fact seemed so... strange. After all, he really was quite handsome, and...

Her sluggish mind belatedly caught up to the implications of his words. "Miss Gordon?" She parroted back to him in mild confusion.

Todd blushed.

"Sorry, Brenda-Mae," he replied, thinking she was insisting they should be on a first-name basis.

'Miss Brenda-Mae Gordon...' She thought to herself, unaware she was continuing to smile warmly, if somewhat rapidly, at the man who she also unconsciously continuing to notice the physical attractiveness of. 'He seems to think that's who I am. Why would he think that? I'm not Brenda-Mae... am I?'

Uncertainty and confusion plagued her stunned and confused mind. As it struggled for self-identity, her mind slowly began to take note of her immediate surrounding, and she was vaguely surprised to recognize it.

It was the 'cow pen', a not-terribly-humorous nickname given to the cubical farm on the second floor where the unassigned secretarial staff worked. In fact, Todd was carefully leaning on the divider of one of those 'office' cubicles.

The cubical she was in.

The cubical she was sitting at the desk of.

The cubical whose rudimentary décor certainly seemed to indicate a female occupant. HER cubical...?

But... that wasn't right, was it? Wasn't she a fifth-floor executive?

Her mind struggled to make sense of the situation – but it wasn't easy, given how confused, how stunned she felt, how strange and conflicted her memories were, how much her chest was beginning to ache from the ever-increasing pressure...

Pressure...?

Confused, the woman Todd had referred to as 'Brenda-Mae' looked down – and her confusion deepened as she stared at the fuzzy, dark-red sweater that was quite obviously straining to cover the melon-sized mounds it contained.

Breasts – breasts that she not only could see, but feel. She could feel them push against the confining restraint of the 'nose-cone' bra that supported the twin, fleshy masses, she could feel the slight jiggle each breath caused. Most importantly, at the moment, she felt...

"Oh..." She gasped in a strange sort of half-pleasure, half-pain. "I... My... My breasts..."

There was something about saying that phrase – 'my breasts' – that made her want to shutter, but she didn't have the time (or the clearness of mind) to chase that thought down as she continued to exclaim: "...they're so... heavy. So... full. Oh!"

"For Heaven's sake, Brenda Mae..." Todd sighed, in good-humored resignation. "Did you work right through another pumping? I mean, everybody respects your work ethic, sweetie, but you've got to take care of yourself..."

He entered the cubical, holding out a hand in her direction. "Come on, Brenda-Mae – let's take care of that for you..."

Confused, she reached out a hand, wondering why she was surprised how slender, how dainty, how FEMININE the red-nailed appendage was. After all, it was HER hand, wasn't it? It should look completely familiar to her... shouldn't it?

So why was she surprised – and even dismayed – by the sight of it.

Almost numbly, she let herself be pulled gently from her chair and led out of the cubical. Her mind was still whirling, struggling to catch up with the situation, and she had no idea what was going on – but Todd seemed to, and so she just sort of went along, gratefully letting him take control of the situation as she tried desperately to cope with the strange, nagging sensation that something was very, very wrong.

As she walked, Brenda-Mae noticed she seemed to be wearing a tightly-fitted black cotton pencil skirt, nude nylons, and a pair of dark-red Mary-Jane-style pumps with a four-inch flared heel, in addition to the sweater that covered her painfully swollen breasts. Her first thought as she realized what she was wearing was something near horrified panic... but that initial reaction was almost immediately buried in a more immediate concern as she found herself wondering if Todd liked the way she looked in the outfit.

That, in turn, gave way to another strange thought – what, exactly, DID she look like. For some strange reason, her befogged mind couldn't clearly create a mental image of herself. Instead, when she tried to imagine what she was 'supposed' to look like, she found herself thinking of a man – a tall, rangy man with ebony hair and an almost arrogant expression.

A man that seemed hauntingly familiar. She was sure she knew him, but she couldn't quite place from where and when.

Which was a shame, she thought with that dreamy smile, because the man who kept popping into her mental image was quite handsome...

...and then that thought skittered away as the answer to what, exactly, she looked like was answered by a full-length mirror hanging opposite the door of the employee's break-room.

What she saw was a delicately-boned woman of average height, with almost eerily-perfect creamy-pale skin. Topped by her perfectly coiffed loose-waved, rolled-bang ebony hair, her face was stunningly beautiful in a somehow retro style, her creamy complexion well set-off by her dark, gloss-red lipstick and big, dark-brown eyes with their long, up-curved lashes.

Even on her slender body, her waist was remarkably tiny, and that emphasized the fullness of her large breasts, almost aggressively out-thrust thanks to the 'bullet-style' bra she wore. Unconsciously primping as she smiled at her reflection, Brenda-Mae couldn't help notice but how stunningly retro-sexy she was... although she briefly wondered why part of her wanted to be horrified by that thought.

That was just... silly!

"Looking good, Brenda-Mae – as always..." A male voice complimented her, and Brenda-Mae reluctantly tore her gaze from the Bettie-Pagesque reflection to smile at the pudgy young man in the cheap suit who had complimented her.

"Thanks, Dave!" She replied, feeling herself slowly beginning to regain her mental balance as more and more things seemed familiar to her. There were still 'gaps', and strange reactions, that she didn't understand... but she didn't have to, now did she? No, as long as everybody around her thought everything was okay, then she had no cause to worry, now did she?

"Yes – quite beautiful..." A female voice murmured, with something that sounded suspiciously like a chuckle – and Brenda-Mae frowned as she eyed the speaker.

She was a good-looking woman, with flame-red hair and an hourglass figure flattered by her tailored tan suit. She had the pale skin of a true red-head, and her figure was trim, yet buxom...

...indeed, built so much along the same lines as Brenda-Mae's, that an observer might, (ludicrously, of course), believe that both women had come from the same 'base model' mold – only, with Brenda-Mae being significantly 'improved' over the red-head's already impressive figure.

Assuming anybody would consider anything so patently impossible, of course...

"Oh – this is Rita Smith..." The pudgy man – Dave, as Brenda-Mae had recalled – made belated introductions. "She's one of the fifth- floor executives, down here 'slumming' with us hired help."

Brenda-Mae smiled and greeted Rita. When she'd first seen the other woman, Brenda-Mae had the sense that she knew this shapely red-head from somewhere, but that she was somehow 'out-of-place' here... and now she figured she understood that feeling.

Still smiling gently, Brenda-Mae turned out the dozens of little 'worries' and 'inconsistencies' in her mind – 'muffled screams' might have been more accurate, actually, but she refused to listen to them, trusting in the premise that if something WAS, in fact, 'horribly, horribly wrong', as those screams insisted, then surely everybody else around her would be able to notice it, right?

So, despite her confusion and uncertainty, Brenda-Mae let Todd lead her over to a strange looking structure in the center of the room. Consisting of a series of heavily padded bars – or supports – mounted to the floor so that they cross-pieces rose to about hip-height, they surrounded some sort of complicated-looking mechanical device on the floor.

"Let me give you a hand..." Todd offered, eagerly.

Since she had no idea at all what it was that everybody seemed to expect her to do, Brenda-Mae smiled warmly and agreed to let him help.

She was somewhat surprised when he began taking off her sweater – but, despite her surprise, and even misgivings, she continued smiling warmly as he did so, because all of the other three people in the room seemed to think this completely normal, judging from their reactions.

Then Dave, also quite eagerly, also offered his help, and since she was still clueless as to what was going on, Brenda-Mae willingly accepted a second assistant in the matter. With Todd looking slightly put out as he folded her sweater, Dave stepped behind her...

...and unhooked the sturdy, jutting conical fabric edifice that was her bra. It was pulled away to let her full, heavy breasts swing free – and as Dave pulled the bra from her full bust, he took the opportunity to give her heavy, dark-nippled mounds a quick squeeze.

Given the almost painful pressure in her heavy tits, Brenda-Mae found the squeeze made her wince – but she voiced no protest, seeing Todd's face and realizing he'd been hoping to do that – touching her tits seemed to be a given, even if she didn't know why.

Even if the thought bothered her – greatly.

Still, they knew what she was doing, and she didn't, so she simply let them do whatever it was she was supposed to be doing – and so was still surprised when Todd unzipped her skirt and had her step out of it.

That really, really bothered her – especially when she discovered that she wasn't wearing any panties. Dressed only in her stockings and heels, she felt horribly exposed, embarrassed, and uncomfortable... but she didn't complain, because she was gently, but firmly, bent over the padded bar. Her skirt, so tight-fitting as it was, wouldn't have let her spread her legs the way she needed to in order to balance against the weight of her free-hanging breasts, and so the removal of her skirt 'made sense'... she guessed.

Each of the men took hold of a rubber, cup-like object attached to a clear plastic hose... and then they proceeded to put these over her nipples. She winced as they manipulated her swollen, distended breasts – but then Todd hid a button, and the device began to hum. She felt a strong suction at each of her nipples...

...and then cried out in blessed relief as the chugging machine began to pump milk from her painfully filled, lactating breasts.

"Oh, God, that feels so good...!" She moaned... and, in that instant, completed her own, self-induced 'brain-washing', for despite her confusion and discomfort over what the men had been doing to her, it had led to this release, this satisfaction, setting in stone the thought that she should 'just accept' and 'go along'...

Especially since this situation was seeming somehow very familiar. She couldn't clearly recall having been blessedly milked like this before, but she must have been – not only because this equipment would hardly have been installed, and the men know how to use it, if she hadn't, but also because, despite her generally hazy memories, she clearly and sharply remembered one aspect of this:

The chugging sound of the pump, with its soft, musical bell-like 'ding' every few seconds... Except... there was something not quite right.

She was sure of it.

The chugging was right, she remembered that, now. The bell 'dinging' was definitely something she remembered. That part of it must be right, but she was somehow certain there had been other components, something else going on, in her fuzzy memories that went with this particular 'scenario'. What was it? What was missing...?

"Orgasms!" She gasped, in realization. "Where's my orgasms...?"

She felt newly confused... and then Todd hesitantly asked: "Are... are you asking one of us to... fuck you?" Fucking?

Fucking gave orgasm...

"Yes!" She cried happily, glad Todd had figured out what was missing. "Fuck me Todd! Give me orgasms!"

She heard a metallic 'zip' sound... and then, a moment later, a hard, throbbing manhood was thrust into the tight, elastic confines of a womanhood that was already made sopping wet from the pleasure from her suctioned nipples.

Why should that bother her, having a hard cock fill her tight cunt? After all, it felt good, didn't it? Really, really good, in fact, as Todd began fucking her, setting her huge tits to bouncing, the milk-filled tubes swaying rhythmically as the pump chugged and dinged away.

Besides, it would give her orgasm, and she knew that when pumping there was supposed to be orgasms, so that was all right, she'd ignore that part of her mind screaming it was wrong for her to be getting fucked. It was more important to focus on the fact that something was still missing, something didn't feel right...

...and then, Dave, bless his kind soul, proved once again she should just go along and do what the people around her wanted her to do, because he, too, had unzipped his pants and now all-but-shoved his sweaty, somewhat stale-tasting cock between her lips.

She fought down the instinctive urge to pull away – because the sensation of a cock sliding between her lips was just what was missing from the situation. As her lips embraced the cock, that repressed memory agreed that that she'd been doing that the last time she'd been pumped, and so Dave was just proving that he knew what she wanted, what she'd 'always done' before. Obviously, he knew that when she was pumped and fucked, she also sucked, and happy these men were here to give her what she must want, she began happily sucking away at his cock.

Todd was still pumping away strongly, cock pistoning within the warm embrace of her tight, wet cunt, giving her pleasure but no orgasm yet – but then again, Dave hadn't cum yet, and Brenda-Mae remembered swallowing cum, so the reason that this didn't match her hazy memory yet was because it wasn't quite completed, it wasn't quite 'right' until the men came for her, and that wouldn't happen without some enthusiastic sucking and fucking, so that's what she did...

Rita watched as the fine feminine figure who, somewhere deep inside, still remembered being Brad Gordon, 'eagerly' sucked and was fucked while a pump slowly emptied her heavy, milk-filled udders - and provided Brenda-Mae that final 'missing element' of the 'remembered' situation as the red-head began to laugh, and laugh, and laugh...

The world swirled and rolled as the mind vainly struggled to comprehend an overwhelming influx of sensation and information, emotions and experiences...

...but the world refused to snap into sharp focus – mostly because of the warm, uncritical hazy that swirled comfortably, pleasurably through and around the befuddled mind viewing that reality.

The person who had once been Jerome Robert Cole gasped – and exhaled a long plume of richly fragrant smoke.

Numbly, confused, she simply watched the plume merge with the blue-grey haze of marijuana smoke that already filled the room, her delightfully sluggish mind focusing on the richly detailed interplay of light and shadow the smoke passed through, rather than the continual, whole scope of the situation she found herself in.

She was quite certain something was wrong, terribly, terribly wrong, about the situation she found herself in, much less the fact that she couldn't quite 'connect the dots' as to how she got her...

...but she felt good, really, REALLY good, and so she simply didn't let that certainty worry her. No – that wasn't right. It DID worry her...

...it's just that the worry seemed to be trapped in a sound-proof Plexiglas box. She could see that panic and horror, if she bothered to look, but she couldn't hear its frantic screams. All she had to do was 'look away', and she could ignore it easily... and safely, since, for all its vigorous complaints, that panic couldn't escape that box unless she let it out.

Maybe she'd let it out, see what it was that upset it so, find out what it was screaming about... later. Right now, she felt much, MUCH too drowsily comfortable.

"Damn, that's some good shit..." She murmured – and if she was surprised and worried by the warm, rich, and undeniably feminine voice the words emerged in, well, just throw all that in the box for later...

"Damn straight..." A deep, rumbling voice agreed in a pleased, comfortable tone. "Only the best for the best, Jarri."

She blinked, and let her head loll to the side so she could see the speaker who had pronounced the name 'Jerry' with such an odd, almost exotic inflection...

She was a bit surprised to see a big, broad-shouldered black man, rippling with muscles but carrying a bit of a gut, sitting on the oh- so-comfortably battered couch next to her. His head was shaved, but he boasted a neatly trimmed goatee, and his somewhat dopey smile was nevertheless the kind that made women go weak in the knees – or warm slightly higher.

Like herself, which was something else that went into the 'worry about it later' box.

She did let herself think about the fact that the smile had never affected her like that before, for she knew the man next to her quite well.

He was Devon Washington, her dealer – or, at least, Devon was, or had been, Jerry Cole's supplier of 'alternate smoking products'.

Then again, Jerry had been a man at the time, and now , she wasn't, so their relationship might have changed as much as her body had.

"Say my name..." The person who dopedily remembered being male, but at the moment just felt too dreamily pleasurable even as a woman – or maybe especially because she was a woman, given how the warmth from her moist womanhood seemed to suffuse her entire body – to worry about it requested in a warm, richly feminine voice.

Devon chuckled.

"Jarrika Ramona Cole..." He intoned, with a warm smile, "...the HOTTEST damned girlfriend in the city!" Then he put one broad, blunt-fingered hand on her leg.

Jerry – or, apparently, Jarri – let her dark-eyed gaze fall to where that hand rested on a taut, soft-skinned thigh but a few shades lighter than the black leather mini-skirt she wore.

Jarri had, until recently, been a man. She remembered that, if a bit fuzzily. She knew she had been a straight man, not only not sexually interested in other men, but disgusted by the thought. She knew that she still was, deep in her psyche, that same man. She knew and understood these things, and so Devon touching her female body bothered her.

It didn't, however, bother her merely as much as having the body of a huge-breasted, huge-assed black woman in the first place did...

...and, at the moment, the amount that being an overly-emphatically figured woman bothered her, as intense as it might be, couldn't hold even a dim candle to the warm, uncritical haze of pleasure she was experiencing at the moment. As desperately as part of her WANTED to be hysterically horrified over where – and what – she found herself, she couldn't feel those negative emotions and sensations until the foggy, drug-induced veil of pleasure dissipated. She COULDN'T bring herself to panic 'correctly', under the circumstances... and so she sort of tucked it all into the box, to be handled appropriately at a later date.

In other words...

'Damn...' Jarri thought dreamily to herself. '...when I sober up, I'm gonna really fucking hate myself for enjoying this so much...'

Then Devon's hands were moving over her body, causing the warm pleasure to deepen and widen throughout her altered form. As their lips met as if drawn by magnetism, the warmth in her wet new pussy flared into renewed pleasure, and their clothes seemed to remove themselves of their own accord.

"Yeah..." She thought, as she was laid back on the couch, moaning softly at the pleasure she was getting from Devon's grip on her unwanted, but oh-so-enjoyable masses of tit-flesh, "...I'm really, REALLY gonna hate myself when I sober up..."

Then, for a short eternity, she stopped thinking altogether. Her critical facilities, already impaired by the drugs and booze in her system, gave up the ghost when facing the task of trying to think coherently while still registering so much pleasure. As Devon's warm weight descended gently upon her, his own broad chest pressing firmly but not painfully against her huge tits as, considerately carrying his own weight on his muscular arm, he penetrated her ripe and ready womanhood with his surprisingly large, and unsurprisingly rock-hard, cock.

The universe was pure pleasure, and her body was made to maximize it. The padding of her firmly full ass, so ripe and round, acting as shock absorbers to take the rhythmic pounding as the ecstatic friction of her soft womanhood around his hard cock caused hitherto unknown levels of pleasure. She writhed beneath him, moaning and gasping in undenied pleasure, except for the brief, hard kisses they shared. His heavy thrusting caused her huge tits to bounce and sway, often brushing against his manly chest, and that, too, increased the pleasure that thrummed through her as he fucked her – hard, but somehow gently.

The chemicals in his own system, present in much less quantity than her own, nevertheless affected his performance.. for the better, in her mind, for it took him much longer, and the dope seemed to stretch that time out even longer for her. It seemed to go on forever, getting fucked for all eternity in a body that increased the wonderful sensations ten-fold housing a mind that, drugged, chewed each instant into finer, sharper details that nevertheless had a dreamy haze that simultaneously put it all into one, continuous instant it and pulled it a step aside so that she enjoyed the intense and immediate physical sensations from a dulled and distant emotional perspective.

The universe was pleasure, and she was the center of the universe, but the center of her was her wet, warm womanhood, and that center was filled with a hard cock that turned it from an empty void into a filled vessel...

...and then the meaning of the universe briefly became clear to her as the orgasm took over mind and body, and she willingly surrendered herself to utter, blissfully orgasmic pleasure.

Afterwards, laying naked on the couch, her hands almost mindlessly roaming her new body to keep the pleasure alive, she floated in a dreamy sea of golden, uncaring pleasure, aware of, but uncaring of, her surroundings. She held on to that afterglow as Devon cleaned himself up and dressed, kissing her tenderly as headed towards the front door to 'go to work'.

She watched, falling gently through the fading support of that afterglow, as Devon, just stepping out the front door, ran into a short, slender blonde woman, greeting her warmly enough, in that 'a good friend of a good friend' sort of one-step-removed hospitality.

She sighed and let the last of the golden glow slip away as she sat up on the couch, naked, and watched Natalie come inside and close the door.

"I guess you're satisfied." Jarri said, still too stoned to be properly upset as she eyes the woman who, in another reality, had been her wife.

"You look like the one who was 'satisfied' – thoroughly and at great length." Natalie chuckled, eyeing the curvaceous figure slicked with sex-sweat lounging on the couch.

"Yeah – he fucked me good and proper, and I loved every single second of it..." Jarri admitted in a dreamily matter-of-fact voice – and, in the exact same tone, continued: "...and when I sober up, I'm gonna probably kill myself for it. In fact, I'm gonna have to kill myself when I sober up, 'cause there's no way in hell I can possibly resist doing it again."

"Hey, 'honey', I didn't 'just happen' to set you up with a horny dealer by accident." Natalie said, sounding offended. "I planned it out as carefully as I did that super-horny new body of yours. You see, I wanted you – the 'real' you – to be aware of everything, but that would most likely have led to you fighting to avoid the fuck-puppy fate I want you to have... if I hadn't take steps."

"What steps...?" Jarri asked disinterestedly, hating herself for continuing to touch herself intimately, but not enough to stop. "When I sober up, I'm gonna kill myself, and it'll all be over."

"No, Jarri..." Natalie chuckled, picking up something from the table and holding it out to the outrageously figured black woman. "Not 'when'... 'IF' you sober up..."

Jarri dreamily eyed the joint Natalie had picked up, one of many littering the coffee table.

"I smoke that, I'll just have another, and another - and when Devon gets back, I'll still be doped-up, horny, and willing to fuck..." Jarri 'protested' dreamily.

"Exactly." Natalie agreed. "You'll wake up desperate to get stoned as soon as possible to feel good, and when you feel good all you'll want to do is feel even better by getting fucked, as often as possible. Drugs and sex, sex and drugs, every waking moment for the rest of your life..."

Jarri considered.

"Got a light?" She asked, reaching out...

...and as Natalie 'flicked her Bic', she laughed, and laughed, and laughed...

* * * * *

The world swirled and rolled as the mind vainly struggled to comprehend an overwhelming influx of sensation and information, emotions and experiences...

...and then the world seemed to snap into sharp focus – but continued to whirl amid a cacophony of light, sound, and sensation.

The person who had once been Nicholas Hargrove Long energetically swung herself one last time around the polished brass pole, then released the grip her long, toned legs held on the cool metal, supporting herself with her toned arms until the six-inch stiletto heels of her 'ankle-breaker' pumps hit the gleaming black surface of the stage.

Broad smile affixed to her face, the tall, outrageously huge-breasted woman strutted challengingly down the stage, trim hips snapping erotically to the heavy, driving beat of the music, that for all its power, could barely be heard over the cheers and catcalls of the men filling the room.

Stopping at the end of the runway, the athletic, amazingly top-heavy red-head paused, long legs spread wide and hips gyrating, as her hands went to the clasp-front of the leopard-print pattern bra that strained to contain her massive, round masses of tit-flesh. She heisted teasingly, grinding herself slowly around until her taut, out-thrust ass faced the audience, and then she tore her bra open. The men, unable to see the massive breasts that were so artificially firm that they sagged barely an inch when released from the theoretical support of the bra, could nevertheless see the bra now wide open, and the mere fact that her massive mounds were now bare, if still unseen, caused them men to redouble their energetic response to her strip-tease...

...and then Naughty Nikki Knockers whirled on one skyscraper heel, revealing her massively enhanced bust-line for all the world – or at least, the small section of the male population crammed into The Booby Trap Club at the moment – to see...

...and exactly one song-beat later, her nearly identical brunette clone, right down to the massively enhanced bust-line, repeated the motion.

The audience went wild as Curvaceous Cathy Cleavage discarded her own, cheetah-print bra in perfect synchronization with her red-headed twin.

The two identical, huge-breasted athletic women now moved in perfect synch, strutting first to opposite ends of the stage atop matching 'fuck-me' pumps with six-inch stiletto heels that were all they now wore, then turning and sensuously strutting backwards center-stage – and each other tall, lithe, and unmistakably feminine bodies – where, to the delight of the crowd, they kissed hungrily, stupendous breasts crushed together as they fondled each other's lithe body in obviously pleasure.

The kiss ended, and the two women, still swaying to the music, moved slightly apart – but only so their hands could go to the other's mountainous breasts, fondling the round orbs of enhanced tit-flesh...

"Oh... God... Please... Stop..." Cathy gasped out from her helplessly fixed smile as unwanted orgasms ripped endlessly through massive tits as equally – and ridiculously – pleasure sensitive as those of her once-ex-husband's.

It wasn't supposed to be like this.

It was only to have been one performance. A single night at the strip-club.

A... guilty indulgence for herself while punishing Nick.

A chance to try out a ridiculously-proportioned body specifically designed to orgasm constantly throughout the performance of a strip-tease. Cathy could guiltily enjoy the sensations of the duplicate body she'd cursed Nick with, and then, when she'd humiliated him, they'd end up with duplicates of Cathy's own body, and go their separate ways...

...except she'd somehow screwed up the spell, for it was defined that she'd get her own body back when Nikki got the same – but she'd never specified that she could FORCE Nikki to do so, for she'd never considered she would HAVE to...

...which meant that, as long as Nikki refused to give up the life of an ultimately-orgasmic sex-object stripper, Cathy COULDN'T.

"Please...!" Cathy gasped, her begging unheard by the audience over the music, her horror and despair unseen as her body helplessly obeyed whatever routine Nikki decided to do... and the orgasms it caused. "Please, it's... been... months! Please, let me... make us... normal...!"

...but as Cathy helplessly shuddered her way through another on-stage orgasm to the delight of the audience, Nikki only laughed, and laughed, and laughed...

THE END

Summary: When he is called to appear before the company owner, little did he realize that she had plans to transform him into a submissive female sex pot.

One Good Turn.

By Gunslinger

Drumming his fingers against his thigh, Peter stared at the glowing red LED numerals indicating the express elevator's rapid ascent towards the top floor of the Hellonmen Building.

Though he tried to deny it, even to himself, the twitching of his slender finger was pure nervousness. Though he strove to maintain a cool, even arrogant façade, his painfully thin body beneath his well-tailored suit was tense with anxiety, and the palms of his hand were beaded with sweat.

When the elevator finally slowed to a stop and a soft, musical chime preceded the opening of the brass-sheathed doors, Peter took a quick, deep breath and made sure a slight sneer was affixed to his thin lips by the time the doors slid open.

With what he hoped was seen as a confident, masculine stride, the russet-haired man strode determinedly from the elevator into the elegant décor of the penthouse office's reception area. Striding directly to the marble-topped reception desk located below the foot-high brass letters spelling out the corporate name, Peter was a little discomfited to find that the ebony-skinned woman in the severely-cut pantsuit sitting behind the desk was so tall. Given his own rather diminutive stature, Peter was on an even eye-level with the tall, muscular woman, denying him the confidence boost that he would have liked to get from staring down at the woman.

"Peter Morley." He announced himself, airily. "Miss Hellonmen is expecting me."

"Yes." The woman agreed in a voice only a couple of degrees warmer than liquid nitrogen. "Ms. Hellonmen is expecting you. Follow me."

Rising with a powerful grace from behind the desk, the woman stared down at him from what must have been a good six-inch advantage over his own five-five height. With her page-boy cut black hair framing a face carved in icy lines of dislike, she strode towards the double mahogany doors separating the outer reception area from the inner sanctum, her nearly body-builder's figure moving with tightly controlled power atop the short, broad heels of the calf-high black leather boots she wore.

Face tightening at the 'mere secretary' displaying such a disdainful attitude towards him, a corporate executive, he followed at a slower pace. Forced to stand at the door, holding it open for him, while he casually sauntered over, the secretary showed no signs of the annoyance or anger Peter had hoped to engender in her. Instead, she simply stared at him as if he were some sort of exotic but uninteresting insect.

Passing her, Peter entered the expansive office, picking up his pace a little as he headed towards the tall, slender woman seated behind the huge, mahogany desk near the floor-to-ceiling windows at the far side of the room.

"Miss Hellonmen." Peter said, politely bobbing his head as he approached the sharp-featured blonde in a well-cut suit.

Her lips tightening and her icy blue eyes narrowing slightly, the wealthy, self-made woman gestured towards one of the deep leather armchairs fronting the desk. Obediently, Peter sank down into the nearest, keeping his face impassive.

"What can I do for you today, Miss Hellonmen?" He inquired, 'innocently'.

"I've asked you up here, Peter, to discuss the solution to these sexual harassment complaints I've been receiving about you." Janice Hellonmen said, her voice under rigid control as she pointedly ignored Peter's feigned look of shock and confusion. "I simply refuse to accept such behavior in my company."

"I assure you, I had no idea there was any sort of problem." Peter protested, with just the right tone of apology - the one that had got him out of any legal problems from the same situation at the other companies at which he'd worked, if not always enough to save his job. "I assure you, if there's anything I'm doing that anybody finds offensive, just let me know, and I'll make sure it never happens again."

"Oh - it will never happen again." Janice agreed. "However, I am the one who is going to make sure of that."

"I don't." Peter started to reply, his confusion no longer feigned - but he never got the chance to finish.

Focused on the mysterious woman who, at thirty-two, headed up her own little empire of interlocking companies of every type and description, Peter had noticed the receptionist entering the room and approaching. His first indication that she was there came when he felt a sudden, cold sensation on the back of his neck. He started to turn around, demanding an explanation.

.but, instead, his body simply went completely limp on him, leaving him to flop bonelessly in the chair.

"What the fuck.?" Peter gasped, finding his words somewhat weak and mushy, but understandable. "What the hell did you do to me, you bitch?"

"Not much - yet." Janice said, calmly. "Merely a paralytic agent. Nadia, if you would.?"

The receptionist - Nadia - nodded and picked Peter up, manhandling him as if he weighed next to nothing. Following her employer, Nadia carried a protesting and cursing Peter across the office and through a hidden door in the east wall, which in turn lead to a white-tiled little room, in the middle of which was what appeared to be a hospital bed.

"What the hell is this?" Peter demanded as he was laid out on the bed. "What do you think you're doing?"

"A little. sensitivity training." Janice said, calmly enough - as Nadia began to undress him, grimacing at the distasteful job.

"Hey! Stop that!" Peter commanded, but was roundly ignored as the muscular black woman stripped him down until he was completely naked. Painfully aware of the two women looking at his scrawny, angular body with cold, clinical looks, Peter began swearing at them, building up a head of anger to fight down the waves of humiliation and fear that were trying desperately to rise inside of him.

Then his voice died in his throat as a cold ball of lead took up residence in the pit of his stomach.

Unable to move anything but his eyes, he'd been focused on the two women tormenting him, but now his attention was drawn to the Plexiglas 'windows' that ran around the top of the room.

No - not the windows.

The people behind the windows, filing into a dimly-lit 'auditorium'-style seating area that ran all the way around the room, like an upper balcony - or observation deck.

They were all women - and he recognized each and every one of them.

"Oh, yes." Janice said, catching the direction of his wide-eyed gaze. "I was well aware of you. proclivities when I hired you, and I've been hiring every woman you ever insulted, hit-on or degraded during your long career as a male chauvinist pig."

"Let me go, you bitch!" Peter screamed, hating the edge of hysteria in his own voice, but unable to quell it. "Let me up!"

"After all the trouble I've gone to in order to ensure your punishment?" Janice asked, smugly. "I think not."

Walking to near the head of the bed, she reached below the mattress level and pulled out an articulated arm - and arm boasting a series of small wand-like devices, each of which were attached to hoses that, in turn, ran into the pedestal base of the bed itself.

"What is that?" Peter screamed. "What are you doing?"

"My companies have developed an interesting series of chemical compounds." Janice said conversationally, selecting one of the devices. "These compounds can alter the cells in the human body. Some of these 'inflate' the cells, some 'shrink' them, while others have various other interesting effects."

As she approached him, holding the wand, Peter began to scream.

It was a scream destined to die an early death. Pressing the tip of the hypodermic pressure-injector, Janice triggered it, and the chemical was squirted into Peter's body, targeting specific cells.

Namely, those of his vocal cords. Immediately, they began to tighten up - and as they did, his voice rose higher and higher in pitch, also becoming softer at the same time.

Before his scream could even completely empty his lung, his cords had grown so tight that they were incapable of vibrating anymore.

He was mute.

"Much better." Janice said, racking the wand and looking over at Nadia. "Shall we begin.?"

No longer even capable of protesting, unable to lift his head, Peter was utterly helpless to resist their ministrations in any way. All he could do was roll his eyes to watch in the mirror 'thoughtfully' provided to him, mounted above the bed.

The two women started by sliding matching devices out of the recesses built into the bed. Looking like small power sanders, the hand-held devices actually served a similar purpose - they were designed to smooth a surface.

These devices, however, used a combination of lasers, ultrasonic sound waves, and low-voltage electric shocks to 'permanently' remove hair from the human body. Effective for about six to eight months of complete depilation, eventually hair would begin to grow back - but it would be much lighter, thinner hair than the average male coat they were now removing.

They worked their way up his body, until they reached his hairline, having excepted only his eyebrows. Then, Nadia easily rolled him face down, meaning he couldn't even watch as they worked their way back down his back.

He wasn't sure if that was a blessing or a curse. Though horrified and humiliated by what they were doing to him, somehow not being able to see it done made it all the more terrible, even as it seemed somehow less 'real'.

The illusionary feeling faded, however, as he was rolled back to his front - and Janice went to work with a smaller, pen-like version of the depilator, thinning and reshaping his eyebrows.

Given his smoothly hairless body and his slender, arched eyebrows once they'd finished, the ultimate aim the women were moving towards should have been obvious, but somehow Peter missed it.

.or, rather, he recognized it, at least on a certain level, and willfully and willingly denied the obvious conclusion, trying to argue himself into believing it couldn't happen.

Not to him.

It was an effort at self-delusion that was doomed from the very beginning. The two women, working methodically and skillfully, didn't draw it out, didn't hide it - they simply set to work transforming him with a sort of brisk efficiency that was more horrible to behold than any sort of slow, torturous transformation.

They started at his feet and worked their way up his body - and, every step of the way, there was Janice's cool, clinical voice, explaining what they were doing to him.

"The fact that you are not only slightly built, but so thin, makes this much more effective." She commented, choosing a pressure injector and bringing it to his left leg, while Nadia mirrored her actions at his right. Pressing the device against his calf, she spoke over the slight hissing noise as his thin, corded muscle began to swell. "First, we'll increase the mass of the musculature itself.

Basically, we're 'swelling' the individual cells with a compound that is somewhat lighter than water."

After the calf was fully inflated, bulging almost grotesquely in comparison to the rest of his bony, whippet-thin body, did Janice and Nadia stop and compare each other's work. A few final 'touch up' injections, and the two women switched injectors.

"Next, we inject a fat-like compound into the sub-dermal layer, smoothing out the muscle." Janice announced, suiting actions to words. "Given your thin build, you can see how this has the effect of making you feel seem smaller and finer, in proportion."

Finished with his now smoothly-rounded calves, the women continued the process upwards, adding curvaceous mass to his slender structure.

Mass that was definitely being applied to a feminine template.

After they'd finished reshaping his legs, providing him with smooth, average-looking female legs that looked decidedly out of place on his frame, Janice approached his crotch with a smile.

"It took ten volunteers to get the practice for this." She told him, pressing the pressure injector against his scrotum. "You should feel honored that I went to so much trouble."

Instead, Peter screamed soundlessly as they stole his manhood from him.

They didn't, really - but the transformation certainly made it seem that way. When, after extremely careful work, they'd reshaped his crotch to give him something that certainly looked like a vagina, Peter sank into the depths of deepest despair, barely noticing as they continued transforming his - her - body to match her new womanhood.

That bleak despair, however, was premature, and it burned itself out by the time they were finished with the transformation - because there was no way the realistically created faux woman could possibly know that the nightmare was just beginning.

"There we are." Janice said, with evident satisfaction, and the newly woman stared balefully up at the mirror above her, loathing what she saw.

A woman.

Oh, true, she was a 'boyish' woman, with narrow hips and small, barely post-pubescent breasts. Just barely enough of a woman to hit 'average', her average face was topped by a short, messy mop of red hair that completed the 'tomboy' look - but, despite all of that, anybody looking at her without knowing her origin would see a woman, and that was what humiliated and sickened her.

It was, however, not bad enough that Peter be made female. Not for Janice.

Not by a long shot.

"Now, we're going to remove the paralysis." Janice said, using an injector to give the new woman a voice commiserate with her new form. "However, you won't be allowed to leave the building - our security is going to see to that. Instead, you're going to keep working for the company - but as 'Penelope Moore'. You are going to live and work as a woman, in order to see what it is like from that point of view. There is, however, one more thing."

"What?" Peter/Penelope asked bitterly, hating the completely unremarkable female voice she'd been cursed with.

"We're going to force you to live to your own 'standards' as a woman." Janice said, with a smirk. "You must 'accept' from any man the same treatment you felt fit to give these women."

She paused, gesturing at the women in the observation gallery.

"You can't get upset or react negatively in any way if men ogle you, hit on you, or treat you in any way you yourself have treated women." Janice continued. "Not that you have to exactly encourage men to treat you as a sexual object - but you are forbidden, under pain of punishment, from doing anything at all to discourage them."

Chuckling, Janice released the paralysis - and the new woman leapt from the bed and sprinted for the door.

That, at least, was the plan. Instead, she tumbled off the bed and landed on the floor, hard, her 'pumped up' new body considerably heavier than her old, male form - and differently balanced.

Awkwardly, she pulled herself up off the floor, horrified by how weak she felt, and how she had to move slowly and delicately to maintain balance - enforcing a sort of feminine grace that was the last thing she wanted to exhibit, yet unable to stop it.

"Now, here are some clothes." Janice said, gesturing at a pile of garments.

A long, loose skirt. A turtleneck sweater. Neither revealing nor tight fitting - but undeniable women's clothing. Right down to 'sensible' shoes that, despite only having the barest of heels, were definitely female footwear.

"I'm not going to wear women's clothes." Penelope stated, firmly.

"Ah, ah - wearing men's clothes would be 'discouraging'. Since we all know you, of all people, have no problem with women being 'feminine' in the most objectifying meaning of the word, I guess your refusal must be due to you feeling unhappy about not being 'pretty' enough."

"What? That's." Penelope started to argue - and then Janice pressed a button on her 'watch'. Penelope collapsed to the floor.

"The paralysis device is imbedded in your neck, and I can activate it whenever you misbehave." Janice said, with a wry grin. "Now, since you're so dissatisfied with your body."

With Nadia's help, Penelope was once more lifted to the table - and there she discovered the horror of her new life, for when the paralysis was released a while later, Penelope was somewhat less 'boyish' than she had been before. Her breasts, previously barely enough to make an 'A'-cup, were now firmly into the 'A'-cup range, and special bone-like expanders had been pumped into the cells in his hips to widen them out a bit - while the ass those hips supported was made somewhat less flat.

"Catching on yet, Penny?" Janice asked. "So - any more complaints, or did you want to get dressed and get to work?"

Grinding her teeth, humiliated and horrified, Penny slowly did as she was instructed. Part of her wanted to lash out at Janice, and another part of her wanted to throw up at what had been forced on her.

.but, instead, she forced herself to hold back both reactions, biding her time for a chance to escape the living hell she'd somehow fallen into.

The cloth that made up the clothing she wore was in no way different than the cloth that had made up the clothing she'd worn as a man. Indeed, even the feel of the skirt wasn't all that different than the feeling of wearing a bathrobe. Nevertheless, Penny's skin crawled from the emotional sensations that came from wearing what were undeniably feminine garments.

Shamefully seething, her own body made unfamiliar to her by what Janice had done, she followed 'The Boss Lady' out of the little operating room - and into the 'public eye'.

The women who had watched the transformation from the observation gallery knew what she 'really' was - and that was humiliating, having somebody know her 'secret'. On the other hand, the rest of the people working in the building didn't know - and that was humiliating, too, because they simply reacted to her as if she were exactly what she seemed to be. Shamed and disgusted, Penny followed Janice down into the large area used for the secretarial pool, where unassigned 'executive assistants' waited for the call of any one of the thousands of employees in the building who, not quite ranking their own, full-time assistant, could draw on this resource when needed.

"Straighten up, dear..." Janice said, mildly, as she led Penny towards her new desk. "Look at you - hunched over, head down, shoulders bunched. You're almost convincing me that you're ashamed of how 'unpretty' you are."

It was said casually - but, unlike the people around her, Penny knew damned well it was an open threat; one Janice was more than willing to carry out.

Hating herself for being so compliant, Penny straightened - and was even more humiliated by the fact that she was now presenting the image of a woman who was, if not exactly proud, at least accepting of their own body.

Something that was, of course, about as far from the truth as you could get.

Wishing she could just curl up somewhere and cry - and further humiliated by this 'feminine' reaction to her plight - Penny sat down at her desk and tried not to react 'naturally' to being unwillingly feminized, lest it make the situation worse.

* * * * *

"Well?" Nadia asked, taking a sip of champagne in her boss-and-lover's private apartment on the top floor.

"Tomorrow." Janice said, thoughtfully. "I'll find something she does 'wrong' tomorrow."

Slightly giddy on the champagne bubbles, Nadia giggled. "It's so much more fun doing this slowly, rather than just going right to the 'final effect'."

"...and it's going to be so much more humiliating for her, thinking it's her own fault she's going to be getting more and more feminine." Janice said, smiling. "She has no idea that even if she behaves perfectly we'll find excuses to keep femizing her..."

* * * * *

With a feeling of relief, Penny watched as the little clock in the corner of her computer screen rolled over to indicate five o'clock.

Quitting time.

If there was one thing she'd learned during the past six months working in the secretarial pool, it was that the management frowned on anybody 'clocking out' early.

Herself include - or, rather, especially...

...and the risk she would run from 'leaving' early had nothing to do with getting fired.

Easing her chair back from the desk, Penny rose in one smooth, fluid motion - a motion that almost unconsciously included sliding her hands down the sides of her Kelly-green leather skirt, making sure it's hemline was sitting low enough to not only cover her panties, but the lace-edged tops of her nylon stockings.

A longer skirt would have alleviated the problem, of course - but wearing a long and/or voluminous skirt 'too often' indicated a woman unhappy with the way her legs looked.

At least, according to Janice.

Penny had tried very, very hard to find the 'safe' zone, something that wouldn't be 'too often' - but several mistakes in trying to determine that, and the resulting punishments, had left her wearing skirts as short and tight as she dared, for safety's sake.

Which was also the reason she was standing atop the slender, six-inch high heels of her matching green leather pumps, of course - to better show off the long, toned 'dancers' legs that were the result of her previous mistakes.

Turning away from her desk, Penny started walking through the secretarial pool towards the elevators - and as she walked, she made sure to sway her hips in a smooth, graceful swivel, one that did interesting things to her ass.

She hated walking in such a gracefully seductive manner - but it was 'expected' that any woman with such a spectacularly full, firm ass on her wide, womanly hips wouldn't be ashamed to let men watch her 'work it' as she walked.

Of course, she had the incredibly sexy ass and full hips to 'work' because she'd failed to use a considerably less attention-getting but nevertheless feminine sway when she'd had less a less sexy fundament. She'd insisted on trying to walk with a masculine stride - and that's what had 'earned' her the full new hips and shapely ass that she now had to 'show off' if she didn't want them going from 'just' incredibly sexy into the realm of caricature.

She hated having the sexy ass, and she hated making sure she wiggled and jiggled it as she walked - but what Penny hated most was the fact that it was her own bloody fault. If she hadn't been so stubborn, if she'd obeyed Janice's rules, she wouldn't have to 'shake her moneymaker' each and every day.

Her sexy little wiggle caused a man standing near the elevators to watch her approach - and when, blushing, he tore his eyes from her swaying hips and long, sexy legs, she was ready with a warm, welcoming/forgiving smile on her lips.

On her red-glossed lips.

On the full, bee-stung red-glossed lips that she'd unwillingly earned from not smiling at men who 'complimented' her by eyeing her increasingly sexy form with open appreciation.

Even as she approached where the man was standing, Penny's eyes flicked quickly to her own reflection in the mirrored doors of the elevators, while one hand rose almost unconsciously to her head. As she verified that her make-up was, indeed, still perfectly applied, her finger gently 'puffed up' her full, thick mane of rich-red curls.

After all, a women who neglected her make-up and hairstyle was unhappy with the way she looked, and since her incredibly full, thick, curly mane of nearly ass-length red hair was already an unbelievable pain to keep styled and pretty, she certainly didn't want to screw up and force Janice to make it even longer, thicker and more lush.

"Hello there..." Penny greeted the admiring man, smiling warmly as she 'struck a pose' sure to show off the many sexy attributes of her curvaceous body. It was, after all, a body that any woman would be happy to have - so, if Penny failed to display it with the pride she should, it would only require more feminine alterations.

"Hi." The man - a new employee in the secretarial pool - said, a bit nervously. "I'm Dave. Dave Winthrop."

"Penelope Moore." She introduced herself in her sweet soprano voice, raised several times due to her failure to be more the 'stiffly polite' to men treating her so nicely. "Call me Penny."

"Okay, Penny." Dave said, smiling. "So, heading home?"

"Of course." She agreed - not mentioning that 'home' was a specially-prepared apartment within the building itself. She'd already learned that mentioning it caused people to be surprised, since nobody knew there were apartments in the building itself - and that, in turn, 'forced' her to invite the person to her apartment to see it.

After all, a woman who was 'ashamed' of where she lived obviously thought it wasn't a 'pretty enough' place, and Penny already spent enough of her free time cleaning and fussing with her apartment as a result of her previous expressions of 'dissatisfaction' with her living quarters.

The elevator arrived with a muted chime, the doors sliding open, and Dave gestured towards the opening with both hands.

"After you, Penny." He said graciously.

"Why, thank you..." She said, smiling warmly. She stepped into the elevator, making sure to add an extra little wiggle to her motion, for his viewing enjoyment.

He stepped into the elevator just before the doors closed, and reached out towards the control panel.

"Going down?" He asked.

Time seemed to slow to a crawl as Penny's ears heard the words, and they registered on a brain that suddenly kicked into overdrive.

What had he meant by that?

Was it a simple question, asking her destination? Or was it sexual innuendo?

A few months ago, Penny would have thought she knew the answer - but after the punishments Janice had inflicted on her for missing come-ons that any 'real' woman should have recognized, she no longer was anything even approaching certain.

Well, she knew full well that guessing it was an innocent question when it wasn't would get her further 'enhanced' - and she was right on the edge of becoming a walking parody of femininity as it was.

The downside to going the other way was 'merely' humiliation, shame and self-disgust - but she'd had plenty of that in the past six months already, and it would only get worse if she were further feminized.

Therefore, there was only really one 'safe' route to take...

She forced her now-habitual smile to go from 'warm' to 'sultry', and she slowly swayed across the enclosed space of the elevator, one long-nailed finger reaching out to press the button for the lobby.

"I thought you'd never ask..." She said, pitching her voice low and sexy. She stared brazenly into his eyes, and very slowly and seductively licked her full, firm lips. "I love 'going down'..."

Chuckling low in the back of her throat, she slowly ran one finger down the front of his shirt to his belt-line - and leaned forward, wrapping her other hand around his neck and pressing her lips firmly against his.

He hesitated - which could have meant that she'd guessed wrong about the intention of his words, or that he just hadn't anticipated she'd want any sort of 'foreplay' before getting down to business. Either way, it didn't really matter - now that she'd started, she had to stay the course, or be punished for playing the tease.

She kissed him deeply, but quickly, put every ounce of skill learned from the hundreds - thousands - of kisses she'd given since being made a woman. It was, as Janice pointed out, one of the 'basic female skills', and she'd learned it quickly - before they'd lengthened her tongue to the point that it would have made talking difficult.

As it was, her extraordinarily long, supple tongue seemed to come as a surprise to Dave - albeit a very pleasant one.

He had no idea.

Forcing a smile back onto her lips as she broke the kiss, Penny slowly sank down to her knees. She took her time, doing it right - pressing against him as she slid slowly down, so that her large, firm breasts dragged across his body enticingly.

When she was kneeling before him, she cut her eyes to the side, seeing how much time she had to work in.

Working quickly, but tantalizingly, she unbuckled his pants and slid them and his boxers down around his knees - exposing a cock that was only beginning to get hard.

"Mmmm... I like them big and tasty..." She said, licking her full lips again - despite the fact that it was merely an average-sized member.

After all, the times she'd failed to suggest to a man that he was well-endowed, Janice had taken the man into her private little operating room and, getting his willing agreement to both the procedure and keeping it secret, had greatly enlarged his cock before turning him back over to her for a 'second try'.

Wrapping one slender hand around the base of the slowly stiffening cock, Penny leaned forward and let her long, agile tongue slip out of her mouth, lightly teasing the hardening shaft and swelling tip with warm, moist little licks. As it quickly achieved full erection under her ministrations, she leaned forward and took it into her mouth.

Using every skill she'd unwillingly learned, she set about giving Dave the most mind-blowing blow-job he'd ever gotten.

It was a question of self-defense, really.

Since there was no way Penny could know the type or oral experiences Dave had received in the past, Penny couldn't tell what he'd consider merely average - and Penny already knew what would happen if a man rated her performance as sub-par. The only safe thing to do was through herself into everything she did, especially sexually, with all she had to give.

So, that's what she did - and Dave certainly seemed to appreciate it, given the sounds he made as she licked and sucked his cock, using her incredibly supple tongue to good advantage while her hand worked the shaft in matching counterpoint.

Penny had actually learned three basic 'styles' of blow-job, and usually had to fight down a panic attack in trying to figure out which one was the right one for the man she was servicing at the time - but, given the time constraints as the elevator sank to the lobby, either the 'long and slow' or the 'tease-job' were out of the question, leaving her with 'quick and dirty'.

She worked frenetically - almost frantically - to get him off, working directly towards the orgasm. The 'long and slow' method was designed to keep a man in pleasure for the maximum amount of time, whereas the 'tease' produced the most semen. 'Quick and dirty', however, was to give the man the pleasure of getting him off as fast as was humanly possible - and with her full lips, long tongue, and skill in using them both, Penny was practically an expert in the fine art of fellatio.

Well before the doors to the elevator opened on the lobby, she was gulping down his load of disgustingly salty cum, feigning great pleasure in the act. She quickly licked him clean, and had him 'presentable' again before the doors slid open - if you ignored the startle, somewhat dazed expression on his face, that is.

"That was great..." She said, huskily, her voice pitched too low for any of the people in the lobby to hear. "I'd love it if you came to see me again some time. My apartment is on the thirtieth floor. Just ask the security guard when you get off the elevator - he'll show you where it is."

"Uh, yeah, sure..." Dave agreed, a bit numbly, as she smiled at him and waved good-bye.

Of course, she didn't want to see him again, especially not for a sexual tryst as she'd all but offered him - but offering to let him have a second shot at her would indicate she hadn't enjoyed the first time around.

That might have been the literal truth - but Penny had long ago learned that perception trumped reality, especially in her unique situation.

Dave headed out of the elevator, and Penny pressed the button for the thirtieth floor. As soon as the doors closed, and she was safely alone, she quickly pulled a Listerine Pocket Pack out of her blouse pocket, quickly popping one of the little strips in her mouth.

The main reason was to try and kill the taste of Dave's cum, of course - but she also had to keep her breath minty fresh at all times, since she never knew when she might next be kissing somebody, and woe to her if the person complained about bad breath.

When the doors to the elevator slid open, Penny had to restrain herself from starting in fear and confusion at the sight of her nemesis and teacher standing in the opening.

"Hello Penny." Janice said, coolly.

"Hello, Ms. Hellonmen." Penny said, forcing her lips into a polite smile as she stepped off the elevator. "What brings you to my humble abode?"

"That act in the elevator." Janice said, gesturing towards the camera in the corner of the elevator just before the doors slid shut. Being a 'high security' building, Janice had little problem monitoring the actions of her protégé - or keeping her from escaping her fate, for that matter.

"Something wrong?" Penny asked, fighting down a feeling of panic. "You seemed eager to get it over with quickly." Janice noted.

"Well, there wasn't much time..." Penny protested, weakly.

"You could have hit the 'stop' button to give you as much time as you wanted." Janice said, coldly. "You didn't even suggest that to him. Maybe he wouldn't have minded spending extra time in the elevator. In fact, I doubt he would have minded at all. No, it was obviously your decision to do him fast - which can only mean that you felt your lips and tongue weren't up to the task. Why don't we go up to the operating room..."

Penny's eyes widened in horror at the thought, and she threw herself at her tormentress' feet.

"No, please, don't!" She cried. "It was.. It was just lack of experience, that's all. Women have their whole lives to learn all of this! I've just gotten started, that's all!"

"Well, I don't know..." Janice said 'doubtfully', savoring the moment.

"Please! Just let me practice some more!" Penny begged. "I'm sure I can get it right! Just send me up some men to practice on! Please, Janice, please let me suck a few dozen more cocks! I'm sure I can learn to do it right!"

"If you haven't learned by now, I'm not sure just a couple dozen more tries would help much..."

"A hundred then!" Penny said, wide-eyed. "Please, Janice, pretty please - send me men and let me suck cock a hundred more times until you decide if I need... 'enhancing'."

Penny shuddered as she used Janice's word for her punishments.

"Please, please!" She continued, wrapping her hands around Janice's skirts, tears standing in her eyes. "I'm begging you, let me suck more cocks Janice, please!"

Watching the once-chauvinistic man, down on shapely knees, begging for the chance to suck more cocks made Janice's day complete. When she'd started punishing Penny, she'd had no idea just how incredibly enjoyable it could be to break a man in mind and spirit, reducing him into an utterly obedient woman who would quite literally beg for the right to perfect her cock-sucking technique.

"Well, okay..." Janice allowed 'grudgingly' - while thinking to herself that the opportunities with penny were beginning to wear a bit thin. Sure, she could continue to degrade the woman who was now hugging her feet and thanking her profusely for the privilege of sucking a hundred more cocks, but it was all beginning to get a bit repetitive. Despite her threats, there wasn't much more Janice wanted to do to 'enhance' Penny, since pushing her over the unseen line between sexy and ridiculous would take a lot of the fun out of the whole thing.

Then again, she mused to herself, perhaps 'ridiculous' could be entertaining enough on it's own.

Not with Penny, though - oh no. To do 'ridiculous' right, you had to start with that goal in mind, and follow a plan right from the very beginning to focus all the humiliation and shame on single feminine attribute, so that you could draw out the most out of the situation.

Patting her obedient little femmed slut on the head, Janice headed off with a thoughtful look on her face.

After all, there was Steve, down in Accounting, who thought he was getting away with browsing 'big tit' porn sites on the Internet during company time.

If he liked big tits so much, it seemed to Janice that it would be entirely fitting if he got a pair of them himself...

...and not just 'big'.

Huge. Massive. Gigantic.

All on a body that, while female, didn't get as over-all beautiful/sexy as Penny's had ended up. After all, the point of it all would be to focus all the humiliation and punishments on the very thing Steve currently found so interesting.

Yes.

That sounded...

...like fun.

Grinning wickedly, Janice set off to make the arrangements.

THE END

SUMMARY: A macho male is tricked by his neighbor into drinking a magic potion that transforms him into a blond bimbo; frightened of being discovered a fraud, he/she now plays the role to the max.

One Little Mistake...

By Gunslinger

Humming under his breath, Karl pulled open the door to the fridge and reached inside, the cool wash of air causing the pale, contrasting hairs on his heavily muscled forearm to ripple in a wave of goose bumps.

The prototypical 'bachelor', the tall, broad-shouldered young man's fridge contained a few cartons of leftover take-out Chinese, a bunch of condiments, several types of beer, and a single carton of milk. It was this last item that Karl plucked from the shelf, kicking the door of the fridge closed behind him with one size-eleven foot, causing the tightly-packed layers of muscle to shift and dance under the deeply tanned skin revealed by the cut-off jean shorts that were the only thing he was wearing.

Walking over to where his coffee mug sat steaming beside his little two-cup coffeemaker, the almost offensively handsome blond caught sight of his chiselled features, cleft chin and 'mesmerizing' green eyes in the chromed surface of the toaster, and he shot himself a thumbs-up and a grin as he opened the spout of the milk-carton.

The reflected expression of happy pride as his rugged attractiveness curled into an expression of disgust as the sour odor rising from the milk carton registered, and the twenty-two year old self-proclaimed 'beach bum' blew out a disgusted puff of breath, quickly holding the carton out at a full arm's length as he carried it over to the sink and poured the clotted, soured contents down the drain, following it up with plenty of water to clear any lace trace of the odor-causing curd to vanish.

Tossing the expired carton into the garbage, Karl looked over at his waiting cup of coffee with a considering look. "Bet 'The Geek' has some milk or cream..." He muttered to himself, with a nod.

Turning, the tow-headed surfer headed for the door in the back corner of the kitchen, pulling it open and letting a wave of Southern California heat wash into the air-conditioned comfort of the kitchen as he stepped out onto the worn wooden boards of the second- floor balcony. Enjoying the warmth of the mid-day sun on his naked torso, he clomped down the stairs to the first-floor of the Spanish- inspired two-story home that had been converted into two sets of apartments, reaching the door that led into the kitchen of the lower- level's current tenant.

Though that very tenant had, on numerous occasions, taken Karl to task on the habit of 'bursting in' anytime he wanted, Karl didn't even think about knocking before he flung the screen door wide open and strolled causally into the other man's apartment.

"Hey, Gary...!" Karl called, spotting movement in the living-room and heading in that direction. "I just need to borrow some - holy shit!"

The first-floor tenant blinked - then chuckled.

"Sorry, I'm all out of blessed excrement." Gary said, smirking. "Would the regular kind do?" Completely missing the joke, Karl simply continued to stare at 'The Geek', wide eyed. "How the hell...?" Karl stammered, his voice incredulous.

Though, usually, Gary would be in mid-tirade about how self-centered and thoughtless Karl was, bursting into other people's places like he owned them, the man Karl had nick-named 'Gary The Geek' because of his tall, pale, scrawny appearance seemed to be in an extraordinarily good mood at the moment...

...probably because, while still tall, the copper-haired young man was anything but 'pale and scrawny'.

Though neither as massively muscular or deep-bronzed tanned as Karl, Gary now boasted a fit, athletic physique and a warm golden tan - and while he might be less macho-muscular than the self-obsessed surfer, he obviously surpassed him in one area, judging from the bulge in the crotch of the nerdish, knee-length tan shorts.

"But... how...?" Karl stammered, shocked to find the twenty-year old man who, just the night before, had been so much an object of derision, now even more handsome and better endowed than himself.

"A magic potion." Gary explained, running a hand over his own, toned physique in admiration. "I found a book of bastardized Latin with the instructions for various 'alchemy' potions in it, including one to enhance male attributes and sexual prowess. It took two weeks to come up with all the rather eclectic ingredients - but, as you can see, it was worth it."

"No shit?" Karl blurted. "You mean, like - a real magic potion?" "Yup." Gary agreed.

Karl paused, eyeing Gary's toned new body and larger-than-life 'package'... "Can you make some for me?" Karl asked.

Had he been a little less self-absorbed, the less-than-genius surfer might have realized that the answer he should have expected to the question was 'Why should I do anything for you, you selfish, thoughtless, parasitic asshole?'...

...but, as it was, the muscular young man who truly did believe that the universe owed him anything he wanted, (and, unfortunately, had managed to live a life that had failed to disabuse him of the notion), wasn't surprised when Gary shrugged and agreed.

"Sure - it'll take a couple of weeks to get more stuff, but I don't see why not." "Great!" Karl said.

He was so excited by the prospect, that it wasn't until he got back upstairs that he realized that he hadn't gotten the cream for his coffee.

However, his mind whirling over the possibilities, he didn't even care as he gunned down his coffee. After all, if this potion could make what had surely been a pathetic cock so large, imagine what it could do for a stud like him!

Not that he'd ever had any complaints, of course. As he'd pointed out to Gary - on numerous occasions - he'd never lacked female companionship. In fact, generous guy that he was, he'd made several offers to 'lend' Gary one of his latest sweet-treats - after he'd finished satisfying her, of course. Since Gary obviously would never be able to snag the types of babes Karl routinely did, even 'sloppy seconds' was a gift...

...though, now, it didn't seem that Gary would have as much trouble getting his own babes - although, good looking and well endowed or not, he was still 'really' a geek, inside.

Still, if it had done that for the geek's physique, imagine what the potion would do to a guy like him, who was practically perfect as it was!

It was an enticing thought - and one that consumed him for the next two weeks. The time seemed to pass agonizingly slowly, his usual pastimes of surfing, partying and fucking all performed under the shadow of anticipation of what he'd be able to surf, party and fuck like once he was 'enhanced'. It seemed as if time had not only slowed to a crawl, but almost as if it had stopped dead in its tracks - but that was just an illusion, of course, because the two weeks did eventually pass, and it was on the evening of the fifteenth night that Karl threw open the door of his apartment to find Gary standing on the deck beyond, a small glass jar in hand.

"This the stuff...?" Karl asked, greedily, quite literally snatching the small, stoppered jar from Gary's hand.

"Sure is." Gary admitted, stepping into the kitchen with a surprising lack of justifiable annoyance at the solidly-built surfer. "In fact, just for you, I made it extra-strong."

"Great, great.." Karl muttered in a distracted tone, it never occurring to him to thank Gary for the two-weeks work as he stared, mesmerized, as the thick, oily-looking liquid in the jar. "So, I just drink it?"

"That's right." Gary said, following him, uninvited, into the living room as the muscular man pulled the cork from the jar, making a face at the somewhat musty odor of the contents.

Pulling up the hem of the long, baggy yellow t-shirt hanging down over his customary denim shorts, Karl fastidiously wiped off the rim and mouth of the small jar.

"Here goes..." Karl said, releasing the fabric of the t-shirt and letting it fall back down as he lifted the jar to his lips. Taking a deep breath and holding it, Karl put the mouth of the jar against his lips and quickly tossed it back in one smooth motion, like taking a shot of vodka.

The thick, slimy-feeling liquid oozed down his throat - and he dropped the bottle and gagged over the salty, heavy flavour of the potion.

"God - that's awful!" Karl claimed, mouth working as he tried to wash the flavour out of his mouth in a spate of saliva. "Really?" Gary asked in an odd, stilted tone of surprise. "Mine didn't taste all that bad."

"Well, this stuff tasted like..." Karl started to complain - then broke off, an odd look coming over his face.

"You feel something happening?" Gary asked, a bright light shining in his eyes as he stared, eagerly, at the muscular blond.

"Yeah, I feel weird - kinda itchy-like, all over..." Karl said, frowning - and then he gasped as he a strange shudder ran through his body...

...and he began to change.

Eagerly lifting up the hem of the t-shirt, Karl quickly undid the copper button and yanked the two sides of the fly open, causing the zipper to shoot downwards. Grasping the elastic of his underwear, he hauled outwards, staring down into the snug cloth encompassing his cock, an expectant expression on his face as he stared down at his thick, limp cock.

He watched it as the strange tingling-itching sensation rolled in waves over him, punctured by those strange shudders - and then he blinked in confusion.

His cock didn't seem to be getting bigger. In fact, it seemed to be shrinking -rapidly.

Sure it was an optical illusion,. Karl blinked and leaned forward, the better to see over the yellow obstruction creeping into the bottom of his field-of-view, distracted reaching up and using a slim, long-nailed finger to slip a lock of golden hair behind his ear when it fell in front of his face from the motion, and...

Since most of his shocked attention was focused on his barely-there cock and it's rapid decline, it took a second to register - and even then, it took a physical force of will to yank his attention from his now-smooth crotch to the protruding t-shirt infringing on his field of vision. Stunned, he lifted hands that were way too slender and tipped with way too-long nails up to his chest, hands gripping the twin, firmly-soft masses that were pushing the shirt outwards.

He'd never felt the sensation that thrummed through his weight chest - but the sensation from his hands was a familiar one, and even he couldn't miss it, and the implications:

"Tits! I'm growing tits!" He shrieked, the horror breaking the vocal paralysis shock had imparted as he'd watched his cock vanish over the space of a dozen seconds - and further horrified to hear it come out in a higher-pitched, feminine voice. "Gary - I'm turning into a chick!"

"Oh, dear..." Gary said in an oddly strained tone of voice. "I guess I must have goofed, and mixed up the female formula."

"Make it stop!" Karl shrieked, dropping his hands from his ballooning chest towards his crotch, even as he was forced to spread his legs further apart to help balance against the increasingly top-heavy balance of his changing body. Hands, now long and slender, ducked down the front of his underwear...

...and she quickly yanked them back out again as the long-nailed fingers grazed the warm folds of what was undeniably a cunt.

"Gary, do something!" She wailed in a feminine shriek, struggling in vain to close her shorts up again, a task made impossible by her widening hips and expanding ass. Leaving the task as hopeless, her hands shot up past her sliming waist to the rapidly-swelling masses on her slimming ribcage. "Make it stop!"

"I can't" Gary said.

Then the changing sensations stopped - and the new woman's head snapped upwards and she turned her face to the side, where she could confront her reflection in one of the many full-length mirrors strategically placed about the apartment to allow contemplation of 'the perfect male body'.

What Karl saw was about as far from the 'perfect male body' as you could get.

Oh, the woman who gaped back at her was still tall, and tanned, and a golden-blonde - but she was definitely - defiantly - female.

"Holy shit, Garry!" She gasped, hands fluttering at her side as she contemplated, then discarded the thought of touching one part of her radically altered form after another. "I'm, like... a total babe!"

"Yes - you seem to be." Gary agreed, eyes glinting as he took in the radically altered physique standing in front of him.

Staring at the slender, high-arched little feet, Gary's gaze traveled upwards, sliding over the finely-formed ankles and upwards over the seemingly endless expanse of long, smooth, darkly-tanned leg until those long, shapely limbs vanished under the rough-cut hem of the denim pants that, even open, were straining tautly over the womanly, smoothly-rounded hips that supported a firm, 'bubble-but' ass that protruded roundly outward from her slim, athletically-toned frame.

A toned, trim frame that boasted a slim, taut abdomen that many a woman would have died for - and which was almost completely lost in the shadow of the huge tits that loomed above it, pulling the once-baggy t-shirt outwards and upwards. That once-baggy garment's 'excess' cloth was now put to good use, the hem of the now-straining garment hanging but a mere inch below the bottom of the massive, firm, round tits now thrust so defiantly from her ribcage. Even covered by the thin, straining cloth of the t-shirt, there was no doubt that those massive globes of tit-flesh were both remarkably round and remarkably firm, looking utterly 'fake' in the way they stood spherically firm out from her body without the support of a bra - but that silicone-stuffed appearance was partially offset by the size of the long, thick nipples causing two separate dents in the taut yellow cloth from where they sat at the apex of each basketball-sized breast.

"Holy shit!" The new woman gasped, a stunned look on her fine-boned face. Huge, green eyes wide and full, bee-stung lips open in shock, she reached up and hesitantly placed her hands on the mountainous bosom behind the thin layer of fabric. "My boobs are huge!"

They were also quite heavy - something she discovered as she tried to whirl and face Gary. She staggered, and only the counter-balance of her incredibly full, taut, out-thrust ass kept the weight and momentum of her massive new rack from throwing her completely off her incredibly long, shapely new legs.

"Gary..." She pleaded in her new soprano voice, brushing waves of long, silky, golden-blond hair that the twirl had spilled into her face out of the way. "Do something!"

"I can't, not right now." Gary said. "It'll take at least another two weeks for me to mix up an antidote!"

"What?" She shrieked, long, thick lashes framing those huge emerald eyes fluttering in shock as her high-cheeked oval face went slack in shock. "You mean I.. I have to stay like... this? For two weeks?"

She gestured at her long, lushly-curved new exaggerated hour-glass figured... and shuddered at the way her huge tits jiggled from the motion.

"Look - let me grab you a drink to help you calm down, then we'll talk about it." Gary said - and, without waiting for a reply, he hurried into the kitchen, while Karl slowly and carefully turned back to confront her new reflection in the mirror.

In the kitchen, Gary pulled a beer out of the fridge and popped the top on it. Quickly glancing over his shoulder to make sure he was out-of-sight from the living-room, he quickly downed a mouthful of beer - to make room for the contents of a small vial he pulled from his pocket. Pouring the colorless, odourless liquid into the beer, he swirled it a couple of times to make sure it was mixed in, then carried the cold can out to the stunned, leggy new woman and handed it to her.

"Drink it all down fast, it'll help..." Gary said, and then watched with undeniable satisfaction as the huge-breasted blond did just that, chugging down the entire contents in one, long pull.

She lowered the can - and then blinked, the puzzled look that crossed her face fading almost the instant it formed as she shuddered, briefly. The puzzled look was now replaced by one of vague surprise, lending her lovely, fine-carved new features a somewhat vapid look.

"How do you feel now?" Gary asked her, carefully.

"A lot calmer." She said, obviously somewhat surprised by how her shock, horror and dismay had been pushed back, as if covered with a heavy, wet blanket that muffled the roiling emotions. They were still there - but less 'obtrusive'. "But, still - Gary, I can't be a huge-breasted babe. You have to help me!"

Her plea was still heart-felt and worried - but no longer even close to hysterical.

Gary had to fight down a victorious grin. The powerful potion he'd slipped into her beer was just as effective as the other two potions he'd mixed up so far.

Just as a secondary sort of test, Gary concentrated for a moment, picturing some small insect crawling on her slender, tanned left arm...

...and he had to fight down another smile as she awkwardly reached under her huge new bust to scratch idly at the very same spot on her mind, the thought having slid seamless and unnoticed into her mind, as if she'd had it herself.

This was going to work beautifully...

"Of course I'll work as long and hard as it takes to make an antidote!" Gary assured her with theatrical conviction...

...while imagining himself falling down dead, overcome by a heart-attack induced by the pressure of trying to 'cure' her feminine affliction.

Looking at Gary, Karl felt the heart hidden deep behind her mammoth new bust tighten in fear, and she hastily held up her hand.

"As quick as you can, of course - but don't overwork yourself." She said, with a nervous titter. "I mean, we don't want you having a heart-attack or anything."

"Well - we want to get you back to being a guy as soon as possible, right?" Gary said, 'seriously'.

On a sudden impulse, the slender, leggy blonde turned and surveyed herself in the mirror again, a realization striking her.

"Well, you can't turn me back right away, no matter what you do." She said, regretfully. "I guess I'm going to have to find a way to deal with this for however long it takes, in any case."

She sighed, eyeing her hourglass body - then stiffened as another thought suddenly sprang to mind:

"I can't say I'm 'Karl'!" She blurted out, in sudden fear. "No one would believe me! What happens if somebody comes here looking for me? Or, my god - if I'm trying to drive somewhere, and get pulled over!"

Letting the mental image of a platoon of cops and a platoon of psychiatrists arguing over whether she should go to prison or an asylum fade from his mind, Gary muttered a noncommittal 'Oh, yeah...' as he formed another mental image...

"I guess..." She said, slowly, hating to voice such a thing, yet unable to ignore the truth of the thought that occurred to her; "If I can't convince anybody that I'm really Karl, I'm going to have to pretend to be what anybody would accept me as being. "

With another look in the mirror, she finished the thought with a heavy sigh: "The woman I seem to be."

"Well, people would believe it..." Gary admitted, hesitantly. "Are you sure that's the best way to go?"

Platoon of cops and platoon of shrinks - now in a three-way argument with the platoon of scientists who want to dissect her alive to see if there's any truth at all to her claims of 'really' being male...

"It's the only way!" She declared with regretful determination, and a shudder.

"I'm just going to have to pretend to be.." She sighed, and pointed at her reflection. "...her."

"Well, if you're sure, Karl..." Gary said 'uncertainly' - while mentally picturing himself calling her by the male name while walking down the street - and those platoons of cops, shrinks and docs popping up out of nowhere at the male appellation.

She winced.

"Yes - and that means you're going to have to help me 'play woman'. "S he said, shuddering in distaste. "You'll have to pretend I'm a girl, too - and call me by a girl's name. I guess I'm going to have to pick one..."

"Karla?" Gary 'suggested' - while picturing confectionary in his mind.

"No, she - uh, 'I' don't look like a Karla..." She said, unsure why she was so certain of that, but certain nonetheless. "I guess I'll have to call myself... 'Kandi'."

She winced at distaste at the sound of the new name - but nodded slowly, sure that was the name people would accept this huge- breasted babe as having.

"Well, I'll do anything I can to help... Kandi." Gary 'assured' her managing to keep a straight face with some effort.

"It's gonna be hard going two weeks or more dealing with the freakishly huge tits..." She sighed, lightly touching her massive rack - and then shuddering with a thought. "Oh! Um, I mean..."

She hesitated, distaste washing over her - but it was something she needed to do, so she forced her voice into some semblance of a happy burble, something passing as a smile on her full new lips.

"Gee, I love having such wonderfully huge boobies!" She forced herself to say. "They were okay, back when they were just naturally really big, but I love them sooooo much more now that the nice doctor pumped them up so round and full!"

It was sickening to hear herself spout such 'happiness' over the heavy tits pulling jiggling on her chest - but it was exactly the sort of thing 'Kandi' would have said, she figured.

She looked over at 'The Geek' to see how her act was doing - and then, with another of those odd little shudders that kept hitting her, realized that 'Kandi' wouldn't know Gary had been a geek.

No, Kandi, looking at Gary, would see a well-built, handsome man with a big package, and being a buxom blonde beach-bunny who loved her silicone-pumped tits, she would...

No. No, she couldn't possibly...

"Something wrong, Karl...?" Gary asked with an odd, almost distracted, note in his concerned voice - and the sound of her old name reminded her that she had to be convincing enough to help Gary forget who she 'really' was, at least for the next few weeks.

Which meant, no matter how sick and perverted it was, she'd just have to screw up her courage and...

"My name's Kandi, silly!" She giggled, throwing in a feminine swing side to side, making her huge, round tits bounce and sway distractingly under the sheath of thin fabric as she assumed a theatrically thoughtful pout. "I was just wondering if you like how big and round my boobies are, Gary."

His eyes went to her huge new rack - and he said in a flat, almost rehearsed-sounding voice: "Karl, I can't..."

"I'm not Karl, you silly, handsome boy!" She forced herself to say, hating to do it, but knowing that, more than anything else, she needed Gary to back up her 'act', at least until she could be male again and give it up. It was utterly crucial that, if anybody saw them, Gary treated her like 'Kandi' rather than 'Karl' - so, no matter how perverted, disgusting or sickening it was, she'd have to do whatever it took to get Gary to act the way he would around a 'real' leggy, huge-breasted, incredibly sexy blonde bimbo. With the words she was mouthing having an actual, physical taste of something cold, slimy and unutterably disgusting, she forced herself to go on: "I'm Kandi - and sexy little nymphomaniacs like me love it when handsome men with big, thick cocks find us sexy, so I hope you want to stare at me and find me sexy and get all horny at the thought of fucking me with that big ol' cock of yours, stud!"

Hoping that Gary had gotten the message she'd - humiliatingly - been forced to bury in the sort of thing 'Kandi' would say, she forced another big grin for him, and said: "So - do you like my big, sexy titties, handsome?"

"Yes - I like your huge, round tits, Kandi." Gary said, managing to fake a remarkably realistic-looking grin and sexual leer...

...and she felt a sense of relief run through her that Gary was able to force himself to treat her like the huge-breasted bimbo she was pretending to be.

She was somehow absolutely, unquestioningly certain that as long as Gary could treat her as 'Kandi', everything was going to work out just fine - and so as he leered at her like a man would at a real, sexy woman, she felt a warm, wonderful sense of relief wash through her, helping dampen the intensity of some of the perverted disgust that would be her constant companion for however long she was forced to keep up this sickening charade.

"Well, Gary, it was really nice to..." She giggled, and threw the sort of emphasis that 'Kandi' would have on the next word; "...meet you, but I should get some sleep - I've got a busy day tomorrow, you know, redecorating my new place and sending out all those letters my cousin left behind, saying how he's gone on a world surfing tour after winning some money and doesn't know when he'll be back - and, of course, I gotta do a lot of shopping for some sexy clothes to wear!"

God, she wanted to vomit - and most of all, because that was exactly what 'Kandi' would be doing tomorrow...

The first full day of being female: Utterly humiliating and horrifying for Karl...

...but since the not-quite-hypothetical 'Kandi' would have loved it, that's what the world saw - a huge-breasted blonde bombshell obviously enjoying herself as she went on a shopping spree, giggling and even laughing as Karl forced her to tell salespeople that she was looking for clothing 'so sexy that men will cum as soon as they see me in it!'.

As the money haemorrhaged out of Karl's bank account, he wanted to scream - but 'Kandi' wouldn't have thought twice about spending that money, so Karl had to force himself to pretend he hadn't even thought of it once, forcing a smile on her full new lips as she bled her accounts dry.

The next three days weren't quite as bad, even as Karl shuddered on the pink-and-white décor Kandi would have chosen for the décor, and which she used in re-painting and redecorating her apartment up to Kandi standards...

...in steadily taller, slender heels Karl needed to practice in to be able to walk on the ankle-breakers Kandi would already be used to...

...even while having to train herself, so that anytime she happened to glance in any one of the many mirrors the apartment still boasted, she'd see Kandi, 'as usual' in a 'unconscious' pose that emphasized her long legs, bubble-but, and 'wonderfully huge' tits.

Of course, none of this was nearly as bad as Karl having to force himself to fantasize about having sex with men - but since that was exactly what Kandi would have been doing as she worked, that was what she had to create at least the convincing illusion of doing, so that if any hypothetical on-lookers had asked her what she was thinking, she could have described 'Kandi's' fantasies in minute, graphic detail.

The charade had to be utterly, unquestioningly perfect, for however long it lasted...

...which meant, no matter how horrifying or humiliating it was, Karl had to force this new body she was cursed with to look, talk, and act like 'Kandi', every single second, without failing.

The consequences of failure were simply too horrifying to think about. At least - she assumed that's why she never did think about it...

She was just finishing up, placing the last few, utterly useless and utterly feminine knick-knacks on overly-frilly furniture, when there was a knock on the door.

Though anything but easy, she forced herself to seem at least reasonably skilled and comfortable atop the five-inch heels of her white patent-leather pumps as she swayed over to the door, the muscles of her taut ass working under the skin-tight denim of her short-shorts and her huge breast jiggling, with tiny bikini whose blue triangles of cloth were barely enough to cover her massive nipples doing nothing to restrain her massive tits.

She opened the door - and Gary stepped in, holding a box.

"The movers left this behind at my place." He 'explained', holding it out to her. "I figured it would be important, so I brought it up."

The box turned out to contain all of 'her' ID - a driver's licence, a passport, birth certificate, the works - all in the name of 'Kandi Cummings'.

"Oh, you sweet, sweet man!" She 'squealed delightedly', because that was what Kandi would do - just as Kandi would have pulled her own body tight against his, using any excuse to press her huge tits into a handsome, well-endowed man's chest as she kissed him hungrily/thankfully.

It was utterly disgusting, and it sickened her to have to do it - but relief flooded her that Gary was able to overcome the disgust he was feeling, and respond accordingly. Not only was he able to wrap his arms around her, pulling her slim, hyper-endowed form closer as he somehow managed to force himself to return her kiss with something that almost seemed to be authentic lust, but he could even make himself slid his hands down to squeeze and fondle her full, taut ass as if he enjoyed it.

Of course, Kandi wouldn't stop him, nor want to end this - so she was forced to endure it, acting as if she loved it all until Gary's disgust finally overcame his exquisite acting abilities and he stopped kissing her - though he continued holding her tight, one hand around her trim waist.

His guilt over what he'd accidentally done to her must be phenomenal to make him go to such extreme lengths, forcing himself to treat her exactly as he would have the 'real' Kandi, and she felt waves of gratitude was through her, despite the humiliating circumstances.

Of course, it was probably disgust that forced Gary to stare at the huge tits he'd been forced to let her press against his chest - but Kandi would have assumed that any man was looking at her tits in lust, so she was forced to giggle and smile at him, shimmying her torso to make them bounce and sway.

"Like them?" She asked, coyly. "Go ahead - touch them."

Again, gratitude washed through her as Gary managed to steel his nerve and accept her offer, simulating every sign of enjoyment as he swung her around and began squeezing and caressing her huge, round tits.

In fact, obviously driven by the horrific guilt of what he'd accidentally done, he managed not to scream at the homosexual action of having a huge-breasted woman who was really and unzip his shorts and free a cock that he must have been thinking desperately about a real woman to have gotten so hard and throbbing.

She couldn't help but feel admiration and gratitude that he not only managed not to flee, but managed to simulate eager participation as she shed her own clothes, forced him back on the floor, and followed Kandi's instinct to climb on the biggest, hardest cock she could find, feigning utter enjoyment at having a massive, foot-long cock fill her tight new pussy, and seeming to enjoy it as she 'eagerly' rode atop him, long legs thrusting her towards her disgustingly wonderful first female orgasm as his guilt-driven acting made him feign just as much enjoyment at being fucked by 'her'.

Afterwards, when she thanked him for letting her fuck his huge, thick cock, she hoped he heard the genuine note of gratitude in her voice over his selfless actions, pretending to like getting fucked by her, and she wished that his supposedly eager 'any time!' was a commitment she could count on, even as she half-expected him to throw up in disgust over what she'd done with him. She, of course, had no choice at all, despite how sick it made her feel - but he must have been equally as sickened, and his only motivation was to help her maintain her cover.

"It's a shame..." She sighed. "After finally finding a man with a cock big enough to satisfy me, I might have to move away. I don't think I'll make this month's rent. I'm broke..."

"Well, you could always try getting a job at the Knockers restaurant at the corner." Gary somehow managed to think to say, knowing it was the sort of advice a man would give the 'real' Kandi. "You, showing off those tits in the tight little white tank top, that ass in those red satin shorts..."

Of course, as Gary surely knew, the thought of displaying her 'charms' to the public disgusted her - but it excited 'Kandi', and so the very next day 'Kandi' went down and applied...

...and, of course, Kandi was 'happy' when they hired her, damn it!

Obviously, neither she nor Gary had realized her tits and ass would outweigh her complete lack of any previous waitressing skills.

'Kandi' couldn't wait to get back and tell Gary how excited she was to get the job - and Gary, overridden with guilt at having made the now-obviously ill-advised suggestion, somehow managed to make himself let her go through with "Kandi's" urge to suck on his huge, thick cock - and, knowing how sickening it must be for him, she strived to give him the very-best blow-job she could, the pathetic little she could do to express the gratitude that Kandi could never reveal the depths of.

Oh, but she so dearly hoped that at least some of his supposed enjoyment of her long, loving blow-job was real...

The next month was like a form of hell for her - but it must have been as bad, or worse, for Gary, though he - like she herself - kept up the charade that they were both utterly happy and comfortable with the situation. Obviously, to keep from being 'found out', she had no choice - but, somehow, Gary managed to hold up his end, and she felt deep regret for ever thinking ill of him, now that she saw the depth of friendship he must have for her, what with letting her fuck and suck him regularly, whenever she wasn't working.

With his new physique and big, thick cock, he had to be getting steadily more eager to try it out with some 'real' babes, not to mention steadily more disgusted with having a woman who was really a guy forever 'talking him into' letting her fuck and suck him - but, somehow, he managed to meet her demands - which were 'just enough' for Kandi and too much for Karl, so of course Kandi was always begging for more...

...and, impossibly, through disgust and shame and humiliation, letting this man with the tight, wet cunt, huge tits and bee-stung lips have her homosexual way with him.

Until the night she got home to find him holding a small, stoppered jar of thick, dark liquid...

"What's that...?" 'Kandi' asked, quizzically, while Karl stared at the oily-looking liquid in the jar with a palatable hunger.

"It's a special potion." Gary said, carefully, watching her face intently. "It makes whoever takes it very masculine, making sure they have a huge, thick cock..."

'Gimme, gimme, gimme!' Karl's mind screamed in desperate need...

...which was why utter and complete horror flooded through her as she realized that she was completely and utterly incapable of breaking the Kandi persona long enough to take the potion.

Instead, with a grin that tasted like ashes, she found 'Kandi' purring warmly.

"Well, what are you waiting for, stud?" Kandi asked as Karl sobbed and pleaded and struggled vainly to break character. "Gulp it down so you can pump me full of even more wonderful cum with an even more wonderfully huge cock!"

Horried, smiling, she watched eagerly, disgustedly as Gary did just that, shooting down the potion in one smooth swallow...

And as she happily, horrifyingly watched him shudder and jerk as his muscles bulged and his already huge cock grew bigger and even more potent, she knew that this was to be her fate...

...and wanted to curl up and die because she knew how much Kandi loved that self-same thought, eyes sparkling in utter, completely content happiness as she bent down to give Gary's massive new cock it's first long, skilled, loving blow-job that she'd hate enjoying every single second of.

The absolutely worst part, though, more horrible than her own despairing happiness, was the thought that poor, giving Gary was going to be sentenced to a life pretending to enjoy being the hugely-endowed boyfriend of a sex-crazed blonde bimbo - and she swore to herself that she'd just have to dedicate the rest of her life to doing anything and everything she could to make it the most enjoyable horrific homo/hyper sexual fate she could...

SUMMARY: CONTEST STORY IDEA: An experiment in telepathy (mind to mind communication) involving DNA goes wrong when the subject finds that he is being changed by the subconscious minds of the people around him! He finds himself slowly changing to become the image of their fantasy women! Not only changing his body, but his mind-set and habits. Soon he finds himself becoming aroused by the men around him, flirting, wearing sexy/trashy clothes, smoking, etc.

One Mind Over Matter

By Gunslinger

The light of the single candle cast a golden circle of dim, flickering light in the center of the cheap hotel room. The bed was pushed out of the way, and two blankets thumb-tacked over the window kept out the garish red light from the buzzing, spluttering sign outside the second-story window.

Seated in the circle of light was an athletically-built young man with a lean, taut runner's body. Dressed only in a white 'wife-beater' undershirt and a pair of briefs, the young man's dark eyes were focused on the fluttering column of flame atop the thick 'library' candle, his face wearing a serene expression that seemed oddly foreign on his hard, angular face.

Slowly, the young man let his eyes close, his breathing deep and regular, as he concentrated....

He stopped breathing - indeed, almost seemed to become a carved statue of a young man, only the faintest currents of air stirring his close-cropped brown hair to destroy the perfect stillness of his body...

Then, cursing, Kyle Lansing opened his eyes, his hard lips curling into a more familiar sneer.

"Fuck!" He said, pulling himself out of his crossed-legged position with sharp, angry movements. Walking over to the lamp on the dresser, he flicked it on before blowing out the candle, then began to pace up and down on the worn carpet, his eyes narrowed and his head lowered in angry contemplation.

For the third time in as many hours, Kyle had managed to do the impossible - he'd managed to separate his mind from his physical form, reach out, and touch the mind of one of the sluts who lived in the hotel...

...only to find himself unable to penetrate the swirling 'surface' thoughts of the target and go deeper into her sub- and sub-sub-conscious mind, where he wanted to go.

"Fuck!" Kyle repeated again, banging one fist against the wall in frustration. What he'd already managed to do, by all scientific beliefs, was impossible, and enough to make him famous if he replicated it under controlled conditions for scientists. but it was nearly enough for what he wanted, and he doubted that any organization or group would provide funding for his true purpose.

His obsession had started when he'd seen the first commercial for the movie 'What Women Want'. Watching the screen, Kyle had snorted to himself, and thought reading a woman's mind was a waste of time. It'd be a hell of a lot better if, using a computer analogy, you could write to a woman's mind...

Unlike some guys, who seemed to think sluts were the finest sort of fantasy, Kyle preferred 'virginal'-looking women, or elegant, cool 'bitches'. Occasional, his fantasies also included dyed-in-the-wool lesbians, as well - because he liked the idea of fucking women who didn't usually 'put out' for men, but helplessly found themselves doing so for him. Oh, he didn't want utter submission and willingness - no, Kyle preferred the 'I don't want to - but I can't help myself.' fantasy.

The thought that he could reach into such a frigid bitch's mind and 'instruct' her to do just that, without her knowing he was messing with her, had given him the longest, hardest erection he'd ever had.

So, he'd started researching astral projection, telepathy, ESP - all the 'pseudo-sciences', looking for a way to do just that. Not only he did he find a trail to follow but he discovered something else.

Deep below the subconscious mind was, according to one book, the sub-subconscious mind. The part of the brain that sometimes hypnosis could reach - the one that could actually 'order' a person's body to do things. It was the part of the mind that controlled the when-and-how-much of glands and the like. and the thought of not only controlling a woman's thoughts, but being able to make some small changes to her body to make her even more ideal...

Even now, the thought made his cock go hard as a rock.

Over the last six months, he alienated what few friends he'd had, lost his job, moved out of his apartment, spent a good chunk of his savings - all in his obsessive, twenty-hours-a-day quest. A quest that had slowly begun to yield results. and, today, had made a break- through.

The problem was. he couldn't get that far into a woman's mind. He couldn't even get 'into' her surface thoughts.

A woman's mind was. too alien. He'd heard people say that men and women thought differently - but he'd never realized it was an absolute truth. It was like being dropped, naked, into a completely foreign country - none of what he'd been able to 'see' and 'hear' had made any sense. Not only could he not 'read' any of the thoughts - but even if he'd been foolhardy enough to try and 'insert' a new thought into a woman's conscious mind, she wouldn't have been able to understand it.

He was so... damned... CLOSE...! and it just wasn't enough.

Which meant he would have to resort to stronger methods....

Nodding to himself, Kyle turned and walked over to the dresser, where a small, black leatherette case sat on the scarred and scratched surface. Undoing the clasps that held the 'miniature briefcase' closed, he opened the top...

...and looked at the vials and half-dozen needles that lay inside.

Inside the two vials were chemical compounds that had to be stored separately or they'd degrade, but were designed to be mixed fifty- fifty before use. Designed to help people with mental retardation, the binary drug would increase the power of synaptic 'transmissions' and the receptivity of the synaptic 'receivers', overcoming the chemical condition that made thinking so hard for them.

Kyle, however, had been planning to use just the 'amplifier' portion of the drug, so as to give himself more 'power' with which to alter a woman's mind. After all, you not only had to be able to enter their mind, but overpower it long enough to insert the new thoughts you wanted them to obey. Only the fact that the stolen case had the second compound in it explained its presence.

Now, however, Kyle's face screwed up into an expression of distaste, and he slowly pulled the vial of 'receptor enhancing' compound out of the case. He had no urge to understand women... except for the fact that he'd need 'language lessons' before he'd ever be able to insert new thoughts into their heads...

Sighing, Kyle also extracted a needle, then walked over to the battered couch in the corner and sat down. Looking at the bottle of 'thought serum' with a thoughtful expression.

Dosage was the question. The more you took, the longer the effect would last - in a logarithmic progression, with the far-end of the range being eight-fifteen months. Kyle, of course, was planning to use the whole bottle of 'amplifier' drug when he was ready to start 'transmitting', but he had no urge to be able to read women's minds for the next year... and if he used both serums at any point, one would cancel the other out as far as the abilities he wanted were concerned, leaving him right back where he started, just thinking 'faster', as the binary drug was designed to do.

Grabbing the Bible from the drawer in the night-stand and a pencil from the top, he began to scrawl out equations on the inside back cover of the bible, working out what dosage he wanted to take.

Finally, he settled on the lowest amount he could calibrate accurately with just the needle's graduated scale: about forty-eight hours, give-or-take. Hopefully, that would be long enough for him to learn the basic 'language' of women's minds, so he could wait for the drug to clear and inject himself with the 'amplifier' serum.

Breaking the plastic wrapping around the top of the vial's metal-rimmed rubber 'stopper', Kyle leaned closer to the light and slid the end of the hypodermic needle through the pliant white rubber, until it was in the fluid itself. Turning the vial-and-needle upside down and holding it above his head, he carefully drew some of the amber liquid into the vial, then pulled the needle out of the self-sealing rubber. Setting the vial aside, he gently squeezed the plunger of the needle, expelling any air bubbles from the needle and spraying some of the liquid in the air until the edge of the plunger sat aligned with the correct graduation on the outside of the glass cylinder for the dosage he wanted.

Walking into the bathroom, he opened up the medicine cabinet and extracted a length of rubber surgical tubing he'd bought. Carefully laying the syringe down on the edge of the rust-and-calcium stained sink, he tied the tubing around one hard, taut bicep, crooking his arm at the elbow and slapping his arm until a vein popped to the surface.

Taking a deep breath, Kyle picked up the needle and smoothly slid it into his vein, wincing as he did so. In one slow, smooth motion he pushed the plunger down, injecting the contents of the needle into his bloodstream.

Placing the needle in the garbage, he took off the rubber tubing and put it back into the cabinet. He wiped away a tiny droplet of blood from the small needle puncture, covering it with a little round Band-Aid.

Wanting to be ready when it kicked in, Kyle went back out to the other room and lit the candle, then shut off the lamp and sat down in the same spot as before. Staring at the candle, letting himself become entranced by its dancing, hypnotic light, he waited for the drug to kick in before 'projecting' his 'astral aura' out to the nearest slut.

After several minutes, he became aware of a slightly odd feeling, as if his head was itchy... except it wasn't in his scalp, but deeper, in his brain.

Taking another deep breath, Kyle forced himself to ignore the feeling and relapse into his trance. Once he was deeply entranced, his eyes slowly slid closed, almost of their own volition, and he felt his mind stretching out, seeking to make a connection...

His body cried out and slammed backward against the floor, twitching and flopping as his heels drummed at the floor and his hands clawed at the ceiling.

Kyle was completely unaware of what his body was doing - he was too busy fighting to retain his 'stream-of-consciousness, the part that made him 'him'.

Reaching out to touch another mind had always felt like he was pushing a ten-ton boulder uphill, fighting to pull his mind from his body and into the ether - then having to fight into the brain of the target person he was reaching for.

Now... now it was as if he'd entered a huge cavern and was standing at the precise center of the massive space.. and in every nook and crevice in the walls, a radio was playing full-blast. Kyle was overwhelmed by the cacophony, the massive blur of different 'voices' that thundered through his mind, the overlapping sounds of the minds incoherent as they mingled and echoed together...

...but they were all male minds. Not only had the drug greatly increased his 'receptive' power, now that he'd trained his mind to be telepathically alive, but the fact that male minds were closer to his meant that the minds of all the men around him drowned out even the faintest sound of the more alien women's minds...

With an incredible force of will, Kyle managed to wrench his projected self back into his body, cutting off the blaring mental 'noise' of all those men's minds. Laying on the floor, panting, he began to swear.

Loudly.

He'd just taken a drug that was useless. The only way he'd be able to get into a woman's mind was to go out into the desert with a woman, forty miles away from the nearest man. It was as if women's minds were weak radio stations.. and were being drowned out by men's 'stronger' signals.

Kyle had never tried to reach another guy's mind, so he hadn't realized that - with him thinking more like them - Kyle's mind was more 'attuned' to men's minds, making them easier to contact - and much louder. Now, cursing, he saw that his drug was more than useless... it was a pain in the ass, because even without 'reaching out', he was getting 'overlap' of telepathic communication. Over the past six months, he'd been steadily training his mind to be receptive to telepathic communication - but it had never even occurred to him to also train his mind to have an 'off' switch. Now, he could feel men's undirected thoughts crawling around inside his subconscious mind, and he had no way to shut them out. It felt as if there were tiny little bugs crawling around inside of his mind.

At least the men didn't know anything about it - after all, he was just receiving random thoughts that the guys didn't even know they were sending, and while he could feel their thoughts in his head, they had no sense of him at all.

However, Kyle couldn't 'hear' any of the thoughts., Not only had he blocked his consciousness from the overload of mental noise, but there were too many minds with equal 'power' for any one of them to be distinguished above the rest.

In other words - for the next two days, Kyle was going to be plagued by this incredibly annoying sensation in the back of his mind.

"...god-fucking-damn, shit!" Kyle finished his tirade, slowly rolling over and sitting up, panting at both the effort to pull his mind away and the anger he was feeling. Sitting there, gasping, he shook his head, feeling the urge to scream at the incessant 'tickling' on the inside of his brain.

"God - I need a drink..." Kyle said to himself, frustrated and angry - and with no-one to lash out at. Blowing out the candle, he fumbled his way to the door and flipped on the light switch, bringing the overhead light to life.

Walking over to the dresser, he pulled out a pair of jeans and began to yank them on... then cursed again in frustrated anger. He'd forgotten that the last pair of clean jeans he 'had' weren't his jeans at all, but a pair he'd found here and just left in the drawer. He'd meant to do wash today, but had forgotten, especially with the break-through...

...which was how he found himself wearing pair of too-tight jeans. He looked over at the pile of dirty laundry, and wrinkled his nose... then growled and fought with the jeans he was wearing, finally getting the button-fly done up. Slipping his feet into a pair of sneakers sans socks, he started to shove his wallet into the back pocket...

...which was much too tight to accept it. Grumbling, Kyle grabbed his room key and just carried the key and wallet in his hand. He could have thrown his denim jacket on, just for the pockets - but he needed to feel the cool air on his over-heated and angry body before he got to the liquor store. Otherwise, he might beat the hell out of the clerk just to relieve the frustration.

Leaving the room, he made sure the door locked behind him, then headed down the stairs, using the door at the back rather than the lobby door.

It was pretty late, and the alleyway was deserted in the cool night air, smelling of garbage from the dumpsters. Wrinkling his nose at the smell, Kyle headed off down the alley, which he knew exited at the far end next to a liquor store.

The cool night air and brisk walk helped calm him a bit, though he added a little more force than necessary to opening the door to the store and stalking quickly inside, turning down the first aisle and towards the selection at the back of the store....

Aref, the night clerk of the store, was dealing with a customer when somebody all-but-dashed into the store - but the speed with which they entered wasn't the only reason Aref glanced up. In a neighborhood with a high risk for robberies, he always checked out the people in the store.

'Caucasian, short brown hair, six foot or so, white tank-style top, blue jeans - very tight blue jeans. Sneakers.' Aref's mind catalogued, almost on autopilot - then: 'Guy or girl? These days, hard to tell sometimes. Probably a guy - if it's a girl, she's flat-chested and ugly '

Mid-stream, his mind went from professional autopilot into more familiar thoughts. '. well, flat-chested, anyway. She wouldn't have to be a complete dog if'

Kyle was just about to reach for a bottle of Southern Comfort. when the insects scurrying around in the back of his brain began to burrow deeper in.

He gasped, outstretched hand dropping -as she suddenly felt dizzy. The world seemed to spin as he braced his hands on his knees and gasped for air...

...while his body began to itch intolerably, feeling as if a thousand ants were crawling around just under the skin. There was something very, very wrong with him...

Aref blinked when he noticed, out of the corner of his eye, the figure in the curved mirror seemed to have vanished. Thanking the customer he'd just finished dealing with, Aref hurried around the counter and towards the back of the store, sure the person was trying to shop lift...

...and found the woman bent over, looking as if she were about to be sick. Her eyes were closed beneath her somewhat too-thick - but nicely arched - eyebrows, and her too-thin lips were open as she gasped for breath.

Though she wasn't his type - to athletically built, only mildly attractive in a sort of hard way - Aref couldn't help but notice that her position made her ass look damned near spectacular in the tight jeans she wore. then snapped himself out of it.

"Miss - are you all right. ?"

'Miss...?' Kyle thought, in confusion, as the sensations faded. His body still felt... 'off', somehow, but the discomfort itself was fading...

...and, despite his immediate urge to snap at the guy and correct him, he was filled with an overwhelming urge to assure the man that he was all right.

It was so strong that Kyle couldn't help but obey it.

"I'm fine..." Kyle said - and his eyes flew open at hearing his own voice. It was similar to the one he always heard.. but not the same. It wasn't as deep in the lower registers, and it was smoother - thought still husky, somehow. It sounded... it sounded androgynous, somehow. He straightened... and again felt something wrong in the way his body moved.

Aref had wanted nothing more then to hear that she was okay, and when she'd said she was, he felt better - and then he'd felt confused.

Something about her was giving off the wrong vibe. Sure, part of it was the way she looked with her too-strong jaw, no make-up, and too-muscular, slim-hipped body... but there was more to it then that...

...like the way her jeans fit at the crotch didn't seem right. Almost as if... but that couldn't... Whatever was going on, Aref just wanted this person to buy something and get out...

Kyle was about the angrily demand to know what was going on - when he felt another overwhelming need. One so strong it almost floored him.

She (she?) needed to buy something and get the hell out of the store.

Confused - but unable to disobey the iron need he felt - Kyle quickly grabbed the bottle of Southern Comfort he'd been reaching for.

"Just this..." he said in that not-quite-right voice, wanting to know why he sounded so weird but completely unable to take the time to puzzle it out, instead needing to pay for the bottle and get out of the store...

...and stay out. Somehow, Kyle knew that he shouldn't come back in, that he couldn't come back in here again - he just had to buy the booze and then leave, for good. He didn't know why he suddenly felt that way, but the need was physical and tangible - he couldn't disobey it, not without his mind splintering into a million fragments.

Quickly, he paid for his purchase, then ducked out the door and around the corner into the alley. Putting the bottle down on top of a garbage can, Kyle felt that overpowering urgency slowly fade, allowing him to get back to the pressing questions about what the hell was going on...

"What the fuck's wrong with my voice...?" Kyle demanded, lifting his hands to his throat...

...and realizing, with shock, that both the throat, and the hands that were touching it - felt wrong. Quickly, he brought his hands up to his eyes...

They were almost his hands - but they were thinner, more smoothly proportioned - and the hair on the arms leading to them was finer, thinner than it had been.

"What the...?" Kyle gasped, looking at what looked like hands that belonged on a masculine woman. Eyes widening, he looked down at himself...

The shirt was a trifle baggy. Not much, but enough to hide the almost prepubescent little mounds on his chest... but not the larger, thicker and darker nipples that were engorged with the cool air.

Women's nipples, visible through the thin, white material.

"Holy Shit!" Kyle swore in his pseudo-feminine voice, staring at his tiny, almost non-existent tits. The fact that they were so small was hardly reassuring - he shouldn't have had tits at all...

...then a thought struck him, and his hands flew down to his crotch...

His cock was still there. He could feel it through the fabric - and he could also feel that it was about half the size it should have been.

"Holy fuck, I'm a tranny!" Kyle gasped, thinking about those freaks on the Internet. Sometimes, when surfing the net, a pop-up window would open from some site, and he'd see guys who were taking hormone shit - and they had tiny little tits and cock, like he now did, looking... well, kinda feminine, like he now did...

"Oh, fuck me..." Kyle muttered, bracing himself against the wall as the world spun around him - and realizing that his ass felt wrong, pressed against the wall. Too.. to big and firm...

"Oh - fuck!" Kyle shouted as he realized what was going on.

He'd turned himself into a sort of super-receiver, telepathically... and that damned store clerk had been close enough to Kyle for his thoughts to become legible...

...and what Kyle had been trying to do to women with his new studies had, instead, happened to him - though the man responsible for the change hadn't even realized it. All he'd known was that Kyle was a real pain in the ass as a customer, and a sort of genderless freak to boot - and so he'd wanted Kyle to get the hell out...

...and Kyle had felt that thought as an overwhelming desire to obey it. Though he hadn't consciously 'heard' the actually thought, the clerk's brain-waves were close enough to Kyle's own that Kyle's brain had understood the thought... and acted on it.

Kyle felt a rising wave of panic - and forced it down. He was in deep shit, and panicking wouldn't help at all.

Grabbing the bottle of booze, he opened the top and took a long swig, letting the booze burn in his stomach as he considered his position.

He had hyped-up his sensitivity to telepathic transmissions - and any man with powerful enough thoughts, in a brain-wave pattern close enough to Kyle's own, would be able to affect Kyle's mind...

...and body. When Kyle had read about the ability to mentally activate functions of the body that people didn't even no existed, he figured they were very minor things. The tiny breasts, for instance - that was about what he figured he could do to a woman, increase or decrease breasts a little. The ass, too, was in line with his thinking of what could be done with mental control...

But the body hair? How the hell had it become lighter and finer? Falling out, maybe he could have understood that - but it's very nature had changed.

What else...?

Running his slightly altered fingers over his face, Kyle felt the fact that his nose was smaller, though by no means 'dainty'. Also, his lips were slightly fuller, his jaw slightly more rounded, his ears.. his ears were definitely smaller then before.

This was bad - this was very bad...

Then, with relief, Kyle realized that, by taking an equal dose of the 'amplifier' drug, he could cancel out the effect of the 'receptor' drug. He had to get back to the hotel room - and avoid guys along the way.

Turning, he hurried off down the alley way...

Frowning, Aref grabbed the broom and began to sweep up the smile pile of what seemed to be body hair from the spot where that strange... person.. had been standing.

It was almost like a guy had stood here and shed all his body hair. But... but the person Aref had seen had body hair... almost as if he/she had shed the one layer, then almost instantly regrown a second...

"Oh, come on...!" Todd cried as the ancient TV in room 208 suddenly made a crackling sound and went blank, the odor of overheated electronics filling the room.

He'd been right in the middle of a late-night, B-grade movie... one without much plot, but plenty of nubile flesh> Annoyed - and rather impotently aroused - Todd rose and crossed the room, pulling the ancient TV away from the wall and unplugging it, just to make sure there wouldn't be a fire...

...when he noticed a small beam of light coming out of the wall. Dropping to his hands and knees, Todd found himself looking at a small hole drilled into the wall.

Feeling guilty, Todd leaned forward and pressed his eye against the hole, finding himself looking into the room next door...

...just in time to hear a key rattle in the lock of that room's door. He started to draw away, feeling guilty at prying...

...then recalled that his TV was out, and maybe it wouldn't hurt to see who lived next door...

He put his eye back to the hole... just in time to glimpse a very nice ass, packed tight into denim, move out of his line of sight. Shifting quietly, looking to see what he could see, he found himself wondering what the woman who owned that ass looked like...

* * * * *

Slamming the door behind him, Kyle headed for the corner of the room where he'd put the case with the serum in it...

...when he suddenly felt that 'burrowing' sensation in his head again.

Gasping, he slumped forward, bracing himself bent-over on the end of the bed, feeling his body tingling. Now aware of what the strange sensation really was, he was better able to catalogue the changes as he felt them - not that he was happy about knowing what it was he was feeling.

He felt a strange 'rippling' sensation across his scalp.. and saw his hair drift down past his eyes, leaving him bald... yet, he couldn't be bald, because as the rippling sensation continued, long, glossy black hair flopped in front of his eyes...

Eyes that felt as if he'd been up too long. At least, that was the closest analogy to the hot, gritty feeling in his eyes as something changed. He could also feel changes occurring in his nose, lips and jaw...

...but they were secondary to the strange feeling in his chest...

...which, itself, was secondary to the horrible sensation of having his shrunken cock and balls pull upwards into his abdomen - no doubt leaving a perfectly formed female vagina in it's place.

He gasped at the knowledge that he was now, technically, female - and the sound of her feminine hasp verified it...

* * * * *

Looking to see what the woman next door was doing, he heard her gasp... a nice sound, almost sexual. Damnit - why couldn't she walk over to the mirror and...

Even as the shifting in her new body finished, Kyle forced herself to fight down panic and horror and head for the case on the night stand, wondering who was doing this - but it didn't matter nearly as much as the fact that it was happening. She reached for the case...

...and even as her more feminine hand lightly grazed the case, found herself turning around and heading towards the dresser and it's big mirror. She tried to stop herself, tried to turn around and head back to the case... and even managed to get her stride to falter...

...and it felt like her brain was exploding. The psychosomatic pain was so great that it broke her concentration - and when that happened, she once more moved towards the mirror...

The woman next door came into sight of the mirror.. and Todd's hand went down to his crotch and lightly began to squeeze the fabric of his dark-green-plaid 'lounging pants'.

She was a cutie - definitely.

She had a supple, but not overly muscled, body, with a great ass packed into a pair of skin-tight jeans. She wore a white tank-top, through which her firm, taut breasts - a nice B-cup, Todd judged - were clearly visible, right down to her engorged nipples.

She wasn't gorgeous - but the face surrounded by a mane of straight, jaw-length black hair was definitely cute, with nice lips, a cute nose, and dark, sexy eyes below slender, arched eyebrows.

In fact - she was exactly the type of woman he'd thought would own the ass he'd seen. Todd still wondered what the gasp was. Had she been...?

* * * * *

Reaching the mirror, Kyle stared in shock at her further feminized body.

She was... a woman. A pretty good looking one, too, though nothing that would draw undue attention. But it was her! This was horrifying! It was... a nightmare!

The irony that she'd been planning something like this for a woman was lost on her as she tried to force herself to go get the drug before anything else could happen - but she'd barely begun to move when she found herself filled with an overwhelming urge to turn three-quarters-on to the mirror, and lightly fondle her own, taut new ass with her more feminine hands.

Helplessly, she found herself doing as she was urged to do, and she struggled to fight it - but the more she fought, the worse the pain grew as her hands became awkward, caught in the conflict. Then she gave up, letting her hands caress her firm, sexy new ass lightly as she tried to figure out how to escape what was happening and get to the serum...

...then she found her new hands slowly working their way upwards.

She gasped in unwanted pleasure as her hands found her new, larger tits through the thin fabric of the shirt and began to squeeze and fondle them. Her new, enlarged tits were almost exactly a handful each, and her lightly squeezing, rubbing hands felt fantastic as she massaged her new breasts and their thick, erect nipples.

The fact that it felt good didn't make it any easier to bear the fact that she was now a woman - one with breasts to be fondled at all, pleasurable or not...

...but she couldn't make herself stop. When she tried, her hands faltered for a second - until the burst of pain made her relent...

* * * * *

Damn - she was feeling herself up!

There she was, a cute little woman, fondling herself in front of a mirror while she watched. It was perfect...

Well, not perfect, of course. After all, she was dressed kinda plain, even if the jeans were skin tight, and she wasn't wearing any make-up. Also, the fact that she looked more-or-less the way he'd expected her too didn't mean she was his ideal. This was great - but it would be even better if...

Suddenly, a new need came over Kyle. A need to.. to go buy some new clothes...

'No. !' The new woman screamed in the depths of her mind - but that incredible pressure on her mind was too strong to bear. She grabbed her wallet and key again... then fought to walk over to the case. She took one step. and it felt as if she were trying to walk through knee-deep quicksand, while her head began to throb. Another step. and it was waist-high mud, and a blinding headache. Yet another and it was like she was leaning against a brick wall, muscles straining, while somebody slammed her head over and over again against the wall...

Gasping, she whirled and hurried for the door, tears rolling down her cheek at the shame of not being able to make herself do the one thing that would stop this all from happening...

Hearing the woman cry, Todd suddenly realized that this wasn't a fantasy at all, but real life...

Feeling supremely guilty, he yanked his eye away from the wall even as he heard the woman let out a sob-muffled curse, and tried to forget about what he'd just done. and so didn't see the woman next door as she shuddered and shivered, stumbling like a drunk woman as her body began to change... but still, helplessly, driven to move towards the door....

Her body was in an uproar, and she could barely stay upright. but to stop was unthinkable. No matter how difficult, she had to keep moving towards the door - and she did, even as she felt her body shifting yet again. "Fuck. " She swore, her jumping vocal chords making it sound like a sob.

Again, she felt a rippling sensation as her hair fell out, to be replaced with a new style.. and she once more felt her breasts expanding. She also felt changes being made to her face and body in general...

...but they were all over with by the time she reached the door and let herself out.

She wanted, desperately, to reenter the room, grab that needle. but she couldn't. She had to go shopping, right now - and so she found herself once more leaving the building.

She was having trouble, in more ways then just coping with the horrible situation in which she found herself. For one thing, her feet were now too small for her shoes, and it was decidedly awkward to walk in them. Also, her newly enlarged breasts had more mass, and bounced slightly with each step she took - making her fully swollen nipples drag across the inside of her shirt in a way that was driving her nuts, as well as disgusting her by making her find something 'nice' about her changes...

Though it was nearly dawn, she didn't have any trouble finding a store that was open at this hour, not in this neighborhood. If she'd wanted demure, unisex clothes she would have been shit out of luck. As it was, she didn't want any women's clothes - but the type she needed was readily available at a shop down the street.

The clerk of the shop was female, for which Kyle was eternally and internally grateful - but that didn't lessen the new woman's need to shop. In the mirrors of the store, she saw her new body - still slender, tall and lithe, but now with pale skin and wavy black hair that hung past her narrow new shoulders. Her face was cool, but definitely attractive, with dark eyes and fuller lips, and her waist was considerably smaller in diameter, making her hips look less 'boyish', though they'd remained the same as before. Her breasts were now a firm D-cup from the look of them, and the nipples had lightened to a more pinkish color, as well as being larger.

Shame and disgust flooded Kyle as he began to browse the collection of clothes available. She felt like a pervert or faggot looking at women's clothes, even though her new body was more suited to these items then masculine attire. Of course, tat fact wasn't one to make her happy, either, and her new face bore a thunderous scowl revealing the fact she wasn't happy - but, again, that didn't stop her from 'picking out' several sets of new clothes, even though she had little actual choice as to what she was buying.

Paying for three sets of new clothes, she helplessly found herself compelled to go into a change room and put one of them on before leaving the store. Her face thunderous, eyes showing her disgust and shame, she stripped off her male clothes and dumped them in the garbage, then began to dress in one of the outfits she'd helplessly purchased.

The first item was a pair of black cotton panties that were pretty nondescript - but utterly disgusting to Kyle as she helplessly drew them on, pulling them over unspectacular-but-definitely-feminine legs and setting them in place over her new, fully formed womanhood.

Helplessly, she smoothed the fabric over her 'best'/'worst'/most-perfectly-feminine feature, her spectacular, firm ass.

Then she pulled on the one-piece, black-PVC 'catsuit', that covered her from ankle-to-wrist-to-neck in gleaming black. She'd managed to 'fight' her urges enough to buy PVC rather than the much more expensive leather... but whatever 'forced' urges placed in her head were continuous, so she felt a sort of low-level 'disappointment' in the cheaper substitute material, even though she didn't want to feel it.

As a equally horrible side-effect, she felt even more unwelcome 'pride/pleasure/satisfaction' at the way she looked in the outfit, with the zipper drawn up three-quarters of the way, so as to display a nice amount of her milky-white cleavage.

Next came the black elbow-length gloves, also in gleaming PVC. Helplessly, Kyle pulled them on over her transformed hands... then used those same hands to reach down and (horror! Horror!) pull on the black knee-high boots with the four-inch contoured heel.

She felt a wave of utter shame as she stood, balancing carefully atop the unfamiliar heels. However, that shame was only a faint shadow of what she felt as she picked up the bags containing her other purchases and walked out to the desk...

"Makeup." She all but snarled, hating what she was doing but unable to stop. "I need make-up." The woman behind the counter frowned at Kyle's attitude. "I'm sorry, we don't sell..."

"Then I'll damned-well take yours!" Kyle all but shouted, driven by a need that angered and disgusted her. "A hundred dollars for whatever you've got in your purse!"

The woman frowned... but wasn't about to turn Kyle down.

Humiliated, Kyle took the make-up and walked over to a mirror, where she helplessly applied black mascara to her ,long, dark lashes, dark blue eye-shadow, black eyeliner... and gloss-red lipstick.

She did so in a state of shock - because she was stunned by what had happened. She'd felt that raging need to put on make-up... but she didn't know how...

...and she'd felt her mind pull the skills she needed out of the clerk's mind. The needs she was feeling were so strong that they succeeded where her own willpower had failed.. at breaking through into a woman's mind. Instead of changing what it found there, though, it just copied it exactly... and placed it in Kyle's mind. Now, she was as skilled at doing make-up as the woman behind the counter was.

Finished, she dropped her newly-purchased (and expensive) makeup into the purse she'd just bought, grabbed her bags, and awkwardly wobbled to the door, yanking it open and stepping outside...

...and almost barreling into a couple just walking by. From the looks of them, Kyle would guess that he was a trucker, and she his wife.. they just had that look about them.

Horried, Kyle found himself spreading her newly-glossed lips into a warm smile.

"Excuse me - I didn't see you there, handsome..." She found herself saying in a husky, come-hither voice - the type of voice that the trucker wanted to hear. The wife was shooting daggers at her, and Kyle wished she could explain that this certainly wasn't her idea... but that she was filling the woman's own husband's fantasy...

"That's okay..." the trucker said, eyeing her cleavage appreciatively... and she found herself leaning forward, to let him see a better view... while feeling another disgusting 'pleasant' sensation in her mind. Just as she now unwillingly 'liked' leather outfits, she now 'liked' showing her cleavage... then she felt that mind-delving sensation as she sucked a copy of something out of the fuming wife's brain. A second later, Kyle discovered what it was - a hip-swinging sexy stride, her balanced easily and 'naturally' atop her new high heels as she walked down the street...

...in the wrong direction. The hotel was the other way... but the guy obviously wanted to ogle her spectacular ass, and she had to oblige him by walking in the same direction the couple was going, with the wife no doubt beating the guy on the arm as he stared at Kyle's butt... but Kyle had no choice but to continue walking with her new stride, unable to break free of the compulsion...

...and hating the fact that she had yet another 'pleasant' sensation from having her ass ogled.

The fact that the guy was just fantasizing about her new body doing things she didn't want to do rather than a whole different body was little comfort...

Helplessly, she walked farther from the hotel, entering a more run-down section of town, a sort of commercial-industrial area. The sun was beginning to rise as she found herself walking past a big-rig parked in an abandoned lot, and she had a hunch...

...she helplessly continued walking until she was past the next building, turning the corner and vanishing from the trucker's line-of-site... and immediately felt the urge to walk vanish. Slumping against the wall, Kyle struggled for control over her emotions as she listened to the truck start up and pull away...

...and she was stunned to realize that the 'itching' in the back of her mind was barely noticeable. There were no guys at all nearby. She was safe.

She was torn. Should she head back to the hotel, and the drug that would keep her from being able to change... or stay here, safe from change...?

The memory of what had happened with her first attempt to get the drug, plus the fact she was utterly exhausted, gave her the answer. She'd stay out here, rest up - and then try to get her hands on the drug as soon as she could. Frankly, she didn't think she had the strength to walk the five blocks back to the hotel - if it hadn't been for the 'urge' of the trucker's wanting to watch her wiggle her great ass, she wouldn't have made it this far. She'd been up for more than thirty hours at this point, and changing took a lot out of her...

Looking around, she spotted a likely building in which to take refuge for a few hours. With a credit card from the wallet in her purse, she jimmied the lock and let herself into the obviously abandoned warehouse, looking around the decaying interior with a sigh.

In one corner of the almost empty building were some large, irregularly cut sections of carpet - cast-off end-of-roll stuff. Walking over, she sat down on them and began to undress.

It was hard - damned hard. She felt an unwanted pang of pain as she struggled to undress, her altered mind 'wanting' to keep looking 'sexy' in tight, shiny clothes. It was only by telling herself that she was just getting undressed for bed that she managed to defeat the new 'desires' of her altered mind. It was yet further proof that any changes to her mind were permanent, at least until a new change overrode them.

Naked, she lay back on the carpeting... and closed her eyes, struggling for an inner calm she definitely didn't feel. There was a slight chance...

Finally, she managed to reach a trance state, though it was incredibly difficult.. and she began to focus on the thought of being her old male self again. To be male... To have a cock again...

It was like fighting uphill with a boulder chained to each leg... and then the sensations of change hit, giving her a sudden sense of victory, having managed to push - not outward - but inward, into her own mind...

But the victory was premature.. because the very sensations were too much to allow her to maintain the trance, and she snapped out of it. Sighing, she checked herself over.

She was bald. The 'wrong' hair had fallen out, but the 'right' hair hadn't had time to replace it. She was more muscular, with somewhat broader shoulders.. but on her hairless chest, her tits still sat.

However, most of her focus had been on 'the most important' part - getting a cock back. And, indeed, a cock thrust skyward from her crotch.

The most utterly immense, thick cock Kyle had ever seen, complete with enormous balls the size of softballs. So important had it been, so large in her mind had it loomed, that she'd overdone it...

"But I changed myself...!" She whispered in the same feminine voice that she'd used with the trucker, exhausted by the effort. "I can change myself back, if nobody's around..."

She was too exhausted to try again. She'd do that after getting a nap.

Laying back, she stared up at the ceiling, her enormous cock hard and throbbing... and she glanced down, past her tits, to the huge hard on.

Reaching out, she wrapped her still-feminine hands around the massive shaft, somewhat stunned and disgusted by how erotic it looked, feminine hands wrapped around a massive cock.

Closing her eyes to the disturbingly erotic sight, she began to masturbate, moaning in her feminine voice as her hands worked her gigantic shaft...

...almost without thinking about it, she let go of the huge, throbbing cock with one hand, using that hand to fondle her tit, the firm, dome- shaped tit a little more then her hand could take at once. She moaned again, loader and longer, at the pleasures from chest and crotch as she continued fondling her tits and jacking off, shivering at the odd new-old sensations, not sure what to think about the fact that this felt better then anything she'd ever done by herself before...

The hand on her cock increased pace as she felt herself nearing orgasm, her whole body shaking and shivering - and the pleasure from her tit doubling as she continued to fondle it frantically.... then she came. She came harder and longer then she'd ever cum before, her huge new tool firing like a fire-hose, spurting a thick stream of warm cum into the air in a seemingly never-ending stream, raining down on her body and face, coating her new tits and face in warm jizz as she screamed loud and long in extreme pleasure, not even noticing the warm cum that splattered into her open mouth - the cum that she kept swallowing to keep from choking...

...and even as the most intense orgasm of her life began to fade, her over-taxed body shut down and she was slammed immediately into a deep, dark sleep without dreams or sensations...

There are various levels of confusion...

One of the highest of all would probably involving 'waking up' - and finding yourself walking down the street. Fully dressed. And a woman.

That was the level of confusion Kyle felt in the first instants of consciousness as she gazed at the view in front of her as she used her new, sexy walk to move down the street. She was under a compulsion to do so, and couldn't make herself stop. though, with a painful effort, she could slow herself a bit, and look down at herself.

She was fully female once again, and dressed in one of the other outfits she'd bought.

She was balanced atop six-inch stiletto heels belonging to the black patent-leather pumps she'd bought. From those shoes rose legs much sexier than the ones from the night before, clad in black fishnet stockings that vanished beneath the mid-thigh hem of the black PVC dress she wore. The dress with a low neckline that displayed quite a bit of cleavage, especially since it wasn't quite designed for her now-DDD-cup tits, which bulged at the top and threatened to spill all the way out.

From the hair that hung beside her face, she was now a blonde - wavy golden hair that hung well below her shoulders.

Of her bags of purchases, there was no sign - but at least she had her purse. A check of the watch she'd stuffed inside showed that she'd slept twelve hours straight - it was now five-thirty in the afternoon.

"Oh, fuck..." Kyle muttered, wincing at the new feminine voice that it came out in. Obviously, she'd been so 'zonked' that when some man's fantasies had reached enough power to activate her mind's new - and horrific - abilities, she hadn't even waken. Now, she was doing whatever it was he was fantasizing about, in the body he'd been fantasizing about.

She let her body get back up to speed - simply because she'd tried to stop completely, and the huge bolt of pain through her head had been too much to bear. Now, frightened, frustrated and disgusted, she could only obey this new implanted compulsion and let her altered, buxom-blonde body take her wherever it was she was going.

She found herself going to a building about a block away from where she'd 'waken up' - and going around the side, up to the back door, and knocking.

The tall, slightly budge guy who answered managed to get 'Can I...?' out before Kyle found herself pushing him back into the room, the door swinging shut behind her with a sound like a prison door slamming shut...

...as she pressed herself firmly against his body, her big new tits hard against his chest as she wrapped one fishnet-clad leg around his, her arms around his neck... and pressed her fuller new lips firmly against his.

His stiffened - in more ways than one - and then began to kiss back... exactly as he'd fantasized about doing on a very slow day in the electronics' supply house. Though startled, he wasn't going to argue when his perfect fantasy woman started kissing him hungrily. So, he kissed back... and reached around and began fondling her ass, which made her moan in pleasure, low in the back of her throat...

The moan was part of the man's fantasy... but the fact that it was also true disgusted Kyle.

Not nearly as much as the fact she was engaged in enthusiastic lip-lock with him, though - and loving it. It felt fantastic... mainly because he'd unknowing altered her mind. He wanted her to really, really enjoy kissing, and so her mind was helplessly altered so that kissing guys produced great physical pleasure for her... even though it utterly disgusted her.

What disgusted her even more than the frantic lip-lock was the thought of what he'd want to do after the kiss was done....

Everybody knows the term 'saved by the bell'. In Kyle's case, it was literal - the sound of the bell at the front counter ringing as a customer looked for attention.

The guy broke the kiss. "Oh - shit!" he swore, staring at her bounteous cleavage. "Uh.. I gotta go and.. uh. "

She helplessly smiled at him, just the way he wanted, and said the words he wanted to hear. "Go ahead, lover-boy. I promise... I won't start without you..."

She said it in a low, sensuous tone that made the guy begin to sweat. Gulping, he tried to minimize his erection as he scurried away, out the door into the front office...

...and the instant the door closed, Kyle was out the back door, hurrying as fast as her six-inch heels would allow.

The man's fantasies were obvious, and if she were still there when he came back in... The very thought made her shudder. She was saved by his own disbelief, though - part of him just couldn't believe she'd still be there when he got back, and so she was almost following a command to leave, to make his own self-doubt 'true'.

Even as she hurried away, however, she was trying to cope with the terrifying sensation of 'wanting' to kiss men. The guy's day-dream fantasy hadn't been very specific, at least not about certain things. He hadn't thought specifically about a girl who just enjoyed kissing him immensely - he wanted her to enjoy kissing, period. So, now Kyle did... sort of. Part of her very, very much wanted to find another man, even one not 'controlling' her unawares, and kiss the hell out of him - and that made the other part of her scream in horror.

The 'left over' commands were beginning to pile up... and it felt like her brain was slowly splitting in two. [part of it was her original, male brain - and the slowly growing part was the 'composite' brain of the women she'd become, and the ideas planted in her. These added up, one on top of the other, and created 'cravings' she didn't want, and new 'preferences' and 'pleasures' that she knew were utterly disgusting to her male mind... yet couldn't keep herself from feeling. Even now, the outfit she was wearing made her 'happy', though she hated wearing it just a little less than having a body that it could be worn on....

But what sickens and scares Kyle the most. is the fact that her unused 'abilities' are growing stronger as she uses them. At first, her

'powers' could only make relatively small changes. now, this body is completely different then her original one. Each transformation is less painful, and much faster...

...and the range of her telepathic powers are growing. When she'd fallen asleep last night, the man at the electronics supply house wouldn't have been able to effect her. Some time shortly before she awoke, however, her powers had extended enough that he'd come into range by coming a few feet closer, from the front of the shop to the back.

That was the thought that really scared her. She was still buffered from literally hundreds of urges every given second by the sheer number of 'transmissions' she was picking up - but the more powerful ones could 'break through'. and the scariest part was the fact that the most powerful ones were likely to be the most extreme. As her powers increased, so did the 'babble' in her head. and it would take more and more powerful fantasies to 'burn through' the mental static and affect her...

She had to get back to the hotel. She had to get back, now, and take the other serum. She had to...

...she had to go to the mall and buy some new clothing RIGHT NOW!

She was hurrying already... but she wished she could hurry faster. She really had to get to the mall and buy a nice red skirt and a matching...

"Wait a second..." Kyle said, still hurrying. "Wait a second! - What the hell...?"

The 'urge' hadn't been preceded by a noticeable 'burrowing' feeling - it had slid in as-neat-as-you-please, so much so that she'd very nearly missed her sudden, literal, 'change of mind' until she'd realized what she'd been thinking...

...but that didn't lessen the impact. She still had to do it. New fears wormed in her gut at how easily her power was functioning. In other circumstances, with her controlling it to do what she wanted to other people, she would have been overjoyed to have reached the level where thoughts could be 'slipped in' unaware.... but, in her situation, in scared the shit out of her...

Helplessly, she found herself flagging down a cab, whose driver cast appreciative looks at her that made her feel disturbingly 'good'. She ordered him, helplessly, to take her to the nearest mall, while she silently screamed in her mind to order him to take her to the hotel...

...an 'order' that refused to be followed. Meanwhile, she was beset by the man's half-formed daydreams about her, helplessly causing her to 'flirt' with him, choosing positions that best displayed her new charms.. but she wouldn't actually go as far as he might have wanted, because whatever 'fantasy' had started her trip to the mall was much stronger then the driver's idle fantasies, even if her was much, much closer. The fact that somebody's fantasy was that strong also scared the shit out of Kyle, but there was, quite literally, nothing she could do about it...

At the mall, she found herself knowing already what she 'wanted' - needed - to buy. Her strengthening power was making thoughts more 'clear' to her - and, partially, overriding her own, making it had to tell where one ended and the other began. Whereas, before, she'd had to look through the selection at the store to see what her unwilling 'urge' needed, now she knew what she had to buy. Quickly, she selected and paid for the items she needed... then found herself hurrying to a women's restroom and ducking into one of the stalls.

When she pushed the door to the bathroom open, she somehow expected somebody to start screaming, since she was, after a 'really' a man - but her 'disguise' was perfect, and nobody seemed to find anything odd about a buxom woman ducking into the bathroom.

Once inside the safety of the stall, she was in for another rude awakening, another example of her growing power...

Before, her body had changed the instant her mind had received the 'fantasy'. That was because it was all coming in below her conscious mind. Now the growing power was tied into her cognitive facilities... and it had kept the physical transformation from occurring while she was in the wrong clothes. Once in the stall, she helplessly found herself undressing - and as soon as she was naked, the change hit.

It was almost completely painless. She was able to stand stock-still, with no shivering or twitching, as the world seemed to grow around her - she was shrinking, something she'd more-or-less expected from the size clothing she'd purchased.

A cascade of golden curls fluttered to the floor as new, rust-red hair grew in long and straight on a skull that was in the process of reshaping itself. Her hips widened slightly.. and the weight on her chest grew even heavier as she felt her tits swell outwards, ever larger...

She was halfway through the happy thought 'Oh, wonderful, my boobs are getting bigger...' when she realized what she was thinking - and how 'happy' she was about it. Her skin crawled at the way her mind had reacted to the still-powerful command to enjoy 'showing off her tits' - and since bigger tits were even easier to show off, she'd been 'happy' about it...

Once the change was done, she dressed... wishing she could at least delay or hesitate, but it was harder to do then ever. It wasn't so much the pain acting as a deterrent... it was just plain harder to even send the signals to her body to pause. It was as if the conduits from her 'real' mind and her altered body were closing up... and when she finally did manage to make the effort to get the command through, then she was 'rewarded' with the burst of mind-numbing pain that made the whole thing an effort in futility in the first place.

She started with the lacy white panties. Drawing them up her 'cuter' new legs, she settled them in place over a vagina that now sported a patch of russet pubic hair neatly 'trimmed' - grown - in a disturbingly cute heart-shape.

Next, she pulled on the semi-opaque, white, thigh-high nylons, over which went a tight, bright-red skirt that just very barely covered the tops of the nylons when she was standing straight.

Next came a red spandex crop-top in nearly the exact same shade of red. Her new tits were the size of large melons and tipped with big, thick nipples, and the top hadn't really been designed to deal with breasts that size - one on, it left a whole lot of tit bare at the top, sides and bottom, barely street-legal.

The thrill she got at the idea that so little of her 'wonderful' new tits were covered didn't make her feel any better.

Over the ensemble went a white apron with a ruffle of lace around the edges. The apron tied at the neck and around her waist... but hung low enough not to hide her fantastic new cleavage.

Then She put a little frilly 'maid' cap in her long, red hair, which she pulled back into a ponytail. Smoothing the skirt over her hips in an unconscious gesture unknowingly 'copied' from one of the women in the bathroom, Kyle stepped into the red leather pumps with the gold-colored six inch heels.

Dumping the contents of her purse into a new, red-leather one, she added the remaining items from the bag to her new purse and just left her old belonging and clothes where they lay as she stepped out of the stall and walked up to the mirror to put on her make-up and simple gold-tone jewelry.

She was almost disgustingly cute. About five-two, she was very slightly on the 'pudgy' side... no, that wasn't true. She wasn't 'fat', just well padded, so she was super-cute and sexy, all in one. She had a heart-shaped face, with big lips that didn't need much help - just a light layer of clear gloss. Likewise, her huge green eyes just needed a hint of mascara and eyeshadow. Her milky white complexion needed no blush at all.

Her tits were big - damned big. But on her 'padded' body, they weren't overdone, but just perfect. She was a complete package of cute- and-sexy, vibrant and perky, right down to the smile...

...which was practically glued to her face, because she couldn't get rid of it.

With a 'cute and sexy' stride (stolen from a girl in the mall - she headed to the front doors, purse tucked under her arm, eyes meeting appreciative male gazes.. and lips widening her smile in acknowledgment, while Kyle was bashed on all sides by various unwanted pleasure at being openly admired. Inside, she struggled for a sense of mental balance, trying to find a way out of what was happening...

...and failing. Using a pay phone, she called another cab and was soon being dropped off at a residence in the suburbs. With the same damned walk, she headed up to the front door, feeling her confined tits jiggling with every step, despite the spandex enclosing them - there was enough breast-flesh there that they managed that feat.

Reaching the door, she simply let herself in, then walked confidently to Jake's room...

...stunned by the fact that she knew her 'fantasizer' by name...

...as she opened the door and entered the messy room, belonging to a shy twenty-year-old young man who still lived with his parents, and who (when reminded by a phone call from his Mom to have his room clean by the time she got home) was fantasizing about having a maid clean his room for him... and if there was going to be a maid in his room, she might as well still be there when he got home from his part-time job...

Now, her smile could slip - there was nobody there to see it. In fact, Kyle was able to curse loudly and at great length as she helplessly hurried to tidy up the room, knowing exactly where Jake liked each item put away, knowing exactly how he liked his room to look when it was fully cleaned...

Her cursing - in a sweet, Irish-accented voice - stopped suddenly a few seconds before she heard the sound of Jake unlocking the door...

...which gave her pause, even as she retreated silently to the bed and sat down, waiting helplessly. How had she gotten in? She'd just opened the door...

...and had noticed the slight 'ca-chunk' the instant she'd begun to turn the knob. She hadn't thought anything of it at the time... but now she realized it had been the sound of the lock releasing.

Even as her perky smile pasted itself on her face, she was shocked to realize that, under the force of her compulsion, other powers were coming to life. When she'd done her studying, she'd read about the connections between the different powers of the mind, but had ignored the ones that hadn't been of direct interest to her. Now, though, she saw that the shear force of her 'needs' were causing these dormant powers to life...

...like 'telekinesis'. She'd unlocked the door herself, with the power of her mind - simply because her sub-subconscious desperately, unwaveringly needed to get in the house to clean it.

The thought that more and more power was being marshaled on behalf of this horrible, horrific situation made her blood run cold...

...but it didn't show as Jake opened the door to his room, walked in - and stopped dead at the sight of her sitting on the bed, legs crossed at the knees, shoulders back to display more cleavage as she smiled at him.

Jake was a tall, lanky young man with curly black hair and dark, soulful brown eyes - eyes wide in astonishment, at the moment. "Wha...?" He tried, found the semi-formed word wasn't good enough, switched to "Who...", without any more success.

Helplessly, Kyle rose from the bed.

"I hope I did it right, Jake." She said in that cute, Irish accent. "I was in an awful hurry to be done a'fore ye got home, dontcha know..." "I..." Jake tried this time. When it didn't work, he tried. "You..."

"I wanted to get paid, y'see..." She said, still smiling, as she approached him. "Perhaps you should start with a kiss?"

She stopped, smiling at him, her head tilted up... and he just looked at her for a long, long moment - so long that she was horrified to find herself actually craving the kiss, not from his fantasy, but from her new, 'ingrained' love of kissing.

She rooted through his mind, half-unwillingly....

"It's all a dream, Jake." She told him, confidently. "It's still ten minutes before you wake up - it's 'last night', and you just dreamed all that happened today, like that guy givin' you a twenty-dollar tip. Now, ye'd better hurry and kiss me before you wake up. "

He still gaped at her, only half-sure. She could tell, because she was still 'reading' his mind, trapped in a fantasy that he desperately wanted... but unsure if it was real...

She reached out and touched his hand - and felt the power of his thought multiply ten times over, direct contact with his flesh strengthening the mental contact enormously...

...and, shocked, Kyle found herself 'pushing' a thought into his head. Just as he'd tried doing with women, when he'd first found the power - but unlike women, Jake's mind wasn't 'alien'. and the direct contact made it easier, though it was still like shoving a heavy weight out of the way...

...but it worked - Jake accepted the 'fact' that he was dreaming - and went ahead and bent down... the kiss was fantastic - because she was getting feed-back from his mind, the direct contact incredibly powerful as she knew, every instant, what exactly he wanted, and gave it to him. For him, it was the ideal kiss - and for her, it was horribly pleasant.

Finally, she broke the kiss.. and she smiled at him.

"Not long 'till the alarm, Jake." She said, sweetly. "Better hurry up if you want to get at my tits. "

Grinning, Jake quickly untied the apron and tossed it aside. Again, only half unwilling, Kyle lifted her own arms to allow him to pull off her crop-top, causing her tits to jiggle as the top was yanked off...

Then Jake was on his knees, his big, lean hands enclosing each massive globe of tit-flesh while his lips began to suck and lick one thick, engorged nipple.

Kyle moaned - and it wasn't feigned or forced, though it was exactly what Jake wanted to hear. It was genuine pleasure - and that scared her even more, for her tits were more sensitive than she'd thought, and his gently-yet-urgent ministrations to her globes were too pleasant for her own comfort.

"Yes, lad - that's fantastic..." She gasped. "Hurry, now - hurry..."

Still a virgin, Jake was hesitant about having sex, even in his fantasies. His fear of rejection, even in a dream, was great... but he had no problems with the thought of jacking off, and so he stood while she knelt down, and quickly whipped out a completely average cock...

Helplessly, Kyle smiled up at the young man looming over her well-endowed body, shivering with the pleasure she was proving herself as she fondled her own, round tits, watching Jake as he frantically yanked on his hard cock...

...until he came, aiming the stream of thick cum at her tits, spraying them with a short stream of heavy goo.

"Oh, that's wonderful, love..." she cooed, eyes closed in what was, horribly, only half-feigned pleasure as her hands massaged the cum into her tit-flesh, leaving her tits glistening.

Rising, she smiled up at Jake, her tits covered with his cum, and quickly pulled on the crop-top, leaving the apron where he'd tossed it. Turning, she headed out of the house...

...leaving behind a very confused young man who was just beginning to comprehend the fact that it wasn't a dream at all...

For her part, Kyle was trying very, very hard to cope with what she'd just done, and what was happening to her. After all, it was pretty damned obvious that she was being affected by stronger and stronger fantasies, ones formed not by the person nearest her, but by those with the most... powerful mental images of what they wanted. Her powers were rapidly increasing...

...and it all added up to something even more rapidly horrifying than anything she'd ever considered.

The thought of being turned into a woman had horrified her - and still did. But that would seem a kind fate in comparison to what was really happening. Being a 'woman' meant living a woman's life, however poorly or unwelcome - but she had no life, not right now. She wasn't a 'concrete' person with a 'real' existence...

...she was a sex fantasy. Her actions, her appearance - all were outside her control, and proscribed to very limited fields. She hadn't gone to the washroom since this had started, nor eaten - simply because nobody had 'imagined' her doing so, and she hadn't had enough time to herself to take care of these 'real life' situations. Like the night before, men's fantasies overrode everything, even her most basic instinct, like exhaustion - if she hadn't left the driver's sight it was quite possible that he could have imagined her walking long enough that it would literally be the death of her. She'd been exhausted... but unable to stop what she was doing.

She was starving. She could eat a horse, whole, cooked or raw... but she didn't have that option, because she'd found herself already under a compulsion as she left Jake's house, and was walking somewhere in specific, as quickly as she could. Though her gut was aching with hunger, she couldn't stop and eat - and she seriously doubted she could find somebody with a really, really strong fantasy about her eating a full meal.

She'd feared that if she didn't find a way to escape the slowly mounting effects of her new powers she'd be trapped a woman for the rest of her life, and it had seemed a fate worse than death - but now that death itself reared its ugly head, Kyle found that she wanted very much to live, even if she were doomed to spend the rest of her life as a woman.

It was the unknowns that were piling higher and deeper upon her slender new shoulders as she hailed a cab with the same, chipper smile.

Only now, in hindsight, could she every mistake she'd made - and the sheer arrogance of her original frame of mind. She was horrified and ashamed at what she'd become - but equally horrified and ashamed by what she'd been. This, after all, had been what she'd planned to do to women, to make them mere puppets to her male fantasies. Even when the first few changes had happened, she hadn't seen the poetic justice of what was happening to her: After all, they would be women with just a few changes, while she was a man turned female...

...except, now, she realized that the physical changes weren't the worst part. No, it was the mental changes, the lack of control. Here she was, a cute, buxom red-head in a cab, feeling her new tits shimmy with every bump in the car's ride, her long hair tickling the back of her neck, a thin coating of cool cum coating her huge new mounds... and she sat in the cab with an insipid grin on her face, apparently happy with her lot in life, on her way to a new 'fantasy' with an outwardly calm expression...

Never in her life had she wanted to simply scream in utter frustration. She couldn't display a single 'real' emotion, couldn't perform even the most basic, necessary actions except when 'permitted' by a simple lack of powerful fantasies, an outcome made unlikely by her growing powers. Yet... all of this was random, none of it intentional. Whereas, the complete and utter ass she had been had intentionally planned to inflict this onto women....

Now, her hopes were shrinking rapidly. With her stronger powers, the chances of finding 'dead time' to take care of her own needs, much less to take the serum, seemed increasingly small. If she survived the next twenty-four hours, there was no guarantee that she'd no longer have to obey men's fantasies - once the serum wore off, her own 'natural' talents might still have grown strong enough to lock her into this new life. Even if they didn't. she might not be able to change herself back into a man, not with all the added mental 'luggage' that was piling up in her head, making it harder and harder to find the will to change back.

She hated what she'd become, and hated what she'd been. She'd trapped herself in a situation of her own making, yet had no control over what she did - and while she was horrified by what she was becoming and what she was doing, she feared death even more...

Though her cute face in no way revealed her inner thoughts, she was lost in torment and fear as the cab pulled up to the destination she'd known to give it, and she smiled at the driver and paid him. with what was very nearly the last of the money in her wallet, yet another consideration that 'fantasies' didn't take into account.

Once more smoothing her skirt with that 'practiced' motion, Kyle headed for the door of the office buildings he found herself outside of, using that smooth, decidedly feminine gait she'd been 'cursed' with, moving atop the six-inch heels like and expert as she negotiated the revolving door...

...even as the door spun her into the lobby, Kyle understood what was coming, the reason why she was here, what fantasy she was to fulfill... and the pure horror, shock and fear that overwhelmed her like never before was actually enough to stop her dead in her stride, her face carved into a soundly scream of physical and emotional agony as the bright white pain of 'disobedience' flared, burning hot and clear in her mind, eating away at her like an acid...

One trembling foot took a step forward, eager to continue, to escape the pain... and then she stopped again, her expression of horror and agony increasing as she fought to keep control. The desperate intellectual need to turn and leave was so great that it met in even contest with the need to continue, holding her in place in a world of white-hot agony...

"Are you all right, miss?" A security guard asked, staring at her....

...and the instant of distraction he gave pushed the tide of battle in favor of her new urge.

"Just a very, very bad cramp in my calf." She said, sweetly. "It's going now - but, boy, did it hurt. "

The guard grinned in uncertain sympathy as she smiled sweetly at him and found herself heading towards the bank of elevators at the end of the lobby.

'No...!' She screamed at her disobedient mind, struggling to work up enough will to battle her actions. "I have to stop. This.. this is. '

The mere thought of what she was about to walk into was to horrible to contemplate, and she couldn't force herself to finish. Instead, she could only helplessly watch as she 'calmly' pushed the button that summoned the elevator, looking completely comfortable as she stepped into the small contrivance and watched the doors seal shut like the kneel off doom. Though the elevator was empty, she kept the same, calm smile on her cute new face as she hit the button that sent the elevator car climbing towards the penthouse far above... and herself down to the deepest depths of her own personal hell, all the while with her incapable of display any of the horror that filled her.

When the elevator slowed to the Penthouse level, she prayed, desperately, for the cable on the elevator to snap and send her plummeting twenty-three stories to blissful death...

Instead, the brass doors slid efficiently open, and she stepped out of the elevator with an apparently easy step.

The woman at the reception desk in the penthouse lobby was a spare, efficient-looking woman in an expensively conservative suit, her silver-shot blonde hair expensively styled. The gaze she gave the buxom form Kyle was currently wearing spoke volumes, and the tone of her voice only drove the impression home.

"Are you sure you have the right floor... Miss?"

"I'm here to see Douglas Terrill." Kyle said, which was true enough - but the '...so can you hand me that letter opener so I can slit my throat?' wouldn't come out.

The secretary looked her up and down, slowly. "Let me guess... you don't have an appointment, correct?" "No, I don't - but he'll want to see me." Kyle said, knowing it was the horrible truth.

"I'm sorry, Miss..." The receptionist said, icily...

Kyle still didn't have much ability to do anything with a woman's mind other than copy habits and skills - so, instead, she found herself reaching out and 'touching' Doug Terril's cold, orderly mind.

She didn't 'implant' any instruction - she spoke. In a mental voice as every bit as feminine as her vocal one.

"I'm a very buxom red-head standing in your reception area." She told the startled businessman. "Your receptionist is giving me trouble - and I think you definitely want to see me. Tell her to let me in."

"...but I'm afraid I can't possibly fit you in today - or any time this week..." The secretary was saying, with grim satisfaction...

...when the intercom buzzed, interrupting her.

"Gloria?" Doug's cool, controlled voice said over the intercom. "I'm expecting somebody today. I'm sure you won't be able to miss her when she comes in - she'd a rather... well endowed woman with red hair. When she arrives, send her right in, would you...?"

The secretary - Gloria - gaped at the intercom, then at Kyle. "Uh.. actually, she's here now, sir..." She said, her eyes narrowing and shooting daggers at the smugly smiling Kyle. She pushed a button, then gestured coolly at the doors to the inner office.

As she turned to enter the office of Douglas Terrill, Kyle made one, last desperate attempt to save herself from her fate, struggled to dash to the window of the reception area and throw herself through it - and only managed to hesitate for the briefest instant before walking into the office, closing the door behind her.

The office was huge, and seated behind the equally massive desk at the far end was a short, massively muscled man with short, sandy blonde hair and a very controlled expression, his cool eyes watching as Kyle gracefully crossed the expensive, deep-pile carpet towards him.

"You certainly have a... an intriguing way of announcing yourself, miss..." Doug's calm voice trailed off expectantly as Kyle finished crossing the broad expanse of expensive carpeting to stop in front of his desk. She continued smiling helplessly at him, while her mind gibbered in horror, remaining silent.

His eyebrow climbed slightly. "It's customary to give your name when somebody does that, you know - verbally, or by... other methods."

"I can't give you my name..." The woman said, the one that used to belong to her now utterly inaccessible for means of identifying herself. Coming into his presence had made sure of that. "You haven't told me what it is yet."

The eyebrow rose even higher. "I beg your pardon?"

"I can see into your mind." She told him. "I know your greatest fantasy - to find somebody who you can control, completely and utterly. Somebody who you can have utter domination over - and I am your fantasy."

The words tasted like ashes in her mouth as she gave her life away to him - but she couldn't stop herself from doing it.

She'd become disgusted by the man she'd used to be - but her old attitude didn't hold a candle to this man's dark soul. He had no compunctions, no conscience. The only thing that kept him from trying to live his depraved fantasies of domination was his equally towering intellect, which was logical enough to see the outcome if he failed to fetter his desires.

Now.. now she had no choice. His dark desire to dominate a person's life completely was the most powerful fantasy for miles and miles - and so she was forced to fulfill it, to give herself over to him.

"I'm not quite sure I understand..." Doug said, thoughtfully, his brows knitting as he considered the implications of what she'd said. "Maybe you'd better explain it to me. Everything."

She had no choice but to obey. Even as she felt herself slipping into panic, struggling - in vain - to escape this fate before her, she told him every detail of what had happened to her, every single instant since she'd managed the first contact with another mind - everything. In exquisite detail...

...because she transmitted it all directly to his mind, without words, so there was not the slightest chance of doubt or misunderstanding. In the space of a few minutes she transferred all the pure, intellectual memories to him, stripping them of her emotions and bias, just giving him the raw, factual data to assimilate.

The brows climbed even higher as the new knowledge poured into his brain, and he began to consider it in light of his own, utterly heartless desires. Slowly, he began to smile - the smile that might be a diver's last sight as the shark dove in for the kill...

"This could be.... interesting..." her murmured, unholy lust lighting his eyes despite his calm voice - and the look he gave her made her shudder inside. "I'd like to see you change. Like this..."

He didn't have to describe it - in that instant, the woman who had once been Kyle knew what he wanted - and so, unwilling as she was, she gave it to him.

She shuddered only briefly, the transformation coming disturbingly easy to her.

She stayed the same height, but felt the wide, voluptuous hips of the 'maid' narrowing even as the large, round breasts on her chest shrunk in on themselves. The russet ponytail her hair had been pulled into dropped to the carpeted floor lightly as her head remained gleaming bald under the mellow light of the lamps in the room.

In the space of a few seconds she'd gone from very well-endowed to slender and elfin, almost sexless. Not 'neuter' or 'genderless', for she was most definitely female, from her slender, triangular face with its huge, doe-like eyes to her supple body. No, she just wasn't 'sexy', not even a little bit. Just female.. and almost unreal. The crop-top, seconds ago too tight, now hung as baggy on her chest as her skirt did on her hips.

Doug grinned, unpleasantly. "Wonderful. I think that will do until I'm ready to decide on which form you will wear Submissa."

"Yes, master. Thank you, master." Submissa replied. well, submissively, eyes downcast - just the way she knew he wanted her too.

The odd thing was - it was an act. sort of. There were layers upon layers here. He knew that she was doing it only because she knew that it was what he wanted - but they both knew that she was doing what he wanted, whether she wanted to or not - and that's what got him off. He could have had her acting dominating, and it still would have been 'submissive', because it would be her doing what he wanted, regardless of what the outside world might see.

Which made her the ideal slave. She could appear strong and self-confident, if he so wished, showing the world a facade. while he ruled her completely in her mind...

"Is there anything you don't like on your pizza, Submissa?" Doug asked.

"Yes, master." She said, quietly. "Your slave does not like Anchovies or Olives. "

Doug called his secretary - and ordered her to order a pizza, double anchovies and olives, and a two-liter bottle of pop. Giving his new, helpless slave some instructions, Doug waited until the pizza arrived and had Submissa hide in his huge, private bathroom while he paid for it - then gave his secretary the rest of the day off.

Handing her the pizza box and the pop, Doug made sure she understood his instructions, then left on some errands.

The newly christened 'Submissa' struggled to break out of the horror she found herself in, locked into a 'slave' mode to a man with dark, evil desires. She hoped against hope that the fact he wasn't present in person would give her enough leeway to escape.. or kill herself...

...but the commands he'd given her were as powerful as any other, and maintained that power unless directly countermanded. Instead, she could do nothing but obey his commands.

First, she ate. She took her first bite of the pizza. and almost felt like vomiting at the disgusting flavor. She couldn't stop herself from eating, though...

...and, as per his commands, with every bite the flavor became less and less distasteful.

By the time she finished the entire pizza, it was the most wonderful food she'd ever tasted. The fact that his commands had caused her brain to alter her perceptions and taste buds to make it so didn't in any way lessen the fact that the flavor she'd hated just moments ago was pure ambrosia to her.

After she finished eating, washing the pizza down with some pop, she used the toilet, and then showered in his private shower, wishing she could sob as her hands traveled over her slight, girlish figure, knowing that this was merely Doug's 'stretching exercises', getting a feel for her powers - and, by fiat, his new powers, since she was his complete and utter slave. The fact that she was horrified and disgusted by the fact was wonderful to Doug. It was what he wanted - and, in her, had found something that would not have otherwise existed, no matter how submissive a 'real' woman might make herself through fear, greed or brain-washing.

She heard him return some time later - and he wasn't alone. Just as he'd told her, he'd brought 'a couple of guys' back with her - and, by being able to see into his twisted mind, she already knew what he had planned.

Doug opened the door to the bathroom and handed her a couple of bags.

"You know what to do." He told her, and she nodded submissively, hated, disgust and fear roiling inside her helpless mind. He left her to get ready, and she had no choice but to do so.

She started with the black leather pants. Still naked after her shower, she stepped easily into the pants, her lithe body and coltish legs not coming close to filling the garment, which hung loose and long....

...until she began to change.

Her legs grew longer, more toned and shapely while her hips widened to womanly curves, though not as voluptuous as before. Her ass, however, returned to its previous glory, once more becoming mind-boggling...

...a fact made all the more obvious by the skin-tight pants that now fit her incredibly long, shapely legs and spectacular ass like a second skin.

In her case, it wasn't just a figure of speech. She was able to do something nobody else could - grow right into the pants so they fit absolutely, perfectly taut, an effect usually only achieved with liquid latex, but she did it with gleaming, expensive leather.

Next, she took the black leather belt and cinched it around her nearly infinitesimal waist. Then she reached for the black leather 'crop- top' he'd gotten for her at a very special store that catered to big-bust strippers. Pulling it around her skinny chest, she willed her breasts to grow - and grow they did, rapidly swelling under the garment, growing ever larger. They went from conical little mounds to domes - and then right on up into spheres, passing the sizes she'd 'worn' already, until they strained the garment to the limit. They were huge, like a pair of medicine balls, with large nipples crammed painfully tight against the inside of the garment she wore.

Next, she let long, golden-blond hair spill down from her scalp as she took make-up out of the bag and began to work on a face that changed even as she applied the make-up.

Gloss-red lipstick soon coated incredibly full, pouty lips - one's 'cribbed' directly from Angelina Jolie, via Doug's imagination. A lot of the rest of her face was also 'stolen', this time from playmate Anna Nicole Smith - but in her younger, thinner days, giving her face an imperiously beautiful, sexy cast, like a sexual challenge to every man she came across. Her new eyes were bright, ice blue, making her look like a sensual Nordic Ice Goddess, a wordless statement that no man was man enough to handle her. She didn't look the least bit

'submissive' as she stepped into the black platform shoes with their nine-inch-high stiletto heels... but, inside, where it really mattered, she was merely playing out a script from Doug's mind.

With an incredible, challenging, sensual stride that was equal parts of skill stolen from a fashion model and a stripper, she left the bathroom, pausing in the doorway for an instant as if coldly considering something, pretending to be unaware of the room's occupants while they had a chance to take in her tall, luscious body with its long legs, tiny waist and huge tits.

Doug was sitting at the desk - and he was watching the other two men more than her. The one on the right was dressed in a bland gray suit, a fussy-looking man with a receding hairline and gold-rimmed glasses. The other man was wearing a Saville Row jacket over a white turtle-neck sweater and a pair of tan slacks, looking almost like a GQ model.

Slowly, sensuously, still not directly acknowledging anybody else, Submissa strode across the room to the bar and poured three ounces of Scotch into a glass, no ice. Slowly, she ankled her way across the room...

...to Thomas Greenly, Jr., the accountant in the boring suit.

"A drink, Mr. Greenly?" She asked, her voice husky, sensual, and faintly scornful.

"I really shouldn't, but..." He replied, mildly, accepting the scotch - and downing it all in one, smooth belt...

...which was Submissa's doing.

This was all sort of a test. Greenly was a devoutly religious man, in a small religion that, among other things, forbid the drinking of hard alcohol. She'd reached into his mind and 'pushed' some thoughts... and now he would be a compulsive drinker.

She hadn't changed his beliefs, though. Thomas would be compelled to drink - and feel extreme guilt with every swallow, even as he did now.

"Is there anything else I can do for you, Mr. Greenly?" She asked, sensuously... and the accountant blushed, furiously.

"Uh, well. " He stammered, awkwardly, eyeing her lush body and then looking down at his crotch, where his erection was clearly visible. "I, uh.. I'd love a blow-job. "

"Of course..." She murmured, disgusted with herself as she slowly, sensuously knelt before Greenly and unzipped his fly....

Greenly was a married man. A very happily married man. One who would never have considered cheating on his wife in any way... without some 'help'.

Helpless to stop herself, Submissa leaned forward and slowly licked Greenly's cock up and down, covering it in warm spittle.. then took it into her mouth and began giving Thomas the blow-job of a lifetime, using skills copied from five different women.

As she sucked at his cock, tongue swirling over the head, Submissa was utterly sickened by her actions. Doug wanted it that way. He'd not only let her keep her disgust at the 'homosexual' act of sucking a man's cock, he'd reinforced it - the act felt disgusting, emotionally and physically, her brain altered to make sure she hated the feel and taste of a cock in her mouth as much as she now loved anchovies and olives.

None of this showed as she slurped away at his cock, seemingly content to give him a blow-job forever, while her stomach churned in disgust. Disgust the redoubled when he came, dumping a load of hot jizz into her 'willing' mouth.

She swallowed, moaning as if it were the most wonderful tasting substance in the world - when, thanks to Doug, it tasted and felt like battery acid sliding down her throat.

Then she backed away and smiled at the other man, Dirk Dirgo.

Dirk was staring at her, lust rampant in his eyes and on his face. His eyes were riveted on her huge tits, and he was panting as her rhythmically squeezed-and-released the crotch of his pants, where his cock was already hard as a rock...

...which was all very strange for him, since - until a few minutes ago - Dirk had been gay. Now, however, his sexually desires had done an abrupt turn-around... and he was lusting painfully over the huge-breasted woman before him.

"Damn, bitch..." He gasped, a far cry from his usual, dryly humorous eloquence. "You lookin' damn fine! I gotsta get my hands on them huge hooters, honey! I gotta get me some o' that pussy...!"

Unlike Greenly, Dirgo didn't feel any guilt or confusion at his lusts for her... because, at Doug's instructions, she'd completely altered his outlook, and Dirk didn't even realize that he was now, mentally, a 'dumb sexist pig'. Now, the once intelligent homosexual was focused only on big tits and sex, and would be for the rest of his life... and not even realize he'd changed, thinking it was completely natural.

"Well, if that's what you want..." Submissa told him, and he grinned and unzipped his pants as she slowly, sensuously undressed, shrinking herself ever-so-slightly to get the garments off quickly and easily, then returning to the original dimensions of her new body.

With an apparently willing expression, she walked over, clad only in her heels, and straddled the chair, balancing on her tip-toes as she reached down and gripped the base of Dirk's exposed cock. Dirk was already busy, filling his hands with as much taut tit-flesh as he could.

Positioning herself above his cock, Submissa screamed deep in her mind as she let her heels drop.. and impaled herself on his hard, throbbing cock.

Her long, toned legs began to flex, driving herself up and down oh Dirk's throbbing cock, while he continued to play with her tits. She made all the sounds of pleasure, but they were 'faked' by her desires to fulfill the fantasy... Doug had made sure that she wouldn't find enjoyment from sex. Like sucking cock, she found sex with a man disgusting, emotionally and physically, even as she fucked Dirk with every indication of intense enjoyment.

It was the last, final touch of 'domination' in the situation - because she already knew that having any sexual contact whatsoever with Doug himself would be unbelievably, incredibly pleasurable. His cum would taste like ambrosia to her, his cock able to give her multiple orgasms by the score...

...yet his 'kink' was domination, not actual sex. He wasn't truly attracted to her, sexually - but she also knew that he'd give her pleasure if she earned it. Earned it by doing something willingly. Oh, willing or not, she'd still have to do whatever he wanted... which made it that much more tempting to just give in and do it willingly...

...and it made it that much harder to force herself to try and resist, even though she had no chance at succeeding.

She screamed out a completely faked 'orgasm' as Dirk spurted a load into her virgin pussy, 'breaking her in'... to the disgust and horror, both natural and reinforced, that came to her from having fucked a man, with every sign of having done so willingly and happily.

She climbed off of Dirk and stood naked, cum slowly creeping down her leg as the two mentally altered men rearranged their clothing and left... having each 'decided' never to mention any of this to anyone, ever.

"Beautiful, Submissa..." Doug said, and she lowered her head, the 'Ice Goddess' melted before the hellish heat of her Master. "Thank you, master..." She said - even as she saw into his mind, seeing the plans he had for his new, powerful slave...

J. Robert Chesterton felt a cold, vicious pleasure as he flipped through his Rolodex for the right number.

"I hope you enjoyed your run of luck, Doug..." Bob said, victoriously. "Because I've got your number on this deal. You're screwed..." The businessman reached for the phone - then paused.

"Oh, shit - I almost forgot!" Bob swore, looking at the expensive Cartier watch he wore. He'd have to make the call later - he was late.

Jumping up, the tall, handsome man with the silver-shot black mane of hair grabbed the coat off the coat rack and slipped it over his expensive suit, hurrying out of his office with a quick stream of instructions to his secretary, who wrote them down in efficient short-hand, use to this sort of thing...

...except for the '...and next time, remind me of my appointments! I'm nearly late for this one!"

Confused, she looked at the empty appointment book in front of her as her usually well-organized employer vanished from sight.

Tapping his foot impatiently, Bob mentally urged the cab-driver to go faster. He was running so late he couldn't even wait for his personal limo to be pulled around - he'd just grabbed a cab.

Finally, the cab pulled up in front of a windowless brick building, and Bob hurriedly paid the man and ducked out, walking quickly towards the unmarked door of the building at the rear.

He reached it at just about the same time as some old wino did, the drunk walking with a frantic attempt at balance, urgency written in his every move. Bob held the door for the wino, following the smelly old man into the darkened interior of the building with another anxious glance at his watch.

The two men hurried into the changing room just off the hallway and began to undress. Bob finished first, then noticed how much trouble the drunk was having, despite the obvious urgency to undress he was feeling. Impatiently, Bob helped him out of his grimy clothes, then they ducked into the shower and turned on the water.

Bob was already pretty clean, just needing to wash off the masculine cologne he was wearing - but the wino was filthy. Sighing, Bob impersonally helped the wino shower, cleaning his back and legs.

They stepped out of the shower and each went into a small, plastic-walled booth where warm air was ducted in, drying them head-to-toe pretty quickly, aside from leaving their hair a trifle damp. They stepped out of the booths simultaneously...

...and Bob stared. It was like looking into the mirror. A minute before, a drunken wino had entered that booth - and yet, impossible, the man who now emerged from it was a dead ringer for Bob in every detail.

"What the fuck...?" Bob gasped - then, glancing around in sudden confusion. "Hey, where the hell am I...? Why did I..."

Confused, stunned, Bob tried to react... but found himself sort of held immobile, able to move slightly, even look around - but not leave...

..as Doug Terrill entered the room, followed by...

'Tammy?' Bob stammered, staring at the way his 21-year-old daughter was hanging off of Terrill, smiling lustfully.. while one hand lightly stroked the bastard's crotch...

"Hi, daddy..." Submissa said in the man's daughter's voice, even as she finished copying his memories into the new 'Bob'.

Her power was phenomenal now - more than enough to reach halfway across the city to get the man to come here. After all, Doug was keeping her supplied with the second serum, the one that enhanced her 'transmission' powers...

...and he was taking it as well, making his mental 'voice' thunderous, ensuring he had total control over her every action - but not her thoughts. Though it had been more than three weeks since she'd been enslaved to him, she was still every bit as horrified and disgusted by the situation she found herself in.

Finished with the new version of 'Bob', she watched the once-drunk dress in the clothes the 'real' Bob had recently stripped off. This version of the businessman would appear identical in every way to the original - but secretly be a 'stooge' for Doug.

Doug, of course, could have had Submissa simply alter the original Bob to be that way... but he preferred to do it this way, getting his male enemies down here and giving some bum their old life while he did something more.. 'constructive' with the original, getting great pleasure from knowing he was doing it to the 'real McCoy', while utterly safe from any legal ramifications, even if something should happen to Submissa that would keep her from being able to 'dissuade' investigations. After all, how could he be charged with anything when 'Bob' would be the first to 'grudgingly' defend 'that bastard' in court?

"What... what the fuck...?" bob stammered, now that Submissa had let the wool fall from his eyes. Bob was confused and a little afraid - but that was nothing compared to the way he'd soon feel.

"Oh, Daddy..." She said, Doug enjoying torturing Bob with the image of his daughter turned 'traitor'. "You're in for a treat..."

Bob gaped at his daughter, not understanding what he hell she could possibly see in Doug Terrill, much less how she could do this to him...

..when he was consumed with a sudden need to open one of the lockers. He tried to fight it, but it was impossible. He had to do it. He reached out to open the locker...

...even as he felt his body shudder and writhe.

Helplessly, stunned and shocked, he began to pull on the clothes over the new body he wore.

The skimpy white panties were pulled up his hairy, muscular, rock-hard legs and were barely able to contain his massive, bulging cock. The skimpy white-and-pink skirt looked silly on his muscular hips, and the matching half-sweater with the big 'F' in the center looked equally ludicrous on his broad, hairy new chest.

He could barely cram his big, masculine new feet in the white platform 'hooker' shoes, and the wig looked utterly ridiculous atop his broad, handsome, manly face - even more so after he applied garish pink lipstick to his thin new lips.

Within the space of a few minutes, he was finished, looking at his reflection in the mirror in horror he could not display.

He'd become a muscular young man, almost a stereotype 'College Football' guy, dressed in an very ill-fitting cheerleader's costume.

Turning, Bob found that Doug had transformed as well, becoming another 'College Stud' - and he was wearing an actual football uniform.

"Come on." The new Doug said in his new voice - and, horrified and confused - Bob found he had no choice but to follow Doug down the hall, through a door...

..and into the huge, empty warehouse, now converted into sound stages.

Helplessly, bob followed Doug over to a set that was a prototypical 'haunted house' sort of thing. Helplessly, his muscular new body got into position as the director shouted at him...

...and, at the word 'Rolling!', Bob found himself 'acting'.

"Damn, dude - I feel like a fuckin' faggot!" Bob said in a disgusted ton of voice, following Doug into the 'room'. "Why couldn't you e the 'girlfriend', Josh?"

Doug/'Josh' laughed. "C'mon, Steve - it's a costume party, and you got cut from the team for screwin' the coach's daughter." "Fuck, man - the other guys are gonna rag me 'bout this for years..." Bob/'Steve' sighed, rolling his eyes.

"Not if we find the coolest thing for this 'treasure hunt' contest. We get one of the three best, we get to order one of the other's around. Maybe we'll get luck and Tracy n' Linda will loose. Man, I'd love to get my hands on Linda's rack."

"They're too fuckin' big, man." Bob helplessly snorted. "More'n a handful's wasted..." He sighed. "Damn, these panties are ridin' up somethin' fierce..."

He stopped to adjust the panties.. while 'Josh' walked over to examine something on the shelf, something that looked kind of like a human skull, except with an elongated jaw and what looked like Ram's horns screwed into it."

"Look at this - it's sure to win..." 'Josh' said, reaching out to grab it...

...and there was a flash-bank effect triggered under it, making it look as if it had 'jolted' Doug with energy of some sort.

"Shit, man...!" 'Steve' said.. then reeled back and slammed into the wall of the set in horror and shock that was only half-feigned...

..as Doug's body began to change. Slowly, it began to grow, it's already massive musculature rippling and swelling, tearing his clothes asunder as he slowly grew broader and taller...

...and his skin began to take on a reddish hue. He screamed in pain, a sound that Dopplered down into lower registers, bending over and grabbing his face...

...and the scream slowly faded over into a deep, rumbling chuckle - and when 'Josh' straightened, he'd become a seven-foot-tall, massively muscled demon, with huge horns thrust from his head, glowing red eyes...

...and a huge, thick cock thrust from his crotch like a battering ram. "Now this.. this is power...!" The being said in a deep, hellish voice. "Josh..." Bob gasped, helplessly. "Is.. Is that you, man...?"

"Yes - and no..." The demon chuckled. "I am Josh - and much, much more. Now all the powers of hell flow through my veins, Mortal..." It rather obviously eyed Bob up and down.

"..so I might as well use it. Since you're so unhappy with how that looks on you, why don't I help you.. Staci..."

"Wha...?" 'Steve' gasped.. then he cried out as he slammed himself back against the wall again, this time making it look as if it were from an unseen force...

...and studio crew activated a pre-set effect that cased 'wires' to rip through the 'old' plaster wall and grip his arms.

"What - what are you doing!" 'Steve' screamed, looking as if he was struggling frantically... when, helplessly, he was being careful not to break the actually fairly weak 'effect'.

Then, step by step, his body began to change to fit the uniform...

It was slow - and painful. Horribly painful. He was allowed to show his agony as his body changed - but was helplessly careful not to 'break free' as he became an incredibly sexy, vapid-looking woman with a huge head of platinum-blond hair and full, soft lips. Tits grew under the sweater, good C-cup endowments - while his cock was sucked inward to form a tight new cunt.

Bob/'Staci' screamed, staring down at her new body. "Nice." The demon rumbled. "Now - dance for me, Staci..."

"No fucking way... holy shit!" She shouted.. as she was released from the wires and began to senselessly dance, a shocked look on her face.

"I.. I can't stop!" She cried, horrified.

"I know. You must obey me. Now.. show me your ass, Staci..!"

Still swaying sensuously, she bent over so her tiny skirt revealed her firm, sexy new ass, which she fondled. Then she stood up and continued to dance.

"Not bad - but you know I like big tits." The demon said. "I think I know how to fix that. Come here and suck me off...!"

"Nooo...!" She screamed - even as her body obeyed. A horrified look of helplessness on her new face, the new woman walked over and sank to her knees..

"Oh, God, Josh - don't make me umph...!" Her begging was cut short as her full, new lips parted and she took the head of the massive cock into her new mouth and began to suck him off...

When he came, enormous amounts of cum gushed from his giant cock, bulging her cheeks impossibly as the disgusting liquid gushed down her throat...

...and the more it gushed, the bigger her tits grew, as if the cum were flowing directly into them. They swelled large and large, filling the sweater.. until the garment began to creak.

Specially made, it did as it was designed to so, slowly ripping at the front and sides.. then bursting apart, revealing her new, impossibly huge tits. The size and shape of medicine balls, they were tipped with enormous, thick, erect nipples...

"Shit, man - these special effects are awesome..." Dave said to Marty, staring at the TV screen as the latest release from the new XXX- rated studio 'Fantasy Video' played on the screen. Unlike most porns, these ones actually had plots (usually heavy into horror, BDSM, TG and the like), and incredibly real-looking special effects. "What is t - computer graphics, dya'think?"

"Who cares?" Marty snorted. Dave was rambling because he was uncomfortable with the fact he was getting turned on by a scene where a guy got turned into a girl and fucked - but it was just a movie. The girl actress was fucking hot, and that's all Marty cared about.

Entranced, the two young men watched as the new 'Staci' was forced to obey the new demon and go seduce and fuck another guy.. so that the demon could 'enslave' him as well...

As he watched another TG-transformation, this one much longer and more detailed, Marty had to admit that Dave was right, though - this shit was so well done that it almost looked real...

One Strange Night

By Gunslinger

"Goddamn..." John swore without any heat, peeling his soaked-through windbreaker off over his shaved head. Hanging the dripping garment on an oak coat-rack just inside the door, the skinny, but well-toned, man stepped deeper into Chris' 'apartment', the renovated first floor of an old Victorian home.

With the small space between the two sets of doors finally free, Greg quickly stepped inside. The broad, if somewhat sagging porch outside had protected him from the cold, heavy rain - but not from the bitter, driving wind.

"I hope you had a good reason to get us out on a night like tonight..." Greg said, taking off his beige trench-coat and hanging it next to John's jacket.

"Sure do..." Their 'host' said, grinning boyishly - the only way the six-foot-nine blond knew how to grin. Tall, broad-shoulders and bulky, the tow-headed farmboy nevertheless never managed to quite look threatening. His round, open face with its bright blue eyes and short shock of wheat-blond hair gave the impression of a cheerful, mischievous boy - despite the fact that he was nearly thirty. Even the small, thin goatee he'd grown didn't do much to ameliorate the 'Dennis the Menace' look he had, especially with his blond crew-cut.

Muttering, Greg wiped the water out of his carefully-groomed beard, then started trying to do something with his rain-slicked mass of dark chestnut hair - until he caught sight of the sly grin on John's face, the water simply beading on his equally clean shaven face and scalp.

Pointedly, Greg looked down at John's soaked jeans and black T-shirt, then gave a smug smile as he smoothed his own, completely dry black collarless button-down shirt and charcoal-gray slacks.

Chris, dressed comfortably in an old pair of red jogging shorts and a well-deserved muscle shirt, watched this silent 'argument' with another grin, as it was yet another in a long string of such exchanges. The three of them had been friends since grade school, and half the time they didn't even bother with speaking, already knowing damned well what any of the others might have said, anyway.

"So..." Chris said, in a theatrically innocent tone....

...as he slid open the drawer of the desk near the door, and extracted a small Ziploc bag full of a dried green substance. John and Greg shared a look - and grinned.

"I thought Jenny didn't like you using, not even occasionally..." Greg said, thick eyebrows rising as Chris dug out a few other items from the drawer.

"Yeah, well, we broke up.." Chris said, with a shrug, as he lit a couple sticks of incense and put them near the door. "Oh, man - sorry to hear that..." John said.

"No big deal." Chris said. "It just didn't work out. First of all, she didn't like you guys at all..." "Really..?" Greg said, surprised.

"Yeah - she thought you were a 'know-it-all', and John is a 'bad influence'." Chris explained. John grinned. "Okay, so she's perceptive, I have to give her that. Lousy taste, though..." Greg chuckled.

"Anyway, I guess we're supposed to still be friends or whatever." Chris said, sitting on couch on the living room and opening the bag. He paused to take a deep whiff of the marijuana's strong, heady odor, then continued: "She actually gave me this as a 'parting gift' - though, with her views on it, God only knows how she knew where to buy some."

With surprising dexterity, his blunt fingers began the task of rolling a joint.

"So - where'd she go?" Greg asked, cocking his head. "A hotel, until she finds a place...?"

"Naw..." Chris said, pausing to lick the paper. "I told you that these three guys she knows to move in the apartment upstairs last week, didn't I? She's staying with them tonight. Weird bunch o' guys though, into the occult and shit."

"I don't think we're anyone to be judging 'weird'..." Greg pointed out.

"I know what you mean..." Chris admitted, grinning, as he handed out two of the three joints he'd rolled, reserving the last for himself. "Okay, boys..." He announced, grandly, "Let's get baked...!"

* * * * *

Flushing the toilet, John turned and walked over to the sink and began washing his hands...

...and found the sight of the flowing water splashing over his hands, much less the sensation, nearly hypnotic.

Finally, finishing the otherwise simple task, John dried his hands on the towel beside the wall-mounted mirror. Catching his own reflection in the mirror, he grinned lazily at the red eyes that peered vaguely back at him.

Suddenly, a strange 'tickling' sensation ran across his scalp - almost as if a horde of ants had suddenly decided to swarm across it. Frowning, John blinked, trying to will the weird sensation away - but it only intensified...

When John opened his eyes, he was amazed to see the 'ants' - except it wasn't black, but red, like fire ants...

...and it wasn't ants - but hair.

Hair that was sprouting rapidly from his head.

"What the fuck...!" John shouted, as the hair continued to grow longer and longer, the bright coppery-orange color of hair he hadn't seen since he'd started regularly shaving his head, mainly as a defense mechanism after all the 'carrot top' jokes.

It was as if the hair had decided to come back - with a vengeance, Even as he stared, incredulous, at his reflection, the hair continued to grow at a rapid rate, spilling down off of his head...

"Holy fucking shit...!"

* * * *

Exchanging a startled glance at the shout, Chris and Greg pushed themselves into full sitting positions. "John...?" Chris shouted. "Are you okay, man...?"

Suddenly, Greg gasped - and pointed.

"Shit, man - your hair is growing...!" Greg said. Chris was staring back. "Yours too, man...!"

* * * *

Having staggered back from the mirror, John was braced against the opposite wall, making small, incoherent sounds in the back of his throat as he stared at his reflection.

More than a foot's worth of shiny, coppery hair had spilled from his scalp. Though the growth had stopped, his face was now surrounded with a shining, silky mane of gently wavy hair that hung just shy of his shoulders.

"Holy shit!" He breathed, wide-eyed and confused. He started to reach up, to see if it was, in fact, real...

...then cried out again, as he saw what else had changed.

* * * *

Greg, however, barely heard Chris' exclamation - he was too busy staring at the finger that he'd pointed. The finger whose nail - like the other nine - was growing.

It didn't grow very much - 'only' about two inches...

"Greg.. Your hair..." Chris was stammering, his boyishness finally lost in the face of the impossible. "Your finger nails...!" At the sound of his friend's voice, Greg found his attention jerked to Chris...

...who was staring at his own fingernails, which were about a half inch longer than Greg's. Greg, however, was staring at his friend's head.

"Shit..." Greg - who didn't like to swear - swore. "Your hair..! It's long, and.. it looks like a.. a girl's!"

Chris' head snapped up - which caused his long, shining mane of blonde hair to swirl around his shoulders and fall to the middle of his back.

"So does yours...!" Chris exclaimed.

Instinctively - and stupidly - Greg actually tried to 'look up' at his own hair...

...and felt his mane of long, silky chestnut hair brush the top of his ass.

"Holy fucking god-damned shit!" The man who rarely swore said, vehemently. "Amen." Chris agreed.

* * * *

John threw open the door to the bathroom, his inch-longer nails not interfering with the action, despite the fact that they felt 'talon-like' to him.

"Guys..!" He shouted, surprised to hear panic had driven his voice up an octave. "Guys, my hair..." He was hurrying down the hall...

...when he went sprawling.

"What the hell is going..." Chris started to ask - only to stop dead when Greg gasped again. Following the stunned man's gaze, Chris looked down...

...and his own eyes widened at the sight of the 'classic' black pumps that now enclosed his feet, unnoticed because - sitting - he wasn't trying to stand on the heels that extended three and a half inches in a classic slender cone.

"Shit - my shoes..." Greg said, yanking his eyes from his friend's feet to his own...

Stunned, John stared uncomprehendingly down at the knee-high leather boots now encasing his lower legs and feet. Reaching out, he grabbed the boot and wrenched at it...

..and again...

...and again...

...and then tried the other one - with no more success. It was as if the boots were glued to his feet.

"Guys.." He said, plaintively. "Help..."

"We.. can't..." Chris responded, his own voice tight and higher pitched than usual.

Using the wall for both balance and leverage, John managed to get himself upright atop the four-inch heels his new footwear boasted, and slowly began making his way down the hall...

"It won't come off, either...!" Greg said, tugging futilely at the black platform shoes, with their three-inch inwardly-sloping platforms and ten-inch heels. "Chris, it's stuck!"

"Mine.. too.." Chris grunted, his upper body strength letting him pull on the immobile footwear to the point of physical pain. The shoes looked more than a little silly on him - not only were they huge 'boats', to fit his big, wide feet, but his tattered athletic socks poked out of them...

..except, even as he tugged on the shoes, that changed.

"What the fuck is going on...?" Chris demanded, as he yanked his hands away from his shoes...

..and watched in mounting horror as his socks lengthened, as if being stretched upwards on his legs, becoming ever thinner...

...until a pair of black, back-seamed nylons enclosed his legs right up to where his jogging shorts ended. Nylons that enclosed muscular, masculine legs - that were as smooth and silky in texture as that of any woman. Just then, a gasp drew his attention - and Chris' head snapped up to look at...

"John...?" He asked, incredulously, staring at the slender young man...

...who had long, silky copper hair, and was dressed in black leather micro-miniskirt that matched the knee-high boots that started after a stretch of smooth legs.

"What...?" Greg gasped, in a near sob. "What's happening to us...?"

The slightly pudgy young man was clad in a pair of tight, black spandex 'hot pants' - ones that revealed the fishnet stockings that covered the legs that led down to his platform shoes. He was trying to tear the skirt off - with about as much success as he'd had with the shoes.

Chris had the funny feeling he'd have just about as much luck at removing the black denim mini-skirt that had replaced his shorts when he wasn't looking.

However, since he was looking now, he got the 'joy' of watching his simple 'muscle shirt' tank-top transform itself. Into a leather crop-top.

"Fuck, no!" Chris shouted, struggling to his feet as he looked for something to lash out against.

"Please, make it stop..." Greg begged, hands running helplessly - hopelessly - over the black denim vest that had replaced his shirt. "How...?" John wanted to know, even as his own top was replaced by a black latex crop-top.

The three men, now each black-clad in various pieces of feminine apparel, stared at each other in confused horror...

"No, Goddamn it, no!" Chris shouted, shaking a fist in the air. "This is too much!"

The 'this' that was too much was the jewelry that had suddenly appeared on him, all 'silver'. The four earrings in each ear's outer edge.

The nose stud.

The necklace.

The bracelet.

The chain-link belt around his waist. The belly-button stud.

John was hesitantly touching each piece of his new jewelry ensemble, nearly identical to Chris' own - though without the belt, and with a tongue-stud substituted for the belly-button ring.

From his high-pitched shriek, you'd never have known that Greg had gotten off lightly, with only a single silver hoop earring dangling from each lobe.

"We.. We need to call for help.." John said, unsteadily, as he began uncertainly tottering towards the phone. 'Began' - but didn't finish.

With each step, the stride became smoother, easier - and more undeniably feminine...

...as his hips widened slightly, to a 'boyish' dimension still a couple of inches wider than those he'd boasted...

..as a male.

For, even as his hips, and stride, changed, so did his gender - as his cock was pulled back into his body, to be replaced by a cunt.

"God.. no..." Greg gasped, hands flying to her crotch, pressing down on her new vagina through the heavy material that now spread over her wider hips.

"Oh, fuck..." Chris said, in an oddly resigned tone. His hips were remarkably full, the better to support her full, firm new ass - and both ass and hips seemed even more, in light of a waist that rapidly narrowed to a slender dimension most women would have died to have.

Not the other two new women sharing the room, however - not that their wishes mattered, since each of their waists had also constricted, though John's already skinny build meant that his didn't have nearly as far to go to achieve the same slender dimensions, while Greg's 'swivel-chair-spread' took longer to get to that mere hands' breadth in size.

Since each ex-man's waist had started constricting at the same time, and John's had the least to go, it was she that got to first experience the joys of complete womanhood, as the changes continued rushing upwards, slimming and changing the rest of her body, even as her clothing continuously altered to fit...

...until a pale, remarkably sexy young woman stood there, her slender body balanced easily atop her heels as she stared stupidly down at the FFF-cup tits that now strained her top.

"Tits.. I've got big, round, tits..." the red-head said in a stunned voice, hesitantly reaching up to touch them.

"We've all got tits!" the toned, exquisitely sexy blonde in the denim skirt said, pointedly ignoring her own HHH-cup breasts, which stood proudly out from her ribcage. Still the most muscular, Chris turned and helped Greg slowly to her feet, having to pull hard against the weight and drag of the new woman's enormous, MMM-cup breasts, each as big and round as a medicine ball, compared to the 'basket balls' Chris sported, or John's new 'volley-balls'.

"Why are we chicks...?" John asked, plaintively. "Cassandra, why are we...?"

She stopped dead, clapping a hand over her remarkably full, sensual dark-red lips.

"What the hell did you just call me, Jezebel...?" Chris demanded - and then her own eyes widened in shocked surprise as the name that had slipped, unbidden, from her new lips registered in her feminine new ears.

Gaping, Greg slowly swiveled her head back and forth.

Pointing at the tall, slender red-head, Greg tried to say her altered friend's name: "Jezebel..."

Switching the long-nailed finger to the other friend, Greg tried again to speak the 'male' name she'd known the friend for so long as. Her lips parted...

"Cassandra..."

Now dead pale, the huge-breasted new woman slowly pointed her blood-red new fingernail at her own expansive chest... "Gabrielle."

The three transformed friends stared at each other, transfixed, minds spinning wildly...

"Whew...!" Jenny said, nose wrinkling. "I thought you guys only use a pinch of pot in your 'spells', and that's why you could let me give the rest of it to Chris as a gift."

"What are you talking about...?" Gary asked, thickly. "We only do use a pinch - though, from the effect of the pot and the lack of the intended effect, I think Jeff might have put in too much..."

"On the spell that would finally turn us into gir... uh, make our biggest wish come true? Hell, it's the reason we got into the occult in the first place - you can be sure I got it right."

"Then why aren't we wo... uh, changed?" Carl demanded, blinking. "All I feel is..." As he trailed off, all three men blanched, then spoke in one voice:

"...Stoned."

For a second, nobody said anything - the three would-be warlocks out of stunned consideration of the implications, Jenny out of simple confusion.

"But..." Gary finally whispered. "What about the part of the spell to help us overcome any lingering inhibitions...?" Another momentary pause resulted - and the three young men, moving as one, dashed for the door.

"What the hell are you guys talking about...?" Jenny asked the now-empty room plaintively, wreathed in a cloud of marijuana smoke.

Gary, Jeff and Carl burst through the double-doored entrance of the ground floor apartment with all the finesse of a Texas Twister touching down...

...and then stopped dead, eyes bulging as they stared at the three new women.

Women who wore the very forms that the three occultists had prepared for themselves in a one-shot-only spell that had now been invoked.

The women stared back - as the full force of the spell blind-sided them unawares, the 'inhibition release' clause of the spell landing on each transformed man's mind like a ton of invisible bricks.

"Oh..." Jezebel said, blinking, unconsciously reaching up to twirl a slender finger through her orange hair in an unconsciously feminine gesture. "Uh, hi, guys..."

Part of her was wondering why she wasn't panicking to be 'found female' by three strangers - while the rest of her mind was noticing the fact that the strangers were male...

Perhaps not emphatically so, she mused, unaware of the strangeness of the thought - but certainly male, and therefore, acceptable. It didn't even occur to the new woman to wonder what it was they'd be 'acceptable' for...

Likewise, the huge-breasted brunette now known, even to herself, as 'Gabrielle', didn't find anything strange about the fact that she suddenly 'posed', thrusting her immense - and, until that very instant, hated - breasts even more prominently out from her ribcage.

"Oh - you must be the guys from upstairs..." She said, unconsciously licking her lips.

"Hi, guys..." The athletic blonde said, as if it were an everyday occurrence to be found in this state - even now unaware of the disparity between her 'unconcerned' reaction to the guys and her conscious 'loathing' of what had been done to her. "It's me, Cassandra - uh, the woman... um, the person Jenny used to be dating. Something weird happened, and now I can't seem to talk about how I'm now different than the girl - um, person - I was when I last met you."

The three occultists didn't quite know how to respond to that - or the look each of the three women were giving them. Looks that differed slightly with each woman's own personality, but whose less-than-subtle import was the same... "Oh, shit...!" Jeff exclaimed, the realization setting in. "We... tailored the spell for our own memories...!"

The other two men blinked - and the, eyes widening, caught Jeff's meaning.

The spell had been designed to alter the memories of people to 'remember' everything being normal - except for the three men, of course.

So, even as they watched, the three transformed men's memories of being male were fading rapidly...

...without anything at all to replace them.

"Hey.. where are we...?" Jezebel asked, frowning slightly as she looked around a place that looked maddingly familiar, but that she couldn't quite place.

"What..?" Cassandra asked, confused. "We're in my pl..."

She trailed off, frowning, as she took another good look around her.

"Uh... I'm not sure..." She said, blinking in confusion. "I mean, I.. feel.. like I live here, and I can't remember anywhere else as home - but... I also can't remember me living here. In fact, I seem to think a guy lives here, somebody named..."

She hesitated, then threw up her hands as the name failed to come to mind.

"What's going on...?" Gabrielle asked, plaintively. "I feel weird. In fact, I know something's weird, that something happened to us. We were really upset about it a second ago, but... I can't remember why..."

"Yeah, you're right..." Jezebel said, musingly. "It was something real important, too - but then the guys showed up, and the only thing I can clearly remember is thinking about how good it would feel if that tall one fucked me good and hard, and for some reason that thought really bothered me - and yet, now, it doesn't..."

She was eyeing Jeff - 'the tall one' - as she said it, and licked her lips lasciviously at the end of the comment, directing it straight at him.

Jeff shifted uncomfortably.

"Actually, the oldest clear memory I can think of is also thinking about these guys when they came in..." Gabrielle said, hungrily eyeing Gary. "About how good a man's hands would feel, caressing my freakishly..."

She stumbled to a stop, blinked, hesitated - then smiled and went on: "I mean gloriously huge tits." Eyeing the tits he'd wanted for his very own, Gary swallowed audibly.

"Yeah - that's right..." Cassandra said, eyes starting to burn with desire. "I was thinking about how good a nice fresh load of cum would feel going down, right about now..."

With no memories, and no inhibitions, the three new women only had two things:

Their desire...

...and the fact that each of them were 'attuned' to the man whose fantasy-body they were now wearing, making the specific man each of them should have given their form to quite literally the 'one and only' object of their lusts. The women didn't know why this was so

- and they didn't care.

All they cared about was the fact that they found these men suddenly and overwhelmingly interesting and arousing, and they could consider neither having sex with anybody else, nor not having sex with their own 'alter ego'.

With hungry smiles, the three horny, almost mindless new women closed in on their targets...

...and the three men, trapped forever in the wrong gender, facing the horny, 'man hungry' women they'd wanted to become, collectively took a step backwards, raised their hands, and in wry tones, spoke in one voice:

"Sorry - we're gay..." THE END

One Way Trip

By Gunslinger

Drumming blunt, broad fingers against the badly scarred wooden arm of the couch, Sean Willoughby rather impatiently waited to find out whether or not he had to go rip the Crazy Old Man limb from limb.

In his own mind, that was exactly how the broad-shouldered redhead thought of the situation - as a possible necessity, rather than an optional one. If the Crazy Old man had lied or tried to trick him, Sean saw nothing else he could do but go pound the scrawny old guy to within an inch of his life. Otherwise, word might get out that Sean was getting 'soft', and that would bring no end of trouble and tribulation into the twenty-seven year old's life.

Though he'd never admit it, not even to himself, Sean was starting to get 'soft' - not emotionally, where he was still as callous and unapologetically cruel, but physically. Oh, sure, he was still tall and broad-shouldered, and when he looked in the mirror he smiled cruelly as he flexed the muscles of his massive, thick arms. Somehow, though, he just couldn't see - or, refused to see - the steadily increasing gut that hung further and further over the wide black leather belt, of the steadily thicker layer of fat slowly stealing the definition from the thick muscles of his arms and legs.

Still, despite the growing pot belly, Sean was a fantastically powerful young man, and if he decided to put a world of hurt on the Crazy Old Man, a world of hurt was what he'd get.

Idly, Sean found himself wondering what the Crazy Old Man's real name was. Nobody in the neighborhood seemed to know - probably because the old guy had been around there longer than anybody. Tall, painfully thin, with an unkempt white mane of hair and equally disreputable beard, the old guy seemed about ten years older than God. Besides which, he was nuttier than a bedbug.

Personally, it had been Sean's opinion that the old guy was a long-time dooper who owed his current obvious instability to a lifetime of hard drugs - so, when Sean's own supplier had been sent upstate for a stretch and Sean found himself wanting a little something, he'd thought of the Crazy Old Man.

Never in his life had Sean had a harder time getting through to somebody, and he was still pissed off at the thought that the old guy might have been 'faking'. When Sean had demanded drugs, the old guy had looked completely lost, and had started muttering something about aspirin. Shaking the old guy, Sean had begun a litany over every term he could think of for different drugs, trying to get some sense of recognition - and had seemed to be getting nowhere until, way down the list, he'd uttered the phrase 'Magic Mushrooms'.

That had got the old guy's attention - and, smiling and muttering to himself, he'd padded off into the back room of the disaster- waiting-to-happen that he called home. Sean would have followed him to see where his stash was hidden, but he was quite honestly afraid that the creaking, teetering old gothic pile of stone would finally pick that moment to collapse.

The old guy had finally come back, carrying a plastic baggie of what certainly had look like - and, later, once Sean had gotten home, tasted like - psychedelic mushrooms... but the only way to be sure was to wait the half-hour or so it took for the effects to kick in.

Since that particular deadline was getting close now, Sean's own impatience grew as he thought to himself about the joys of pummeling even such a unworthy opponent.

So, for the first couple of seconds, he felt almost annoyed when he felt the effects of the 'Magic Mushrooms' begin.

Then he shook off the annoyance, leaned back in the chair with a smile, and prepared to enjoy the 'trip'. With the amount of 'shrooms he had taken, this should be on hell of a psychedelic high.

As he felt that warm, tingling sensation running through his body, Sean relaxed bunched muscles and settled deeper into the couch. Taking a deep breath, he let himself fall into the growing sense of warm well-being - he'd forgotten how good a 'shroom trip could be. After all, he hadn't done 'shrooms since...

When was the last time?

Could it really have been that long ago? Yes, Sean remembered now - the last time had been when that leggy blonde had brought some with her. The trip had been good - and so had the blonde, come to think of it, he thought with a wicked smile and a chuckle. She'd been a real first-class cock-sucker, once he'd convinced her that was what she 'wanted' to do for him... though, to his way of thinking, she'd been a little lacking in the one 'looks' department that really got him going. Sean was a real 'tit man', and the way he liked 'em was big and fake and round...

The warm, tingling sensation that had been thrumming through his now completely relaxed body suddenly seemed to intensify ten- fold... at least, in one specific location. Gunmetal-gray eyes that were usually cold and hard now shifted lazily so that he could look dreamily down at his chest.

His loose-fitting gray tank-style shirt was slowly pushing outwards.

Sean's eyes widened, and he drew in a hissed breath, prepared to utter an exclamation of shocked surprise... and then, quite willfully, he forced himself to let the breath out slowly. Feeling thick-witted and slightly dazed, he forced his body towards calm relaxation once more.

"Just a fucking hallucination, ya' moron." He told himself with sharp disdain, shaming himself back into that warm feeling of euphoria. "That's what 'shrooms do, they make you see things - and I took a whole shit-load of 'em."

Soon, he was once more relaxed - and watching with a big, dreamy smile as his shirt continued bulging slowly outwards, driven by the burgeoning flesh within, whose growing mass and heft he could now 'feel'.

Of course, he told himself with a chuckle, he just thought he was seeing and feeling these things.

"Ain't none of this real..." He reminded himself with a chuckle. "There I was, thinkin' about huge, silicone-stuffed tits... and now I'm imagining myself growin' a pair, that's all. It's a weird trip, sure, really freaky, even perverted, kinda - but not a bad trip."

That's what he had to keep firmly in mind - that no matter what happened, 'it was all good'. You start getting freaked out, and the trip made it a hundred times worse. He'd had a bad trip once, on LSD, and knew better than to let himself repeat the experience. Just as long as he took it easy and went with the flow, he'd stay in this nice, warm feeling of euphoria. In that warm, dreamy daze of 'slow time', he could enjoy the things he 'saw', 'heard', and 'felt', knowing none of it was real... and so, nothing to worry about, no matter how strange, or even 'gay' it might seem. This was just his subconscious having some fun, playing around, taking what he was thinking about and giving it back to him as a hallucination.

So, with a dreamy smile on his lips, he watched as his once-baggy shirt now drew taut over the heavy, firm masses of flesh beneath them.

For a moment, he simply stared down at the gray fabric distended over his chest, coping with the 'feelings' of his huge new tits. With every breath he took, his mind insisted on pretending he felt the weight of these massive breasts rising and falling with his ribcage. He even imagined, with great detail, feeling the fabric of the shirt shift slightly over each large, thick nipple as he breathed.

Continuing to look down at a shirt that now looked as if two basketballs had been stuffed inside, he 'idly' tried to make the breasts go away... but he didn't try too hard. Not only were hallucinations the product of the subconscious, rather than conscious mind, but trying too desperately to will the breasts away quite likely could have gotten him into a bad trip. Weird as this was, it was harmless... and it wasn't a bad trip. He wasn't freaking out. In fact, having reminded himself to just go with the flow, he was floating happily in the dreamy daze, staring at his imagined bust with something very much like satisfaction.

Sean hesitated for a second - and then, quite firmly, reminded himself that there was no reason to hesitate, no reason to feel 'perverted'. None of this was real. This was something that had come from inside his subconscious mind, manifested as a hallucination... and, moreover, it was both his body he was imagining changed, and his mind that was doing the imagination.

There was no 'outside force' acting on him. This was him, and all him, and so part of him might have found this all more than a little weird, even sort of 'gay', but another part of him must have secretly wondered what it would be like to have tits, or this couldn't have happened.

Dreamily, he placed his hands on his chest, right at the neck - and then slowly swept them downwards.

This was, without a doubt, the most incredibly detailed and 'realistic' hallucination he'd ever had. It must be due to the amount of 'shrooms he'd taken, but he swore he could feel every detail as his hands moved down onto those massive tits distending his shirt.

Not only the feel of huge breasts under his hands, which was something that his mind could have easily extrapolated from all the 'real' tits he'd touched in his time - but also what it felt like to have the huge breasts being touched.

In a way, though, the sensation itself was reassuring, allowing himself to fall more fully into that euphoric daze. If he'd needed any more proof that this wasn't real, that it was just his mind making it up and filling in imagined details, he now had it.

There was no way in hell that 'real' tits felt this incredibly fabulous to have.

Here he was, lightly squeezing as much of the huge breasts as his broad hands could encompass... and it felt entirely too fantastic. In one dazed corner of his mind, he wondered if his brain had simply picked up the sensation of jacking off and 'relocated' it... because, in a certain sense, that's almost what playing with his huge tits felt like.

Letting out a low moan of pleasure, he had to laugh - because that pleasure was just being hallucinated, as well. Yet everything felt so real...!

Pulling up his shirt, he helplessly shivered at the intense pleasure his mind insisted on telling him he was feeling - and that was just from the way the fabric, tightly molded to his massive tits, felt like as it slid over his huge and now fully-engorged nipples.

The breasts his brain insisted his eyes saw were, quite simply, perfect. They were his own idea of ideal breasts, one no woman's had ever come close to... huge and round and softly firm, each one roughly the size of a basketball, and yet tipped with massive pink nipples nearly keeping in the scale of the gargantuan breasts themselves.

He'd seen some strippers with big tits before, and one or two porn movies with women as big in the bust as he was now imagining himself to be... but those who were naturally busty had those huge nipples, but not the firm roundness that could only come from over-inflated implants. For the first time in his life, he was seeing the combination of those two factors...

...and the were hanging on his chest.

For a moment, the euphoric daze shivered and threatened to break apart under the assault of the most unmanly of situations - but Sean instead, quite deliberately, gave his huge new tits a squeeze... and, quite deliberately, wallowed in the pleasure it produced, moaning even as his cock went rock-hard from the wave of pleasure.

The pleasure, of course, wasn't real, and neither were the tits - which was why it was more than 'okay' to 'enjoy' them. He couldn't freak out over any of this, because none of it was real... and since it wasn't real, trying to ignore them or tell himself it would be 'sick' or 'gay' to enjoy the situation would only risk pushing himself out of the euphoria and smack-dab into the middle of a really bad trip.

The rule was, 'go with the flow'.

"It's alllll good..." Sean reminded himself dreamily - and then moaned loudly and nearly blew his load as his fingers found those massive and oh-so-amazingly pleasure-sensitive nipples.

Licking his lips after the long moan, he grimaced - the taste of those mushrooms still remained on his lips, and now filled his mouth. He decided to get himself a beer, and made to get up from the couch...

...and fell back into it, gasping as his huge tits bounced and jiggled from the sudden motion.

He'd failed to rise because he'd failed to take into account the balance-altering weight of those self-same tits.

"Man, talk about a detailed hallucination!" He said, with a little gasp of pleasure, as he pulled the shirt back down over his imagined bust. "Damn, this things really move. I can see why women wear..."

...and even as he was thinking about it, the shirt writhed and warped. Seconds later, he was staring down at what seemed to be a mile of cleavage left exposed by the massive, lace-trimmed floral-pattern bra that now encased and supported his gigantic tits.

"Damn...!" He muttered in admiration, as he gingerly rose from the sofa. "This trip may be a little weird, but it's got any other one I've ever had beat by a mile. I can't believe how real this all feels, how incredibly detailed it is..."

Feeling his massive breasts sway and bounce slightly, even within the supporting confinement of the massive cotton bra, he walked to the kitchen. Grabbing a beer from the fridge, he spun off the cap and flicked it in the direction of the garbage can.

He blinked.

The garbage can sat near the glass sliding doors that exited the kitchen, and with the darkness of night outside, acted as a sort of pale mirror. His ghostly reflection looked back at him, and for the first time he noticed how big his gut had gotten - massive as his new tits were, they barely edged out past where his gut hung, and he thought how weird that looked....

...and, even as the thought was occurring to him, his gut was shrinking, seeming to pull back in on itself until, after a couple of scant seconds, those magnificent, creamy breasts now loomed splendidly over a slender waist.

"It's all good..." Sean reminded himself. but even as he said this, he couldn't help but notice the way that slender waist and those massive breasts still looked so out-of-place on the rest of his body and the ghostly reflection in the glass began to shimmer.

"Just go with the flow..." He tried to remind himself. even as he saw-and-felt his heavily muscled arms becoming slimmer, more dainty - more feminine.

"It's all good. " He said, voice quavering, even as it began rising in pitch. Beneath writhing pants that were, themselves, in the midst of changing, he could feel his legs becoming leaner, more finely formed. "It's not real..." He gasped at himself in a voice nearly fully feminine...

...and then, even as his hips widened and canted slightly forward, he felt his cock retract back into his body.

It was too much. He had tried, but the final indignity, the loss of his manhood, proved too much - and, as quickly as a snapped finger, he was plunged into a 'bad trip'.

Everything rippled and wavered....

"It ain't real..." She said - almost whined. "Ain't none of it real. "

She knew, with utter conviction, that she was Sean Willoughby, a twenty-seven year old white man...

...and yet, she also 'thought' she was Shauna Williams, a twenty-one year old black girl. The though was weak, with no emotional connection - it was as if she'd read it off a page, rather than anything she'd experienced for herself.

Yet, there were more of these flat, unengaging two-dimensional 'memories' of the life of Shauna Williams...

...and, as unreal as they both felt and she knew them to be, she couldn't just disregard them, for one very good reason: She somehow seemed to be living Shauna's life.

She was standing in a dank urban alleyway, poorly lit by the orangish glow of a sodium lamp over one of the doors. She'd never seen the alley before in her life, and didn't 'recognize' it. but, just as if she'd read the information of a page, she 'knew' exactly where she was, and how Shauna had gotten here.

Slowly, she lowered her gaze. and saw, not Sean's body, but Shauna's. Her frayed, once-black denim jacket, now a dingy gray, hung open, exposing the dark chocolate tops of her massive saline-inflated tits in the custom-made GGG-cup black leather 'bra'. The bitter chill of the rising wind ran cold fingers over the black, back-seamed nylons encasing Shauna's long, nicely-toned legs, and she was balanced unhappily atop the three-inch platforms and eight-inch heels of Shauna's black platform shoes. A skin-tight black spandex skirt barely long enough to reach the top of her stockings to encase her boyish-yet-feminine hips, as well as her very firm and shapely full ass. Without a mirror, she could 'see' herself, as if somebody had simply described to her what she looked like - a slender young woman who might have looked 'boyish' if not for a naturally spectacular ass, spectacularly unnatural breasts, and a somewhat strong-jawed face made completely soft by the full lips and hug, dark 'Bambi' eyes.

A denim backpack that matched her jacket in both color and condition was swung over one shoulder, and she 'knew' without looking what scant items that made up all of her worldly possessions it contained.

Just as she 'knew' that she had been teenage runaway who had started out as an under-age stripper in illegal clubs and worked her way up - or down - to prostitution. She knew Shauna had both hated the life, and yet come to rely on it and its dangers as the only one she knew right up until she'd gotten 'too old' for the particular portion of the trade she'd originally been enticed into because of her tender age.

Now she was broke, alone, and afraid. yet, despite the fact she was sting in Shauna's body, wearing her clothes, and carrying her pitifully few belongings, none of her past history felt real to her. She knew who she really was. and that only made the fact that she didn't know how to get from this 'fake life' back to her real one all the more horrible. She could keep telling herself that none of this was real... but that didn't keep her too-long-empty stomach crying out for nutrition. She could assure herself that she was still really safe at home... but that didn't stop the cold wind from cutting through her like a well-honed knife. She could tell herself that she wasn't really helpless, hopeless, and friendless...

...but that didn't stop her from starting to cry as the heavens opened up and a cold, cold rain came down on her.

Wrapping her jacket around her body and shivering violently, she began walking. Real or not, she felt the cold water sluicing over her, stealing valuable body heat and soaking her to the skin. In 'real life', she would know where to go... but here, she had no place, and walked simply to try and keep warm, regardless of her certainty that none of this was actually happening.

Not that fact that she was rampantly paranoid was any help. Almost as certain as her knowledge of who she 'really' was was the emotional conviction that the world really was out to get her, that if she screwed up in even the slightest way, a fate much more horrifying than this one - more horrifying than she could even imagine - was waiting for her.

It was too much. Freezing cold, starving hungry, pathetically scared, feeling ready to keel over in a dead faint any second, she picked a fairly deep entranceway to an old brownstone apartment building, huddled in its meager shelter, and cried.

"Damn!" A male voice said in admiration. "Now that's what I call a pair of tits!"

Shauna looked up - and found a Hispanic male a little older than her, ('about the same age as me' Sean thought at the exact same time), dressed in a baggy pair of jeans and dark hooded sweatshirt, looking down at her.

He was about average height, but skinny as a rail, with a narrow face nobody would ever describe as 'handsome', but far from ugly - especially with a big smile wreathing his face, as it was now.

It was the smile that did it. That dry, narrator-like tone of Shauna's thoughts said it was because she was desperate, and falling back on the only thing she knew how to do. Sean's thoughts said it was because, during a bad trip, you often helplessly latched on to anything that didn't fire that paranoia that overwhelmed you.

All of which help explained why she smiled back...

'No!' Sean screamed in the back of his/her mind, as she introduced herself and got the man's name - Ricky - in return. 'Stop it! Stop trying to seduce him!'

All the silent screaming made no difference - She knew who she 'really' was, but that knowledge didn't seem to help, because the script she was living by was the one played out by the dry, flat narrator-style thoughts running through her head.

'She knew Ricky wanted to feel her breasts pressed close...' and, so, she helplessly pressed herself against him as they walked inside, her huge breasts pressed firmly against his arm.

It was as if she were an actress, following a script - and no matter how desperately she tried, she simply couldn't 'drop out of character'.

Shauna's dry thoughts spoke of her feigned excitement and pleasure, while what she really felt was resigned... whereas Sean was anything but resigned, struggling desperately to regain control of a renegade body that defied him in both form and function.

He/'she got absolutely nowhere in those struggles. Instead, Sean was but a helpless, hapless passenger as the buxom, ebony- skinned body he wore carried them into Ricky's apartment.

Helplessly, Sean was carried along, forced to see, to hear, and to feel everything that happened, but unable to in any way control or even effect the outcome of what was going on.

He was helplessly carried along, feeling every jiggle and bounce of Shauna's massive breasts, as they made their way up to Ricky's third-floor apartment.

Unwillingly, he was forced to be a witness to what was happening as their shared body followed Ricky towards the bathroom. He could do nothing but what through Shauna's eyes as Ricky started the water running, adjusting it to the temperature he preferred.

Then, unable to stop it, Sean was forced to watch as they slowly and sensuously stripped each other.

Forced to experience very sensation as Ricky kissed her, hard and passionate, his tongue slipping into their shared mouth.

Shauna felt little - for her, this was familiar, acceptable if not excitable - but Sean hated every second of it, even the pleasure that came with Ricky's wandering hands.

Shauna felt almost bored as they stepped into the tub. Indeed, she was more interested in the warm water soothing her chilled body than she was in Ricky's actions - but Sean was horrified and humiliated as, haplessly, he was forced to experience every caress.

Made to feel Ricky's hands and lips on their huge, firm breasts. Unable to either stop or ignore the feel of Ricky's lips against theirs, Ricky's tongue in their mouths.

Sean could not alter one motion, twitch one limb so much as a fraction of an inch from it's intended path as he watched, helplessly horrified, as Shauna turned her back to the spray of water. Spreading her legs as far as the tub would allow, she leaned forward, and Sean felt her huge breasts sway forward under the force of gravity.

Sean felt the cool tile under their hands as they braced themselves against the wall.

She saw the world seem to swing as she looked back over their shoulder, and he felt the seductive smile on their lips as she lascivious, and redundantly, told Ricky to do what he was going to do anyway:

"Fuck me, baby. Fuck me good and hard!"

Screaming, struggling, fighting, Sean was further horrified when Shauna turned their face away - so she didn't get to see it, couldn't watch Ricky, but knew it was going to happen anyway, it was merely going to come without him having a chance to...

...and then there was the new yet utterly unmistakable feeling of a cock being pressed quickly and firmly into the warm, moist confines of their womanhood. Sean felt the warmth of the throbbing member entering their cunt, felt the soft, elastic walls of their womanhood adjust to accept the hard manhood's entry...

...and Sean's mind snapped.

It was an attempt to avoid having to experience the sensations of being a woman getting fucked by a man - and it failed miserably, for though his sanity fled, enough of Sean's mind remained to experience the horror and humiliation of knowing that he would still experience every single thing Shauna did.

Sean's warped and broken mind felt every hard, rhythmic thrust. Felt their huge breasts bounce and sway as Ricky fucked them hard. Felt the unwanted pleasure Shauna rated as 'merely good' as a man's hard cock thrust deep into their warm womanhood.

Felt each and every detail of being a woman 'willingly' letting a man fuck her good and hard - and Sean's gibbering mind knew that not only would he feel everything that happened, every time, but that his now-cracked sanity would never be whole enough for him to ever have any chance to escape what was going on.

With the two-dimensional persona of Shauna now the sole operator of their shared body, Sean was little more than a eternally horrified fragment forced to experience everything she did as she acted her way through a simulation of an orgasm, then spent some time stroking Ricky's ego by telling him how great it had been.

Sean's fractured mind, wrapped in the prison of life and body worse than any night mare, could do nothing but experience the situation as Shauna dressed in a pair of Ricky's sweat pants and a t-shirt that molded itself to their massive bustline. Then, while Ricky sat comfortably in a battered chair, she made a quick dinner out of what food she found in a fundamental bachelor's kitchen, and served it to him.

Her own meal, less than half the portion she'd given Ricky, was gulped down quickly. As Ricky leisurely finished his meal, Shauna gathered up the scant bedding from the hall closet Ricky had indicated, and hastily made up a 'bed' on the couch.

Then, taking his plate away when he'd finished, she brought him the last beer in the fridge, and quickly did the dishes while he drank it.

By the time he was done the beer, she was done the dishes... and then, fake smile firmly affixed to her face, she walked over to him...

...knelt down in front of him...

...freed his rapidly hardening cock from his pants...

...and gave him the most 'professional' blow-job he'd ever experienced.

All while Sean was helplessly forced to endure the feeling of a cock in 'his' mouth, the feeling of 'his' hands and 'his' lips working on a throbbing manhood. Maybe this was Shauna's body and she was controlling the actions, but it was his cracked and warped male mind that was forced to endure it as well, and the sensations were, unlike actually being fucked in the cunt, at least something that he could have done in his male body, and so that's what his mind insisted on experiencing.

Finally, after a long, slow blow-job, Ricky blew his load in their mouth - and Sean was forced to taste every drop of it as Shauna willingly swallow the warm, salty load of goo.

"Yeah..." Ricky sighed, with a smile. "I think this arrangement's gonna work out fine..."

As he headed off to bed, Sean was even forced to experience Shauna's happiness about finding a man to 'take care of her' - which is to say, provided her with the barest minimums of room-and-board in exchange for a combination cook, maid and whore who'd pleasure him any way he wanted...

It wasn't until Shauna curled up in her makeshift bed and drifted off into sleep that that last, warped fragment of Sean, doomed to spend the rest of his life in utter torment, could have even the tiniest impact in their new lives.

"It's not real..." Shauna's voice whispered dreamily, escaping from between her full and still cum-coated lips. "It's not real..."

SUMMARY: One man wakes to find that he has been transformed into a whore who every day must relive the realization that she is no longer a man.

One Wild Night

By Gunslinger

Moaning softly through a dry, sore throat, aching in places he hadn't even been aware of having, Lee Dizlinger forced his apparently lead-weighted eyelids open - and immediately regretted it, as light appeared to bypass his eyes completely, achieving physical solidity as it speared directly into his brain.

Letting his willing eyelids slam closed against the invading light, Less simply gave himself a couple of minutes to regroup. In addition to a throbbing, pounding headache centered just behind his left eye, his entire body ached - not surprisingly, actually, since he'd fallen asleep on the overstuffed old armchair that he was still in, his body contorted into an odd position that somehow managed not only to leave him with stiff, cramped muscles, but with dull, throbbing pain in his chest, crotch, and waist...

...and then, his slowly rebooting mind working at piecing together the random, blurred images of the night before, he realized that the position he'd slept in probably had little to do with his sore waist, at any rate.

That pain would be from the damned corset.

Lee moaned again - this time, more in consideration of the fact that he was wearing a corset, rather than from the pain it caused.

As was often the prelude to something phenomenally stupid and/or dangerous, 'it had seemed like a good idea at the time'.

Still, he mused to himself sourly as he worked up the courage to move, he at least had the excuse that he'd been pretty well wasted at the time...

With a grunt, Lee forced his eyelids to half-mast, the light from the bare bulb of the floor lamp in the corner shaded by his long, dark fake eyelashes. With a push from his well-toned arms, he heaved himself up off the battered old chair, barely managing to catch his balance and narrowly avoiding a badly twisted ankle from slipping off his 'high' heels.

Muscles complaining strenuously, he carefully teetered towards the stairs leading up from his supposedly finished basement 'rec room', surprised that the place was relatively intact.

Usually, when he threw a party down here, the place ended up trashed.

Of course, the fact that this one had been an 'all female' party probably made the difference...

Even though his slow, stiff movements were making the damned, heavy water-balloons stuffed down his shirt jiggle and bounce uncomfortably against a chest he figured must have been rubbed raw by similar motion all night long, Lee felt his lipstick-clad lips curve upwards in a wry smile at the thought, half humorous and half self-disgusted.

He'd run out of his own booze about seven thirty or so last night, and had stumbled and weaved his way to the liquor store - only to find that his bank account was as depleted as his liquor supply. It could have been a 'disaster', as far as the hard-drinking twenty-four year old was concerned... except for the group of female med students who had just finished buying the booze to celebrate their graduation, but had also just found out that the hotel had over-booked and given their suite away.

That's when Lee had suggested that the 'chicks' use his basement for the party in exchange for some free booze - and he'd been both drunk and desperate enough to get even drunker that when they tried to decline his offer on the grounds that having a man around would make them uncomfortable, he'd been willing to 'be a girl' for the party.

Swaying to a stop in front of the cracked and dusty mirror near the foot of the stairs, Lee looked at the reflection it provided, smirking at the end-effect of that drunken decision.

Now, hung over but a little more clear-headed than he'd been the night before, he realized that the real reason the chicks didn't want to party here was because of his reputation as a real stud. Of course, none of the doctor broads needed to have worried about that, since none of them met his 'high standards', a fact he vaguely seemed to remember making clear to them during the party - but the chance to humiliate him like this at the cost of nothing but a few bottles of booze had probably been worth it to them.

Technically, Lee shared the house with his older sister, Miranda - but though this was her legal residence, she spent maybe two or three weeks of the year there, total. As a 'feature' exotic dancer, she spent almost all of her time on the road, living out of hotel rooms. She did use the house to store a lot of her 'working' outfits and accessories that she wasn't using in her current act, however, and it was from this supply that Lee had drawn his 'costume'.

The really humiliating part of it, he thought to himself as he surveyed the mildly distorted image in the old mirror, was the fact that he didn't make nearly as a ludicrous-looking sight as a woman as he would have liked.

In fact - the image in the mirror was quite... passable.

Lee and his sister had both inherited much of their looks from their Scandinavian mother. Of course, on Miranda, this translated into a slim, supple woman with legs that seemed to go on forever before reaching trim hips, a small, firm bust on a well-rounded pair of shoulders, and a lean, exotic-looking triangular face beneath her mane of sandy-blond hair.

For Lee, it expressed itself somewhat differently. Whereas Miranda looked taller than her average height because of her lean build, Lee looked shorter than his true height, because of not-heavy-but- taut musculature he'd carefully clothes his slender bone structure with. Given that, he'd never really had any complaints - or even second thoughts - about his 'masculinity', at least not since her was about seven or so...

...which was why the image in the mirror was so internally discomfiting for Lee.

The white patent-leather shoes - with the three sets of buckling ankle-straps that were too much for him to cope with undoing right now - boasted a two-inch thick platform and four-and-a-half inch shaped heels that were both suitable sexy and sensible for a woman who spent hours at a time wearing them. Of course, not having any experience in heels at all, Lee was having a much more difficult time with them than he'd like - but, unfortunately, not because they were too small for his

'masculine' feet. Truth be told, they fit uncomfortably well, being a little too narrow rather than too small.

His pants were his own, a fairly tight pair of jeans he wore fairly often. All other times he'd worn them, however, his long legs and average hips had gone well with his wide, flat stomach and average-sized shoulders to present an agreeably masculine image. Now, however, with the rest of the 'costume', those same hips no longer seemed 'average', but boyishly slender in a feminine way - making him notice, for the very first time, how full and firm his well-toned ass looked in the pants.

Full and firm - and, if your mind was already pointed in that direction, at least 'cutely' feminine, maybe even edging into 'sexy'.

His face, strong featured with an almost-cleft chin, had always seemed almost exceedingly male - but now, surrounded by the fall of golden-blond wig-hair and boasting lipstick, mascara, and thin eyebrows he just barely recalled drunkenly letting the girls pluck, the face looked... female. Not pretty, really, but not ugly.

In fact, that would have served to describe much of the 'woman' he made - neither noticeably ugly nor remarkably pretty, just sort of an athletic average.

Except, of course, for his 'tits'. A pair of big, thick-walled rubber balloons he'd filled with warm water and taped into place on his hairy chest before forcing the yellow turtleneck shirt down over them.

Balloons filled almost to the size of volleyballs - big, round 'tits' that managed to visually reduce the size of his shoulders and ribcage in comparison, making them seem much more feminine, especially with the assistance to an hourglass figure provided by the heavy canvas corset he wore, barely laced up at the beginning over the evening, but steadily (and gleefully) tightened over time by the girls until it compressed his waist by a painfully full five inches.

That part he remembered, at least vaguely, but that was still fairly early in the evening, and he had almost no memories of the past - he glanced at the digital clock on the wall... and did an almost classic double-take....

Nearly twenty hours. His last, clear memory was at sometime a little past nine o'clock last night, and it was nearly five the next afternoon.

Lee, no matter how drunk or sick, had never slept more than eight hours at one time in his life, and he wondered fuzzily what he'd done during the missing twelve or more hours. Had he'd been so drunk he'd gotten lucky...? Maybe several times ?

Well, that might explain the low, dull throbbing ache in his crotch then, he thought with a lewd grin.

Reaching his hands up to his head, he twined the bright-red Press-On nails in the long, shimmering blonde wig set atop the sandy-blond hair he kept as short-trimmed as the goatee he'd always worn until the girls shave it off last night, he tugged on it...

...and gasped, head cocking back with a spine-popping whipping motion as his hard yank failed to separate the wig from his head.

Grimacing, he yanked upwards this time, harder - and achieved nothing but more stretching of his neck-muscles.

Those girls must have glued the damned thing to his head!

Snarling, Lee yanked on it a third time, futilely - and then a bad thought hit him, and hit him hard.

What if the wig wasn't the only thing the girls had glued on...?

Dropping his hands from his head, he wrapped them around the bottom of the tight yellow shirt, mentally cursing the long acrylic nails as he got a grip and forced the tight garment upwards...

...and grimaced at the way the water-balloons pulled at his chest as he struggled to get the shirt off, seeming to tactilely confirm his ugly suspicions as he finally got the tight hem up on the bottom curve of the balloons and managed to stretch it so it would continue upwards, and...

Suddenly numb, the shirt pulled up just under his armpits, Lee stared incredulously at what the mirror reported.

There were no water balloons taped to his hairy chest.

There weren't even water balloons glued to his shaven chest.

There were a huge pair of tits thrust roundly and almost proudly from his denuded chest! Massive, unrealistically spherical, tipped-with-small-little-nipples, all too obviously surgically inflated boobs!

"Those damned med bitches gave me implants!" Lee swore, aloud...

...and then mentally reeled at the somewhat rough, smoky but higher-pitched and more-then-just-a- little feminine-sounding voice it emerged in.

"What the hell have those dumb bitches done to me...?" Lee demanded of his equally enraged - and worried - reflection, hating the husky-yet feminine the words emerged in. "They... they gave me a boob-job!"

Even as he said it, though, his shaking, long-nailed hands hesitantly coming down to lightly touch the massive, firm breasts above the tight-laced corset, he knew it shouldn't be possible to get huge breast implants like this, not in one night.

Still, as much as he wished he could believe that 'logical' conclusion, the sensations from his mildly sore new bust-line argued against it...

...and then Lee went cold as an insidious connection between his sore chest and sore crotch began to form unwillingly in his mind.

"No.. No, they couldn't have...." He told his horrified reflection - and then his hands darted downwards, fumbling at the zipper and button of his jeans until he could finally get his long-nailed fingers to work and yank the pants open...

...to reveal her perfectly formed vagina.

"No - it's not possible..." She tried to convince herself, in vain - because even as she was saying it, questing fingers were sliding across the fleshy lips of what was undeniably a female cunt, unobscured even by pubic hair, much less any underwear.

With a hoarse-yet-damnably-feminine scream, the unwillingly feminine person yanked her hands away from her unwanted new cunt and fled up the stairs, huge tits bouncing and swaying as she teetered and wobbled up the narrow stairs up into the kitchen, out through the doorway into the living room...

...where she came to screeching stop, eyes widening in disbelief. It wasn't her living room.

Or, rather - it wasn't Lee's living room. It might quite well be the living room of the woman she now was, however - considering the matched pair of nearly life-sized posters over the new black leather couch, each one showing the new woman she'd just seen in the mirror, all dolled up and dressed to emphasize every feminine thing about her...

...and with 'her' name emblazoned on each poster in big, red letters:

Lisa Titslinger

Shaking her head and muttering an unheard mantra of denial over and over again, 'Lisa' staggered away from the posters adorning the femininely decorated room, stumbling down the hallway to the master bedroom...

...which was a bedroom no longer, but a change room. The bed was gone, and the only things in the room, aside from the large, mirror-surmounted make-up table with its abundant supply of feminine cosmetics, were racks and racks of sexy, feminine clothes.

Shrieking, Lisa fled into the en-suite bathroom and slammed the door on the feminine items and furnishings somehow filling her house - but it didn't help, and not only because the bathroom had received a similarly effeminate make-over.

No, the real problem was that she was carrying the feminine conversion around with her, in the most horrible, confusion, and unavoidable place:

Her own body.

With trembling hands, she shucked off all her clothing - including a corset that turned out not to be tightly laced over a masculine waist, but just laced enough to stay on the supple, slender pinched waist of a woman she now boasted.

Stunned. Shocked. Horrified. Confused.

Stunned. Shocked. Horrified. Confused.

Stunnedshockedhorrifiedconfused, stunnedshockedhorrifiedconfusedstunnedshocked...

She might have stood in the bathroom for hours uncounted, staring about her wildly as her roiling emotions and unordered thoughts spun uselessly through her - but then, in every single room in the entire house, a synchronized alarm clock went off, chiming the five o'clock hour.

Her thoughts and emotions continued to whirl wildly - but her body straightened, turned, and with a sort of calm competence, started a shower running, waiting for the water to reach a comfortable temperature.

"What the...?" Lisa stammered, wide-eyed, watching her body move of its own volition. "What the fuck am I doing...?"

Getting a shower, apparently - for that's exactly what she found herself doing, without will or volition. Operating as if on it's own, moving with that same sort of thoughtless competence that came from long habit, she saw and felt herself step into the shower stall, soaping up her lean, buxom new body with matter-of-fact motions.

Motion that, no matter how work-a-day they were, nevertheless caused all sorts of new and, in some cases, disturbingly pleasant sensations as her hands worked soap into the taut, smooth flesh of her new body. She soaped and rinsed her huge new tits and her full, firm ass. She washed and scrubbed her long, toned legs and her slightly mounded new crotch. She cleaned her face and shampooed her long, golden hair - all while she yelled at herself to stop it, her hateful new voice bouncing back to her ears in the echo-chamber of the stall, but having no effect on her calmly functioning body...

...and what made the whole thing so terrible, so awful, so confusingly, disgustingly, horribly frightening was the fact that it felt completely and utterly natural to be doing what she was doing.

As each 'new' sensation rocked her mind - she recognized it, just as if it were something she'd done a hundred thousand times before, though she couldn't say when or where.

Ever motion, every sensation, every single aspect of the shower, new body and all, felt as common and as commonplace as it had felt to do so in her male body, despite all the differences that should have made it feel totally new and unfamiliar.

With that same sense of having done it all before, a prisoner in a body that wasn't truly 'his' to begin with, she could only watch and experience as she finished showering and methodically toweled herself dry, spending time on getting her hair well dried with the use of a power hairdryer.

Next, her body still operating on it's own, she found herself going out to the 'wardrobe room' - where, helpless to stop herself, and still feeling that same strange sense of familiarity, she picked out a hanger on which was a complete 'sexy schoolgirl' outfit.

Horried, disgusted by what her unwilling hands were doing, she found herself dressing in the sexy little number. Knee-high translucent socks balled up, slipped over pointed toes, and smoothed over her lower legs with the actions of long familiarity. Slipping into the short plaid skirt and zipping it up as if it were the most common thing in the world. Tying the short-sleeved silk blouse in place over her massive tits as if she knew from experience the way to get it to display the most cleavage without threatening to fall off.

Next, she stepped into a pair of modified 'Mary Jane' pumps with a four-inch heel, and having dressed in the schoolgirl outfit was bad enough - but it was all the worst when her helpless body then went over to the make-up table and sat down to take care of matching make-up and hairstyle. Hands efficiently worked away, applying color and scent, then moving on to pull her hair into twin golden pigtails.

Fully outfitted and made-up as a sexy schoolgirl, she found herself rising and leaving the room - and her body was now moving with a sexy 'come hither' roll to her hips that made her huge new tits jiggle and sway in the scant enclosure of the translucent top.

Reaching the living room, she paced back and forth atop the heels as if waiting for something - and that something was apparently the ringing of the doorbell at a few minutes to six.

Helplessly., she went to the front door and opened it - and found herself smiling back at the young man who stood outside.

"Hi, Lisa." He greeted her - and she wrapped an arm around his neck and pulled him in for a short, but deep and hungry, kiss.

Confused and horrified by her out-of-control body's 'homosexual' action, Lisa only became the more confused and disgusted over the next half-hour or so, as more men showed up at her door.

Each was greeted with a kiss and/or a fondle and/or by a whole-body, rubbing/grinding 'hug', sure to arouse - from which she couldn't help but determine, based on the words helplessly flowing from her mouth, was exactly what the intention was.

With each man, almost lost in the 'horror' of the way she was greeting them, was the monetary exchange: fifty dollars.

From each of the twenty-one men who came.

More than a thousand dollars in cash, which she tucked away in a little wall safe that, unable to make her body count it, already contained what she could only estimate at being several thousand dollars in cash.

That task done, she found herself walking with that hip-swiveling, tit-bouncing sway back to where the party was in full swing, the men comfortable on the abundance of black leather furniture, sipping assorted drinks from the well-stocked bar in the corner.

"Let the fun begin...!" She found herself crowing, happily...

...while slowly and seductively stripping out of the clothes she'd so-recently put on.

Helpless to stop herself, she pranced around the room, letting each of the men give some hands-on assistance in getting her undressed.

One man untied her top for her - and got a quick squeeze-and-fondle of her huge tits before she moved on, letting the top drop to the floor.

The next man she let unzip her skirt while she helplessly found herself jamming her huge tits into his face - but the skirt, unzipped, didn't come off.

That task was reserved for another guy, who got to fondle her taut ass in payment.

Clad now in just the socks and shoes, she capered around the room, laughing while her mind spun and screamed helplessly inside, asking over and over again; "Who's first?"

The men, yelling and gesturing, each made it clear that they wanted to be 'first' - until she helplessly found her 'cheerful' body picking one man in particular and walking over to where he sat...

...reached out to his tented crotch...

...unzipped and lowered his pants, then underwear, to expose his rigid cock...

...positioned herself on the couch above him, legs spread wide over his own...

...AND IMPALED HERSELF ON HIS COCK!

Even as her silent mental scream of horror and disgust was mirrored by her uncontrolled body shriek of pleasure, Lisa faced the horrifying truth about who 'Lisa Titslinger' was:

She was a whore...!

...and from what she said to the nameless man she fucked with consummate skill, one who loved her work - despite what her screaming, sobbing, cursing, and utterly helpless mind might have to say about that.

Her body doing what it seemed to do best, she rode atop the man like a trained rider atop a wild stallion, matching his rhythms and thrusts with her own motions, smoothing his face in her tits, pulling his hands up on to her ass, everything she could possibly do to increase his pleasure until finally, gasping into her deep cleavage, he pumped a full load of his hot seed deep into her new womanhood...

...and she faked her own orgasm, telling him how good he was even as some small, self-hating part of his helpless mind wished she'd kept thrusting just long enough for her female orgasm.

Then, after helplessly kissing the man in 'gratitude', she found herself rising, looking around, and picking another man, one who had his pants already open and was lightly stroking his own hard cock.

"Well, we can't let that go to waste, now can we...?" She heard herself say, teasingly - and then, helplessly, she found herself swaying across the room to him...

...dropping to her knees...

...and giving him a blow-job!

As her mouth was filled with hard, thick cock she struggled desperately with her unresponsive body, trying to stop this disgusting act - but her body ignored her, applying consummate skill to the task of sucking cock, showing herself to be a true virtuoso at fellatio. Lips and mouth and tongue and hands worked with the same exquisite timing and skill as those of a concert pianist - whereas she was a concentrated penisist.

She sucked and slurped, licked and nibbled, worked and jerked - until he inexorably came, gushing a thick load of salty cum into her mouth...

...and she swallowed it. Every drop.

Every single drop...

...and she thanked him for giving it to her.

Then, once more, she moved on - and her earlier thought about reaching orgasm came back to haunt her as she was laid out onto the extra-wide, padded-leather surface of the 'coffee table' to allow the man she'd chosen to spread her willing legs and slip[his throbbing man-meat deep into her wet cunt and begin pounding away.

Already 'primed' by her first fuck, she had no problem reaching orgasm this time - it hit her like a freight-train, hating herself for how much she was enjoying the pleasure that came from being fucked by a woman even as her body writhed and thrashed in true ecstasy, massive tits bobbing and swaying roundly on her chest.

The next man also gave her an orgasm, bent over the bar with her legs spread, huge tits swaying in rhythm to his thrusts...

...and she was still helplessly, guiltily feeling the pleasure of the orgasmic afterglow from that one when she sank to her knees in front of another man for her second blow-job of the evening...

..and then a guy wanted to tit-fuck her, which she willingly allowed, mind spinning helplessly...

...and then, with blessed relief, she found her body, sticky with come, gathering up her discarded clothing and leaving the room, and she was more happy than she'd ever been in her life that the horrifying spectacle was over> Almost eagerly she experienced her body climbing into the shower, careful not to wet the shaken-out mane of hair as it cleaned cum from itself...

...only to go back out into the wardrobe room after drying off, where she helplessly watched herself pick out another sexy outfit, this one of a very naughty 'cow girl', complete with pink-and-whine vinyl holsters hosting plastic 'six-shooter' cap guns - guns that she fired into the air as she pranced back into the living-room atop high-heeled cowboy boots, using a thick southern accent to announce the beginning of 'round two' of the night-long 'festivities'...

She lost track of how many times she sucked or fucked the men, how many times she kissed or was kissed, how many times her huge tits were fondled, her taut as groped.

Every hour, on the hour, she found herself showering and changing into a sexy new outfit, a ten minute respite from the constant sex every hour - and while her reeling mind struggled to come to terms to the impossible that was happening during these brief breaks, her body tingled and itched as if eager to get back to the 'fun'.

Which she did, as soon as attired in a new sexually enticing costume. Eight o'clock: Sexy nurse.

Nine o'clock: An extraordinarily compliant 'Dominatrix'. Ten: French maid.

Eleven, naughty secretary.

Buxom ballerina. Chesty cheerleader. Busty belly-dancer. Full-figured fire-fighter. Promiscuous policewoman.

Each outfit on just long enough for the guys to appreciate it - and then she was stripping out of it to free her body for the purpose of the evening:

Fucking and sucking. Sucking and fucking. On, and on, and on...

Overwhelmed by the constant barrage of sex, Lisa lost all track of time, her helpless mind dazed and confused as her body was fondled and used... until, at some point in the morning, she slowly came to realize that it had been some time since that had last happened.

Slowly, her body slicked with cum, her tits, crotch and throat aching from all the attention she'd 'insisted' on, Lisa pulled herself up off the couch - and realized it was well into morning, and all the men had left.

Slowly, stiffly, she walked through the house cleaning up, her mind still dazed, no longer seeking answers or truth or any cohesive thoughts whatsoever as her body mechanically cleaned first the house, then herself.

Freshly showered, she almost failed to notice that she was clothing herself in an outfit identical to the one she'd awoken in that very afternoon - and, bemused, she found herself walking heavily and tiredly to the kitchen, where she descended the stairs into the basement.

Body still stiff and sore for the sexual acrobatics of the night, she quite willingly curled up onto the ratty old arm chair, closed her eyes, and gave her whiling, screaming, uncomprehending mind over to the blessed oblivion of a deep, dreamless sleep...

Suppressing a salt-and-something flavored belch that rasped in his sore throat, aching in muscles he didn't even know he had, Lee Dizlinger forced his apparently lead-plated eyelids to open...

BACK TO FUN ZONE

SUMMARY: Two author, one female one male, who both write "relationship" books are tricked into switching bodies to see how the other REALLY lives.

Opposing Viewpoints

By Gunslinger

Richard Hampton sipped at the coffee in the gold-rimmed china cup, nodding appreciatively at the flavor. "This is very, very good, Miss Black."

The slender, gray-haired woman behind the big cherry-wood desk smiled. "As I said, Mr. Hampton - call me Eloise. With my sister - co- owner and co-manager - also being Miss Black, we prefer to use first names with customers and potential staff."

"I wouldn't dream of using your first name, my dear, unless you call me Richard." The tall, broad-shouldered man insisted, a twinkle in his green eyes.

"That certainly seems fair... Richard." Eloise Black allowed.

"Now, I must say that I am quite flattered by your offer to be on staff - but I don't understand it. While I have earned some recognition as the author of relationship guides, I would think that a relationship counseling retreat such as this would only hire accredited staff."

Eloise smiled at her raven-haired guest. "Well, usually, yes - but we have a very special 'problem client' that only your expertise can assist in helping. So, this may only be a short term employment, or it might last quite some time."

"Well, let's hope for the best." Richard said, rising as his host did. Dressed causally in tan slacks, a white cable-knit turtleneck and a dark blue blazer, the twenty-nine year old man towered over the five-foot-six Miss Black by a good foot as he followed her towards the door to the foyer of the offices, where he would meet this problem client.

As he took three quick steps forward to get the door, he smiled and said. "I only hope that I can help this..."

"...poor misguided soul..." Marianne Korpikov said as she stepped into the foyer with Lenore Black just behind her - then she stopped dead, staring at the tall, devilishly handsome man across the small foyer, her surprised look fading as her eyes narrowed.

"What..." She asked in a cool, brittle tone. "...is he doing here?"

Forcing an urbane half-smile to his lips, the tall, goateed man wagged a finger at the tall, slender blonde. "Now, now - there's no call to be unpleasant, my dear Miss..."

"Miz." Marianne corrected through tight lips.

"...Korpikov." Richard finished, wincing slightly at the tone she put in her correction.

The two of them looked at each other across the ten-foot distance between them, differing expression on their faces.

Marianne was a tall, slender woman who was probably quite shapely - although her severely tailor charcoal suit did little to reveal that, other than the noticeable swelling of the taut, unflattering material over her chest. Her platinum-blond hair was slicked down to her head, barely rimming the top of a classically beautiful face that managed to reveal its beauty despite the complete lack of any make-up or jewelry. Her mannish loafers not providing any extra inches, she was still only a half-dozen inches shorter than the man she was barely keeping from sneering at.

The two knew each other - although they had never met before now. Instead, they had seen each other on TV, had read each other's book - because for ten weeks, their diametrically opposed relationship guides had juggled the number one and two spots of the New York Times Non-Fiction Bestsellers list. Each saw the other of the prime example of what was wrong with the other gender, a living embodiment of the 'worst case' person from their books.

Richard saw Marianne as a 'masculinist', a woman who tried to deny her own gender and be domineering and self-centered.

Marianne, on the other hand, saw Richard as being slick, shallow, condescending - he even advocated holding doors open for women, for God's sake!

Now, she glared at him while he studied her with a hint of civil amusement....

"I'm afraid that we've misled you." Eloise said to the both. "We actually called you here, because we have been watching your long- distance animosity through TV and print, and have decided that you, more than anyone else we have ever met, are in need of our... unique services."

Marianne's eyes widened in disbelief. "What? You lured me here, thinking I'd go through your two-week course with... with. " She waved a hand at Richard. ". that?"

Richard smiled sadly. "I'm afraid that I must agree with the gist - if not the delivery - of Miss Korpikov "

"Would you stop that?" Marianne demanded.

Richard blinked. "Excuse me?"

"Acting like I'm a poor retarded..." Marianne began hotly.

"Please, please!" Lenore said, gently - and her very gracious, proper nature was enough to stop the tall, svelte woman's growing tirade. "You see, we know that you can benefit from a very unusual service. You see, there is a secret behind our success rate - and that secret is, for want of a better phrase, witchcraft."

"Excuse me?" "Huh?"

Eloise smiled kindly. "Oh, dear me - yes. We are... 'purveyors of magical and emotional metaphysics'." she said in a certain tone of voice that indicated a quote of some sort, although neither of the interested parties recognized it.

Her sister took up the explanation. "Quite simply, our method is the most straight-forward application of the old 'put yourself in somebody else's shoes'. You see - we use magic spells to exchange two people's consciousness. Then, we simply deny them a return exchange until they are able to behave like reasonable adults in each other's presence."

"Look, I don't know what sort of..." Marianne started in a half-angry, half-cautious tone...

The two sisters lay a hand on each of their charges, making some sort of obscure gesture with the other.

"...scam you're running here, but..." Richard continued without a noticeable break, his face set in the firm, annoyed lines that had been on another face until a second ago - then he stammered to a stop, gaping across the foyer at Marianne....

...who stared back in equal shock. "Good Lord!" She exclaimed. "You. you're me!"

"You see - painless and easy." Lenore said. "Your therapy starts immediately, and it includes nobody but yourself. When you are ready to face society as a functioning couple - even if it be as mere acquaintances - then we can switch you back."

The two authors stared at each other, then down at their own bodies...

Only, that wasn't the right terminology - for, when they were staring at the person across from them, they were staring at their own bodies.

In an instant, with no 'Hollywood' special effects, their minds had been swapped, leaving them in each other's body. Whirling, Richard.... the body of Richard, that was... shook a finger in Eloise's face. "You.. you put us back in our bodies!"

The old woman showed no fear, shaking her head sadly. "I'm sorry - our measures may seem harsh, but we allow no exceptions. In that body you will stay, until you and 'she' can deal with each other in an intelligent manner. Being able to see the other point of view will aid you greatly, we have found."

"But..." Marianne (the body of her, at least - the cadence, if not the voice, was pure Richard.) "...look here! Surely, not all your clients are success stories. What do you do if a relationship is completely irredeemable?"

Lenore blinked, as if surprised by such an 'elementary' question. "Like we said - we cannot allow any exceptions. Those who do not learn to live with the personality of the other person must therefore learn to live with their form - for the rest of their natural born lives." She smiled sweetly. "We find that this serves as wonderful incentive."

The two switched authors stared at the 'sweet' old lady.

Handing a key to Richard, Eloise smiled. "You'll be sharing bungalow 12 for the duration of your stay. We wish you the best of luck." Then the sisters individually turned and re-entered their office, closing and locking the heavy oak doors behind them.

"No.. no,no,no,NO!" Richard said, shaking his head in disbelief. With a stride subtly different than that body had ever used, he walked to the bench along the wall and slumped down on it. "This can't be happening - it can't!"

Marianne was staring at her hands with an amazed expression. She shook her head, braking the mild trance. "I.. I think it is real, my dear..."

Richard came off the bench like a torpedo being launched, face going a beat read as his male vocal-chords produced more sheer volume than the female personality running them had ever had to command.

"STOP DOING THAT!"

Marianne involuntarily twitched backwards as her old body stalked towards her. "What...?"

"Even with me in this... this.. hairy ape body, you oh-so-carefully modulate your tone and pick your words to make it clear to stupid, emotional, female me. Oh, stay calm, stay pleasant, don't actually say anything important, make sure to be nice and condescending, while doing your little 'who me? I'm the image of civility' routine, as if it's fooling anybody smarter than a goddamned..."

Despite the massive difference in muscle mass between them, when Richard arrived and started pushing his strong new finger against the shoulder that had been his own until a few minutes ago, the new persona inhabiting Marianne's body gently pushed the finger aside and spoke calmly.

"Perhaps we should continue this in the privacy of the bungalow..." She suggested, seeming surprised to hear her feminine voice as she commanded the words to emerge.

"Like hell!" Richard said, angrily, stalking towards the office door on his muscular new male legs. "I'm going to barge in there and..." "Um, Mari... Richard." Marianne said, finding that calling her old body by the female appellation just felt wrong.

At the sound of the masculine name, Richard whirled, eyeing his old form. "What did you call me?" Ignoring the question, Marianne pointed at the door. "I don't think storming in there would be a good idea." "Oh? Why not?" He asked angrily.

She smiled sadly, the polite, soft expression looking oddly... 'comfortable' on a face that wasn't used to it. "They are witches. I know you're not too thrilled with my male body - but I like it, and I'd hate to have it turned into a frog, or some such."

Richard clenched his fists in frustration at having to admit the truth of the statement. "Fine!"

Turning, he stalked out of the Foyer. Startled, Marianne took off after him, but his longer legs left him with a speed advantage that was slight but - with the head start - enough. Marianne was just reaching the porch of bungalow twelve when the door slammed, followed by the unmistakable sound of bolts being thrown.

Marianne paused for a moment to catch her breath. Even as she felt her breathing slow to what she presumed was normal, her mind was going over the new and.. intriguing sensations that running in this body created. She was less than thrilled with the situation, too, but that didn't mean she was completely incapable of appreciating whatever new information she might pick up and file away - including the different way her new hips moved when she ran or walked, and especially the fact that, whatever size breasts she now possessed, running braless wasn't necessarily a good idea.

Straightened, she knocked firmly but not insistently on the door. "Richard?"

"Don't call me that!" Her old male voice shouted back. "I am not Richard - I'm Marianne, trapped in your body!"

"Trust me, I know." Marianne called back. "But I think it might be for the best if we used the names that match the identification our bodies are carrying, to avoid public embarrassment... and I think you should let me in."

Marianne could practically hear Richard wracking his mind for a good excuse to refuse her entry - but this was his 'real' body, and any harm done to it was done to him.

Also - unless they managed to be in the same room as each other without killing one another, regardless of the body they were in, then they'd be stuck like this for life.

Even the sound of the dead-bolt snapping back somehow sounded... grudging.

"All right - come in." Richard said, stiffly, opening the door. Before he could change his mind, Marianne slipped in the opening and pushed the door shut and locked it.

"Now, look..." Marianne said, reasonable. "I don't like this any more than you do - but it isn't the end of the world. All we have to do is..."

Richard's lip curled in a sneer, and he waved a fist in front of the face that he used to own. "What you have to stop doing, first of all, is treating me like some goddamned moron!"

Marianne blinked, then spoke in a very, very cautious tone. "Look, this is, I believe, the third time you've accused me of talking to you in a condescending tone, and I'm not sure what you're talking about..."

"That!" Richard yelled, pointing his thick finger at her. "What you're doing right now. Playing Mister 'oh-so-civilized'. I know you're goddamn well as pissed as I am, but here you are, pulling this.. this.. 'fake' persona so that poor, emotional, womanly me looks and feels so stupid next to you, just because I have feelings..."

"Whoa! Whoa!" Marianne said, holding up her hands - and pausing for a second, startled by the sight of the slender, feminine hands, even though he'd 'intellectually' expected it. Pushing past the surprise, he continued. "If I understand you correctly - you're mad at me because I don't just... let my emotions take control?"

"No!" Richard said, stomping into the living room of the small house and dropping onto the sofa. "I'm mad because you're doing it to make me feel 'pathetic' next to the oh-so-in-control you. Men either let all their emotions go, like when they beat on women - or they prove that they're so much more 'civilized' than us poor dumb 'bitches' by pulling the routine you're pulling!"

Marianne blinked, then sat down in a chair across from Richard. "Look, I know that you're not going to want to believe this - but while I do consciously rein in my emotions, it certainly doesn't have anything to do with making you feel... inferior in anyway. It's simply the way I am."

"Oh, yeah, right. What, do you think I'm stupid, or something?" Richard sneered. "No, I don't - I'm just confused because I don't understand your hostility."

"Oh, come on." Richard said, hotly. "Every thing anybody does has a reason, and the only reason you could be pulling this routine must be to make yourself look 'better'. Since there's only two people here, and I know damned well that you're not trying to seduce me, then I must be the person you're trying to look better than." He lifted his hands in 'victory'. "Go ahead - refute it!"

"You're partially right." Marianne said, quietly - and the admission startled Richard, who'd expected a flat denial. "The only mistakes in your reasoning are the 'why' and the 'who'. As you pointed out, there are two people in this room."

Richard blinked. "Uhhhhh... huh?"

Marianne sighed. "The person I'm trying to be 'better' than - is myself. When I get emotional, I - like many people - do stupid things. Loose control and 'go off the deep end'. I don't like that." She shrugged. "So - I try very carefully to control my temper - not to impress or degrade anyone else, but for myself."

Richard snorted.

"And that..." Marianne said, pointing at her old body. "Is your biggest problem."

"What?" Richard asked, bemused.

"You may think I put on too much of an 'act' - but you don't put on enough of one." "What the hell's that supposed to mean?" Richard asked angrily, sitting up straight.

"Well - part of life is 'compromise' - meeting the world half-way. You seem to insist on saying 'here I am - and if you don't like it, then go to hell.' You refuse to... well, to soften up a little bit and let yourself try and..." She waved a hand in annoyance, trying to find the right word. "...evolve."

"Evolve?" Richard snorted. "Yeah, right - 'evolve' into the compliant, brain-dead, scantily-clad bimbo the male-dominated world wants to see."

Marianne sighed. "I don't know what happened to get you onto this 'anti-man' thing..." Leaning forward, she fixed Richard with her gaze. "Look - contrary to what you may think, I've never advocated that. I've always said that woman are equal - but different. You seem determined to be a 'pseudo-man', rather than a strong, confident woman. There's no reason on earth why a woman can't be an equal without losing her femininity."

"Oh, yeah, right." Richard rolled his eyes. "That's about as likely as a man who has a real, honest to god sense of 'fairness' that women seem to have."

Marianne sighed. "You might be right - because you're in a man's body know, and you're more interested in being hostile than you are about trying to get back to your own body."

Richard blinked, then grimaced - stung by the accusation, which was all-too-accurate. They needed to be able to pass themselves off as people who could at least stand each other's company - and out of the two of them, Marianne was the only one who was being polite and reasonable - even if that was what Richard found so damned grating, he had to (reluctantly) admit that it was more than what he was doing.

"Well, you're not exactly winning any points in my books." Richard retorted angrily, and illogically. "Excuse me?" Marianne asked.

"Well, in your books you keep saying that being female is just a case of a human being born into that gender - that, understanding that, there's no reason to be 'ashamed' of being female. Well - you're a woman now, and I don't see you acting so damned proud of it!"

Marianne's jaw tightened and she took a deep breath. Obviously, the situation hadn't changed Richard's nature at all - just as always, when he failed with logic, he went off on an emotional rant as if it actually....

Well, if he wanted to change the rules, she could play the game too.

"If that's your basis of judgment," Marianne retorted, "then you're not winning any prizes either."

"Huh?"

Marianne waved a hand at her old body. "Look at you - finally a chance to show the world what a 'real man' should be - and you're being as aggressive, uncaring and stubborn as you always accuse men of being."

"Hey, look - I could be a better man than you ever were." Richard retorted angrily. "At least I'm on the right side of the gender barrier in this body. Not only are you too male-ego oriented to be able to pretend to be any sort of woman, you would rather die, now, then find out what like would be like if you actually had to be the type of woman you advocate in your books."

Marianne blinked - then grinned, suddenly. "I think, maybe, this might just work out." "Huh?" Richard asked - feeling stupid at the wonderful repetition he was managing.

"Well, we each wrote relationship guides, right? Described the best possible way for the other gender to be successful in public and private relations?"

"Yeah..." Richard agreed, slowly.

"Well, then - let's see who was right." Marianne suggested. "You try and be the 'perfect gentleman' as laid out in your book, and I'll be the 'perfect lady'."

"That's the stupidest..." Richard began.

"Chapter three, wasn't it?" Marianne asked, pointedly. "Something about a man shouldn't just arbitrarily dismiss a woman's idea, but discuss it and actually consider it?"

That snapped Richard's mouth shut in a hurry - Marianne was quoting his own work back at him.

"Sure, I'll discuss it." He said, in a patently artificial tone of reasonability. "How about discussing your suggestions about how a woman should dress, or the make-up she should wear."

Marianne flushed at the thought of acting as feminine as he'd advocated in his book - but two things were more potent than her embarrassment.

One was, of course, the desire to get her real body back. As strange as it would feel acting female, the truth was she was now female in body, and nobody on the 'outside' of their twisted situation would think her a 'pervert' for it.

Second - and almost as important...

...she wanted to show the stuck-up, antagonistic bitch now inhabiting her 'real' body that she was better than he was. No matter how bad things got, she was more 'man' than he was, and she could prove it - by being more feminine than he had managed to be when she was in this body.

"Fine." Marianne said with satisfaction. "Starting right this minute, we'll begin living out the advice we've been doling out. We're both so damned sure that we're right about how to maintain a good relationship - well, then, we should have no problem practicing what we preach, and that'll be enough to get our bodies back."

"Sounds good to me." Richard said in that over-exaggerated tone of civility - sure, deep down, that Marianne wouldn't be able to handle having to be what was expected from a woman in the male-dominated society that existed. Come hell or high-water, he'd prove to her that she was wrong, and he was right.

With retrained nods at each other, they went to the separate rooms provided for each of them...

...then, heads down and refusing to meet each other's eyes, went into the right room for the body they wore, instead of the mind that was controlling it.

* * * * *

The new Marianne looked at the collection of clothing that the original owner of the body had brought - and grimaced. For two reasons.

Which was odd - since the two reasons were almost diametrically opposed to each other.

The first reason was, of course, the fact that she was going to be wearing women's clothes at all. She was wearing some now - barely - but that hardly counted, in her mind. They'd been on this body when she'd arrived in it, and was more-or-less a 'side-effect' of the switch. Now, she was going to have to put women's clothes on, by conscious and free decision.

The second reason she grimaced was the fact that the original owner of the body she was now wearing had mostly mannish women's clothes. It was an odd situation to be in, she thought with a wry grin - she didn't particularly want to wear women's clothing, but the clothing she was 'willing' to wear for the sake of getting back her own, male body was clothing that the original Marianne wasn't particularly interested in.

'Thankfully' (another wry smile at that thought), she thought she could make-do with what was here, with a little bit of mix-and-matching.

Peeling off the severe suit she was wearing, the new woman stood in front of the room's full length mirror, clad only in a pair of 'sensible' cotton panties, and eyed her new form.

She was stunning. There was no other word for the body that she wore - and, though she didn't take pride in the fact that the female body she was stuck in was gorgeous, she could admire how it looked in the mirror.

It was slender and supple, with great muscle-tone and smooth, unblemished skin. The legs she now called 'hers' were long and well defined, leading upwards to the gentle swell of supple, slender hips. Her tummy was admirably taut, and her waist slender and finely curved.

Her Breasts... ah, her breasts... They were... perfect.

A 'D' cup, perhaps - just the right size, without being 'too much of a good thing'. Remarkable firm and round, like halved grapefruit in shape, but a bit larger - just about the right size to be a handful....

...in her old body, that is, she thought as she lifted one slender, long-fingered hand and cupped her new breasts, surprised at the pleasant sensation created by the simple act of touch., the nipples were surprisingly large - and surprisingly bright, almost a pink, looking delightfully tempting.

The rest of her was almost as good. The clothing the 'other' Marianne had worn had downplayed the fact that her body was as gorgeous as her face. The arms were a perfect balance between toned strength and slender grace, remaining utterly feminine from the slender wrist to the nicely rounded shoulders that led to the swan-like neck.

All in all, the body was one that most of the females of the 'civilized' nations would have been green with envious over, and would have done almost anything to have...

She couldn't help it.

She laughed. Not an all-out belly laugh, but a sort of snorting-giggling-chuckling routine as her efforts to stifle her own laughter caused her to laugh harder at the sheer irony of the universe.

This body was practically a perfect example of feminine grace and beauty - and the two 'souls' that had (so far) inhabited it were A) A feminist who thought that being feminine was a curse to be downplayed at all costs, and B) a man, who could admire the beauty of the body, but definitely didn't want to be in it.

With a sigh, Marianne turned to the task at hand - dressing this fantastic body in the clothing that her male mind thought it deserved to be wearing - while grimacing mentally at the fact that it was her putting the clothes on....

* * * * *

"God! What's taking..." The new Richard paused, having to concentrate on getting it right. ". her so long?"

He'd been waiting in the living room for a good forty-five minutes already, and that was on top of the few minutes it had taken him to get ready.

At first, he hadn't minded the wait - he was busy getting used to his new body. The easy power and the sense of strength was... amazing. He, as a woman, had always tried to project as sense of confident power, of easy control - and it had been a real struggle, especially cursed with a frail, unintimidating body. Now, he didn't have to try - with the tall, broad, brawny body he was in, it just seemed to easy from every pore. If nothing else, he now believed the original Richard's explanation about his mannerisms, trying to keep control of the power in this body....

...He just didn't understand why. After all, if you had that kind of authority and strength, why in God's name would you bother to rein it in, refuse to use what you'd been given? Now that he was in this body, he certainly didn't have any problem with using it to it's full potential.

What's more - clothes on this body were so much more comfortable. Part of it was the build of the body - but more of it was the fact that the male-oriented fashion industry made more comfortable clothes for men than for women, and he now got to experience it from the inside. He'd never felt so relaxed-yet-powerful.

If only he could figure out to do with the disturbingly large cock he'd 'inherited'. He just couldn't seem to find a position where it was completely comfortable, and he had to be careful how he sat and moved, or it could be very disconcerting.

Richard straightened as he heard the sound of heels tapping on the floor of the hallway, and he rose. "About bloody ti..." he started. then his jaw dropped and he stared at Marianne as she entered the room.

Staring at the bottom, a disbelieving Richard let his eyes slowly travel up the new woman's body.

First, there was the shoes - the only pair of heels that she owned, for very formal occasions, they were black suede pumps with gold accents and four inch gold-toned heels. She was also wearing one of the two pair of pantyhose that she owned, this one the black pair.

The pantyhose disappeared under the hem of a black skirt. Except - the skirt was a lot shorter than it should have been. It had been nearly floor-length, and voluminous. Now, it was cut to just above the knees, and quite a bit tighter than it had been. Obviously, part of the time had been spent on altering the skirt.

The top - now, that was something else altogether.

Unable to find anything she deemed acceptable, Marianne was wearing a pink silk negligee, tucked under the skirt and doing a fabulous impression of a spaghetti-strapped silk tank-top, that was quite a bit more form-fitting than it would have been hanging loose, thanks to the white leather belt that pulled the skirt tight over her waist, with the silk garment trapped underneath.

She was also wearing make-up. Pale pink lipstick, mascara, a hint of blush, a touch of eye-shadow. For a second, Richard couldn't figure out where the cosmetics had come from, as she just didn't own any....

...then recalled the small, basic set that had come free with the suitcase he, as Marianne, had purchased for the trip. He'd stuffed the little case in the side pocket, and promptly forgotten about it.

Obviously, Marianne had found it.

She'd also taken all of the gel from her short hair, then brushed it into a loose sort of style over the back and ears, curling it with a curling-iron above her face and at the bottom of the style.

"I... don't believe it. " Richard said, stunned - who though she had the guts to go so damned feminine? Of course Richard knew that a lot of it came from the need to show him up, but still...

"You like?" Marianne asked with a very nervous, unsure smile, turning around slowly - the speed mandated by her unfamiliarity in heels. As long as she moved slowly and without any sudden changes in direction, she could manage all right - but that was about it.

Richard was about to make a retort about the ex-male's choice in clothing...

...then blushed as his new 'equipment' gave a little, involuntary twitch at the sight of his old, feminine body all 'femmed up'.

"I.. guess I do." Richard allowed, grudgingly. Then, calling on the easy power of his body, he straightened and let himself be commanding. "So, I thought we'd go out for dinner. Sound good to you?"

It was a test, on many levels. The first was to see how she would react to him taking a measure of control, as she had advocated in her

- Richard's - books that a woman shouldn't feel insecure if a man wanted to be.. manly. The second part was to see how she'd react at the thought of going out in public like that.

Richard was expecting an outburst, or something - instead, Marianne winced slightly - then smiled. "Sounds wonderful." She agreed.

Richard wanted to respond to that - but each of them was now playing 'in character', from their respective books, and Richard was damned if he was going to be the first one to drop out of character. Hell - being a man was easy. It was Marianne who was going to snap under the pressure of being a woman in society.

"Okay - then let's go." He said, grabbing 'his' keys, wallet and jacket. She nodded, grabbing 'her' purse and jacket.

Locking the door behind them, Richard enjoyed the easy power of his body as he walked swiftly and firmly down to the car, unlocking the driver's side door and sliding inside. He started the engine, then watched as his old body walked around the car, reached the passenger's side door....

...and just stood there.

For a second, Richard just stared at her, then he leaned over and pushed open the unlocked door. "What's your problem? Change your mind?" he asked, with a grin at the thought he'd won so easily. "No, Richard." She said, sweetly. "I was just waiting for you to get the door for me."

Rolling his eyes, Richard put the car into gear and headed out.

It was so galling that Marianne just wanted to scream.

The clothes. The heels. Being female, and heading out to have dinner in public - and with this asshole in her real body, no less.

She didn't scream, though - no matter her true feelings, she had to focus on being 'genteel'. Calm, sweet, in control of her emotions. Not to say she had to be wimpy - she just had to keep from acting the way Richard had acted when she had this body.

Namely - like a first-class bitch.

She was damned if she was going to give up. She was going to prove that her views were viable - even if it felt like she wanted to kick the crap out of something.

* * * * *

Pulling into the parking lot, Richard climbed out of the car and headed towards the door....

...then stooped when he realized that Marianne wasn't following. Sighing, he mentally cursed and went back to open the door for her. Stepping out of the car, she flashed him a smile. "Thank you." She said, holding out one hand and waiting expectantly.

Feeling utterly ridiculous, Richard cocked his elbow, and she slid her arm through and let him escort her into the restaurant. They reached the doors to the restaurant....

...and she paused, obviously waiting for him to open the door and let her go in ahead of him.

The hell with that< Richard thought. She was in the body of a man, and that gave her a new power in life. She didn't like it, and was looking forward to getting her own body back - but being able to deal effectively with Marianne didn't mean that he had to play up to all her little gambits. They just had to get along, not be utterly subservient to each other.

With this body, he didn't have to be subservient to anyone.

Pushing the door open, he stepped through and let it swing shut behind him. When he was a woman, he refused to let a man open a door for her - so now Marianne could live with doing it herself.

Richard, feeling proud at his strong, confident refusal to play her game, started towards the Maitre D's station...

"Hey, buddy."

It took a second for Richard to realize that it was him that the guy was talking to. Turning, he faced the tanned, slender young man who'd called out to him.

"Yeah?"

The guy was looking at Richard with an odd look. "Aintcha forgettin' somethin'?" Richard blinked. "Excuse me?"

The shorter, more portly older man on the tanned guy's left chimed in. "Your date - you just left her standing there."

Richard frowned slightly. "What the hell business of it is yours?" He asked, letting his new voice get deeper, more threatening. "She can open her own doors, you know. It's not like she's handicapped or anything. Holding doors open for women is out-dated and sexist."

"Oh, is that right?" Tanned Boy's date asked, in sarcastic anger. "Well, maybe nobody told your date that. Maybe she - like me - likes a man who's a gentleman, and who's willing to show a little respect, make a little effort."

She rose from her chair and poked a long-nailed finger into Richard's ribs. "What's more, I happen to be a successful ad executive, an able athlete and a firm believer in women's rights - and I'll have you know that I don't find anything degrading about having a man try and be nice to me."

Looking at the trio of pissed-off people, Richard did a hasty re-thing. He'd never realized that maybe there was more than just a male-driven inertia involved in 'archaic' gestures. He still didn't agree with them - but, obviously, at least some of society still did.

Grudgingly, Richard went back and opened the door for Marianne, who'd stood waiting patiently.

"Thank you." S he said, warmly, as if nothing had happened. Fuming silently, Richard walked with her towards the main dining room. "Hey, Miss?" the Ad Exec called. "This one... maybe you should throw him back."

"Oh - he was just raised wrong." Marianne called back, with a smile. "I'm training him."

Richard clenched his new jaw tighter - but refused to be the first one to 'break', and fought to keep himself in control as they were escorted to their table.

* * * * *

God - how humiliating this was. Everything - from Richard's acting like an asshole, to being female in public...

...to the way guys eyed her stunning body side-long.

She wanted to tell the closet guy who was admiring her slender, shapely body to mind his own damned business... instead, he gave him a sweet, but impersonal, smile - and had to fight a reaction as he blushed and look away.

"I'm sorry, Marianne."

Blinking, she turned her attention to Richard - who was looking across the table with a mortified look.

"Uh... excuse me?" She asked.

"The door - I don't know what I was thinking. Can you ever forgive me for being so... stupid?"

"Of course..." She said, pasting a forgiving smile on her lipstick-coated lips - and wondering what the hell he was up to.

Mortifying - that was the word for the syrupy apology he forced out. Still, he had to do it - because he'd finally caught onto her game.

She was trying to make him look bad. She knew that he knew that he had all the power now, being on the right side of the gender barrier - and she was playing at being the 'helpless female'. If she'd been acting the way a real woman acted, there wouldn't be a problem - but by 'going limp', the slightest infraction on his part made it seem as if their failure to get along was all his fault.

Well... no matter how galling it might be, he could defeat that by making sure that he countered her every 'poor-little-woman' routine with a 'sensitive man' routine. He knew that she'd burst if she had to play the 'soft little woman' routine for too long.

He wasn't going to lose this contest of wills. Not to 'Marianne', the sexist bastard who was using her own body to play against her.

* * * * *

Unlocking the door with a smile, Richard allowed Marianne to walk into the bungalow ahead of him.

He couldn't believe that she'd lasted this long, playing the routine she was. Still - it wasn't as bad as he'd first feared it would be, for him. After all, once he'd decided he was going to counter her act with his own, it had even become sort of... 'fun'.

Once he'd caught on to her routine, he'd discovered he had a lot of room to play around in - and tighten the screws on her. As long as he remained polite and 'sensitive', he could do all sorts of things that were more humiliating to her than they were to him - and she either had to go along, or finally break character. So far, she'd gone along - but he was sure he could push her past the point where she could keep this up.

The best part of it - at no time did it look like he was doing anything to her. It was perfect - even if it was demeaning to play so wimpy and 'sensitive', especially now that she had the real power.

Still - he was sure he was going to win this contest of will. He just had to keep nudging it up a notch. Like....

"Why don't you sit here, gorgeous?" Richard asked as he sank onto the couch, patting the spot right beside him. He knew that she didn't want to sit that close to him, didn't want to play the act that she liked him... maybe she'd finally 'break'...

"Sure, handsome." She said, settling in beside him and kind of cuddling up to his shoulder. Damn.

She wanted to scream at Richard, she wanted to slap him....

...she wanted to stop cuddling up against his male body, once her own. The thought of cuddling with a man was making her flesh crawl.

But she fought through it, acting as if there was no place she'd rather be. After all - her part was easy, in a way. It might be humiliating, but all she had to do was 'go limp', and hold tight to her real emotion.

It must be driving him nuts to see her being so 'wishy-washy' and feminine. It couldn't be all that much longer before he cracked - after all, he was making obvious attempts to force her to stop, so he must be losing control.

So - despite the fact it was really creepy, she found the fact that he'd started running his hand up and down her leg as a good sign - it was so blatant an attempt to break her before he lost it, that it just redoubled her conviction.

Enough that she could work up enough nerve to try a counter-move...

Why wasn't she pulling away from his touch? He knew that it must be as creepy for her as it was for him for them to be fondling - yet she was holding firm and...

Then she leaned over, smiled up at him. and pressed her lips gently against his.

It felt so weird, he had to restrain an involuntary flinch. There was a mild pleasure to her touch - but the fact it was 'another woman' touching her made it surprising.

But not disgusting. What Marianne obviously didn't know was that he - as her - had more than a few lesbian experiences under her belt, and had enjoyed them more than she did any experience she'd had with men. She kept her true sexual preferences quiet, of course, for the sake of her books - but it definitely gave her an edge, here.

Marianne wanted to play? Fine....

Pulling her tighter, Richard turned the mild kiss into a more passionate one, slipping his tongue between her lips and waiting for her to pull away.

* * * * *

Her first instinct was to pull away. She was being kissed - by a guy.

Then logic kicked in - it wasn't really a guy, even though it was - it was her own body. It wasn't like it was somebody else - it was her that she was kissing, a male mind kissing a female mind, a male body kissing a female body.

Besides - there was no way she was going to be the first to back out. After a seconds hesitation, she kissed back every bit as passionately.

'Let's see how he likes them apples," She thought, as he let her eyes slip closed and concentrated on out-kissing him.

* * * * *

Oh, so she thought she was tough enough to keep up with him? Maybe, if the positions were the way they normally were, she'd have a chance....

...but not now. If she wanted to play, he'd prove that to her.

Still kissing her, he slid his hands up to her shoulders and began to slide the straps of her 'shirt' down her arms.

* * * * *

Obviously, he was getting desperate - but she wasn't going to give in.

Forcing herself to play out the act, she not only didn't flinch away as he slowly peeled off her shirt and began to fondle her bare tits, she made moans of pleasure - part of it acting, part of it from the actual physical pleasure....

...and part of it from pride at having driven him to such desperate measures so easily. He must know that he couldn't have lasted much longer with the 'status quo', and was trying to force her to drop out.

So - time to put more pressure on him.

"Oh... yes.. Richard..." She panted in a reasonable imitation of an aroused woman. "I want you, I want you bad. "

* * * * *

Richard almost lost it then - almost pulled away and gaped at wide-eyed before asking her what the hell she thought she was doing with her body.

Then, in that instant, he realized that was what she was hoping for - the fact that she was in his real body would keep him from letting her real body have sex with it.

Well... she didn't have to. it's not like she would actually go through with it.

And, since he was a part-time lesbian, and her body was hot, he actually had a raging hard-on. Let's see what she does when she sees that....

"Oh, Marianne - yes."

* * * * *

She almost panicked when he agreed - and began to rush out of his own clothing.

For a second, she almost called it off - then she saw the hard-on spring free from the confines of his pants, and she had to keep from laughing.

No wonder why he hadn't broken yet, she thought to herself with delicious glee. It all made sense now - and, in a twisted way, it was perfect. Tomorrow, she'd have her own body back - she didn't doubt it for a second.

After all, Richard was now experiencing the truth about men. All his complaints about the way men acted, railing against their self control - now, even though his mind couldn't possibly be aroused, he had a raging, almost painful hard-on for her body. He was experiencing what the male arousal was like.

It was as disgusting as hell - but if she could grit her teeth and let him go through with it, once the biological need to cum was gone he'd realize what would happen - and have to face the truth. After all his comments and snide remarks, after all those years of hate - he'd finally discover how powerful a man's 'hydraulic pressure' would be.

Forcing herself to smile in response was actually quite easy.

He couldn't believe it - she was going to go through with it! For a second, he was stunned - and then, mentally, he smiled. It was perfect.

The phrase 'go fuck yourself' was about to gain a whole new meaning. He was finally going to be able to show her - with finality - how degrading it was for a woman to have a man violate her, to use her as a sexual repository for his disgusting seed.

* * * * *

Lifting the now-naked Marianne from the couch, Richard carried her into his room.

He didn't want to give her any chance to back out - not after realizing the delicious nature of what was about to happen. It only the vaguest images of foreplay, he slipped into position, spreading the legs he'd once owned wide apart...

..and rammed his cock deeply into her, enjoying her so-called cry of 'pleasure.'

Eagerly, he began to fuck her, hard and quick - determined to make the most of this by cumming before she did. He was amazed to discover how good it felt, though....

She was overwhelmed by how good it felt to get fucked as a woman.

Oh, it was disgusting and perverted because it was 'homosexual' in a twisted sort of way - but she could hide those feelings and just let the physical pleasure show, because she knew that this was no fun for him - and the more she seemed to enjoy it, the worse it would be.

So, she let herself give in to the pleasure of a cock in her, moaning and tossing her head back and forth as her body rocked from the force of her first fucking as a woman.

Dammit - he wasn't going to be able to give her the final indignity of being unsatisfied.

His body had reacted enough over his arousal for her body to get ready - but he wasn't really a man, and didn't have the pent-up desires a man had, normally - he was too 'cool' at the start to cum that quickly.

Still, it was good enough - after all, she was suffering the fires of hell, having a cock in her, being fucked by a man - the disgust, indignity and humiliation should have her begging for him to stop.

* * * * *

"Harder, harder!" She cried, almost incoherently - and it was a genuine cry.

She was nearing orgasm - and it had never been this good as a man. Well - maybe once or twice - but this was an internal sensation, wrapping her from head to toe. It might be centered in her crotch - but it was thrumming through her entire body, creating waves of pleasure like none she'd ever felt.

It might be sick and disgusting - but it definitely had its good points, too.

He tried to meet her demands, pounding with all the power in his new body....

...but maintaining control was tough, as the pre-orgasm spasms shook his body, making him awkward and uncoordinated.

He now understood, somewhat, why men were so obsessed with sex - it was incredible for them. none of that horrible feeling of being penetrated, violated, sullied - all the sensation was concentrated in one part of the body, a part that he was in control of, that he was using to ram into her again and again....

* * * * * the came at the exact same instant, all pretense lost in the mingled cry of orgasmic pleasure as their bodies shook in ecstasy.

Afterwards, Richard rolled off of her body, and stretched out beside her. Laying side by side, they each waited for the other to display the horror and disgust they knew they must be feeling, while basking in their own pride and pleasure of their control, strength and power in the situation.

They waited so long. they fell asleep, unconsciously curling up against each other's warm body and entwining their limbs as they slept through the night.

* * * * *

Last night hadn't been quite enough - but this was sure to enhance the guilt, Marianne thought as she padded into the bedroom, carrying breakfast on a tray.

"wake up, honey " She purred, with a smile. "I've made you breakfast in bed."

Seeing her seemingly happy and not the least bit upset about last night would drive him nuts...

"Oh, baby, yeah. " Richard moaned - only partially feigned - while he basked in the genius of his move.

After the damned bitches 'bright and cheery' act, he'd almost 'conceded' - until he'd had this stroke of genius. If she wanted to act like she enjoyed sex - it gave him a great opening.

So - after lunch he'd managed to put her in the position of either giving up....

...or sucking on his cock.

He'd been shocked when - after some hesitation - she'd gone down on him. But, it had it's points. Getting blown felt great.

Best of all - it was as disgusting and sickening as heel. She couldn't take much more.

Then his pride at his plan was momentarily supplanted as he cried out and gushed hot cum into her mouth...

* * * * *

She moaned and gasped as his tongue lapped at her cunt, causing pleasure to thrum through her body.

She still had trouble coping with the fact that she'd actually sucked a cock - it had been disgusting. But it had allowed her to set up this, which might well be the final straw.

After all, after she'd sucked his cock, he couldn't have turned down her request - and so now he had given her a good half-hour of foreplay, including this, his second time eating her out.

If this didn't do the trick, she'd swing right into sex itself, which was sure to break... Her train of thought was lost as she orgasmed again....

* * * * *

Slamming the door to the car, Richard loosened the tie he was wearing and pulled it off, glad to finally be rid of it's constriction. Dashing up the steps to the door, he pushed it open and walked into his house with a big grin on his face.

"Honey! I'm home!" He called, brightly, tossing his suit jacket aside.

"Ummm.... good. " Marianne said with a sultry smile as she came out of the kitchen, heels clicking on the wood flooring. "I was getting lonely."

Walking up to her husband, she wrapped her arms around him and kissed him hungrily, grinding her body firmly against his. With the extra height of her six-inch spiked heels, it was easy for her to throw all her passion into kissing him, as they were the exact same height that way.

Finally, the broke the kiss and Richard stepped back, rather obviously eyeing his wife's slender, shapely body. The elegant-yet-flattering dress she wore revealed enough of it, after all.

"You're early." Marianne said, daintily pushing a lock of her long, flowing blonde hair out of her face. "I haven't even started dinner yet." "Good." Richard said, grabbing her and swinging her around. "Let's go out for dinner, and a movie... and, afterwards. "

She giggled at the suggestive way he trailed off. "Mmmmm... maybe we should skip dinner and the movie..." She said, huskily. "Nope, nope - this is a special occasion." Richard said, firmly.

"It is?" She asked, 'confused.'

"Yeah - two years, today, since.. the switch."

"is it?" Marianne said, with 'surprise' - she knew exactly how long it had been since they had switched bodies. "Yup. So go put on something frilly - we're going out."

With a last, lingering smile, Marianne headed up the stairs.

She still couldn't believe it - sometimes, all this - the marriage, the house, the massive increase in income as their new, joint books took the market by storm - seemed unreal.

It was perfect. After the two weeks had ended, the Black sisters had offered to change them back....

...but they'd refused, almost simultaneously. Neither one had been able to break the other, despite pushing further and further. Each one had decided they'd stay in their new bodies until the other one broke under the horror they were living.

She couldn't believe it - Richard's pride just wouldn't let him give up, despite the fact he must be in hell. So, she was finally getting her revenge on him. no matter how long it took, she could stand being female until he crumbled. After all, it might be disgusting, perverted, weird and sickening, in turns, but the pleasures made it bearable - especially since she was making Richard suffer by it.

Humming happily, she started the tub running.

Richard relaxed on the chair in the living room, with a big smile on his face. He still couldn't believe she hadn't finally crumbled - but that was okay.

He still hadn't gotten tired of making life a living hell for her. After all - now that she was 'his wife', he was fucking her two or three days, making her life a living hell with his legal right, as a male, to fuck her brains out - and pride forced her to pretend she enjoyed being raped regularly! It was great.

Oh, the power of being a male. Sooner or later, she'd crumble and she'd get her real body back, which would be great - but, until then, he'd just enjoy torturing her by his seeming enjoyment of his new life - and by forcing her to stay trapped in that 'frilly-housewife' routine as long as possible, fucking her into degradation and humiliation.

"Ready, honey?" Marianne said. As he complimented her on her outfit and escorted her towards the car, Marianne's smile widened.

He was using the 'anniversary' for an excuse to try and add the extra humiliation of going out in public. It amazed her, that after all this time, he still hadn't caught on to the fact that the worse he made it for her, the worse she'd make it for him. By treating that day that they'd been switched into each other's body as something to celebrate, he'd only increased her anger at him, her desire to torture him to the breaking point.

In fact, she thought with a malicious grin, right now I am so royally pissed of at him, right now I hate his guts so much, I despise him so intently....

In fact, I'm feeling so powerful right now, he though with a malicious grin, so full of energy and strength, so ready to finally break her....

Smiling 'lovingly' at each other, each one thought of the ultimate, worst, utterly horrible torment they could bestow on the other and decided that, as soon as they got home, they were going to give it their all....

...and fuck each other until they begged for mercy.

Out Of The Blue

By Gunslinger

"...met President Roosevelt today to discuss the drain of American Industrial workers caused by the twin conflicts against the aggression of Nazi Germany and Imperial Japan. The President assured. "

The tinny voice of the newscaster died as Nick Sponserelli shut off the ignition and let the big Packard coast to the small shoulder of the deserted rural road. Applying the brake to hold the car still on the slight incline, Nick pulled off his battered fedora and scratched at the dark, close-cropped hair before resettling the hat in it's accustomed place.

With a sigh, Nick settled back in the seat and gazed out at the darkness around him. It was times like these that he half-considered signing up for a hitch in the Army. At least Uncle Sam paid more than these nickel-and-dime snoop jobs, and there was the reasonable expectation of three squares and a bed at the Army's expense at Boot Camp. Of course, the downside was the fact that after the six- week course in Basic, you got shipped off to the Pacific or the Continent, with a good chance of getting your arse blown off. At least doing work as a private dick only risked the occasional pot-shot from an irate husband who wasn't happy about being watched while he two-timed the little missus with some cheap floozy.

Shaking his head, Nick pulled out a Lucky strike and lit it, chasing the smoke down with a shot of rot-gut. Tucking his flask away, the PI checked his rear-view mirror. If the dame who'd hired him was right about her husband, a dark-blue Ford would be coming down this road some time in the next hour or so to visit the brothel a few miles down the road. Seeing nothing, Nick pulled out a copy of this month's Astounding, and rifled through the pages until he came to the latest Heinlein.

He'd never figured he'd enjoy reading speculative fiction - hell, aside from the occasional racy novel, any fiction at all - but Nick found the rather fantastic imaginations of these guys enjoyable because it was so far-fetched. Surprisingly, it was usually also pretty well written. Even Nick, who made a living out of finding inconsistencies and clues, couldn't find much 'slack' in the stories - if you were willing to buy the basic premise, that was.

Twenty minutes later, Nick tucked the pulp back into the voluminous inner pocket of his trench-coat as he spotted a flash of light in his mirror. Opening the vent window, he crouched down a bit to watch in the little round wing mirror.

The only problem was, when he did that, the light disappeared.

Frowning, Nick straightened and eyed the rear-view mirror. The light was reflected in the small rectangle again - but it was too high in the field of vision to be on the road, even allowing for the hill's extra height. The light was also too bright, and the wrong color, kind of a bluish-white.

"Army fly-boys." Nick grunted. Occasional, pilot-trainees in the Army Air Force liked to buzz the local cat-houses to give the ladies of the night a thrill. Shaking his head, Nick rolled down the window and leaned out slightly, wondering if it was a trainer, or one of the hot new P-47's the AAF was buying.

He knew in an instance that it was neither. The object was huge and round, seen more by the way it eclipsed the stars than from actual sight. Nick had barely registered this fact when the light suddenly became blindingly bright, and a loud hum, so deep it was more felt than heard, filled the air.

Squinting, Nick threw pulled the brim of his fedora lower to shade his eyes as he tried to make out what he was seeing. Some sort of new Army fighter? It didn't make any sense.

Then suddenly, a new sound filled the air. A high-pitched sound, it was so excruciatingly loud and piercing that Nick winced in pain. The sound seemed to be boring directly into his head.

Overwhelmed by sheer acoustical power at a specific frequency, Nick's synapses began to misfire, slowing down. Thought became confused and hazy, then slipped away completely as darkness claimed the PI as his hand fumbled uselessly for the holster containing his automatic.

* * * * *

For what seemed an eternity, all Nick knew were vague, confused sensations and images, surreal and disconnected, without any true sense of time or order. Then, out of a blackness as deep as the grave, Nick's senses began to come back to life, like a Stadium turning on its lights, one bank at a time.

First, there was just his sense of self. He was aware of his own existence, of who he was and the memories of his life - but it was as if he was in a black void, with no connection with the outside world. His first thought was confusion, not knowing what had happened to him. Then his next was that he was dead, or deaf, dumb and blind. Panic began to form as the consciousness of Nick Sponserelli searched for something - anything - to cling to.

As if in answer to an unvoiced prayer, he found something. Like a phonograph being turned up, his hearing began to come back to him. The sounds of birds chirping, branches moving in the wind, and other small sounds told him that not only was he not dead, but that he was in or near a forest or woods - presumably, the ones that lined the road where he'd stopped the Packard, his last clear recollection.

This was followed in quick secession by his other senses - smell and taste, sound...

Even before he hit 'sight', Nick knew something was wrong. Really, really wrong. Although he'd only had a few belts of rot-gut whiskey, his mouth felt like the morning after a three-day bender. Even worse, his head pounded and throbbed that bad as well.

But none of that held a candle to the decidedly odd sensations his body was reporting. It wasn't pain - aside from the occasional stick poking into his back - so it wasn't immediately classifiable. But the feel of his own body was definitely, alarmingly wrong.

Then Nick opened his eyes and sat up - and everything took a left turn from reality.

Even as he was sitting, the sensations were all wrong. It was a simple act, one he'd performed millions of times, in thousands of situations. Yet the simple act had never felt like this. His ass felt wrong - like it was padded out, yet still somehow as sensitive as ever. The sensation of his abdominal muscles were wrong to, ass was the odd weight on his chest that shifted slightly as he moved...

Then he was sitting up, and looking down at himself. Or, perhaps more to the point, herself - because Nick was staring down at the largest pair of female breasts he'd ever seen in his life, and they were thrust proudly from a slimmer, hairless torso that matched the rest of the body that now contained Nick Sponserelli.

"Holy hell!" Nick gasped, hearing the curse emerge in a high, clear, feminine voice. She was still dressed in her clothes - more or less. The shirt hung open, and the cuffs dangled over her hands. Her pants were almost painfully tight across the hips and ass, but loose at the waist, and much too long. His shoes, much too large for the much daintier feet she now possessed, lay to one side, beside her fedora.

It was a mind-numbing shock, and should have been enough to make most men sit numbly for at least several minutes. But Nick's brain was wired differently, trained by the years she'd spent as a PI, and a beat cop before that.

Her hand immediately dipped into her now-oversized trench-coat and withdrew her trusty Colt, which looked ludicrously large in her now dainty hand. In the same motion, she rose into a semi-crouch, eyes sweeping the terrain around her as she struggled to retain her balance. The unfamiliar weight and mass of her altered body made it a difficult task, especially the drag of the enormous breasts hanging on her chest, but she managed - barely - to keep from falling over.

A moment later, she relaxed slightly - all her senses told her there was no immediate danger. Holstering her gun, she turned her attention back to matters closer at hand.

Grabbing her things, she headed towards the road. As she moved, she eyed the trees around her - to her perceptions, there was something very wrong with them. They seemed to big, almost if they were... older?

Nearing the edge of the tree line, Nick slowed and inched forward until she could peer over the edge of the outer line of bushes without revealing herself. What she saw caused the half-formed theory in her mind crystallize into an unbelievable - but unarguable - fact.

She was in the future.

The area she was looking at was about where she'd parked 'last night'. The surrounding terrain verified that simple fact. But everything else was wrong.

Where there had only been an empty field, a house now stood. But although the general design of the house wasn't unusual, the materials it had been constructed of were. It had neither brick nor wood exterior, though the siding it did have had a slim resemblance to the clapboard Nick was familiar with. But it was the wrong texture, too smooth and even to be wood. Likewise, there were other, odd details that were out of kilter.

But perhaps the biggest was the vehicle that stood in the paved driveway of the house.

A mother was helping two children into the vehicle. Even that was slightly off kilter - the woman was wearing dungarees that were remarkably tight, and a scandalously tight, small undershirt without anything over it. But it was the vehicle that captured Nick's attention. It was a dark red, a shade he'd never seen on a vehicle before. The...car? looked like a rounded box on wheels, with a front end that vaguely resembled a bullet. It reminded Nick vaguely of the delivery vans used by some small companies, yet this was obviously a person vehicle.

"If this is how Detroit builds cars, then the future's gone down hill." Nick muttered to himself as he watched the indecently-clad woman climb into the vehicle and drive away.

Then the thought occurred to Nick that she wasn't exactly decent herself. Shirt gaping open, revealing two huge breasts, over-sized trench-coat and trousers, and a fedora atop a mass of long, unruly black hair.

Taking a quick look around, Nick assured herself that there was no sign of human life around. There might be a person still in the house, but if so, they were silent. Making a quick decision, Nick bolted awkwardly across the road, huge bosom bouncing annoyingly as she made it to the back of the house, the surrounding screen of trees blocking her from view.

She made her way to the back door. Hesitating for only a second, she smashed the window with one elbow, and reached in to unlock the door. Stepping inside, she looked around, slowly making her way through the house, looking for the items she needed.

One of the first things she found was a full length mirror.

Pausing, Nick looked around, then slowly undressed, examining her new body in the reflecting rectangle. She was stunning.

If you'd ignored the breasts, you'd see a stunningly beautiful Italian woman, with a slender, supple, olive-complexioned body and a long, wild mane of curly black hair framing a face with wide, high cheeks and full, sensuous lips.

But it was impossible to ignore the two massive, firm tits thrust from her chest. Topped by large, dark nipples, the round mounds of flesh were flawless, and almost defied gravity - and the imagination.

Forty-five minutes later, she was walking uncomfortably down the dirt road, towards town.

She was dressed in clothing taken from the house. A pair of the overly-tight dungarees - 'Levis' - clung tightly to her new, fuller behind, while a black short-sleeve shirt clung to her enormous, swaying tits. Over this, she wore her trench-coat, it's pockets stuffed - guiltily - with all the cash, and valuable-looking jewelry she could find.

But the most annoying thing was the footwear. The only thing she could find to wear was a pair of black suede boots. The boots came up to mid-calf, and had a three-and-a-half inch square heel that Nick was having a difficult time getting used to. But running around in her stocking feet was out of the question, so she gritted her new, even teeth, and made do.

But even more important than the physical goods she'd taken from the house was the knowledge she'd gained. The date, for instance... She was, by her personal viewpoint, nearly sixty years into the 'future'. And a gorgeous, huge breasted Italian woman.

Nick was still struggling to deal with these thoughts when she heard a vehicle pulling to a stop beside her. Turning, Nick braced herself...

...only to sigh with relief. First of all, because the vehicle looked more 'normal'. Although boxy, it wasn't as strange-looking as that other, box-like vehicle. But the second reason she was so relieved, it was because of the single word painted on each of the front doors.

TAXI.

"Need a lift, Lady?" The colored man behind the wheel asked with a grin. "I just dropped a fare, so I'm free."

Nick was a little leery about riding in a car driven by a colored man, but she wasn't looking forward to walking the distance to town. "That would be great - thanks." Nick said, sliding into the back seat. She also noticed the way the man eyed her straining shirt, but decided not to make an issue of it right now.

Half an hour later, Nick was staring out the window of the cab, stunned, as it pulled to the curb. The cabby had to repeat himself three times to get her attention - she was too busy staring around in shock at the changes.

What had been a somewhat sleepy, middle-sized city was now a bustling metropolis. Nick had never seen so many cars or people - nor so many different styles of clothing. Although she saw the occasion outfit that she deemed 'normal', the vast majority of the fashions were shocking and/or scandalous to her eyes.

Finally shaking herself out of her shocked daze, Nick turned back to the cabby. "Sorry?"

The cabby was eyeing her massive chest again as he answered. "I said, that will be thirty-two seventy five, lady."

Nick's jaw dropped. "What? For a ride. " She cut herself short, flushing intensely. She'd been so outraged, she momentarily forgot that she had no idea how the value of money had changed in more than half a century. It might seem like a fortune to her - but it was probably an honest fare. Apologizing in a mumble, she paid the cabby, and climbed out of the cab, feeling somewhat intimidated by the flow of humanity around her. More than one person took a chance to stare at her massive new bosom as she stood on the sidewalk, not sure where to go.

Picking a direction at random, Nick began to walk. For the first time, she realized just how much her altered physical shape, coupled with the heels on the boots, altered her stride. What had once been a firm, masculine walk had become a swivel-hipped, mildly sensual and undeniably female stride. That, coupled with the jiggle and sway of her enormous tits produced an embarrassing number of frankly admiring male stares.

She wasn't really paying attention to what was going on around her - she was too busy dealing with thoughts and realizations that were piling up in her mind. She was still struggling to deal with the most basic - that she was now a hugely-endowed woman. The only way she was dealing with it was by basically ignoring it. It was impossible for her to pretend it hadn't happened - every move she made merely reinforced the differences in her body. But she could refuse to deal with the consequences of the change. To think of it more in minute-to-minute terms - as if she was still male, merely dressed up as a woman, like an actor in drag or something. It wasn't comfortable, but it allowed her to continue to function, instead of breaking down emotionally.

She was also dealing with the realization that she was going to have to find a source of income before long. She'd thought she'd had plenty of money, but the cost of the fairly-short cab ride drove home the effects of long-term inflation. Her 'nest egg' was dismally small.

It was that thought she was dwelling on when her eye was caught by a display in a large window. Stopping, she stared at the display in the window, then pushed open the door and walked into 'Remora Used and Rare books and Magazines.'

The clerk, an older gentleman, looked up as the gorgeous woman of Italian extraction entered his store. His eyes drifted downwards - then back up, as his force of will overcame his instinctive reaction. He smiled. "Can I help you?"

Nick gestured at the display window. "I noticed your display of 'Forties Pulp' in the window."

The clerk nodded. "Oh yes - it's a shame, really, that there's so few good-condition originals left. They were so cheap and disposable..."

Nick nodded, and reached into the large inner pocket of her trench coat, pulling out the Astounding she was carrying. "Is this worth anything?"

The clerk's eyebrows shot up as he took the May, 1942 issue of Astounding, in near-perfect condition. Not only was it pristine in terms of wrinkles, dog-ears or tears, the paper was still as sharp and clean as if it had been printed yesterday. The clerk shot a glance at Nick, then carefully looked the magazine over with a magnifying glass, ensuring that it was, indeed, authentic.

"This is... amazing." The clerk said. He paused. "You're willing to sell it?"

Nick nodded, and the clerk took a deep breath. "I think, perhaps, I could offer you - one-fifty."

Nick blinked in shock - it had cost her fifteen cents to buy. She leaned forward, certain she'd misheard. "Excuse me?"

The clerk misunderstood, holding his hands up. "Okay, okay - two twenty. Sure, you might get more at auction..." Nick had to keep her jaw from dropping. "No - I don't want to go to the trouble. Two-twenty would be fine."

She walked out of the store, still slightly stunned at the worth of a simple pulp magazine.

Shaking her head - which gave her pause as she felt her massive mane of hair slide across her slender shoulders - Nick headed off, keeping her eyes open for a hotel. She'd take some time to get a room for the night - then find a library, so she could start getting caught up. With luck, she'd learn enough to be able to find a job before her money ran out.

As she began to... well, not accept, but handle the situation, she began to pay more attention to the surrounding area. She wasn't actually concentrating on any one thing, but letting herself fall into the old habit of scanning the surroundings, watching for threats or other...

Suddenly, for no apparent reason, her eyes fell on a store-sop window. She paused, slightly confused. Something had caught her attention, yet when she queried her instincts, there was no apparent reason. Her eyes rose to the sign above the display window - La Texturique - then returned to the large glass display, frowning slightly at the display of unusual clothing below the 'Going out of Business' banner. It was, apparently, a woman's clothing store - yet Nick had never seen fashions quite like these. Perhaps it was the unique style of the clothing that had so inexplicably grabbed her attention.

Shaking her head, Nick turned to continue on - but stopped. Something was nagging in the back of her mind, and although she tried to walk away, she just couldn't seem to make herself take that first step away from the store.

Giving in to her odd reaction - she'd learned to trust her instincts, if she didn't always understand them - she turned and went into the store.

The place was in disarray. Despite the display in the front window, which was complete and organized, the interior of the store was in shambles. Workmen were disassembling displays and racks, while others packed up different articles of clothing into various boxes and crates.

"Whoa - hey, hi!" a perky voice sounded at her elbow, and Nick whirled to find herself confronted by a short, slender young woman with hair that was blue on the right side, and a gloss red on the other. "Nobody at all comes in for the two months we're open. Then, an hour before we're gone - boom! A customer." The energetic young woman held out a tiny hand. "Hi, I'm Cyndi."

Nick blinked. "Nick...uh..." She said, as she realized that she couldn't very well introduce herself as 'Nick Sponserelli - although is was already too late...

...or not. Apparently, listening wasn't Cyndi's strong suit. The tu-toned girl merely assumed what she'd not really hear. "Nikki, you're in luck - can I give you such a deal on anything in the store!" She blinked, and looked around. "Um, anything not packed, that is."

Nick - Nikki - opened her mouth to demur - and was surprised to find completely different words emerging. "Great - I need a complete wardrobe..."

Nikki was shocked. Where the hell had that come from? Sure, she did need new clothing - but this wasn't the stuff she'd had in mind.

Apparently, it didn't matter. It was as if she needed to buy what she did - it was an urge that wouldn't be denied - well, not for long. The items that the urge demanded she buy wound up being purchased. If she refused the item the first time, the urge drove her absolutely nuts until she gave in. When she finally walked out of the store an hour later, it was loaded down with ten bags of purchases that, for an inexplicable reason, she had quite literally needed to buy. The only good thing about it was the incredible deal she'd gotten on everything.

Twenty minutes later, she found herself in a small, somewhat disreputable room in a woman-only 'hostel', watching the land lady step out of the 'efficiency apartment' with almost all of Nikki's remaining cash in return for two months residence. The apartment was tiny. The main room was combination living-room/bedroom/kitchen/dining room - The couch was a pull-out bed, and was beside the fold-out table built into the wall. The opposite wall was the small kitchenette - including something called a 'microwave' - that, although small, was functional. It even came with about three-dozen cans of stew and beans, left behind by the last tenant. Besides the main room, there was a small but complete bathroom, and a surprisingly large closet.

Dropping her purchases, Nikki slumped on the couch, mind whirling. That same strange urges had brought her to this place - which was completely inexplicable. How did her strange 'needs' know where this place was?

"What the hell is going on?" Nikki asked the ceiling, trying to get a grasp on the entire situation - not just the strange urges, but everything - the fifty-eight year old 'jump' in time, the inexplicable change in gender... everything.

And just as she asked the question, there was a knock on the door, which then swung open. Before Nikki could rise, a tall, slim woman dressed in a severely conservative business suit, stepped in and closed the door behind her.

"Hello, Nikki - my name's Sheila. I'm here to explain things to you." The older woman said, looking around the room with distaste. Nikki started. "Wha... How..."

Sheila waved a hand negligently. "Nikki, you are... an experiment. Run by beings from a distant planet. You were... abducted, then studied. Usually, specimens are disposed of, but you were kept, to be used as a sort of experimental Guinea pig." The woman dropped the purse she was carrying onto the couch beside Nikki. "Inside, you'll find valid ID, plus bank cards and credit cards. We'll supply all the cash you need."

Nikki looked at the purse, then back at Sheila. "I don't..."

Sheila frowned. "I am... a collaborator, I guess you'd say. I agreed to help the aliens, in exchange for a lucrative position in the government. You - you are a 'social experiment'. You will receive... commands. These will be obeyed, whether or not you wish to. Trying to resist will make it more difficult on you."

And before Nikki could ask any more questions, the woman opened the door and left, her short heels clicking away into silence.

Nikki made a move to go after her - and was grabbed by another one of the 'urges'. She struggled against it - but she was merely paralyzed by the struggle, and realized that, even if she succeeded, it was too late - Sheila was gone. Finally, the powerful need was too much, and she - unwillingly - gave in to it.

Nikki's first action, to her own surprise, involved a bottle of Vaseline. Driven by the literally overwhelming need, she smeared the jelly all over her long, sexy legs and firm, full ass.

The meaning of this became clear soon enough. One of her purchases was a pair of incredibly tight leather pants. The layer of Vaseline was necessary to get the incredibly tight pants on - and even that was a struggle. Once in place, the pants clung like a second skin, outlining every inch and curve of her long, shapely legs and firm, tear-drop shaped ass.

Next, Nikki found herself pulling on a black leather bra. It barely covered her large nipples, and displayed an awe-inspiring amount of her huge, creamy tits and deep cleavage.

Next came a black leather corset. Helplessly, she pulled into place and tightened it as much as she could, compressing her already slender waist by another three inches.

Nikki fought every step of the way as she also put on make-up, and jewelry. But while she managed to delay each step, the need finally won over each time, driving her to do it's will. It took two and a half hours, but she was finally attired and accessorized as the need demanded, right down to the knee-high black leather boots with their seven-inch spike heels.

Nikki was both disgusted and devastated. No matter how hard she'd tried, the need had driven her to do these things. It was like she was trapped in a body not her own, being controlled by some outside force.

Come to think of it, just throw in 'in a distant future', and that was exactly the situation.

Feeling helpless, Nikki barely put up a token struggle as she picked up the purse and walked out the door. She fought a little harder against the next urge - but within minutes, she was walking with the sexy, swaying stride that the need demanded.

Nikki had no idea where she was going. The 'need' drove her, providing her with simple 'directions' - she would reach a corner, and the 'need' to turn would overwhelm her. But it gave no clue to her final destination. The sun was beginning to sink behind the buildings around her as she continued on to her unknown destination, attracting the attention of men as she passed them, her huge-breasted, wasp-waisted figure and gorgeous facial features drawing admiring stares - especially considering her skin-tight, glossy attire that left little to the imagination, and her sensual, provocative stride. Nikki felt like she just wanted to curl up and die from shame as she caught the lust-filled looks of the men she passed.

She discovered her destination when she reached a metal door inset into a blank brick wall. She banged twice on it, and a small peep-hole opened up. A pair of eyes regarded her, then the door swung open, revealing Sheila, the woman who'd been by her apartment.

"You're late." Sheila said. "Follow me."

Helplessly, Nikki obeyed. Sheila led Nikki through the crowd of men seated at tables, to a large stage at the front, where a low bed rested. Sheila seated herself on a chair just inside the wings, while Nikki helplessly found herself climbing the stairs to the stage.

Then a heavy, pounding music started from somewhere, and she helplessly began to dance, sensuously and rhythmically. And as she danced, she found herself slowly undressing, baring her huge-breasted new body to the applauding men.

First came the corset. Slowly, string by string, she unlaced the leather garment. Once it was unlaced she swayed sensuously, holding it in front of her for a few, teasing seconds, before tossing it aside.

For several minutes, she danced, touching and fondling herself lewdly - and hating the fact that her own hands felt so good caressing her new figure, especially her enormous tits.

Then, helplessly, she also removed the bra that contained them, and threw it away. The men applauded as she fondled her massive tits, then brought a thick, erect nipple to her lips to lick and suck.

So it went, until she was standing completely nude before the men, having provide a lavicious strip-tease for their enjoyment.

Nikki tried to leave the stage then - but was unable to. Horrified, she watched as a quartet of men, completely naked men, walked out on stage.

All of them sporting absolutely enormous cocks, already rock-hard, thrusting from their crotches.

Three of the men stood by the low bed, while the forth came to stand directly in front of her, while the audience began to chant.

"Suck..suck..suck.."

Helplessly, Nikki sank to her knees, her immense tits swaying as she stared in mingled horror and fascination at the massive, thick cock inches from her face. Helplessly, she found her hands reaching out, encircling the massive member at it's base.

Then she leaned forward and let the head of the massive, throbbing cock fill her warm mouth.

Helplessly, she began giving the man a blowjob. Though she had no experience, she performed like an expert cock-sucker, her 'need' giving her all the instruction she needed. Her hands, mouth and tongue worked in unison on his huge, throbbing tool, it's massive length too much for her to take all at once. She sucked on the part she could take, while her tongue swirled over the massive purple crown of his head. Meanwhile, her dainty finger pistoned up and down the exposed section of his cock that she was unable to accept between her soft, full lips.

Unsurprisingly, it didn't take long for her to bring him to orgasm. For the benefit of the audience, she found herself pulling her head back and using her hands to bring him over the edge so that the audience could see the massive jet of cum that gushed into her mouth. It was too much for her to accept at once - she swallowed, trying to keep up with the flow, but it was a hopeless task, and thick, gooey strings of it dripped from her cum-splattered face to cover the slopes of her massive, round tits.

Desperately wanting to vomit, run away, or die, Nikki was unable to do any of these as she found herself being placed on the low bed. Helplessly, she reached to either side, and took one of the men's huge cocks in each hand. Helplessly, she began jacking them off, while a third man positioned himself - and thrust between her legs.

Nikki screamed. She wanted to scream in horror and disgusted, but what emerged was the scream of purest ecstasy as the man filled her hot cunt with his huge cock. He began to thrust into her with long, slow strokes, and her hands on the other two cock matched his movement as she tossed her head, crying out. Sensations like she'd never felt rocked her whole body with intense ecstasy, and she could not deny the incredible pleasure the man's huge cock created as he fucked her.

His strokes began to increase in speed, and her hands matched the new rhythm. The sensations increased, driving coherent thought from her mind as she became caught up in the intense ecstasy of her first female fucking.

Then the man began driving with intense, rapid strokes, and Nikki screamed like never before as she hit orgasm.

The sensations rocked her body, the pleasure overloading every nerve and synapse in her. She shuddered in the grip of ecstasy, not even noticing the other two men coming to climax and coating her dusky body with their hot, white cum.

Finally, Nikki came down from the orgasm, and noticed herself coated in cum, inside and out. It was in her hair, on her face, and dripping from her huge, firm tits. It's taste filled her mouth, and it's warmth radiated from her cunt. Disgusted and horrified, Nikki rose and headed for the wings as the audience applauded.

Nikki staggered from the stage, feeling disgusted, violated, horrified - and disgustingly satisfied. The urges - for now - were gone, and it was just her own mind in control of this over-endowed body.

Sheila was still sitting in the wings, a faint smile on her lips as she watched the cum-splatter Nikki.

"Why? Why are they doing this to me?" Nikki sobbed, horrified. "What could the experiment possibly be..."

Sheila's smile widened. "Why, I thought you used to be a detective - can't you figure it out? The aliens are nearly human in every respect - just far advanced in Earth standards. Oh, and massively endowed, by Earth standards. The only problem is, they have a severe shortage of woman - there ten females born for every male. Now, one of the few differences between them and us is the fact that they can't edit their own DNA without causing death. But human DNA is like Play-Doh to their science. And with the population of the Earth being what it is, why nobody will miss a couple of people missing each day, from all over the world..."

The Nikki understood. She was only the first - the aliens were planning nothing more than to turn the planet Earth into a sort of sexual supermarket, where they could pick up anyone - male or female - and remold them into a sex-slave to take home...

The thought struck with horror. "When?"

Sheila laughed. "In about two months - once you've been given plenty of training. I hear your new master is quite eager." "Why? Why are you helping them" Nikki asked - demanded.

Sheila smiled wickedly. "Because I'm a Feminist, Nikki dear. Originally, they were planning to take women. But I made a MUCH better deal - once enough men have been taken in secret to allow our organization to power - why then we turn the Earth into an interplanetary Bordello, and let them do whatever they want with the men - in exchange, us women will never, ever have to give birth again."

Nikki shook her head, "No - that won't work. The population of the Earth would vanish in a generation."

Sheila laughed cruelly. "I told you that the aliens were almost identical to humans - and they have no compunctions about the hybrid offspring that their little slaves are going to be having by the dozens. The natural women, we get - the men get trained from birth." Sheila's cruel smile widened. "Just think - in less than a year, you'll probably be well on the road to motherhood. "

And, as the truth of her new future hit home, Nikki found that she wasn't even allowed to scream...

SUMMARY: 10...9...8...7...6...5...4...3...2...1... HAPPY NEW YEAR, your a girl!

Out Of Time

By Gunslinger

His lean, darkly handsome face wearing a small, smug smile of proprietary satisfaction, James McLean lounged back in the slightly elevated VIP booth in the corner of the nightclub. Once comfortably positioned against the dark-red vinyl of the booth's curved bench, he let his eyes roam over the room, looking very much like a king surveying his domain as he sipped at a glass of expensive champagne.

With midnight rapidly approaching, the party at the InnerCity nightclub was in full swing. Celebrants laughed, cheered and joked as they hoisted glasses in tribute to the year now passing and the new one fast approaching. Despite a rough-and-tumble air to the participants of the celebration, the mood was one of friendly good cheer, and even the inevitable insults flung back and forth among the largely denim-and-leather clad men and women were good-natured in tone and meaning.

From the inside pocket of the well-worn leather 'biker' jacket he wore over equally well-worn jeans and a red, loose-fitting team jersey, a shrill electronic chirping sounded. Making a face, James shook his head and dipped his free hand into the jacket, rooting around for a moment before emerging with his cell phone.

Without activating the small device, James peered down at the number digitally displayed on the small, blue-backlit screen. His expression, originally one of annoyance, matured into a full-fledged frown.

The number displayed on the screen was his own.

"Geez - some women...!" He sighed, shaking his head. Sliding the still-ringing phone back into his pocket, he downed the rest of the bubbly wine in one swallow, then held the glass upwards, signaling the roving waitresses for a refill.

The one who chose to answer, though wearing a rather bored expression on her face after a long and busy night, was rather attractive, and James shrugged slightly to himself and favored her with his best devil-may-care grin - after all, it was New Year's Eve, and the gesture might just pay off...

The waitress, however, seemed more interested in her job than in socializing, (an inexplicable and unexplainable occurrence, in James' highly self-centered point of view, despite the fact that the job that she was focused on at that moment was refilling his glass), and the rather meager tip he left her seemed to rule out any possibility of further chances at romancing her.

James, noting her sour expression, merely shrugged. After all, there were 'more fish in the sea' - and, if worst came to worst, he always had his fall-back position of going home the next morning to his live-in girlfriend.

Unless, of course, she was too pissed off at him for breaking his 'promise' to her about tonight...

James shrugged the thought off. After all, no woman could resist him when he turned the full force of his devilish charms upon her - well, aside from the occasional bitch and/or dyke, of course. (James' definition of such being 'any woman who resisted his charms'.)

After all, being the ultimate stud he was, any woman who didn't want to sleep with him had to be a lesbo or a prime man-hating bitch, right?)

Not that it really mattered, anyway - the InnerCity was what was known as a 'meat market'... or, more accurately, in the town of Napoleon, New York, it was known as the meat market. Even now, James could survey the crowded floor of the club before him and spot the hot, scantily-clad honeys practically begging to start the new year off by getting laid. The particular note of the laughter, the certain pose that accentuated whatever each woman thought was her best feature - to his experienced eye, it bespoke sexual desperation, and as the evening wore on, James knew that 'a man to please her' would rapidly shift towards 'pleasing a man', a small jump for the eternally desperate who equated sex to affection.

Since that particular - and not-at-all-uncommon - psyche was James' preferred choice, he was practically a connoisseur. To his practiced eye, there were at least a dozen truly 'hot' women who'd be quite literally happy to suck his cock by midnight. With the almost mystical connotations coming with that particular annual point in time, New Year's Eve was the ripest time to catch women at their lowest point, most willing to do anything so as not to have had spent the pivotal moment alone and 'unloved' - and James was damned if he was going to miss it, whatever he might have said to his girlfriend, Jenny, to the contrary.

Sipping at the refilled glass of inexpensive bubbly, James looked around the room again, trying to set his sights on a girl who was the perfect mix of 'hot' and 'desperate'. Understandably, many of the least attractive women were the most desperate - the 'last ditch' choice for those who had no better options. At the other end of the spectrum was the real hotties, the drop-dead gorgeous girls... but, though they might be as equally eager to start the new year off with a bang, they weren't exactly desperate, with men literally lined up for the chance to fuck them.

Though James, of course, felt certain he could beat out all competitors, he just didn't want to deal with the hassle - or, at least, this is what he told himself. Instead, he looked for the girl who exhibited all the signs he'd learned to look for:

She'd be pretty, but in a bland sort of way... if you didn't count the plastic surgery she'd undergone, that is. The most common was breast enhancement, but the more, the better - it indicated the 'ugly duckling' syndrome, a woman who'd made herself hot through modern surgery, yet still felt like the unattractive woman she'd once been. She'd have a fair number of suitors around her, almost as many as the 'natural' hotties, but her reactions would be utterly different - rather than an assured self-confidence, she'd still be 'showing off', sure she needed that extra edge to attract men...

He was still assessing the possible candidates when he heard a voice shout: "Hey, quiet down...!"

Startled, James turned his gaze towards the big-screen TV at the far end of the room... and mentally cursed as he saw the scene being broadcast from Times Square.

As the crowd quieted, the volume on the TV was raised, fed through the club's sound-system.. and there was no doubt the famous count-down was about to begin, meaning it was considerably later than James had thought it to be. Quickly downing the dregs of the champagne, he put the glass down on the table and started to get up. Just then, a single word was shouted by nearly every voice in the club:

"TEN...!"

A strange sensation slammed into James, as if he'd been his by a dozen soft pillows from all sides. He slammed back down into the booth, eyes wide. His shocked gasp went unheard beneath the full-throated voices of the party-goers.

"NINE...!"

James gasped again, a bit louder this time - but in response to a totally different sensation. For the briefest of instants, it had felt as if somebody had wrapped a strong yet gentle arm right around his waist and given him one good, hard squeeze. Mind whiling, James started to slip his hands to his waist...

"EIGHT...!"

James hands, reaching for his waist, instead darted to the table to brace himself - because he'd suddenly lurched in his seat - because it had felt as if somebody had just slipped a couple of small, plump, firm pillows under him, impossible as that might have been.

"SEVEN...!"

Something was wrong - horribly, horribly wrong. Even as he felt a strange tightening sensation up and down his muscular legs, the lean, dusky-skinned young man was pulling himself out of the booth.

"SIX...!"

With everybody watching the big-screen TV at the far end of the room, nobody noticed as James staggered towards the nearby bathrooms - staggered, because, for a second, it felt as if somebody had crushed his hands and feet in a vise.

"FIVE...!"

James stumbled a second time as his invisible assailant resorted to immature tactics - it felt as if somebody had tried to pull out his hair. Scalp burning, he staggered onwards.

"FOUR...!"

Next came a series of invisible blows, pummeling his face and leaving it feeling alternately numb and swollen in a patchwork pattern. "THREE...!"

James gasped and almost went down. Though the rapid sensations were coming with machine-gun speed, each occurring and then over in the space of a second, some of the sensation's effects lingered - and it felt as if somebody had just given him a good, swift kick in the balls. Eyes watering with unshed tears, an unvoiced whimper in his throat, he staggered grimly towards the bathroom door, so tantalizingly close.

"TWO...!"

Gasping, James slammed through the bathroom door - just as if felt like somebody had stiffed-armed him across the throat. Gagging and wheezing, he all-but-fell into the bathroom.

"ONE...!"

Feeling as if his chest were about to explode from some interior pressure, James forced himself upright, eyes instinctively going towards the mirror over the sink...

The full-throated combined yells of "HAPPY NEW YEAR!" completely overrode the sound of a strangled scream from the bathroom at the other end of the club.

* * * * *

The person in the bathroom remained absolutely stock-still for several long seconds, barely noticing the tumult of shouts and noisemakers coming from outside the door, gaze fixed in disbelief at the person reflected back by the cracked and hazy mirror.

Then, ever-so-slowly, she moved closer to the mirror....

"No..." The woman exclaimed, her low, disbelieving tone nevertheless revealing a throat, sultry voice. "No - this... can't be! It's. It's not possible!"

Dark eyes wide in shocked disbelief, the woman who'd so recently been Kames McLean brought her shapely hands up to her face, slender fingers tipped with dark red nails lightly tracing the new contours of her stunning visage.

She was, quite simply, stunning - and, in gender, figure and clothing, bore absolutely no resemblance to the man who'd started the journey towards the bathroom a scant minute before.

Gleaming black skin-tight latex pants clung enticingly to long, shapely legs and a full, firm derriere. Both legs and ass were given further emphasis by the 9-inch high cylindrical heels of the platform pumps she wore, the 3-inch thick clear plastic sole and heels leaving her seeming to float above the floor rather than stand upon it.

Her breasts were... magnificent. Tantalizingly displayed by the blood-red silk button-less blouse, they rose full and creamy above the gleaming black-and-red corset that cinched tight to her amazingly slender waist

Beneath her slicked-back head of silky black hair, her face was a study in full-lipped sensuality, accentuated by the glossy red lipstick and silver eye-shadow she wore. Onyx spheres set in beaten silver made up the jewelry she wore, earrings and a necklace, the final touches to the gorgeous, sensual vision in red and black that stared back from the mirror.

"Oh, God..." She whimpered, and in her new voice, even that sounded sensual. "It's real... I really am a woman!"

Not just a woman - a vision of sensual femininity. Even in repose, shocked and dismayed, her body and expression seemed to still entice and invite...

...and she was in the bathroom of the most notorious 'meat market' in the city.

"Oh, shit...!" She gasped, eyes widening in realization. She thought of what the guys in the club would act like upon seeing her - what she, as a man would have acted like if coming across a gorgeous creature like the woman she now was - and she felt tendrils of panic rising up, overwhelming her horror at finding herself female with something much more immediate - having to deal with a room full of men 'on the prowl' while that woman.

"I.. I have to get out of here...!" She whispered sensuously.

Shocked and confused and understandably emotionally battered by finding herself suddenly female, her mind was hardly working at the top of its form. The situation was utterly impossible, so she had no idea how to deal with it. Thoughts of going for help had skittered across her mind, briefly - but where did you go? Who could help you when, in body and clothing, you mysteriously and inexplicably transformed? Even if there had been an answer to that question, her mind wasn't working clearly enough to arrive at it - now, with her mind filled with the thought of trying to deal with dozens of men all hitting on her, she'd reverted back to the basics: Fight or Flight...

...and she sure as hell wasn't up to trying to fend off those hypothetical advances.

She started towards the bathroom door - and found herself moving not only easily atop those high heels, but sensually, with a seductive sway she couldn't stop no matter how hard she tried. Part of her was horrified to be walking so sensuously atop high heels, yet at the same time, she was also guiltily grateful, for the urge to flee the building was so strong she was 'happy' that she could move so easily in her new form.

She reached for the door - when it suddenly swung open, pushed from the other side.

A muscular black man, dressed in black leather pants and an oversize white t-shirt with the sleeves removed to better display his muscular arms stood framed in the doorway.

She had, of course, run into the men's room.

"Whoa, babe...!" The dark-skinned man said in a deep voice, eyes widening as he surveyed the unexpected figure in front of him. "I think you got the wrong..."

That was as far as he got - because the incredibly hot white chick in the bathroom suddenly grabbed him and pulled him out of the doorway, to push him hard back against the once-white tile wall just beside the door.

She was all over him in an instant. Pressing her firm, curvaceous body against him, she lifted one leg, bracing the knee against the wall as she ground her crotch against his. She pulled his face down to meet hers, her full, red lips pressed hungrily against his own as she tongue slipped demandingly inside his mouth with eager abandon.

"I want you..." She whispered hungrily between hard, demanding kisses. "I want your hands all over my body. Touch me. Rub me. Fondle me...!"

She was only vaguely aware of the words emerging from her mouth, giving voice to the urges flooding through her body and overwhelming her senses. Rational, coherent thought was lost to her, blocked out by the repetitive mental refrain of 'A man...! A man...! A man...!' that had begun in her mind the instant she'd laid eyes on the figure in the doorway.

The lucky brother who'd heard the call of nature at just the right time needed no additional prompting. His big, strong hands began to slide over her luscious body. One slid upwards along a black-clad thigh before pausing to squeeze the oh-so-squeezable curvature of her fine ass, while the other pulled her closer so her could feel her huge, firm tits press tighter into his broad, muscular chest.

Then she broke away from his grip - so that she could smile sensuously at him as she slowly went down to her knees in front of him.

The lucky man retained just enough presence of mind to reach over and engage the dead-bolt on the bathroom door as the hot babe in front of him free his already stiffening cock from his pants - and then he sighed and closed his eyes, letting his head loll back against the cool tiles, as her warm, softly-firm lips enveloped his throbbing manhood.

She was... unbelievable. The man couldn't help but let out low moans of pleasure as she worked his cock - not fast and hard, but slowly, almost worshipfully. It was as if the instant she'd opened her mouth to take in his cock, everything else in the universe had ceased to exist> Any other woman, when giving a blow-job, also had her mind on other things - but it was as if, for this one, there was nothing in the entire universe but her and his cock, and her only thought was to give him the most perfect blow-job imaginable.

In fact, he was right on the money...

He hands stroked the thick, throbbing shaft of the hard manhood filling her mouth, and her lips and tongue worked in conjunction to elicit the most intensely pleasurable response possible. In one sense, the woman kneeling on the floor of the bathroom wasn't truly even aware she was sucking a cock - such concrete thoughts were far beyond her at the moment. She was operating almost on instinct, not even questioning how she knew exactly what men liked in a blow-job. She was only barely aware of her surroundings, of the growing pounding on the bathroom door, and none of it mattered - the cock in her mouth and hands was all that mattered, even though she wasn't sure why. All she knew - all she needed to know - was that this, whatever it was she was doing, was exactly right for her. As she lovingly sucked and licked at the hard, warm cock, she was filled with the deepest and most intense sense of utter contentment.

Then, after what seemed an eternity of ecstasy, he finally came, filling her mouth with a warm nectar that she eagerly swallowed in utter, contented delight.

Sighing in pleasure, she let the slowly softening cock slip from her lips, distracted throwing a smile at the stunned man who was already fading from her limited memories.

Who he was, his thoughts and dreams and desires - none of it mattered. Nothing mattered. She was pure, unadulterated sex. There was no past, no future, nothing but the eternal now, and the unlimited sexuality for which she existed. Even as her hands unlocked the door to the bathroom, she was only marginally aware of her own actions, running in a sort of automatic mode.

She was constantly and overwhelmingly aware of her body - every inch of it. Of the way she looked, the way she moved - and the way she could please men. Her mind was a never-ending montage of images, of men getting pleasure from looking at her and watching her move in constant sensuality. Of men's pleasure at touching her, squeezing her, fondling her. Of all the ways men could be given pleasure with her body, with her hands, with her lips...

In a daze of utter sexuality, she smiled seductively at the stunned crowd of men who watched her emerge from the bathroom. She didn't see them as individuals, but rather as a mass of masculinity awaiting the pleasures she existed to provide - like the pleasure of simply watching her sensual form as she seductively swayed away towards the door.

She vaguely wondered why she was leaving this mass of potential pleasure-giving behind her, but part of her briefly and fragmentally remembered a desperate urge to get home. She wasn't quite sure why it was so important, the reasons lost in the mists of her overwhelming sexuality, but since she wasn't really a thinking, reasoning person but simply distilled sexuality atop high-heels, instinct and urges ruled her, and she unquestioningly obeyed this one.

Ass swaying seductively, her huge bobs shifting ever-so-enjoyably under the thin fabric of her blouse, she stepped through the door and into the cool night air...

...and the instant the door swung shut behind her, leaving her alone, she suddenly doubled over, gasping and gagging. "Holy shit - I.. sucked a cock!" She gasped out, still tasting cum in her mouth as she fought not to throw up.

"What the fuck happened to me..?" She half-wailed. "I saw a man... and it was like my brain shut down completely!"

Horried and disgusted by her actions, she was more determined then ever to get to the safety of home. She started towards the subway station, rounding the corner of the building...

...and a hungry, sensual smile spread across her face the instant she laid eyes on the young, clean-cut looking man just climbing into a van at the curb.

"Mmm... Hey there, handsome..." She all-but-purred at the jean-and-letterman jacket clad brunet. "How about giving a lady a lift? I'll make it... worth your while."

She said this last while eyeing his crotch and licking her lips hungrily, and with a long, slow second look at the woman making the offer, the suddenly nervous young man wasted no more time:

"Lady - I'll take you to the far ends of the earth if you want." He said, reverently. "Hop in!"

In short order, she was directing him to pull his van into the alleyway that ran behind her apartment building... and the instant the vehicle was in 'park' she was all over him, her body crushed against his as she tore at his shirt.

The van was an mid-model Chevy cargo van. Behind the driver's and passenger's seats was an empty cargo bed with a hard metal floor only thinly padded with scored and faded carpet - but the young man was utterly oblivious to any discomfort as, shirt discarded and pants and underwear yanked down to his ankles, she pushed him down on the floor, her hot mouth on his as her slender fingers released the final clasp on her corset, allowing the silk wrap-around blouse to fall open and expose her magnificent breasts.

As she wiggled out of her gleaming pants, the young man filled his hands with the magnificence of her full, firm breast. He squeezed them, making her moan in response, and then his eager lips found her fully engorged nipples, lightly tugging and sucking on the sensitive nubs of flesh.

She moaned, enjoying the sensation - so much so that she contorted herself, making sure not to break his contact with her bounteous breasts as she eagerly lowered her tight, sobbing cunt onto his raging hard cock.

She then proceeded to fuck the young man right out of his ever-lovin' mind.

She gave it the same single-minded devotion she'd given to the blowjob, her very move designed, not for her own pleasure, but for his. Every twitch, every thrust, every wiggle - all to make this the most utterly erotic and intensely orgasmic sexual experience the young man had ever experienced.

She succeeded.

After he'd exploded his load deep into her receptive womanhood, she slowly dressed, barely aware of the young man now laying stunned on the bed of the van., staring up into space with a dazed, stunned smile on his face. She slipped out of the van and closed the door behind her...

..then began to shudder violently.

A soft, keening moan of horror barely audible in her throat, she ran for the sanctity of her apartment, her body shuddering repeatedly at the thought of what she'd just done - or, perhaps more accurately, at the thought of what she'd continue to do, of who and what she was whenever there was a man present.

She made her way to the door of her second-floor apartment... and only then realized with horror that the transformation of her clothes had robbed her of her key. Desperately, she pounded on the door.

After so short of pause as to almost suggest she'd been waiting breathlessly behind the door, Jenny opened the door and peered out.

"Jenny!" The woman who'd been James McLean sobbed. "I know it's hard to believe, but it's me - James! Please, I don't know what's going on! I was at the club for the New years Party, when..."

"I'm sorry miss, but you must be mistaken." Jenny said, the cloyingly artificial tone of sympathy not nearly enough to cover the smug satisfaction dripping from each word.

"Wha...?" The new woman stammered, wide eyed.

"My boyfriend, James, swore to me that he wouldn't be at the InnerCity New Year's Eve party." Jenny said, eyes glinting with dark satisfaction. Her lips curled into a wicked smile of pure vengeance.

"Believe me - at the stroke of midnight, there was no man named 'James McLean' in that club." Jenny said with intense satisfaction...

...and then she slammed the door.

Stunned, the new woman stared at the closed portal, hearing the locks being thrown and knowing that all of this was somehow Jenny's doing. She raised one hand to knock again, to plead for release... and then remembered the look on Jenny's face just before she slammed the door.

Stunned, she staggered away from the door, unthinkingly letting her feet carry her forward as her mind tried to grapple with the curse somehow laid upon her. She stepped through the door leading to the street...

...and a sultry smile crossed her face as the young man who'd driven her home, clad only in his jeans, literally threw himself at her feet.

"Please, miss - there's no way my frat brothers will believe any of this!" He pleaded. "If you could... that is, if you'd be willing...?"

A house full of hot, horny young men, all waiting eagerly for the intense pleasure that it was her duty and sole reason for existence...?

"I'd love to come back to your frat house with you..." She purred, hungrily - while ignoring that small inner voice that was screaming out helplessly deep within her sex-infused mind.

HAPPY NEW YEAR 2007!

SUMMARY: Getting a mysterious pair of magical shoes in the mail, a cross dresser has a field day as he realize that the shoes will turn him into the feminine version of what ever male clothes he chooses to wear.

Overdue

By Gunslinger

Steve sighed and pushed away from his computer. Climbing to his feet, the man rose to his full - if not exactly impressive - height, and stretched to work the kinks out. After hours at the computer, many parts ached slightly...

...including his eyes. Removing his glasses, Steve rubbed wearily at the bridge of his nose before returning the glasses to the small crease that they'd created over the years. Scratching at his military-style crew-cut, Steve ambled towards the small 'efficiency' kitchen his reasonably-priced apartment 'boasted'.

The knock on his door changed his direction. As he approached the door, he hoped it wasn't another one of those damned Jehovah's Witnesses. Not that he had anything in particular against any given religion, mind you - but those smarmy oh-so-polite Witnesses were a little too invasive for Steve's taste. He preferred his religion in the churches, where it belonged - not coming to the front door.

Opening the door, Steve was relieved to discover that this wasn't the case - the man outside the door was dressed in the familiar brown uniform and carried a small parcel.

"Mr. Cooper?" The man asked, holding up the clipboard he carried. "Copper."

"Excuse me?"

"My name - it's..." Steve sighed. "Never mind." He took the package and sighed for it, generally ignoring the man's instilled 'Have a nice day.' Kicking the door shut, Steve carried the package toward the small table in the kitchen, wondering what the hell it was. He wasn't expecting anything, and there was no return address on the parcel to give him a clue. Even the ages-old technique of shaking the package revealed nothing about the contents.

Slumping into the worn vinyl chair, Steve resorted to the easiest method of all - he tore it open with his bare hands, revealing...

...a shoe box. Plain white, standard size, with a large, black, sans-serif word on the top - 'OVER-DO'. Presumably, the manufacturer, although Steve had never heard of them.

Curious, Steve opened the package. Nestled inside the usual packing of tissue paper was a pair of what appeared to be good - hell, very good - quality running shoes - and a small folded piece of paper.

Or rather, parchment, as Steve discovered pulling it out. Unfolding the creamy paper, Steve read the short, enclosed note, written in the smooth, rolling handwriting that had once been known as 'Palmer Script'.

Master Steven Copper,

I have been instructed by a party - who wishes to remain nameless - to provide the enclosed as payment for an outstanding debt. I hope you enjoy them as they were intended to be.

Sincerely, Merlin Magus, Esq.

With a slightly bemused look on his round face, Steve re-read the note, trying to glean something more from its obscure contents - to no avail. Placing the parchment aside with a shrug, Steve picked up the shoes and looked them over.

They were white leather, with black trim. They appeared to be extremely expensive in make and material - and looked like they'd fit his feet perfectly. Steve looked them over carefully - an intelligent man, the situation was somewhat inexplicable. The shoes looked to be worth quite a sum, and Steve couldn't think of anyone who owed him a large enough sum of money to make these fair payment. It, quite frankly, worried him.

However, the phrase 'don't look a gift horse in the mouth.' also ran through his head. Finally, somewhat hesitantly, Steve pulled the shoes on and laced them up.

It was like he was wearing nothing at all. Amazingly light, the shoes seemed to meld perfectly to his feet, incredibly responsive - yet supporting, without seeming to do so. Experimentally, Steve bounced up and down on them a few times, then walked around the apartment, amazed at how comfortable the shoes were. His mental estimate of their worth immediately tripled - Steve had no idea that shoes this well made even existed.

Patting his stomach, Steve felt the slight gut that had begun to form ever since he'd turned thirty. He'd managed to keep it from expanding too rapidly, a slow growth over the intervening decade and a half - but he figured he might give jogging a try, in shoes like this. But first...

Grabbing a small sauce pan from under the counter, Steve stuck it on the stove. Turning the heat to just above 'Simmer', Steve opened a can of spaghetti sauce and dumped it in. On a plastic cutting board, he quickly chopped up some celery, mushrooms and onion, and added the diced pieces to the sauce, covering it with a lid. Leaving the sauce to simmer, he ducked into the bedroom.

Almost reluctantly, Steve slipped out of the amazing shoes. Quickly shucking out of his usual 'Khaki Dockers and T-shirt' combo, he tugged on a pair of gray track pants and a matching T-shirt.

Pulling the shoes back on, he laced them tightly, then left the room. He swung by the kitchen just long enough to give the sauce a stir. Then, tucking an apartment key into the rolled cuff of the sweat shirt, Steve left the apartment.

Setting a brisk pace, he moved down the three flights of stairs and out the front door, letting his muscles stretch and joints loosen up. After about a half-block, he broke into a light jog. By the time he reached the park, he was feeling ready, and he pushed up the pace, the shoes slapping down on the asphalt with a solid authority. Despite that, the cushioning of the sole made it feel like he was running on the softest surface, not hard asphalt. As he followed the winding path through the park, his body began to feel the usual mild strain of exertion - but his feet were as comfortable as if he were sitting at home in his easy chair.

He was starting to sweat, and his leg muscles were starting to develop that slight - but somehow, welcome - ache that was so familiar. All in all, Steve was doing great, feeling the energy flowing through his body as his metabolism increased.

So the sudden burst of pain came as a complete surprise.

It shot through his, a sudden wrenching sensation that flashed through his body in an instant. With a gasp, Steve staggered to a stop, falling into the classic 'runner's rest' position - one hand on his thigh, the other arm across his chest and holding onto the other arm.

But there was something very, very wrong with the way that felt. The feel of his thigh beneath the suddenly too-baggy track pants. The strange softness under his arm beneath the also too-baggy sweat shirt.

But even as those, and other, sensations registered, Steve's mind was focusing on something else entirely - his shoes.

They were too small, by several sizes - despite the fact that they in no way cramped his feet, remaining as comfortable as when he'd put them on. Only, he hadn't put these shoes on. Aside from the fact they were too small, they were also most definitely women's running shoes - still white leather, but trimmed in pink.

"Miss - are you all right?"

Steve was so busy trying to deal with so much conflicting sensations and thoughts that the voice came as a shock. Steve's head jerked up, his eyes focusing on the slender, younger man, also a jogger, who looking at him with concern.

Or, perhaps... her with concern. The man's choice of honorific sent shivers down a shorter spine, confirming the impossible, half-formed thought in Steve's mind.

"Just a stitch in my side - I'll be fine." Steve said, both expecting - and shocked by - the nondescript but decisively feminine voice it came out in. But Steve was struggling to maintain composure - He... she? refused to make a public scene, no matter how impossible or incredible the situation was. Right now, all Steve wanted was for the Good Samaritan to leave, so he... she! - could get home and take stock of what was happening.

After a second's pause, the (other?) man did just that, nodding and offering an unheard piece of advice. Then he jogged away.

Forcing herself upright, Steve struggled to maintain an outwardly casual air as she headed back to her apartment at a slower pace, trying to take stock of her body without seeming to do so at all. As far as she could tell, she was - somehow - now a fairly average female. The poor fit of the clothes seemed to indicate that she was a few inches shorter. She had felt what must have been small-to-average sized breasts through the now-oversized sweat shirt. And, her small gut had become, apparently, an average, but fairly flat, woman's stomach.

'Well - the jogging did get rid of the gut.' Steve thought irreverently as she concentrated on walking. With slightly wider hips and an altered center of gravity, it was just slightly 'off' enough to make her movements awkward unless she paid attention, and she didn't want to attract the attention that 'walking like a man' would garner.

For many people thrust into the same situation, Steve's apparent calmness about it would seem incredible. But Steve had some advantages. First, she was an intelligent, curious person who simply wasn't given to panic. Secondly, She had some military training in her background, which included the training in how to work through many different situations. But perhaps the most important factor was that Steve had somewhat unusual literary tastes.

Because Steve was an aficionado of TG fiction. Stories in which a gender-changes happened to various people in various ways. Of course, that's all it had been to him - fiction. But it was also something he thought about - wondered what it would be like, how he'd react if he were the character. In her mind, she'd thought through this situation thousands of times. She'd never considered the fact that she might actually be in such a situation - but that didn't matter, not right now.

She was about a block away from the apartment when something else happened.

Steve came to a dead stop in the middle of the sidewalk, and looked down at herself in amazement as she felt her clothing ripple - and begin to change.

The track-pants began to darken and pull themselves tighter around her body, the length adjusting to her loss of height. Within seconds, her legs - apparently fairly average, she saw - were clad in tight, black Spandex jogging pants. The sweatshirt hadn't changed much, other than to adjust in size, and to acquire a small brand-name logo over the slight swell of her new breasts.

Stunned, Steve looked around. As amazing as the sudden change of wardrobe was, that wasn't the cause of her amazement.

The alteration had occurred in the middle of the sidewalk, in the plain view of at least a dozen people - yet none of the other pedestrians seemed to have noticed the slightest oddity.

Swallowing, Steve hurried the rest of the way home, dashing into the bathroom. Slowly, her mouth opened in amazement as she stared in the mirror. Somehow, seeing the reflection in the silvered glass made everything absolutely indisputable. She wasn't dreaming, or hallucinating - this was, somehow, very real.

The woman looking back from the mirror appeared to be in her early thirties. She was completely undistinguished in appearance. Her hair was a few shades darker than it had been, and now hung down about her ears in a shaggy, yet feminine, style. Her glasses was not as thick, and in different frames. But the face they sat on was not all that different - about what Steve's younger sister might look like.

Likewise, her body was... female. Nothing spectacular, neither beautiful, nor ugly. Neither remarkably fit, or particularly out of shape.

Slowly, Steve peeled off the sweatshirt, and let it drop beside her. She let his gaze shift from the mirror to a bird's-eye view of the pert breasts that rose from her smaller ribcage - a pair of completely average B-cup breasts.

Completely average - except, of course, the fact that they shouldn't be on Steve's chest.

"Holy..." Steve breathed. Still topless, she walked numbly towards the kitchen, mind spinning. A part of her mind was bemused to record the sensation of her small, pink nipples becoming engorged in the cool air flowing over them.

Honestly, Steve wasn't completely sure how she should be reacting right now. It was unbelievable, confusing, shocking - but not completely unwelcome. He'd often wondered what it would be like to be female - had daydreamed about it sometimes. But, never had she expected it to actually happen...

She reached the kitchen and slumped down on the chair. She looked over at the note laying on the table, a small frown creasing her slightly fuller female lips. She was intelligent - she'd already figured out what had caused the transformation. But the question was - would she revert to her normal self if she took the shoes off...

...and did she want to? At least, right now? After a moments hesitation, she decided she had to know, and leaned down to untie her shoes. She stopped when her small, perky breasts hit her thighs. The erect nipples hitting the spandex sent an oh-so-pleasurable sensation through her new endowments, and that's what caused the thought that caused her to hesitate.

Blushing a bit, Steve straightened up - then slowly slid a slender hand down the front of the pants. She slid her hand past the new briefs she was wearing - and across the light growth of hair around the moist slit nestled between her unremarkable thighs. She shivered slightly at the sensation - then slid one finger into the crevice.

The sensation was both similar and completely different that stroking her cock had been. It was good - hell, great - and the sensation was technically similar, in terms of nerves relaying stimuli. But it was also different in a very fundamental way.

Withdrawing her finger, coated in feminine juices, she once more leaned forward, and this time unlaced the shoes and kicked them off...

...and nothing happened.

She sat, waiting, for several minutes, wondering what she was going to do. It might still happen - the original change had occurred some time after she'd tried the shoes on - but she didn't know whether anything was going to happen.

It was the smell of the sauce that decided her. There was nothing she could do right now, except wait. And while she was waiting - she might as well.

Again noticing the differences in the way her altered body moved, Steve went over to the stove to finish preparing dinner.

She was just finishing that dinner, about half an hour later, when the bolt of pain struck. The fork, with it's burden, flew from his hand to clatter on the floor near her foot...

...or rather - his foot. Once more, he was his usual male self - as a quick check of all the important pieces showed.

With a sigh, Steve cleaned up the mess of the dropped spoon, and finished the rest of the spaghetti before dropping the plate in the sink. Then he walked over and picked up the amazing shoes - which, once more, were the male running shoe in his size. For several long moments, he merely stared at the footwear, mind spinning.

Then, very methodically, he walked into his bedroom and undressed. He rummaged around in his closet for a bit, picking out what he wanted - a pair of shorts that were a little too small for him now, and a T-shirt. He also got a pair of black dress socks from the dresser, and dressed quickly in the apparently mismatched outfit. Then he carried the shoes with him into the living room and sat in the easy chair. Pulling the shoes on and tying them, he turned on the TV and tried to concentrate on the images while he waited for an interminable time.

The half-hour mark came and went, and Steve's hope/fear began to fade. Minutes ticked farther on, and his tense body began to relax as nothing happened...

...until exactly one hour after pulling on the shoes. Then there was a sudden burst of pain, slightly different and slightly longer than the first. Steve shuddered, shaking away the reaction, and looked down at himself...

...herself. Once more, she was female. But, even without close inventory, she could tell that it was a different female version of himself than the first time - as he'd expected.

Steve considered this - almost gravely - for a minute. Then a slow smile spread over his fuller, softer lips, and she said "Cool. "

After a few minutes, she felt what she'd expected - her clothes writhing on her body. Rising from the chair, she headed towards the bathroom, fuller hips and ass swaying in a feminine manner atop the altered shoes. With a smile, she looked at herself in the mirror.

Again, there was definite similarities between this female body and her original male self. But, as she'd surmised, the transformation was based on the clothing she was wearing at the time.

She was a younger woman, perhaps mid-to-late twenties. She was also quite attractive, in a sort of generic way. The T-shirt had become a short-sleeve white blouse that was pulled taut over her now-C-cup breasts, which were quite visible through the blouse, as she wasn't wearing a bra. The dark-blue shorts had become a skirt that fell just short of her - rather cute - kneecaps. Like the shorts, the skirt was on the tight side.

The dress socks had become black nylons, disappearing up under the skirt. The once-running-shoes were now dark-blue pumps with what looked to be an inch high heel or so. Again, the shoes were amazingly comfortable and easy to walk in, despite the fact that Steve wasn't used to any heel at all.

Smiling at the reflection in the mirror, Steve used his slender new fingers to unbutton the blouse, letting it hang free. Gently, she cupped her firm, domed breasts, making a pleased sound in the back of her throat at the sensation as she gently massaged her breasts.

Shrugging off the blouse, she let it drop to the floor and walked back to the living room, letting the skirt slide off and drop to the floor on the way. Clad only in panties, nylons and shoes, the again-female Steve sat in her chair and reclined it, closing her eyes and putting her mind to good use - while letting her hands slowly slide over her altered body, exploring.

The way she changed was determined by her clothing at the time - she had that done. The time had thrown her, because she hadn't timed it - but now, she worked that out, too. The first interval had been about fifteen minutes. Then, to change back, a half-hour. After that, an hour...

Each interval was twice as long as the last one. So, if she took the shoes off right now, she should remain like this for two hours. If she was right.

Steve allowed her lips to curve into a full, brilliant smile. She still had no idea who her mysterious debtor was - but they'd picked one hell of a gift. It was like a day-dream fantasy come true. Not only could Steve explore the other side of the gender line - she could decide, to a certain degree, what she'd look like.

Sitting up, she looked regretfully at the shoes. She had to verify her theory, which meant she'd have to time the transformation back. But that was no big deal - there was always tomorrow. With a slight sigh, she kicked off the shoes as she checked the clock - she should have two hours in this body to go.

She considered how to spend the time - vegging in front of the TV seemed like a tremendous waste. Finally, she decided that a bath could prove most... interesting. Pulling of the nylons - and cursing when she put a long run in one of them - Steve headed to the bathroom and started the tub filling.

On a whim, she ducked into the kitchen and grabbed the Sunlight from the counter. Pouring some in the tub, she adjusted the water temperature as the suds rapidly formed. Shortly thereafter, she was sliding with a satisfied sigh into her bubble-bath.

With a sort of voyeuristic sensation - despite that, for now, it was her body - Steve began to wash. She brought her right leg up, feeling her knee press against the full softness of her new breast as she soaped up the leg's smooth, soft contours, then washed it down. She repeated the sequence with her other leg, enjoying the feel of the smooth, slick flesh under her hands.

She moved onto her widened hips next. The graceful, womanly curve flowed beneath Steve's exploring hands, and her hands met at where her now-silken thighs formed a hollow that housed her new sex. Pausing, she then let her hands slid up over her firm, flat belly and to her firm, taut mounds.

Sliding lower in the water, Steve spent several minutes enjoying the womanly breasts under her hands. It was more than just the extremely pleasant sensations transmitted through the soft, sensitive flesh and firm nipples - it was also the enjoyment that her male side got from fondling such a nice pair of firm breasts.

She did her face, neck and arms fairly quickly, feeling their smoothly altered configurations under her fingers. Her now-jaw-length hair was a bit of a nuisance for somebody who usually kept it close-cropped - but it's silky texture still felt nice.

Then her hands returned to her crotch. She paused again, still feeling slightly embarrassed - but that didn't stop her. Slowly, she inserted her finger into the nether cavity, feeling that sensation once more.

But this time, she didn't stop. Somewhat awkwardly at first, she began to masturbate. Steve moaned softly in the back of her slender new throat as her rhythm increased, her finger manipulating the sensitive nub of flesh until a small - but enjoyable - orgasm shook her.

It was, again, both like and unlike a male orgasm. Somehow, it was more satisfying, feeling the pleasurable warmth the spread through her belly from the interior sensation. However, it was nowhere near as intense, Steve learned with some disappointment.

Still soaking in the water, she let the one hand linger in her crotch, slowly sliding back and forth of the slight mound, while the other returned to her breasts...

She only climbed out of the tub when the water was cold, feeling satisfied - yet, vaguely unsatisfied, wanting more, but of something better.

Shortly after, she once more felt the wrenching pain - the experiences of being female were great, but she could have been a better transition, Steve thought, a bit sourly - then he was once more in his male body.

Making a mental 'to-do' list, Steve headed off to bed, anticipating a long - and highly interesting - day tomorrow.

Reaching his bedroom, Steve rummaged around, digging through every article of clothing he owned until he found what he wanted - or something similar, at least. Since there was a four-hour delay at this point, he had pre-figured it. Pulling on his chosen clothing - some of which was a poor fit - Steve pulled on the shoes and lay down on top of the covers.

Sleep was long in coming, but there was one definite advantage to the 'change while you sleep method' - when the brief pain hit, Steve just muttered in her sleep, then rolled over and continued her slumber.

* * * * *

As soon as she awoke the next morning, Steve knew that the change had occurred during the night. It was easy - the ceiling was clearly in focus.

Steve, of course, didn't wear glasses to bed - and her altered eyes were now perfect without any artificial lenses.

Slowly, Steve sat up, feeling the new way that her altered body changed - the shift of the breasts on her chest, the padded feeling of her new ass...

Looking down, Steve saw her shirt straining to contain a pair of what must have been at least DDD-cup breasts. The neckline of the black spandex tank-top was sufficiently stretched by her large, firm endowments to display an awesome cleavage - especially from this angle.

Eagerly, Steve swung her feet - clad in knee-high black suede boots with a five inch heel - over the edge of the bed. She hurried into the bathroom to see her altered self in the mirror.

It was quite a sight.

The boots that clad her now-dainty feet also covered the lower half of the skin-tight jeans that, in turn, clung like a second skin to her shapely new legs. The womanly new hips flared dramatically before narrowing to a pleasantly slender waist. Above that, the skin-tight black spandex clearly outlined her firm, sexy new globes.

Her face was still vaguely related to the male Steve - but now, she was lovely. Long, golden-blond hair framed a face of simple beauty, even without the enhancement of make-up. As an added bonus, there were no glasses to obstruct her large, attractive eyes.

Steve smiled at the reflection, and shimmied her slender shoulders to feel her large new tits jiggle and sway. "Whoa - these could be fun..." Steve said to herself, gently sliding on her hand across the taut fabric over the breast.

Tempted as she was to indulge in the pleasure, she had things to do - first of which was buy some more shoes. She didn't want to walk around barefoot, but she also couldn't keep the shoes on too long - it would take eight hours to change back after she removed them.

She needed something to wear for those hours.

Quickly, Steve jiggled and swayed out to the living room. She grabbed her money and bank-card from her wallet, then slipped on a pair of sunglasses and headed out.

Going down the stairs, Steve nearly broke her slender neck - she slowed down immediately with a wry grin. The five-inch stiletto heels was bad enough, no matter how incredibly comfortable the boots were. The severely altered center-of-balance was worse - her large tits, firm as they were, still bobbed and swayed without the support of a bra, and tended to unbalance her. She had to resort to a slower pace, and pick up the habit of swaying her hips more - swiveling them - to counter the bounce and jostle of her new endowments.

Stepping out of the building, the warm sun shone down from a deep blue sky as she headed out at a brisk walk. She did own a car - but taking it right now would be a bad idea, since 'she' didn't have a license - a very male Steven Copper did.

It didn't take long for her to notice the rather frank appreciative glances she got from men she passed. She smiled inwardly at their reactions, wondering how they'd react to the truth - then started smiling outwardly as well, catching the men's eyes briefly with her own, sometimes nodding to them.

In short, she was doing some low-level flirting.

She was in a minor heaven. She was embarrassed when she started doing it, but that quickly faded, leaving only the exhilaration. It was strange to think that she was flirting with guys - but that was just it. She wasn't Steven as far as the world was concerned - she was somebody else entirely. It was exhilarating, it was liberating, it was fun...

...it was pure freedom. There were no real limitations on what she could do without repercussions from society. She wasn't criminally inclined, but that didn't change the concept - if she wanted to, she could commit murder in broad daylight and get away with it if she could just avoid the police for the eight-hour period. Because, technically speaking, the large-breasted woman who committed the crime... didn't exist.

Steve marveled at the incredible freedom she had now as she walked along, enjoying the way people reacted to her presence. She could do - or be - anything she wanted, for the periods of time she wasn't 'himself'.

It was with that thought that she reached a store she hadn't originally intended to shop at. But, looking in the window, she smiled broadly and went in.

When she emerged, half-an-hour later, she carried a bag with the store's name on it. But, it didn't contain any of the store's products. Instead, the clothes she'd left with were in it - and the shoes.

Steve sauntered down the street, putting a little extra 'oomph' in her movements. Thigh-high black leather boots, laced up the back, encased her legs in their tight grip, and she balanced atop the boot's seven-inch heels. A pair of super-tight black leather pants disappeared down the boots, the taut crotch of the pants displaying the complete lack of male genitalia - and gently caressing her mound with each step.

The... shirt? Top...? Steve wore was interesting - it was basically a black-and-purple corset that cinched in her waist, with black spandex that - barely - encased her large, and now bra-encased - breasts. Steve looked incredibly sexy, and knew it - but wasn't quite satisfied.

A stop to a salon that did her hair and make-up rectified that. And, on a sinful whim, she made one last purchase before going for lunch.

She was short on cash, having discovered just how expensive women's clothing was. Especially the boots. Steve decided to splurge the last of her ready cash at a pub-style bar-and-grill. With her gloss-red lips in a smile, she jiggled and swayed into the building, enjoying the slight dip in noise level as the mostly male clientele took in the stunningly sexy woman in their midst.

Steve headed towards a small, unoccupied booth, turning to wink slightly at a small gaggle of men...

...then stopped short as a delightfully naughty thought struck her. For a second, Steve couldn't believe she was actually considering it - but then again...

..why not?

Turning, she made her way to the four gaping young men in the large booth. Fairly average looking, the men couldn't believe this blonde goddess was walking towards them.

They were even more amazed when she smiled seductively and spoke in a smoky voice. "Hi - I'm Stevi." She leaned forward, offering a view of her cleavage. "Mind if I join you gentlemen?"

There was an immediate, if somewhat restrained, battle over who sat where, ending up with Steve in the middle between two lucky guys on one side, while the other two had to be content with sitting across from her and ogling her scrumptious cleavage.

The men vied for her attention during the meal, and she immersed herself in the routine, flirting outrageously. She was constantly brought up short with the realization of what she was doing - and each time she merely shrugged it off. It didn't matter. Gradually, as she managed to force her self to tackle the next step, her flirting became more and more outgoing - by the end of the meal (which the guys paid for), Steve was shamelessly touching the young men fairly often - a hand on their arm as she laughed at their jokes, a hand on the thigh when she was talking to them - and, to their delight and Steve's physical enjoyment, her breasts pushing against their shoulders when she turned towards the windows - which she found herself doing fairly often. The sensation of her spandex-encased tits brushing across the men's shoulders just felt so good.

The only thing that seriously embarrassed her was the two times she caught herself lightly fondling her crotch beneath the table, without even noticing she'd started doing so.

In short, she was amazed to find herself becoming turned on by the guys. But the sensation of arousal was also extremely enjoyable, and she wasn't really in a hurry to end it - so it was with some reluctance that she told the guys she had to leave.

When they offered to pay for her cab fare home, she agreed, as it let them walk her out to the curb and wait for the cab. Under the circumstances, she could hardly refuse them each a kiss before she left - could she?

Even as she leaned forward in the first man's embrace, she couldn't believe she was doing this. It was too much, too quickly...

...but before she could pull away, they were kissing - and all of Steve's reasons for stopping were blown away by the kiss itself. Her arousal hit a new peak, and she became a willing participant in the kiss, kissing the man back hungrily.

She didn't even hesitate when it was the other guys' turns.

Steve all but ran into the apartment. The instant the door closed behind her, she was shedding clothes as she headed towards the bedroom. She only had about an hour of being female left, and she didn't want to waste a second of it.

By the time she entered the bedroom, she was completely naked - and in her hand was the sinful purchase she'd made. When she'd bought it, it was for possible use later - now it was a necessity.

Throwing herself on the bed, Steve just looked at the smallish, bright pink dildo in her hand. But it wasn't truly hesitation - she was so horny that it was painful...

...in an unbelievably good way.

Her cunt was sodden with all the juices her overly aroused body was producing. Eagerly, Steve brought the dildo to her cunt, and plunged it inside.

There was no technique involved - she just pistoned it in and out, looking for release.

She got it - five times. Five times and incredible orgasm ripped through her body, making her writhe on the bed in ecstasy, her breath coming in gasps. Her body shuddered and shook in the throes of ecstasy as she pounded the plastic phallus in and out of her hot, wet cunt, without any true thought involved.

Finally, she was satisfied - her needs had been met. Dropping the dildo to the floor, the exhausted woman lay staring at the ceiling, trying to get her mind to calm down so that she could consider just what she'd done, just how she'd acted today> Somehow, things had gotten out of hand, going much further than she'd intended - even if she did enjoy it... all of it...

Still thinking about the pleasure of the day, Steve drifted off into a sleep so deep, that he didn't even notice the brief blast of pain as he switched back.

For the next five days, Steve didn't even touch the shoes.

Part of it was the fact that he had to go to work each day, and couldn't spare the time. But Steve actually blessed that fact, as he used the time to try and work things out in his own mind. The way that he'd acted with sheer abandonment scared him slightly - yet the shoes seemed to send a siren call out to him, urging him to try them again. Steve, however, successfully ignored the call all week.

Friday, however, was a lot harder. All day long, his work went by in a haze as he thought about the shoes - and the weekend he had coming up.

By the time he walked in the door that evening, he'd come to a decision - a regretful one.

It would take sixteen hours for him to change to a woman - then, if he pulled the shoes off immediately, it would be another thirty-two hours before he was male again. Steve just couldn't take that risk, not now. With a deep sigh, he picked up the shoes, and carried them to where the box they'd come in sat, undisturbed. Lifting up the tissue paper padding, he prepared to store the shoes away until ready to use them again...

...and that's when he noticed the small booklet labeled 'operating instructions.'

Steve sat in front of his computer dressed only in a bathrobe. Sitting on the floor, only inches from his feet, were the 'magic shoes' - although he still wasn't sure if he was going to use them. Instead, he waited, staring at the screen as, every few seconds, another random drawing flashed on the screen.

Steve had learned that what he'd experienced so far was basically the 'demo' mode. The shoes did that to acclimatize the user. Now, they were set - by his failure to use them in more than forty-eight hours - to full operation mode.

Which was simple. All he had to do was touch an image while wearing the shoes - any image. He'd then be transported into the setting of the image, as the female person he touched. He- or she - would remain in the new 'world' of the image until the 'spell' that ran the shoes considered the 'scene' complete. That's all there was to it.

Simple.

Steve swallowed again. The image he wanted came up occasional through the website's random slideshow, but he was still hesitant. The 'fan-art' of the lithe, buxom semi-Michelle-Pfeiffer Catwoman still enticed him, but he wasn't sure if he actually wanted to be Catwoman for an indeterminate amount of time.

Sort of - time in the 'other world', according to the instructions, passed at a rate of sixty-to-one. One hour spent over there was only one minute in 'the real world'. Plus, he couldn't actually be harmed - well, the 'him him' couldn't - the 'character him' could.

Finally making up his mind, Steve took a deep breath and slid his feet into the shoes. Leaning forward slightly, he held his hand near the monitor, ready to touch the Catwoman drawing when it appeared.

Finally, it did. Taking a deep breath, Steve reached forward...

...an instant too late. His mind didn't even have time to register what the new random image that had appeared was before his finger touched the screen...

In the real world, there was a brief flash of light - and Steve was gone, leaving only the computer, still flashing the random images.

* * * * *

Steve gaped at the image reflected in the mirror in front of her, beside the rack of clothing.

She was tiny - no taller than five feet. Her legs were incredibly long and sexy, leading to womanly hips that flared before leading to an astonishingly tiny waist. The waist was especially tiny, considering the two immense tits thrust roundly from her chest. The massive, nearly perfectly spherical endowments were - in Steve's estimation - at least MMM cup.

Perched atop her slender shoulders was a long, slender neck that supported a face carved from pure sensuality. A pointed chin, tiny nose, and huge, bright blue eyes surrounded the fullest, sexiest lips Steve had ever seen. And crowning the entire package was the most massive mane of platinum blonde hair Steve had ever seen.

She was still trying to deal with the realization that she was in the wrong setting when there was a knock on her door. Immediately after, before she could respond, the door swung open, and the maost amazing massive man Steve had ever seen entered the room. Easily six-eight, the man - dressed in tradidional 'butler' garb - was incredibly muscled, with a shock of dark hair carefully combed over his massive head.

Helplessly, Steve found himself staring down at the enormous bulge in the butler's crotch - which twitched.

"Oh, my..." the butler said. "Not even dressed yet - you must hurry, Yvette, or Mistress will be most displeased. Roberto has breakfast almost ready."

Steve tried to refuse - but, to his horror, found himself complete unable to do so. When the butler said - "Don't worry, Yvette - Joshua is here to help.", she meekly allowed him to help her dress - fighting it in vain every step of the way.

First, a thick black leather corset. Using his massive muscles, Joshua laced the heavy-duty article unbelievably tight, compressing an already minuscule waist. Yvette opened her mouth to protest - but nothing emerged.

Next came a pair of fish-net stockings that attached to garters on the corset. Then, a tiny, fluffy black skirt, an a massive, lacy black bra that more enticed then concealed. A tiny white apron covered the skirt front.

While Yvette numbly did her hair, make-up and jewelry, Joshua put her shoes on her tiny feet. Black leather, the six-inch spike-heeled pumps had an ankle strap that locked in place - and a short length of gold-toned chain that ran between the two shoes, ensuring that Yvette would only be able to walk in short, sexy steps.

And after she'd finished 'putting her face on', Joshua helped Yvette into a pair of shoulder-length black leather gloves that laced up the back for a tight fit. Another length of gold-toned chain joined two gold-toned locking bracelets that Joshua clamped on her wrists, enduring that she only had limited hand movement, but was able to function, if she concentrated.

Confused, worried, and shaken, Yvette minced after Joshua as they headed down a flight of stairs and into the large, airy 'breakfast nook' which held two people.

The woman - a dark-haired woman of stunning beauty, dressed all in leather - presumably Mistress Lisa - was seated at the table.

The massively muscled Mediterranean clone of the British Joshua must have been Roberto. Dressed in traditional Chef's garb he was just laying breakfast in front of Mistress Lisa. Yvette was horrified to find a wave of gratitude wash over her, knowing she was just in time to serve her mistress.

She struggled against the urge - and lost. Helplessly, she found herself mincing over to Lisa, who smiled cattily. Wordlessly, burning with shame - yet, somehow, also indescribably happy - Yvette began to feed her mistress, who lightly fondled Yvette's firm, sexy ass, and massive, round tits, causing incredible sensation to rampage through her overly-feminine body.

Finally, Yvette let Lisa have the last sip off coffee.

"Well done, Yvette." Lisa said. She smiled and leaned forward, pursing her lips...

...and Yvette found herself helplessly filled with a wave of longing and gratitude. Driven, she leaned forward and kissed Lisa passionately, using her long, limber tongue to please her mistress.

"You've done well - now you may be fed." Lisa announced grandly, gesturing towards Roberto. Ravenous, Yvette turned towards Roberto...

...and watched, horrified, as Roberto unzipped his pants, setting free his monstrous - and rapidly hardening cock. Yvette gasped. She was disgusted and revolted - she was supposed to 'eat' by giving Roberto a blow-job.

Even more horrifying was the fact that she oh-so-desperately longed to do just that. Her mouth was watering, and she was breathing heavily as she stared at Roberto's massive cock in mixed disgust and desire. She struggled against the conflicting thoughts.

"Well?" Lisa said coolly - and that was too much.

Helplessly - horrified - Yvette found herself sinking to her knees in front of Steven. Her leather clad hands rose, grasping the base of Roberto's massively thick twenty-two inch long monster. Her soft, full lips parted....

...Inside her mind, Steve screamed in disgust and horror as she leaned forward, sliding her warm mouth over the end of Roberto's massive cock. Her tongue swirled over the warm, throbbing cock filling her mouth as she began to piston her head back and forth, creating a light suction as her amazingly full lips - cock-sucking lips - slid up and down the thickly-veined shaft.

One of her manacled hands began to caress one of Roberto's equally enormous balls while the other hand - unable to reach all the way around the massive shaft - began to slide up and down the throbbing cock in time with her bobbing head. She heard Roberto moan in please, and was horrified to hear an answering sound emerge from the back of her throat as her long tongue played over his enormous, rounded head.

She was sucking the cock like a pro, porn-movie-sound-effect slurping and all, as if she did this every day. And to any onlooker, she looked like she was enjoying it - thoroughly.

But inside, horror and disgust raged. She desperately tried to stop herself as the first few drops of pre-cum oozed out onto her tongue. But she was locked into the act, unable to escape. With all indications of eagerness, she increased her pace, opening her throat all the way as Roberto's dick vibrated in her mouth.

Hot, salty cum gushed from the massive cock filling her mouth. Like a fire hose out of control, the incredible volume of liquid slammed back into her tonsils, then down her open, 'eager' throat, filling her stomach with its warmth. The salty taste of it filled her mouth, and the smell of it wafted through her nose. She had a huge, throbbing cock jetting massive amounts of sperm down her throat.

It tasted wonderful. Yvette was still disgusted and horrified at what she'd done - what she was doing - but it tasted and felt so good, so wonderful...

Finally, Yvette licked the last few drops of cum from Roberto's softening cock and tucked it away in his pants. Awkwardly, she managed to get to her feet, still stunned, horrified - and so deliciously sated.

"Now that you're fed..." Lisa said, imperiously, an evil glint in her eye, "You and Joshua can start cleaning the first floor..." Helplessly - obediently - Yvette nodded, and submissively followed the massively muscled man, shame burning inside her.

* * * * *

"Well... I think that would do it for the first floor." Joshua said, as Yvette finished dusting the study. He looked around with satisfaction. "And quite quickly done, I must add."

"Yes." Yvette agreed, shortly. The reason that it had been done so fast was her helpless, burning need to do the job as quickly and efficiently as possible.

Yvette heard the sound of Lisa's boot heels on the polished marble floor. Helplessly, Yvette turned to her gorgeous new 'mistress' and performed a very sexy curtsy, revealing a massive amount of equally massive cleavage.

"Done already?" Lisa asked, looking around. She was obviously amazed - Yvette, working practically by herself, had done an amazing job in a short period of time.

"Yes, Ma'am - I'm..."

* * * * *

"...finished." Steve finished saying aloud, from in front of his computer. Slightly stunned by the rapid transition, he looked around. "My God..." He whispered in amazement. Then slowly, a smile crept across his face. "The ultimate VR!"

This time, when Catwoman came up on screen, he got it right...

SUMMARY: Three young studs are captured and one of them hears the story of how a brilliant, but crazy, scientist has discovered a way to transform men into submissive sexual slaves--the other two get transformed.

Paranoia

By Gunslinger

"Hot damn... I still can't believe the body on that red-head!" Josh said as the three youths left the Kitty-Kat club and headed for their car. "She's... perfect!"

"I dunno - I liked their star attraction- Linda Lithe. Man - now there's erotic!" Was Sean's opinion, the rangy red-head smiling at the memory of the private dance he'd had after her performance. He looked around, making sure that nobody could overhear. "You guys won't believe it - but she didn't dance for me in that back room."

"Huh?" Josh asked, his blond brows lowering confusion.

"What do you mean?" Tony asked as he unlocked the door to his car. Sean lowered his voice. "She sucked me off!"

"get out of here!"

"No!" Sean assured the dark-haired youth as they slipped into the car. "She gave me a blow-job. Honest - and she was fuckin' amazing!"

The three youths were college students at a nearby town, and had decided to see what the buzz on campus was about the club in Ludsville. The Kitty-Kat club had been running for six years now, and there had been no big deal about it - until now.

Tony, Sean and Josh had found out that the reports hadn't been exaggerated - this was the hottest strip-club they'd ever gone to.

Laughing and discussing the incredible stable of dancers the club boasted, they three youths were having the time of their lives as Tony pulled the aging Pontiac out of the parking lot...

...and winced, cursing softly as the red-and-blue lights flashed in the rearview mirror, painting the inside of the sedan.

Sighing, Tony pulled to the curb as the car from the local cop-shop pulled up behind them and the door on the driver's side swung open...

"Shit, guys - get a load of her..." Tony whispered to his friends, who craned their necks to watch the approaching officer. It was worth the effort.

She was fairly tall, and athletically built. Beneath the 'Smoky Bear' hat she wore, brassy-blond hair showed at the temples and at the back, and her full lips drew the eyes from any of the small deficiencies in her rather strong face. The standard beige uniform shirt she wore strained over a bust that was anything but standard, the crisp khaki material molded to the firm, basket-ball sized breasts that must lurk behind it. The pants were almost skin tight on her trim hips and full ass, and she moved with a strong-yet-supple grace in her...

"Fuck - cops don't wear knee-high black leather boots with stiletto heels." Sean said, gaping. "This one does." Josh replied, with a grin.

"It's gotta be some sort of joke." Sean insisted.

"Maybe." Tony replied. "But until I'm sure, I'm going to..." He had to cut his reply short as the officer reached the car, her bountiful tits almost exactly at Tony's eye-level as she made a cranking motion with her hand.

Tony lowered the window. "Can I help you, officer?"

She looked at him, then flicked her eyes over the car's other occupants. "Good evening, gentleman. I'm sure that you understand that - you just having left a place licensed to sell alcohol - we need to make sure that you are not driving under the influence."

"Of course, officer." Tony replied, his heart slowing - it was a random spot-check for drunk drivers. That was fine - as the DD, he'd stuck to soda for the duration.

"I'm afraid that this is going to be a bit of an imposition." The female cop said. "The mobile breathalyzer in my unit gave up the ghost half an hour ago. I'm afraid I'm going to have to ask you to come to the station with me for the test."

Tony sighed. "Of course. If you'll lead, I'll just..."

"I'm afraid not." The officer replied. "Until I'm sure you're fit to drive, I'll have to ask you to turn off your vehicle."

Sharing a look, the three youth climbed from the car and Tony locked it. They followed the cop's instructions to climb in the cruiser - but she allowed Tony to sit up front, which eased the tension. Not only did it show she wasn't treating them as criminals, it gave him a chance to eye her prodigious bust as she drove to the local police station.

She escorted them inside the station... she turned and used a key on her belt to lock the front door. "Hey.. what's going on?" Tony asked, looking around with more than a hint of trepidation.

"You'll understand everything shortly." The buxom blonde said, calmly. She looked over at a cop seated behind a desk. "Tom?" "Of course, Sandy." The cop said, rising and stepping from behind the desk.

The three youth's gaped, then quickly looked away.

The crotch of the male cop's pants was straining under a massive bulge, and the outline of a limp cock - a huge limp cock - could be seen down the leg. The old greeting 'how's it hanging' was unnecessary with this guy - it was completely obvious how it was hanging.

"Look..." Tony tried to protest as the two cops - Tom and Sandy - guided them towards the back of the station. The three youth briefly considered resisting, but there was a half-dozen other cops sitting at desks in the station, and from their demeanor it was obvious what would happen if the youths tried anything.

"Don't worry - you'll understand everything soon enough." The female cop replied, escorting them into a holding cell and closing the door with a final-sounding 'clank'.

Then, to the stunned amazement of the confused youths, she turned to the male cop with a smile...

...and slowly slid down to her knees. With a smile on his face, Tom unzipped his fly and hauled out his monster cock, already becoming hard as Sandy wrapped her hands around the massive girth of it.

With a moan of pleasure, she bent her head and took as much of the massive organ mouth into her mouth. The guys watched, shocked, as she began to bob her head up and down on the huge, hard cock, making little sounds of pleasure low in her throat as she used her hands to stroke the length of throbbing cock she couldn't fit past her lips.

Removing one hand from the massive cock, she used that hand to unbutton her uniform shirt and spread it open, revealing a pair of massive, amazingly firm tits topped by large, thick, erect nipples. She then let that hand return to its previous job.

There was no doubt when Tom came - Sandy made a valiant effort to swallow the entire load of jism, her throat working rapidly, but it was in vain. Thick streams of cum gushed around the place her lips was locked on the shaft of that massive organ, splattering all over the firm, round globes that thrust so proudly from her chest.

Swallowing the last of his cum, Sandy smiled at Tom and licked his cock clean then rose, her unfettered, cum-covered tits swaying as she did so.

Just then, two other cops - massive masses of masculine musculature that strained the uniforms they wore - entered the room. "The Doc's ready for the first two." The one on the left intoned in a deep voice.

"Okay." Sandy said, unlocking the cell.

Josh and Sean struggled, but it was useless as each massive cop easily man-handled one of them out of the room, through a door at the back.

"Hey! Let them go!" Tony yelled at the massive cop's backs as the lead his friends away.

"Now, now - calm down." Sandy said, entering the cell. Tom slid the door closed behind them, and Tony eyed the big-titted female cop uncertainly as she sat down on the bunk opposite his. "While we're waiting, why don't I fill you in on some things?"

Tony looked at her warily. "Uh... okay..." Nodding, the blonde cop began speaking...

Well, I guess I should give you the whole story, from start to finish. This'll take a bit, and include quite a bit of stuff that'll be hard to believe, but you'll have to take my word for it - everything I'm about to describe actually did happen, just the way I'm relating it - within the vagaries of human memory, of course.

To begin with, let me introduce myself. My name's Conrad. Conrad Joseph Williams, if you want the whole kit-and-caboodle. Until about a moth ago, I was just an average guy, more or less. The 'more' of that statement would be my appearance, I guess - Average height, average build, an average face with medium-brown eyes and hair (cut to a medium length, neither long nor short), with a middling taste in clothing - neither outrageous or ultra-conservative. (I didn't dress like a punk - but I didn't dress like I was Amish, either.) Picking me out of a police line-up probably would have been tough - I was the perfect example of an average twenty-six-year-old American youth.

Physically, that is. The 'less' part of my 'average' statement could be applied to my social life an interests. I'm a bit of a bookworm, you see, and not terribly comfortable in social situations, especially those involving the 'fairer sex' - at least, that's how I was when this whole thing started. See, I've always loved reading, everything from Science Fiction to scientific journals, mysteries to mathematics. When it came to the printed word, I was an equal opportunity reader, which probably explains why I wasn't exactly Mr. Popular in school. I blame my book-worm tendencies on being an orphan - when I was young, being shuttled from one foster family to another, the ability to escape into a book was the only constant.

So, when I moved into the 'charming' town of Ludsville, in upper New York State, I didn't know anyone and was traveling on 'a wing and a prayer' - Ludsville just looked like the sort of place where a guy like me could find agreeable work in a library, book-store, that sort of thing, and live of the wages such places paid.

I had a few hundred dollars in cash, plus my meager bundle of belongings. First-and-last on a shoebox apartment ate up most of that, then I began 'hitting the bricks' - to find that most of the stores were leery of 'outsiders'. On reflection, I probably should have picked a larger town, where anybody who hadn't lived there at least one generation was considered a 'tourist' - somebody to take money from during the season, not pay to work.

Money began to get tight, when 'fate' stepped in and seemed to grant me a stay of execution. I met the Doc.

Doctor Peter David Morton - or 'The Doc' to most of the people in town. He wasn't a medical doctor...

...strike that. He did have a MD, among his score of degrees. What I meant was that he wasn't a practicing doctor.

Instead, he was that archetypal Americanism - a basement inventor. A certified genius, he was a little scatterbrained and rather withdrawn, not comfortable in the least with dealing with the 'average person', who seemed to speak a language completely different from the one he did. He spent most of his time in the big old house he'd inherited, slowly spending his money on various inventions, experiments and processes that, for the most part, wouldn't see the light of day in my lifetime.

Now, let me make you understand something. That last sentence probably meant something completely different than you thought, and that's part of what I'm trying to explain. Doc was so incredibly intelligent and inventive, most of the things he came up with would require that time to be studied, examined and reverse-engineered to be usable. Einstein's theory of Relativity could only truly be understood by five mathematicians at the time it came out. Doc was so brilliant that - unless he wanted to run the assembly line himself, alone - no company could put his innovations and discoveries into immediate use, because they didn't understand them and couldn't make a marketable version. When it came to his chemical compounds, medicines and drugs, the FDA was sitting on them while they scratched their heads in confusion. These concoctions always did exactly what the Doc said they would - what stumped the FDA was how these things worked, being far beyond current scientific knowledge in the field.

That was Doc. At least a half-century ahead of the times in scientific, mathematical, medical and chemical knowledge - but he could barely order breakfast in a restaurant. A slight, short man, he looked far younger than his actual age of forty - and that didn't help, as the appearance of his true age might have lent some authority to the short, skinny, dark-haired man with thick glasses and a perpetually abstracted look on his face. See, the problem was simple - his mind was so busy taking fantastic leaps and bounds in all fields of knowledge that he had trouble working coherently in the here-and-now with people, who - unlike chemical reactions - weren't easily forecasted, predicted and anticipated.

So, when I ran into Doc at the hardware store, it seemed like a perfect solution. I'd gone in to leave a resume, even though I wasn't all that keen at the thought of lugging lumber and nails around all day - I was getting desperate.

I didn't get a chance, however. Waiting to speak to the manager/owner, I had to listen to this short, skinny guy in rumpled clothes and mismatched socks try and explain to the befuddled clerk what he needed - in terms of chemical properties. Such-and-such percentage of this-and-that in a solution of a certain density.

I blinked twice, wondering if this was for real, then walked up behind the short guy and tapped him on the shoulder. When he stopped talking to look at me with a vague, questioning look, I leaned past him and spoke directly to the clerk.

"He wants a clear, oil-based varnish."

The clerk blinked, then directed him - us - to the right aisle. Sure enough, a check of the label on the can and he lit up like a Christmas tree - it was just what he needed.

"My dear boy... (At the time, I didn't realize his true age and was irked at the comment from a man who looked to be less than a decade my senior) ...this is precisely what I need!" He adjusted his glasses and held up a list. "However, I have a few more necessities. Perhaps you could also 'translate' them into the more commonly known house-hold compounds so I may locate them?"

"Well, I'm supposed to see the manger for a job.." I started to decline.

"Wonderful!" He said, so enthusiastically that I blinked, wondering why my applying at a hardware store would excite him so. His next words cleared up the mystery. "That means you are currently at liberty, then?"

"Uh.. yeah.." I replied hesitantly.

"I find myself rather inept in dealing with the populace at large, my dear boy, and could really use an ambassador to the rest of the world to take of such tasks as these when I need them done. Also, if you would be amenable to it, I could use somebody as a general assistant - not only for the laboratory,... (He actually pronounced it 'Luh-bor-A-torie'. Until that moment, I thought that was only done in British movies.) ...but for such mundane tasks as preparing coffee and light meals." He grinned in a lopsided, strangely appealing way. "I find myself neglecting to eat, as I simply can't be bothered to make anything. If you'd be willing to make.. oh, preserved prepared goods or desiccated foodstuffs?"

Clean bottles and beakers? Cook stew and beans and 'Crap Dinner'? "Uh, well. "

"Two or three hours of actual work a day on average, I should think, although you'd be required to be there for most of the day, 'on call', as it were. Say - eight hundred dollars a week?"

I was flabbergasted - my jaw dropped. He continued talking, not noticing. "Now, that would be for spending ten-to-twelve hours each day at my home, seven days a week. I have a vehicle you may use, to run errands of for personal use, as my license is expired. As I said, I would only require a small percentage of that time engaged in actual duties, and I'm afraid that my television is rather old and I lack a cable connection... but I have a very large, well-stocked library if your taste runs to the literary side. "

And that's how I came to work for Doc Morton as Chief Bottle-Washer and Button-Sorter.

I'm getting there - trust me.

* * * * *

It was just less than a year later when 'The Event' happened. (See - I told you to trust me.)

I got to the Doc's house about nine o'clock in the morning. I didn't have set hours, working my schedule around his odd hours with no trouble. I walked in the door, carrying a few items for breakfast that I'd picked up on the drive to 'work'. (In Doc's immaculate '48 Packard. Emerald green, white-wall tires, mint condition - I loved that car.)

As soon as I entered the kitchen I stopped dead. Lowering the groceries slowly to the counter, I looked around, my brow furrowing in puzzlement.

The place was a mess.

Well, on the scale of one-to-ten of messes, it wasn't the 'a tornado hit this place' ten, or even close - at most it was a 'three', and probably not even that. Imagine the kitchen of a family with a teenaged son, a working father and home-maker mother with a headache.

Like that.

In the Doc's house, that was enough.

See, the Doc kinda treated the entire house as a laboratory. Even though he did almost all of his work in his basement, fully equipped lab, he used just about anything and everything in his experiments - his mind worked that way, identifying everything by it's chemical make-up or physical properties. He used everything from furniture to decor items in his inventions, if they fit his need, and everything from household cleaners to food in his chemical work, if it fit the bill. Everything in his house was a potential item of importance, and he kept track of it all - in his head - just a little less carefully than Fort Knox keeps track of it's gold.

(The first week I was there I figured this out. I made him breakfast one morning - bacon and eggs. Took it down to him, he ate it without looking up, thanked me, went on with his work. When I came in the next morning, he was standing at the fridge with the door open and a puzzled expression on his face, wondering where four of his eggs - i.e., 'biologically produced chemical reagents' - had gone. After that, I kept everything stocked. If I used something to make a meal, I replaced it that day. If I brought a new 'staple' or 'necessity' into the house, I advised the Doc what it was, let him 'examine' it, let him know where it was being kept. Anything 'occasional' - not worth the hassle - I bought in the morning, used that day, and took the left-overs home, so as not to mess up the 'count'.)

So, just the few items out of place where as loud as a shout in his usually immaculate home. He might forget 'little' things like eating and sleeping, but he was a fantastic housekeeper.

"Doc?" I called - I admit, I was concerned - and headed to the door leading to the basement. Opening it, I smelled the usual pungent odor that occurred when he was doing 'soft' work - experiments with chemicals and medicinal agents, rather than mechanical, electronic or electrical inventions.

Clattering down the stairs, I punched in the code that opened the specially built hazard-containment lock...

...and it buzzed and informed me 'access denied'.

I blinked. Punching the button on the intercom, I called out again. "Doc? It's me - Conrad. Can you buzz me in? The door's not accepting the code."

(This had happened twice before. Doc remembered the code by using the year (A.D.) that matched his 'Projected Date of the End of the Universe Due to Entropy', by his calculations. It was a work-in-progress, and whenever he had a stroke of genius that affected that huge, complex calculation, the door-code changed. Without warning.)

(No, I won't tell you what his latest prediction was. Either you're the type of person who'd hear it and shrug - or you'd start worrying. So forget it.)

I waited what seemed to be forever, and was just about to thumb the intercom again, when the door hissed and opened. I stepped into the small, stainless-steel 'lock, and the outer door hissed shut. The ultraviolet lights snapped on while the air pumps hissed, then the lights shut off and the door opened to the inside of the lab. As always, I was slightly blinded, having shut my eyes too late to avoid that bright initial burst. Blinking, I stepped out of the airlock. "Doc, you'll have to give me the new..."

Then I stopped talking. Because the Doc was sitting at a chair at one of the workstation, hair in a unruly explosion, eyes wild - and pointing an odd-looking gun at my midsection.

"Doc...?" I asked hesitantly, standing stock-still and eyeing the gun nervously. I knew all about that gun - I couldn't help but notice it on my first 'look around' visit to the lab, and had been given a little lecture on it. It was a Lindstradt compressed-air rifle. Basically, a specially-designed paint-ball gun. But, instead of paint-balls, it shot darts. Injector darts - hypodermic needles with weighted plungers that could be filled with tranquilizers, sedatives, so on. Park rangers, zoos, wildlife services, etc., used them for animal control.

But those hypodermic darts could also be filled with other substances - anything liquid, to be exact. Say - arsenic. Or Cobra venom. Hell - Liquid Plumber would do it - and I didn't look the Doc's scared/edgy/crazy look.

"Don't move, Conrad!" He said, his usually vague voice higher-pitched and hoarse. "Don't move, or I swear I'll shoot you - and you don't want that!"

"Damn straight, Doc." I agreed. "Uh... should I put my hands up?" The Doc's eyes flickered. "Yes! Slowly. No sudden moves."

I did that. Don't ask me why I suggested it - maybe it just seemed the thing to do, I don't know. I do know that I was in a mild case of shock, and trying to remain calm while trying to figure out how to calm the Doc down.

"Doc...?" I asked, hesitantly. "Are... are you okay?"

"No!" It was shout, and he trembled - as did I. This wasn't the best situation I'd ever been in. He eyed me narrowly.

Then he surprised me. Despite his crazed look and irrational behavior, he was still connected with reality, and with the Doc I'd known - and respected, despite his oddities.

"Oh, put your hands down, Conrad." He said. "I feel like I should be demanding your 'money or your life'. Sit down."

I did so, cautiously - since, despite his relatively reasonable statement, he kept the gun trained on me and had that 'itchy' look I really, really didn't like.

"I was working on my imbalance formula." He said, suddenly, and I nodded slowly. He often discussed his work with me - not that I understood the technical details of it - and I knew what he was talking about. A chemical agent that would counteract the chemical imbalance that created psychosis....

I got it. I paled, and my voice shook. "You.. how?"

He swallowed, his eyes flicking around as if searching for threats. "The beaker slipped. Supposed to be shatter-proof. but it isn't. Cut myself - and some of the liquid got in the cut. Jumps down the neural pathway, you know - barely had time to feel the cut before it started reacting."

"Instead of balancing an imbalance - it created one." I said. He nodded. "Yes."

Semi-good-news. Unlike those 'born' crazy, he knew his thinking was out-of-whack. Still...

"And. ?" I prompted, carefully.

"And I know some of my thoughts are completely off the wall - but I can't tell which ones. " He said. I could he was sweating profusely, and I didn't like the way his finger - his trigger finger - kept twitching. "I. I know I trusted you completely yesterday. But, for the life of me, I can't remember why. I just never distrusted you, you see - you didn't really earn the trust. Now, I see everything you've done - and I can't tell your motives. Can I trust you?"

It was a rhetorical question. I stayed shut up.

"Then I knew - I can trust you implicitly. I know I can, because I worked ever since the.. incident, to finish this. This - a chemical that causes a limited counter-reaction to the neural pathways that control sub-rational independent filtering. Free will, in other words. Let me inject you with this, and I can make sure that I can trust you - a couple of 'words to the wise', and you'd be incapable of offering any threat."

I had no intention of hurting him - but try to assure a paranoid man of your good intentions. I also didn't have any intention of letting him turn me into an obedient slave, either.

"Uh... Doc, don't get me wrong - but how do I know I can trust you?" I asked, my mouth dry as I searched for safe words. "I mean, you know - know - that your thinking is less than coherent. If you dope me up with something that'll make me obey you implicitly, how do I - or you - know you won't give me orders that are harmful or dangerous. Orders based on those 'off-the-wall' thoughts? You already admitted you can't tell which thoughts are which, and I don't like the idea of you dopping me up in this condition. " I paused, then took the plunge. "Maybe we should call an expert. A psychiatrist - somebody trained to know the 'safe' thoughts from the 'dangerous' ones. Let him stand outside the door, on the intercom - where he can't harm you - and discuss with you the thoughts your having."

"No." It was iron-clad. Then his voice softened, became pleading. "Please, Conrad. I've trusted you more than anybody else in my life - now I want to trust you, I really do. I. I know I need help. Out of the populace of the entire world, you are the only one I trust even a little. I wouldn't have opened that door for anyone else, Conrad. You only got in because I know I need - I want - help, and you might be the one to give it to me."

Despite the situation, I was touched. Kind of.

"If I could be sure - absolutely sure - about you, then I could let you play that role you mentioned. Help me sort out my thoughts. Then I could work on a reversal agent for this. Right now.. I can't. I mean - I can, but part of me isn't sure if it would cure the crazy part - or 'cure' the sane part, getting rid of it. I can't tell which is which, so I can't make up the correct formula. One formula to go one way, another to go the other - but which way is the right way?" He paused, nervous eyes pleaded. "Please - let me inject you. Make sure - so you can help me."

I swallowed, searching for an answer. "You talk about trust - while keeping a gun pointed at me. What's in there, Doc? Poison? A sedative? What?"

(If he'd been his normal, meticulous self, it would have been that 'obedience serum' - and he would have shot me as soon as I walked in the door.)

(Maybe not - maybe he wanted me to 'voluntarily' accept the injection. If I would, that would cement the idea of trust, wouldn't it?) His answer shocked me silly. "It's my estronic compound."

"Your sex-change serum?" I blurted in surprise. Of all the things in the lab he could have loaded it with...

"I.. I don't want to have to kill you." He said, trembling. "So.. no poison. But if it was 'just' a tranquilizer or sedative, you might risk jumping me. The free-will inhibitor takes too long to act... (Well - that explains that. So much for my fancy theories...) and you could do a lot of damage before it kicked in. This stuff contains a paralytic agent that acts immediately, in case I should have to use it - but the threat of changing your gender should be enough to stop you from trying anything, as the fabled 'fate worse than death'." He half-smiled, a crazy look. "It's a double dose."

"You're right - I'm not gonna try anything." He'd developed that stuff as an answer to the expensive, half-assed sort of sex-change that was available. True to form, Doc's solution was cheap, painless, and converted a man's DNA to the feminine equivalent in a few hours, leaving him almost indistinguishable from a biological woman, aside from the fact that the new 'she' would be barren.

Also true to form, the government was sitting on the formula, and it would be a decade at the minimum before it was available. Oh - and did I forget the one 'minor' problem? The Doc could only come up with a Male-to-female formula.

With no antidote.

The Doc swallowed again, practically shimmering in the chair. "So - what about it, Conrad. Let me inject you? Make sure? Be a good lad, say yes."

"Doc... I want to help you, I really do..." I said, leaning forward slightly as I tried to project sincerity, doing that 'George Bush' thing, extending both arms with the hands held about a foot apart, palms inward...

...and my elbow brushed a beaker, knocking it to the floor.

Note: If ever in a circumstance when you are dealing with a person affected with irrational paranoia, never, never do anything that creates sudden noise or movement.

Just thought I'd mention it. Seems like it would go without saying - but I sure wish somebody had cut my head open at birth and tattooed that little piece of wisdom on my brain. Maybe then I would have been more careful, paid more attention to what I was doing.

Then again - probably not. I'm mildly accident prone. Always have been.

As the beaker hit the floor, Doc jerked - and the gun went off, the dart burying itself in my side, injected its load - double load - of sex-change serum into my blood-stream.

I didn't even have time to complete on full 'Goddamn' before the paralytic agent hit, and I hit the floor in a limp pile, unable to move and with my senses deadened by a good fifty or sixty percent - I could still feel things, but at about half 'volume'.

Now, I'm guesstimating here (I couldn't exactly look at my watch), but I figure that it took about six hours for me to change into a woman.

* * * * *

Look - I warned you about this whole 'believability' issue. Right at the very beginning. Yes, it really happened, just like I'm describing it, give or take a few of the words in the conversations and some of the timing.

Really. Honest.

I guess I have to hand it to Doc. Even as a raving psychotic, his reactions are good. Practically before I hit the floor, he had an IV in my arm that was pumping nutrients (Oh, and - while he was at it, that 'free-will inhibitor') into my veins. Since I would have died without the nutrients to supply the energy and building material for my transformation, the jury is still out on whether or not I'm grateful for his instincts.

Twenty-five minutes into my transformation, he'd finished brain-washing me. With a little brain -drying and -folding thrown in for good measure. I won't give you a play-by-play of what I was 'instructed', but you can guess the highlights. You know - no harming him, in any way. Obeying his every will and whim. (Although - trusting, caring soul he is - he managed to throw in a nice clause that let me 'back talk'. A feedback for that whole 'crazy thoughts/sane thoughts' thing. It might make him countermand an order - but I'd be carrying out the original order while I was protesting it. Politely and reasonably, of course. Still - it was a step in the right direction. A very small step - but a step.) No discussing his current situation - or mine - with anybody. No drawing attention to him in any way, see - and explaining to anybody about what was happening would definitely draw attention...

A word of advice, guys. If there is any life path you can take - including 'Public Sanitation Officer' of the Black Hole of Calcutta - that would allow you to avoid experiencing the sensation of your genitals slowly sucking themselves back into your body to form a fully functional female vagina, I strongly urge you to take it.

Not that the transformation was painful, mind you. In terms of physical sensations, it was 'mildly discomforting' at it's worst, with portions that could only be described as 'fascinating', being utterly pain-free, if exceedingly odd feeling.

It was the emotional turmoil of it that I could have avoided quite happily. Laying there, unable to do so much as twitch, while I felt my body slowly altering.

Now, despite the incredibly advanced method that leapt past current surgical gender reassignment by light-years, this was no 'Hollywood' transformation. For one thing, there were all the little details that writers of both movies and literature 'gloss over'.

Like hair. On the hair of the scalp, movies and stories are evenly split - sometimes, a short, manly style somehow becomes a long, feminine mane. Other times, it remains exactly the same.

Trust me - the second one is right. The hair, like the fingernails, stays exactly the same length.

But what I really meant was the body hair. See - it also stays the same. More or less, that is - certain portions of the body that experience large amounts of 'displacement' and new skin growth to match end up completely denuded of hair, simply because the pores stretch, and the hair falls out. These areas include the chest, ass, hips, back and face. Legs and arms? Remain the same - but no more hair grows there. Or rather, no more male-pattern body hair. Shave off all the already-existing hair, and more body hair grows back in the finer female pattern. But the already grown, dead hair - remains unchanged. Teeth - okay, brace yourself for this.

They fell out. All of them. Right near the beginning - the dock had to fish 'em out so I wouldn't choke. Because a whole new set of pearlies grew in, perfect and white.

(Dentists, start panicking. The FDA is sitting on the derivative that causes just that effect to occur. When they release it - you're out of business.)

Other than the teeth thing, the facial restructuring wasn't a big deal, in terms of how it felt. Kind of low, barely noticeable internal itching with the occasional low sensation of pressure. What was strangest was the fact that my vision changed as my eyes were altered. Not much difference in over-all focus, depth and clarity - but the colors shifted slightly, tending towards the 'warmer' side of the spectrum, and my peripheral vision increased a good twenty or thirty percent.

The sensation of having your shoulders become slimmer is interesting - if you ignore the emotional panic over feeling your body become that of a woman, that is. Now, I wasn't exactly husky to begin with, and they didn't change that much, but I could actually feel the nerve pathways that controlled - would control, after the paralytic agent wore off - my arms shortening.

The sensation of your waist shrinking in diameter is like a long hug by a middling-strong woman - a slow, steady compression. Toss in a mild case of indigestion 'gut rumble' to equal the feeling of internal organs reshaping themselves, and you have a pretty good simulation of what I felt.

The legs and arms were the least obvious sensations - just some odd twitches of unidentifiable sensations. The hands and feet - the worst part.

Physically, I mean - emotionally, they had the least impact on me. Weirdest - the least emotionally troubling was the most physically annoying. Imagine, if you will, one of those 'macho' jerks who insist turning every handshaking into a combination challenge and display of his strength. Now, imagining that bone-crushing handshake on both hands, both feet, and the wrists and ankles. That's got it to a 'T'.

Then there was... the tits.

Since it was over such a 'long' period of time, it was just a low, steady pressure that lasted throughout, as the base sensation. But it was logarithmic progression in other sensations, as the mass grew and the sensitivity of the flesh and nipples increased. It felt sort of like somebody was slowly piling warm, damp towels on my chest. Except for the nipples - the sensation of which I still haven't found an adequate description. The closest I can come is to imagine the situation I just described - but you have tiny cocks on your chest, as sensitive as the shaft of your 'real' cock. That even gives you a sort of starting place to the experience of nipples becoming aroused....

...but it's still a piss-poor analogy. Similar-but-not-same. Same shit, different pile. Close but no cigar. But, by all means, don't put yourself through this just to see what I'm trying to say.

Now, having explained how hard it is to explain the physical sensation of that...

I have to say that that is the easiest thing in the world compared to describing the whole cock-to-cunt gig, complete with balls-being- sucked-up-to-become-non-functional-ovaries routine.

So I'm not going to do it. there's nothing even close to describing the situation and it's sensations, so let's just say it was... unique, and leave it at that.

And if that doesn't satisfy your curiosity, then, by all means, do go through the whole transformation schmear to see what I mean. I can tell you what I was feeling emotionally, though.

You have to remember - although I described them separately here, they were all going on at the same time when I went through it - a slow, drawn-out routine.

My first emotional response was panic. Stark, unadulterated panic. Something very, very wrong was happening, and I had to do something....

I couldn't twitch a finger. The next sensation was crashing despair, mixed with growing horror and a smattering of disbelief. The good, old fashioned 'this isn't really happening' routine.

Didn't take long for that to become the 'why is this happening to me?' routine, and pity joined the mix. Poor little me. Bleak despair. Let me die - I don't want to be a woman.

Then 'bargaining with the universe'. Please, help - I'll do anything. Didn't limit it to 'God' - Buddha, feel free to jump in. Bast, Osiris, Ra? Sure, lend a hand. Zeus? I'll take that.

Then...

Okay. Brace yourself.

Tentative acceptance. Really. Kind of a self-check.... Breathing? Check. Mobile? No. but a temporary situation. Tentative 'good to go', pending. Sane? Well. reasonably. Hope? Yo! Will-to-live! Paging you - there any hope left?

Hmmm... (Rationalizing.) Doc always claimed that the whole 'MtF only' problem with his sex-change serum was only temporary. What was his words? "Oh, I figure that I'll get the motivation some day, sit down, and inside a month - two, at the very outside - I'll have a way to make a female."

I remembered it distinctly. So. If I live through this, can get the Doc's attention and (reasonably sane) cooperation, offer a little quid-pro- quo....

In a month (two at the outside) I could be male again. As I understood it, I might not be exactly the same as I was now - it wasn't an antidote - but I'd be reasonably close.

So - priorities? To keep from going insane, don't give into despair, and stay alive at least until the Doc finishes the FtM serum. Conclusions?

At that point I regained a will to continue on, to make it through. I was in a bad situation - very, very bad. But it was survivable, and even redeemable.

But that didn't mean it became 'fun'. I didn't gone gonzo, blowing every fuse and gasket at the horror of being turned into a woman - but I was certainly less than sanguine.

Let me put it this way - if I'd been able, I'd have been screaming. But it would have been coherent screaming.

While this was going on, I was vaguely aware of Doc's actions, but they were a whole lot less interesting to me than what I was experiencing. Even when he stripped my limp body completely to allow for the changes to my body, I hardly noticed - and I can only remember the occasional flash of him walking around, muttering to himself, and I couldn't tell you what he was up to - well, not at the time. Some of his actions became clear, later on.

The time passed, seeming to drag on forever as the changes finally slowed and stopped. Soon after, I felt a strange tingling, prickling sensation - then suddenly felt the paralysis lift, and I could move again.

Only - I wasn't sure I was ready to. The whole situation was disturbing enough that part of me just wanted to curl up in a ball and lay there, not having to deal with what had happened to me.

Instead, I forced myself to push myself up and climb to my feet.

That was an adventure in itself. Sitting up, I could feel the shift of my new breasts, surprisingly heavy and authoritative - which was easily explained, as I looked down and saw a pair of tits the size of medicine balls, and almost as firmly spherical.

I gasped - but I didn't stop moving, forcing myself to my feet while the Doc watched with a guarded look. I knew that if I gave in to my desire to focus on any single part of my change right now, to dwell on this-or-that, I might bog down and 'lose' it. Instead, I forced myself to stand tall...

...and found myself facing a full-length mirror that the Doc had brought in, thus completely destroying my decision not to focus on my changed body until I had a better grip on myself. Stunned, I took two steps forward and stared at the reflection in the mirror, my jaw dropping.

The woman in the mirror mimicked the action, staring back at me with the same stunned, disbelieving look.

She - I! - was slightly taller than average for a woman. Say... about average height for a man, not to surprisingly. She had a trim, firm figure that was feminine without being 'girly' - a Tomboy body, fit and attractive and firm, yet all woman. Slender hips, for a woman, but wide enough to be feminine. No tiny, 'fashion-model' waist, but still delightfully slim. Shoulders that were fairly broad for a woman, but not masculine - especially counter-balanced by those breasts.

About those tits - when I'd looked down at them, they'd seemed absolutely enormous. But it had been a trick of perception - I wasn't used to looking at a pair of tits from that particular angle, and I certainly wasn't used to the weight and drag of tits, the sensations that came from possessing such a pair of feminine mounds. Now, in the mirror, I could see past that illusion - but it was a matter of scope, not absolutes.

They weren't gigantic, the size of medicine balls - they were 'merely' huge, just slightly smaller than the size of volleyballs. Though they were remarkably firm for their size, they didn't jut out as impossibly spherical as I'd thought, but had a natural sag, with a sort of abbreviated tear-drop shape as they hung from my chest, sloping downwards slightly before swelling out onto those globes. They were tipped with large aureole with thick nipples, and they were absolutely spectacular, if somewhat outsized.

My new legs were shapely enough, if not absolutely remarkable. Actually, come to think of it, that could be used to describe most of my new form - shapely, attractive, but not remarkable. If I'd been less endowed, I would have been just another athletic-looking woman, worth a nice glance and maybe a pass or too. Even with the tits I wasn't incredibly... well, anything. In this day-and-age of implants, they were certainly huge, but well shy of the largest surgically-enhanced strippers and porn stars, even if I was bigger than the average 'inflated' woman on the street.

Facially, I was... pretty. Strong, yet not unfeminine, features, with a nose that was a little too large and ears that were a little too big. I wasn't some flawless, airbrushed beauty - but quite attractive, and - again - unremarkable for it.

And my cock.. I'd never been phenomenally endowed - but now my manhood was gone completely, leaving behind a womanly opening that was the 'unkindest cut' of all.

I stared at the image in the mirror for what seemed for ever - then turned to the Doc, hands roaming over my transformed face. "What did you do to me...?" I asked - and I'm ashamed to admit that I was near tears. "I.. I'm a woman. Really a woman!"

The insane, guarded look in his eyes was in full force, and his words didn't exactly bolster my confidence. "You did this to yourself, jumping at me like that! I warned you - and you still tried something!"

Definitely paranoid. "But..."

"I don't want to hear it!" He said, angrily - and I learned the power of his programming, because I could no longer attempt to explain what had happened. Not that it would have mattered, I guess - he'd gone completely around the bend, and there was no reasoning with a madman.

"I know I can't trust you now - I was right to doubt you." Doc said, and my stomach sank at the realization that he'd slipped even that tenuous grip to reality. "Do you know the trouble you've caused, the worry you've given me? But now I know the truth - you, and everybody else, is frightened of my genius. You'd all like nothing more than to find a reason to lock me up. Claim I'm crazy, take me a way, put me somewhere 'safe' to get me out of the way. Well - it's not going to work, do you hear! It's not going to work!"

"Doc!" I said, my new contralto desperate and sincere. "Please, don't... don't act without thinking it through. I've never tried to have you locked up. I've never tried to interfere - I just worked for you. that's all - I just needed a job."

His eyes narrowed as he looked at me, and my heart pounded behind my new endowments. He could order me to do anything at all, and I'd do it. If he decided I was a threat...

"You're right." He said suddenly, and I blinked in surprise at his sudden jump back into reality. Somewhere in his addled mind, those 'sane' thoughts were still battling with the 'insane' ones - but, now that he was under the delusion that he'd never been insane, he wasn't even trying to tell the difference between any of his thoughts. Instead, he was trying to integrate two radically different sets of thoughts into a coherent mindset.

He nodded to himself. "You still work for me - I know you won't do anything from now on, as you'll do what I tell you. You'll be the perfect employee." He looked at me slyly. "But you can't be 'you' - no, that would lead to too many questions. You need to be somebody else."

"Doc...?" I asked, nervously.

"From now on, you'll answer to the name of Sandy. You'll act as if your name is - and always was - Sandra Sarah Stanley. Do you understand?"

"Yes." I replied, and when he asked me to repeat my name, I helplessly gave the one he'd given me. I didn't want too - I struggled to get my real name out - but it did no good. What emerged was the alliteration he'd given me to use, that stupid - insane - set of 'esses'.

Then he sat me down and gave me a whole new past and history. He obviously thought he'd worked it out well, but his affliction showed, and I winced with every word he drilled into my helpless mind - but had no choice but to accept what he said. Then I was told to go, and start my new life.

I entered the bathroom on the second floor and started a tub running, looking under the counter and finding what I'd been told to expect a set of razors.

One of the first instruction that 'Sandy' had been given concerned that remaining body hair. Doc was in no condition to appreciate my new form, and I certainly wasn't worried about making myself attractive...

...but, on Doc's orders, 'Sandy' was. See - Doc wanted Sandy to fit in, and since she and I happened to be the same person at the moment, that meant I was going to be shaving away that unsightly body hair. I didn't want to - the thought was disquieting, behaving in that manner - but I did it anyway, climbing into the tub of warm water and carefully shaving away the last of the body hair.

And I did it without hesitating, complaining, or even looking upset. I couldn't, you see - Doc made sure that Sandy would behave 'reasonably'. I was incapable of showing strong, negative emotions. Oh, I could feel them - and did. But I couldn't display anger, fear, despair, horror, disgust - the closest I could get was the most mild versions of them. I couldn't fly into a rage - but I could get miffed. I couldn't fall into a deep despair - but I could become 'quiet', maybe even a little 'moody'.

All because Doc didn't want to be 'bothered' by my presence around him. In fact, though I was 'allowed' the weaker negative emotions, the wording of his instructions meant that - whenever possible - I was to act friendly, pleasant and cheerful. Only FEELING the worst of those emotions would allow me to show that weak reaction. Anything else, and I couldn't be anything but extraordinarily pleasant. But shaving my legs and other assorted body parts was only the beginning of my humiliation.

Now, you have to sort of put yourself in my place. Sure, shaving my legs, et cetera, may not seem like that big a deal. Weird, sure - but why get riled up about it?

Well - first off, it was 'sissy' stuff, or so I'd always thought. I mean, it was all right for a woman to do, but no man shaved his legs. (Okay - so I was technically a woman now - but I didn't feel like a woman, emotionally. I was still the same guy, just trapped in a woman's body.)

But that wasn't the worst part. The worst part was that I HAD NO CHOICE! Sure, social pressure for women to shave their legs is one thing - but I had been told to do it, and so I did. Maybe, after much hesitation, I might have decided to shave my new body's legs to fit in, if left to my own devices. Maybe not. But it would have been my choice.

Likewise what came next.

Dying my hair.

Wanting to separate 'Sandy' from 'Conrad' as much as possible, Doc had provided a bottle of special bleach and instructed me to go blonde. Now, I'd never considered changing my hair color, but doing so - before, on my own terms - wouldn't have been that bad. But having no choice was something else altogether, and inside I was a roiling cauldron of emotion as I used the bleach to carefully change my medium-brown hair to a golden blonde. Soon my short mop of hair was that brassy gold, and I headed downstairs.

Sitting on the couch in the living room was my - Sandy's - stuff.

I dressed in the clothes I'd come to work in, as none of the Doc's stuff would possibly fit this body. Surprisingly, my male clothes did a fairly accurate impression of unisex clothing. The jeans were too tight in the hips and ass, and too loose in the waist. But that was unnoticeable, as the skin-tight fit over my hips and ass could have been on purpose, to show off my figure, and tightening my belt took out the slack at the waist.

The white T-shirt and gray sweatshirt also fit tightly over my new tits, creating all new sensations that were disturbingly pleasant, and the look was completely passable. Socks, of course, were socks, and my smaller feet fit tolerably well in a pair of the Doc's sneakers, which were pretty standard and wouldn't attract any undue attention.

Trust me - for a normal, heterosexual male trapped in a woman's body, there was no pride when I looked in the mirror and saw... a woman. An everyday, totally unremarkable woman. No make-up, short hair, unisex clothing over a trim body - I could have been any woman just running out to the store for something, not bothering to get 'made up' for the quick trip out.

Which was basically what I was. The Doc had a complete computer set up, complete with such things as scanners, laminators, digital cameras, etc. And, even completely around the bend, he was still a genius, so I wasn't surprised at the realism of the fake ID he'd ginned up for me and left with my clothes. I now had paperwork that - if not tracked back - would agree with my new gender, appearance and name.

With my new ID was a bundle of cash the Doc had given me to flesh out my new identity, and I picked it up and headed for the garage.

Now, I wasn't emotionally ready to go out in public in my new form, to see and be seen, to deal with other people in my new persona. But the Doc had given me orders, and I had no choice as I slid behind the wheel of the car and pulled out of the garage to head into town and get some shopping done.

My first stop - unwilling as it was - was at the local clothing store. Now, I'd gone in plenty of times - but I'd never been going to the women's section, and beneath my calm exterior, my heart was beating a million miles a minute at my 'perverted' actions. I was subconsciously waiting for anything from snickers to outrage from the staff as I wandered into the women's section and began looking at clothing. Although I knew, intellectually, that nobody could tell that I was 'really' a man, the emotional side of the equation was completely different. Added onto that (unreasonable) fear of being 'caught' was the shame at buying women's clothing. Although most of the clothing was generally unisex, not all that different from male clothing, and the fact that I now had the body to wear anything from the unisex to the most feminine clothing, I still had the male outlook, and the thought of wearing woman's clothes just felt wrong, on a very fundamental level. I felt like one of those perverts who got off dressing up as women. It was like I was character out of a bad movie or something - despite my new body, I felt like a hairy, ungainly man buying frilly lace nothings to wear.

That feeling doubled and redoubled when I started trying clothes on. I felt like the lowest, slimiest pervert, 'sneaking' into the women's change room, trying on women's clothing, seeing defenseless and unknowing women in their unguarded state, even chatting politely with them as I waited for a change room to be free, 'lying' to them, 'acting' like a woman. I was disgusted and afraid and ashamed - but none of that showed.

I soon had a basic wardrobe to work with. Bras were completely out of the question - the store didn't carry anything big enough for my new endowments. But I bought several pairs of panties, ranging from simple to sexy, and each one was another load of shame as I stacked it in my purchases.

I left the store dressed in one of my new outfits. I got off 'lucky', in that the Doc had phased his orders a specific way by mere chance. If I'd been told to buy 'feminine' clothing, it would have been a completely different story - as it would have been if I'd been told to buy 'womens' clothing. But he'd ordered me to buy clothing 'that fit my new identity' - which left a lot of leeway, even as it held me bound as if a straight-jacket on my mind.

You see - he'd define who 'Sandy' was, but hadn't filled in the details. Instead, I found myself - unwillingly - considering what a woman like 'me' would be like, and coming up with my own persona to fit my appearance. Sort of tomboyish, yet feminine. Athletic yet sexy - I began to build an internal 'image' of who Sandy was, idle imagining - and was locked into acting out the part. I had no choice.

So, when I left the store, I was dressed in what 'Conrad' imagined somebody who looked like 'Sandy' would choose to wear.

A pair of skin-tight black denim pants hugged my lower body from ankle to waist, defining every curve of my well-toned legs and firm ass. Even the faint line of the skimpy white panties I wore could be seen, if you looked close enough.

A pair of black ankle boots enclosed my feet, and I was atop the block four-inch heels of those boots. I was surprised - and ashamed - to find that walking in those boots was fairly easy. I'd expected walking in heels to be much harder, but I moved well in them. It felt as weird as hell, but it wasn't hard.

In place of a bra, I wore a spandex crop-top that contained my tits, stopping them from moving as freely and distractingly as they had before I'd entered the store. Over the black spandex top I wore a white cotton shirt with only two middle buttons done up, just about where the bottom of the crop-top defined the round swell of my lower breast, displaying a nice view of cleavage above, and a trim waist below.

All in all, I looked every bit the woman I now was - not that I found any comfort in that. The knowledge I looked completely feminine was bad enough - but the fact that, unwillingly, I was forced to act every bit as female as I now was made me want to cry. More than just my physical form had been stolen from me - my 'identity', the ability to be myself, was gone. Oh, I still had some degree of free will - but within tightly bound 'programming' that would determine my overall actions.

For instance - what happened next.

Dropping my purchases so far off in the car, I proceeded a couple of stores down and went in to a beauty parlor - something that I would never do in a million years, if I hadn't been 'programmed' to do so. Shame warred with disgust as - apparently good natured and reasonably cheerful - I arranged to get a complete make-over. The 'free-will' part of me was able to decide to go with a minimal, 'natural' look - but that was the limit of my ability: to make a decision that I didn't even want to make in the first place.

All this shame over my inability to control myself was magnified by my inability to show that shame - I was pleasant and cheerful, and - unreasonable as it was - I had the feeling that people could tell I was a man in a woman's body, and was ashamed to think that they would think I was so comfortable with my new condition.

I know, I know - it doesn't really make any sense. But part of being human is that not everything is logical - it wasn't so much what I thought, or knew, as how I felt.

What I felt was... well, indescribable. There was simply no comparison to any event into my life up to that point. The nervousness and fear of asking the first girl out on a date? A breeze compared with now. The shame of getting caught shop-lifting when I was fifteen? Nothing at all. This wasn't just a difference of degree, but of magnitude.

And it was only going to get worse.

After my little outing to make myself 'presentable' - which, I might add, including getting my ears pierced and buying some basic, inexpensive jewelry - I was 'allowed' to return to the Doc's place to take care of getting some dinner ready for him. I made a simple meal and brought it down to the lab, punching in the new code he'd given me for the door...

(I already told you - NO!)

...and stepping through...

Doc was bent over the work-station, obviously deep involved in a project. Now, part of the problem was, despite everything, I was still thinking of him as the same old Doc, with some problems. I'd seen him in this pose a hundred times, and did what I always did - tried to lay the food at his elbow without disturbing his concentration.

This time, however, he reacted completely differently than ever before, proving how 'delusion' my own assumptions about his current state were. His eyes were wild and I backed a step away from him, unable to show the sudden shock I had felt at the sudden and viscous movement, revealing a man with the look of a feral animal in his eyes.

"What are you doing sneaking up on me!" he screamed, spittle flying from his lips.

"I was just bringing you dinner, Doc." I replied in a voice that was unwillingly calm and pleasant. Doc was paranoid, and that meant everyone and everything something that had never bothered him before now set him off like a fire-cracker with a short fuse.

He was practically shaking with his reaction to my 'sudden, threatening' appearance, and he glowered at me. "Never do that again!" He said, angrily. "Let me know when you're coming up on me!"

"Yes, Doc." I replied - without any choice. Then my stomach dropped as he spoke again.

"In fact - I want you to start wearing higher-heeled shoes. The type with those thin heels that make that click-clack sound. Then I can hear you coming- the ones you're wearing are too quiet. Got it?"

I fought against it much more viscosly this time - but never had a chance. This repetition of "Yes, Doc" wasn't any different then the last in either tone or content, nothing revealing the internal struggle I underwent as I helplessly accepted his order. "I haven't purchased any with higher, thinner heels. Should I go get some now?"

"No, no." He waved a hand irritable. "Just don't disturb me for the rest of the night, then go out and get some heels first thing in the morning."

Great.

"Also - I've been working on some new projects." He said, looking at me in a sly way that made me begin worrying. "I need a test subject for one of them - a male test subject. After you purchase some new shoes tomorrow, you are to find a way to convince a man to come back here..." he explained the rest of his plan to me, and that sinking feeling in my gut just kept growing and growing. There was no doubt that he was completely insane - but he was still a genius, and still working on his projects with the same level of skill and perfection. It was just that those projects were things he wouldn't have considered doing, when he was sane.

I made my one attempt to convince him this was wrong, but my 'sneaking up' on him had temporarily destroyed my credibility, and he dismissed my arguments, which ended it then and there, as once he'd told me to stop arguing on the topic, I was completely unable to continue.

I did win a 'victory', if I could call it that. I tried to point out that I couldn't just put on a pair of high heels and walk around in them right off the bat - the ones I was wearing now were fairly easy to get around in, but they were a far cry from the ones that I'd been ordered to by and wear.

So, he tore himself away from his 'important' work and - using odds and ends he had laying around - created a pair of the oddest looking 'shoes' I had ever seen. They had a telescoping heel in a sleeve that stuck out the back and extended downward on small hydraulic lifters, electrical power provided by a belt pack I was wore. I was ordered to put these shoes on, and so I did. I was also injected in the soles of my feet with a compound that would temporarily soften the bones and ligaments in my feet, allowing them to adopt a more 'natural' curve to whatever height the heels were set at, then set in the new shape left by the shoes by the end of the evening.

For the next few hours, as I went around my duties of cleaning the house, the heels of the shoes slowly grew, allowing me to grow accustomed to the higher, thinner heels as they slowly extended. I felt utterly off balance most of the time, but since it was a gradual change, it was a constant sensation, rather than growing more and more unstable as the heels grew higher. They eventually reached their full extension, and I spent the next couple of hours 'relaxing' by watching TV or reading, never allowed to sit down as I practiced on the high heels.

As I said, the man's a genius, even when he's a raving lunatic. By the time I turned in for the night, I was fairly competent - if not comfortable - walking on the simulated high-heels.

I took a shower before going to bed, and that itself was an interestingly embarrassing situation. I tried to be quick and efficient about the whole thing, but soaping up a firm, female body with large, sensitive breasts isn't the easiest thing to be unemotional about. Part of me enjoyed the sensation of my hands gliding over an undeniably female body, while another part was disgusted to have somebody - me! - 'feeling me up'. A third part, however, enjoyed that very sensation, and that enjoyment only added to my inexpressible embarrassment.

It was all very confusing.

I slid between the sheets of the bed, and for the first time that day I was alone and completely without any orders or commands to fulfill - I was as close to being 'me' as I could be, given the situation. Not having anybody around to have to 'play act' for, I was allowed to express some of my emotions, and did...

...by sobbing silently into my pillow before drifting off to sleep, my huge, firm tits pressed against each other and the bed as I lay on my side and ended my first day as a woman in a manner that I had always thought particularly representative of the 'weaker' sex.

The next morning I was spared my daily chore of making breakfast for the Doc, because I was forbidden to go downstairs. I didn't feel like eating, myself, my stomach tied up in knots over what was to come. Instead, I dressed in similar outfit as yesterday, only with blue- jeans instead of black and a white crop-top without the over shirt. I took quite some time on my make-up, having to redo it three times to get it a fair approximation of what the professional beautician had applied yesterday, then I was 'ready' to go out.

As ordered, my first stop was to the boutique. As much as I hate to admit it, I was almost looking forward to getting there - the hour or so it had taken for me to get ready since getting up had been spent feeling a discomfort that hovered right on the edge of pain - my altered feet. With a higher curve now part of the arch's design, such 'low' heels were uncomfortable, as if I was forcing my feet to sit flat.

That was a 'problem' I didn't have half an hour later as I exited the store. I was balanced atop a pair of knee-high 'natural' suede boots with a six inch stiletto heel. The boots looked kind of classy, almost like a modern recreation of the 'Robin Hood' type boot - although I'm sure none of Sir Locksley's Merry men ever wore six inch stilettos.

Or moved so competently in them on his 'first' try. Although extremely uncomfortable, emotionally, about wearing the high heels, I moved fairly well in them, even if I wasn't exactly grace personified. The boots were held in place by a complicated little arrangement that looked like a flap of 'deerskin' that folded over and laced up a series of metal clasps - but, in fact, three snaps held the flap closed, and under the flap was a zipper that actually kept the boots in place. It was a stylish, interesting arrangement - and no doubt was a major factor in the hefty price of the boots. I'd always thought things were getting expensive these days, but the prices charged for women's footwear would have floored me, if I'd been able to express any of my real emotions.

Instead, I paid the outrageous bill for the eight pairs of footwear I bought - all the time smiling pleasantly and chatting with the extremely helpful salesclerk.

But this was just the start of what the day held in store for me.

Doing all the Doc's errands meant that I was his 'interface' with the small town's population, and I knew most people, if only in a sort of vague way. My instructions had been clear on the type of 'volunteer' I was looking for - a man between the ages of twenty and thirty- five, single, not in a current serious relationship, and in fairly good health.

Now, I was 'dedicated' to finding such a person, no matter how much I wanted to shy away from the job. And part of the problem was what I was going to do, later - but my more immediately problem was discovering which of the 'suitable' candidates that I knew of had no current 'girl'.

I don't know about you, but - try as I might - I could only think of one way to ascertain this fact with reasonable speed and efficiency. And, considering what I'd been ordered to do once I found an acceptable candidate, it was even sort of 'logical' - although that realization didn't make it any easier for me.

That's how I ended up leading Tom Rollins up the steps of the Doc's house an hour later...

Okay, okay - more details. Well, Tom was my first candidate, a well muscled, handsome man who worked as a Deputy of the local Sheriff's office. He was off duty that day, and I found him in the local coffee shop grabbing a late breakfast. I 'met' him by the simple expedient of tripping as I walked past his booth, and when he reacted by jumping up and grabbing me before I fell of my heels, I made a joke about the proverbial 'long arm of the law'.

Now, all the while I was being exceedingly charming, playing 'Sandy' to the hilt as she was reacting to a handsome man. But, inside, I was flooded with shame and disgust as I began playing the old game, but from the 'wrong' side.

It took some cheerful banter and chatting, but I 'managed' to get him involved with a discussion that left no doubt as to what I was doing apparently utterly willingly. I was flirting with a man, and inside I wanted to die, not just because of what I was doing, but how well I was doing it. The fact that I could be so charming and feminine as to get a man interested in me was hardly something I was proud of - but I had no choice, and - unlike a 'real' woman - there was no display of nerves of uncertainty in my flirting. Oh, I was feeling much, much more than that, but Doc's programming of me gave me an 'edge' in playing the game, no matter how disgusting I found it.

I spun a yarn, explaining that I (Sandy) was a friend of Conrad (me!), staying at the Doc's place while 'I' (Conrad) was taking a moth's vacation, allowing me(Sandy) time to find an apartment here in town, trading room and board for the duties that I (Conrad) usually did.

Having no reason to doubt the story, Tom accepted it at face value, and when I complained about moving some heavy objects in my temporary abode and asked if he knew where I could hire a handyman to help out - one that wasn't too expensive, as 'I was on a limited budget' - Tom immediately offered his services, and offer not entirely chivalrous considering the rather obvious display of attraction I was giving him.

So, as I said, it didn't take all that long before he was walking up the steps of the Doc's place behind me, probably enjoying the extra little sway I was unwillingly putting into my walk for his benefit. He carried my show purchases, having insisted, and I'm sure that only 'helped' my role-playing. What could be more 'girlish' than a woman on a short budget splurging on some shoes?

God - I wanted to curl up and die.

Instead, I lead him up to the servant's quarters ion the second floor. Outdated in design, from a time when the wealthy had live-in servants that they wouldn't be caught dead sharing dinner or leisure time with, the quarters had four bedrooms around a small kitchen, bathroom and living room, making it an ideal 'apartment' for my story. Before showing him the non-existent furniture I 'had' to move, I offered him a drink, which he accepted.

Ten minutes later, he was sitting in the chair he'd plopped down in, a vacant expression on his face showing that the 'will inhibitor' I'd slipped him had taken effect.

No matter how much I fought against it, I went ahead and did what the Doc had told me to do.

The first step was to 'program' Tom. I ordered him not to remember being drugged - but, also, not to find anything I did to be unusual, or anything that happened to me or him to be strange. He wasn't to tell anybody about the 'strange' things we did. He was to obey me if I gave him a direct order, but to continue acting completely normal in all other respects...

...with one exception. To have an explanation for him seeing me often, he was to 'fall in love' with me, to start dating me and spending as much free time with me as he could, obviously displaying his affection. This would forestall and suspicions.

And mean that I would be his girlfriend. Because I was ordered to program him to not know he was programmed - unlike myself - I had to give him 'reasons' for almost everything, and this particular reason made me sick. But I didn't have any choice, and gave him his instructions, exactly as I'd been told to.

Then I moved on to the even more disgusting, disquieting part of the day's events.

I knelt in front of him, unzipped his pants, and pushed them and his boxers down around his ankles, revealing his flaccid, average-sized endowment.

Them with no outward display of the disgust I felt, I took his warm , limp cock in hand and began to fondle it to arousal.

Having no choice in the matter didn't make the fact that I was fondling 'another' man's cock and more palatable. It was utterly disgusting to the male me to be so outwardly calm, almost cheerful as I stroked and fondled his cock until it swelled in my hand, the warm flesh throbbing in time with the steady beat of Tom's heart.

I then measured his cock, using a soft clothed Tailor's tape measure, taking exact measurements of almost every aspect of his cock - length, girth, side of the head, size of his balls, all sorts of obscure measurements.

Then I took a needle out from a little bag and proceeded to give him an injection just behind his sac, which he didn't even feel in his state. I slipped the needle and vial into his coat pocket, giving him instructions to inject such-and-such amount into himself every day - but not to consciously be aware of what he was doing, or of the needle at all. He was to make sure that nobody saw him he was doing it, and to hide the needle and serum between uses, but not to have any conscious memory of the needle or the injections.

After doing this, I finished programming Tom, informing giving him false memories of what we'd been doing as I put his clothes back together and had him come over to the couch, where I unwillingly curled up against him before snapping him out of the trance state.

She smiled and leaned in closer. "God, you're incredible Sandy - you know that?" Helplessly, I smiled in reply - and kissed him.

It gave all the appearances of being a heart-felt, passionate kiss I'm sure. I pressed my lips against his and closed my eyes, our tongues dancing around each other as I seemed to enjoy the kiss. I have to admit that he was good - it was physically pleasurable. But that pleasure was outweighed - by far - by the disgust I felt at kissing a man.

Finishing the kiss, he reluctantly broke away and said he had to go. I saw him to the door, playing every bit as reluctant as he was, waving good-bye to him as he headed off.

I then made lunch and carried it down to the Doc, heels 'clicking' on the concrete floor, giving him plenty of warning of my movements.

As he took the food, he quizzed me on the morning's events, and I described the entire thing. When I mentioned that Tom was deputy, a thoughtful, craft look crossed his face that I didn't like, but he didn't say anything, leaving me wondering what was going on inside that addled brain of his.

I spent the rest of the afternoon puttering around, mostly getting more practice in my heels. I really didn't want to, but my programming made me 'want' to be able to walk in heels as if it was completely natural for me. So, I spent an awful lot of time wandering around the house, getting used to the heels and practicing different types of strides.

Then Doc called me down to the basement, and gave me some new instructions. When I heard what they were, I wanted to scream.

Instead, I followed them to the letter, going back upstairs and leaving a message for Tom, asking him if he could drop by that evening. Then I continued with my programmed instructions.

Step one was another shower, carefully washing myself, trying to ignore the confused feelings my washing created. After drying off, I went into 'my' bedroom...

...and began to put on my sexiest outfit.

I hadn't bought a lot of 'sexy' stuff, as it wasn't part of 'Sandy' - but I had bought some, and this is what I know put on.

A pair of white nylons was the first item. They were almost virginal in appearance, right down to the lace trim at the top, where an elastic strip held them in place.

The next item was a white silk nightgown that stretched taut over my firm bust and hung just low enough to cover my bare cunt and the tops of my stockings. The final touch to the make-shift seduction outfit was the white platform shoes with the white plastic bows at the ankle and seven inch spike heels.

I carefully applied a more sensual make-up scheme and went into the 'living room' of the servant's quarters to wait for my 'boyfriend'.

He showed up about an hour later, and he was 'satisfactorily' delighted by my look. I threw an extremely suggestive wiggle into my walk as I led him upstairs, pouring a couple of brandies for us to sip at as I sat in such a way to pose for him, giving him something to look at.

There was a little 'something' in each of our drinks. I'd been instructed to add a different substance to each of our drinks, although I didn't know what it was or what it was for. I was sure I was going to find out.

I wasn't 'disappointed'.

It was very, very shortly after that I felt a strange tingling sensation. My breathing began to increase, and I felt warm, flushed. To my horror, I could feel my nipples becoming erect, pressing out against the silk of the nightie as a growing warmth built in my belly.

I was becoming aroused.

I found out later that the exact properties of the chemicals we'd ingested were the same thing, tailored for males and female physiology's. Quite simply, they caused the person under their influence to become aroused and very, very 'uninhibited' when around an aroused member of the opposite sex. It also altered the mental status of the people under the influence, dropping out any sort of will power or critical thinking.

At the time, I wasn't aware of this - all I was aware of was the fact that, horrifyingly, I was becoming aroused...

...and that I was beginning not to care. I just wanted to satisfy that need I was feeling. Everything else - including all my reservations and male-based emotions on the matter - just seemed to slide away, not in the least bit important any more. Nothing seemed to matter, except satisfying this urge that I was feeling.

So, it was almost with joyful anticipation that I rose, smiling 'honestly' for the first time since this ordeal began, and swayed over to where Tom sat, lowering myself to a straddling position on his lap.

Leaning forward, I kissed him passionately, honestly feeling the passion at the time and having no negative emotions about what I was doing. I was supremely happy and content to kiss him, caring only about fulfilling what my body was demanding. When he reached up and began to fondle my tits through the silk fabric, I moaned low in my throat, enjoying it immensely. It got even 'better' when he stripped off the garment and began to nuzzle my tits, licking and sucking on my swollen, sensitive nipples with passion and abandon.

My hands slipped down between my legs to unzip his pants and push them down partway. I then rose up, allowing him to remove his hands from my tits - causing a genuine pang of regret - to slide his pants off while I unbuttoned his shirt. I pulled it off, then resumed kissing him, my breasts pushed against his chest while I ground my crotch against his, his hard, throbbing cock laying across my opening and driving me crazy.

So, I was actually grateful when he lifted me in his strong arms and carried me into the bedroom, laying me on the bed and nuzzling the nape of my neck as he spread my legs.

Then he straddled me, and I lifted my legs and hooked them over his shoulders, begging him to fuck me. I meant every word - and he complied.

As his cock slid deep into my wet, warm womanhood, I screamed - in pure pleasure. It was the most fulfilling, satisfying sensation I had ever experienced...and it kept getting better as he began to pound into me. the sensations built, folding over one another in a rising spiral, and I began to drive my hips in a matching rhythm, increasing the power of the sensation as I called out his name, pleasing with him to make me feel 'like a real woman'. It was a double entendre that neither of us was in any condition to appreciate as he fucked me harder and faster, his face screwing up into the odd expression that he got during sex. My own face was contorted by the force of the pleasure I was feeling, and my vocalizations had been reduced to incoherent gasps and moans as I shook under the pleasure that ran through my body as his cock drove in and out of my hot cunt, pushing me higher and higher...

...and right over the edge.

It turns out that 'Sandy' is a screamer.

I screamed in pure primal pleasure as I rocked under the force of my first female orgasm, lost in the pure pleasure of the moment. He came a second later, and I gasped again as he stiffened and shot his load into my cunt, the orgasm making him jerk his member firmly across my swollen, hyper-sensitive clit.

He collapsed into my arms, panting. Our bodies pressed against each other as we slowly came down from the drug-induced sexual need we'd felt.

If it wasn't for the fact that Tom was completely satiated by that single coupling, I might have cheerfully fucked his brains out all night. As it was, after he'd shot his load his sexual needs were eased enough that I began to come down again, as well...

...and 'real' thought returned.

Outwardly, I gasped, and buried my head in the pillow beside me, causing Tom some startled confusion at my 'mild' unhappiness. He tried to ask me what was wrong, But I refused to answer, my body shuddering, and he finally dressed and relieved, confused and wondering what he'd done wrong.

That 'mild' outward display was a reflection of my true emotions as what I'd just done hit home. That simple display reflected the bleakest despair, self-hate and disgust I'd ever felt. Not just having sex with a man - but loving it, doing it with wild abandon, eagerness and joy. I knew it wasn't 'real' in one sense, but it had been utterly 'real' in another sense, and that was what counted.

Once again I fell into a deep sleep while sobbing into my pillow and wishing that I had never set eyes on the Doc...

* * * * *

She looked up at the cop who'd stuck his head in the doorway, allowing Tony a chance to shake his head and break the spell being weaved by the unbelievable story he'd been hearing.

"They're on their way."

"Thanks, Mark." Sand said with a smile, then turned back to Tony. "Well, I guess I don't have time to finish the whole story. To make it short, that was five weeks ago - and it's been a busy five weeks. Since then, Tom followed orders and brought the entire Sheriff's department into the fold, then we went ahead and did the staff of the clinic here in town> After that, it was fairly easy - everybody who came in was made 'safe', and they talked their friends and family into coming in for 'flu shots'. Now, the entire town is safe for the Doc, and he's been doing lots of experiments - he has the entire town to work with, and when he needs a specific 'type', we can get it for him like we did tonight."

"Look - this is crazy!" Tony said, shaking his head. "I mean - it's just impossible."

"It seems that way, doesn't it?" Sandy said. "Don't worry - you'll believe it soon enough." "But..." Tony started - but he never got a chance to finish.

The door at the back of the room opened, and a woman entered.

She was tiny, with a slender, lithe figure and small, firm breasts - it was easy to see that, as all she wore was a pair of black high-heeled shoes and a lace negligee that showed more than it hid. She had a face that was pure 'innocent' sexuality, with full lips and huge, blue eyes.

With a sexy stride, she walked up to the bars of the cell > "Hi, Tony..." She cooed in a soprano, seductively licking her lips. Tony stared at the petite vision.. then gasped. "J.. Josh?" He asked, in disbelief.

She giggled. "I'm going to go by Jenni from now on." She twirled. "I'm starting at the club tonight." "No... No - that's not Josh." Tony told sandy, refusing to believe.

Then another.. person came through the door at the back of the room, and Tony's jaw dropped.

She was a red-head, with a massive mane of rich, red hair that trailed down her back. Tall and slender, her body gleamed under the lights, highlights picking out her smooth, naked body as she jiggled and swayed into the room, her massive, round tits - bigger than Sandy's - moving with each step. She was a stunning vision of sexuality...

..if you ignored the absolutely massive, thick cock jutting from her crotch, one long-nailed finger slowly stroking the throbbing member as she looked at Jenni and Tony with equal lust.

"Hey, buddy..." She said, huskily. "You know how I wanted a good job? Well, meet Shawna, the new night nurse at the clinic." She licked her lips, staring at Tony with a rampant hunger. "Maybe later you can drop by and let me give you and.. injection."

"No.. NO!" Tony said, backing as far as possible away from the two people claiming to be his friends.

"Relax, Tony - It's not like you think." Sandy said. "It was pretty bad for me, at first - but the new procedures Doc's developed are quicker and easier, and you'll actually love what you become. You'll be in a permanent state of bliss."

Tony screamed as the two cops entered the cell, their muscles bulging as they dragged him out, kicking and screaming in a futile display.

Walking over to Jenni, Sandy bent and kissed her passionately, then turned her around and patted her on the ass. "Now that you're able to ... appreciate hi, why don't you go say 'hi' to Tom?"

"Good idea." The blonde said, heading out of the room.

Shooting a suggestive look at the massively endowed she-male, Sandy padded back into the cell and lay down on the bunk. "Well?" Smiling wickedly, Shawna entered the cell...

...then paused, looking meaningfully at the door at the back of the room as Tony's screams reached a fever pitch - then stopped.

"I think 'Tonya Titty' is going to be very, very popular at the club." Sandy smiled, then reached out and pulled Shawna down on top of her...

...while deep inside, what was left of Conrad screamed and screamed and screamed....

BACK TO FUN ZONE

SUMMARY: Rather than die, a young male agrees to let a rich man with no social skills transform him into a woman, but then realizes that her new "boyfriend" needs to learn how to treat a lady.

...Pay Any Price

By Gunslinger

"She's waking up."

Those words, the first that Sam had heard in three months, told him....

.. no, told her that part of the procedure had been a success - the 'bad news' part. It was verified by the wealth of strange sensations emerging from all over her body. Deep inside, she shuddered slightly, knowing the price she'd paid for this - the cost that would be all worthwhile if...

Sam opened her eyes, disoriented for a moment as she looked up at the white hospital ceiling. Then her eyes tracked left, to where Dr. Musanari stood, his dusky face wreathed in a smile. Beside him stood a nurse - who Sam didn't know - who was looking slightly incredulous.

Sam knew. Her heart soared even as she asked Dr. Musanari for verification...

...well, tried to. All that emerged was a dry croak.

"It's all right, Miss Miller - you haven't used your voice for awhile. We'll get you some water in a second - but I think that there's something you want even more."

Sam nodded - Dr. Musanari knew what she'd done and why. He knew what it was that Sam wanted to know...

Carefully, the nurse pulled back the bed sheet as the doctor wheeled a long mirror into place at the foot of the bed, and adjusted it so that Sam could see her entire nude body.

The once tall, handsome man looked in the mirror, amazed. She'd expected, intellectually, to see more or less what she was seeing - but it was still a shock, nonetheless.

The DNA replacement procedure had worked like a miracle. The new genetic pattern had produced exactly what it was supposed to - to what degree it could. The DNA could only really affect soft and semi solid tissue, having only little effect on bone. So she was tall for a woman, and broad shouldered. But not unattractive. If not beautiful, her face was definitely 'cute', and was surrounded by a jaw-long mess of dirty blonde hair. There were still some traces of the old Sam in that face, but it was definitely a softer, female face, with a smaller nose and fuller lips.

The DNA had worked on her chest, as well. As specified, a pair of absolutely gigantic tits rode on her chest. DNA couldn't make them as big as they'd had to be - they were 'boosted' to their MMM-cup size with implants. But the DNA reconstruction had ensured that there was no tell-tale scar, and no loss of sensitivity - those had been repaired.

Her waist was average, and her hips were trim for a woman, but still attractive - she had an athletic look to her, yet remained fully feminine, especially with those huge tits. Nestled in her crotch was the folds of a - presumably - fully functional vagina. Once that sight would have horrified Sam, but now she was rather indifferent. Greedily, she looked lower...

...at the long, toned, shapely female legs. The perfect, glorious, sexy legs. Sam wanted to cry with joy at the sight of those smooth appendages.

Ever since the drunk driver had plowed into Sam's car, robbing him of his legs and his manhood, the neutered, paraplegic man had moped about, in a black cloud of despair. When the eccentric millionaire, Greg Dubrowski, had approached Sam with the offer - volunteer for an experimental procedure - Sam had listened, uncaring. He would have done it, maybe - at that point he didn't really care if he lived or died.

So, he'd listened to the spiel - a test for a safe, effective - and complete - transsexual operation. One that would make him biologically female. Once, that would have been a thought to horrify and disgust Sam - but with his cock already gone, what did he care?

Then Greg had said the words that, for the first time in over a year, had caused Sam to care about living again.

The procedure would give him new legs. It would mend the mangled bones, would reconnect the dead nerves - it would make him whole, able to walk or run - to move, to be free of the wheelchair.

There was only one 'catch'. Greg wasn't doing this out of the goodness of his heart. Greg was a millionaire, and, while not movie-star gorgeous, he was fairly handsome.

But he was a complete and utter failure as a 'people person'. Even with all his money, he couldn't get a girl - because women scared him. He became awkward and nervous. He wasn't great with men, either, but at least he could function. But women...

So - to get this deal, Sam had to agree to not only be female - but to be female to Greg's specifications, and to spend two years as his 'girlfriend'.

It was a high price - but to be freed of the damned wheelchair, to be able to walk again... Sam had agreed.

Now - she'd have to live with that decision. But no price would be too high, not for what she'd received in return.

* * * * *

Samantha Miller took a deep breath, smelling the envelope of perfume that hung around her. "Does it show?"

"Just a little." Nurse Cartwright said with a thin grin - Sam was fidgeting nervously, his hands always going back to her short black skirt, trying to pull it just a little bit further down her black-nylon-clad legs. Fairly nice legs, too, Cartwright noted, clinically.

"I'm just not sure if I can do this." Sam confided. "I mean, I can, morally and everything. I agreed to this, and I'll go through with it. But..."

"I know." Cartwright commiserated - although she didn't, not really.

Then the long black limo pulled up outside the door, and it was time.

For the past two weeks, while the hospital therapy staff had helped her get used to her new legs, and the nurses helped her get used to dressing and acting feminine, Sam had been able to relax whenever she wanted. Now, it was time to put on her 'female' act all the time. She was 'on'.

She paused for another quick look in a handy mirror. Her hair was nicely styled, pulled up into a small gather before falling back down in a fan. Her face was carefully made up, a skill that Nurse Cartwright had helped her attain.

A pink turtleneck sweater was stretched over her massive new tits, and tucked into the black skirt she wore. Her legs were clad in a semi-opaque nylon, and led down to the black pumps with four inch heels that she balanced on - walking in heels had been the hardest to learn, she'd found.

Pulling on her black leather jacket, Sam decided she was as ready as she was going to be. All in all, she appeared to be every inch an attractive, cheerful, buxom woman.

Now it was time to act like what she appeared to be.

Taking a last deep breath, she forced her lips into a small smile, and walked out the hospital's doors.

The chauffeur held the door for her, tipping his hat at her as she slid into the back with Greg, her new 'boyfriend'. As stipulated, she began her act right away - she was Samantha Miller, Greg's girlfriend. She'd never been male, and she'd just gone into the hospital to have the implants.

"Wow - you look great, Sam." Greg exclaimed, eyeing Sam's bust. "I'm so glad you agreed to this."

"So am I." Sam agreed - half truthfully - with a smile. Then steeling her nerves, she leaned forward for a short kiss. She closed her eyes, and blanked her mind as much as possible as their lips met. It took some will power, but she managed to not pull back too quickly - even if her body was a little stiff during the kiss, it was a reasonable facsimile of a 'lovers' kiss.

Pulling back, she settled back in the seat, feeling her huge new tits jiggle in the confinement of the bra she wore. That two weeks she'd spent getting used to her huge tits was a necessity - as constantly reminded of them as she was now, by their heft and movements, she'd been completely unable to act 'nonchalant' about them for the first week, all-too-aware of them. Now, at least, she could move without paying undue attention to her own tits.

"So - what have you been up to since I went in, Gregg?" She asked, forcing her new contralto voice to sound sincerely interested. Part of it was an attempt to learn more about her 'boyfriend' - but mostly it was so she didn't have to try and hold a straight conversation with the guy.

Not a problem she'd be having, she learned quickly, understanding why the guy had no luck with women. He didn't actually have conversations - he either didn't talk, or he talked just to give some information, then shut up. No back and forth, unless she made a comment. Then he'd answer it - and stop.

It was some relief that Sam noticed them pulling into the estate which would be her new home for the next while, living with Greg. Perhaps once they were inside, and began to relax, Greg would be less of a bore than he was now. Not that the guy did it intentionally - it was just painfully obvious that he was lacking in social skills, and extremely aware of his own shortcomings - he was as nervous as hell.

Actually, as annoying as it was, it was also a god-send to Sam. It was easier to deal with somebody like this than it would be to have to play the role she was opposite a comfortable, confident man. Her own awkwardness wasn't even noticeable to Greg - the man had no skill in picking up anything at all from other people's body language or movements. Sam had already figured out that Greg wouldn't know what was going on unless the other person either said it out loud, or was so painfully obvious that it was almost theatrical. Sam found herself wondering how a guy like Greg even made it to be his age without learning ANY social skills whatsoever. The guy was like a hermit who'd just arrived in a big city and met other people for the first time - he knew absolutely nothing about dealing with people.

"Okay - that's it." Sam announced.

"What?" Greg asked, startled. "Honey - what's wrong?"

"Don't call me that - I'm not your girlfriend." Sam announced. "You might be enjoying this fantasy of yours, but I'm putting a stop to it right here and now."

It had been a week - and Sam was fed up. Her entire purpose had turned out to be to look good, and make Greg feel like he was a success with women. There had been no demand for sex - thank god - but all Sam did was act like she loved spending time with Greg.

The exact opposite was true - Greg hadn't relaxed with her. He was exactly the same as he'd been from day one. He really did know nothing about dealing with people.

"This is what we're going to do." Sam told the stunned man. "This might be making you feel better - but it's not helping you at all. So - I'm going to teach you how to be a real person."

Greg smiled sadly. "You have no idea how much I'd like that." He said, sadly. "But, I've tried to be like other guys - but I just don't pick up all the signals. There's something wrong with..."

"There's nothing wrong with you. You just are a little slower at learning social skills than other. You're a genius, Greg," - which was true, that's how he'd made his money - "but you're slow in other ways.

So, I'm going to teach you." "But..."

"Shut up and pay attention." Sam said - then cocked her head. "Actually, there's your first lesson. Pay attention."

Greg blinked, taken aback by her blunt manner. "I..."

She wagged a finger at him. "No. Listen. I've noticed that if it's something you're interested in, you've taught yourself all about it, and so know more about it than almost anyone. Rather than talk about that topic, you know so much that you give dissertations. Then there's stuff you don't care about. As soon as those topics come up, you tune out. Oh, you'll stand and listen - but you get all fidgety, and stop listening - you just want it to be over as quickly as possible. That's part of the problem - you're sending the signals that you don't care about what the other person is interested in, and that's part of what drives them away."

"Huh? Well, I don't just walk away or anything - I listen." Greg objected.

"Yes - but it's the way you listen. Now, here's what you need to learn." She leaned forward. "You know, I just read a book by a guy named Clive Cussler. It was pretty good."

"Yeah - he's one of my favorite authors." Greg agreed, smiling slightly. "He's got a great sense of historical work, managing to work it into his adventures. Actually, it was a pattern he started in his third novel, and..."

"Shut up."

Greg blinked in surprise.

"You see? I mentioned something you were interested in, and you launched into a literary description of his works. When people are holding a conversation, that's not the way it should go. Let's try it again. But, this time, I want you to concentrate on something."

"What's that?" Greg asked.

"Your whole purpose is to get me to talk about it - and to make me feel good about my opinions. Even if you don't agree with them, find nice ways to disagree. But, above all else.." She held up one finger, emphasizing the point, "..you are to try and get ME talking. Even if I'm saying stuff you already know, listen politely. You can volunteer BITS of information - but only if there's an opening that calls for that one, specific piece of information. Give it - then make me respond by asking a question or a leading comment."

"I.. I don't..." Greg said, hesitantly.

"Try." Sam said, firmly - then smiled and said. "You know, I just read a good book - um... Shockwave, I think it was called."

She paused. Greg frowned slightly, thinking, and she let him have the pause without calling him to task on the delay.

"Huh - by Clive Cussler. I've read it." He began, obviously picking his words carefully. "I thought..."

Sam stopped him. "Hold on. First rule - watch the other person's face when you talk - don't look elsewhere - and especially at her tits."

Greg yanked his gaze off of her huge tits. "Oh - sorry." He fidgeted. "I... just don't want people to think I'm staring at them when I talk."

"Just because you feel uncomfortable having somebody looking at you when you talk doesn't mean everybody does. It's just a type of stage fright. And I didn't mean 'stare' - let your eyes move over the person's face, take in their expression. Glance away when it's appropriate - you're taking something from somebody, or you hear a loud noise. But show you're paying attention. Now, you were saying?"

Greg paused, then. "Um... So - how did you like it?"

Sam grinned. "Very good - that's right, don't tell me what you thought, unless I ask you. Ask me what I thought. Show you're interested."

It took nearly half an hour to hold a ten minute conversation - but there was some definite progress. Sam finally nodded.

"Okay - keep what we've discussed in mind for the future. Now that your little fantasy is over, you're going to have to start dealing with me like a real person. But unlike other people, I'm going to bring you to task every time you goof up. Like it or not, Greg, you're going to be getting a crash course in humanity."

Then she smiled. "Hell - there's a lesson for you right off. You can't always avoid things you don't like, so learn to deal with them graciously."

"Okay - I think." Greg said, then smiled back. "The fantasy was fun, and this isn't. But if you can actually help me... it's worth it."

"Okay - now, let's move on..."

* * * * *

It was time.

Sam didn't know who was more nervous - Greg or her. Ever since getting out of the hospital, she'd been in private, having to deal with a man whose social skills were so lacking that they'd driven her to distraction. Such a distraction, in fact, that she'd all but forgotten her own situation.

She was all too aware of it now. For the first time, she was going to be in public as a woman. The time had come for the final 'exam' of the things she taught Greg over the past two months, and she'd set it up without really thinking about how it would effect her. Now, dressed in the same outfit she'd left the hospital in, she was only seconds away from being a public member of the feminine gender.

But she couldn't back out. In fact, she didn't really want to, despite her nervousness - she was so excited about seeing whether or not she'd managed to teach Greg how to be human, it overshadowed even her own state.

Holding on to that excitement, she took a deep breath. Sliding out of the limo, she headed towards the doors to the bus terminal.

Immediately, she became aware of the looks her huge tits and long legs received from some of the male onlookers. She felt a wave of embarrassed annoyance, but pushed it away, refusing to react to the emotions. Hell, sexy 'natural' woman had to deal with the same problem, men obviously eyeing their figures. They managed to deal with it, and so she'd have to, as well.

Passing through the terminal, she slowed her stride, acting a little lost as she strolled down the platform, waiting. Her timing was right on - the bus Greg was aboard had just arrived.

As the bus emptied, she stood near the door, watching the people get off. As Greg climbed down, she took a breath - and bumped him slightly.

Greg turned. "Oh, pardon... Miss Miller? What are you doing here?"

Just as in the little 'script' she'd given him. She smiled back, and began the act.

"Oh! Well, what a coincidence. I was just here to meet my sister. She's supposed to be on this bus."

That was as much of the script as Greg knew - that they were supposed to be minor acquaintances who'd accidentally met. From now on, he was on her own. She waited breathlessly to see what he said next...

"Really? That's amazing. It's like..." He stopped himself before launching into the spiel. He even managed an almost graceful recovery. "But, that's another story. Your sister, did you say?"

Sam nodded. "Yes, I took the day off work. I really needed it, too." She turned her attention back to the stream of passengers, which was now coming to an end. With a frown, she looked into the now empty bus, then back at the platform.

How was Greg going to...?

"I don't think she's on the bus, Miss Miller." Greg said, and she turned back to him.

"Please - call me Sam." She said, and he managed to keep his gaze locked on her face. She'd noticed him eyeing her tits when she'd turned away, but that was acceptable, as it hadn't been too obvious. "Why do you say that?"

"I'm sure I would have noticed anyone as attractive as your sister must be."

Wow - bonus points for that one - even if it was obvious that he'd wracked his brain for it during the pause, rather than being able to come up with it quickly. The fact that he managed to get it at all, and use it with so little self-consciousness.

"Well - thank you." Sam said, half-smiling. "But I wonder what happened - she said she'd be here when we talked last night."

Before, Greg would have just made a strictly logical suggestion about finding out - then walked away. How would her respond to this?

"I'm sure it's nothing serious." He said, obviously remembering the lesson in commiserating with other people's problems. "Perhaps she missed the connection."

"I hope that's all it is." Sam said. "I guess I'd better wait and see if she'd on the next bus." "Hmm... it's another hour's wait." Greg said. "Why don't you try giving her a call while you wait?"

"Yes - that's a good idea. Thank you, Greg." She said - and gently touched his hand. "I just hope she'd okay."

A short pause..

"I'm sure she is... But even if it's just a missed connection, it's going to be awhile. Would you like me to wait with you?"

"Oh, that's not necessary - You go ahead." She said - while giving a quick squeeze on his hand, and keeping her eyes firmly locked on his. She also leaned a little closer. "I wouldn't want to be an impositions."

This was a biggie - Greg had problems with things like this. He tended to take words at face value, and miss the signals that meant the words were a polite reversal of what she really meant...

"Sam, don't take this the wrong way, but if something did happen, and I just walked away without finding out, it would drive me nuts." He said, tossing the ball back into her court. He obviously wasn't sure which she wanted, so he didn't pick one option or the other, and waited to see how she'd respond. She could say she'd call him when she heard, or...

"Well, in that case, I guess you'd better stay. I really appreciate your concern, Greg. "She said, taking him off the hook.

She went and made her bogus call, the returned with the 'news' - something had come up at work, and her sister had been called in to the office. She wasn't coming.

"Well, I'm glad to hear she'd all right." Greg said.

"Me too. But I was looking forward to doing something on my day off. Oh well - I suppose curling up with a good book is 'doing something'. Got anything you'd recommend I read?"

"Sure - I know a great book." Greg said - and Sam's heart fell. The test had been failed - her request for a good book had mad him miss the implied pleas that came before it.

"Oh? What's that?" She said.

She actually caught it in his face. He was looking at her, eager to impart the information - then he saw, really saw, the look in her eye, realized what she'd really wanted, and...

"It's called 'Playing Hooky'." Greg said, and Sam's mind stopped dead as she tried to figure out what was going on. Had he seen his mistake, yet decided he couldn't correct it?

"Oh. What's it about?" She asked, without much interest.

Greg shrugged with a smile. "Well, it starts off with two acquaintances with nothing to do meeting by chance. On a bus platform, of all places..."

It took a second to sink in. Then, she couldn't help it - she giggled. "Really - what happens?"

Greg paused. He feigned thoughtfulness that didn't completely hide his nervousness. "Well, I'm not positive, but I think they decide to grab some lunch...." He said....

...and waited, nervously, for the response to his veiled request for a date.

"You know - I think I've read that book." Sam replied, feeling pride in her student. "He took her to that great new restaurant that just opened, didn't he?"

Greg snapped his fingers. "You know - I do believe that's right."

Sam laughed. "Okay - I get the hint. I'd love to go to lunch with you, Greg."

* * * * *

To her amazement, Sam found that she actually enjoyed the afternoon - and evening.

What had begun as a test, with her as an objective observer, slowly transformed into something else, starting with the lunch. It began in small ways, things that crept up on her. Greg's humor and attentiveness began to slip into her mind, and she caught herself actually enjoying the attention, rather than merely grading his behavior. At first, she caught herself doing this and forced herself into the objective mindset - but as time passed, and Greg did everything with an almost puppyish charm, she found herself reacting to his mildly awkward but enthusiastic attentions emotionally instead of intellectually.

After a lunch rife with enjoyable small talk, jokes and veiled come-ons, Greg lured her into an afternoon of enjoyment. At the time, she agreed because she found his 'advances' to be up to par on her test - but after the visit to the boardwalk, and the prize he won at the arcade, and the beer and pretzels while watching a rodeo, when he asked her to a movie she agreed because it sounded like fun, without realizing just how emotionally involved she'd become.

Part of it was the fact it had snuck up on her. Not realizing how well she'd trained him, she still thought of him as a social screw-up, and the thought that he could possibly charm her never occurred to her.

It only hit her - truly hit her - late that evening.

They were walking along the beach. The sun was just setting, bathing the sand in a orange glow that seemed warm and comforting. Sam walked beside Greg, carrying her shoes in one hand while she had her other around his waist, as he was doing with her.

It was when he gave her a light squeeze that she suddenly wondered how she'd ended up like this. That's when the first thought struck her that - somehow - the day had changed from her original plan.

She thought back over the past half hour and traced the line of actions that had gotten her here. It had started on the boardwalk - Greg had suddenly lit up with an idea, and had practically dragged her along. Without thinking, she'd let him take her hand and pull her to the ice-cream vendor, too caught up in the excitement to question it. From there, it hadn't occurred to her to pull her hand from his, and so they'd ended up walking hand-in-hand as they'd eaten the cones and laughed. That walk had ended on the beach, where they'd taken off their shoes for a walk - and when she stumbled slightly in the sand, he'd supported her from falling, which had led to them putting their arms around each other, which had led to that squeeze. Yet, through it all, she hadn't consciously noticed the progression because...

...because...

...she was enjoying herself too much?

The thought was new and disturbing to Sam. She knew that she was having fun - but the fact that she was so enjoying the 'fiction' of a 'date' was disturbing to her inner masculine self. It seemed wrong - and yet, somehow, so right.

She was so involved in her thoughts that she didn't notice the sun sinking away, leaving them standing far down the beach, alone. In fact, they were no longer on the beach proper, but at the point where the beach trailed into pools of sand among rocky hummocks with patchy growths of grass and shrubs.

The air was cooling rapidly with the loss of the sun, and it was a shiver that roused Sam from her confused thoughts.

"Glad to see you've decided to rejoin me." Greg said softly, with a hint of humor in his voice. "Sorry." Sam apologized. "I was kind of lost in thought."

"That's all right - you're great company even when you're not even here - mentally speaking." He chuckled, and squeezed her again.

Sam was amazed to discover how good both his words and his touch were - and it bothered her that she cared that much about what he thought of her.

"I really enjoyed today, Sam." Greg said, more seriously. "You really are wonderful company." "I... enjoyed today as well." Sam admitted, feeling guilty.

Then she heard something in his voice change. "Well - maybe we should head back... Unless you don't want to "

Sam opened her mouth - then just stood there, gaping, as the realization hit home.

She didn't want the evening to end. Today had been more fun than she'd had in well, the most fun she could ever remember having.

And it had happened while she was a woman on a date with a guy. With Greg - the self-centered guy she'd had to teach how to be 'normal', who was now doing his damndest to be charming and attractive and attentive and...

...and, Sam realized - it had worked. She had taught him every detail she could about how to be the perfect date, to make himself exactly what a woman would want.

Or, that's what she'd thought she was doing. But she realized now, that wasn't exactly true.

Because of her own subconscious biases, she'd taught him what she knew - by simple definition, she'd taught him all the secrets that she had felt were aspects that were attractive - because that's what she believed was attractive.

In short, she'd tailor-made Greg into her version of the ultimate man. And it had worked so well that she was hopelessly attracted to him.

She tried to deny the thought as it flashed through her mind - she might look like a woman, but she wasn't really. What did she care that Greg was handsome? What did it matter to her that he was doing everything in his power to make sure she was enjoying herself? What difference did it make that his newly molded personality was geared towards the complete and utter pleasure of whatever woman he found attractive?

Then Greg turned his face towards her, his eyes searching hers, and she knew exactly what he was searching for even as his lips neared her own.

At the very outset, Greg had made Sam into his 'ideal woman' that had been the whole idea of the original deal.

And, unwittingly, she'd just finished making Greg over into her idea of what a perfect man would be.

When his lips pressed against hers and she felt a surge of pleasure at the contact, she was amazed and confused - and overjoyed. The feeling stunned her, but it was the simple truth - she'd done everything possible to make Greg the ultimate boyfriend, who could find the woman he wanted to use all his new skills on.

That woman was her.

For a long moment, she merely stood stock-still, stunned. Greg, feeling her go rigid as his lips touched her, and feeling her lack of response, slowly pulled away.

"I.. I'm sorry. "Greg whispered, his voice so heart-rending that it made Sam want to wince. "I.. I thought..." He began to turn away, ashamed of misreading the situation.

In that instant, Sam knew -Greg hadn't misread the situation - she'd just refused to accept what the situation was.

Before he completed his turn, Sam reached out, took his face between her hands, and pulled his lips back down to hers. Wrapping her hands behind his neck, Sam closed her eyes and pulled all of herself into giving Greg the most incredibly passionate kiss that had ever existed.

Then they were sinking down onto the soft sand, their hands fumbling for the clasps of each other's clothing. Greg's hands deftly removed her sweater, revealing the bra-encased magnificence of her tits. The tits that were absolutely perfect in Greg's view - and Sam knew it.

After all, she was perfect in every way to him - that's the way she'd been 'designed'.

So when he kissed his way down her throat to the displayed flesh of the upper slope of those magnificent tits, she knew that he was going to enjoy every send of pleasing her - and she'd enjoy his enjoyment, as his reached behind her to unclasp the bra so he could lavish all his passionate skills upon those perfect mounds. She was right - as he used lips and tongue and hands in concert, she moaned low in her throat and arched her back, pressing her huge tits deeper into his skilled embrace.

As expected, he took the cue, redoubling his efforts of foreplay, his hands sliding to her firm ass as his lips suckled on her engorged nipples, igniting a warmth deep within her new womanhood, causing tingles of pleasure to form an erotic triangle between her breasts and crotch, shaking her with their intensity.

That intensity only grew as his mouth returned to hers while his hands gently relieved her of her panties, taking the time to caress her legs so softly and sensuously, igniting gratitude in her for ever silky contour of her nylon clad legs that made him desire to cause so much pleasure with his touch.

Pleasure that doubled and redoubled again as his hand began gently sliding over her vaginal mound, lightly pressing with each stroke that caused her such incredible pleasure. When one finger slid across her clit, Sam let out a moan that was muffled into Greg's shoulder as his mouth went back to her swollen nipples.

Then she eagerly spread her legs as Greg gently positioned himself over her.

For a second the scene became a tableau as they looked deep into each others eyes. "Sam - is this..." Greg asked softly, the memory of her momentary stiffness still fresh.

The fact that he would stop if she told him too only drove home the knowledge that this was right - that Greg was the person to make her happy. It no longer mattered that it was the happiness that a man would give a woman - because Sam now accepted, completely and fully, that she was a woman, now and forever.

Her answer was a slow, sensual smile - and a thrust of her hips that lifted her ass from the soft embrace of the sand - and impaled her deeply on Greg's throbbing, hard cock.

She cried out in pleasure as his cock filled her hot, wet cunt. Reassured of her genuine desire, Greg began to drive in and out of her with slow, long strokes - exactly as she'd instructed him to, not then realizing that the technique would be used on her.

But she was right - it was the right technique. Pleasure began to build, slowly and almost teasing as the waves traveled through her body. She moaned again, and began to move her hips in rhythm to his thrusts, controlling him by speeding up slightly. Obediently, he increased the speed of his strokes, driving in her with passion and power, but carefully ensuring she received the maximum pleasure - by using one finger near the base of his pistoning cock to stimulate her swollen clit.

Sam cried out again, incoherently, as the sensations built and built. She felt Greg shudder as he was pushed over the edge, filling her with his hot cum - but she hadn't orgasmed yet, and he continued to drive his cock in and out, now almost frantically.

Then it hit - a wave of pure orgasmic ecstasy that erased conscious thought. She screamed, clenching Greg's ass as she shuddered in the grip of her orgasm.

After an eternity, the pleasure slowly subsided, leaving a warm glow behind as she sank back onto the sand, coated with sweat. As Greg lay beside her and began to stroke one nipple with affection, Sam closed her eyes and smiled, knowing that she'd been right to embrace her new life, to throw aside her inbred revulsion at another man's touch.

After all, her whole training of Greg had been based on a simple question, one that had seemed so natural to ask that the true impact hadn't hit her until his lips had touched hers and she'd realized the truth of what she'd done.

Even now, the sheer irony of the question struck her - after all, she should have known what, in her strange situation, would result when she found the answers to the question "What would I like if I were a woman?"

SUMMARY: After he questions the female magician ability to actually use magic, he finds himself being transformed by her every spell.

Perfectly Reasonable

By Gunslinger

The majority of the audience - still murmuring among themselves - headed towards the exits of the empty old warehouse that had played the part of a 'theater' for the afternoon's entertainment.

In that out-flow of perhaps sixty people, perhaps a tenth of that number fought against the tide. Eyes agleam, the moved, not away from, but towards the tricked-up flat-bed trailer that served as a stage.

Though they came from various parts of the crowd, they all moved towards the same location - the juncture at which the stage-trailer joined with it's equally gaudily-painted Freightliner tractor.

The truck, painted jet-black to better display the red-and-gold lettering on the side that announced 'Miranda the Mystic!', boasted not only an over-sized sleeper cab, but one with an unusual design feature - a 'back door', leading onto the stage.

It was towards this door that the small group gravitated - or, rather, toward the slender, dusky-skinned young woman who was about to pass through it.

She was certainly the type of woman to draw a crowd. Even in her street clothes, people paid attention to Miranda De La Noches. A tall, supple body, firm, full breasts, a strong-yet-delicate face surrounded by a thick wealth of midnight black hair... she was, quite simply, stunning.

In her 'costume', however, she was breath-taking. The black-red-and-white leotard, silk-screened to appear as if it were a sleeveless tuxedo shirt, red cummerbund, and black 'shorts' clung to her lithe, well-toned body - and displayed a remarkable length of lean, shapely leg encased in fishnet stockings. A claw-tailed black coat, red bow-tie, and the black top-hat completed the magician's 'uniform'.

Indeed, of the half-dozen people who approached, many of them admired her body even as they raised their voice to express their admiration of her act...

...all save one.

"The Mystical Exchange." That one voice said, cool and contemptuous, cutting through the babble of appreciative compliments.

The small crowd, suddenly silence, fell back, leaving the ground open between the dusky young woman who'd just descended from the stage - and the man standing a few feet away.

Robert - and don't dare call me 'Bob' - Tayle stood with a contemptuous sneer on his lips as he eyed the highly attractive young woman.

At twenty-five, they were not only of roughly the same age, but nearly the same height, allowing Robert to keep his eyes locked on hers as he closed the distance somewhat. The heels of the cowboy boots under his boot-cut jeans clocked off the concrete floor, seeming impossibly loud in the sudden silence. He came to a stop perhaps three feet away from her, and the handsome, golden-haired man crossed his arms over his chest, the sleeves of his faded denim shirt rolled up to display the well-muscled flesh of his forearms.

"I beg your pardon?" Miranda asked, struggling to remain polite in the face of the athletically-built man's obvious attempt to get under her skin.

"That trick, 'The Mystical Exchange', where you step into a box, and a minute later a man who looks like he could be - and probably is

- your twin brother steps out." Robert said, eyeing her. "That's the only trick in your repertoire I couldn't figure how you pulled off. How'd you do it."

'Oh - one of those', Miranda's expression proclaimed loudly.

"Magic." She said, shortly. "Like I said before I started my 'act', I do no illusions, pull no 'tricks'. I really turned myself into a man - and then back again. Magically."

" ." Robert said, flatly. "It's utterly impossible to 'really' change a person's gender - and there sure as hell isn't any such thing as 'real' magic."

Her dark, long-lashed eyes narrowed dangerously, and her full, gloss-coated ruby-red lips tightened. Crossing her arms under her full, deliciously displayed bust, Miranda drummed the long, dark-red nails of her left hand against her right elbow.

"I don't particularly like being called a liar, Mr. Tayle." She said, her mellifluous voice tight with annoyance.

"Well, then, don't make such obviously impossible statements." Robert said. Looking the tall, supple woman straight in the eye, he quite deliberately snorted in the most contemptuous manner possible.

"Magic!" He said, rolling his baby-blues with a theatrical flair, playing for the small 'audience' still watching the confrontation. "What a crock!"

The muscles of Miranda's well-defined jaw began to tighten - and then, slowly, her look of annoyance began to fade.

Her previously anger-heavy lids rose to reveal dark eyes glimmering with a wicked amusement, and her lips softened and curved into a faint, knowing smile.

"So magic - 'real' magic - is utterly impossible, is it?" She asked, softly, uncrossing her arms and idly twirling the slender, hand-polished 'magic wand' in her right hand.

"Of course it is." Robert said - with another contemptuous snort, hoping to get her ire up again.

Her strange little smile only widened slightly. She began pacing in a short arc in front of him - slow strides of her oh-so-long legs, the click of her five-inch heels almost as steady as a metronome.

"If there's no such thing as 'real' magic, then I couldn't possibly cast any spells on you - wouldn't you agree?" She asked - pointing at him with the wand for emphasis.

"Obviously." Robert returned - while eyeing those shapely legs in their fishnet nylons. She might be 'weird' - but damn, was she hot...

"So..." She said, thoughtfully, tapping the wand against her full, pouting lower lip - and then snapping it straight to point at him again. "If I can't possibly be casting magic spells, then I must not be able to say - or do - anything you'll find the least bit magical, mystical, paranormal... anything but utterly mundane, with a perfectly reasonable explanation?"

"Yeah." Robert replied, wondering why he couldn't seem to get her worked up any more. In fact, her smile was even wider, and she seemed to be enjoying some sort of 'inside joke' that he wasn't in on.

Somehow - he wasn't quite sure how - something seemed to have 'shifted' in her favor, and it was Robert who found himself beginning to get annoyed.

"Look, I should probably get going..." Robert said, preparing to extricate him from a situation that was rapidly losing its appeal.

"You're not going to walk away." Miranda said, with an odd note of utter certainty. "Not you. You're going to stay right here until you've utterly convinced me of your viewpoint - or until every single option has been examined."

Robert's annoyance rose into the range of anger - because of how easily, and accurately, she'd begged him. She'd seen right through his little ploy, pretending he was going to leave in order to get her to blurt something out - but damned if she didn't somehow know he was so damned competitive!

"Okay, so you're right." He admitted, tightly. "That just means you've been warned - I'm not leaving until I get you to retract that ridiculous statement!"

"Fair enough, Bob." Miranda said, with a dismissive little shrug.

Robert's anger flared higher, and he opened his mouth to put her in her place - but she was still speaking.

"You don't mind if I call you 'Bob', of course." She said, airily, making it sound more like a statement than a question. He blinked - but answered it anyway.

"No, of course not." He allowed, though still annoyed at her. "That's what everybody calls me."

Hell, with a last name like 'Tayle', it was damned near inevitable, anyway - so Bob had never bothered trying to fight the obvious use of the diminutive moniker. He'd been 'Bob Tayle' since the day his mother had stuck 'Robert' in front of their surname, and he'd probably be 'Bob Tayle' long after he was gone.

"There's no need for us to be at each other's throats." Miranda said, warmly, smiling at him as she toyed with her wand. "I saw you looking at me during my act. Tell me the truth - you find me sexually attractive, don't you?"

"Oh, yes, definitely." Bob admitted, candidly.

Miranda gestured at him with the wand. "Tell me something about me you find sexy - and why." Bob's eyebrow rose at the request - but he answered without hesitating.

"Your legs." He told her, leering at the appendages in question. "They're so long, and slender. You've got fantastic legs." "Well, thank you." She said, smile briefly flashing into a grin that showed dimples.

"Of course..." She continued, "...part of that is 'illusionary'. The tight, high-cut hips of my leotard make my legs look much longer than they really are."

She paused, then laughed briefly, pointing her wand at Bob's own legs.

"Of course, you know exactly what I mean." She chuckled. "Your shorts are at least as high-cut and tight-fitting as my leotard." Bob heard a murmur run through the half-dozen people still watching - and not a few gasps.

He could well guess why.

"Well, yeah." He admitted, 'idly' running the palms of his hands across the taut muscles on the outward sides of his hairy thighs - and, not incidentally, drawing attention to the reason why he wore such almost indecently skimpy jean 'shorts'.

Bob had always figured; 'If you've got it, flaunt it' - and the slender 'V' of the crotch of his shorts did just that, clinging almost painfully tight to his larger-than-average package, with just barely enough fabric there to keep him 'street legal'.

Sure, the 'butt floss' effect of the damned-near bikini 'shorts' had been annoying when he'd first cut his summer clothes ultra-high, but in the nearly a decade since, he'd gotten used to practically having his hairy ass hanging out.

"Wow!" Miranda said, the pacing of her arc having taken her almost behind him. She leaned to the side so she could look him in the face, while pointing at his mostly-exposed backside with her wand.

"I couldn't say this to many other men..." She said, sincerely, with an odd little throb of emotion in her voice, "...but your ass is even bigger, firmer and sexier than mine!"

Bob blushed brightly - as several of the 'audience' broke out into laughter.

Unfortunately, as embarrassing - 'em-bare-assing'? - as it was, Bob was used to it. People had been making fun of his huge, round, firm 'girlie' ass since high school.

He had to fight back the urge to try and cover his backside - mainly because he knew it would be an exercise in futility. His hands wouldn't even come close to covering the globe-like expanses of the rounded, out-thrust ass nature had cursed him with. He just wished, fervently, that Miranda hadn't pointed it out.

Then again, he had to admit to himself with a sigh, it was probably pure shock, rather than planned cruelty. After all, Miranda had a world-class ass herself, and it was just as exposed - albeit covered in the wide-weave fishnet of her 'hose'. She couldn't be used to finding anybody, especially a man, who had an even more spectacular ass than herself. Especially a white man - usually the only race who could out-class Hispanics in the caboose department were the blacks.

Tipping her tall, black-silk top hat further back on her mass of equally silky black hair, Miranda shook her head in disbelief.

"That sure is something, Bobby." She said - then cocked a finely-drawn eyebrow in his direction. "You have no problem being called 'Bobby', do you?"

"No, no..." Bobby assured her, feeling the heat of his blush slowly fading as he tried to take the whole ass-noticing moment and... well, put it behind him.

"Good." Miranda said, tapping her wand in the palm of her left hand. Bobby rolled his eyes.

"Can't you put that damned thing away?" He asked. "Watching you wave and waggle it around is getting annoying." Her face began to harden - and then she smiled.

"Oh, it's just sort of 'something to do'." She said, gesturing - with the wand, of course. "Kind of like you and that big, thick of yours except, of course, I twirl and point, while you lick, fondle and suck."

"It's not the same thing at all!" Bobby complained, blush returning with a vengeance as he lightly stroked the cool, black plastic of his over-sized - . "I just sorta.. somehow... kinda fell into doing this when I was quitting smoking... and whenever I try to break myself of this habit, I'm right back to cigarettes!"

He was so humiliated to be walking around carrying a big, black plastic - but even worse was the fact that he couldn't stop licking and sucking the damned thing! He still vividly remembered the very first time - when, desperately craving a cigarette, he'd tossed his apartment in hopes of finding a stale old smoke forgotten in some drawer, he'd come up dry... and found himself first eyeing, then reaching for the plastic phallus an ex-girlfriend had long-ago 'lost' behind the couch...

Hell, there were times - like right now! - when he was tempted to just give in to the cravings he was substituting for, and go back to smoking cigarettes. Sure, he had an incredibly high risk-factor for lung cancer, but it almost seemed like an early death was far preferable!

Almost.

Titters of laughter and snickers of shocked amusement suddenly made Bobby realize that, even as he was considering how hideously embarrassing it was, he'd thoughtlessly slipped the end of the huge, fake cock into his mouth and begun to suck on it. His already deep blush unable to get any redder, he hastily yanked the saliva-slicked rod from his mouth and wished, desperately, for a graceful way to get the hell out of here.

There wasn't one, of course - not until he and Miranda finished 'playing out' this discussion. He was much, much too ornery to let something as small as utter humiliation drive him away...

The small knot of people watching the confrontation were standing with an almost painfully eager expectation, obviously enjoying the little scene - which, Bobby thought dryly, said much about their general level of entertainment.

Nevertheless, the knowledge he was being watched - and his own sense of self-superiority - played a big part in what happened next.

"Well..." Miranda said, taking in his deep blush and decidedly uncomfortable body-language. "I guess we don't need to drag this discussion out much longer..."

She lifted the wand in his direction.

"Not at all." Bobby agreed, arrogantly. "Since, obviously, you've decided I must be right, since you can't think of anything else to do but 'run away'."

Dead silence hung in the air for a second.

"Actually, I was thinking of you. All that sucking on must be hell on your lips." She said, smile slowly returning. "Then again - I guess that thick, glossy pink coat of lipstick on your full, pouty lips keeps them nice and slick and soft for sucking."

Those full, gleaming pink lips tightened at her sharp tone, but Bobby refused to be baited - out of all the products he'd tried, the hot- pink, high-gloss lipstick was the best protection he could find for his lips, given all the -sucking he almost unconsciously did every day.

Even if he did have to reapply the lipstick quite frequently.

"Ohhh..." He shot back, sarcastically. "And here I thought you were suggesting we stop because of some weak, womanly think - like 'Oh, this high heels hurt my poor little feet...!'"

He said the last in a high falsetto, on hand cocked on his hip and the other held, lip-wristed in the air as he pranced around in a short circle using short, tip-toe 'sissy steps'.

"Unlike you, who wears extremely high heels all day long, every day, with no problem." She replied, pointing at his feet - with that silly wand, of course.

"Certainly." Bobby said, smugly. He sissy-stepped back to his original position, and struck a pose any Sears shoe model would have been familiar - feet about six inches apart, with the left one turned at about a fifty degree angle.

"I got sick and tired of hearing women bitch about their 'high heels'." Bobby said, proudly. "Well, sure, I had to start with short ones, but I worked my way up - and I'll have you know, I've been wearing nothing shorter than a six-inch heel for nearly three months now, all day, every day."

He held the proud pose, letting the audience 'ooh' and 'aah'... and, okay, giggle and chuckle. After all, how many men did you see wearing white patent-leather rounded-toe pumps with a two-inch platform and nine-inch heels?

Well, they were seeing one now - and he was sure it made the point, and damned effectively, that all women's complaints about how 'hard' it was to wear high heels all day was nothing but womanly whining. If he could wear heels like this all day long, so could they - right?

Just as Miranda had deduced, Bobby hated to 'give up' on anything - and that's why he was sticking to his original pronouncement that he'd continue wearing heels until at least one woman in town proved him right by duplicating his feet feat, and went a week in nothing but six-inch or better heels. So far, there were no takers - but Bobby refused to give in.

Quite purposefully, he 'got thirsty' and took a walk over to a table holding a big orange cooler and some paper cups, poured himself some water, and walked back - all the while showing off how smoothly, easily and naturally he moved in the extremely high, slender heels of the 'stripper shoes' he'd had to order on-line, since no store in town carried such high heels...

...in his size, that is.

"See...?" He taunted - after, of course, removing the big, thick he'd unconsciously been sucking on from his mouth. "No problem at all."

"Oh, yes - you've certainly shown me." Miranda agreed, with a slightly strangled voice and a smile on her lips. That Bobby off.

"Of course, it's much easier for me to walk around in heels." He said, in mock sympathy - and pointed his big black at Miranda. "I don't have the weight of all that saline to pull me off balance."

Miranda's gaze almost instinctively dropped to her full bust-line...

...and when she raised her head, her face was pale except for two bright little roses of color on her cheeks, and her eyes were flat with anger.

"Actually, mine are natural." She said, in a tight voice. "Unlike yours, of course. From what you said, though, your implants must be silicone."

"Of course they are!" Bobby declared, defiantly, proudly rolling his broad shoulders back to push his firm double-D's further outward. The motion caused his denim shirt, open and tied just below his breasts, to gape wider, revealing more of the 'racy' white bra encasing his surgically-implanted mounds.

Gasps rose from the audience - and Miranda herself seemed taken aback.

"The way you're showing them off.. proud of them!" She gasped, shaking her head. "And your skin! It's... smooth. Hairless. But I didn't..."

"Didn't what?" Bobby asked, smiling at the magician's reaction to his bust-line, every bit as impressive as her own, supposedly 'natural' rack.

She took several deep breaths - and then, in an oddly 'careful' tone of voice, asked him, "Bobby - what happened to your body hair?"

"Well, I use a depilatory cream, of course." Bobby said, with an expression and tone of voice that all-to-clearly implied the question, 'What are you, and idiot?'

Her lips tightened, but she held on to her anger - more's the pity, Bobby thought to himself. "Why do you use a depilatory cream, Bobby?" She asked, under tight control.

"Well, these gorgeous tits would look pretty damned silly if they were all hairy, now wouldn't they?" Bobby asked with biting sarcasm, hoping to get a rise out of her. She'd been entirely too self-controlled for far too long, taking too much fun out of the argument he'd quite purposefully started. "I just take it all off, since I never could figure out a 'good' spot to stop - but it's to make these boobies look their best.

Bobby reached up and lightly cupped his full, taut bust-line, watching his opponent closely even as he enjoyed the feel of the firm chest-melons under his hands - there was just no substitute for silicone for that firm, ripe, 'fake' feel to implanted tits.

Miranda, however, didn't rise to the bait. Unfortunately, she seemed able to contain herself - if just barely.

"Okay..." She said, slowly and distinctly. "Why are you humiliated to have tits on your chest, Bobby - or to be wearing heels for that matter? Why are you willing to 'show off' your tits, or use depilatory?"

"You expected me to be humiliated by this?" Bobby asked, putting as much smug superiority into the question as he could. Oddly, for some reason, it not only didn't make her angry, but caused an odd, quirky little smile to appear, briefly, on her lips.

"That was the plan." She said, apropos of nothing - and then pointed the wand at him and demanded that he 'answer her question'.

"Well, duh..." Bobby mocked. "You women, always bitching and moaning when make point out obvious flaws and the even more obvious solutions. A comment about how much better you'd look in heels, a little discourse on how a nip here and a tuck there can help you look younger and-or slimmer, even the helpful mention of a particular doctor offering a discount on implant procedures to help out women old Mother Nature has skimmed on - and you chicks have the nerve to get all insulted. Well, here's the answer to all your arguments, ladies!"

He pointed to himself, standing proud with his chest out-thrust, balanced easily on his high heels.

"Argue with this!" He said, contemptuously. "Here I am, spending a year in heels, a year with implants. Another six months to go - and after that, how the hell can any of you sniveling little s claim that I 'have no idea what I'm asking them to do'?"

"You.. You.. You...!" Miranda spluttered in shocked anger - and Bobby laughed at her, goading on the anger he'd managed to finally reawaken.

"I don't believe it! I can't believe anybody could be so chauvinistically arrogant as to come up with that as a 'reasonable explanation'!"

She hurled at him. "To convince women it's 'nothing' to get implants, you think it's 'reasonable' to spend a year walking around with s?"

"Big?" Bobby prodded her, pointing to his chest. "You think these are 'big'? Typical - stupid! - female reaction. Hell, double-dees aren't 'big', lady!"

"Oh, I see!" Miranda shouted back at him. She gestured at her own chest with her left hand, and Bobby's with her wand-wielding right. "My 'double-dees' aren't s. ' s' are what you've got!"

An instant after the words left her lips, Miranda reeled back, eyes seemingly wide as saucers. "Holy ing shit!" Somebody gasped.

"You mean, 'holy in' tits, don't you?" Some wit supplied, quickly - in a tone somewhere between awe and utter disgust. Bobby ignored the by-play - while enjoying the reactions.

"Yes, these are ' s'!" He declared, proudly, wiggling his torso - very slightly.

It didn't take much to get his massive, over-pumped, silicone-inflated tits to jiggle, sway and bounce.

Barely covered by the purely decorative white lace bra his impossibly huge, unarguably fake spheres of flesh-covered silicone practically overflowed, they couldn't really be said to sit either particularly 'high' or 'low' on his chest...

...because the massive, medicine-ball sized boobs practically took up his chest.

Strutting back and forth in front of his audience, 'liberated' to spill his long-held and peer-pressure-silenced convictions by having gone 'whole hog' over to his cause, Bobby - the 'fanatic' - launched into a variation of the same spiel he'd been shouting from the rooftops ever since his last, radical enlargement surgery.

"Oh, it's a 'conspiracy of silence'!" He shouted, long accustomed to his s bouncing and jiggling during his wild arm-waving. "Women bitch and moan. Heels over four inches are 'too high'. Tits bigger than DD are 'too big'. Sore feet, back problems, no clothes that'll fit - a hundred and one excuses, and they'll give 'em in a heart-beat because they think men have no way of knowing that the excuses are grade-'A', pure !"

He struck a dramatic pose, highlighting both his high-heeled stance and his s.

"Well, I know!" He shouted. "And, women be warned, I'm spreading the word! I'm telling men the real reason you're unwillingly to take those final, little steps..."

His voice rang shrilly from the rafters.

"You're all a bunch of sick little cock-teasing bitches!"

In the wake of that scream, dead silence reigned supreme - until Bobby himself broke it.

"Look at him, staring at my s!" He shouted, pointing to one of the small group's members. "I'm a straight man, and so is he - and yet look at him. Proof, you don't have to be pretty - you don't even have to be female - for your s to turn a guy on! Get s.. and men with be lining up to you!"

He swung his 'pointer' - the - to one of the women.

"But you little s don't want men to know you like getting ed just as much as we like ing you!" He accused. "No - because, then where's the power? How can you tease men mercilessly to get what you want? The clothes and the jewelry and the special treatment you only get while men are waiting for you to honor the promise of your eyes and your bodies. You tease, you torture, you silently promise you'll put out any day now.. but instead, after you take a man for all he's worth, what happens? He finds out, the entire time, you've been ing some other guy!"

He sneered.

"That's because you can't wait to get ed. Oh, sure, 'I'm not ready yet' - but you're banging some guy behind his back, aren't you? Because you love cock as much as men love slipping it to you. But why play fair, and with the men giving you the nice things, when you have all that power of pretending you can 'take it or leave it'? So, of course you hate women who admit the truth, women who aren't controlling little s and don't play your sick sex games. Women who admit they like sex, and 'advertise' for it with heels and boobs."

Bobby turned back to Miranda.

"That's why I'm willing to carry around this tits and walk around in high heels - to show you for what you really are." He said, directly to her. "A bunch of sniveling, conniving, cock-teasing s!"

Crossing his arms over his massive bust, Bobby triumphantly jammed his massive into his mouth and began to suck. Miranda stared at him, trembling with anger...

...and then, slowly, she became preternaturally still, and a cruel smile spread to her lips. Slowly, she began to twirl her wand in the air over her head in an all-encompassing motion.

"I..." She said, voice sounding oddly strained, as if she were attempting to live an incredibly heavy weight, "...and everybody else I can safely reach, spreading out from this very spot, would like to discover your 'reasonable explanation' for this opinion... since you are a woman!"

The gorgeous Hispanic felt the incredible rush of energy spill out of her, almost every ounce of mystic force she had to give. She gasped and shudder, feeling drained - but somehow not tired - but the usage of so much of her power. Her eyes, which had closed during the rush, slowly opened...

* * * * *

Miranda looked at the abandoned warehouse - and struggled to keep all her emotions behind an expressionless mask as she looked out at the new - if localized - 'reality' her monumental expenditure of mystic energy had created.

She was standing up on the 'stage' of the flatbed trailer again, Bobby's 'reasonable explanation' somehow retroactively figuring this in. She was looking out at the same empty warehouse as before...

...but with some differences.

For one thing, her spell seemed to have resulted in 'loosing' several hours. Judging from the dark sky behind the big, dusty windows, it was somewhere just after midnight.

The big, empty floor, where her audience had stood for her act, was cast mostly in darkness - except for the gentle pool of radiance cast by the four portable light stands set up, attached to the generator under the back of the trailer, chugging softly away.

In that pool of light were thirty or so folding chairs - about half of which were filled, mostly by men, but with a leavening of women. The women bore a wide range of expressions, from anger to outrage to thoughtfulness - but the men, to a man, looked bemused...

...and aroused.

Bobby wasn't immediately visible in Miranda's field of vision, so she turned her head to look at the stage. What she saw, in sequence, made it hard to keep her face under control.

First of all - her previously black truck was now painted white!

How and why that should be, she couldn't fathom - but any consideration of that was cut short as her still-swinging view caught sight of the gold-edged black letters on the white placard set up on a simple easel on the stage.

Church of the Divine ...?

That was still boggling Miranda's mind when her eyes finally got far enough around to see the person who had once been Robert Tayle...

Miranda stared.

Though there was, just barely, enough of a similarity (not including, of course, the tits) to tell that this was, indeed, the woman Bobby had become, the woman standing center-stage was nevertheless completely different in one, crucial way.

Oh - not in the 'mere' fact that she was now obviously fully female, though that was an 'obvious' difference.

Like 'Robert', this new woman could be described as 'tall and athletic', though in the feminine equivalent to Robert's old male form. God knew, the musculature under her smooth, pale skin, was exquisitely toned.

Especially the long, long legs perched atop the white platform pumps, and themselves encased in thigh-high white nylons.

In fact, that was another one of the 'obvious' changes - the fact that every piece of clothing the remarkably tall, leggy, buxom woman wore was white.

The shoes on the dainty feet and the nylons encasing the long, well-toned legs, of course - but also the garters that connected those nylons to the silk-and-lace 'corset' that started just above her well-rounded hips and enclosed her trim waist.

Over all of this was a wispy, barely-there white peignoir, edged in white faux fur at collar, cuffs and hem. Her crotch and those massive, impossible round tits of hers were completely bare...

...which made it easy to tell that the thick, curly mane of golden hair surrounding her strong-featured - but definitely not 'masculine' - face was, indeed, natural.

Even the massive held almost reverently in one slender, long-nailed hand was white.

No, what was completely and utterly different about this woman was the expression on her face.

She had a soft, gentle smile that created bright spots of happy light in her deep blue eyes - and yet it was a placid smile. A smile of contentment.

From her face - indeed, inherent in the moves, the very posture, of her incredible body was the sense of being completely and utterly at peace with herself.

"That was when I was given a miracle." The extraordinarily buxom woman said in a sweet voice reverberating with sincerity, speaking to her audience. "That was when the Lord brought Miranda into my life - and through her, the chance to be the woman you see here today."

Miranda blinked.

"Oh, I didn't accept it easily, not at first." The blonde continued. "No, I was very much a manly man, and outraged and horrified by what Miranda here had done to me - but she did it out of kindness, to make me face my own beliefs, to re-examine what I thought femininity to be..."

Slowly, moving with a supple grace that aroused even Miranda, much less the male members of her audience, the white-clad woman neared the edge of the stage.

"It was in examining these beliefs about women - and men, too - that I was finally able to see my destiny. Having had my beliefs tested, and yet not broken, I understood that, their truth proven to me, it was my duty to spread the word - and that, however I might have felt at the time about it, that it was best done in the form you see before you today."

Miranda was floored.

"Indeed." The busty blonde continued. "As I started the service showing you, I spend several hours a day once more male, to remind myself of the desires and delight of being a man - so that I can better serve them when, once again, Sister DeLite has worked her miracle upon me."

It took a second for Miranda to clue in to the fact that the woman was speaking about her. She glanced down...

...and only the sight of her costume - identical in style and cut as before, but now all in white - made her realize that, in her anger, she had neglected to exempt herself from the spell.

"So, as do Sister DeLite and I do, any of you who might join our church will have to spend at least some time as the gender other than the one you were born to." The massive-busted woman said, sweetly. "However, whichever gender you may choose to spend the rest of your life as is completely up to you. Regardless, when you enter the church you will choose a new name for whichever gender you are, one that you feel better describes that which you have to offer to your fellow man - and women."

She smiled.

"Hard as some of you might find this to believe, 'Tits Andass' isn't the name I was born with." She joked, gently. "Merely something much more... descriptive."

There was an agreeing murmur for the 'congregation'.

Miranda, however, was busy trying to cope with a very bad feeling in the pit of her stomach.

Sure, anger had made her go overboard in her vengeance upon the overbearing Robert - 'Tits?!' - had been. But, if she was now 'Sister DeLite', in the Church of the Divine ...

"However, such decisions are for the future - for now is the time in the service to show the core tenets of the belief, to demonstrate to you the very center of our faith."

Miranda was really worried.

"Pleasure." Tits pronounced, with a sigh. "Unworried, uncomplicated, unconditional pleasure, given and received." This was definitely looking bad...

"Just remember..." Tits said, discerning to the floor. "The core is complete pleasure - it must be freely and willingly given and received. If you wish to worship with us, simply ask whomever you wish to please or be pleased by if you may, and accept the answer they give. If you don't wish to worship - then don't. Willingly and consensual - or not at all."

She stopped at a man in the front row, and smiled down at him, her body in the 'oldest pose'. "Will you please fondle my breasts?" She asked, with a completely unselfconscious air.

"Uh.. yeah.." The man said - and she sensually lowered herself to his lap and smiled at him.

"While you are fondling my breasts, may I also kiss you...?" She inquired, sweetly - and the man was quite willing to agree.

As she lovingly kissed the man who was playing with her massive tits, some of the men looked nervously at the women in the audience, and vice versa...

Oh, not everybody 'worshipped' - but, at worst, the people, who, after all had some inkling about the 'church' before they came', simply watched as the rest, hesitantly and very self-consciously, began some kissing and light fondling.

"Uh... Sister DeLite...?" A voice nervously stammered - and she looked down to see a scrawny red-head with big ears and a gap-toothed grin nervously shifting his weight from one foot to the other as he stood in front of the stage.

"May.. May I, uh..." He stammered. "May I, uh.. lick your ?" Miranda blinked - then shot a look at Tits.

The once-male, now-female person whose convictions about men and women were so utterly, unarguably set that the only 'reasonable' explanation for being a woman she could come up with was so that she could spread the joy of 'uncomplicated' sex.

Who, at this very moment, was quite lovingly sucking some man's cock, while another man blissfully ed her from behind. Oh, well...

"Yes, you may." Miranda told the eager young man.

It sure as hell beat the daylight's out of being an atheist... THE END

Phantasy

By Gunslinger

"AhhhhhhYIPES!"

The satisfied sigh of primal pleasure turned quite suddenly into a cry of surprised discomfort as something sharp and hard pushed through the cushions on the couch and into Jake's poorly padded backside. Had anybody else been present in the room, his actions would have seemed comic - in a very definite 'slap-stick' style. The tall, bony, young man had all-but-collapsed onto the dusty floral-patterned cushions of the couch, and the sudden discomfort caused him to all-but-levitate into the air, leaping aside and twisting in mid-air...

...and landing with less-than-cat-like grace, his bare left foot catching on the protruding and unlovely ankle of his right, causing him to stumble theatrically backwards, arms spinning wildly as he struggled to maintain his balance...

...a struggle he might have won had his foot not landed in the rectangular metal wastebasket near the old roll-top desk. The metal object proved to be a bit of handicap in his attempt to remain upright, and soon his lanky frame was descending towards the ground at an accelerating rate, his too-thin butt slamming hard against the wall before he slid down to the hardwood floor...

...just in time for the built-in ironing board, famed in slapstick song and story, to fall out of it's little cupboard and rap him sharply across the top of his head.

For the next few seconds, Jake did a remarkable impersonation of Yosemite Sam, nonsensical swearwords streaming from his mouth as he kicked (ineffectually) at the wastebasket on his foot, while probing gently through his thick, slightly greasy, 'mud brown' hair.

After several more moments of heart-felt but ineffectual cursing, Jake finally calmed down enough to remove the wastebasket and push the board back into place. Climbing slowly to his broad, bony feet, Jake brushed off his faded knee-length jean shorts and baggy once- white T-shirt. Muttering under his breath, he carefully walked towards the couch, favoring his right foot.

Reaching the couch, Jake Polanski - the proverbial 'Ten Foot Pole' - stared angrily down at the ugly and dusty relic from the style- impaired Sixties, wondering what the hell he'd done to deserve his life. Too tall, too thin, and with a narrow face that boasted a nose roughly the size of Montana, it wasn't enough that the thirty-one year old immigrant artist was funny looking and spoke with a heavy Polish accent - the Universe had also decided he needed to be ungainly and 'accident prone', with hand-eye coordination that was barely good enough to keep him from poking his eye out with a utensil when he was eating.

Which was why he hadn't just yanked the cushion off to see what he'd sat on. With his luck, he'd probably fall on it, impaling himself. Not fatally, however - the Universe was having too much fun using him as a buffoon to allow him to escape so easily. He was probably doomed to a long and eventful life as the embodiment of Murphy's Law.

So, it was with great care that Jake lifted the cushion... and laid it aside with an abstract expression, looking at the small hole in the bottom of the couch's spring-box. His weight had obviously compressed the springs enough to allow something - probably the end of a spring - to protrude out of the inch-wide hole.

"Well, Jake..." He asked himself, disgustedly. "...what were you expecting from a Goodwill couch - perfection, maybe?"

With a shake of his head, he leaned forward and pressed down on either side of the hole... and watched, wide eyed, as the nib of an old fountain pen slid from the hole, like a missile slowly rising from it's silo. Intrigued at this unexpected find, he reached for it...

...and as soon as he took his weight away on even one side, the fabric pushed up enough for the pen to vanish.

"Feces!" Jake 'swore', trying again - with the same result. Which engendered another curse from his fractured English vocabulary. That vocabulary got a workout as he tried a dozen more times, the scatological terms becoming more and more outrageous with each failure. He could have sworn fluently in his mother tongue, but had made a conscious decision only to speak 'American' after immigrating two years before, no matter how quirky his grasp of idioms might have been.

Finally, it dawned on Jake that it didn't necessarily have to be his weight on the couch, and several volumes of the Encyclopaedia Britannica served admirably in his stead.

Holding his prize, Jake walked over to the window and let the golden-orange light of sunset streaming in his window give him a better look at what he'd recovered.

It was a dark-red fountain pen, trimmed in 'gold'. The nib was also gold, and finely shaped. Jake knew his ink pens, and immediately recognized this as an expensive implement, suitable for both cursive writing and artwork.

Which, all things considered, presented an immediate thought. Pulling out the high-backed stool from his slightly tilted drafting board, Jake sat down and shoved sheets of half-finished drawings aside, looking for a 'scrap' drawing.

Then, in the dying glow of the day, the Polish-born cartoonist tested the pen, hoping against hope that any ink the pen might have contained would still be liquid enough to flow.

For the first inch, nothing happened, and Jake was beginning to feel the familiar stirring of crushed hope when a thick, viscous glob of deep red appeared on the paper. With dawning hope, Jake continued to trace over the pencilled outline of a half-completed sketch... and watched, joyfully, as a now-smooth flow of dark red ink was laid neatly and elegantly over his pencil sketch.

"Well, I am being dammed!" Jake muttered, amazed at his good fortune. The thick-bodied pen felt natural in his large, bony hand, and the finely-crafted nib left a smooth, graceful line across the high-grade paper on which he plied his trade.

The caricature on which he was testing the pen was unfinished, denying him the joy of seeing what a finished 'inked' drawing would look like, so Jake quickly pushed the piece of paper aside and began to look through the others littering his desk for a finished pencil sketch to ink. Various sheets fell to the floor, unheeded, until his questing fingers finally drew forth an exaggerated sketch he'd been working on in the hopes of a freelance sale to one of the men's magazines.

Jake didn't usually do that sort of artwork, but money was very tight, and the men's magazines paid well - very well. So, he'd drawn a sort of 'fantasy' scene that fit in with the magazine's genre, planning to ink it with his less-the-professional-quality marker and send it off for consideration. Now, all thought of financial compensation were pushed aside, and he saw only a piece of 'commercial' art that he couldn't care less about. If the pen blotched or ran dry, the loss of this piece would hurt his pocketbook, but not his artist's sensibilities. Eagerly, Jake touched the nib to the paper and began to draw.

The ink from the pen was almost black - but not quite. Most 'black' inks were either very dark blue or very dark brown. Whatever tint-producing agent had been used for this shade, however, was reddish, leaving behind a very deep red, deeper than Ruby or Rust, reaching nearly - but not quite - into true Black, creating a bold, interesting effect as he drew.

The light slowly faded as the sun sank lower, but Jake barely noticed, simply leaning closer to the drawing as he worked, loathe to stop. As the reds and oranges gave way to the tepid grays of twilight, Jake let the nib of the pen curve upwards towards the point at which he'd started tracing, until the flowing red line of the drawing finally met itself and finished the image he'd been working on.

With a soft sigh of pleasure, Jake sat back on the stool and reached out to the switch on the light mounted on the table, bringing golden- white electric light to life, driving back the gathering gloom of night. With nearly paternal satisfaction, Jake gazed down upon the inked drawing.

"I am very much feeling of luck." Jake told the universe at large, looking at the pen he still held. "It is being a wonderful thing, is this pen."

Feeling happier than he could remember feeling in far too long, the tall, bony Polack gently - almost reverently - lay the pen down on the drafting table, below the newly-inked drawing. With one last, long gaze at his new prize, Jake sighed and shut off the light on the desk, padding through the darkened room.

He was so happy about finding the valuable and very useful pen that he didn't even swear when he barked his shin on a coffee table. Nor did he curse when he stubbed his toe. He didn't even grumble when he missed the edge of his bed and ended up on the floor. He simply finished disrobing from his lowly position, climbing happily to the squeaky old bed he'd bought second hand, pulling his crisp, clean new sheets (his sole 'luxury') up around his too-prominent Adam's Apple.

As he quickly drifted into a satisfied slumber, it never even occurred to Jake to wonder about the pen's origins or history...

...the fading sound of the unearthly scream still rebounding against the room's stark walls.

With a gasp, Father Ignatius slumped against the wall of the mission, sweat streaming from his brow. "It is done..."

Brother Francesco looked warily at the item lying in the center of the room, his narrow brow furrowed in mingled awe and confusion. "You have trapped it, then?"

"I have." Father Ignatius said, slowly crossing to where the item rested and bending to retrieve it. "But..." Francesco said, hesitant to question his superior in both age and station. "...a pen?"

Father Ignatius smiled warmly. "It was all I had at hand, Brother. The Lord will forgive me, I am sure." Brother Francesco looked relieved. "That is it, then? That is all there is to the ritual?"

Ignatius heavy brow rose, and he slowly looked around at the various items he'd used in the course of his eight-hour-long ordeal. Francesco blushed.

"It is alright, Brother." Ignatius said, laying a hand on the younger, leaner man's shoulder and guiding them towards the door. "You merely wish to assure yourself that I have succeeded. That I have taken all the lusts and desires from the new Novices, and placed them within this vessel. Well, Francesco, you may rest easy. The Erratum Priapatus Phantasmal, the secret and the strength of our order, has once more saved a new generation of Novices from the temptations of the flesh - and you have seen the ritual. Two or three more times, and you shall be ready to take over when I pass away."

"Many years from now, god willing..." Francesco said, crossing himself. His step faltered. "What... what do we do with that?"

Ignatius grew very serious, looking at the pen with slumped shoulders. Not answering immediately, the aging monk approached the window of the mission and stared out at the fertile valley below, the cars on the new freeway in the distance looking like toys.

"We must be very careful." Ignatius said, slowly, staring out at the land below. "If this should ever find itself in the hands of one who has even a single impure thought while holding it, it could..."

'...could... could... could...'

The strange fragment of a dream echoed and faded as Jake stared up at the dimly-seen ceiling of his apartment, bemused and groggy. Feeling thick-witted and slow, Jake merely stared at the ceiling for several minutes, wondering why he was lying awake in the middle of the night. Had a noise of some sort yanked him from his sleep? If so, what had it been? Or was it the strange dream, the one that had seemed so strangely detailed, so oddly... real?

It was only after those few groggy, half-asleep moments that Jake found himself wondering why his apartment was dimly lit by a reddish glow, one that had never before suffused his bedroom at night.

"What is this...?" He asked himself, brow furrowing in confusion. Blinking, he sat up and looked around...

The human brain is an interesting thing. It doesn't actually deal with reality - at least, not at first. In basic primal instinct, it 'pattern matches' what information it receives for the senses, trying to identify what it's sensing as a potential threat. Only familiarity with something allowed it to 'ignore' certain stimuli, having learned to accept it as being 'background' information. Just as a foul smell that can be nearly overwhelming at first can becoming literally unnoticeable after some time, so did common sights and sounds become 'unnoticeable' after some association.

In the first look Jake took around his room, it seemed that he was in some sort of hellish lair, great hulking beast looming in the red- tinted shadows, eager to tear him limb from limb...

...and then his brain 'shuffled' through it's database of threats and determined that what he was seeing didn't match anything it had on file. Then, and only then, was he able to see that, though the layout and physical size of the room was the same, the décor and furnishings were completely different.

Being a free-lance cartoonist was the best-paying occupation in the world, and Jake's furnishings were minimal - or, at least, they had been. Now, he looked around the room he found himself in with shock, seeing it full of furnishings and 'knick-knacks' that hadn't been there when he'd fallen asleep.

"This... is not being possible..." Jake muttered in shock, having to struggle to keep from lapsing into his native tongue from the surprise. It was inconceivable that somebody could have snuck into his apartment while he was sleeping and redecorated it - yet, even as he sat up and swung his knobby-kneed legs over the edge of the big four-poster bed he'd never seen before in his life, he had to admit that somehow all his own furnishings had been removed, and replaced with these ones.

Whoever or whatever had changed his décor had also removed the clothes he'd dropped on the floor the night before. Now, the hard- wood floor was covered by a large, leopard-skin pattern rug, and there was no sign of any clothes on it's broads expanse.

Naked, the cartoonist rose from the bed and padded towards the open door of the bedroom, mind spinning in confusion.

The living room, like his bedroom, was the same physical dimensions and locations as it had always been - and, like the bedroom, it was completely redecorated and the furnishings replaced with those of a better quality, and more of them. The reddish glow that had been Jake's first clue that something was strange came in from the window near where his drafting table had once sat, and a glance outside showed that the old neon sign for the building was lit, advertising it to the world...

...which was exceedingly strange, since the building was no longer used in it's original capacity, and so had no need for advertising. At least, it hadn't when Jake had gone to bed.

The eight-story building had once been a Hotel. One of those older buildings whose first floor had once boasted a large bar, with the upper floors featuring fully-furnished rooms that could be rented weekly or monthly. Long before Jake had move din, however, the first floor had been converted into a few small stores, and the upper floors (stripped of furnishings) rented out as apartments. Now, looking at the neon light streaming in the window and dimly reflecting off the black lacquer that covered much of the new furnishings, Jake momentarily wondered if he'd somehow travelled back in time.

The sight of one of those butt-ugly SUV's on the street below made him forget the concept. After all, they hadn't had... (what were they called? Inkas? Mayens? Something like that...) when the building had been in use as a hotel.

Looking around at the familiar-yet-unfamiliar room, Jake began to feel a growing fear - which would have been understandable, given the strange situation he found himself in, except that this was an unreasoning fear. It was as if there was a somehow silent voice filling the room, screaming at him. Telling him he was in danger, and that he had to flee the apartment before something very, very bad happened to him.

Considering he was buck naked, the idea of running from the room naked didn't appeal to him much - yet that fear continued to grow, despite there was nothing immediately visible to support such rising panic. He stood in the centre of the living room and slowly turned full circle, trying to figure out what was causing the blind fear that was threatening to overwhelm him.

There was still no immediate threat to be seen - yet the fear was continuing to grow. More than that, though, it seemed to be 'focused' in various places, as if that unheard voice was screaming at him that each room had its own dangers, its own horrors waiting for him. It was like being in a nightmare, where any door could hide a different terror, and...

"A nightmare!" Jake said, fighting the rising tide of panic. "That is this! I am still sleeping, and am being in a nightmare!"

It made sense. Sure, this was more detailed than any nightmare that he could ever remember having - but the dream he'd just had was also incredibly 'real', though not as 'immediate'. In the strange dream, he himself hadn't been present, an invisible spectator to two monks performing some strange ritual. In this case, he was 'there', involved in whatever was happening.

It was the only explanation he could come up with that would make sense.

"I am not being afraid!" He said, aloud, lying - but willing to make it the truth. He decided to confront whatever 'bogeyman' this dream might house, hoping to end the nightmare and find himself awake in his own apartment, as it should be, with the light of morning streaming in the window. Looking around, the artist decided that he'd plunge into the aura of fear and threat that surrounded the small kitchen - after all, he was in the living room, had already been in the bedroom, and the kitchen was closer than the bathroom.

Besides - nightmare or not, he was a little hungry...

With that decision made, the tall, angular Pollack strode as confidently as his awkward stride would allow, placing himself in the middle of the small kitchen with his feet planted and his hands on his hips. The feeling of panic had grown as he walked towards the small, partially-delimited room, and now he lifted his chin and spoke in a defiant voice.

"Here I am!" He said, loudly. "Be doing your worst, I am daring!"

He felt a surge of defiant pride as the panic slipped away...

...and then all Hell broke loose.

The cabinets in the kitchen, though roughly the same size as he knew them, were now black-lacquered with grey marble tops. Now, the drawers, doors and covers of all those cabinets flew open of their own accord, as did the stainless-steel doors of the new fridge and stove, the noise blending into a clattering cacophony of sound. Jake twitched and took a step back from the noise, even before his brain was able to process what was causing it.

Then the contents of the kitchen attacked him.

A bag of angel-hair pasta bust open, and the thin noodles flew through the air towards his head, intertwining itself with his hair as the noodles became limp and soft. He didn't have time to try and yank the wilting noodles from his hair, however, as he was also being jumped by a length cheese cloth that was winding itself around his hips and crotch. Strawberries, raspberries and blue berries flew at his face and splattered against it as he went reeling back from the impact of a pair of watermelons against his bony chest.

The stagger backwards caused him to step onto a pair of those four-sided cheese graters, shaped like narrow, truncated pyramids. Even as his soles landed on them, his heels were pushed upwards atop a pair of sterling silver champagne flutes, shoving him upwards.

He struggled for balance - and as he did so, two rolls of aluminium foil skittered along the floor and began wrapping each foot in a layer of crinkling, noisy metal, winding around his feet - and then the rolls of tinfoil jumped upwards, wrapped themselves around his hips over the cheese-cloth, then jumper up to his chest.

Meanwhile, Jake was also busy trying to deal with a roll of Saran-wrap that had taken an unhealthy liking to his waist, wrapping itself tighter and tighter around his abdomen. A roll of translucent white waxed paper hit his legs, winding itself around one leg until it disappeared under the tinfoil at his crotch - and then shooting down his other leg to the ankle.

Everything happened with blinding speed, Jake's mind barely able to register it, much less react to it. He'd barely begun to assess what was occurring, to deal with the impossible situation in a 'rational' manner - and then it was over, the sudden attack finishing only a scant moment after it had begun.

Staggered and confused, Jake teetered atop the graters digging onto the soles of his feet - and then a sudden burst of deep, red light washed over everything, and he felt a strangely non-physical wrenching sensation run through his body and mind, sending him reeling...

She caught herself on the edge of the counter, keeping herself from falling over. Breathing heavily from the near-fall, Jane felt her huge, round breasts straining against her silver-colored leather top with each breath, her thick nipples delightfully compressed by the heavy material.

"Oh, my..." She said her in her low, richly erotic, voice. "That was being too close for the comfort. Nearly did I fall off my heels."

Still braced against the counter, she leaned forward and looked past the massive swell of her huge, melon-like breasts. Barely visible, even in that awkward position, were her silver platform pumps, upon whose nine-inch stiletto heels she was perched...

Jane paused, her full, gloss-red lips pursed in a small frown of confusion. Something seemed to be wrong, but she couldn't quite place her finger on what it was.

Bothered by the vague feeling that there was something amiss, she gracefully and sensuously walked - flowed - across the room, her hips swaying with a smooth, easy grace as she entered the bathroom and flipped on the light with one long-nailed finger, critically surveying herself in the huge floor-to-ceiling mirror that covered an entire wall of her black-marble-and-gleaming-chrome bathroom.

The mirror showed Jane just what she expected to see - a whole lot of woman. Six feet and eight inches of smooth, milky skin, a lot of which was taken up by her long, toned, and oh-so-sexy legs, admirably displayed by her white seamed nylons. Balanced atop heels that pushed her up to seven-five, her supple, slender body was packed into a dress whose top and skirt were silver-colored leather, with clear plastic revealing her slender waist and flat stomach - which sat in the shadow cast by the massive bulge of her spectacularly huge, round tits. Her sexy, full-lipped visage was surrounded by her long, silky mane of blonde-streaked brown hair, and she had to run her slender, long-nailed fingers through the thick, multi-shaded mane with a smile, loving how wonderful she looked, a sensual vision of womanhood. She was certainly no 'Plain Jane', not since she'd been a little boy in Warsaw, all angles and...

She paused, frowning, as she realized she was having thoughts that couldn't possibly be hers. After all, how could she remember being a young, awkward man, gazing upon the just-barely-pubescent girls who had begun to develop curves? No, no - she'd been a tall, gangly girl, looking on with envy, not knowing that she'd soon far outstrip her peers in the bust department...

...but how could that be, when she knew that she'd been an early bloomer, developing far sooner than the other girls? It was strange - she 'knew' all about it, yet she didn't remember it - and what she did remember seemed wildly out-of-whack with her 'knowledge'. After all, she was obviously female - so why did she have memories in which she was male?

She shook her head in frustration. After all, Jane Claus Polanski wasn't known for her cognitive powers... No, no - why the hell had she thought that ridiculous name? Her name was Jakob Claudia Pulaski...

She sighed, pushing her hair back in annoyance. Why was she having so much trouble with his own name? He'd been using it all her life. His name - her name - was Jane Claudia Pulaski...

...wasn't it?

This was all just too much for her to deal with right now. It was the dead of night, her apartment had changed around her, and she couldn't even remember her own name...

Apartment had changed? Where had that thought come from? Her apartment was exactly the same as it had always been, the way she'd decorated it. Why would she think it had changed?

"I am needing a drink." She told her reflection. Turning away from the mirror - and the strange, muddled thoughts and memories she was having - Jane swayed and jiggled out into the living room...

...where she heard some sort of noise in the hall. It grew louder, more defined, resolving itself into some sort of argument. It got so close that she could actually make out some words, spoken in a male voice: "...hit a man of the cloth, but if you don't stop, I'm gonna deck you!"

A split-second later, there was a knock on her door.

Jane hesitated - and the knock came again. Jane walked over and looked out the peephole in the door.

Distorted by the fish-eyed lens she saw three men - two of them wearing casual clothing, the third in a brown belted robe of some sort.

Jane blinked. She knew for a fact that the two men in jeans and work-shirts were Tom and Ryan Detmuller, the owners of the building, and owner-operators of the bar downstairs... but she couldn't actually pull up any memories of them. On the other hand, the man in the monk's robe looked familiar, sparking a memory... but she seemed to recall seeing him at some time when he was younger, and slimmer.

Still, she was somehow familiar with all three men, so she opened the door, feeling more than a little confused.

"Hey, babe..." Tom said. Jane grinned at him - grinned down at him, as a matter of fact - and leaned forward to kiss the well-muscled older brother on the cheek. She repeated the peck on the taller, somewhat slimmer younger brother, also mussing his sandy-blond hair.

"Guys..." She said, warmly, knowing that she was very, very fond of the tow-headed brothers - even if she couldn't exactly remember why.

Then she turned and smiled down at the monk.

"Hey, there..." She said, adding a throaty little tone to her already sensual voice, though she wasn't exactly sure why she thought of it as her 'Advertising voice'. "Would a little kiss on the cheek be considered in bad taste...?"

The monk flushed slightly. "I would prefer you didn't, Miss...?"

Jane giggled fetchingly - which also caused her to jiggle fetchingly, something the Detmuellers obviously appreciated. "I'm Jane Pola.. uh, Pulaski."

"I'm Brother Francesco." He introduced himself, staring directly at her face - as if afraid his eyes might slip downward. She wished they would, actually - she loved having men stare at her fantastic tits. Too much to expect from a man of the cloth, though...

She became aware that Francesco was still talking, and dragged her mind back to the situation at hand. "...name you were about to give?" The monk asked, an intent look on his face again.

"Oh, don't start that crap again." Tommy said, rolling his eyes. He turned to her. "This nut-case is insisting that, until tonight, you were somebody else."

Jane blinked as she took a step back, letting the three men into her apartment. "Huh?"

"Listen to me..." Brother Francesco said, intently, "You found a pen. A red pen. Sometime yesterday you must have found it, and held it... and in doing so, you have set something free. Something that has changed the history of the past twelve years. I don't know who you were before, but the pen has remade you into.. well, into a repository of lust. History has been changed to make you a... well, sport of a 'lust vacuum', designed to 'suck' men's carnal desires into yourself."

Tommy and Ryan broke into laughter.

"Well, I guess that's an accurate description of a hooker..." Ryan chortled. Jane reeled back as if struck. "I... I'm a whore...?"

The Detmuller's rather confused agreements mingled with Francesco's vehement denial - and Jane liked the monk's answer much better.

Except... she wasn't sure if she believed it. She looked back and forth between the young men and the old monk, trying to figure out what was going on. She felt confused. Her instincts were screaming one thing, while her 'intellect' (such as it was) was screaming another.

"I think there's a simple way to find out..." Ryan said, with a smirk. He walked towards her, his eyes roaming her body at will - and she felt a rush of pleasure at his open appreciation.

A rush that doubled as his brother also approached. She found herself almost instinctively smiling back, feeling a warm, pleasant feeling at being so obviously admired and desired.

"You feel so sexy, don't you, Jane...?" Tom asked, reaching her and walking around behind her, while his brother stood in front of her. "Well, uh..." She replied, hesitantly... then she gasped as she felt his hand run over the taut leather covering her firm, full ass.

"You like feeling sexy, don't you...?" Ryan asked - as he reached out and began to lightly caress the leather covering her massive, sensitive breasts. She moaned by way of reply, feeling pleasure and desire thrum through her body as warmth began to grow in her crotch.

"Don't let the pleasures of the flesh consume you!" Francesco said, averting his eyes and blushing. "Try! Try and remember who you used to be!"

"I... Oh..." Jane moaned, as Tommy slowly unzipped the dress at the back, folding the top of it down. The tough, silver fabric caught for a second on her massive mounds, pulling down on them with delightful pressure, adding to what Ryan was providing - and then the fabric popped free, dragging delightfully across thick nipples that were now fully engorged. She gasped again, and then another time - this time, as Ryan's strong-yet-gentle - and oh-so-talented - hands worked on bare, softly firm flesh.

"No! Stop!" Francesco shouted, still refusing to look directly at what was going on - though, she noticed with an unwanted thrill, he did peek at it from the corner of his eyes from time to time. "Tell them to stop, Jane!"

She didn't. What Tom and Ryan was doing felt wonderful, even if it was a guilty pleasure - and she wasn't quite sure why it was a guilty pleasure, except that she could exactly remember doing this before. Though her mind insisted she had, hundreds - maybe thousands - of times before, she couldn't remember any of them, and it all felt so strange and new and wonderful.

The dress was pulled all the way down, now, slipping past the smooth flesh of her long, shapely legs to pool around her high heels. Underneath the dress, she wore only gauzy white French-cut brief and the white seamed nylons, which made her look more naked than if she had actually been naked. A vague, dark triangle of pubic hair could be seen through the fine material of her panties, and those panties were now damp with the juices that were flowing so pleasantly inside her womanhood.

What bothered Jane was that she, quite literally, couldn't remember ever having felt this good. If she were, indeed, a huge-breasted hooker, wouldn't this be a commonplace experience, something she was used to feeling?

Maybe she should slow down. Figure out what was going on. She opened her mouth to ask the guys to stop...

...and Ryan caught her, open mouthed, with a kiss. A passionate, hungry kiss. One that she found herself almost instinctively reacting to as his brother massaged her full, taut ass, then slipped his hands around between her and his brother, playing with her tits as Ryan's hands moved around to take up fondling her heart-shaped ass.

Jane was lost in a sea of pleasure. Pleasure that kept growing as she reacted, almost mindlessly, to increase it. Brother Francesco was still protesting, but though Jane's ears caught his words, her mind didn't process them as she found herself bending farther and farther forward as the two brothers guided her. Responding like a trained horse to the subtle commands of a rider, she found herself stepping out of the pile of clothes, which now included her panties, and stepping to one side. Ryan had settled into a chair, and she found herself leaning forward, huge breasts being fondled by Ryan's firm hands as Tommy guided her into spreading her legs further and further apart.

Then, much to her surprise, she found herself enveloping Ryan's rock-hard cock with her full, softly firm lips. She seemed to have a remarkable amount of expertise in the art of cock-sucking, as she knew exactly what to do - and so she did it, her hands working along his now saliva-slicked shaft as her tongue swirled and danced over the head of his throbbing tool.

It felt... strange? It wasn't terribly enjoyable, but neither was it repugnant - the sensations were actually rather bland. It was the emotions that were confusing. Part of her was insisting that she loved doing this, while another part insisted she should be sickened and disgusted by it. Why was that? After all, she must have done this hundreds or thousands of times before - and God knows, she certainly enjoyed the few times some woman sucked her off...

Wait a second...!

Before she had a chance to track down the strange and vivid memory, however, it was driven from her mind - by the sensation of Tommy slipping his thick, hard cock deep into her sopping wet cunt. She gasped, in the back of her throat, her oral work on Ryan hesitating for an instant as she dealt with the new and wonderful sensation of being filled.

New...?

Again, before she could track the errant thought down it was driven from her mind as Tommy began to pump into her with long, deep strokes. Almost without thinking about it, she matched what she was doing to Ryan's cock to the rhythm his brother was setting, her head bobbing up and down as her body rocked under Tom's even thrusts.

The three of them moved as one, and as Jane settled into the rhythm her hands slid from Ryan's cock to brace herself on the chair while her mouth bobbed up and down his shaft. Her hand curled around the cushion...

...and the right one encountered something cool and cylindrical. She felt it with her fingers, even as Tom's ministrations brought her closer and closer to orgasm, pleasure mounting in wave after wave.

It was (oh, God, this feels so wonderful) a pen. It was THE pen.

The (I'm gonna cum...!) pen that had changed him from, a lanky young man into a huge-breasted...

"No. !" She screamed as she yanked her mouth from Ryan's cock with a wet, slurping sound - a scream of negation that was also a scream of pleasure as she reached orgasm, her body thrashing and jerking as Ryan's cum gushed out onto her huge, dangling tits while his brother grunted and pumped a load of hot, thick cum into her now-she-knew-to-be-virgin cunt.

Horried and disgusted, stunned to realize she'd almost lost her own identity in the one that had been created for her, she all-but- yanked herself off of the older brother's cock and staggered away from the two young men, a thin trail of cum running down her leg, and what seemed to be gallons of it dripping from the firm curves of her massive and now unwanted tits.

"I was a man!" Jake/Jane screamed, memories flooding back to the forefront of her mind as she gripped tightly to the pen that had caused this horrible - and horribly enjoyable - situation to occur. "The pen turned me into a woman!"

"What the Hell are you talking about, Jane?" Ryan said, laughing - and his brother joined in, their laughter anything but good-natured. "You're just a dumb, horny Polish whore who'll fuck anybody and anything. aren't you?"

Jane suddenly felt very confused as she looked at the handsome brothers. What they were saying. sounded right. Maybe she was imagining things. Maybe she should just listen to them, let them decide who she was and how she should act...

"You!" Francesco shouted, eyes widening. He straightened, the blush fading from his face as he grabbed the heavy pewter crucifix that hung from his belt and held it up. "I recognize thee now! Get thee gone, minions of Satan!"

Jane/Jake looked back and forth between the young men and the monk, confused. What was going on here...? Tommy and Ryan laughed - very unpleasantly.

"Get lost, old man." Tom said, with a sneer. "Your pathetic deity has no power. We don't fear you. Jake had lustful thoughts, and now he or she - is ours. She needs a little reinforcement, but soon she'll be exactly what we want her to be. After all, she's made up of the lust of two-dozen monks, distilled into the body of a fantasy woman. She won't be able to help herself. She's lost, old man - and I suggest you run away before you, too, are lost."

"Never!" Francesco shouted, grabbing Jake/Jane's arm.

"Jane..." Ryan said, laughing. "You enjoyed fucking, didn't you? It was better than anything you'd done as a man, wasn't it? You know you'll never be able to go back to being a man, even if this pathetic excuse for a Monk could perform the Erratum Priapatus Phantasmal. Stop fighting, and give in."

"No!" Francesco urged the confused and scared woman. "Repent! They can have no hold on you if you repent!"

"I've had enough of you, monk." Tommy said - as his eyes began to glow a sooty, hellish red. "We know the lustful thoughts you had while we were fucking this succubus-to-be. Your God can't save you. I think maybe you should join Jane here in servicing the men of the community... and seducing them into carnal sin along the way..."

Francesco's face went dead pale. but his voice was resolute as he spoke.

"Take me, then. I will gladly give myself unto you, to do with what you wish - but only if you let her go."

Jake/Jane's heart swelled at the monk's willingness to sacrifice himself for her. Never before, as male or female, had she seen anybody willing to do something so brave and costly.

"We can take you without giving her up." Tom sneered. "If you had true faith, you'd be a Father by now, not a lowly brother. You're a weak, weak man, not like Father Ignatius. You don't have the power to stop us. "

Brother Francesco quailed, knowing it was true. In the ranks of Stan's minions, these two ranked the same as a 'Brother' in his own faith and not only were their two of them, but their hellish master wasn't constrained from working directly in the mortal world, as God was. They were right - he didn't have the power...

"But I do." A voice said, firmly - and three pairs of startled eyes turned to look upon the subject of their battle, almost forgotten in the fight.

Full, sensual lips curled in a slight, satisfied smile, Jane held up the pen...

"Hot damn! Get a load of what's comin' down the street!"

The three young men leaning on the lamppost turned to follow the two sensual visions strolling down the sidewalk.

The women were almost pure sex. Clad in matching outfits that consisted of a tight, tiny red-leather dress and high heels, the two obviously-related blondes jiggled and swayed down the street in a sensual display, their DD-cup breasts threatening to pop out of the matching plunging necklines of their dresses.

"I'd like to get me..." Julio started - then suddenly paused and finished with: "...to a church."

His friends turned to gape at him... then blinked and blushed as they saw the two nuns approaching them for their own side of the street.

The older one looked the way the guys thought a nun should look, rather severe and plain in her black-and-white habit. The younger one, though - she seemed to tower almost to the Heaven she represented, and the front of her plain black dress was strained over a bust that stunned the imagination.

"Please, I am being understanding." She told the startled boys, warmly. "Man and woman, and he created them. It is not the feeling that is being a sin, but the doing. Impure thoughts do only endanger a soul that does not repent them."

It took a second for the young men to figure that out - then Julio grinned, hesitantly. "Look, but don't touch, huh?"

"Yes. Very well phrased." The older nun said - with surprising warmth, considering.

"I ain't seen you around before." Julio said, looking them up and down. He might have forgotten seeing the older one - but the younger one was quite memorable.

"We are new to St. Mary's, on Fifth." The older said. "I am Mother Francesca, and this is Sister Jane. Perhaps you would care to come by some time? We are always looking for volunteers."

"Uh - I ain't exactly the religious type, si.. uh, Mother Francesca." Julio said, awkwardly, his eyes slipping towards where the two sexy young thangs had quite obviously set up business - and there was no doubt what that business was. His friends had already deserted him, all but running across the street.

"It is being all right, not to be religious." The tall, buxom nun said, with a strange little smile. "I, not long before, was also not much of religious. Now, I am being a bride of Christ. Is quite amazing, indeed."

"Oh?" Julio said, interested. "What made you become a nun?"

The woman smiled. "Is being better to be bride of Christ than pawn of Satan."

Julio looked surprised... then, guiltily, glanced longingly over at his friends, now haggling with the two hookers. "Francesca?" Jane said. "Perhaps you being going into store and getting us some water?"

Mother Francesca looked startled, then nodded and went into the store. Jane waited until she'd disappeared, then stepped closer to Julio.

"Am not supposed to say this, as Pope does not agree, but I know." She told him. "Sex is not being sin, always. If adultery, then sin. If for pleasure out of wedlock, then smaller sin. But, even sex with prostitute be no sin, if you be doing it to make happiness for woman as much or more then happiness for self. The Pope does not say this, but is being true - if giving happiness to other, cannot be sin."

Julio was more then a little startled by the nun's comment. He gestured with a hesitant hand towards his friends, now disappearing into the hotel with the hookers. "You mean, if I...?"

"Is okay - but not being with Rayne and Tamara, those ones. Be believing me this - them you not being with at all. They are not being good people." Jane assured him, with conviction.

"Oh. Okay..." Julio said, still a bit stunned. He saw Mother Francesca emerging from the store, and blushed, casting around for something to say - and his eye caught something hanging from Sister Jane's belt. He pointed.

"Nice pen."

For some reason, both nuns looked as if they'd bitten into a lemon. "No. Is not nice pen. Be trusting me." Jane said...

...and then, as she walked away, added something that completely confused Julio, even more then the rest of her fractured conversation.

"...but I am at least not being tripping over my own feet anymore. Now, I am just not being able to see them anymore." Then they were gone...

SUMMARY: Stealing a device that lets him move unnoticed in a "phased" dimension, one man discovers that he has accidentally taken on the form of various women as he moves about.

Phased Out

By Gunslinger

Interlacing his long, lean fingers over his taut abdomen, Jim looked down and addressed the unconscious body at his feet with sarcastic regret.

"Sorry 'bout that, Professor..." He said, his lean face pulled into long lines of artificial sorrow that went poorly with the nearly manic glee dancing in his dark eyes. "Real shame to do such a thing to the guy who's gonna make me rich, and all. Speaking of which. "

Dropping to one knee, the lean, slender brunet quickly rifled through his supposed employer's pockets. Pulling out the well-worn billfold from the inside pocket of the worn tweed jacket, he slipped the few bills from within.

"Gee - you're one of the few people I ever met whose driver's license photo looks better than they really do." Jim remarked to the limp figure, before tossing aside the emptied wallet. "In the picture, you've still got hair "

Chuckling to himself, the rangy thief tucked the money into the pockets of his black jean overalls and pushed himself up off the floor. Looking around at the array of esoteric equipment that filled the dining-room-turned-laboratory, he slowly shook his head in sorrow. He was pretty sure that some of the computer equipment and other, less immediately identifiable electronic equipment was probably worth the fortune that the man he'd come to rob had squandered away on it - but Jim dealt mostly in cash or jewels, and only rarely in common electronics like TVs and stereos. He wouldn't even begin to know where to fence off science stuff like this.

"Not that it matters. " Jim reminded himself, a shark's grin coming to his face as he turned and looked at the complicated apparatus assembled in the middle of the room. "Not when I have this baby "

Eyes dancing at the thought of wealth beyond the dreams of avarice, the dark-clad thief slowly approached the jury-rigged machine with a look of near reverence on his face.

When he'd pulled out his gun and held it on the man he'd come to call 'The Professor', the old foggy had been desperate to explain why he couldn't give Jim that money he'd won in the lottery. In a nearly hysterical state, the old guy had gone on and on about how he'd spent nearly every penny on his 'research', and Jim had nearly been ready to shoot the old bastard just to get him to shut up - when it had all 'clicked'.

This machine was some sort of 'invisibility machine'.

Well, not exactly. The Professor hadn't actually said it made you invisible. No, according to the Professor, this 'quantum state something-or-other' could put you 'out of phase' with the universe.

Truthfully, Jim really didn't understand even half of what the Professor had been going on about, and the other half he understood only vaguely - but he figured that was more than enough. Jim didn't have to understand that whole 'objective as opposed to subjective universe' crap - all he had to understand was that, if he used this machine, other people wouldn't notice him, even when he walked around in plain view...

...which, as far as Jim was concerned, was the next best thing to being 'really' invisible.

Rubbing his hands together gleefully, Jim stepped into the open center of the ceiling-tall machine, reached out, and pushed the big, red button that was the sole control within the central mass of the device.

There was a roaring sound, a series of bright, flashing light that increased in speed and power, and then... Silence. Darkness.

"What the hell...?" Jim asked himself, blinking as he tried to get his eyes to adjust to the darkness - but there wasn't anything for them to adjust too, because it wasn't darkness, really, but a kind of... a kind of dimness.

"Whoa. This is freaking weird..." Jim muttered, slowly stepping out of the guts of the machine and looking around him, wide eyed and though he hated to admit it, even to himself - a little scared. The world had changed.

It was like looking at a badly developed photograph of the same room he'd been in a second ago. Though, in general, everything was the same, it looked completely different.

The colors were muted, no longer sharp and clear, but just barely this side of being monochromatic. More than that, though the same lights were still on, they seemed to be giving off less light - or less effective light, if that meant anything. The shadows weren't really any bigger, but they were deeper, more impenetrable.

More than just that, though, there seemed to be a dark fog hanging in the air. In normal fog, your vision faded out to whiteness at a certain distance - but, here and now, after a couple of dozen feet there was nothing but blackness - not a sharply defined zone, but one that gradually faded out.

As a final, bizarre little touch, everything he still could see looked slightly... skewed. What had once been ninety degrees now seemed to be ninety-two, or eighty-seven, or something - just a little bit off what it should have been.

What Jim was now seeing was, according to the Professor, the 'subjective universe' - whatever the hell THAT meant...

"This is gonna take some getting used to." Jim said to himself, nervously - and even his own voice sounded strangely flat and weak to his own ears, as leached of vibrancy as the colors of what he saw.

Walking with a slow, slightly dazed air, Jim headed for the front door of the house. Looking around in amazement, he didn't notice the small decorative planter near the door until he was right on top of it. He tried to stop himself, off balance, and was forced to 'kick' at the planter as he threw his foot forward to catch himself...

...and his foot went right through it!

"Holy shit!" Jim gasped, staring down at his foot, now on the other side of the planter - and his leg, which seemed to go right through the planter itself. Though both leg and planter looked solid, separately, where they overlapped it looked almost like a double-exposed picture, somehow both of them equally visible, despite the fact that neither was the least bit transparent.

"So that's what he meant!" Jim said, snapping his fingers as one of the Professor's explanations finally acquired some sort of coherency.

At the time, the Professor's attempt to explain that, unlike the 'objective' - or 'real' - universe, the subjective universe existed mainly in the perceptions of those experiencing it hadn't made any sense to Jim. Now, though he still wasn't exactly clear on it all, the lean-bodied thief understood that nothing in the house was 'really' real, because there was nobody - so 'subject' - to observe it....

...but...

"Then how come I see anything at all. ?" Kim wondered, head down as he slowly moved to cover the last few feet between himself and the door, lost in unfamiliar thought. "I mean, I understand that I don't count, cause I'm 'phased', and part of this universe - that's why I'm 'invisible'. But that should mean that I don't see anything at all, cause there's nobody hear to see any of this. "

He stopped, just shy of the door - then smiled, nodding.

"The Professor!" He said to himself, feeling proud at having worked this out. "He's out cold, but he ain't dead. What I'm seeing is his memory of his own house!"

Metaphorically patting himself on the back, Jim reached for the door-knob...

...and promptly fell right through the door.

"Shit!" Jim said, picking himself up off the ground outside the house. He turned and looked balefully back at the still closed door, somehow managing to blame the innocuous-looking wooden portal for 'betraying' him.

Turning away from the house, Jim eyed the once-respectable neighborhood near the city core, slowly falling into a state of urban decay.

Almost immediately, he closed his eyes - then slowly let them creep open again, trying to make sense of what he was seeing.

There was that same flat, dim, slightly askew appearance out here as there was in the house - but this time it was split by 'searchlights' roaming all over the place. Wherever these roving cones of light moved, color and detail bloomed to life anew - but sometimes with strange effects, where the objects in the 'beams' path would... change.

Slowly, looking around him with confusion writ large on his face, Jim began walking down the sidewalk towards the downtown core - and then it struck him what he was seeing.

The 'beams' where other people's perceptions. People looking out windows, or in the cars. Whatever they perceived - or thought they perceived - was what Jim was seeing, just as sharp and clear as the person who was seeing it...

...even if it wasn't what the person was really seeing.

As Jim reached the street corner, he had to stop and stare - taking in the sight of two conflicting 'subjective' perceptions intersecting.

As it happened, he'd originally paused on the street corner when he'd noticed the police cruiser coming down the street. Though now in an 'out-of-phase' state, the old instincts about the cops held true, and he'd hesitated - and so he'd been able to watch the police car approach the intersection at which he now stood.

It was somewhat 'lit up', portions of the car sharp and clear because of the perceptions of the two officers riding inside of it - and then it had suddenly become very 'bright' as it had become the focus of two of those perceptual 'spot lights' spearing the night.

Once came from an almost anorexic young black man 'hanging out' in the darkened doorway of a run-down apartment building - and in the 'light' of his perceptions, the police cruiser took on a low, somehow hungry look, almost like a prowling monster... while, at the same time, overlaid upon that image, was a shining, perfectly clean version of the same car, lit by the perceptions of an old lady leaning out the second-floor window of her own apartment in an attempt to coax her cat back inside.

Two different perceptions of the same vehicle, somehow knight in shining armor and dragon to be slain all in one vehicle - and both were as equally 'real' in this subjective universe, which was enough to make Jim's head begin to ache with the contradiction.

As the police cruiser passed the intersection and continued on its way, Jim shuddered and quickly crossed the street. As interesting as all this might be, he wasn't some sort of explorer or scientist - he just wanted to score a nice, big hit, then get back to the 'real' world with it.

After all, that was the whole reason he'd broken into the Professor's place - to do in one night what he hadn't been able to do in a lifetime of small, 'second-story' jobs.

One, big job. One that would set him up for life.

His spirits revived at the thought, despite the inherent strangeness of this 'subjective' world he found himself in, Jim grinned to himself and picked up the pace.

Reaching the downtown core, he began to stroll along the streets, looking at the large array of business and buildings that lined the boulevards. Banks and jewelry stores, pawn shops and department stores - any and all of which could be fair game to him, with no chance of him getting caught during his heist.

If he needed any more proof of that fact, he got it during his 'stroll' to case his selections. Though it was nearly two o'clock in the morning, there were still a few people out and about, walking the streets with their own purposes - and not one of them 'saw' him.

It was both more and less than being invisible. More, because they not only didn't see him, but they didn't hear him, either. In fact, he'd tested this premise by walking backwards right in front of one young man, waving his arms and screaming at the top of his lungs and the man hadn't responded to him.

Well, not 'responded' - but 'reacted', hence the 'less' part of the invisibility clause.

Jim still existed in this subjective universe. His appearance, his actions, weren't 'really' real, and so he didn't have direct interaction with people, or with 'semi-real' objects. However, he could influence this plastic new reality, but only indirectly.

In fact, that was both the blessing and the curse...

He'd already established, with planter and door-knob, that he was completely unable to interact with items that weren't currently perceived - but, a little experimentation established he could interact with perceived items and objects, as long as it could match the persons perceptions.

His first test was a simple one: He 'stole' a poster off a light post.

The same young man was his 'test subject', and there was no doubt that the young man 'saw' the poster - but, though it was in his field of perception, he wasn't paying any attention to it. It was 'real' - but the writing and picture on it were still rather vague and blurry, because the young man hadn't gone to any trouble to 'perceive' what they were. Even when he turned his eyes away from the poster, it remained 'real' - though slowly fading as other things struck his conscious mind and supplanted the poster in his memory.

It was in this nebulous state of being that the poster became fair game for Jim. Not being directly looked at, but still 'real', he could reach out and tear it off the post - which he did.

When the young man's eyes turned back to the pole, the poster was gone - but the young man barely noticed, the lack of a poster as unimportant to him as the poster itself had been.

Jim folded up his 'prize', satisfied it was possible - and, being who and what he was, he immediately put theory into practice.

Chuckling, Jim reached into the young man's pants pocket and pulled out his cash, replacing it in the same movement with the folded poster.

The young man was aware he had money on him, so it was 'real' enough - but he wasn't looking directly at it, his own perceptions 'locking in' his own reality, so Jim could influence it. It was a mere twenty-four dollars - but it proved to Jim that it was possible to really steal things in this skewed universe, as long as somebody was aware of what Jim wanted to steal, but wasn't looking directly at it.

Of course, Jim was hardly planning to walk around all night picking pockets - he wanted something faster and easier. To that end, he began prowling the street, looking for a likely 'subject' to unwittingly help him out in his criminal endeavor.

In short order, he found somebody who seemed to be a ripe prospect, just getting off the cross-town bus as it left service at the centrally-located terminal.

She was a boyish-looking 'redhead' with a short, wildly-styled shock of carrot-orange hair. Dressed in a pair of tight, faded jeans and a low-cut black off-the-shoulder blouse, she walked with a slightly exaggerated hip-swivel atop the three-inch stacked heels of her black leather shoes, an unconscious attempt to make her slim hips and taut, small ass seem more 'womanly' than they were.

It was probably the same mindset that had prompted her to get what was almost painfully obvious as being breast implants. Even as Jim fell into step beside her, unnoticed, he glanced down her blouse at the breasts she was so consciously putting on display, as if trying to convince the world - or maybe just herself - that the toned, boyishly-built figure was that of a woman.

Given a body with almost no curves or 'excess' flesh by Mother Nature, even her reasonably modest implants looked outsized on her narrow, thin frame. The small, conical breasts she'd probably be originally gifted with was what the mind expected to see on a body of her build, and so the breasts, unnaturally round, looked far bigger than the full 'C'-cup they probably were - though they might have even been a 'D', though it was hard to judge accurately, since she'd further emphasized her cleavage with a push-up bra that put most of that mass right up top and together. Between all her breast-flesh being pushed right into the displayed cleavage, and the black blouse sort of hiding the fact that there wasn't an equal amount of breast-flesh below the neckline, you had to get about as close to her as Jim was to really tell that she was almost desperately over-emphasizing her implanted bust.

Still, it was a fairly nice view, all things considered, and Jim didn't mind peering, unnoticed - until they neared the first jewelry store Jim had cased, and his heart-rate tripled as he waited to see whether or not his assumptions were correct.

They were. Even as he watched with breathless excitement, the woman's step slowed as she glanced at the narrow, thick 'armored' glass window that displayed an array of diamond jewelry.

She turned towards the display, walking up to practically press her face against the glass, and Jim congratulated himself. Just like he'd figured, she couldn't help but stop and stare at the display.

After a long, long moment, she turned away from the display and slowly began moving across the store-front.

"Yes!" Jim shouted, pumping a fist in the air as he dove to the window, thrust his arm through the insubstantial 'unbreakable' glass...

...and felt his hand pass right through the jewelry.

"Shit!" Jim cursed, swiping uselessly at the jewelry he couldn't touch. It had just taken 'too long', and her attention had faded to the point that he couldn't interact with the jewelry anymore.

He turned and glanced at his unsuspecting 'partner' - and saw her approaching the matching display window on the other side of the main entrance.

Jim hurried over to where she stood - then stopped, muttering to himself as her position practically took up the entire window. He edged in closer, trying to be in position to swipe the jewels as soon as she turned away...

...then found himself unintentionally sliding right into the position she was occupying.

Though 'aware' of herself, she wasn't really looking at herself, or paying attention to herself - and so, she was as 'insubstantial' as the jewels had been. Grinning to himself, 'inside' her body, Jim waited for her to finish gazing longingly at the diamond-edged emerald jewelry displayed in this window - then, chuckling, took the opportunity to look down, getting a view of her cleavage that would have been otherwise impossible.

He was staring down at her tits when they suddenly 'lit up' - and became bigger. Quite a bit bigger.

Hell - they got downright huge...!

Stunned, Jim stared down at the breasts now filling out her top, each as big and as round as a ripe cantaloupe - and then he jerked his head to the side, chuckling again as he saw the young man a short distance away, staring at the redhead.

The oversized, silicone-pumped tits he'd been looking down at were the young man's perception of what the red-heads breasts looked like, and 'overlap' just like with the cop car he'd seen earlier.

Jim felt the woman start to shift, obviously done dreaming about jewelry she couldn't afford, and Jim prepared to make his 'grab' - and, out of the corner of his eye, noticed the young man quickly look away so that he wouldn't be caught staring at a woman's tits...

...and, even as Jim made his grab for the jewelry, he felt the strangest 'tearing' sensation. It wasn't painful, and there wasn't a tearing sound - but it was the closest he could come to describing what it felt like.

Stumbling back from the window, his hastily-grabbed ill-gotten gains in hand, he jerked his head down to look at his chest, where the strange sensation had come from...

"Holy shit!" He screamed hysterically, dropping his just-gained booty to the ground in shock, his hands freed to rise up to his chest and cradle the new additions beneath his suddenly straining shirt: "I've got... tits!"

He did, indeed - the massive, cantaloupe-sized breasts the young man had thought he'd seen on the red-head. Jim had 'stolen' them.

Even as he staggered in shock, hands trying in vain to push the massive, artificially round tits back into his ribcage, he realized what had happened. With the man's attention diverted, the perceived breasts had been in that perfect state between reality and non-existence... and when the woman had 'stepped out' of him, the perceived tits had become his.

Knowing how it had happened didn't help Jim's stunned, shocked and horrified state of mind, though - because it didn't help him figure out how to get rid of them.

"No..!" He gasped, hands still grasping the big new bust lurking behind his shirt - and then he let go, suddenly conscious of the sensations that came from 'playing' with his firm, round new unwanted attributes. "No, I... I can't have boobs!"

It was a statement of desire, not fact - though as shadow and 'unreal' as this subjective universe may be, there was no doubt that he did, in fact, have tits.

Big tits.

Big, round tits.

Big, round, fake tits.

Tits that he very desperately wanted to get rid of...

...but that didn't stop him from lifting shaking hands, unclasping the shoulder straps of his once-baggy overalls, and letting the 'bib' flop down around his waist so that he could pull up his now-straining black turtleneck shirt and see the new breasts thrust roundly and proudly from his chest.

They were huge.

They were firm.

They were smooth.

They were... slightly incandescent.

No, that wasn't true. They were imbued with more 'thereness', in this strange and altered universe. They were slightly more real than the rest of him.

"Holy shit..." He gasped, again, hesitantly touching one large, firm nipple - then hurriedly yanking the shirt back down over the firm globes of sensitive flesh, pulling the bib back up and reclasping it.

His own perceptions couldn't alter reality, but those of other people could - and, because of that, the mere 'memory' of the breasts, both from the red-head whose smaller breasts they 'really' were, and the man who's perception of them had made them so large, also served to make them somewhat more 'real' than the rest of him. He really, really had to get rid of them - and fast.

Not because speed mattered in any great scheme of things - but because touching them, both the initial hard grasp and the light, hesitant touches afterwards, had been disturbingly pleasant - and Jim didn't want to think that himself possessing any feminine attribute, especially one so noticeable, could in any way be enjoyable.

Redressed, he looked around, trying to figure out the best way to 'hand off' these tits to somebody else - and thought of the strip club he'd seen on his canvass of the area. He took off in that direction, nearly running...

...then slowed almost immediately back down to a walk as his huge new tits began bouncing and swaying outrageously with every step. Even at the slower pace, they shifted and jiggled with every single step he took, constant and inarguable reminders that he now possessed a very visible feminine attribute - even if he was the only one who could see them.

Shortly, Jim found himself standing outside the door of the strip club, one of the few businesses still open at this hour. Out of instinct, he reached out to open the door - then, mentally kicking himself, he took a deep breath and simply stepped through it.

It was intangible - except for his new breasts, which felt the slightest resistance as he passed through the ghostly door, almost the way it felt to walk through a cobweb, further verifying that they were more 'real' than the rest of him.

Shaking off the strange feeling and trying - and failing - to ignore the very weight and mass of his new tits, he looked around the darkened interior, trying to spot a likely candidate.

It wasn't easy - because they kept changing. As different men looked at the different women, their forms shuddered and shifted, altering due to the perceptions of those who were viewing them.

Picking an out of the way corner, Jim began surveying the selection of women, not looking for one whose chest measurements closely matched the unwanted one he now sported, but for a woman who was perceived by at least one man to match his new dimensions.

At last, he spotted a likely candidate - a buxom bottle blonde who, whenever walking through the 'cone' of a certain man in a booth, grew endowments nearly identical to the ones he himself now unwillingly sported. If he timed this right, he should be able to 'merge' with her and, when the perfect moment happened, she'd get the breasts he'd unwillingly 'stolen' from the red-head.

Taking a deep breath, he moved around the other women, waitresses and strippers, who were 'working the floor', taking up position directly behind the woman he'd chosen, ankling along in her high-heeled boots. He followed her, waiting for her to walk past the right booth - and sure enough, the man's glance on her momentarily inflated her own silicone mounds to match Jim's own. He threw himself forward...

...and cursed as he saw the man's attention fade, to be replaced by another man's perceptual 'spotlight'.

Jim had no time to register what it was the other man thought he saw. Already in motion, Jim couldn't stop himself, and he 'passed through' the stripper, feeling that strange tearing sensation gain- but not on his chest.

Stumbling out in front of the stripper, Jim didn't have to guess what the other man's perceptions had seen. He was trying to cope with them, staggering across the floor in a desperate bid to maintain his balance atop the ridiculously high, slender heels and towering platforms of the boots that now encased his feet - and his legs, up to the thighs.

Staggering across the room in the slender, skyscraper heels, too busy to even deal with the long, silky hair flapping around his face, Jim reached for the wall to brace himself...

...and, instead, went through it.

Slowly.

The resistance was much greater, and he didn't plunge through the wall as if it wasn't there, but as if it were made of molasses, sinking through it.

Halfway through, he suddenly paused - but not because of anything he'd done. Even as Jim's stunned mind tried to wrap itself around the knowledge that he was wearing high-heeled black leather boots and, from all indications, the proud owner of a new head of hair, one of the half-drunken patrons of the club looked in his direction - then stopped, staring at the point at the wall where Jim was halfway through, frowning.

Jim's body 'lit up'. Not nearly as brightly as the other women in the club, but certainly more than it should have with him being 'out of phase'. More of the attributes he'd unwillingly gained were 'real', and this attention of something the guy was noticing without quite being able to make it out made them even more real, too much so to allow him to continue passing through the wall...

...and then the man shrugged and turned away, and Jim finished slowly falling through the wall, letting him end up on the other side. He was in a bathroom.

Unable to successfully lean against anything for support, Jim cursed himself as he battled to stay upright in the nine-inch heels of the platform boots - then cursed himself anew, out loud, as he suddenly realized that the thing that had started his woes, stepping into the redhead to be positioned to grab the loot, needn't have happened. He could have grabbed through the wall as well as the window, if he'd bothered to think about it - just as he hadn't needed to use the front door of the club to enter. His old 'real world' habits were...

"The fuckin' loot!" Jim yelled, wide-eyed, as he suddenly realized that, in the shock of everything that was happening, he'd just simply walked away from several thousand dollars worth of gold, diamonds and emeralds.

"Shit, shit, shit!" Jim berated himself, unable to believe how badly wrong everything was going - as he sighed and took stock of his worsened situation.

Aside from the more obvious thigh-high platform boots, he'd also 'stolen' a huge, bouffant mass of brassy blonde hair. The stripper's hair had been big - but Jim's was now huge, and not 'fake', with dark roots.

Also, a had look at the very faint reflection he now cast in the mirror revealed he'd also 'stolen' the over-done make-up scheme that the man had perceived on the unnamed stripper, leaving his lips dark gloss red, his eyes with a dark blue shadow and long, thick lashed, with plenty of rouge on the cheeks of his newly-pale face.

The changes didn't end there, though. His once-baggy denim bib overalls had become a sort of short jumper suit. The legs now ended just inside the flared tops of the high leather boots, and lay tight against his upper thighs, hips and ass to allow that to happen which meant it was now tight all over, as it's previously baggy top had been strained by his new tits.

"Shit..." Jim sighed, looking at the ridiculous figure he made, dressed all in black with huge tits and huge, blonde hair, all balance on high, slender heels - the most stereotypical 'drag queen' you might ever want to imagine.

He looked around the bathroom - and noticed the lack of urinals.

The thought that he'd ended up in the women's bathroom only made what had happened to him seem all the worse...

...and then the door to the bathroom began to swing open.

Jim felt panic hit him at the thought of being caught in the ladies' room - and then he shook his head and reminded himself that he was 'invisible'...

...only, he wasn't, quite.

Not anymore.

The stripper who entered the bathroom that was attached directly to the changing room was midway through getting undressed, pulling off a translucent white shirt that was part of her outfit. Though it's material, she thought she saw somebody in the bathroom - not really so much a sight, as the impression of high-heeled boots, big breasts, and a huge head of golden hair.

There was only one stripper who met that criteria. If the woman who'd entered the bathroom stopped to look harder, she would have noticed that this person didn't look like that other stripper all that much, more like a guy in drag - assuming, of course, she hadn't fainted at realizing that the apparition was mostly transparent, ghostly rather than substantial.

Also, she would have had to notice either of those facts incredible quickly - because, the instant the faint form through the fabric registered on her, it was changing to match her perception of what she thought she was seeing.

"Hey, Candy...!" She called, causally, stepping into one of the stalls as she finished pulling off her shirt. There was no answer.

That in and of itself didn't immediately cause any distress> Since she'd seen 'Candy' at the mirror, the stripper assumed she was touching up her lipstick. When no answer came a minute later, however, she stuck her head out of the stall...

...and blinked in confusion.

Though the always-noticeable sound of the noisy door being opened or closed hadn't echoed through the acoustically reflective room, the bathroom was empty.

* * * * *

A horrified expression on her face, the huge-breasted woman oh-so-slowly oozed her way out of the wall, into the darkness of the alley beside the strip-club.

She was tall and slender, but with overstated curves - wide hips and full ass separated from the massive bust-line by a slender waist. Framed by a huge head of hair, her face was pretty enough, beneath it's heavy layers of make-up - but it was a face cast in lines of horrified disgust, and not a little fear.

A theoretical observer would have been either stunned or amused to watch this woman grasp at the skin-tight black spandex crotch of the bodysuit molded to her obviously surgically enhanced figure and scream: "Oh, shit - I'm a broad!"

Even more amazing would have been the voice it came out in. Oh, it fit the body well enough, being feminine to no end - but it was a weak, flat-sounding voice, as lacking in substance as... well, as her ghostly, half-transparent body.

Jim, now encased in the body the other stripper perceived her co-worker to have, staggered across the alleyway atop the ridiculously high heels, trying to come to grips with what had happened.

Since he hadn't 'stolen' anything, his body hadn't become any more real then it had been before - but that had been real enough for the other strip to mistake it as her coworker, and what ghostly 'reality' Jim did have now reflected that woman's perceptions.

Her breasts had actually shrunk slightly, to match the other woman's more accurate perceptions. After all, as a sort of expert, the stripper had known Candy had FFF-cup implanted breasts, and that's what the new woman Jim had unwillingly become also boasted. Likewise, her hair - now even more obviously bottle-blond then the real stripper's - was more in keeping with the lesser - but still 'big' - hair of the real stripper.

None of that was what you could call reassuring - because more than anything else, Jim was unmanned by being unmanned. The tits had been bad, the hair and make-up and heels worse - but that had been an dealing with feminine things.

Now, Jim was 'all woman' - and a lot of it.

"Oh, god.. no..." She sobbed, staggering down the alley, mind spinning.

She'd had a plan to get rid of the initial tits - a plan that had gone horribly, horrendously wrong, but a plan. How the hell did you 'hand off' a gender, though?

It wouldn't be easy, and until she managed the difficult feat, the truth was harsh:

Jim was stuck with being a woman.

Maybe, more accurately, a female ghost - because that was what she was, not quite real, but no longer completely unreal, either. None of the advantages of either state, and all of the disadvantages.

The worst of both worlds.

Shivering at the undeniably feminine sensations coming through his altered body's new nervous system, Jim staggered towards the end of the alley, feeling the strange way her wider hips swiveled and swayed, the bounce and shift of her big tits, the sweep of hair across her slender neck - and sobbed again, the very fact of her new gender seemingly intruding deliberately upon her, forcing her to notice everything feminine about her new form and figure.

Like a ghost, she began haunting the dark alleys, the hidden highways and byways of the city's underground, searching, always searching.

She needed to find somebody who was perceived as having similar appearances to her own - but was, or was perceived to be, male. A perfect replica of her new form would be best, as it would exactly 'cancel out' her new body - but, that being unlikely, the closer to what she now looked like was better.

It wouldn't do to just find a 'real' man, and use him - because she couldn't 'steal' his gender. She needed somebody who was - or was perceived to be - male, with feminine costuming, so that when she stole that perception, she would be a man with feminine costuming that she could take off. For example, find a guy in drag with smaller 'tits' than hers, and she could 'steal' that - but taking off what had been perceived-as-and-would-then-be a padded bra would leave the then-him with endowments equal to the size of the discrepancy. She-who-would-be-a-he would have only stolen however many cup-sizes of 'padded bra' as the cross-dresser was perceived to have.

The most likely even at finding a cross-dresser would leave Jim looking fairly feminine, with wider hips than Jim had once had, and a pair of breast implants - but Jim would be a feminine-looking man, and that was a hell of a start.

The problem was - Jim didn't know a damned thing about the transsexual community in the city - or even if there was one. He'd never given it any thought - but now, that's exactly what she needed to regain her masculinity.

So, she searched. She searched for a cross-dresser or pre-op (or perceived as pre-op) person whose perceived masculinity-in- feminine-disguise she could steal and make real - but the search, hard as it was, was made only harder by the fact that she couldn't let her ghostly self be seen, for fear of more changes happening to her, changes that might make the situation worse.

That's not how she saw it, of course. Given the course of her night so far, it wasn't the least bit surprising that the newly-feminine Jim had become paranoid. Struggling to master walking in impossibly high heels, she felt as if the universe itself were out to get her, and if she made any mistake at all, Murphy's Law would make things all the worse for her.

Slowly, literally painfully as she dealt with the weight of her new bust and the effects of her new heels, the female ghost roamed the city, seeking salvation.

It wasn't to be found, not that night at least.

Though she'd found a couple of closed stores that looked like they might cater to the right people, and some posters on walls and lampposts that indicated there was a transsexual community in the city, she hadn't found what she needed by the time the sun began to rise on the horizon - rise, and banish shadows she so desperately needed for concealment.

The thought of being caught out in the open, where anybody's perceptions could change her - for the worse, she was sure - she fled, fled in desperation, still searching. Now, however, she was searching for sanctuary, a place to hide from the revealing light of day until she could resume her search under the cloak of darkness.

As the city stirred and began to come to life, the unwillingly feminine ghost fled to the hopeful safety of sprawling old Victorian mansion, long since chopped up to be made into four modest-sized apartments.

There were two apartments on each the first and second floor, and the basement was a communal room - but the attic showed little sign of ever being visited, with no working lights and plenty of dust and cobwebs. Best of all, the small apartments tended to be used by transient tenants, meaning dozens of people had passed through the house and still retained memories of it - enough that it remained real and tangible to her, unlike the mostly forgettable walls of the strip club she'd 'fallen' through.

As thin gray light soaked in through the dust-covered windows in the attic of the old building, Jim curled up in a corner - and, no longer running and searching, was forced to confront her new form even more directly than at any point since the horrendous realization that she'd become female.

To the rest of the world, her new body was ghostly - but to her, herself, it was all too real and solid, and she shuddered as she hesitantly ran slender new long-nailed hands over her abundant curves. Curves that she'd never once wanted - but were now hers.

A firm, full ass, just perfect for her build - but feeling ridiculously huge to her even as she sat on it. Huge, much too sensitive tits that seemed insistent on making themselves known, always moving and jiggling and shivering and shaking. Even holding 'perfectly still', their firm spherical mass shivered slightly with each breath she took.

A waist that seemed impossibly slender, like she should snap in half from the top-heavy weight of her new bust - but with hips womanly-wide enough to counterbalance that mass.

Fine, delicate bone structure that seemed so fragile to support her own weight.

Hands and feet that seemed so tiny - especially the feet, aching from her unwanted, enforced lesson in walking in high heels.

The massive head of hair, a constant source of annoyance, always having to be patted back into place to keep it from running rampant and obscuring her view.

In fact, everything about being female seemed incredibly high-maintenance and intrusive.

As a man, Jim had always been at least subliminally aware of his manhood, because of its vulnerability to pain and the fact that it seemed to get in the way all the time. Oh, he'd never thought of it that way, of course, but as a woman she realized that was why she'd always been so aware of it: of how it might react to an attractive woman in a public place, of how it was sitting as he'd walked or moved or sat. Little adjustments through the day, making sure never to inadvertently put painful pressure on his cock or balls.

That, however, paled in comparison to being female. Every part of her seemed to demand that same minute-by-minute attention, or at least acknowledgment of its existence. Hair and hands and hips and ass. Cunt and tits and feet and legs. The way they moved, the way they felt, also elbowing in to her mind, especially since she had to coordinate it all to be able to remaining upright atop the slender heels - and that was all without the added handicap of 'acting' female, like a real woman would have to do in public. Jim could be graceless, could be 'ugly' in movement or pose - but she could never ignore this new body, not for a second.

Dimly, despite his best efforts not to, Jim unwillingly began to understand women better.

She didn't want to. Not because she was female, but because Jim had never cared to 'understand' women, mentally placing them in a slot for an 'inferior species' and letting it go at that. Now, however, a lot of their foibles and 'annoying habits' were not only beginning to become understandable - but, in some cases, actually make sense.

When you were so aware of your own body, for example, how could you help but be 'obsessed' with how you looked? As a man, Jim had rarely taken more than fifteen minutes to get ready to go out to anything, formal or not - but, dimly, as a woman she could understand why a woman would be a lot more conscious of her own appearance...

...and she didn't want to understand that.

Thankfully, after a long night, Jim had an easy solution. She might not be able to sate her stomach - but she could handle her exhaustion.

She went to sleep - and her last thought before falling into the welcome darkness was a wry amusement at the thought that she was a hungry ghost...

* * * * *

Jim sighed, rolled over, and opened her eyes...

...and started, the sensation coming from 'his' body overcoming the blissfully oblivion of sleep and reminding her of her feminine status...

...and started even more sharply as she found that same, feminine body being observed by a grave-looking little girl sitting cross-legged in the center of the attic floor.

"Hello." The girl said, her voice calm. "I'm Carrie." Jim only continued to gape at the girl.

She looked to be fourteen or so - but Jim had never really acquired a good gauge for guessing girls' ages, so he couldn't be sure. Dressed in a faded but well-mended floral-print dress, she was pale, with a dirt-smudged face and brown hair busily working itself out of the bright-colored barrettes meant to hold it back.

All in all, the perfect picture of a young girl a little more adventurous than her mother might have wished.

The type of girl, in fact, who might like to make her own private 'place' in the neat, strange attic of their new apartment building... "What's your name?" The girl - Carrie - asked, apparently unworried at finding a semi-transparent woman in the attic.

"Jim..." She replied, without even really thinking about it, a distracted answer while she looked past Carrie - to her own reflection in the dusty mirror behind her.

She'd changed.

It had to have been Carrie's perceptions of her that did it. Jim was still female, and still buxom - but there were things that weren't the same as they'd been last night.

Altogether, the changes added up to a look of a person who'd somehow stepped through time.

The boots, though still thigh-high and leather, with high heels, had changed into a low-gloss supple leather with eyes-and-laces up the front and a more shaped heel. In fact, they looked like thigh-high platform versions of 'Granny boots' - which went along with the white lace trim that had appeared at the cuffs and neckline of her new black-linen blouse, buttoned up the front.

A front that strained tautly over her still-large breasts, but now they were held in the firm grip of a bra that punched them out in that 'bullet' shape seen in some older photos.

Bullet-shaped breasts now made all the more prominent by the black leather corset now tightly wrapped around her waist.

Her hair, now a more natural shade of blonde, was still 'big' - but in an older, more elaborate bun-like style rather than a bouffant, and her make-up was less garish on a more classically beautiful face with softer, milkier skin.

"Were you sleeping, Ginny?" Carrie asked. "I didn't know ghosts slept."

That pulled Jim's attention back to the young girl, realizing that the 'old-fashioned' look came from the fact Carrie imagined she'd died a long time ago, which had influenced her perceptions of the clothes...

...as well as, with certain understandable assumptions, her perception of the name she'd been given in the vague, distracted tone.

"I'm Ginny." Jim tried to correct the girl - only to have the name emerge exactly as Carrie perceived it, making Jim-Ginny grimace, then sigh.

Compared to everything else, a 'name change' was small potatoes...

"You... didn't tell anybody about me, did you?" She asked, frightened at the prospect of an adult appearing - and further altering her. Carrie solemnly shook her head.

"No. Momma says there aren't any such things as ghosts." Carrie said, seriously. "I don't want to upset her by showing her she's wrong."

In other circumstances, Jim-Ginny would have laughed. As it was, she simply sighed in relief. "Does being dead hurt?" Carrie asked.

Jim-Ginny blinked.

"Sometimes." She said, slowly. "Mostly, though, it's lonely and frightening, and makes you very, very unhappy." "Oh." Carrie said, nodding. "Well, you don't have to be lonely anymore, Ginny. I'll be your friend."

Starting to wonder if she'd really woken up, or if this was all some sort of bizarre dream, Jim-Ginny forced a smile.

"Thanks, but I'm not going to be here long." She said, looking at the window, where darkness was starting to descend. She'd slept almost right through to sunset. "I have to go out once it's dark."

"Don't you have to stay here?" Carrie asked, frowning. "I thought ghosts had to stay with their houses..."

"Some do..." Jim-Ginny replied, off-the-cuff. "Others have to go specific places, traveling only at night. This.. it's like a ghost hotel, and I have to leave."

"Oh." Carrie said, nodding as if it all made perfect sense. "Okay."

Gritting ghostly teeth, Jim-Ginny prepared to handle the ordeal of balancing yet again in high heels...

...and rose smoothly and with feminine grace to her feet.

She blinked - then realized that Carrie's perceptions had done this.

Though the thought of moving like a 'real' woman was distasteful, Jim-Ginny couldn't help but admit that it beat the hell out of stumbling around awkwardly in heels, so she forced another smile at Carrie, biting back the curses that had risen instinctively in her throat.

"I have to go now, Carrie." She told the young girl.

"Okay, Ginny." Carrie replied, seriously. "I hope you get where you're supposed to go..."

The young woman uncurled from her spot on the ground, and headed off, throwing a look back over her shoulder as she headed for the stairs...

...and Jim-Ginny mentally shrugged, and decided to give the girl a thrill. Walking over to the spot on the wall where she'd entered the night before, she 'leaned'.

Though the floors - or, rather the ceilings of the rooms below - might have been 'memorized' enough to make then minimally solid to her, the walls of the rarely-visited attic weren't - and she slowly slipped right through, ending up on the rickety catwalk outside.

Quickly, before anybody could spot her, Jim-Ginny descended to the ground and lost herself in the shadows, moving with that supple feminine grace Carrie had unwittingly 'cursed' her with.

She picked up her search for a suitable 'gender donor', and for the next four hours slowly trailed the signs and spoors of the transsexual community - until, finally, she slunk into a dark alleyway, heading for a club known to be frequented by transsexuals of every stripe, almost any one of which would enact her reversion to a nominally male status.

Heart pounding in eager anticipation behind her voluminous breasts, she approached the club...

...then stopped at the end of the alley and looked around, frowning.

The club was in an old converted warehouse - but it wasn't the only one. The warehouse had been subdivided up by its owner into several 'specialty' clubs - and, in the interest of privacy, none of them were advertised.

She carefully considered. The idea of checking out each of the clubs was out of the question - but she didn't want to simply stand here and wait for the right 'type' of person to come by, either. She wanted to get back to being male as soon as possible.

There was a window set into the wall near one of the doors, sort of high, but apparently clear. Walking over to it, she grimaced in distaste - then pushed her leg forward and began 'sinking into' the pile of black plastic garbage bags piled in front of the window. Obviously, the spot to dump the clubs garbage was designed to stop your casual peeping tom, since it was too loose to climb up on, and too bulky to let you get close to the window - but, five minutes later, she'd almost overcome that simple system, her lower half 'merged' with the garbage as she prepared to look in the window...

...and then the brick wall around her 'lit up' in the spotlight of somebody's perception - and she jolted, rocked as she felt the change hit her.

She'd just 'absorbed' the garbage bags, 'stealing' their mass - and making herself fully real in this strange reality as she tried to cope with the attendant changes to her body.

"Well, well..." A deep, male voice said. "What have we here? Turn around, and let me get a look at you..."

She twitched at the sound of his voice - and, somehow, that twitch turned into a motion that turned her completely around, because that was exactly what the man speaking thought she was doing.

Since that's what he thought she was doing, that's what she did. While she tried to wrap her mind around the fact that a man's perceptions could even effect her actions, she was also busy trying to cope with the changes that had come over her.

The man facing her was a massive mountain of a man, bulging with muscles - and emitting an unearthly radiance that seemed to light his tight-fitting leather pants and vest with an inner light. Almost distractedly, she realized that this wasn't really how the man appeared, except to himself - and that he had an unusually strong 'sense of self', making him more-real-then-real, at least to somebody in her phase state.

That, however, was all secondary to trying to come with what his perceptions of her had done...

The boots she was balanced in were still thigh high, and still leather - but now they were 'ballet boots', incredibly sharply angled to leave her balanced on 'en Pointe', on the very tip of her toes, held up by the impossibly high, slender heels of the boots.

The corset also remained, tighter then ever, but the 'blouse' was now a gleaming black PVC garment molding itself to her figure - and the 'white lace' Carrie had given it had become white leather cuffs around each wrist and around her neck, sporting big metal 'O'- rings.

In short, she was now clothed in a sexual fetish outfit - one that was purposefully designed to encase, enhance, and enslave her female form.

Her breasts had grown even more massive, now looking like a pair of flesh volley-balls thrust from her chest, supported by the huge, built-in cups the corset had gained - which only covered the lower portion of her mostly-exposed breasts, from just below her newly- massive nipples on down.

Nipples that now each sported a big, silver ring piercing them, with a length of matching chain that ran from nipple-ring to nipple-ring - and then on to each wrist. Another chain went from the 'O' ring on the front of her collar to each nipple-ring, and a final chain joined the 'O'-rings attached to leather loops on the ankle of each impossible high-heeled boot.

More silver 'O's formed her earrings, dangling below her still-elaborate mass of now platinum-blond hair, restrained and shaped by a length of silver chain woven into the style, encircling and holding back the big, loose bun on her head before finally connecting to the 'O' ring at the back of her neck-collar.

In short, she now looked every inch the female fetish sex slave the man had perceived her to be...

...and, with his extraordinarily strong belief in his own perception, she was every inch that woman, his sheer force of will about how he expected her to act forcing her to do just that.

"My, my..." The massive man breathed, a hint of reverence in his voice. "Finally, all my patience is rewarded. Sheer perfection..."

To say that his presence, perceptions and reactions were unnerving was an understatement. Trapped in her newly fetish-fied body, highly aware of how much she was fighting the top-heavy mass of her gigantic, globular new tits to balance in the impossibly high, slender heels, the unwilling woman was damned near in a panic - but she couldn't show it, because every single attempt to do anything at all was 'perverted' by the man's perceptions of her intents.

Which was why her attempt to run, screaming, into then night instead became her striking a sexily submissive pose, lowering her head to look up at him through long, luscious lashes - as she smiled provocatively at his compliment.

She hadn't meant too, of course - it was her attempt to scream that had become the provocative, 'submissively' proud smile she now directed at him.

"...and unclaimed, too..." The man said, reaching into his back pocket - and emerging with a long, black leather leash, which he proceeded to clip to the 'O' ring on her neck collar.

"The safe word is 'Balsa'..." He whispered, as he clipped the symbol of mastery onto her. What followed for the next fourteen hours was pure nightmare.

Submissively, unable to break the unbelievably self-assured man's beliefs about her, she was led into the club, sissy-stepping obediently behind her new master. In the dimly-lit club, lit mostly with strobes and the occasional red- or white-light spilling out the briefly opened doors of private rooms, she was led across the main floor of the club. She felt her body trying to reshape itself to the perceptions of all the mostly leather-clad patrons of the BDSM club - but her unnamed new master's unwavering self-assurance kept her locked into the form he'd given her, and it was in that form she remained as she was led into one of the private rooms.

Desperately, locked inside her own body, she struggled to escape, to say or do something to keep this from happening - but the man's force of will was too strong for her. Trapped in a universe where other's ideas and thoughts formed her world, she was exactly what he expected her to be - and he expected her to be obediently submissive.

Actually, since this was a sexual fetish, he expected her to be 'secretly' enjoying being used as a living sex toy, and she gave off tiny hints behind her submissive silence that she was really enjoying this - but they were all lies.

Not even the man's perceptions could alter her mind. It was 'merely' her actions, forcing her to unwillingly pretend to be secretly enjoying this, aroused by this, wanting this, that made it look like this was her chosen enslavement as he led her to the complicated arrangement of bars, pads and chains in the center of the black-and-red leather room.

She 'willingly' let herself be placed in this apparatus. The chains were all removed from her, and she was instead clipped into the machine by the 'O'-rings at her neck, wrists, ankles, and waist. Once firmly locked in, unable to move, the massive man began manipulating the apparatus, which was designed to put her into absolutely any position he wanted her in.

Horried by what was happening, she expected him to have sex with her - but he didn't, not yet. No, his kink required some 'lead up' - and involved being her 'master' as he pandered her off for use.

Over the hours that followed, she was used in every conceivable way, by both men and women alike. She could - and did - scream of them to stop.

When they lowered her into position in front of the other woman's bare crotch, she begged not to be forced to do this - right up until the woman's thighs closed around her head, and she had to lick pussy or suffocate.

She begged not to have to suck the cock that was brought before her - and all she got for her pains was a load of thick, warm, disgusting cum pumped down her throat.

She screamed when she saw the massive dildo the dominatrix strapped into place - and screamed again when it filled her wet, tight new womanhood.

She screamed, she begged, and she pleaded - but that was exactly what these men and women wanted to hear, and it only aroused them all the more.

Not once, no matter how desperately she tried, could she make herself say the safe word. It just wouldn't emerge - because her 'master' wasn't expecting it too.

By hour eight, she was no longer begging and screaming any more. She wasn't sobbing or crying or even whimpering. She was barely even aware.

Still the endless parade of users came, and still she was given cock in any orifice at all. She was tit-fucked and ass-fucked. She took it up the cunt, and down the throat. She got dildoad and double-teamed. She was fondled and squeezed and rubbed and stroked.

She gave handjobs and blowjobs. She responded, almost mechanically, benumbed. Her mind began to wander in the never-ending orgy of sex, and though her horror and disgust remained constant, things seemed to grow distant and hazy. She lost all sense of time, and just barely managed to keep from losing all sense of self, descending into a deep fog where only her own horror reminded her that she hadn't been doing this for all eternity, and that this wasn't her purpose in life, and her unending future.

It went on, and on, and on...

...and then, some fourteen hours after it had started, her dazed mind slowly began coming out of its fog, something managing to have captured her attention.

Even as her body jiggled and swayed from the faceless man fucking her from behind, she focused on the leather-clad man standing by the head of the apparatus, enjoying the sight.

It was her 'master'... and yet it wasn't.

Same basic appearance - but 'less so'. Not so exaggerated. More...

...real...

She stared at him, a frown of confusion on her face, only barely aware of her own orgasm as the man finished fucking her - and then, like a hammer blow, it struck her.

"Balsa." She said in a numb, vague - but clear and coherent - voice, a dribble of some man's cum dripping from her lips.

Immediately, the leather-clad man held up a hand - and, less than two minutes later, she was being helped to her ridiculously high-heeled feet by men - and a couple of women - who, 'fantasy' over, were thanking her for such a wonderful 'performance'.

"No problem..." She replied in that numb tone of voice, looking around her with a dazed expression. "Glad you enjoyed it..."

She walked over to her 'master' and lightly drew her hand over his arm - no longer radically proportioned, just the arm of a masculine man in leather.

"I'm John - John Stevens." He introduced himself, holding out his hand as if this were.. well, if this were completely normal. "Ginny..." She said, vaguely, making no move to take his hand, just staring at him.

His smile flickered.

"Can I give you a ride home, or anything, Ginny?" He asked. "Sure." She replied, blankly.

The polite smile was completely gone a half hour later, replaced by a look of concern - because, upon arriving at 'Ginny's' apartment, it turned out that she not only didn't have a key, but neither super nor the other tenants knew a woman who was most definitely memorable...

...even if you didn't factor in her behavior as her strange numbness had faded away.

She huddled against the wall of the building she'd claimed was her apartment building, staring at him wide-eyed and shying away whenever he made a move to come near her. Her hands trembled, as did her voice, and there was a look of fear - and near horror - distorting her gorgeous face.

She wouldn't let him - let anybody - near her, and the suggestion that she go to the police or hospital nearly threw her into a panic, making him back down. Now seriously concerned about the woman so different in spirit then the one he'd met last night, John found the best he could do was give her some money - actually, leave it in the pocket of the overcoat he lay on the ground, back away, and let her snatch it up like a dog afraid of being kicked. Wrapping the long coat around her supple, buxom form, she hurried away from him with eerie grace atop heels John had only ever seen a few women able to manage to walk in, and in halting, oh-so-careful steps at that. He had to dangle the prospect of free 'room and board' at a hotel to convince her to climb back into the very same car she'd numbly entered willingly at the club, and at that she hunched in the corner of the back seat while he drove her to one of the mid-scale hotels.

John paid for the room with his credit card - then led her, at a 'safe distance', to the room and let her in - and she got barely close enough to him to snatch the key from his hand, dart into the room, and close and lock the door behind her.

Shaking his head, more deeply worried than before, John went back to the front desk and made sure that anything she wanted would be put on his credit card - and vowed, should she still be living in the hotel a week from now, he'd have to do something.

Independently wealthy, it wasn't a question of the expense - if this went on for a week, he was going to get at least a psychiatrist to talk to her, even if all she'd allow was for it to be done over the phone.

He was a man of drive and vision, who'd built up his own little corporate empire out of nothing. He was self-assured and competent, and he thought he had a great understanding of people - which was why seeing this woman, so obvious 'broken' in some way, after all he'd assumed about her the night before disturbed him so deeply.

If he'd misjudged her so badly the night before, what he'd thought was a shared source of pleasure, a willing fantasy, might have hurt her all the more deeply - and if he'd in some way caused this 'kicked puppy' syndrome, or 'simply' made it worse, he'd have to find some way to make it better...

* * * *

Still sopping wet from the nearly obsessive scrubbing shower she'd taken almost immediately after closing the door to her room, Ginny huddled on the bed, shivering from more than just the cool air on her damp skin.

She was a woman.

She was a real woman.

She was a 'real' real woman.

At some point during last night's orgy, she'd been pumped full of enough cum that the balance had shifted, pulling her back 'into phase' - and into the real world.

She was safe from random changes based on people's perception of her - but that meant she was also 'safe' from getting her old, male body back...

...for a while.

Her body was only 'in phase' because of a form of life that pulled her into the objective world it originated in. In either world, subjective or objective, nobody could just 'make' life - it was something outside of perception or control, something that either existed, or didn't.

There was only one substance that would keep her 'in phase' - and only if she got enough of it on a daily basis, still 'warm and wriggling'.

Cum.

If she took in enough cum, she'd stay 'in phase'.

Unable to every try and become male again- but safe from a state of perception where things had only gone from bad, to worse, to horrific.

She lay on the bed, shivering - and desperately tried to convince herself that it was worth the risk...

* * * * *

The cabby glanced in the rearview mirror - then did an almost classic double-take, jaw dropping as he surveyed the leather-clad figure reflected back in the small rectangle of silvered glass.

"Do you know the BDSM club near the harbor?" She asked, voice neutral. "The one off the alley on Johnson?" "Uh.. yeah..." The cabby agreed, nodding jerkily, eyes never leaving the mirror.

"That's where I'm going." She said, sitting back in the seat...

...and because his eyes were fixed on the massive, creamy orbs of her breasts, he completely missed the deep, haunted look in her eyes.

THE END

BACK TO FUN ZONE

SUMMARY: A gangster is blown up in his car, but is brought back to life years later as bimbo girl as part of a bazaar experiment.

Phoenix

By Gunslinger

The sky above the courthouse was gray and sullen, the bitter wind driving the low, dark clouds swiftly across the sky. But even that cold, wintery wind off the lake couldn't deter the small mob of reporters arrayed on the stone steps of the courthouse as the aged mahogany doors swung open and the tall, athletic figure in the trench coat hurried out and down the steps.

"Mister Brogan! How does it finally feel to have a guilty verdict returned after so many months?" The first reporter - a slender brunette from the local station - was the first to get a question off. She was also the only one to be heard clearly, as the other's intermingled questions obscured each other.

Max ignored the clamoring reporters, shouldering his way through, head down. The private investigator was tired of reporters of all types. Like vultures, they circled him, trying to get a quote from the enigmatic detective.

Pushing his way past the last of them, Max headed for his car, parked a short distance down the street. As he walked, shoulders hunched against the chill wind, he silently cursed the fates that had dropped this in his lap. Until a few months ago, he'd been quite happy to eke out a meager living as a private eye while he slowly drank and smoked himself to death in the evenings. Then, on a apparently simple case, trailing a man whose wife suspected infidelity, he'd witnessed a murder. But not just any murder. It had been drug-related, and in this town, when you said 'drugs', you were talking about John Escobara. It was a widely known fact that Escobara was the head of the local drug and gun running empire, but the police had never been able to pin anything on him. They'd managed to arrest and convict many of the soldiers and lieutenants in Escobara's organization, but the head man himself was careful to keep the illegal activities at arm's length, and stay safe.

Until that fateful night when Max had photographed Escobara himself pulling the trigger and ending the life of his own brother-in-law for cheating on Escobara's sister.

Max wished that someone - anyone - else had been the one there with the camera. Even Max's partner, Al, had told Max to pretend it had never happened - going up against Escobara was just too dangerous. But deep beneath the time-worn face of Max Brogan beat the heart of an honest man, and in the end Max had gone to the DA.

Ever since, he'd lived life in one safe-house after another, receiving death-threats daily. Three separate attempts on his life had been made - one much to close for comfort, as the still-healing bullet wound in his shoulder constantly reminded him. But it was over and done with, and Escobara was going away for a long, long time.

Sighing, Max unlocked the door to his '83 Cordoba and slid behind the wheel. Popping open the glove compartment, he pulled out a bottle of Johnny Walker Black Label and took a slug before returning it. Leaning forward, he inserted his key into the ignition and turned it.

His brain had only an instant to register the bright flash of light as the incendiary under his seat went off, then his world was nothing but pain as the flames filled the interior of the vehicle.

Then all was darkness, and Max Brogan knew nothing more as he fell into the beckoning darkness that reached out to grip him in it's cold, lonely embrace.

* * * * *

The first thing was not a sensation, in the normal definition. Not a smell, taste, sight, sound, or touch. Not a sense that registered in any conventional manner. It was much more elusive, yet all important - the sense of self. Although concrete concepts - who he was, or even what he was still didn't quite gel - the knowledge that he was an independent creature, separate yet part of the universe, defined him.

As it was once so elegantly stated, he thought - therefore, he was.

Then came knowledge. Not all at once, and certainly not all of it coherent. Random memories couples with flashes of thought and intuition. This brought the ability to place the sense of self he was feeling in relation to the universe at large. He was as a person, a Homo sapiens named... Max? Yes, Max Brogan...

With that came inquisitiveness - where he was, what had happened. At the thought, certain memories came forward, and he remembered the explosion, and his mind made the connection to the car bomb, and the Escobara case. But that still left a gap in his knowledge...

...which was the trigger that moved Max from the past into the present, that pushed him from thought to action. Even as the question formed in his mind, the core of his 'soul' found the strength to push against the blackness that enveloped him and Max Brogan struggled through the dark veil for the elusive light of consciousness. And as he rose, his physical senses, one by one, came to life and reported to his struggling mind.

Sound - the soft hum of air being circulated mechanically, the soft sound of fabric that indicated another occupant, the slight squeak of that unknown person's shoes on what sounded like linoleum flooring.

Smell - the harsh smell of antiseptics, the faint wisp of after-shave, and a underlying odor, not strong but invasive, of human waste.

Touch - the feel of a firm - almost hard - mattress under him. The soft, chill touch of air over a naked body that was surprisingly free of pain, but that felt awkward, unfamiliar - wrong.

Then, vision, as Max reached consciousness and his eyes fluttered open.

His head was tilted to the side, and he found himself looking at a room that was both right and wrong at the same time. Right, in that it was obviously a room at a medical facility. Wrong in that there was odd pieces of equipment, and a long, low workbench, declaring the room to be neither an operating or recover room. But that was all secondary to the slender, dark-haired young man whose back Max was seeing as the man sat peering intently into a microscope. Confused, sluggish and slightly scared, Max called to the young man.

At least, Max tried to call to the young man - his throat, feeling like it had been sanded with steel wool, was dry and tight, and his tongue lay like a dead rodent in his mouth, and no sound emerged.

Swallowing repeatedly - and wincing at the terrible taste in his mouth, Max tried again.

"Hut abbened? Air em eye?" Was what emerged - a distortion of Max's intended words, and distorted in tone, sounding muffled and wrong, too weak and high-pitched. The indecipherable words emerged in something that was barely a whisper.

The effect it had on the young man, however, was amazing.

The dark-haired youth started, literally jumping off of the stool and spinning around. The youth's eyes met Max's, and the young man emitted an incoherent gargling sound.

Max, shocked at the reaction, could only gape as the man fled from the room, his long white lab coat fluttering behind him as he dashed from the room. Max, confused, tried to sit up, but lacked the necessary strength to do so. He had to be happy with trying to work up enough saliva to lubricate his throat and mouth.

Minutes passed, and Max was beginning to worry, when the door finally swung opened, admitting a short, slender man with a face that was practically a map of Israel. A fringe of salt-and-pepper hair framed his face, and the gold-rimmed spectacles balanced on his long nose magnified his dark, expressive eyes. It was these expressive eyes that caused Max to really began to worry. Unlike the younger man, this older doctor looked eminently learned and skilled - and when those dark eyes widened in shock, the thrill of fear ran down Max's spine.

"What's going on? Where am I?" Max asked - demanded. Although his words were clear, his voice still sounded all wrong - the pitch and tone were all off.

"Oy..." The doctor breathed softly. Shaking himself, as if awakening from a trance, the doctor slowly made his way to the stool and sank onto it, his eyes never leaving Max.

"Damn it, doctor, what the hell's wrong?" Max asked, his fear making him belligerent.

Slowly the doctor removed his glasses and absently polished them with the hem of his lab coat. "Do... do you know who you are?" The doctor asked slowly.

Max hesitated - perhaps they'd expected brain damage. That might explain why they were so shocked. "Maxwell Patrick Brogan." Max replied, a little calmer. "And to save you some time - I'm forty-two, I'm in a hospital of some sort due to a car-bomb, and the date is November twenty-second, nineteen-eighty-eight. Now that you know there's no brain damage would you mind telling me what the hell is wrong with my voice?" That last was shouted as loud as the weakened detective could manage - the strange, feminine sound of his voice was driving him nuts.

The doctor swallowed audibly and replaced his glasses. "Mister Brogan..." He began awkwardly, then stopped, obviously searching for words. "My name is Dr. Farber - Ira Farber. You're in the G. N. Slinger Medical Research center... under my care, I suppose. However "

He was silent for several seconds, and Max sighed. "Yeah?"

Farber leaned forward. "Today's date is June seventh, nineteen-ninety-nine." That stopped Max cold. "I I've been in a coma for eleven years?"

Farber blinked. "It should be so simple..." he sighed, mostly to himself. "No, Mr. Brogan - You.. Well, to but it baldly, you've been legally dead for eleven years."

For several seconds it just didn't register. The concept simply refused to penetrate at first, and when it did, it was like a bomb exploding in Max's mind.

"Dead!?"

Farber looked away. "Although your heart was still functioning, you had negative brain-wave activity for twenty-four straight hours after you were admitted at the hospital. You're brain excuse me, apparently brain-dead body was then well, donated to me for medical experiments."

Max got a very, very bad feeling in the pit of his stomach. "What kind of experiments?"

Farber swallowed again. "Mr. Brogan - I'm afraid that you are now, technically speaking female."

Max gaped at the doctor, who watched Max with a nearly clinical interest. "Fe You mean I'm a woman?!" Max whispered.

"I'm afraid so, Mr Miss Brogan. For the past eleven years, your body has been used as a test-bed for several different Gender Reassignment techniques. Although you are incapable of reproduction, and lack a uterus, in all other ways you are indistinguishable from a woman - physically, hormonally, structurally I'm afraid that there is no way to undo this."

Max struggled to wrap his mind around the concept that he'd been turned into a woman. "How.. how could you?"

Farber shrugged. "You were dead. For eleven years, there has been no voluntary movement on your part, no consciousness - until know. And amazingly, no brain damage. It's amazing." Farber half- grinned. "You almost gave my student a heart attack when you spoke, my friend. Talking corpses tend to be a bit disconcerting."

Max barely heard the doctor - he was too busy trying to wrap his mind around the sudden revelations piling atop one another. Eleven years? Dead? Female? It was... it was...

Then, everything just went away. As if a curtain was rising, revealing the Holy Grail, everything else became - temporarily - unimportant as all of Max's mind focused on just one thing.

"Who?" Max demanded.

Farber blinked, nonplused. "Excuse me?"

"The car-bomb? Who did it? Did they catch him?" Max demanded.

Farber glanced away. "It was quite a news story, your death. The media followed the investigation quite closely - but no, no one was ever arrested for your murder."

Max's mind went into that cold, eminently logical mode that completely shunted aside all his worries, disgust and despair. "Doc - I'm gonna need your help."

Farber blinked. "Well - under the circumstances, just about anything I can do "

Max frowned in concentration - and a small part of his brain was happy to sense his brow wrinkling, as commanded. "I'm going to need clothing... and money... identification "

The doctor pulled out a pad and began writing things down dutifully as Max continued to reel things off.

"...and, most importantly - help getting out of this damned bed." Max finished. "If I can't get up, there's not much I'm going to be able to do."

"Yes, well - that would certainly make sense." Doctor Farber agreed. "Let me help you."

The doctor slid an arm under Max's shoulder and pushed upwards as Max struggled to right himself, all parts of his body sending signals that felt fundamentally wrong, despite the complete absence of pain.

"Here - let me wheel the mirror over. You can see what you look like." The doctor offered, after releasing Max and hovering by his side for a few seconds, making sure that Max had at least a reasonable semblance of control over his - her - new body. The little doctor then hurried over to a full- length mirror mounted on a swiveling, positional wheeled base. Moving it into position, he swung the mirror to let Max see who she now was.

"Holy crap..." Max whispered, throat suddenly dry as she stared in the mirror.

A caricature of a sexy woman stared back. One who barely looked a day over twenty.

She was tall for a man, much less for a woman, with flawless, almost artificial looking skin. Her legs were long and shapely, and her waist was almost not there at all. Her ass was absolutely mind- boggling, while her face - with it's huge blue eyes, full lips and tiny, pert nose - was a vision of 'brainless' sensuality below the mass of amazingly thick, full blonde hair.

But overshadowing all of this was her tits. Absolutely enormous, the massive, beach-ball sized globes of flesh were incredibly firm and round, with massive, thick nipples jutting from the apex. They were the most amazingly massive tits Max had ever seen - and they were hers.

The doctor also pointed out to her some other 'features' they'd used her body as a test-bed for. Like the 'permanent' make-up she was wearing. Or the modified sweat glands that now produced a mild, perfume-like scent. Or the hyper-sensitive nipples, lips, tongue and ass, as well as her large, highly- sensitized clit. Like the fact that her feet and leg muscles were 'optimized' to make walking in high- heels comfortable and easy. A hundred other 'little' changes that were tested on the body of the person who had once been forty-eight year old Max Brogan.

"Jesus, Doc..." Max said in her breathy, bimboish new voice. "You've turned me into some sort of living sex-doll."

"Well, actually - we just tested all the different procedures on your body." The doctor said, uncomfortably. "In all cases, we took them to the absolute limit, so we could see what that limit was."

"Great." Max sighed, shaking her new head. As she did so, the feel of her massive, thick mane of golden hair brushing over her slender shoulders drove home the point that she was now all woman - and then some. Part of her wanted to just break down - but that part was held at bay by another, deeper part of Max Brogan that was willing to use this new body to find out who had tried to end Max Brogan's life. In a sort of twisted way, this body was even better - sort of the ultimate in 'undercover' work.

"Okay, Doc - let's get to work."

"Oh, God..." Max breathed, squaring the tiny, slender shoulders of her new body as she eyes the door at the end of the corridor. "Give me strength..."

With that, Maxine Phoenix stepped walked down to the door, pushed it open, and stepped out into the world for the first time.

The summer sun spilled down over her, warm and inviting - but unable to warm the cold core of her, which was clenched around itself in fear and embarrassment. Although she'd had three weeks to get used to this body - as used to it as she could - it still hadn't helped much. She still subliminally expected people to stop and stare, to point at the freak, the man that looked like a woman...

...then she noticed the people were staring, and for one long second, she felt herself unable to breath as her throat locked around the air trying to slip down it.

Closing her eyes, she forced herself to relax, just as she practiced. She knew what they were staring at was her, but not because they saw her as a man masquerading as a woman. oh, no. She forced herself to think how they saw her...

A tall, huge-breasted blonde woman, her hair spilling down her back in thick golden waves. Her sensually innocent face carefully made up, with it's huge, 'brainless' blue eyes 'hidden' behind gold-rimmed zero-prescription glasses. Her shapely ass and womanly hips encased in a tight, smart burgundy knee-length skirt that showed what seemed to be miles of long, sexy, black-nylon encased legs. A white blouse straining to contain her massive, impossibly round tits, with a burgundy blazed over that. Expensive jewelry accenting her fingers, wrists, neck and earlobes. With the whole package balanced atop impossibly slender five-inch heels on her black leather pumps. An image of pure sensual, lust-inducing womanhood trying to appear business-like and intelligent.

That's why they were staring - and Maxine forced herself to remember that that staring was good - as it showed that no trace of the man that was inside was visible, which was going to be imperative for what she needed to do with this body.

Making sure that her white leather purse was slung securely, Maxine set off, fighting the urge to blush as she settled into the unbelievably sexy, ass-wiggling, hip-swaying walk that her tiny, altered feet forced her into. It had taken two weeks to fight the need to blush with every step, and within a few minutes she was barely aware that she was walking in a way that was sure to arouse the interests - as well as other parts - of every red-blooded, heterosexual male above the age of puberty.

Maxine - as he new ID read - found one immediate advantage to having the body of an eighteen-year- old boy's wet dream - she had absolutely no trouble getting a cab. In fact, when she reached the cab stand, three different drivers literally began to fight over the privilege of driving her, falling into an all- out brawl.

"Ya wanna wait 'n see who wins, or do ya wanna go somewhere, lady?" The question came from a burly, darkly-tanned woman leaning against a car and chewing on a toothpick while she watched the brawl with a mild sneer.

"I'd like to go somewhere, thank you." Maxine said in her damned new voice, all breathy and sexy. She opened the back door to the cab and slid in with some difficulty, having to maneuver both her impossibly huge tits and her legs in the tight skirt. She managed to shoe-horn herself into the back seat as the driver climbed into the front. Giving her the address, Maxine settled back in the seat and tried to use the ride to relax a bit and get a hold of herself, knowing that this wasn't going to be easy at all, and hoping it would all be worth-while.

Twenty-five minutes later - too soon for Maxine's tastes - the cab pulled to a stop outside of the building she'd specified, and she paid for the ride and climbed out to her high-heeled feet, looking up at the building with a hint of trepidation that her new face was ill-made to express. Gathering her courage, Maxine pulled open the door to the lobby and walked to the aging cage elevator at the far end. Stepping inside, she asked the man who was running it to take her to the fourth floor - then had to ask again, as the man hadn't heard the first time, staring stupidly at the vast, blouse covered mounds of her prodigious bust.

Getting off on the forth floor, she took a deep breath, then said to herself "Showtime."

With that damned wiggle-jiggle-sway, she walked to the second door on the right. Looking at the faded paint on the rippled smoked glass, she shook her head and pushed the door open, obscuring the words 'Brogan and Giordano Investigations'.

Unlike the days when this had been Maxine's office as well, there was no receptionist, cute or otherwise, sitting at the desk in the foyer - just as she hoped. With any luck, she could follow through on her plan to get a job here until she could get all the information she wanted from the files, then move on with the task of finding her 'killer' from the information thus gleaned.

"Hello?" She called out, damning her bimbo-ish voice once more. There was a startled flurry of sound from the door on the left, which swung open a few minutes later.

Maxine was expecting her old partner - but even as the muscular, olive-skinned young man stepped from the office, she realized that Al would be much to old for this line of work now. At the same time, the resemblance of the young man to Al could only mean one thing...

"Albert Giordano, Junior?" Maxine hazarded, and the young man smiled. Although the family lineage was clear, the younger Al lacked his father's easy charm or rugged intelligence - the junior Giordano's dark eyes looked shifty, rather than intelligent, and his smile had an oily quality that hardly inspired confidence. Maxine wondered why in hell Al would let his son grow into such a sleazy-looking specimen, much less hand the business over to him. The way the younger Al's eyes crept over Maxine's body made her itch and fondly recall the last time she'd seen Al, Jr. - when he was twelve, and too young for girls.

"Yo, that's me. Don't use the 'Junior' much, though." His smile widened. "And what can I do for you, little lady?"

'Stop being the perfect stereotype of a low-ranking Mafia thug, you dumb bastard.' Maxine thought with an internal shudder, wondering where Al had gone wrong. Out loud, she explained she was looking for a job, and her 'parents' (who, she explained, had once hired Brogan and Giordano) suggested she try here, if it was still a going concern.

Al smiled again, and Maxine wished he'd stop - it gave her the creeps.

"Actually, you're lucky it is a going concern, like you say." Al said. "Place was closed for eight years after the death of my dad and his partner, Mr. Brogan. I just started it up three years ago."

Maxine's stomach clenched, and she had to fight to keep her face from showing the shock and grief that she was feeling. "Oh? I'm sorry to hear about your loss."

"Thanks, Miss." Al replied with a shrug. "I happened long enough ago that it don't bother me much anymore."

Maxine had to clench her teeth at the callousness of Al, Junior. "If you don't mind me asking, what happened to your father and his partner?"

"Aw, it was in all the newspapers at the time." Al said with a shrug. "Somebody blew Brogan up in his car. Real big and messy. My dad? Well - he just disappeared. Nobody saw him after that day, so people just figure that he's dead, too. Everybody thinks this guy, uh... some Latino name - anyway, they think he had it done, 'cause Brogan sent him away for twenty at the local State Pen. 'Course, he only served eleven, getting out last month, but the point is, nobody could pin anything directly on him, see."

"I see." Maxine said, swearing to herself that she'd find the bastard who did this, be it Escobara or somebody else, and make them pay for both herself and Al, no matter what it took.

"so - as you can see, I ain't got a secretary. The job's yours if you want it, Maxine." Al said, leering at her. "Pays eight-seventy-four an hour."

Maxine thought that there would be less than she hoped in the files - she'd counted on Al continuing the case, not knowing he was gone as well. "Tell you what.." She said. "I'll try it for the day, see how the work is in view of the pay. Let you know tonight whether or not I want the job permanently."

Al shrugged. "Sure. Tell you what - either way, today I pay you ten buck without tax. That's eighty bucks for the day. Sound good."

"Sure." Maxine agreed, thinking to herself that it probably wasn't largess, but laziness - it would be easier for him to pay her a few crisp bills rather than work out the exact pay in either cash or writing an official business check.

* * * * *

At ten o'clock that night, Maxine was in one place that she never thought she'd find herself now, although she'd been in one or two in her male life.

She was in a whore-house.

It was a pretty high-class place, fronting as a bed-and breakfast that required a reservation - which was never available, of course. Inside, the converted Victorian mansion was something else.

Maxine's look at the files had revealed that this was a place that was owned by the Escobara empire, and the most probable place to find the new head of the Escobara clan, John's first son Juan.

Probably the elder Escobara would be in residence as well, eager to make up for eleven years spent in jail. In either case, Maxine had decided - after spending most of the day trying to talk herself out of it - that this was the only lead she had, and - considering her new body - there was only one way she was going to get in.

So, she'd spent an hour buying some new clothes from the only shop in town that had anything that would fit her outrageous body, a shop that usually sold to strippers and the like.

Walking up to the house, she'd felt scared shitless, embarrassed, angry and nauseous. She was clad in black nylons with seams running up the back, highlighting the shape and length of her smooth, sexy legs. Those legs, and her phenomenal ass, were also highlighted by the black platform pumps she wore, with eight-inch tall stiletto heels.

She'd also purchased a black 'puffy' skirt with white lace trim that she wore over lacy black French-cut panties that fit all too snugly to the - and she was intensely aware of this fact - fully functional vagina she now possessed. Her top was a black spandex crop-top over a black leather corset. A frilly white apron and a black-and-white lace cap completed the outfit's transition into a sexy 'French-maid' outfit, and she'd ditched the glasses and most of the jewelry, letting herself look as 'Bimbo' as her body could - which was a lot.

She's been hired on sight.

Now Maxine lounged in the main salon of the House, her heart doing triple duty as she struggled to keep any of her fear or disgust show through. She was laying on a specially-designed couch, with her legs stretched out beside her.

But that wasn't all - not by half. Because she was laying in the arms of Juan Escobara, who'd taken an immediate liking to the massive-breasted new 'Maid' at the house. As she grit her teeth and kept her full, sexy lips locked in a vague smile, Maxine tried not to cringe away as Juan, who was talking to a couple of his lieutenants, idly reached around and began to fondle one of Maxine's massive, spandex-encased tits. She didn't know what she hated more - his touch, or how incredibly good it felt. She hated herself for enjoying his caresses, the feel of his warm body against hers, the feel of his lips whenever he pulled her face around for another hard, deep kiss. She knew that it was all made intensely pleasurable by the work that had been done to her body, but that didn't make it any easier to deal with, and she to constantly fight the win urges - one, to give in to the new, female-hormone driven desires, the other to run out of the house and scrub herself clean of his touch for a few hours.

In a way, it was an advantage that both urges were equally strong - for in the end, she did exactly what a good whore should do, which is nothing at all aside from what the customer asked. However, Juan had yet to ask anything that Maxine considered truly disgusting, even though the fondling and kissing was bad enough.

Then, what Maxine feared most happened - Juan dismissed his lieutenants and looked down at Maxine's erotic face with a grin. "Well, my dear - why don't we retire upstairs?"

Maxine swallowed - then decided that there was no reason to go through with this. She'd simply refuse, then she'd be fired - and it would all be over. She'd just have to find some sort of other lead...

But Juan was still talking. "...and, after we're done for the evening, I will regale you with the wondrous exploits of myself and my father. I am sure that you will be amazed at whom you had as a lover tonight once you hear all that me and my family has done."

There it was - the lead that she'd been looking for. There was a good chance that the Latino's natural braggadocio would reveal all - but only on the post-coital glow. Only after...

...she'd had sex with him.

Closing her eyes for an instant, Maxine gathered all her wits and strength - then forced herself to look eager as she rose from the couch and let Juan lead her by the hand up the sweeping staircase and towards the bedroom at the back of the house, the one reserved for the use of the Escobara's, and their... ladies.

When they reached the threshold of the bedroom, Maxine couldn't help herself - she balked, her feet stopping dead just outside the door, unable to carry her any further while her heart thundered behind her gigantic new tits.

"Hey - what's the story?" Juan asked, turning to her and seeing the look on her face. "What's the problem, gorgeous?"

"I... I..." Maxine stuttered, feeling her 'cover' collapsing around her, but unable to stop herself from... stopping herself. "I can't do this... I've never... I mean, you want me to..."

Juan looked surprised. "Shit, girl - I knew this is your first night here - but are you telling me that it's your first night as a workin' girl?"

Maxine swallowed and grasped at the straw that was offered to her. "Yes. I thought I could - but I can't..."

Juan smiled. "Hey - I have never had the privilege of breaking a girl in before. This is extra special. I tell you what - I think you are the most amazing girl I have ever seen. That body, and those tits of yours... wow - I have never seen anything even close to you. So, you're worth the special attention. You come on in, and I'll take it nice and slow, make sure you feel real good when we do it. If anything happens you can't handle - then we'll stop, and you don't have to do anybody 'till next time I'm in, then we can try again. If you're not ready then, then we'll just keep waiting until you are. Anytime you can't handle it - you just say the word, we'll stop, and I'll get one of the other girls to ease the pressure, you know?"

Maxine was amazed at the sort of genuine kindness in the offer - and she knew that she'd never be able to live with herself if she backed out, and never found out what she could learn from Juan. "O... Okay."

Gently, Juan led her into the bedroom and closed the door. Slowly, he wrapped his arms around her. "This ain't so bad, is it?" he asked, gently.

"no..." Maxine agreed, faintly - disgusted because it actually felt quite nice.

"And a kiss - a kiss ain't nothing, right?" Juan asked - and Maxine took a deep breath and kissed him, as he had been kissing her all evening. Sure, this time it was her that was initiating the act, but otherwise it was something she'd already forced herself to do - and enjoy, much to her chagrin.

"Now - it isn't really all that different if you're naked. Just the same, only without clothes, right?" Juan asked, slowly sliding her skirt down. Maxine blushed but nodded, caught between those conflicting emotions. Flushing brightly, she slowly undressed, hesitating at each clasp and buckle, as Juan undressed himself. Then he gently pulled the now-naked Maxine back into the embrace.

For long minutes, he did nothing else but hold her, bare skin to bare skin while she breathed in rapid pants, her eyes closed, all too aware of her huge tits pressed against his bare chest, and his rapidly hardening cock against her thigh. But it wasn't an unpleasant sensation - far from it. It was actually disgustingly pleasurable, and despite herself, Maxine slowly relaxed in his embrace, until she was shocked to find that she not only could stand it - but she was enjoying it thoroughly, despite the emotional turmoil, and wanted to feel this good long and often.

"See - so far so good, right babe?" Juan asked quietly, and Maxine wordlessly nodded, hating herself for not being able to say 'stop' and run from the room.

"Now, does it feel nice when I do this?" Juan asked - then kissed her on the point of her elfin jaw. Slowly, he began to kiss his way downwards - her neck, her shoulder, the hollow at the base of her neck - while his hands began to lightly caress her firm, full ass.

Then, having just kissed her awe-inspiring cleavage, he began working his way up the slope of her massive right tit - and eventually reached her nipple, which he began to kiss and suck.

Maxine couldn't help herself - she moaned. The moan deepened and intensified as his hands left her buttock and began to fondle and caress her huge, firm endowments.

She was horrified to feel sharp pangs of regret when he finally stopped, continuing his trail of kisses down across her flat stomach. Each touch of his lips seemed to be like painless fire - one that lit a deeper, stronger fire in her belly, and she could feel her cunt becoming wet and hot, and hated herself for it - but was completely unable to utter a word.

Then she could utter a word - and that word was 'Yes', as Juan's mouth reached her womanhood and he began to lick at her sopping wet cunt, using tongue, fingers and lips to tease her engorged clit.

She helplessly repeated the affirmation a dozen times or more before she gasped as a weak, yet incredibly pleasurable, orgasm rattled her nerves...

...and something deep inside her broke. Rather than dulling her new-found arousal, the small orgasm fanned the flames into a raging inferno, and she was shocked and horrified to hear her own voice begging him to fuck her.

Juan complied. Moving her to the bed, he lay her on the soft silk sheets, seeming to loom over her as he positioned himself. A moment of clarity forced itself through the veil of hormone-driven lust, and she opened her mouth to beg him to stop...

...but the plea became a long, seep moan as he pushed inside her, his throbbing cock entering her wet, ready cunt and sliding across her swollen, highly-sensitized clit.

The moan became longer yet sharper as he began to drive into her, slowly at first then building in speed. She found herself instinctively moving her hips in a rhythm to increase the pleasure she felt, and she heard herself begging him to fuck her harder, deeper...

...and again, he complied.

Then all rational thought was lost in a swirl of pure pleasure as she was fucked long and hard by a man. Any doubts, any disgust, any shame was washed away by the waves of pure pleasure that were assaulting her body as she mindlessly played with her own enormous tits and screamed out Juan's name again and again as he fucked her.

Then her orgasm hit - her first real orgasm - and even that name was lost as she lost all her vocabulary and reverted to a purely primal scream of utter pleasure. She shuddered and shook on the bed, pleasure like she had never felt before coursing through her body, and even as she came out of the mindless state of orgasm, she knew that, no matter what, she wouldn't be able to stop herself from experiencing it every chance she could - it was a more potent drug than Cocaine, utterly addictive on the first use. And if clients wanted her to do anything - anything - else to get the orgasm, she'd do it, like a junkie would do anything for a fix. Blowjobs - no problem. Fucked up the ass - she'd be there. Chained down a whipped - as long as there was a chance that she'd get fucked, she'd do it with a smile.

Even as the last of the orgasm faded and she was able to think clearly, she felt the shame and disgust wash over her at her thoughts and actions and anticipation - but none of what she was feeling changed her craving for the new-found pleasure one iota, and she was resigned to her fate, knowing that there was no way to change what she now knew she needed, desperately. Even though she'd just been fucked - and really well - she was already feeling the first stirrings of the urge rebuilding.

Juan rolled off of her and smiled at her. "So - was it good?"

"Yes..." Maxine admitted helplessly - then, before her rising urge could draw her off track, she forced herself to get to the reason she was here. "I hope you don't mind me asking - but I was wondering why your father was in prison. I know that you are really the best of the best at what you do, so how did he get caught?"

Laying beside her and caressing one of her massive tits, Juan shrugged. "Actually, somebody saw him killing a person. Papa shouldn't have done it himself - but it was a matter of honor, and he had to."

Moaning at Juan's touch, Maxine had to force herself to concentrate. "He must have been really pissed at the guy who saw him..."

Juan laughed. "Actually, that's kinda a funny story. See, Papa wasn't all that pissed - he knew the risks of doing it himself, but he had to, for honor. So, when he got caught, he was only middling pissed. Sure, we harassed the guy who did it, and when one of our men got a lucky chance, he took a shot at the guy - but we really didn't have any heavy plans to get him back. Just sort of a 'if you can' sorta thing, you know?"

"What... oh, god, that's god... What happened?" Maxine asked, eyes closed and her voice husky as Juan's other hand slid somewhere further south than her tits.

"Well, in the end - this guy - he was a private dick, right? Anyway - his partner killed him." It took a second to register - then Maxine's eyes flew open. "What?"

Juan took her shock in a way other than she'd meant it. "Yeah - talk about luck, huh? This partner, he was some real devoted family man, with a wife and like six kids..."

'Seven', Maxine thought, dully, remembering how truly devoted Al had been to his wife and children.

"...so, he thinks we're really pissed at this private dick, and were not only gonna kill the dick, but this partner and his whole family. So, he fire-bombs his partner's car. Easy enough for him to do - he's got spares of the keys and everything. So, after he does, he calls us and tells us what he did, says we can't be touched for it because we didn't even know he was gonna do it, and can we please not hurt his wife and kids, see?" Juan laughed. "God, when Marco - that's may dad's chief, the guy who was in charge at the time - tells this guy that they never planned on hurting either him or his family, the partner goes white as a sheet. Then, Marco - who's a real sadist - says he'd gonna turn him in for the reward! The guy just lit off, ain't never been heard from since - probably buried himself in a whole, afraid of getting caught for murdering his own partner for nothing!"

Maxine was stunned, and didn't want to believe it. Al? Al was her murderer?

But all the pieces fit together perfectly. There was no reason for Juan to lie about it to her - but if he had been, then it would have meant that Al, Jr. Had lied to her as well - and that the files and newspaper clippings had been fakes.. and that even Dr. Farber had lied to her about her killing never being solved.

It was the truth. That was the only explanation - it had been Al.

A wave of despair washed over Maxine as she realized that the quest for her killer ended here - Al had been missing for eleven years, and nobody had the slightest lead. Her raison d'être was gone - what was she supposed to do with the rest of her life, stuck in a freakishly sexy body for only for...

...well - for a whore.

That thought, and the rising urge that was overwhelming her, finally overrode the last of her defenses and swept everything before it. Giving into her destiny, Maxine smiled up at Juan, who she could no longer even hate for being the son of the man she thought had murdered her.

"Hmmm... how 'bout you give me tips on other techniques?" She asked coyly, letting herself go. "Like..."

And she slid down his body, opened her mouth - and embraced her future as her lips embraced his rapidly stiffening cock.

* * * * *

'Juan Escobara' sighed. "Well, Doctor Melnick - I think it has worked, after a fashion. I did just as you said, and she apparently believes it all - but is this really a worth-while life for her? She believes herself to be a hooker named Maxine Phoenix."

'Doctor Farber' - in truth, Dr. Melnick, a noted psychiatrist, sighed and shrugged his shoulders. "Perhaps she will tire of this life soon, and she will seek something more... productive."

The Latino man shrugged. "Perhaps - but considering her performance tonight, I cannot say that I expect so> To tell the truth - she was fantastic."

Melnick sipped at his scotch and sighed. "Yes, well - I'm afraid that I'd have to say that even the life of a high-priced 'whore' is better than her delusion that she is some detective named Max Brogan."

'Juan' - who's real name was Ricardo - cocked his head. "I was wondering about that - was there ever such a person? And how did she get caught in this delusion that she was this person, real or no?"

The Doctor spread his hands. "Well, there really was a Max Brogan, and I assume that an old newspaper clipping or something set off the beginning of the delusion. Under hypnosis, I found that Brandi - that's her real name, by the way - became obsessed with this person, eventually convincing herself that she was him. If not for the wealth of her step-father, there might not have been anything I could have done - my hypnotic programming to set the 'scene' wasn't that expensive, but do you know how much it cost to rent that specific office and have it quickly remodeled the way it had been when Brogan worked there? And to find an actor close enough to Mr. Giordano's son to portray him?"

"Oh - there's really a Al Giordano, too?" Ricardo asked.

"Oh, yes." The doctor nodded. "But he refused to have anything to do with this, saying it defiled the murder of his partner by John Escobara - the man who's son you played."

"Oh - so it really was Escobara?" Ricardo asked.

The doctor nodded. "Yes - and Al Giordano could take the five years it took to connect John to Brogan's murder. Then they tried Escobara - who was still in jail - for the murder, and tacked an addition life sentence to the one that he already had. With the coconspirator charge against his son - the one you played - that put them both away for a long, long time and effectively killed the organization."

Ricardo sighed. "Still - it seems sad that this girl is going to spend the rest of her life in a home owned by a step-father she doesn't even remember, 'whoring' for the men that he's supplied to keep her happy."

"Oh, I wouldn't worry. Now that the 'case' has been 'solved', she is free to do whatever she wants - it'll just be as 'Maxine Phoenix', that's all. It's a hell of lot better then Max Brogan." He shook his head again. "Although, I still have to say that even after all the cases I've dealt with in my years as a psychiatrist, it still amazes me how gullible the human mind is to it's own delusions. I had absolutely no problem making her believe that there was a way to make a forty-some-odd year old man into a stunningly sexy woman. Even though she went through puberty with a hormonal problem that gave her that, uh... remarkable figure, and there is no sign of surgery or any other work on her body, she was willing to believe that medical science had somehow transformed her into that because it supported the delusion she already had."

Ricardo laughed. "Hey, man - I believe it. After all, it's kinda the same for us actors, too - we only have a job because the people who watch the movie are willing to 'believe' what they're seeing on the screen for two hours."

Shaking his head, Melnick lifted his glass and proposed a toast. "Here's to the innate gullibility of the human mind."

Clinking their glasses together, the two men drank.

SUMMARY: Looking to vandalize a set of dolls, one man is transformed into the doll he set out to destroy and finds he is now attracted to the doll's owner.

Play With Me

By Gunslinger

Bracing his hands on the top of the wooden fence, Gary applied the strength in his thick, muscular arms to haul himself up and over...

...and his swinging heel caught on the edge of the fence and he performed three-quarters of an ungainly somersault, ending up on the other side of the fence in an ungainly sprawl.

The fairly large quantity of alcohol in his system keeping from feeling the bruises he'd just acquired, the dark-haired young man hauled himself up off the ground.

"I meant to do that..." He muttered to himself, tugging and brushing at the all-black clothing that covered a once rock-hard body quickly running towards fat. Letting out a beery belch, Gary began a swaying walk towards the small, neatly-kept bungalow centered on the tiny little lot.

Just a half-hour after sunset, Gary could still hear plenty of signs of life from the other, 'cookie-cutter' houses crowded into the small subdivision. The house he was not-so-stealthily approaching, however, was dark and quiet - which wasn't exactly a shock, since Gary had 'wisely' popped into the campus library long enough to ensure Peter was still there, before embarking on his little 'mission'.

Making his way up to the back door of the little red-brick house, Gary pulled a straightened-out paper clip and a bobby-pin out of his pocket. Holding the two small pieces of metal in his hand, he stared blankly at the door handle for a moment, trying to get his hazy vision to focus.

"Aw, fuck it." He said - and, tossing the two 'lock picks' over his shoulder, raised one booted foot and kicked the flimsy door open. It never even occurred to him to check if it was unlocked, first - which, in fact, it had been.

With a swaying swagger, the beefy, dark-haired young man entered the linoleum-floored kitchen. Without even bothering to consider the consequences, he flicked on the lights.

Walking over to an old, but well-maintained Kenmore refrigerator in that particularly horrid shade of Avocado Green that had once, somehow, been popular, Gary yanked open the door and peered inside. Unlike the fridge in Gary's own apartment, this one actually carried more than just condiments and left-over take-out food, but there was one common element between the two:

Beer.

Reaching in, Gary extracted a bottle, and peered blearily at the label.

"Goddamn it - Wetback beer." He said, with a grimace of distaste. He shrugged, then tried to twist off the cap.

Only after he'd done a pretty good job on the inside of his thumb did he realize it wasn't a twist off. His cursing muffled by having his lightly bleeding hand in his mouth, he shoved the beer back in the fridge and slammed the door...

...and stared at the bottle-opener, shaped like a guitar, attached to the fridge by a magnet.

Muttering to himself, he retrieved the beer, used the opener to pop the top off, and took a long swig of the cold beverage as he resumed his trek through the house.

Though nearly everything in the house was second-hand, it was all clean and in fairly good repair. Not only did the various room's items match, but in each case they went with the decor, and in general the house was neat and tidy in that certain way that claimed it was 'bachelor tidy' rather than the home where a woman resided. Looking at the ten-year-old TV and even older stereo beside it, Gary's lip curled in a sneer.

The house being as small as it was, it didn't take Gary long to find what he was looking for. It was in the smaller of the bungalow's two bedrooms - and when he entered and flipped on the lights, a slow, ugly smile rose to Gary's thick lips.

"Bingo!"

The room's only furnishings were the simple white shelves that were attached to all four walls, spaced about two feet apart, floor to ceiling - and, filling all that storage space was Peter MacKenzie's prized 'doll collection'.

At least, that was how Gary contemptuously referred to it - but he couldn't quite work up the same contempt now as he turned to the right and began a slow circuit of the room.

There, on the shelves before him, were familiar 'faces'. As a kid, Gary himself had played with the Dogface Dan action figures, even watched the Saturday-morning animated series - but the items in front of him weren't the cheap little plastic toys Gary remembered.

No, Peter's collection consisted of the Telmat Toy Company's 1979 line of limited-edition twelve-inch 'figurines' - the complete line.

Each figure. Each 'accessory pack'. Each vehicle, and play-set - still in the original boxes. Every single item that, individually, were much prized by collectors - but whose value increased exponentially by having all been gathered in it's entirety. Not a single item offered up by Telmat for 1979 12-inch line was missing, not even the special marketing 'promotional' items.

Peter had it all...

...including the Bambi set.

Gary's grin widened further, becoming a full-fledged smirk as he eyed the 'Holy Grail' for collectors, the single most prized item in the Telmat line.

It was a promotional boxed set, a 'starter kit' for the twelve-inch Bambi doll line that had never gotten into the market. Though literal legions of parents had bought the six-inch version of the curvaceous blonde doll for their daughters, the heftier price-tag of the larger doll - and the fact that the vast wardrobe of clothes and accessories already available for the six-inch one would have been obsolete - made the larger size unmarketable.

At least, at the time...

Exactly one thousand of the starter kits had been produced. Of that number, less than half were still in their original boxes...

...but only one, the first one off the line, had been signed on the white paper 'tape' that sealed the box by none other than Barbara May Beeson.

In 1962, Barbara May had been Miss Southern California, a cheerful, buxom, blue-eyed beauty queen - and the inspirational model for the new doll being produced by the local company who had sponsored her. In a strange, heterodyning sort of way, for the next decade Barbara May made the doll famous, while the doll ensure what should have been a passing moment of beauty-pageant glory instead became a legacy.

It was the very box in front of Gary that bore that signature, along with the initials that had given the doll it's name: BMB.

In absolute terms, it wasn't much: Just a plastic-fronted cardboard box, containing a twelve-inch high doll sitting at a pink plastic make-up table with two clothing racks flanking it, each holding four additional outfits, aside from the one the doll already wore. It cost, perhaps, five dollars to manufacture, and would have marketed for thirty.

To the right collector, however, it would be worth several thousand dollars...

...but Gary didn't know the right collector, nor how to find him. Not that it mattered.

Gary's goal wasn't theft - it was desecration.

That was Gary's driving passion, the way he 'entertained' himself. Gary saw it as his mission in life to hurt, belittle and humiliate all those he thought less manly than himself - and since he was, in his own modest opinion, the pinnacle of manhood, that included just about everybody.

So, Gary was going to do something that, in it's way, would be much more hurtful to Peter than merely stealing this prized possession from him.

Grinning, Gary reached out with his meaty left hand and grabbed the box, while he dug his right hand into the pocket of his black jeans and emerged with a switch-blade knife.

With the trademark 'click', he popped open the blade, and brought the box and the knife together, finely-honed tip of the blade resting lightly on the end of the tape bearing the signature...

...and he hesitated, a strange sense of foreboding suddenly filling him. The cruel sneer fell from his lips, and he frowned as something curled around his stomach and sent chills running up and down his spine.

Something suddenly felt horribly, horribly wrong.

For a moment, both the alcohol-induced haze and the cruelty-induced anticipation faded, and - perhaps for the first time in his life - Gary found himself thinking rationally and ethically about what he was about to do.

He hesitated - and then said, "Fuck it!"

Grinning wickedly, he pressed down on the knife in his ha/nds neatly folded in his lap as he sat with his spine perfectly straight, staring straight ahead.

The alteration of location and situation happened so instantaneously, with out any sensation of movement or change - or duration - in between that Gary's mind simply couldn't grasp it in that first moment. It instead tried to follow it's in-use train of thought, only to find that nothing it was 'expecting' matched up, and his brain whirled to a stunned stop. Slowly, almost hesitatingly, it had to 'back up' and begin piecing together what was going on from scratch.

The first thing his mind latched onto was the eyes.

The big, bright, baby-blue eyes, framed by long, downy lashes, meeting his own look dead-on with a twinkling, joyful gaze. Then, his whirling consciousness took in the face that those eyes were set into.

It was a lovely face, basically oval in shape but with a slightly pointed chin. It boasted the cutest little snub of a nose, the most delightful pair of pin-glossed cupid's-bow lips and, of course, those big baby-blues. The skin was glorious, not tanned but not too pale, and utterly flawless.

That lovely cute/sexy face, in turn, was surrounded by a wealth of hair so richly golden that it didn't look possible - too perfect to be dyed, yet too evenly rich, glossy and golden to be natural. Nevertheless, however it had come to be, there it was, a golden mane falling with only the slightest wave around that beautiful woman-child's face.

A face, Gary noted next, that was supported by a long, slender, and gracefully curved neck - one that led downwards to the collar of a powder-blue sweater that, Gary quickly noticed, seemed to be filled near onto bursting with a pair of almost impossibly large, firm, and high-set breasts.

Gary's mind noted all of these things in a scant second, and his first considered action was to look down and take a good, square-on look at those breasts he'd caught sight of out of the bottom of his eyes...

...except that he couldn't move his eyes.

When he tried to shift his gaze, nothing at all happened - and the same nothing happened when he tried to move his head.

In fact, as panic began to build, he tried to move any part of himself at all - and found himself helplessly locked into position, unable to so much as stir a finger. The rise and fall of his chest, smooth and slow despite his burgeoning fear, was the only motion he made.

Now his conscious mind, flailing about for an explanation for his paralysis, shifted from visual information to his tactile sense, and he began polling his body for pain or, fearfully, the sort of numbness he might have expected if he'd been paralyzed completely - except that he felt neither.

What he felt, instead, was simply befuddling. He felt 'fine', physically - but he also didn't feel... well, normal.

With each breath he took, it seemed as if he were pushing against something - as if there were laying on his chest on a soft yet firm pillow, on top of, say, a waterbed. It wasn't actually difficult for him to breathe - but there was definitely the feeling of moving more weight around with each breath than normal.

As for softly firm pillows - it felt almost like he was sitting on one, as well. On the other hand, other parts of his - like his arms - felt strangely... light, though he couldn't exactly quantify how that was, since he wasn't moving them.

His legs felt okay, all things considered - except that they seemed to be bare, at least from mid-thigh down.. and he couldn't tell what it was he was wearing. It didn't feel as if he were wearing shorts, though there was soft fabric sitting across his thighs...

All of this registered, briefly - but since it didn't seem to be directly connected to his paralysis, Gary pushed it aside, instead trying to once more figure out what was going on. He couldn't move a muscle, yet, as odd as some of the sensations his body was providing might have been - and the way his nipples felt, well... almost like they were trying to get his attention or something, was definitely 'odd' - it was obviously he wasn't being physically restrained. Even when he tried to move, he didn't feel muscles tightening. It was as if the command wasn't getting from his brain stem to his body.

So, Gary once more focused on his vision, straining to make out what he was seeing, a task made more difficult by the fact he couldn't even move his eyes.

The cute/sexy blonde was still staring directly at him, that same rather vapid smile on her full lips. Beyond her, he could see a pair of clothing racks that, for some reason, looked oddly familiar - and beyond them, white shelving units.

Okay, so he was still in Peter's second bedroom, which made a certain sort of sense - except that he must have somehow moved, and ended up sitting down. Still, based on what he saw, it meant he must be sitting...

...halfway through the 'front' wall of the room. That just wasn't possible.

Okay, so strain a little harder, see what was throwing his visual cues off, and...

Something at the edges of his vision. Something... pink? Yes, pink-painted wood, so lacquered as to seem nearly like plastic, framing...

...framing... The mirror.

The mirror he was looking straight into.

Actually, he realized in horrified despair, he'd already known. Somehow, from the first instant, part of his mind had already realized what had happened - but his consciousness, refusing to believe it - or, perhaps, not wanting to - had been looking for another possible explanation, any other explanation for what all his senses were telling him.

There wasn't one.

In a rush, he was forced to face the unthinkable. He was the woman in the mirror!

A woman who looked exactly like a living, breathing, human representation of a Bambi doll.

Not of Barbara May Beeson - but of the near-caricature of her the Bambi doll represented. Impossibly leggy, wasp-waisted, overly- busty... that was the woman Gary had somehow, 'impossibly' become.

If not for the fact that he was utterly incapable of voluntary movement, Gary would have screamed out in horror at the realization - but even that was denied him as he simply, helplessly stared at the woman in the mirror, the woman he had been turned into.

Unable to move, unable to do anything but sit and stare at this incredible figure of a woman he'd become - unable even to close his eyes and shut out the sight - Gary found himself with plenty of time to do nothing but think.

Think, first, of how this possibly could have happened - and when his less-than-stellar intellect could come up with no plausible explanation, he was forced to move onto 'why', which was much easier to explain...

...except that 'easier' was a relative concept, for with nothing else to distract himself with, his mind went deeper and deeper down that path, forcing him to consider himself in a slowly dawning new light.

To look at his life and the type of man he was - or, rather, had been, for this fate was somehow inarguably linked to who and what he'd been - and he was forced, inexorably, to face it.

By the time he/she heard the sound of a key in the front door, Gary was glad for any slightest distraction to pull his/her mind away from the conclusions it had been reaching - conclusion that, more than just the horror of what happened to him-now-her, were reason for despair, for they showed a life with no real pleasure, no friends, no redeeming features at all. Afraid to face that, the new woman was more 'happy' to have to deal with her feminine fate rather than face those horrible - and belittling - conclusion.

She listened to Peter come in the front door, move around the living-room for a minute - and then a strangled shout indicated that the young man had looked into the kitchen. There was a pause - and then the sound of pounding feet.

As the slender, sandy-haired young man skidded to a stop just inside the door of the spare bedroom, a look of almost comical surprise forming on his lean face, the new woman found she could finally move - though not voluntarily, for what happened next did so without her conscious intent.

Helplessly, she found herself rising with an eerie gracefulness to stand easily atop the six-inch heels of her white leather pumps, her smile widening.

"Hi, I'm Bambi!" She informed the stunned young man with a helplessly good-natured giggle. "Play with me!"

* * * * *

With those words, something seemed to 'click' inside the new woman, and she found a completely new body under control of her familiar old consciousness...

Mostly.

She shuddered - except that it came out as a delightful little shiver. She was far from happy - but her 'most upset' expression seemed to just be a slight grin instead of a full-on smile. The first conscious phrase that sprang to her lips was 'God, I need a fucking drink'...

...but what emerged in that sweet soprano voice she'd been cursed with was: "Gee, I'd like a drink."

Gaping wide-eyed at the tall, gorgeous woman standing in front of him, the living, idealized version of a doll he'd always sort of 'semi- fantasized' about, Peter nodded his head numbly.

"Me, too." He agreed, his voice as stunned as his expression. He shook his head, and a bit of his usual intelligence returned to his hazel eyes. "Uh - why don't you follow me to the living-room, and I'll get us something to drink."

"Okey-dokey!" She agreed, with a giggle - and though the walk to the living-room wasn't all that far, Peter had to keep turning his head, half-expecting each time that she would've vanished, and this had been nothing more than a dream.

Each time, though, she was still behind him, her full hips swaying with supple grace, causing her pleated white skirt to flip pertly over her incredibly long, shapely legs.

Of course, Peter, as stunned as he was, would have been even more stunned by what the woman walking behind him was going through.

'What the hell...!' Gary-as-Bambi wondered. Just walking was a whole new experience. The strange, smooth sway of her well- rounded new hips, the heel-to-toe motion she helplessly used in her high heels, the ever-so-slight sway and jiggle of her huge, firm new breasts, the swish of her golden hair around her swan-like neck - all of it new, and uncomfortably comfortable.

It was as if there was a filter between her brain and body -she decided what she wanted to do, but the filter interpreted into actions that 'Bambi' could take. That, by itself, was so strange and new as to be as much as the new woman could handle dealing with for the moment - but, unfortunately, it wasn't all she was forced to deal with.

Every time Peter looked back over his shoulder at her, she could read his enjoyment of her figure in his eyes. Shocked, confused, and slightly awed enjoyment, but definitely enjoyment nonetheless...

...and every time she saw that look in his eyes, the new woman felt an unbidden shiver of pleasure run up her spine.

Whether she wanted to or not - and she most definitely did not - knowing that Peter liked looking at her made her helplessly feel... good.

Really good.

So good - it was scary.

"Just.. have a seat." Peter told her, once more giving her that puppy-dog look of adoration - and once more, shivers of pleasure ran up and down Bambi's spine. "Beer okay?"

"Beer would be wonderful!" She told him with a chipper smile - conveying the agreement she'd meant, if not in the same words and tones. With a graceful sweep, she flicked her long, thick mane of hair back over her shoulders and settled daintily down on the couch.

As she sat, smiling at nothing, her brain worked furiously to try and figure out what the hell was happening, and what it all meant to her future. She didn't want to be a woman, but she was one - and she didn't want to feel pleasure every time Peter looked at her, but she did. Not knowing how to deal with it, her first instinct was to just get up and run away, find someplace where she could hide, where she didn't have to deal with people dealing with her as a woman, and try to sort it all out...

...except she couldn't. It was one thing her 'filter' wouldn't let her do. Voluntarily or involuntarily, she couldn't leave the young man who who what?

Who... owned her.

She wasn't sure where the insight came from - but it struck with the force of certainty, and she knew with dawning horror that she had it right.

She didn't just look like Peter's prized doll, Bambi - in a very real way, she somehow still was that doll, only brought to life.

No, she realized in another brief flash of insight, she was a doll that had been infused with Gary's life - but, for all that she was now a living, breathing woman, she was still that doll, and it was that which shaped her new imperatives.

She'd introduced herself to Peter - and invited him to play with her - and now, with horror, she realized she'd meant it literally.

She was his toy. His to do with as he wished - and that filter that defined what she could and couldn't do, and how she did it, would make sure she fulfilled her primary mission in her new existence.

Peter returned - and with him, that unwanted shiver of pleasure that only confirmed her worst suspicions about her new purpose in life.

"Here you are, uh... Bambi." Peter said, his adoring eyes filled with questions as he handed her a glass of beer. Delicately, she accepted it and took a sip as he turned and walked over to an armchair...

..and she felt a sudden blast of discomfort as his 'rejection' of her.

She tried to ignore it, try to pretend she wasn't feeling it - but it was too strong for that. It continued to run through her, even as another tremulous wave of pleasure ran through her as he eyed her again over the distance now separating her.

He found her very attractive, which was causing her unwanted pleasure - but he had sat down away from her, rather than beside her, which caused her unwanted pain.

"I, Uh..." Peter said, trying to figure out how to frame the questions he wanted to ask - and momentarily dropping that pleasure-inducing gaze as he tried to figure out the best way to ask his questions without risking driving away the stunningly sexy woman who'd suddenly fallen into his lap.

It was much less of a metaphor than he thought it was - for, a moment later, Peter was shocked as she gracefully draped herself in just that position, her pert derrière perched on his lap and her long, luscious legs hanging over the arm of the chair.

The worst part of it, Bambi found - was the fact that she'd done it completely voluntarily.

It wasn't like when she'd greeted him, helpless to stop her body's actions. She knew, had she chosen to, she could have simply sat where she was, enduring the discomfort... but, instead, she'd risen, crossed the room, and sat down on his lap - and for her efforts, was suddenly rewarded with a vastly increased level of physical pleasure as her curvaceous new body made physical contact with his.

'What the hell am I doing?' She asked herself - but that was answered in part by her next thought: 'God, it feels so good!' Her body, and its purpose, was Bambi's - to 'be enjoyed' by her owner. The consciousness inside of it was Gary's however...

The same Gary who'd basically done whatever the hell he'd felt like. The one who'd never learned the value of discipline or self-control, who didn't bother factoring in other people's wants or needs into his own actions.

The Gary, in other words, who just did what felt good...

...and this felt very, very good indeed.

A fairly average young man, Peter had an average social life, had had a few girlfriends, though nothing that had become serious, and had occasionally managed the simple 'one night fling' of basically meaningless sex.

He'd never, however, had a woman anything approaching as unavailable as this one in his life, much less on his laps, and all those questions he was going to ask about who she was, where she'd come from, and what she was doing in his house simply vanished from his mind as her lithe, warm body pressed against his.

'No!' She said in the depths of her mind - but even to herself, the denial was weak, pathetic. Almost instinctively, Peter's hand had come up to caress her leg - and the pleasure of flesh-on-flesh was even more amazing than anything she'd felt before. She trembled, and gasped in pleasure.

"That feels... good..." She heard herself say. "So.. good..."

Slowly, hesitantly, Peter's hand traced its way up her smooth leg, and though part of her knew she should say or do something to stop him, she didn't. She found her eyes slipping closed, instead, some wordless sounds of pleasure emerging from her new throat.

'This is wrong...!' she tried to tell herself - but it wasn't a particularly strong argument, not for her. Hell, as Gary, how much of her life had been spent doing things she'd known were wrong, but going ahead with them anyway because she'd enjoyed them?

She'd never enjoyed any of them as much as she was enjoying this.

Peter's questing hand slid upwards, under her sweater, and, after crossing her trim stomach, hesitantly found one full, ripe breast.

She was losing control, and she knew it - and part of her didn't care as she bent her face down and pressed her firm lips against his, redoubling the intense pleasure flowing through her body.

She found herself shifting position, turning her body to face his, with her dimpled knees planted on either side of his slender body in the chair. His hands shifted to slide up under her skirt, and as he kneaded her firm buttocks she moaned softly into the deepening kiss.

Part of her was utterly horrified. Only a few hours before, she'd been an almost painfully straight man, and then she'd unwillingly been transformed into this outrageous figure of a woman. Now, though the pleasure she was feeling was induced by the form she wore, her actions were completely voluntary as she willingly accepted the sexual side of her feminine nature...

...and it all felt utterly fantastic, and her mind, self-centered as it had always been, was focusing more and more on that simple fact.

When she finally broke the kiss, it was so she could lean back on his lap, peeling off her sweater with a nearly desperate motion - and then she grabbed his hands and brought them up to her huge, yet still somehow perky breasts, closing them around the up-thrust mounds with a shiver of delight.

"Play with me..." She gasped, unconsciously mirroring the words that defined her new body's purpose. "play with my big, firm boobs. Stroke my long, sexy legs. Enjoy my taut ass. I love the way it feels when you play with my body, Peter. Play with me!"

It was more a demand than an offer - but in either case, it wasn't one Peter felt like refusing. Eagerly, he obeyed her instructions, hands roaming freely over her offered body - and every touch brought flames of pleasure from her new form, shaking her to the core, overriding all her doubts and disquiet.

Then she began to get turned on.

It was strange - but she hadn't even realized until it happened that it hadn't been 'sexual'.

Oh, it had definitely been 'sexy' - but the pleasure she'd been feeling came not from sexual desire and drive, but from the fact that Peter was enjoying his 'possession'. Somehow, that made it somewhat easier on the new woman, knowing that she hadn't gotten 'turned on' by Peter until the physical manipulation of her sensitive new form kick-started pretty basic physical reactions...

...but that only meant that the growing warmth low in her abdomen was fueling a new level of desire that pushed her further and further into a direction that, only hours ago, she would have said she'd rather die than attain.

Now, she threw herself into sexual femininity with abandon, her new-born sexual arousal overwhelming any other consideration as the pleasure only continued to mount.

Her slender hand, tipped with perfectly feminine pink nails, scrabbled almost desperately at the zipper of Peter's fly. Gently, Peter's hands eased her aside and took care of the necessary adjustments, leaving her free to flip up her skirt and tear off her panties.

Raising herself up, she repositioned herself - then sank her wet new womanhood onto his ready cock.

A feeling of complete and utter contentment filled her as pleasure thrummed down every nerve in her body. Lost in ultimate bliss, she almost instinctively followed the cues of his body beneath her, rocking her womanly hips in rhythm to his short, eager thrusts. Deep within her, physical pleasure like known she'd known could exist served only to heighten the emotional state of Nirvana that enveloped her as she gave herself completely over to her new form, defining her place and purpose in the universe by the throbbing warmth inside of her.

Such was the strength of her emotional bliss, the physical pleasure of the orgasm that thundered through her was but a punctuation mark, a variation on a theme.

She didn't even stop to think about it. Even as his softening member slipped from her, Bambi was moving, slipping down off Peter's lap to kneel before him on the floor. Her delicate hands once more reached out towards his crotch, and this time, her warm and oh- so-willing mouth followed fast behind.

It was every bit as good.

There wasn't as much physical pleasure, but the emotional experience of servicing him this way was just as great. As her hands and lips and tongue moved in orchestrated motions, pleasure at giving him pleasure filled her.

The complete and utter contentment of utter servitude - of devoting herself, body and soul, to his wants, his needs, his pleasure - the sort of thing, not too long ago, she would have shunned. Would have laughed off as an irrelevancy.

Why care about trying to please somebody else, when you could worry about pleasing yourself, instead?

Only now did she understand that devoting oneself to pleasing somebody else could also be pleasing yourself as well, could double and share the pleasure rather than compartmentalize it, hem it in, keep it at arm's length.

It was something so simple that she'd been unable to see the forest for the trees - but what had happened to her had finally shown her the truth.

With complete happiness, Bambi's supple tongue and firm lips brought Peter once more to the brink, and she felt utterly content as she eagerly accepted the warm offering that he pumped into her warm, giving mouth.

Swallowing happily, the beautiful new woman savored the moist warmth of his slowly softening cock in the loving grip of her dainty new ha/nd, only to watch his fingers spasm in shock and the knife drop to the floor, leaving only the barest dimple in the strip of white tape.

Gary stared at the familiar hand, with its blunt fingers and dark hair curling over the back and up past the broad wrist. A familiar hand that began to shake.

Dropping the box with a low cry, Gary took a step back, feeling the trembling run up and down his spine. Eyes wide, he looked around him, seeing Peter's guest room - and then, unbelievably, down at himself, shaking hands hesitantly touching the dark clothing covering his familiar form.

Though instantly stone-cold sober, Gary's staggered as he took another step back - and then a third, twisting one, and by the time he reached the bedroom door he was running flat out.

He slammed hard into the wall of the hallway outside the bedroom door, but caught himself on the rebound and thundered out into the living-room. Ignoring the back door by which he entered, he arrowed straight for the front door. He hauled it open...

...to come face-to-face with a very startled Peter, keys already out and extended towards where the door-knob had been before Gary had yanked it open.

Brushing past Peter without a word, Gary took to his heels once more - and ran flat-out the entire distance home. Practically exploding into his apartment, he shook like a man in the grip of a petite mal seizure as he made his way to his bedroom.

Grabbing a pillow from the rumpled bed, Gary collapsed on it in a seated position, propped up by the head-board. For several minutes, he simply shook, hands clutching the pillow in a death grip as he wide, numb eyes stared blankly at the reflection in the narcissistically-place mirror reflecting the bed.

Slowly, the tremors tapered off.

A minute or two after they'd finally stopped, Gary moved, his motions stiff and almost mechanical as he lifted the edge of his sweater and slipped the pillow under it. Pushing it high up on his chest, Gary sucked in his gut as far as he could, crossing his arms under the pillow to both further minimize his beer-belly and emphasize his down-filled 'bust'.

As tears began rolling from his eyes, Gary spoke pleadingly in a broken falsetto, whispered ripe with pain and longing: "Play with me..."

Playing The Field

By Gunslinger

Taking a long, deep breath, Jerry pursed his lips around the last, indrawn atoms of oxygen, holding it all in lungs that felt as if they were filling his lean chest close to bursting.

With very slow, deliberate movements, not unlike those of a man holding a snake, or perhaps defusing a bomb, the dark-haired man very carefully extended his hand, slipping the gleaming shaft of the screwdriver into the opening in front of him. His movements slowed even further, letting the pointed, cross-shaped tip of the screwdriver slip naturally into the matching grooves of the Phillips- head screw. Gently, steadying his right wrist with his left hand, he began easing the screwdriver clockwise, one painstaking degree at a time, until a bare quarter-turn had been achieved.

The low, slightly ragged humming sound emanating from deep within the metal casing of the device he operated on rose slightly in pitch - and the slight, almost random fluctuations in tone smoothed out to a steady monotone.

Withdrawing the screwdriver just as carefully as he'd inserted it, Jerry waited until the tip was completely clear of the casing before letting his shoulders slump, expelling the pent-up breath in slow exhalation that was halfway to a sigh of relief.

Turning his head, Jerry peered back over a slender, but surprisingly muscular shoulder. "Well...?" He asked, one shaggy brow rising above a dark, intense eye.

Rising from where she'd been sitting in front of a computer, the petite woman with the tousled mass of flame-red hair braced herself almost to formal attention, gesturing at the computer screen with one hand.

"Field strength is one-point-three volts per meter..." she announced, almost clinically - and then her face was transformed by a bright, almost luminescent grin as she continued: "...and holding steady!"

With a war-whoop, Jerry leapt up from where he'd been crouched in front of the strange-looking device. Doing an impromptu jig, he began to dance around the room.

As his capering carried him around the periphery of the room, it brought him near the desk holding the computer - and with a laugh, Jerry swept in and swept his red-headed co-worker right off her feet.

"Jerry...!" She squealed - with a good-natured giggle. "Put me down...!"

Both she and the dark-haired man were 'slender' of build - but she was also petite, whereas Jerry was a long, tall drink of water, and that inherently slender body was pretty well layered with tight, ropy musculature whose strength would have surprised many who would otherwise be prejudiced by Jerry's academic looks and profession. His long arms wrapped around the red-head's slender waist, Jerry held her easily, bringing them almost eye-to-eye.

"Ah, but I finally have you in my evil clutches, Maggie..." He said, leering at her theatrically. "I shall not let you go so easily!"

Maggie curled her lips into a fearful pout at decided odds with her glittering, electric-blue eyes, which were laughing. Balling her slender hands into fists she began lightly pounding at Jerry's bare shoulders.

"Oh, you beast!" She cried, fighting down the giggles. "You brute! You... you..." "Monster?" Jerry suggested.

"You monster!" She parroted - and it was too much, and she broke down laughing in delight, leaning her head down to laugh on his shoulder, arms going around his neck as her slender frame shook with laughter.

All in all, it might have been 'unprofessional' behavior - but they had more than one good excuse for it. The first was simple enough - both Jerry and Maggie had grown up in the same neighborhood, gone to the same schools, and had been friends long before they were co-workers.

More than just co-workers, however, they were partners - intellectual and financial equals in every way on the project they'd started more than three years ago.

It was a project that had started as an almost whimsical late-night discussion between two friends catching up after graduation. As it happened, it was sheer chance they'd bumped into each other that night. A mutual acquaintance from their younger days had been throwing a party, and both of them had planned just to make a brief appearance - until, that was, they had bumped into each other and retired to an unused corner of the basement rec room to chat. Jerry, then 29, had mentioned almost off-hand some of the thoughts he'd had in his own chosen field of study, quantum physics, and the problems of working out the complex variables... and that had brought the year-younger Maggie's side of the conversation to life, as she began injecting some ideas from her computer sciences background.

That night, the proposal had been struck - and even the next morning, in the sober (and, after too much cheap white wine, slightly painful) light of day, it had still seemed an exciting and intriguing idea - intriguing enough that the first step had been to put a long- term lease on an old farmhouse, where they would live and work together to cut down on expenses.

Now, just slightly over three years of scraping by, supplementing a meager government grant with whatever money could be gleaned above and beyond living expenses working part-time 'Joe'-jobs, the working prototype had just been activated for the first time...

...and the steady monotone hum of the Heisenberg Quantum Improbability Field Generator in operation was both the last and the most immediate excuse for two intelligent people to be acting like complete fools. Friends, roommates, coworker and partners, they could now add a new mutual definition onto their relationship: certifiable geniuses.

Slowly, the huge smile on Jerry's face softened into a thoughtful grin, and he cocked his head slightly to lay his own wiry black hair against the silken red mass of Maggie's.

"This... could change everything." He said, wonderingly.

"Yeah." She said softly into his shoulder, gently tightening her encircling arms for a moment. "It could."

It was, in fact, exactly the end goal for which they'd strived long and hard - and yet, like so many at a specific task, it had been a theoretical goal, quite often lost in the shuffle of the smaller but more immediate tasks of finding solutions to specific problems. Now, however, the overall goal, the final effect they were going for, was no longer just theoretical - it was now a reality...

...or, at least, a potential reality.

The mathematics had all come together, as had the computer and programming necessary to drive it. The device - which they'd come to call the 'Hikif Generator', from it's unwieldy acronym - was built, and now, operational.

The final question, and the one that cooled their immediate excitement, was a doozy:

Would it actually work?

"I suppose we'd better... you know... actually try it." Jerry said, nervously, as he put Maggie down.

It was far from the first time he'd seen it happen, but once more he was amazed as the flame-haired woman underwent a certain transformation. She was dressed casually and comfortably in a faded, well-worn pair of jeans and an old white cotton work-shirt that had once been his, hanging loose nearly to her thighs. Her thick, rich-red mane of hair was in disarray around a rounded face saved from 'babyish' insipidness by its sharp, almost angular nose, well-defined cheekbones, and electric-blue eyes beneath only faintly curved, fairly thick eyebrows. Despite all this, however, there was some way she stood, some certain yet indefinable cast she laid over her features, that made her seem as precise and meticulous as if she were clothed in crispest suit, every hair perfectly in place. Though she gained not an inch in height, somehow her slender-yet-curvaceous figure went from 'girlish' to almost imperiously womanly.

"Of course - even if it is just a formality." She said, with the remarkable self-assurance that Jerry had always found so enviable. He knew her well, from long familiarity, and realized it was a shield she'd begun cultivating against a world prejudiced to somehow think less of her intellectual and emotional capabilities because of her diminutive size... but it made her seem no less impressive when she spoke with such matter-of-fact conviction that you thought the universe would conform itself to her declarations rather than cross swords with her formidable will. "It is going to work, just as we predicted."

"Yeah. Of course it is..." Jerry agreed, drawing hard on Maggie's certainty in order to bolster his own confidence. "So..." she asked, quirked one eyebrow. "Whom is to be the guinea pig?"

Jerry barely hesitated: "I am."

"I suppose you have a good reason for that?" Maggie asked - not confrontationally, but in literal anticipation of a solid, logical response - which she got:

"I may have built the hardware, but you're the expert with the control interface. It's only logical that the most qualified to use that interface do so - since my life will probably be riding on the outcome."

"A tad pessimistic - but logical." Maggie agreed. "So - then next obvious question is 'when'?" "Right now." Jerry replied - surprising her.

"So soon?" She asked. "Shouldn't we run some tests...?"

"Us two geniuses are the first to come up with this. What would we use as a baseline to compare the results too?" Jerry asked, quite reasonably.

"Good point." Maggie admitted. "Well, then - I guess we're ready."

Taking a deep breath, Jerry nodded - then gestured grandiosely towards the computer. "If you will, Madame?"

"Certainly, Sir." She replied, matching his joking formality. She went over to seat herself at the computer, looking beautifully composed...

...whereas Jerry had a somewhat harder time hiding his nervous anxiety as he walked around to stand in front of the 'business end' of the machine.

"Should you get undressed, first?" Maggie wondered aloud.

"If this works, it'll work on my clothing, as well." Jerry pointed out. He took another deep breath: "Well, without any calibrations, we have no way of knowing what, exactly, it's going to change me into. If it looks like anything even the least bit life-threatening..."

"I'll 'zero out' the settings and run the machine right back up." Maggie promised. Of course, it wasn't quite that simple. What she actually meant was that she was going to save a screen-shot of the random energy spikes at the moment of initiation, and if there was any problem, she'd manually type in the inverse of each of those figures... which, theoretically, would restore everything back to normal.

In it's simplest sense, the Heisenberg Quantum Improbability Field Generator 'ripped apart' reality - or, rather, the certain set of probabilities that combined to make up what was understood to be reality. Every sub-atomic particle in existence had 'probabilities' - other states they could have existed in. As it happened, those particles existed in the current state which humanity 'saw', but the 'Hikif' would change that for whoever or whatever was in it's field, changing the material within into some other probability.

When Maggie 'threw the switch', Jerry would literally instantaneously become somebody else...

Well, that wasn't quite true. If it was, he might have become something else, like stone, and that would be instantly fatal - but all their theoretical research said that was impossible. Again, simplified enormously, there were 'multiple universes', or at least the probabilities of such, and in each 'alternate timeline', there was an 'alternate Jerry' - some who would be nearly indistinguishable from him, and others that would be radically different. They could only hope that whatever 'alternate body' Jerry got wasn't one that was designed to live in a radically different environment, as well. More than once they'd joked about the likelihood on some 'alternate earth', where evolution had never led to dry land, there would be 'Mer-Jerry' and 'Mer-Maggie'... but, the thought at this particular moment wasn't as funny as it had been before.

"Okay, Maggie..." Jerry said, unable to stop from bracing himself like a man expecting to be hit by an NFL linebacker. "Light me up."

Since this was the first try at an uncalibrated machine, there were no settings to enter - just accepting whatever base random settings were inherent in the field. That being the case, all Maggie had to do was hit one, single button - which she did...

Hollywood would have been disappointed. No special effects, no long, suspenseful build-up, no increased humming from the machine - not even a bright flash of light. Nothing at all dramatic happened...

...except for, of course, every molecule of Jerry-that-was instantly transmuting into the Jerry-that-might-be, leaving a completely new person standing on the platform without muss, fuss or bother.

"Oh... My... God..." Maggie said, jaw dropping.

"You know - we almost should have expected this..." Jerry said, almost conversationally. "After all - more than half the population is female..."

Then the new woman standing on the platform staggered back a step.

As Maggie hurried to the new woman's side, she couldn't help but stare - because she was Jerry. More accurately, the unmistakably feminine person standing there was exactly what one might have imagined Jerry looking like, had he been born female - which, apparently, in the world they'd 'stolen' this body from, he had. Her hair was longer, her jaw and nose finer-boned, and her slender figure definitely more feminine - but she was still tall and slender, and her facial features, though more finely drawn, remained recognizable. In fact, the most 'startling' change - other than gender, of course - was that the female Jerry had blue rather than brown eyes... which, having met Jerry's parents, actually made sense to Maggie. It was a very slight thing, but in the alternate possibility, nevertheless undeniably female.

Jerry had obviously taken a tad more after the paternal side of the family... and that, apparently, had been enough to have Jerry born female rather than male.

"Are you okay, Jerry?" Maggie demanded, reaching the new woman and slipping an arm around her slimmer waist.

"Yeah, actually." Jerry said, shaking her new-yet-familiar head. "It's just... kinda weird. Especially since it feels so... normal in some ways, and yet so... different, in others. Enough that my sense of balance is having a bit of trouble coping with the sudden change, at any rate - but, it's a healthy human body, which is what we were hoping for, right?"

"Yeah, I guess..." Maggie said - and then let out a short laugh. "Well, at least we have recordable proof it works!"

"Yeah.." Jerry agreed, with a nervous laugh of her own. Like her body, her voice was similar to her old, male one- but,

One of their 'fears', lying at the opposite end of the spectrum from changing into something so different that it couldn't live in this environment, was that the 'alternate Jerry' would be so similar to Jerry's usual body that they wouldn't be able to provide proof. A jerry that was an inch taller or short, five pounds heavier or lighter... there would be no way for them to get anybody to believe that a change actually took place.

In this case, however...

"Do... Do you feel like you need to change right back?" Maggie asked, carefully. The female body Jerry was in definitely seemed healthy, just about the best they could hope for, in fact - and, of course, from Maggie's point of view, being female was hardly a 'fate worse than death'. She did realize Jerry might have a different view on the matter, though, and they were very good, close friends, and if losing his manhood was so uncomfortable for him... well, then, science be damned, she'd change him back without recording any of the changes!

"No. no... I'm fine. Well, not 'fine'..." Jerry corrected herself, with a small grin, "...but it's nothing I can't cope with."

She looked momentarily thoughtful. "Actually, come to think of it, this could be an... educational experience. I mean, there's men who've gone through surgery and hormones to become 'simulated women', the closest medical science can get them... but a man who has been turned into a 'real' woman? It could be... interesting. Especially..." The grin that was 'boyish' on Jerry was 'girlish' on the feminine version. "...since I know I'll be able to change back whenever I feel I need to!"

Maggie sighed with relief and smiled back. Jerry was her friend, and she really was ready to throw out any chance of recording the data if that's what he... she... had felt should be done, but Maggie was much happier about the situation the way it was.

Then Maggie suddenly burst out laughing.

"What...?" Jerry... 'Jeri', Maggie wondered with a suppressed snort of laughter... said in a hurt tone of voice. "What is it with you guys and tits, anyway?" Maggie asked.

Jerry/Jeri blushed - quite fetchingly, actually - and yanked her slender new hands away from the chest she'd almost unconsciously been cupping. Whatever might be said about her new physique, nobody would call her 'flat-chested'. In fact, Maggie judged a remarkably perky 'DD'-cup to be lurking under the white t-shirt Jerry/Jeri wore... and at that, she might be underestimating it a cup- size.

"Well, why don't you get undressed, and we'll take those measurements and photos..." Maggie said. "Er..." Jerry/Jeri mumbled - and her blush actually deepened to Maggie's amusement.

"What?" She asked. "You were a little hesitant as guy, but it was no big deal. What's up?"

"Well... it just feels..." Jeri tried to explain - not easily, since she was trying to explain it to herself at the same time. "I mean, this isn't really my body, so it, well.. it feels like.... like playing 'peeping Tom'..."

Maggie fought back the urge to laugh.

"Okay, we'll take it slow - I know this is very strange and unusual for you. Still, for the moment, that IS 'your' body. You aren't doing anything 'naughty' with it. Go ahead, take a little time, get to feel more comfortable in it... more comfortable being a woman."

"There's something I never thought somebody would say to me..." Jeri muttered - and then looked down, and laughed. "Much less be an accurate statement!"

That made Maggie laugh, as well - and, in fact, loosened the last little knot of tension in her midriff that she hadn't even realized was there until it was gone.

Jeri was quite emphatically female - but work choice, cadence, sense of humor... inside that feminine body was Jerry, the same person she'd always known and liked, her friend.

"Tell you what..." Maggie said, her tone warning Jeri that 'something' was coming. "Why don't you go... take a shower?"

Jeri blinked - and then the fading blush renewed itself at the thought of taking the clothes of this body, being naked, touching it...

...but she'd be alone, not getting measured and photographed, and showering was, by definition, not 'dirty'. Women did it all the time. It was... 'normal'. Somehow, it still felt a little bit perverted, since it would be her male mind 'spying' on this female getting a shower... but it was a good excuse to 'get to know herself'.

"Yeah - I think I will..." She said, her voice a half-octave higher than it's new, feminine nature could account for. She cleared her throat, and then laughed, nervously, and headed towards the bathroom.

Nervously, Jeri took a deep breath - and slid off the much smaller, form-fitting female version of boxer-briefs that had replace the comfortable underwear that had been on her male body, under her male clothes, not all that long ago.

Somehow, the very act felt incredibly... naughty. Not 'wrong' or 'evil'... but those tight-fitting white underwear slid down slender, feminine legs to reveal what could be the very definition of femininity, an unmistakable and unarguable female vagina, and to her male mind, that made this a 'sexual situation'... even though she was completely alone and feeling anything but sexually aroused!

Okay, she told herself as she stepped into the shower stall and felt the water sluice across her newly smooth, softened skin, maybe that wasn't quite true. Maybe it had started out that she hadn't felt any sexual arousal - in fact, she'd been too busy being embarrassed to feel much of anything else. Now, however, naked in the shower stall, hands hesitantly touching her own slender hips and then slowly moving around to her firm, pert new buttocks... well, those hands were gliding over unmistakably feminine skin and curves, and maybe she was getting just a touch aroused.

It wasn't really 'weird', she told herself, as a strange, almost liquid heat began to form in her midsection. After all, any man would get turned on by 'fondling' a woman's body, and as far as her male mind was concerned, that was exactly what 'he' was doing...

...only with the added sensations, and quite pleasant ones at that, of feeling her body being fondled.

Almost as if with a mind of their own, her slender new hands rose upwards, to the large, perky breasts whose nipples were rapidly swelling in increasing arousal. Her hands gently cupped her new endowments, and then squeezed lightly - and she gasped, eyes widening in surprise.

This is what it felt like to be a woman...?!

Geez... It was like half her new body was one form of erogenous zone or another! Maybe more than half, for that matter....

For a man, 'sexuality' was considerably more restricted, for the most part, to something that loomed large in their own mental view of themselves, but was really quite a small part of their overall physical mass. A woman's body, however, was not only sensitive in many more places, but in many more ways. No wonder they liked 'foreplay' so much. !

She gave her fully-engorged nipples a pinch - and then, wincing, tried it again, not nearly so hard this time.

The second effort caused a low moan to escape from the back of her throat... and, as she leaned against the wall of the shower stall, water drenching down over her slender new physique, one hand left off fondling and playing with her new breasts, and slowly began migrating southward...

At first, hesitantly, her hand simply stroked back and forth against the smoothly curved dome of her new womanhood - and even that felt good, even more so as she steadily increased the pressure.

That, however, was nothing compared to how it felt as she slipped a finger slowly into the moist enclave of her new womanhood...

* * * * *

From outside the door, Maggie listened to the unmistakable sound of a woman pleasuring herself, and bit down on her knuckle - hard - to keep from making any sound.

* * * * *

"Oh, my God... Yessssss. !" Jeri hissed almost unwillingly through clenched teeth...

...and then followed it up with: "Ow!"

With a wry expression, she rubbed at the back of her head, grateful for her thicker head of feminine hair - when her first orgasm had rocked through her body with such force she was completely unprepared for, she'd banged her head back against the wall of the shower several times.

God, a female orgasm was so. all-inclusive! It had been centered at her crotch, yes - but internally, rather than 'merely' an external sensation, and at that, it had seemed to send tendrils of ecstasy ripping through her entire body, especially up to where her one hand had closed almost convulsively on her firm new breast. Though it ached slightly now from the force with which she'd squeezed it, at the time it had been... most enjoyable.

"Shit - women don't know just how good they've got it!" Jeri muttered to herself, shutting off the water. Stepping out of the shower, she began to towel off, mulling over what she'd experienced.

The only way she could possibly understand how women looked at sex was to accept that they couldn't see the forest for the trees. Never having experienced being male, they couldn't possibly know how different it was for them. No wonder they could be so 'picky'! For a woman, 'sex' wasn't such an isolated event, as it was for a man. Men, all their truly sexual sensation firmly confined to one part of their body, were also very much 'on' or 'off'. When they needed it, they needed it - and once they'd gotten it, it was over with.

Women, on the other hand, just seemed to have various levels of 'simmer' that affected their whole bodies! Even in their 'normal' state, when they weren't actively aroused, their bodies were so much more inclusively sensitive... no wonder women were so body- conscious! Men, in general, were very conscious of their manhood - 'emotionally', most of the time, and very decidedly physically when there was any sort of physical sensation from it. Well, if you were going to compare, a woman's entire body was like that to them - they just didn't realize it...!

...or, then again, maybe women did, and it was poor men who just didn't realize it. If men had any idea what a woman's body felt like from the inside, they'd understand the whole 'cuddling/holding/foreplay' thing right off. Touch and feel were so much more... there for women than men.

Which explained a lot more things, Jeri thought to herself as she slipped into a bathrobe - not Jerry's ratty old thin blue one, but Maggie's luxuriously thick one. He'd never really understood, until just this moment, why she'd made such a big deal over it - but then again, she'd never had the female body capable of truly appreciating the sensation before, either.

Shaking her head in amazement at just how much the body you were born into could shape your perceptions of the world, Jeri slid her feet into a comfortable pair of slippers - Maggie's, of course - and padded her way back to the laboratory so she could be weighed, measured, and photographed.

"So..." Maggie asked, with a casual tone that seemed, for some reason, to be just a tad too studied. "Enjoy your shower...?"

"Uh, yeah..." Jeri said, striving for an equally casual tone - but feeling the heat in her cheeks as she blushed at the memory. Thank god Maggie didn't realize exactly what she'd been doing in there...!

Keeping both her experiences and her revelations to herself, the 'temporary woman' shrugged out of the robe. Her blush only deepened as Maggie took her measurements - especially since, though behaving in a completely professional manner, it somehow seemed that Maggie's hands always happened to find the most sensitive parts of her new body.

While measuring across Jeri's chest, it just so happened the point at which the tape was placed meant that Maggie's fingers lightly pinched Jeri's full nipple.

"Hmmm... a full triple 'D'-cup - assuming, of course, you were ever planning to buy a bra, which isn't the case." Maggie said, conversationally.

A bit later, on the hip measurement, those same hands pressed against the sensitive mound of Jeri's new womanhood, and she had to clench her teeth to force back a revealing gasp - and she was glad Maggie was busy reading the numbers of the tape, since her blush would have been a bit hard to explain, Jeri thought.

The entire sequence of measuring and recording data seemed to take forever, and the longer she was naked, then more aware Jeri became that she was naked... but finally, all the pictures had been taken, all the data recorded, and she quickly retreated back to the bathroom to get dressed again. It seemed none too soon - she was starting to wonder if it was possible for a blush to become a permanent feature...

"So - are you really sure you want to change right back?" Maggie asked, as Jeri returned.

"Yeah - I think I've had a big enough dose of femininity for one go..." Jeri replied... and then, licking her lips somewhat nervously, said: "But, uh... we do have a copy of the settings saved... right?"

"Yeah, we do..." Maggie said, arching one eyebrow quite knowingly, but forgoing commenting on the implicit implications of the question.

"Well, then, er..." Jeri stammered - once again with that damnable blush. "I guess it's time..." "I guess so." Maggie agreed.

Feeling strangely both relived and regretful, Jeri walked around the machine to stand once more on the platform. "Okay, Scotty - beam me up!" She joked, a bit weakly.

"Are you sure you..."

"Just push the damned button, okay?" Jeri asked - plaintively, rather than annoyed, and Maggie had to hide a grin. Though Jeri hadn't said a damned thing at all about the 'feminine experience', Maggie could tell what was bothering Jeri the most was that it wasn't inherently 'terrible'. In their own minds, men, for some reason, had the idea that 'loosing their manhood' - being turned into a woman - would be that proverbial fate worse than death, and Maggie knew Jeri was having a hard time reconciling that socially- ingrained male viewpoint with the fact that being a woman wasn't inherently better or worse than being male... just different.

"It'll take just a second - I have to type in the inverse settings..." Maggie said, doing so even as she spoke...

...but, to Jeri, it seemed to take just somewhat more than an eternity longer than 'a second'. Finally, Maggie looked up from the computer screen with a smile.

"Okay, here we go...!" She said, and pushed the 'big red button'.

Nothing happened.

Not the 'lack of big Hollywood special effects' nothing - literally nothing. "C'mon, Maggie - that's not funny. Hit the button." Jeri pleaded.

"I did!" Maggie protested.

"No - you couldn't have!" Jeri argued - not so much believing it was true as unwilling to believe what it meant if it was. "I did! I am!" Maggie replied, mashing the button flat again and again.

"But I'm still..." Jeri started, voice rising hysterically as she looked down at her still emphatically feminine body - and then she cut herself short, a puzzled look crossing her face.

"Jeri...?"

"What's this...?" Jeri asked, bending down. "A piece of paper with some..."

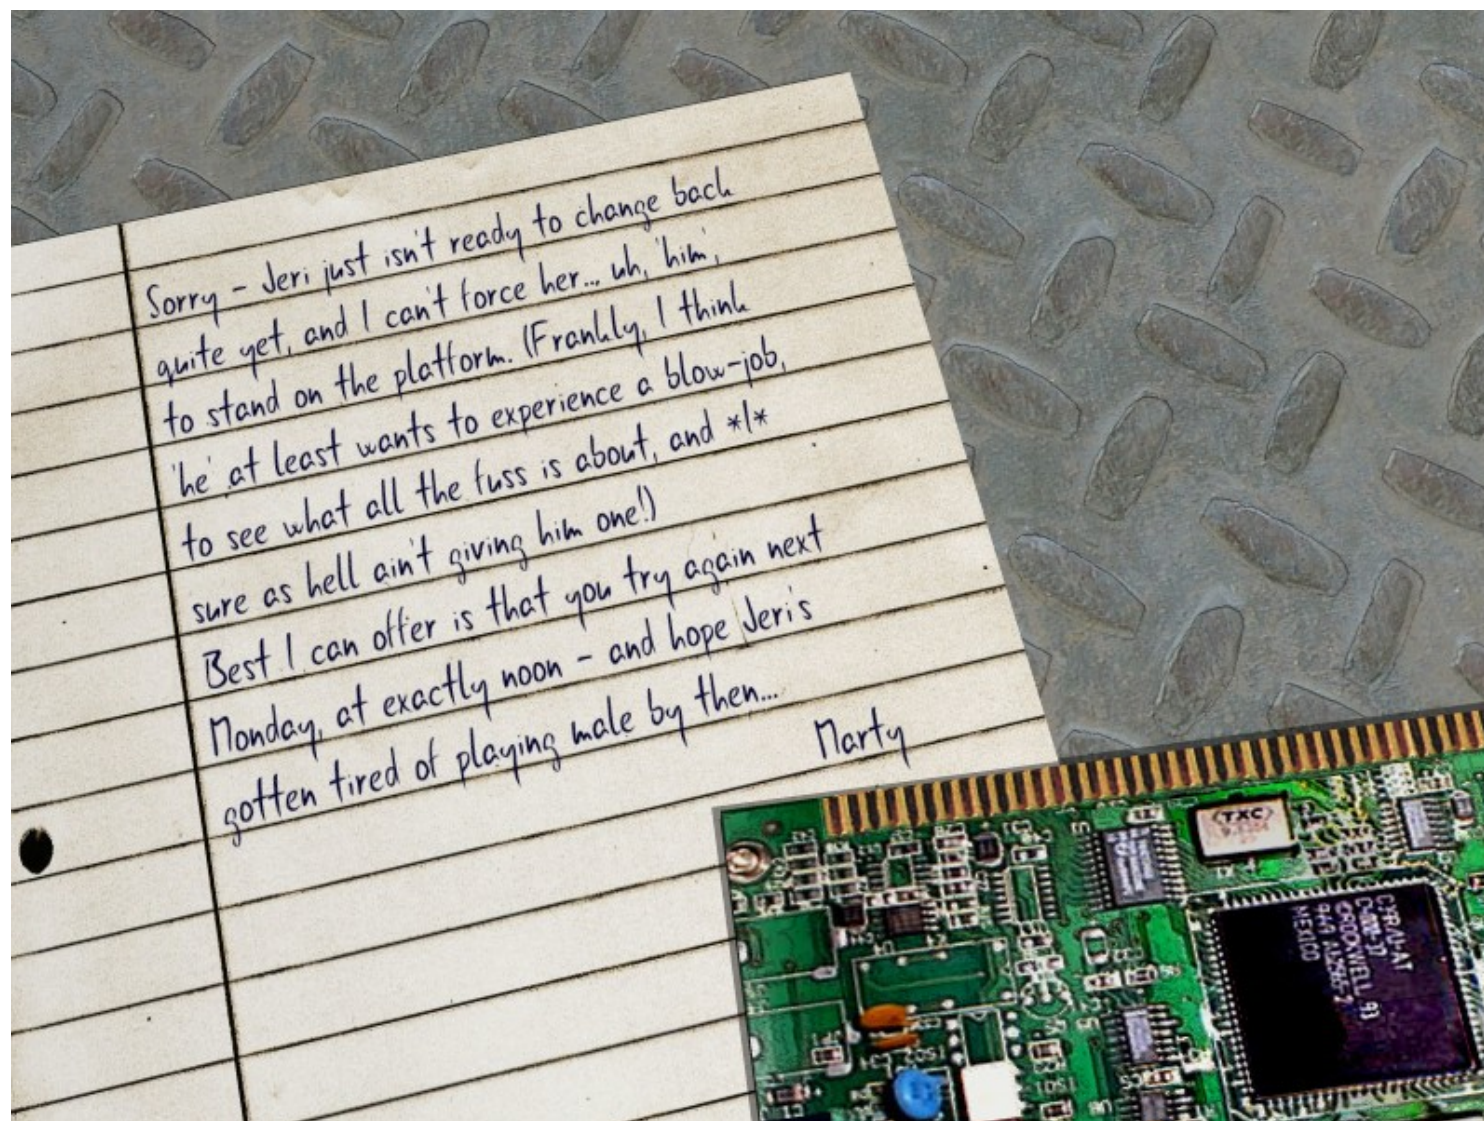

Her voice trailed off again - and this time, the look on her face as she straightened, staring at the piece of paper, was one of dawning horror.

"What?!" Maggie demanded, coming out from behind the computer and approaching Jeri. "What is it!" "It's... from them..." Jeri said, in a numb tone of voice.

"What do you mean, 'them'? 'Them' who...?" Maggie asked, wondering where all those genius brain cells in Jeri's head must have evaporated to....

...and then Jeri handed her the piece of paper. It was a very familiar piece of paper, identical to any of the ones Maggie used to record data in her many notebooks - and when she saw what was written on it, all her brain cells evaporated off to the same place Jeri's had.

All the two women, one 'natural' and one 'new' could do was stare at the words written on the piece of paper:

SUMMARY: Meetig at a bar, one man and one woman, start flirting and suddenly find that they have changed bodies, and like it!

Point Of View

By Gunslinger

I was circulating through the thronging crowd, warming beer in one hand, when the crowd suddenly parted in one of the inexplicable gaps caused by crowd movement.

Through the second-long gap, I spotted her. She was sitting at one of the small tables set in niches in the club's walls, looking out into the crowd without seeing it. The expression on her face was what got to me - I'd worn an expression almost exactly the same too many times in the past to be able to ignore it.

Then the swaying, jostling mash of humanity once more closed ranks, blocking out the view - but not the memory.

I'd had time to note that she was drinking an opaque yellowish drink, and I turned to the nearest bar, draining my beer as I went. Elbowing my way to the overcrowded bar, I waited for the bartender to turn my way, and placed my order. Paying the ridiculously overpriced tab that all nightclubs had in common, I forced my way through the crowd in the direction of the niche where I'd seen her.

Reaching her table, I didn't even wait for permission - at this point, it would have been counter-productive. I slid into the other seat, placing the drink in front of her almost-finished one.

"I took a gamble - it's a 'Fuzzy Navel'." I said, trying to sound the least threatening as possible.

She looked at me with a sort of annoyed disdain and resignation. She was poorly suited for showing the less pleasant emotions - she was petite and slender, with an open face beneath a short, almost boyish cut of deep red hair. Still, her wide, dark eyes managed to convey the important parts of her emotion when they narrowed, and the way her full lips compressed said the rest.

"Excuse me - I don't recall inviting you to sit down." She said, loud enough to be heard - and I discovered she had a really nice voice, despite the icy tone she was putting into it for my benefit.

I shrugged. "That's probably because you didn't." I admitted. "That's all right - I'm just here to perform my world-famous mind reading act."

One of her slender eyebrows rose. "Oh, really?"

Placing my fingers at my temples, I closed my eyes and forced my voice lower. "The Great Bradini sees you planning to spend a quiet night at home, curled up with a good book. I also see a close friend dropping by, and begging you to go out to the club with you. You refuse, but she badgers and pesters until, at last, you give in. She drags you all the way down to the club, promising fun and frolics - then promptly finds a 'hot' guy, and leaves you alone at a table, wishing you'd never agreed to come while fending off the unwelcome advances of half-drunk jocks and jock-wannabes."

I opened my eyes and smiled wryly at her surprised expression.

"How..." She started, then remembered she was annoyed at my and clamed up,

"How did I know?" I asked, shrugging. "Simple - Reverse the genders, and that's exactly how I ended up here tonight. For some reason my friend always insists on having a 'wingman' on his club nights." I took a sip of my beer. "Until he finds a girl, that is."

She looked skeptical. "Really? I would have thought you would also be... cruising." Meaning, of course, that she still thought I was trying to pick her up.

I held my hands out, palms up. "Look - tell me to take a hike, and I'm gone. But the truth is, I'm in the same boat you're in - neither one of us want to be here, but neither one of us wants to just leave our friend without a good excuse. I figured that, if you'd like - we could use each other as that excuse - tell our friends we met somebody, and are going out for a walk or something."

She laughed without humor. "No thanks. Nice try, but I don't buy it. So - now I'm asking." She made a shooing gesture with her hands. I shrugged, then rose from the chair. "Okay - I was just trying to help." Sort of half-waving, I wandered away.

Finishing my beer, I looked around at the thronging masses pressing in on my, and rubbed the back of my neck idly. I hated clubs as it was, and now I was getting a headache from the pounding music. Deciding to get out of here anyway, I elbowed my way to the dance floor and found my friend, Steve, gyrating with a tall, slightly hefty brunette.

"Hey - what's up, Brad?" He called as he caught sight of me. "I think I'm gonna get outta here." I shouted back.

"Come on, man - hang around for a while. Hell - maybe Donna here will introduce you to her friend."

"No, thanks," I called, deciding that an excuse was called for. "I've already met somebody, and we're going for a walk or something."

Steve looked incredulous. "Brad picked up a girl in a nightclub? A miracle, man - I didn't think you did that sort of thing. Who is it?" I gestured towards the cute redhead who'd turned me away. "Another book-lover like me - dark red hair, about yea high."

Donna, Steve's 'find' laughed, pushing Steve on the shoulder. "Oh, man - that explains it." "Huh?" Steve and I chorused, turning to the blocky brunette.

"Jan, right?" She said. "She's the friend I dragged down here with me - and... oh, Jan, we were just talking about you!"

I turned, and there she was, giving me a surprised look. Out from behind the table, I could get a better look at her, and I approved of what I saw - she was one of the short and slender women who was 'tomboyish' in her tanned, athletic way - without being one iota less feminine. She'd never be called 'beautiful', and 'sexy' wasn't the first thing to jump to mind, but she was incredibly cute.

"You were?" She asked Donna, surprised.

"Yeah - all that effort I spent trying to get you to meet Steve's bookish friend Brad - and you run into him on your own and decide to get out. Well, you have my blessing - I'll catch a ride home with Steve here."

"Uh... sure." Jan agreed, and we said our good-byes and headed for the doors, with me in the lead to break through the crowd. As we left the club and were able to hear ourselves think, I turned to Jan apologetically.

"I'm sorry - I didn't mean to put you in an awkward position." I explained before she could say anything. "I was just using you as an excuse to get out of there - how was I to know that my friend had happened to connect up with yours?"

She looked at me - then the edges of her lips quirked upwards. "Actually - I was showed up just then because I was looking for Donna - I was going to use you as an excuse to leave."

We looked at each other for a minute - then laughed together. It was just to poetically just.

"Oh, what a tangled web we weave..." I said, shaking my head. "Look - I'm not going to try and capitalize on this. If you don't feel comfortable with this, we can just go our separate way now. If either of our friend's ask, we'll just say it didn't work out."

She smiled kindly. "Thanks - I appreciate that. Not that I don't think your a nice guy, and you are handsome and all - but I just don't like meeting guys like this."

"I understand." I assured her. "Still - it's nice to know you don't think I'm an ax murderer or something."

She sighed. "Yeah, well - I'm probably overcautious. Or, as Donna puts it 'too picky. But I don't know you, and I've had bad experiences with guys in the past."

I shrugged. "Well, is there anything I could do that would let you trust me?"

She looked at me, and must have read the sincerity of my offer rather than a last attempt to hit one her, because she giggled. "Sure - you be the 'poor, defenseless little woman', and I'll be the 'Big, strong man'."

I laughed, then held out my hand. "Sure - you got yourself a deal." I joked. "Just find me a dress that fits." Laughing, she took my hand...

Darkness. Confusion. A strange, wrenching sensation, then light once more flared into vision, and I was looking at...

...myself. Looking up at myself, and my blue eyes were widening and my mouth was opening...

In an instant, without even looking down, I knew what had - impossibly - happened from the strange sensations my - Jan's - body was reporting. The different balance, the strange sensations in my - her - crotch and chest, the soft feel of the silver silk Mandarin blouse and pants she wore.

I was nearly stunned by the impossibility of what had happened, by the wealth of interesting new sensations that I was feeling, and by the powerful emotions - awe, fear, shock, confusion - that were welling up. But the sight of myself - sort of - about to scream forced me to put that aside and react, placing one hand over the mouth that, and instant before, had been mine. Even as I did so, I was amazed by the differences of that action - the way raising my arm tugged 'my' right breast slightly upwards, the nipple of 'my' braless breast sliding pleasantly over the silk, and the amazement at seeing the slender arm and dainty hand move at the command of my thought.

"Don't scream!" I said in a low voice, bemused by how different Jan's voice sounded to her own ears. My old voice sounded strange from this point of view, as well. "But... you... I. I'm you!"

I sighed. "Look - this is really, really weird for me too. But if we scream or make a scene, people are going to ask what's going on. What do we tell them?"

She gaped - she held up her - my - hand s and took a deep, calming breath as she - he - I - realized the truth. Trying to tell somebody what had just happened would probably get us locked up in Bellevue for a long, long time.

"Okay." The new Brad said, his voice unsteady but under control. "Let's go someplace where we can sit down and figure out what the hell happened to us!"

"Sure." I agreed. "There's a bar up that way a bit - with some nice, private booths." He nodded, and we began to walk - and he barely caught me before I fell.

"Sorry." I apologized. I pulled myself upright, and tried again, this time compensating for the four inch heels on her gray pumps.

"Geez - not like that." She said, and despite our incredible circumstances, she giggled. "You're definitely going to attract attention. Shorter steps, and let your hips move."

I grinned slightly. "Fair enough - if you stop sashaying in my body. I don't want to get stuck with a bad rep."

We headed off again, each of us trying to emulate the correct walk for the body we were in. It was a poor effort - we each overdid it - but that could be explained away by the smell of booze on our breath. It felt strange to move in a feminine manner, no matter how poorly done, but I had to admit that letting these slender-yet-feminine hips sway more made the heels easier to navigate in - as long as I remembered to keep my ankles locked.

Then, as we neared the bar, something clicked in my mind, and my awkward stride smoothed out and I must have looked completely natural in the heels, judging from the surprised look on my old face.

As we settled into a booth, I smiled and explained. "I figured out the trick - I just pretend I'm walking in ice skates. Compared to walking on a thin blade, heels are a snap."

"Oh." He said. "Okay. No offense, but I hope that it's not a talent you're going to need for long. What the hell happened to us?"

I was kept from answering right away by the appearance of a waitress. We both felt the need for a stiff drink, and each ordered a vodka and a beer. Once she'd gone to get our drinks, I answered the question wryly.

"Obviously, our agreement was... fulfilled." He sighed. "Fine - but how?"

I shrugged - which also created interesting sensation. "I don't know. I also don't know how we undo it. Maybe..." "Yeah?"

"Let's make an agreement. I said. "I'll be the guy, and you be the girl - okay?" I held out my hand. "Agreed!" He said, enthusiastically, holding out his hand...

Nothing.

"Well, it was worth a try." He said, then his eyes flicked down. "I can tell you this - when we switch back, I'll never complain that my tits are too small again. You have no idea how weird it is to look down and see... nothing."

"Hey, I think I have some idea how weird it can be to look down and see something other than what I expect." That earned a wry smile - I was in the same situation as he was, too.

"Besides, right now I'm feeling over-endowed," I continued, "but before this happened, I thought your breasts were perfect for your build. Why on earth would you want them bigger than a C-cup?"

He flushed slightly. "Well - I guess it's because I see the way guys look at buxom women..." Me said - then an odd look came over his face - interest followed by surprise, followed by confusion, followed by... something else.

"What?" I asked, worried.

"You... you're right." He said in a strangled tone. "Those size tits look perfect on that body." Just then our drinks arrived, and he downed his vodka in one gulp.

"What's that all about?" I asked after paying the waitress - which took some time, as I had to dig out Jan's wallet from the purse on my shoulder.

"I... I find me - I mean, you - incredibly cute. You - I - look great." I frowned - then my eyes widened as I realized something.

I hadn't consciously thought about it - but I was also finding my old body quite handsome. In fact, I was probably seeing me old body exactly the way Jan had seen it, emotionally speaking.

"Uh oh..." I said, a little nauseous at the realization that I was finding a man quite attractive - even if that man was me. "We might have switched bodies - but I think certain things stayed with the original body."

"Like sexual orientation?" Brad asked. It was a rhetorical question, as we both knew the answer - despite the 'mind swap', I was now viewing men with Jan's taste in men and sexuality, and vice-versa.

No - it was even deeper than that, I realized with a sinking sensation. "What's my full name?" I asked, tapping my chest between the breasts. "Huh?" Brad asked, startled. "Jeanette Marie Brentwood, why?" "Quick! Where was I born?" I asked, urgently.

"Patterson, New...." He trailed off, confusion creasing his handsome features. "No - wait. I was born here, in New York." "Right." I said, grimly. "In Homewood Hospital. I was born in New Jersey."

"I... I don't understand. What's going on?" Brad asked, plaintively.

I signaled the waitress, and ordered two martinis. As she went to get them, I turned to my old body. "Hold on - I want to check something. How do you feel about olives?"

Brad frowned. "I don't know - never really thought about it. Why?" "Because I can't stand them. Pay for these, would you?"

He paid for the drinks, and I extracted the olive from my martini and popped it in my mouth, chewing and swallowing thoughtfully. Brad, beginning to catch on, did the same - and barely managed to get a napkin up fast enough to catch it as he spit it out. Quickly, he downed the martini to kill the taste.

"Ugh! God - that's awful."

"I know." I sympathized, having been there. "What's all this mean?" He asked.

"I don't think our minds are actually switched." I replied. "If they had been, we wouldn't be sitting here, discussing it - we would be back on the street, in hysterics."

Brad's brow furrowed. "What? But look - I almost did scream, until you..."

I held up a slender hand. "Yeah - but that was an intellectual response, not an emotional one. That's just it - intellectually, we remember being the other sex, and respond to that. But, emotionally - how do you feel?"

"I... don't know. I should be... horrified or something, but I'm... uncomfortable?" Brad said, amazed at the realization. His eyes widened. "Wait a second - are you saying that we didn't switch minds, but we switched..." He groped for the word.

"Personalities." I supplied. "I think so. We remember our other gender, and we think like the way each other thought before. We even have the short-term memories of the person we think ourselves to be. But all the long term memories, all our likes and dislikes, our sexual orientation - probably even our skills and habits - are of the body we are in." I shrugged. "That's why I'm instinctively thinking of you as male, and myself as female, despite my intellectual belief that it's the other way around."

Brad's eyes widened. "But... that means that the original 'Brad' and 'Jan' don't really exist!" He protested. "Each of us is now an... amalgam, I guess."

I sighed, and spread my hands. "That's right."

Brad looked slightly nauseous at the thought that the original Brad and Jan were gone, replaced by poor facsimiles of them, mixtures of each inhabiting shells that appeared to be the originals. Us, in other words.

Come to think of it, it made me feel slightly ill, as well. How would you like to find out that you're not... you?

"So - what do we do now?" Brad asked, shaking his head. "I mean - whose life does who live?"

I closed my eyes and considered the question - but an answer eluded me. "I'm not sure." I replied, trying to cope with all the strange revelations. "Look - why don't we go back to my place - your place - and think about it."

Brad agreed, and shortly thereafter we were in the apartment I still thought of as mine - although, buried in my mind, was the memory of renting a place to share with Donna - about whom I knew all sorts of odd details that were memories from the other 'me'.

It was enough to give me a headache - either one of me.

We sat on the bed and looked at each other. I was still shaken by the fact that I found 'myself' attractive - but not disgusted or anything, as part of me not only found it natural - but could dredge up memories of the other times 'I' had had sex with men.

That's when it struck, with so much force that it was like a physical blow, causing me to suck in a sudden breath. "What? What's wrong?" Brad asked, worried by my reaction.

I searched for the words to describe the amazing revelation. But no matter what I dragged up, it seemed... weak. I knew, with a sudden, absolute certainty, what had happened, and what it all meant. But how to explain it...?

Acting on instinct, I decided that the best way was to simply spit it out - if I was right, Brad would get it right away.

"Brad - have you ever heard of the theory about true love that says each human being is really only half a soul?" I asked. "Each person is searching for the other half, and the closer to the right soul they get, the better the love is?"

Brad shrugged - then a strange look came over his face as it registered. "Wait - are you saying..." He trailed off, and I remained silently so that he could work it out.

"You... and I..." He started, slowly, his face incredulous with the same revelation that had hit me. "We share one soul!" "I think so." I agreed. "We're not really two separate people - we're one soul in two bodies that have finally met."

He nodded slowly. "That's what happened - we were originally one 'person' in a past 'life' - and so it doesn't matter who's portion of what soul is where - we're so perfectly matched that we're interchangeable."

"It had nothing to do with that silly 'agreement' I agreed. "It's just that when we touched, each part of our shared soul went to whichever body it felt most comfortable in."

Brad looked at me the way I was no looking at him - with the absolute certainty that we were meant to be together, no matter who was in which body.

Gently I reached up and caressed the side of his stunned face, and his gaze lost the 'deep' look to focus on my. Slowly he smiled, then leaned forward and kissed me lightly on the lips. I savored the touch of him, experiencing what it felt like as a woman being kissed by this male body, but knowing what it must feel like to be in that body and be kissing me. The female viewpoint was stronger, but in some strange way, I was experiencing both sides of this kiss - as was Brad.

The kissed deepened, becoming more passionate without losing the gentleness that had started it. Even before it happened, I knew what he was going to do - his arms enveloped me the way I would have enveloped 'her' if/when I had been him. Likewise, I'm sure he knew that I was going to wrap my arms around his neck even as it happened.

That's the way it was - each of us knew the other's body and actions intimately from experience, and the way our new body was reacting was sort of 'built in' by who we were.

Of one mind, we lay back on the bed, my hands going to his pants even as his hands went to work on the clothes I wore. We needed no words - our communication ran so much deeper than that as we slowly undressed one another, luxuriating at the touch of 'our' bodies, and experiencing the way 'our' bodies felt to be touched. I shivered as his hands caressed my thigh, even as I had memories of that having been done before to 'me' - but never so perfectly, by someone who also had those memories, and knew precisely what to do.

Our lips met again as I slowly stretched out on the bed, knowing that's what 'I' liked as well as the fact that it was the position 'I' preferred. Smiling, the other 'me' that was Brad nuzzled at the hollow of my throat, then began to kiss his way down my body, hitting all the erogenous areas that he knew from experience would arouse and incite me, paying special attention to my breasts.

As he did this wonderful ballet of lips and tongue, I slid my hands over his firm flesh, feeling it as I'd never felt it before, and as I'd felt it thousands of times.

Then, right when it was perfect, he worked his way back up my body, timing it so that, as we kissed once more, his manhood entered me smoothly and painlessly just as I moved my legs and hips to accept him.

And incredible sensation filled, of finally being 'whole', somehow. I/Jan had been penetrated before, many different times and ways - but it had never been like this. Always, before, there was some barrier between her and her lover, slight miscues, slight bobbles - but not here. Each of us knew what the other was feeling and going through, and what they wanted.

And even as Brad was trying to do his utmost to satisfy me, I was doing my utmost to satisfy him.

In any other circumstance, the perfect silence in which we made love would have been eerie, unnatural - but we had transcended the need to speak, or make any sound - or single soul was the connection that bound us, and our bodies expressed our emotions.

It wasn't sex, not exactly - it was an intricate dance. We moved in unison, his warm cock filling me completely, then parting slightly to provide the space to thrust again, gently yet powerfully, filling me with intense physical pleasure from that most wonderful of friction.

But as he thrust into my wet, tight womanhood, fitting me perfectly, he was also lavishing my upper body with slow, sensual kisses, as I lavished his.

On mutual consent, knowing it was time, our rhythms increased, and I felt the familiar/new sensation of the waves of pleasure that proceeded orgasm, building and building, each overlapping wave caused by the thrust of his strokes stronger than the last.

Only when we came, simultaneously, did we make a sound - simultaneously. In one harmonic voice, we cried out, a symphony of pleasure. I rode the incredible orgasm as it shook my body with pure pleasure, leaving me feeling both drained and ultimately fulfilled, knowing that Brad felt the same way.

As we gently lay there, basking in the afterglow of our erotic verification, we smiled at each other.

"I love you, Jan. " Brad whispered, knowing that it didn't need to be said - and yet, in a very basic way, it needed to be said often and sincerely.

"I love you to. Jan." I whispered back, nuzzling his shoulder.

* * * * *

Since then, we have married. Each of us could be either person, if we wanted, in terms of our personality and memories. Out of a unspoken agreement, however, I was 'Jan' in public, where he was 'Brad' - it was easier that way. Many of our friends - and they were 'our' friends, as we each knew all of them - noticed the changes that had taken us, but subscribed it to 'true love' - which, in a way, was simply the truth.

Had the known what went on when we were alone, however, they might have begun to wonder about us.

We talk more, now, than we did at first - as we get further and further away from that night, we have to spend time apart, and that time apart gives each body a series of experiences that the other body doesn't remember. But in all the important things, we still need no communication - like oral sex. Each of us, as the other gender, had enjoyed 'catching' and disliked' pitching' - now, it is enjoyable from every perspective.

Likewise decisions on what we will do, as a 'husband and wife' unit. Although we are gathering new experiences, we still think the same way, and if - independently - somebody were to ask us a series of questions, we would each answer them exactly the same.

So, it didn't even have to be discussed when we decided to write this account of that fateful night. It's told from 'my' perspective simply because my body types faster - while our souls are one, and our mind in sync, the skill inherent to each body remains their own.

Of course, the name I've used are not our own, not that it matters. What moved us to write this account of what happened is simple - somewhere, out there, is your other half, the person that, when you meet, and touch, you will discover that words become completely unnecessary - and that all the long held beliefs that you hold now, based on what's 'right' for this gender, or what 'must be' for that gender, will become completely and utterly irrelevant.

For that is what is one of the most miraculous things, you see.

Since the dawn of time, men and women have struggled to understand one another, sometimes hating each other, sometimes envying, but always wondering the hows and whys and wherefores. Books and movies have been written trying to explain the differences, or explain how to cope with them. People have longed to be the other, while others have longed to understand other members of their own.

What we've discovered is the truth - there is no difference, and that's where all the confusion comes from. We're so busy noticing the different vessel, the way the other's body, or social position, or outward attitude differs from our own, that we never realized that, in truth, the person inside that body is exactly the same as ourselves.

Sometimes, all it takes to unscrew the inscrutable is a different point of view.

SUMMARY: This is a tale of a good-hearted American guy who goes to a foreign land and finds a mystery object that reaps him wishes from a djinni but the story unfolds in mysterious ways.

By Gunslinger

The four foreigners wandered through the darkness of midnight. Though El Dar el Beida was not exactly an earthy paradise, they had little to fear - despite their evident good humor, they were not drunk, and even the most black-hearted knave would think twice before taking on the task of relieving the Americans of their money.

Besides.. even the most greedy thief would hesitate to harm the two women of the group. One light, one dark, they were both stunning in their won way. Even the gleam of the expensive engagement and wedding rings on their slender fingers wouldn't entice anyone into violence against such visions of loveliness. Perhaps the city had fallen since it's days as a French-run colony, but the memory of what the city had once been when it had been known to the world as Casablanca was enough to bring in the tourists, and to endanger the trade was to cut the throat of the city itself, since the foreign money was it's lifeblood, supporting it's government, it's petty criminals.. and it's shopkeepers.

Such as the small man dressed in the archaic rough-spun white robes who manned the small booth. It was the only one still open, the lonely old man finding solace in the odd customer her might wander by in even the late hours of the night.

"Gentle sirs? Sweet ladies?" he called in a warbling voice, spreading his hands over the crafts displayed. "A trinket for your loved one, perhaps? I can see you are newly wed. Perhaps a gift, of gold or silver or brass? I have fine jewelry, made with my own willing hands. Perhaps a historic antiquity? Nothing of great value, but with it's own story of the past to tell..."

"No thanks.." The dark-haired man said, his bright green eyes kind as he shook his head.

"Perhaps something for your wife, kind sir?" the shop-keeper entreated the other man.. then paused, frowning slightly as he looked over his stunning, dusky bride. "Please, forgive me if I am impertinent, miss... but have we not met before?"

The dusky woman shook her head, slowly. "I.. don't think so." She glanced at her husband, as if unsure.. then shook her head more firmly. "No - this is my first time in Casablanca."

"My apologies, then, Madame - though how I could have mistaken you for someone else I shall never know, for there are few as beautiful as you. May I say that both gentlemen are very lucky indeed."

The green-eyed man laughed, kindly. "I think he's trying to flatter you into buying something, Steve." To the shopkeeper, he shook his head, genially. "Thanks anyway, but we're not interested."

The woman on his arm, however, paused and looked over the display that lay on the booth's open table, then looked at the owner with a thoughtful gaze. She whispered something into her husband's ear, and the man shrugged, turning to talk to the other couple. The three of them receded up the road away, to the only open business upon the street, a cafe. Seated at a table on the patio, the threesome could see the lone woman, who approached the vendor, her pale blonde hair gleaming in the moonlight.

"You wish to buy something, dear lady?" The man asked, hopefully.

"Perhaps, perhaps." She said, her voice musical and sweet. "I thought we might work out a trade. I think that the pendant necklace is lovely... but expensive."

"The lady has an eye for the best I have to offer. A beautiful necklace for a beautiful woman... but I fear I cannot lower the price overmuch, my lady."

"Ah - but perhaps you could if I had something of value to add in to the bargain..." The stunning woman said, digging into the large purse she had over her shoulder. "Somehow, I think it would be very appropriate for you to have this to sell..., since I have no further use for it."

She took something out of the bag, something that gleamed in the moonlight as she handed over. The proprietor of the shop took it... and his casual handling of the object became very tender indeed as his breath caught in his throat. Gently, as if the metal were of the finest china, he lay the item on the booth's counter and dug out a jeweler's loupe, through which he examined the object, verifying the impossible.

"Madame... this is a true antiquity..." He said, softly. "It is worth more than all my poor wares combined. Surely, you can not mean to trade this for the necklace?"

The woman smiled, seeing a memory rather than what lay around her. "I know it's worth more... but, until now, it's never seemed right to sell it. Here, now... it just feels right."

The vendor looked at the item, longingly... then sighed, regretfully. "I.. I cannot take this, Madame. I could not sleep at night if I were to cheat you out of this antiquities full worth."

The woman laughed, quietly. "It's worth was once beyond measure, and from that I have all the wealth of life I can imagine." She glanced up the street, where her companions awaited her, within sight but out of earshot. "If I could convince you that I have no need of it, might you trade it for the necklace?"

"In the single beat of my heart - but I do not see how it could be..." the vendor said, regretfully, knowing that his scruples kept him from making a deal that could give the remaining years of his life great comfort. More comfort than the woman would ever know...

But he could not, ever, use it for it's true worth. Perhaps others could... but not he.

"We'll see..." the woman said, mysteriously. "I think, perhaps, it would be best done by telling you a story. A story which may seem familiar in some ways... but hear me out, for I think you shall understand when I finish."

It did not matter what the story was - he would be willing to listen to her sweet voice all night, it was so lovely. Perhaps he would sell her the necklace at a loss that he could ill afford, just for the pleasure of her company.

"Then, how does this story begin?" He asked, settling comfortable into his stool. She smiled, softly. "Like all good stories start; Once upon a time. "

Jan Lindstrom let himself into his apartment, still puffing from the three sets of stairs it was necessary to climb to reach his room. Swinging the door shut behind him, Jan tossed his keys onto the small, badly scarred table in the hall, then put the plastic bag holding his purchase down long enough to take off his jacket. Grabbing the bag once more, he walked - or, he thought bitterly 'waddled' - into the living room of the inexpensive apartment he called home.

Dropping into the over-stuffed sofa, he sighed in concert with the groaning springs as they took his three-hundred-and-twenty-two pound weight. He placed the plastic bag on the coffee table, producing a dully metallic 'clunk' from it's contents.

Leaning back, Jan waited for his breath to even out, well accustomed to the handicaps of being severely overweight. He wasn't terribly tall, just about 'average' for a North American male, and that meant all the fat that swathed his body took a lot of 'oomph' to move around, oomph that took a lot out of him.

"Oh, man... If a ground-floor apartment doesn't open up soon, I'm gonna drop dead one of these days..." Jan muttered to himself, his heart still racing from the effort it had taken to haul his bulk up the three flights of stairs. Of course, the saddest part of this was how much 'ragging' he got from people about his weight.

Jan was actually one of the few people in the world who could blame all his troubles on his parents - and be right.

Part of it was semi-intentional; His parents were both of Scandinavian origin, his mother being Swedish and his father Danish. They'd given him a fairly common male name for the Scandinavian counties - 'Jan', pronounced properly as 'Yawn'. It was the Scandinavian equivalent of John, just as the Spanish equivalent was 'Juan'.

However, Jan (now so used to the 'J' that only his parent used the 'Y' sound...) could also blame his physical condition on his parents. It was simply genetics.

Of course, his parents had no way of knowing, before hand. The blonde hair, so pale as to be almost white - that was obvious from looking at his parents. The same with the ice-blue eyes they shared in common. But who could have looked at his slender parents and known that their coupling would reinforce a bad gene that would leave their son with a severe glandular problem that would make it nearly impossible to add serious muscle mass - and even harder to loose weight. Weight that would be gained so incredibly easy.

Despite what people thought, Jan didn't over eat. In fact, he had to stay on an incredibly strict diet regimen just to keep from gaining more weight. The fact that this wasn't his fault didn't matter, though. Between his bulk and his 'girlish' name, Jan was the perfect 'outcast', the butt of every joke. The societal awareness of being 'politically correct' just made things worse: Jokes no longer acceptable because of color or religion were often easily converted into 'fat' jokes, which were a hell of a lot more 'acceptable'. If he'd been better looking, his name might not have been such a big deal - like Jan Michael Vincent, from the old 'Airwolf' TV show.

When you were fat, weak and only average in the brains department, however, 'Jan' was just one more thing to make fun off...

Sighing, Jan shook his multi-chinned face, refusing to dwell (yet again) on the unfairness of fate. Instead, he opened the plastic bag and took out the item he'd purchased earlier at a estate sale.

It was a sort of dark-green in color, and roughly textured. That was the effect of oxidation on the copper/brass metal that the object was made of. Quite frankly, it looked hideous... but Jan, who (having no appreciable social life) read a lot, had realized that it would take centuries for a patina that thick to build up. The oxidation was thicker then even the one covering the Statue of Liberty, which had been exposed to salt air all these years.

So, Jan had bought the item - for the magnificent sum of twenty dollars.

He wasn't exactly sure what lay beneath that corrosion. The shape of the object was basically ovoid, though it narrowed at one end and stood on a base. However, its age meant that it was probably worth more than he'd paid for it as an antiquity.

"Well, what do I do with you...?" Jan asked the mystery object, whimsically. Jan knew that many antiquities lost a lot of their value if they were 'cleaned' the wrong way, damaging their historic condition. On the other hand, Jan could see himself waddling into a museum and proudly proclaiming he had a very ancient... thing.

"Hmmm...." Jan mused. "Maybe if I clean just the outer layers of oxidation, I could tell what you were. How's that sound?"

Since the object didn't answer, Jan chose to take that as assent. Putting it down on the table, he fetched an old towel ready for the rag-heap, then returned. Sitting back down, he began to carefully rub at the green patina coating the side of the unknown object, trying not to damage whatever it was as he rubbed at it.

The heavy oxidation began to slowly flake away under the pressure from the cloth that was acting as a very fine-grain sandpaper. Slowly, Jan's efforts got him closer and closer to the original surface, until the faint reddish-gold gleam of the metal beneath the oxidation began to shine through...

Then the object in his hands... shuddered. As if there were some small, ferocious animal inside the ancient metal, struggling to break free.

"What the...!" Jan gasped, dropping the object on the coffee table and scrambling back on the couch, staring at it in shock.

It continued to shimmy and shake, standing upright on its base as it shimmied around on the surface of the table, flakes of oxidation falling away and scales, more and more metal being exposed as it rid itself of its outer casing of oxidation the same way a dog shook water from its coat.

Jan did nothing, his already strained heart pounding so hard that he thought he'd die if he added so much as one more ounce of pressure on the organ. His breathing was rapid and shallow as he watched the object impossibly clean itself... then stop shaking, coming to a smooth halt.

Surrounded by a spray of oxidized metal, the object sat gleaming in the geometric center of the coffee-table, looking as new as if it had been crafted just moments ago. The intricately carved oval base. The graceful sweep from its rounded end to the pointed, slender spout at the other. The elaborately carved hinged lid, and the graceful handle. All free of corrosion or any other sign of age, the copper/brass lamp sat serenely in the middle of the table...

...and then a thick, dark smoke began to gush from the spout where a wick would have sat. The smoke rose in a steadily darker column... but the column didn't continue to rise to the ceiling, as it should have. Instead, it gained a thicker and thicker mass, moving from wispy smoke into something more solid as (impossibly!) it drifted a few feet to the left and downwards, coming to rest on the floor in front of the coffee table.

Then, with a muffled 'pop' of displaced air, the column of dark, dense smoke suddenly solidified...

...into the form of a stunningly beautiful young woman.

She was of slightly less than average height, with a body that was best described as 'lush'. Her skin was dusky, a rich, warm shade somewhere between Mediterranean 'olive' and Mulatto 'Coffee-and-Cream'. Matching her dark complexion were her long, thick mane of loose black curls that spilled around her willfully beautiful face, and the dark, sensual eyes that face boasted. Though she wore no make-up, her face was flawless, from her heavy-lidded eyes to her full, sensual mouth.

She had an exaggerated hourglass figure, wide hips and large, firm breasts framing a slender, supple waist. Her legs were toned and smooth, as were her arms, nicely muscled and toned without being too 'masculine'. She was, quite simply, gorgeous - and it was easy to see that her body was as flawless as her face, because she was dressed in a short, simple black cotton skirt and a matching 'vest' that displayed her earth-toned body to perfection.

Jan had still not moved - but now it was a case of not being able to move. Every muscle in his body had locked into the position they were in, refusing to accept orders from a brain that was doing very little to give any, too busy trying to deny what his own senses were telling him, while categorizing the information and dealing with it anyway.

'It's just not possible...' Jan's mind insisted, numbly. 'There is no such thing...!'

Then the woman spoke. In a melodic voice that sounded like clear spring water rippling over a stone-lined creek bed, she spoke in a foreign tongue that was musical and smooth, as she put her hands together and made a short, sinuous bow.

Jan was amazed to find his mouth actually worked... somewhat. "Huh?"

The woman looked at him for a moment, then closed her eyes. Her face bore the expression of somebody searching their mind for the bon mot... then her eyes opened, and she bowed once more.

"Greetings, Master." She said, and although she was speaking in English, her voice and accent made the words as melodic as the language she'd spoken first, exotic and enticing. "I am Al'Lysahari, Djinni of Lamp. Your wish is my command, oh Master."

Jan gaped at her, his brain registering both the words - and the faintly resigned tone they were uttered in. "You... You're a... a Genie?" He gasped. "Like, in 'three wishes'...? Like in 'Aladdin'...?"

The woman's finely arched eyebrow rose. "You know of Al'Addin, Master?"

"I, uh... Yeah, I know the story..." Jan stammered. "But, I mean... nobody thinks it's real! I.. I don't..." the woman smiled slightly. "I understand, Master. I have been trapped within the ethereal realm for many centuries, and the Djinn have faded into memory. The stories which you know must be confused and half-lost in the mists of antiquity. I shall explain, Master..."

Jan held up one chubby hand. "Wait, wait - My name's Jan. You don't need to keep calling me 'Master'."

She smiled again, this time with a little more authority. "Thank you... Jan. I have had eleven other masters in my time, and all luxuriated in having a being as powerful as I to command. I thank you for your courtesy."

"Oh... it's nothing..." Jan stammered, uncomfortable. The thought of having this woman (Djinni or mortal) at his beck and call was intriguing... yet somehow offensive to his American sensibilities, too close to the taboo of slavery. "What... What did you say your name was? Alesha Hawri?"

"Al'Lysahari." She repeated - and saw him frown as the exotic word rolled out, tinged with the inflections of a language he'd never learned.

"Ah,I-eeshaa-hhaw'rie?" He said, slowly. "Is that closer?"

She smiled. "Closer, Mas.. Jan. However, if you wish, you may call me whatever you wish. My past Master's seemed to prefer either 'Djinn', or what would translate into 'Slave'."

"Umm..." Jan stammered. "Would.. would 'Alesha' be all right with you?" "As you wish, Jan." Alesha said, bowing low. "I hear, and obey."

Jan winced at that. "Look, uh, Alesha... why don't you sit down, make yourself comfortable... and explain to me what the hell is going on?" He grinned, wryly. "I'm still not sure I believe this happening, no matter what my eyes say I've just seen."

The gorgeous, dusky woman smiled in return, moving with a sinuous grace to the over-stuffed armchair flanking the coffee-table and lowering herself into it. "Thank you, Jan."

She took a second to gather her thoughts, then began to explain.

"I am a Djinni - a female Djinn. The Djinn are once-mortal beings that found a way to tap into the mystical powers of the universe. There were thirty-two of us, members of a group of intellectuals who gained this power through study in the mystic arts..." She sighed. "I fear that our own ambitions were our downfall. We came to think of ourselves as superior to other, less powerful, mortals. We took control of the country of our birth, Djinnara, then began to expand our influence ever outward, using our seemingly unstoppable powers with little regard as to the pain we might cause. However, in our hubris, we never considered that others might have tapped into this power as well - and be stronger than us."

Jan leaned forward, his eyes bright in the flesh folds that surrounded them as he listened to Alesha's tale with rapt attention. "Our.. misuse of power, to enslave people to our will, finally drew the attention of one such man, one more powerful then all of us together. We thought we'd discovered this power and were it's only disciples, but this man had been studying the power for many years, and knew it's intricacies. We were as children to he, and so he defeated us - and punished us. Each of us were cast into the ethereal realm, where our mystical powers held no sway. There we were doomed to remain, never changing. A prison in which to regret our sins at leisure. However, there was a way to escape. Each of us were bound to an item. With this talisman, we could be called forth, back to the world of men. Once there, our powers were carefully limited. We could not - can not - use them freely, but only in service to the one who brought us forth. Though enslaved to the owner of the talisman, we were able to live as mortals once more, serving the desires of whoever our Master might be, until the death. Then, once more, we were returned to the ethereal realm, there to remain in purgatory until once more called forth."

Jan felt a stab of pity. "You mean - you're doomed to an eternity of either imprisonment or servitude?"

Alesha shook her head, slowly. "Nay, Jan - for there is on one condition that we may be granted our freedom, and or mortality. Though a slim one, it has been enough to free all those imprisoned. For the past seven centuries, I alone have occupied the Ethereal realm. I am the last of the Djinn."

Seven hundred years of being trapped, alone... Jan's eyes felt moist, and his heart ached. "What's the one condition, Alesha? What does it take to free you?"

Alesha sighed. "The nature of the magic is such that no wish, once enacted, can be directly revoked. Further wishes can change it, even to the point that it is as if the wish were revoked. However, should the mystical powers ever try to be used to undo something, to remove the magical 'energy' of the initial spell... then, upon the granting of it, my powers would forever be lost, and I would once more be mortal, free to live the rest of my remaining years as best I can."

Jan sighed. "And nobody wanted to waste one of their three wishes setting you free, right?"

Alesha looked confused. "No, Jan. The number of wishes I may grant you is not limited, other then by my own mystical strengths." Jan blinked. "Wait - you mean I can have as many wishes as I want?"

She nodded. "Yes, Jan. I am your servant, until you die, or somebody else takes possession of the lamp. In the past, my masters have wished for a as secure a vault or strong-room as they could describe, to safeguard my lamp. In any case, as long as you are my master, I exist to serve you as you command. However, I must tell you that the Djinn are not all-powerful. As I have said, we were but neophytes in the Mystical Arts when we began, and have only grown somewhat better since. Each wish I grant weakens my Mystical powers, and I must rest before I can once more use them. 'Recharge my batteries', if what I have learned of your language is correct."

"Oh. How long does it take?" Jan asked.

"That would depend on the power of the wish - and I cannot know of that beforehand." Alesha explained. "The outcome of your wishes is not determined by myself, but by the mystical forces that rule the universe. I only serve as a conduit to those forces. Should you wish to be 'the smartest man in the world', the mystical forces might make you more intelligent - or they might find it easiest to make the rest of humanity less intelligent. The forces always take the easiest route to grant the request, though it may not be obviously the 'easiest'. However, there are some simple guidelines. Should you wish for any material object, unless you specify that you wish for something to turn into something else, that object would simply be transported to here."

Jan blinked. "Oh - so if I wished for a new car, the 'magic' would just steal one off of a car lot somewhere... but if I wished for this couch to be turned into a new car, then it would be one that never existed before the wish?"

"Yes." Alesha agreed. "However, simply 'transporting' the car in the first wish would be less strenuous than creating a new one, so I would have to rest longer after creating something."

"Okay, gotcha. Anything else I need to know?"

Alesha nodded. "Yes. I cannot create or destroy life. I may alter its form, even its thoughts - but the life itself is inviolate. I have no power over life or death."

Jan's mind was slowly catching up with 'reality', such as it was. The entire world seemed to have shifted five feet to the left, what he'd always taken for granted shifting out of phase. It had left him with two choices - either accept what seemed to be happening, or reject it.

It was an odd dilemma. If this wasn't really happening, then to accept it would be 'crazy', making him insane. But if it was happening, and he refused to believe it, he'd be equally insane, refusing to deal with reality. He'd finally managed to convince himself that he had no choice to accept this as real, and deal with it accordingly...

...which brought all sorts of interesting thoughts to mind.

"Uh... so, I can make a wish, and it'll be granted, right?" Jan asked, finding himself excited and nervous and wonderful tense. "Yes, Jan - if it is within my powers." Alesha nodded.

"Well, you probably noticed I'm, uh... 'heavy-set'." Jan said, self-consciously. His mind was carefully working out the 'safest' wording of the wish as he went on. "I wish that my body's fat-to-muscle ratio would fall within that of a healthy, active North American male of my height."

Alesha grinned. "Very well worded, Jan. Very well, so be it..."

She closed her eyes, and her breath slowed as she went tense, like somebody struggling to lift a weight... but the exertions weren't physical. The 'muscles' she was flexing were metaphysical, mystical ones that tapped into something most people didn't even know existed, much less believed in.

There was a short pause - that seemed, to Jan, to last an eternity...

...then Jan gasped as he felt a rippling sensation run through his body, and the weight he'd carried all his life seemed to simply melt away, running from his body into another realm.

"Holy shit!" Jan gasped, as his now too-large clothing settled around his new frame. He rose quickly from the couch, having to hold his pants up with one hand as he shuffled into the bathroom for a look in the mirror.

A complete stranger looked back at him. Oh, it wasn't that he had become somebody else or anything - but after having them buried in layers of fat all his life, his facial features looked new and strange to Jan as he stared in amazement at himself. Heedless, mind spinning, he let his too-large pants fall around his ankles as he hauled off the too-baggy sweatshirt to look at his body.

He was... average. Well, maybe not precisely 'average'. If anything, he was on the 'thin' side, with a nice layer of muscles that were quite visible on his almost fat-free frame, despite not being particularly bulky.

For the first time in his life, Jan moved easily, without winding himself in any way as he ran into the bedroom to grab his bathrobe, laughing aloud at the easy way his lighter, fitter body moved. He felt so.. free. Free of the prison of lard that had encased his body for as long as his memories ran.

"I'm thin!" he shouted, ecstatically, running back to the living room...

...to find Alesha smiling at him weakly, obviously enjoying his ecstatic reaction. However, that enjoyment was tempered by the drawn look on her face, and the light sheen of sweat that covered her brow. Whatever performing magic was like, it had a physical toll - she looked as if she'd just been forced to lift and carry a tremendous weight.

"Are you all right?" Jan asked, stunned by how weary a single wish made the beautiful, dusky woman look.

"The wish was more complex than you may have considered, Jan..." She said, weakly. "It is your physical make-up that caused your weight problem, from a pair of damaged genes from each of your parents. The force that Magic is part of had to reach into the past and eliminate that recessive gene from your parents, but removing it from your parents' parents. It was a wish that affected more than just yourself..." She sighed. "However, I am not damaged, only tired. I shall be fine after some rest. I will return to the Ethereal realm, and you may call upon me when you have need of my service again."

"Well, if that's what you want, then..." Jan said, still upset that something he'd done could have made her so tired - but unable to feel wonderful about what effect had been produced. He was fit, thin - more alive than he could remember being.

"What I wish is not relevant..." Alesha said - and in the resigned bitterness of her voice, the true weight of her centuries of life came through. "I am but a servant, and the Ethereal Realm my prison."

Jan started - and the words were coming out of his mouth without any thought. "I wish you never had to return to the Ethereal realm, unless you do so voluntarily."

Alesha blinked, twice... and when she spoke, her voice was husky with emotion.

"That...is the first time somebody has ever used a wish to..." She took a deep breath. "You do realize that the only way to revoke that wish would be to set me free? I do not wish to return to the Ethereal realm, ever, so I will remain here until your death condemns me back to it."

Jan's words had been instinctive - but he didn't regret them, not one iota. "That's fine. I don't want you imprisoned or enslaved. Alesha, I know that the.. the 'punishment' makes you my servant... but there's a world of difference between 'servant' and 'slave', and I want you to understand that."

Alesha smiled. "Thank you, Jan..."

Jan smiled back at her. "Well - I'm going to go out and enjoy my body.... I might even run, just for the hell of it. Give me a couple of minutes to get changed, then this apartment will be all yours until I get back. You can watch TV, read, take a nap... whatever you'd like."

"Thank you." Alesha said again, softly. "I.. I had not thought it possible for anyone to be so kind to a Djinn..."

Jan laughed, wryly. "Mankind had more or less forgotten the Djinn, other than myth. Your sins are forgotten. The only way I know how to treat you is as another person. Think you can live with that?"

"Oh, yes... Jan." Alesha said.

Jan grinned at her, still amazed at what was occurring, at the wondrous magic surrounding his life all of the sudden.

Heading into his room, he searched through his clothes for something that would fit his slimmer figure. He made do with a pair of too- large jeans with a belt cinched as tight as it would go, and a T-shirt that was now very baggy indeed. At least an old pair of sneakers fit just fine.

Grabbing his wallet and keys, he went back into the living room. "So, you'll be okay until I get back" He asked, and Alesha nodded.

"I think I'll take that nap."

"Okay, then." Jan said, heading out. He hurried down the stairs, enjoying the way they seemed to fly past his feet in a way he'd never dared before. He felt so light that it seemed he could literally fly, if he jumped hard enough. Even the exertion of thundering down three flights of stairs didn't leave him winded, his heart rate only slightly elevated.

Humming happily to himself, he headed towards the library, a place of refuge and solace. Now, he had the feeling he wouldn't be spending as much time in it's quiet interior, but it was as good as any other place to go, and he enjoyed the walk, the sun streaming down on him as he walked with a happy bounce in his step, heart flooded with joy and wonder.

Going into the library, he looked around and headed toward the fiction section. Many of his days had been spent sitting in one of the chairs in the 'reading room', living vicariously through the printed word within the enclosed confines of the walls. Now, he still felt like reading, but he figured he'd check a book out and read it somewhere else. Before, he'd avoided being in public when he could. Now, he could glory in it, knowing he wasn't the 'fat fuck' he'd heard people refer to him as, and not all that quietly either. Now, he was just one more guy walking the streets, and that was like a great weight off his now trim shoulders.

Picking up a Heinlein from the SF stack, he happily tossed it from hand to hand as he went to the counter, fishing his library card out of his pocket and sliding it and the book across to Leanne, one of the girls who worked there.

She glanced at the card... then frowned.

"I'm sorry, sir.." She said stiffly, a tone she'd never used with Jan before. Tall, skinny, with lanky brown hair and large glasses, Leanne was usually very friendly with him - now she was calling him 'sir' in a tone so carefully correct that it bordered on insult. "... we don't allow patrons to lend their cards. If you wish one of your own, I'd be happy to fill out a form. It'll be ten dollars, if you live locally, or forty dollars if you are an out-of-town resident."

Jan blinked. "What? No - that's my card right there, Leanne."

She looked at him narrowly, her jaw twitching. "Sir, I know the owner of this card quite well. You are not him." Jan was stunned. "But... Leanne, it's me. Jan. I've just lost all that weight. Really - it's me!"

Her head cocked to the side, and her smile was icy. "I'll admit that you sound like Jan. Perhaps you're a brother? A cousin? Be that as it may, Jan was in here just yesterday, and somebody doesn't loose that much weight overnight. Nice try... but no go."

Jan gaped at Leanne for a moment, mind whirling. He remembered how different he'd looked in the mirror when he'd seen his face... and how different he would look, compared to his ID.

People who hadn't seen him in a year or more might believe he was Jan - but to anybody else, he'd have a hard time proving it, until he got around to updating his ID to match his thin new face.

It was something that hadn't occurred to Jan before he'd made the wish. Now, he felt a trickle of cold sweat on his forehead at the thought that he might not be able to get people to believe he was... himself.

He knew Leanne pretty well. Out of his poor social life, his acquaintance with her was probably one of the strongest 'bonds' he had with any human being. If he couldn't convince her...

"Look, Leanne - it really is me." Jan said, in as steady tone as he could manage. "I know it's hard for you to believe that I've lost all that weight overnight, but I have. Go ahead, and ask me anything about the conversations we've had while you were stocking shelves in the reading room. Remember the time you told me about you Uncle Frank, and how drunk he was at you High School Graduation?"

Leanne's face closed up even tighter, and now she was regarding him with true hostility, which confused Jan until she spoke, in clipped, sharp tones.

"I don't know what sort of joke you and Jan are trying play, but you can tell him that I don't appreciate him discussing our private conversations with other people." Her jaw muscles flexed, angrily. "I can't bar him from the library... but since you aren't the cardholder and you're trying to use it, I can implement this rule.."

She tapped one of the rules printed on the back of the plastic card. There were a half-dozen rules regulating the use of the card... and at the bottom, just above the spot where Jan's signature was, was the line saying that the card could be revoked if any of the rules were broken. As Jan watched, wide-eyed, Leanne took out a pair of scissors and smoothly cut the card into two, theatrically dropping the halves of the card into the garbage.

"You can tell Jan that there will be a ten dollar charge for another card." She shook her head, angrily, then pointedly turned away.

Felling as if she'd just punched him in the gut, Jan turned away from the desk and went outside, his good mood shattered by the unexpected side-effect to the instant loss of weight.

"Dammit...!" He muttered to himself, seeing the pitfall in hindsight. "I shoulda wished that I'd loose the weight.. say, over the next month. I still would have ended up thin - but without this happening..."

Wandering aimlessly, he found himself tracing his steps to the local Coffee Shop, a place where he spent some of his time when not 'hiding' in the security of his apartment or the library.

Pulling open the glass doors, he walked in and wandered over to the counter. Mark, a regular server, was working today, and he'd served Jan many a time in the past. As Mark looked up, Jan held his breath, hoping for a flicker of recognition in his eyes...

"Can I help you, sir?" Mark inquired with a professional smile, not the slightest look of recognition showing. Jan sighed.

"Yeah, uh a black coff..." He paused, suddenly, realizing that it was no longer necessary to keep to his strict regimen. "Uh... what would you say is the best coffee. Taste-wise, I mean?" mark blinked. "Well, I like the Italian Cappuccino, personally."

"Fine - gimme one of those." Jan said. He watched as Mark prepared the rich - and fattier - coffee. Paying for it, Jan wrapped a couple of napkins around the side of the waxed cardboard cup to insulate his hand, then wandered outside with it, opening the tear-top lid to let the coffee cool a bit before taking a sip.

When he finally did take a sip, he found the coffee rich and sweet, like a liquid candy-bar... or what Jan thought a coffee-flavored candy bar would be like, not having eaten much candy in his life. He sipped at the delicious, hot beverage as he slowly made his way back to his apartment, at a loss as to what else to do. When he'd left the apartment, he'd been on top of the world, planning to share his good fortune with the few people he knew, show off his trim new figure in public... but what good was that, when nobody would know it was him? Leanne wouldn't accept that it was him, even on argument, and mark hadn't shown even the faintest flicker or recognition.

This 'wishing' business had pitfalls that Jan was going to have to watch more carefully in the future. At least this was a fairly minor quibble, and the fact that he was fit and light on his feet for the first time in his life went quite a ways towards blunting the sting of it's unexpected consequences. At least hindsight had shown him what he should have wished, which meant he had a good chance of learning the 'rules' of magic and avoiding any serious trouble in the future.

He hoped.

He let himself into his apartment, enjoying the ease with which he'd climbed the stairs. Closing the door behind him, he tossed the empty coffee cup onto the table in the hall and started into the living room...

Then slowed to a tip-toeing crawl, seeing Alesha sprawled out on the couch, a small grin on her full lip as she napped. She was curled up, one of the throw-pillows tucked between her sandwiched arms under her head, and she looked so utterly peaceful and content that Jan couldn't even imagine disturbing her slumber.

As silently as possible, he crept into his room. Pulling the comforter off the bed, he carried it back into the living room and gently draped it over her. Smiling down at her content expression one last time, he went to the bookshelf on one wall and extracted one of Spider's Callahan collections. Carefully lowering himself into the armchair, he opened to book and quickly lost himself in the words within.

Sometime later, he heard a small, undeniable sound that was one of the unclassifiable noises made by a person in the process of waking up. Jan realized just how much his life had been missing as she thought how wonderfully intimate hearing a woman make that sound was.

"Sleep well, Alesha?" HE asked, quietly, as his genie blinked and looked around.

"Yes, Mas... Jan. Thank you..." She paused, looking down at the comforter around her. "You?" "yeah. Thought you might be a little chilly." Jan said, blushing slightly.

"Thank you, again." She sat up and stretched, and Jan watched the way the smoothly contoured muscles of her body flexed and contracted. He cleared his throat in mild embarrassment.

"Uh... I was going to order something for dinner. Do you... I mean, do Djinn... eat?"

She smiled, gently. "I have not eaten in so long I cannot even remember the flavor of food, Jan. While I am a 'genie', I do not need to eat or sleep. In fact, in the Ethereal realm, it is not possible to do either, though it's very nature fulfills the physical requirements that I miss. However, this is the first time I have slept in longer then I can remember. To ask that I also be allowed to eat, as well, is more then I dare ask."

Jan took a deep breath, closing his eyes. When he was sure he had a reign on the emotions her resignation had caused, he spoke.

"Alesha, whatever else you may be, you are my guest here. Of course you can have something to eat. I want you to realize that you are welcome here as you would be were you a mortal, and free to do what you wish. Okay?"

The expression on her face told the story, and almost broke Jan's heart. She'd been trapped in this existence for centuries, and hope had faded to the barest wisp of pain deep in her soul. She wanted to believe... but was also afraid to.

"Yes, Jan." She said, softly. "Thank you."

Most of the stuff Jan had on hand was low-fat for his eternal diet... and he was damned he was going to eat that.

"How's pizza grab you?" he asked, going to the table with the phone on it and pulling the phone book out from beneath it.

"I do not know, Jan. Whatever you choose will be fine." Alesha said. Jan made the call and ordered a pizza, then sat back down, grinning boyishly.

"To tell you the truth - I don't know how good pizza will be, either. It's one of the things I can't... couldn't... eat on my diet."

"I am glad that you are enjoying your wish, Jan." Alesha said... which caused Jan to sigh. He told Alesha what had happened, and the unexpected consequence of his wish.

"Oh, Jan - I am sorry." Alesha said, looking genuinely upset. She sighed. "I do not usually care what happens to my Master, since I am but a servant for them. You have been so kind with me, Jan, that I wish I had control over my power... but I do not."

"That's all right, Alesha." Jan said, touched. "It's not your fault."

Soon after, the pizza arrived, along with the two-liter bottle of pop that came with it - and dinner was a roaring success, as far as Jan was concerned.

"What is this nectar!" Was Alesha's exclamation upon her first sip of the pop, and Jan had to laugh. The idea that it was an inexpensive, common beverage was hard for Alesha to grasp, even though she knew it intellectually anyway. In her time as a mortal, many years ago, sweeteners like sugar and honey had been rare and valued, so the difference between intellectual understanding and personal experience left her agog.

The pizza was likewise a big hit for both of them, it's rich flavors, thick cheese, crispy crust... even the grease itself, all were new and wonderful to both of them, and they gorged themselves on ten pizza happily, laughing and joking like a couple of kids as they enjoyed the experience for the first time, their radical different backgrounds converging in this new experience.

Alesha explained how, in the first moments of being released, she'd tapped into the mystical power to 'update' herself on the world, and Jan's culture in particular. She'd gained all the knowledge she'd needed to understand the language and the references... but it was just that, knowledge - not experience, which was something different altogether. Like the difference between being told what sex was like, and experiencing it.

"Oh - 'Book Learning'." Jan grinned. "It's like reading about something rather than actually seeing it." Alesha blinked. "I suppose so. I would not know - I do not know how to read."

"What?" Jan asked, astonished.

"That is not true." She allowed. "I learned, many centuries ago, how to read Djinnari... but it is a completely different type of reading. I have learned that it is close enough to what you call Arabic that I can puzzle that out... but I do not know how to read English."

"Huh.." Jan said, nonplused. "Uh... if I wished that you could read English, would that work?"

Now it was her turn to be nonplused. "Yes, of course... but would you do that for me? After, I would not be able to grant another wish until tomorrow, at the earliest."

Jan shrugged. "I can't see why a night's wait for my next wish would hurt..." He stopped, thoughtfully. "Come to think of it - I could tell you what my next wish is, now... and then you could grant it when you have the power. Would that work?"

"Oh, yes, Jan - many of my previous masters have told me a wish that was to be granted as soon as I had enough power." "Okay - well, then, I wish you could read and write English." Jan said, and once more that look crossed her face.

Whatever was involved with her learning English, it must have been a big wish... when it finally finished, she slumped back in the chair. However, she seemed not to mind the exhaustion, as she smiled at him in a way that made her look like she was little girl on Christmas.

"Can I read something, Jan? Please?" She begged.

Jan grinned. "Sure - there's an entire shelf of books in the living room. Go ahead and read whatever you want." "Oh, thank you!" Alesha gushed, getting out of the chair...

"Oh, Alesha..." Jan said - and was shocked to see her reaction.

Jan had once known a guy who owned a 'pound' dog, whose previous owner had beaten it. One day, Jan had been rubbing the dog, which was curled happily on his lap... and then Jan had coughed. The dog had cringed, tail dropping, obviously believing itself about to be yelled at or beaten...

...but it had made no move to escape the beating it believed it was about to receive. Instead, stricken, it had just awaited the blow that never came. The look on Alesha's face was like that of the dog, and Jan's heart felt like it was going to tear in two. She was utterly convinced, deep down, that no matter how nice he seemed, he was just biding his time to 'pull the carpet' out from under her, returning her to the life she'd resigned herself to being her own.

In that instant, Jan swore to himself that he'd make whatever wishes he felt were absolutely necessary... and then set her free. "I just wanted to apologize about the couch." Jan said, gently. "I'm afraid that's the only bed I can offer you."

The look on her face slid away. "Oh, no, Jan - it is more than I could hope for. Thank you." She was obviously eager to try her new abilities... but, in her mind, she'd just been put in her place, shown that she must serve her master before her own desires. "You have a wish you wanted to tell me, for as soon as I am ready?"

Jan sighed at her tone, knowing that her hope and trust would be a long, hard thing to bring back to life. He nodded, slowly, giving her what she thought she needed before she could 'relax' for the rest of the night.

"Just let me word this one out properly." Jan said, as she sat back down, obediently waiting to serve her Master - which made him want to sob. No matter her sins, nobody deserved to end up this... this beaten. He closed his eyes, as much to cut off the sight of her as to concentrate on the right words.

"Okay." He said, finally, opening his eyes. "This one's a doozie, and it'll probably take a lot out of you."

'..and if it works the way I hope, then it'll be the last real wish I make before I set you free...' He thought, but didn't say it. She wouldn't have believed him if he had. The only way he could prove his good intentions to her was to do it.

Taking a deep breath, he gave his wish.

"I wish that I was popular, well known and well liked by at least fifty percent of the people in a ten-mile radius, all of whom know me on sight and by name."

Alesha looked stunned. "Indeed, a well-worded wish, Jan - and it will indeed be quite... tiring. I think I shall have enough strength if I sleep six hours to..."

Jan held up his hand, stopping her.

"I'm going to go to bed now." Jan said, looking at a clock. "It's eight-thirty. I don't want you to grant that wish until at least eight thirty tomorrow morning. Understand?"

She looked startled - but she nodded. Jan smiled at her. "Okay. So you can go ahead and read for awhile, and get a good night's sleep when you're ready. Okay?"

"Yes, Jan. thank you."

Jan wasn't really tired yet, but he went to his room anyway, not wanting to make Alesha uncomfortable - no matter how polite or even friendly she was, he could now see the tension in her as she waited for him to become like all her previous masters, uncaring despots only interested in her power and servitude.

He had another book-shelf in his room, and from it he selected a novel he'd enjoyed before. Undressing and sliding into the bed, he opened the book and began to read. In no time, he was deeply involved in the book's plot and characters, losing track of the outside world as he read.

About one-thirty in the morning, the book slipped from his fingers as he drifted off into sleep.

* * * * *

The morning sunlight streaming in the window pushed Jan further towards consciousness, and he moaned in his sleep and shifted position, turning his head away from the light that was brighter than that of the lamp he'd inadvertently left on all night. One hand flopped over, sliding across his stomach...

...and his half-awake brain wondered where the hell that huge gut it should be feeling had gotten to. That pushed him further to wakefulness, enough that he remembered the incredible events of the day before.

"Alesha..." Jan whispered to himself, convincing himself it wasn't all some sort of dream. Sitting up, he threw off his sheets, staring down at his lean new body. Happily, he ran his hands over his flat chest and taut abs. This was the body he'd always wanted, and if the wish he'd made last night had worked out, even the 'recognition' problem would be solved... not to mention his lack of social life. If everything went as planned, then his life was about to get immeasurably better...

"Shoulda wished for clothes that fit, too..." Jan thought, looking down at the baggy underwear he was wearing, the elastic tied in knots on either side to keep the baggy undergarment on his now slimmer waist and hips. It looked ludicrous, enveloping his crotch in such a large, bunched tangle that you couldn't tell what lay below. Shaking his head, he reached in to shift his cock...

For a second, he just didn't know what to do with the sensations. The smooth crotch under his hand, with its light mass of pubic hair. Where his fingers should have met his cock, though, they slid across something completely different, leaving him merely confused for a second...

Then he gasped, loudly, and tore off his underwear...

...revealing a crotch that 'boasted' an undeniable vagina,. It's glistening folds clearly visible in his platinum-blond pubic hair. "Holy shit!" Jan screamed. "I've got a cunt...!"

Shocked and horrified, he rolled off the bed, hands roaming his crotch as if they expected the new womanhood there to vanish and be replaced by his familiar genitalia. He slammed against the wall of the hallway, uncoordinated in his shock, as he hurried out to the living room, where Alesha was reading, curled up on the couch. She'd already started to get up at his shout, and now she rose quickly as he entered the room.

"Master! What's wrong?" she asked, looking tired and drawn from having granted his wish an hour and a half ago.

"A cunt!" He shouted, nearly incoherent. It didn't matter - he was pointing to his crotch with his hands, making his complaint obvious. "What the hell happened, Alesha? How did my wish to be popular give me a cunt?"

Alesha looked stricken at her gender-mixed Master. "I.. Oh, my God.. I'll.. hang on, I'll find out..."

Hyperventilating, Jan felt as if he were about to pass out as he slumped into the arm-chair, still trying to wrap his mind around the fact that he was no longer, strictly speaking, male.

Alesha tapped into the mystical power, learning what had happened much the way she'd 'updated' herself on American culture. When she opened her eyes, sorrow glistened in them.

"Oh, Mas.. Jan..." She said, sorrowfully. "I could never have predicted this is what would come from your wish!"

Her sorrow made a dent in Jan's panic, and he managed to get a hold of himself a bit. "No - it's not your fault, Alesha. I know you don't control how my wish is granted. But what happened?"

Alesha sighed. "Well, when you wished to be thinner, your genetic make-up was changed to do so... but nobody's memory was changed, so everybody remembered you the way you had been."

"I noticed..." Jan said, shifting uncomfortably in the chair as he tried to get used to the odd sensation of not having to find a comfortable position for his cock and balls. It was like the feeling you got when you left the house and knew you'd forgotten something... only worse, because he knew damned well what was missing.

"This time, your wish affected everybody in a ten-mile radius, so there had to be an 'excuse' for you being liked by over half the population." Alesha said.

"How the hell does that explain.. this?" Jan asked, gesturing at his crotch.

"Well... You look like a guy, but you have the hormones and emotions of a woman..." Alesha explained. "That makes you the perfect 'guy friend' to a lot of women, and yet you still hang out with the guys. Nobody knows about, uh... that, so you're not labeled a 'freak'. In the revised memories of everybody, you're a 'buddy', but you never get too close to anybody, so nobody will find out your secret.

You've got lot's of 'pal' type friends... but no sex life..."

"Well, the 'sex life' part hasn't changed, then..." Jan muttered. "But this isn't what I wanted when I wished to be popular. You have to do something!"

"I know. You'll have to figure out what you want to wish." Alesha said. "But, I won't be able to do it until later today. I'm just to drained. I need to relax, sleep, stay calm and quite to build up my strength..."

Jan looked at her drawn, weary face and nodded. Considering how wide-ranging his wish had been, he could see the stress he'd put on her. If only he hadn't been so damned 'greedy'. Would it have hurt to wish to have a couple of good friends, nothing more...?

"Okay, okay. But what the heck am I supposed to do until you're ready? I mean.. I'm a freak!"

"Yes - but we're the only ones who know it." Alesha pointed out. "Since history as actually been changed, the clothes in your closet have changed, too, and the 'new history' you would have bought clothes to help hide the fact that, uh... you know. I know it's not much comfort... but just pretend that you're the same as always."

Jan opened his mouth to argue... then sighed. What else could he do...?

He drummed his fingers on the edge of the seat, then rose. "Okay, I'm going to get a shower and then get dressed. Before I go out, though, I'm going to write out my next few wishes and leave them here with you. I don't want you to strain yourself, but grant them as quickly as you can, okay?"

"Yes, Jan..." Alesha agreed.... and, despite his condition, Jan almost wished she'd argue, rather than meekly submit. Then again... she didn't really have a choice...

Jan showered quickly, loath to touch his new vagina as he washed. Other than that, though, he found the taut, fit body beneath his hands to be a wonderful sensation, reminding him that (mistakes or not) he was getting a better life than before. Once he'd gotten these 'little' glitches worked out, he'd be both fit and popular - since he wasn't going to 'revoke' either of those wishes, just modify them. Then, once he had it all straightened out, he'd make some meaningless wish, then immediately wish it undone... and that would set Alesha free...

He toweled off, shuddering slightly at the disturbingly pleasant sensation the cloth made as it brushed his altered crotch. Padding into his bedroom, he checked out the revised wardrobe the fictional 'other history' version of him had bought.

Sure enough, the selection consisted mainly of baggy jeans and long, baggy sweatshirts that would hang over the crotch area. Even if his fly was down, the sweatshirt would keep anybody from seeing (or not seeing) something that would make them wonder.

He dressed quickly, then sat down at the desk in the corner of his room and pulled out a pad of paper and began to write out rough-copy wishes, searching for the safest way to make the 'correction' wishes, to improve his life. Finally, he thought he had what he wanted, and checked them over again. Nodding to himself, he folded the slip of paper he'd written the final copies on, and took it out to the living room.

Alesha was already asleep on the couch, so Jan put the paper down on the table, glad that he'd wished her the ability to read. That way he didn't have to hang around the apartment, trying to be silent so she could get enough sleep to grant his wishes quickly. As much as he found the thought of going out in public like this disturbing, she was right - nobody would know.

Looking down at her sleeping face, thinking about the look she'd given him last night - the 'whipped dog' look, Jan shook his head and murmured regretfully to himself.

Though he'd kept his voice low, being so close to her must have made her hear him, even subconsciously - she stirred, a muttered sound emerging, unrecognizable, from her throat as a worried frown crossed her face, exaggerating how worn and tired she was. Sorry he'd almost woken her from her nap, Jan tried to be utterly silent as she rose and backed away from her. As he did so, he caught sight of the phone... and thoughtfully pushed the ringer switch to 'off'. God knew he didn't get that many phone calls, but there was no reason why a long-distance company calling to get Jan to switch to their newest plan should wake Alesha.

Padding quietly to the door, Jan grabbed his keys from the table and let himself out. He headed down the stairs, wondering where to go.

Well - might as well go to the library and see if his 'popularity' had erased yesterday's little argument altogether. As far as Jan could figure, what happened yesterday wouldn't have had any reason to happen in the altered time-line, where it would be a recognizable 'him' using his card.

Oddly enough, Jan found himself semi-appreciating the 'missing' cock and balls as he jogged towards the library. Not that he wanted to keep his new vagina, no - but not having them 'get in the way' made jogging more... comfortable.

Of course, the only sort of quick movements he'd done was yesterday in his slender body. Now, he figured he might as well get whatever he could out of the - most definitely - temporary situation. God knew, there wasn't much he could get enjoyment out of, considering that he'd been magically emasculated. Worse... 'enfeminized'? Hmmm... his situation might call for a whole new vocabulary...

He grinned wryly at the thought as he slowed to a walk near the library. Not because he was tired (in fact, aside from a slightly elevated heartbeat and some faster breathing, he felt as fresh as if he were laying in bed), but because he wanted to make sure he had time to 'cool down' before entering the library so he wouldn't start 'delayed sweating' and stink to high heaven...

The electric doors of the library entrance 'swooshed' apart, and he entered the bibliophiles shrine, his eyes taking a second to get used to the dim light. He headed towards the counter, just to see what sort of response he'd get from...

"Hi, Jan!"

Jan turned his head to see a guy that Jan had seen around a couple of times, but never spoken to. In his memories, that was - obviously, the 'alternate history' Jan knew more people.

"Hey, there...!" Jan said, brightly, not letting on that he didn't know this guy from Adam's off ox. Jan even threw in a wave, watching as the guy walked off, his cute, tights ass outlined in his tight jeans. Jeans that had also outlined a good-sized bulge when he'd been facing Jan. Maybe 'size didn't matter', but Jan was willing to bet...

"What the hell am I thinking...?" Jan asked himself in a low tone, horrified. His eyes went wide in shock as the fact truly registered that he'd been looking at another guy - no, not just looking... 'Checking him out', to be exact....

A cold tingle ran up Jan's spine, one that was intensified by the slightly moist warmth that was low but insistent in his crotch.

The sight - and thought - of 'another' man had just turned Jan on.

"Oh, dear God...!" Jan gasped, unaware of the occasional odd look he was getting from the people around him, what with him standing stock still in the center of the library, unfocused eyes gazing into an unseen distance as he muttered to himself.

It took a second to come together, but when it did Jan shuddered as if gripped by a raging fever. "Female hormones and emotions..." He muttered to himself, the impact of that statement hit home.

Jan wasn't a 'he' - Jan was a 'she'. Though she looked male - and passed for male - that was a matter of build and lack of 'redundant' fat around the mammary glands. It hadn't dawned on Jan that, technically, she was now female. After all, she looked the same as she had before, right down to the very light, fine body hair both her parents shared in common.

She wasn't a guy with a vagina - she was fully female. Just a very unattractive female, masculine enough that she'd been passing as a man, accepted as male rather than ridiculed as an unattractive female.

Jan shuddered again, and felt her knees become weak. Waking up and finding 'himself' with a cunt was bad enough - but to realize that, unattractive or not, she was fully female was a real shock.

She barely managed to keep herself upright as she made her way to the reading room. Grabbing a book at random off the shelf, she collapsed into a chair and held the open book in front of unseeing eyes, mind whirling in useless circles as she tried to come to grasp with the earth-shattering revelation she'd just experienced.

'Calm down, Jan...' She counseled herself. 'The world hasn't come to an end. This is only temporary. Until you're male again... well, it won't kill you. It'll be confusing, embarrassing and annoying, but you just have to bull through. Nobody even knows you're female. It's not all that different then a few minutes ago, when you thought you were 'just' a man with a cunt.'

'Yeah!' Another part of her mind came back, sarcastically. 'And I didn't like that, either!'

Jan took several deep breaths, trying to calm... well, to calm her female emotions, she supposed.

'Look, for two and a half decades, you were a fat freak. Now you're a female freak... but it's not nearly as visible. Just... just try not to throw up when you find yourself getting aroused by a good-looking guy.'

Just the thought of that made her shudder in disgust... and the 'pleasant' warmth it created in her gut made the shudder that much more pronounced. No matter what her conscious brain thought, her female hormones and emotions thought getting turned on by men was completely natural.

So - the trick to get through until she was once more male was to find something to keep her mind away from 'dangerous' territory.

Looking over the book she held, she saw it was one she'd never read - nor heard of, for that matter. However, she was sure that, female or not, she'd be able to loose herself in a book, as always.

Taking a deep breath, she flipped back to the front of the book and began to read, having to force her attention to stay on the book, and nothing else.

Before she got to page ten, she was lost in the unfolding plot and the characters, her own gender and life completely secondary to the words in front of her - not that she saw the words, anymore. As she'd always been able to, she'd escaped the world by slipping into the book, and the story unfolded around her as if she were watching a movie in her head, the 'real' world only a vague memory...

* * * * *

With a soft, muttered sound, Alesha came awake, blinking blearily up at the ceiling of the living room for a long moment... then sitting bolt upright, surprise etched on her face.

"Where am I?" She said, in fear, looking around the room. Memory wavered and shook... then, with an almost audible 'click', everything fell into place.

"Oh, yeah - Jan's apartment..." Alesha said, relaxing. She shook her head. "Man... I'm just exhausted. What the hell have I been doing?"

She frowned slightly, but memory remained hazy. She knew where she was, and who she was, and what she was doing here... but the past seemed a jumble, nothing coming sharp and clear, no matter how hard she tried to focus. In fact - the harder she tried to focus, the more it slipped away.

Stretching her slightly stiff muscles, she looked around... then her eyes fell on a sheet of lined legal paper laying on coffee-table, folded in half.

"Hmmm..." She muttered, picking it up. She unfolded the piece of yellow paper and looked at what was written on it, three sentences in Jan's printing... and frowned in mild confusion as the words of the first sentence registered on her mind.

I wish that I wasn't a freak, but completely normal in build an appearance, with nothing 'out of the ordinary' for anybody to see, even if I were completely naked.

"What the...?" Alesha started to say, confused...

...then suddenly felt like she was going to vomit. No - that wasn't right. It wasn't just her stomach muscles tightening up, but every muscle in her body. She twitched as her strength seemed to run from her body in the sweat that suddenly burst from her pores.

"Ughnnn..." She moaned, gasping. "Oh, God... I think I'm really sick..."

She slumped over, her muscles loosening from taut to utterly spent, and the telephone (and the help it represented) seemed to be miles away, rather than a yard or two. She gasped for breath, feeling as if she'd just engaged in some incredibly strenuous activity... and knew she'd never reach the phone. Not in her condition.

"Help..."

It was supposed to be a yell, in the hopes that somebody would hear - but it came out barely above speaking volume, her voice as weak as her muscles.

Slowly, weakly, she curled up on the couch, pulling the comforter over her as darkness flickered at the edge of her vision. She began to slide into darkness...

As she fell asleep, words circled in her mind. Words that had already registered on her subconscious, once, but still failed to register on her conscious mind...

'Poor Alesha. I wish you could just forget being enslaved and treat me as your friend...'

* * * * *

Jan was yanked from the world of the book she was reading as a strange sensation rippled through her body, moving through it so quickly that it was come and gone almost as it registered on her mind. The lingering sensation of pushing and pulling, of flesh being reshaped, lasted an instant longer...

"What the...?" She started to ask, quietly - and two things stopped her, mid-sentence.

One was the oddly-pitched sound of her voice. The other was the sight of her hands, holding the edges of the book with the thumbs folded onto the pages.

Except... she'd never seen those hands before in her life. Sure, her hands were unfamiliar to her, being slimmer than what she was used to be... but these ones were even slimmer, and more.. graceful. Downright... feminine.

A connection not hard to make, considering the long, gloss-pink nails that graced the tip of each thumb.

"Uhhnn... Uhhnn..." Jan moaned, eyes widening as she put the book down and stared at the whole of her altered hands.

They matched the thumbs. Slender, feminine, tipped with equally feminine nails... and leading up to slender, feminine wrists, which disappeared under the cuffs of her now-not-so-baggy sweatshirt...

...which was pushed out at the chest. Not remarkably so, but enough that - together with the 'clues' of hands and voice - a conclusion could be reached as to what they were...

"Jan? Jan - are you okay?"

Jan's head whipped around, and she stared wide-eyed up at Leanne, who was half leaning over her, a concerned look on her narrow face.

"I.. Uh.. My.." Jan stammered, hearing the higher-pitched, feminine voice that emerged from her throat. A voice that went well with the tits, cunt and hands she now boasted... and probably the rest of her body, too. "You.. I, I was.. uh, and..."

Leanne looked around, worried. She gently took Jan's newly feminized hand. "come on - let's get you somewhere a little less public, honey."

Stunned, Jan let herself be led, not seeing anything as her mind insisted in cataloguing the sensations of her body.

Her legs felt.. different, somehow. The way they moved in the now-tighter jeans was subtly different in sensation... but that was eclipsed by the odd swiveling motion her hips were making, or the way her ass felt as the muscle contracted and expanded.

However, those were all secondary to the sensations coming from her chest as bare - and much more sensitive - nipples brushed the softly rough inner fabric of the sweatshirt...

So, it wasn't until they were actually inside that Jan realized that Leanne had led her into the women's bathroom.

"Wait! I can't..." Jan started to protest, instinctively... when the sound of her own voice drove home the fact that she probably could, now.

It was too much for her. Without being prepared for it in any way, she found herself falling to her knees and bawling her eyes out like...

...like...

...like a girl.

The thought only intensified the sobs that racked her altered body, and she barely noticed as Leanne knelt beside her and took her into her arms, patting the new woman on the back and making meaningless sounds of comfort.

It seemed to take forever for Jan to cry herself out, but finally the sobs softened, she stopped, and she straightened, aware once more of where she was, and of Leanne's arms around her.

"Jan?" Leanne said, her concern evident on her face. "Are you all right?"

Jan realized how strange all this was, and managed a weak - and false - smile as her mind spun for an explanation. Tell Leanne that she'd been crying because she was really a man, but nobody but her remembered that? Yeah, right...

"I.. read something that reminded me of a very bad memory..." Jan said, realizing how lame it sounded as it emerged. Who cried because of something she remembered, for God's sake...

"Oh, you poor thing..." Leanne said, sorrowfully. "I know what you mean. Ever since Steve dumped me halfway through Titanic, I can't watch that movie without... Oh, you poor, poor dear..."

'She bought it...?' Jan thought, incredulously... then squashed the thought. "Uh, look - can I have a couple of moments alone? To, uh... put myself back together. Splash some water on my face..."

"...and fix your makeup. Of course." Leanne said, sympathetically, helping Jan to her feet. I'll grab your purse and slip it just inside the door, 'kay?"

"Yeah, that'd be great, thanks..." Jan mumbled. 'Purse?'

Leanne left, still clucking to herself.. and Jan took a deep breath and faced the large mirror over the sink. A girl stared back at her, mascara streaking her face.

Even aside from the running make-up, the female version of Jan would never be called 'beautiful'... but definitely made 'cute', by a wide margin.

Slowly, stunned, Jan approached the reflection, still barely believing the girl copying the motions was her.

Her hair was longer than it had been, but was still short for a girl, a sort of pixie-ish hairstyle that went well with a pixie-ish face, with big blue eyes and a little snub nose. Her jaw was more rounded, and her cheeks better defined than they'd been,. All adding to her cute, feminine look. It would be with great difficulty that anybody could see the 'slim male Jan' in that reflection - if there was anybody who remembered him, that was. As for the original 'fat male Jan', there was no trace.

Her new body was likewise undeniably feminine, if not overly so. Slender and cute seemed to be the order of the day.

Hesitantly, Jan lifted her sweatshirt... and found herself looking at a pair of firm, high-set 'B' cup breasts, tipped with cute pink nipples that half-swelled in the cool air of the bathroom. Her waist was trim, but not terribly narrow above hips that were almost 'boyishly' slim, yet definitely feminine.

"Oh.. crap..." she breathed, hearing the feminine contralto once more...

Then she heard the wheeze of the door's closer as it opened a touch, allowing a white leather... purse? Bag? It looked like a small backpack, made out of patch-work white leather with large stitching. Presumably hers...

Oddly enough, Jan had never thought about it, but seeing the bag she had to admit it was probably the sort of thing she'd buy for a purse, if she were a woman... which she now was... so she'd bought the purse, or at least that was the way the altered history went...

Not only was she female... but the rapid changes were enough to give her a headache as she tried to keep tenses and 'real' and 'fictional' occurrences straight.

She looked at her reflection again, making a face at the thought of putting on make-up - but she was wearing some now, and she didn't feel like explaining to Leanne - anyone - why she'd washed off the smeared make-up but didn't put anymore on.

She turned on the tap, and began splashing her face with cold water, appreciating it for its bracing effect, if nothing else.

Drying her face with a handful of rough brown paper towel, she dropped the damp wad into the garbage and went to fetch 'her' purse, putting it on the counter and rooting through it.

She found the articles of make-up she'd have to reapply... and paused, wondering how the hell she used it. Awkwardly, she twisted off the cap-applicator of the Maybelline mascara..

..and found her hands moving with remarkable skill to apply the mascara, as if she'd done it thousands of times before. Which, in this version of her life, she probably had. Now there was a thought to give you pause - her body 'remembered' things her mind didn't...

After a short period, her hands stopped what they were doing on auto-pilot, so she assumed she was done. Tucking the items she'd removed from the bag, she took a better look at herself.

The make-up made a difference. She definitely was cute. Pretty damned cute, in fact...

She realized, with an odd sensation, that the male Jan would have been strongly attracted to the slender, fit young 'pixie' in the mirror... yet there was only embarrassed, humiliated admiration of her attractiveness in her now, nothing sexual at all. She knew she looked damned cute and even sexy... but she felt nothing for the image in the mirror.

Despite what her male memories insisted, her new identity was definitely male-oriented, sexually.

She noticed a couple of things she'd missed in her first, shocked examination of herself. Like the small gold-ball earrings in her smaller, more delicate lobes. Or the slender silver ring around one of her fingers - definitely feminine accessories.

Her clothing was no longer baggy. 'Ugly Girl Jan' had reason to hide her body, 'Cute Jan' didn't... so the jeans were nice and tight, revealing an ass that... well, that was pretty damned nice, as female asses went. She was also wearing sandal-style shoes, with a 'cork' heel that was block and about two inches tall, with white leather straps forming the upper portion.

The shoes matched her bag, Jan noted.. and wondered why she didn't feel surprised by that, or the fact that her once stone-washed light-blue jeans were now dark blue and semi-glossy, along with a light-gray sweatshirt that had become dark-gray and tighter, emphasizing her assets while minimizing her flaws.

Damn - it was bad enough she was now technically and obviously female, and a cute one to boot. Did she also have to be color- coordinated?

Sighing, Jan headed for the door, trying to cope with being visibly female due to yet another screwed-up wish. When she'd written it, she'd thought of herself as a 'guy with a vagina', so 'not freakish' would have restored her to manhood. Since she was - had been - technically female, a non-freakish female was what she'd become. Leaving her to cope with yet another unforeseen consequence, at least until...

...until...

"Oh, shit!" Jan swore, the wording of the next wish-to-come registering with brutal impact. She'd also written that on some assumptions including the obviously unfounded assumption that she'd be fully male once again by now... Throwing the door to the bathroom open, she nearly bowled Leanne over.

"Phone!" Jan said, urgently. "I need to use a phone!"

"Oh - sure...!" Leanne, confused, said, gesturing towards a phone on the check-out desk. Jan dashed over, grabbing up the handset and dialing...

...and getting a screeching sound.

"What's wrong with this phone...?" Jan said, urgently.

"Uh - you have to dial '9' for an outs..." Leanne started, really beginning to worry about Jan's strange behavior.

Jan quickly punched '9', waited until she had a dial tone, then tapped out the digits to her apartment, hearing it ring at the other end. "Come on, Alesha... answer..." Jan muttered, desperately.

* * * * *

Alesha blinked up at the ceiling, and slowly sat upright.

She'd drifted off to sleep for a short nap - and whatever was affecting her seemed to have eased up, because she didn't feel nearly so weak. She felt.. tired. Like she'd been up for thirty hours straight. But not bone-weary exhausted.

She glanced at the phone, thinking about calling a doctor... but she was feeling better, and some soup and sleep would probably clear up whatever it was.

Then again... maybe it would be best to have herself looked at.

Pushing the comforter off of her, Alesha rose and moved across the room...

...passing by the silent phone and towards the door. Making sure the lock was set to engage once the door was closed, she stepped out into the hall and pulled the door closed behind her.

Still feeling tired, she moved fairly slowly as she went down the stairs and out the door. Once outside, she turned left and headed towards the Emergency Room of the University Hospital, only a couple of blocks away...

* * * * *

"Damn... I turned off the ringer..!" Jan said, remembering. She slammed the phone down, unconsciously hiking her bag back up on her shoulder as the movement made it slip.

"Jan, maybe you should just sit down and..." Leanne started, with concern.

"No, I can't - I have to get home. I have somebody over, and I forgot too..." She couldn't think of any good excuse off the top of her head, so she didn't bother. "I just have to go, okay?"

Before Leanne could say anything else, Jan turned and hurried towards the front door of the library. She was practically sprinting by the time the doors swished shut, and she took the stairs at the apartment building three at a time.

For the first time since she'd gotten her slender body, she was panting as she fished frantically in her bag for her keys. Finally, she had them, and she unlocked the door and dashed inside.

"Alesha, don't grant my..."

The shout died in her throat as she saw the empty living room. She looked around, confused, then dashed to the kitchen. Empty.

Likewise, the bathroom and both her fully-furnished master bedroom, which had become more feminine in decor, and the empty second bedroom.

Walking back to the living room, she turned around in a full circle, confusion on her damnably cute new face. "Where the hell are you, Alesha?"

There was no answer, and Jan slowly walked to the door and pushed it closed. Dropping her purse and keys on the table, she walked over to the phone and turned on the ringer, then collapsed into the sofa, still trying to figure out where the hell her genie could have wandered off to...

* * * * *

As the doors to the ER swished open, Alesha hesitantly wandered inside, glancing over at the admissions desk with a thoughtful gaze.

She'd thought that sleep was the ticket to feeling better - yet, she was feeling more awake and alert now than she'd been when she'd left the apartment. Since she couldn't remember exactly what had happened last night, maybe all she had was a hang-over, and walking was getting it out of her system. If that was the case, she'd feel damned silly about having her self looked at...

No. No, she'd just head back to the apartment. Jan was probably home by now, and if something happened, she would be able to help Alesha, call a doctor if necessary...

As she thought of Jan, the second sentence on the piece of paper ran through her mind...

I wish the reason I am so popular is because I am very friendly, outgoing, and willing to express what I'm feeling to the people around me in whatever way seems appropriate to the situation.

Just as the thought ran through her head, Alesha gasped and doubled over, her body tensing again as she dropped to her knees, drawing the attention of some medical staff, who rushed towards her...

"Alesha, where the hell are you...?" Jan asked the empty apartment as she paced back and forth in the living room.

Emotions warred within her feminine body. Part of it was dismay and shock over her new body... but, oddly enough, that was fading quickly, except when something reminded her of it too sharply. For the most part, you ignored your own body unless there was something wrong with it, and that was true even if the body wasn't, really, 'yours'. She was healthy, in no pain... so there were stretches of time when she all-but-forgot that she was now female.

Another part of the emotional mix was concern over what her next wish would do to her. She'd written three wishes on that piece of paper, and one of them had already been granted - turning her fully female, which she hadn't expected. The other two wishes were based on the assumption that she'd be male by now...

The final part of the emotional mix was worry - worry for Alesha. Jan simply couldn't fathom why the Djinni would...

Jan stopped in mid-stride, thrown off her gait by a quick shudder that ran through her, as if somebody had just placed an ice-cube at the small of her back. She shook herself, looking confused.

"What the...?" Jan asked herself, wondering what it had felt as if she'd just been hit by an icy draft. She'd been thinking about Alesha.. could it be some sort of premonition? Jan had heard of that - a 'bad feeling' just before finding out some bad news about somebody you cared about...

She was so keyed up, when the knock on the door came, she actually screeched, a high-pitched indrawn breath that sounded like a rusty hinge. Her hands flew to her chest, pressing against her firm bust and feeling the rapid beat of her heart beneath as the shock of the sudden noise ran through her body.

Letting out the breath, she hurried towards the door, hoping it would be Alesha... and afraid that it would be somebody with bad news about Alesha. Her slender, long-nailed new fingers trembled as she twisted the handle and pulled the door open...

"Oh..." Jan said, nonplused. "Uh.. Hi, uh... Doug."

Doug Winston, handsome and friendly, usually had an easy grin on his tanned face. Now, his face was serious, and the green eyes beneath his wind-blown tousled mane of black hair were concerned.

"Hi, Jan." He said, gently. "I heard from Leanne that you might be in some sort of trouble. I thought I'd come over and see if there was anything at all I can do to help."

Jan blinked, amazed that Doug would bother...

...bother coming to see one of the most popular people in the area? This altered history was going to take some getting used to...

However, getting used to an altered history would be a piece of cake compared to getting used to her body's new orientation... because Jan was mortified to find herself very, very aware of just how attractive Doug was. She didn't want to deal with her body's new reactions to men, especially when she was feeling it so strongly that it almost made her want to deal with it...

On the other hand... he had come over to check up on somebody he thought might need help. Jan knew in the revised history she kept people at bay... yet here Doug was, obviously concerned about her...

"Oh, that's so kind of you..." Jan found herself saying, surprising herself. Oh, not with the sentiment - it had been exactly what she'd been thinking at that instant. She just didn't know she was going to say it, right along with voicing the thought that the 'right' thing to do now was "...please, come in, Doug."

She had said it.. and she was stepping aside to let him in, even though she was nervous about being around a man handsome enough to trigger her female emotions and desires... and that showed, to, in her nervous, awkward movements.

'Oh, shit...!' Jan thought to herself as Doug came in and she shut the door behind him. 'Alesha granted my second wish!'

From now on, it was as if there was no buffer between thought and action, other than 'social convention'. She would freely express what she was thinking or feeling, as long as it was 'appropriate for the situation'...

"So, Jan... do you want to talk about it...?" Doug asked as she turned away from the door.. and part of her mind cursed him for caring, because it made things even more difficult for her. She appreciated his kindness, and he was handsome, and all these things created feelings for him that she wasn't comfortable having.

"It's nothing that talking about would help..." She said, walking towards the living room with him in tow. "I'm just... having one of those days."

'Oh, God - now there's the understatement of the year...' She thought wryly. Since it was 'appropriate', the wry grin that went along with it surfaced for Doug to see as she sat on the couch. She shrugged.

"Sometimes, it's like.. it's like I don't know who I am, or who I'm supposed to be." She explained, truthfully. "You try hard to improve on your life... and everything you do has other consequences you didn't expect. One part of your life improves.. and another part gets worse."

"Yeah - I know what you mean..." Doug agreed, grinning back just as wryly. "Well, the good news is it stays in balance, somehow..." 'That's what you think...' Jan thought to herself. 'This version of my life is much worse than when...'

Her mind suddenly went into vapor-lock as she realized, with a shock that was nearly earth-shattering, that it wasn't true. No matter how much it felt like it should be true, that being turned into a woman should be the most devastating, horrifying fate that could be bestowed upon her, her mind wouldn't let her lie to herself about it.

She'd gone from being a fat, wheezing loner to a slender, attractive, popular girl with friends like Doug, who obviously cared about her. There was simply no way to ignore the fact that her life had improved dramatically, even if it was in a direction that she'd never considered, and wasn't exactly comfortable with.

"Jan?" Doug asked, seeing her sitting with a surprised and confused look on her face. "What is it?" "She shook her head. " I... I just realized that maybe things aren't as bad as I first thought."

"Oh - that's great." Doug said, grinning. "Something I said, I hope."

She found herself grinning. "Well, yeah - but also the fact that you came at all. I really appreciate it."

She did, too - the thought that somebody cared enough to come over for her benefit was heart-warming. However, she didn't necessarily want to tell him that. She wanted to keep a distance between them...

...or, rather, she wanted to want to keep a distance between them, because her mind was split. Part of her mind dreaded being her, as a woman, near an attractive man that she was finding more attractive by the minute. Another part of her was thinking how great this was, and how she should show her appreciation... and her body was just eyeing Doug's tanned, toned body and saying 'yum, yum!'

It was a strange sensation - but, remarkably, one that Jan recognized, though from a different context.

She'd been on a diet all her male life, having to be careful what she ate to keep her then-massive weight from ballooning any further. Not that she'd been a saint, she was a human as anybody else... so had occasional given into temptation. That was the same sensation, exactly - knowing, without any doubt, that you shouldn't... but wanting to, anyway. Just like those temptations, her 'logical' mind was pointing out that she was 'really' male, and would be again when she could correct the mistakes of the wishes she'd made... but her emotions and body were telling her the exact opposite, that she should just go ahead...

"Well, I'm glad I could help, Jan..." Doug said, rising from the chair and scootching over to sit beside her on the couch. "I want you to be happy..." He said in an odd tone of voice... and rested his left hand on her jean-clad leg.

Jan felt a shiver run up her spine. A very, very pleasant shiver, as a matter of fact... a shiver that intensified as his right hand began to lightly run through her shortish, platinum-blond hair.

"Well, I am feeling much happier now..." She found herself admitting... and there was something odd about the tone in her voice, too. She turned her head to look at Doug's face, only inches away from hers, with a soft, gentle look in his sea-green eyes that she couldn't immediately place.

"I know you try and keep a.. a distance between yourself and others, even as friendly and outgoing as you are..." Doug said, almost whispering. "But... but that doesn't mean that others want to stay a little distant from you, as well..."

Oh. Well, that explained the look in his eyes and the tone of voice then, didn't. The next thing you know, he'd try and... Doug slowly leaned forward, eyes still open and looking deep into hers, giving her plenty of time to react....

...and she found her eyes slipping shut and her head tilting to allow his lips to meet her own. 'What am I doing?' Jan shouted at herself.

'You're letting a very kind, considerate, and handsome man kiss you.' The rest of her mind answered dryly. 'And enjoying it thoroughly, might I add?'

It was true... she was enjoying the feel of Doug's lips on her own. The hand that had been running through her hair slid down around her neck, drawing her a little closer as the kiss intensified. and she was doing nothing to stop it.

The strangest thing was - she could have stopped it at any time. It wasn't like she was 'out of control' She was moved to react honestly to her emotions was all, and if she'd decided that the thing to do was pull away, she could have. but no matter how strange it felt to be a woman and having a man kiss her it felt damned nice, physically.

And emotionally. It felt good to be held, to be kissed, to be.. wanted. She felt as if she were perfectly safe right now, as if nothing bad could happen to her in Doug's strong-yet-gentle arms... this was still gentle, but it deepened into something more passionate. as Doug's hand slid upwards, sliding under her sweatshirt and gliding, slowly, across the taut flesh of her now-smooth stomach. She moaned low in the back of her throat as it found its goal - her right breast. Gently, it began to caress her firm, taut mound, thumb gliding over a now-erect nipple.

Jan's mind was spinning... but it was a very pleasant whirl. Her emotions were churning over, mixed nervousness with pleasure and comfort, tinged with guilt at letting herself continue doing this. It just felt so. so right, somehow, and she never wanted it to end even as she berated herself for letting it go on this long.

She'd never known how good having a breast could feel, when somebody skilled and gentle caressed it. She'd avoided touching her female parts, for fear this would somehow 'vindicate' the mistaken magic... and, in a way, it did. Perhaps being a man had its good points, too, but being a fat freak of a man meant he hadn't had much chance to experience them, and he'd 'blown' his one chance to date, the time when he was an unknown thin man.

Now, she was discovering the pleasures of the body, even if it was as a woman - and it seemed like a woman's body was one erogenous zone, merely varying in intensity. As a man, pleasure came mainly from one part of the body, and that was an 'external' part, while her entire body seemed to be shivering with the pleasure Doug's touch brought, and she felt genuine regret as he removed his hand from her breast and let it slid back downwards, back across her stomach, until it reached her waist, and began to undo the button on her jeans and...

She broke the kiss, her hand dropping to stay his from pulling her zipper down any further. "Doug, no..." She said, softly, regretfully, part of her telling her she was a fool for stopping him. Doug blushed, drawing away from her. "I.. I'm sorry, I shouldn't have..."

"No, no - it's not your fault." Jan hastened to assure him, honestly. "I.. I enjoyed having you hold me, but... I'm just not ready. I'm sorry."

He grinned, with little humor. "I see - 'right guy, wrong time'?"

She sighed with a smile. "That's just it, Doug - I don't know if you are the right guy. To be honest, my body and emotions are crying 'yes'... it's your mind that says 'no'. It's not you, believe me - anybody else wouldn't have gotten as far as you did, much less any further. I.. I'm just not ready, okay?"

"Yeah." Doug grinned, with feeling this time. He rose. "I.. I hope this won't interfere with us being friends. I mean... I hope I didn't screw up what we had."

Since Jan had no memory of 'what they'd had', the answer was easy.

"I can't pretend this didn't happen, and I'm not sure if it happening is good or bad.. so why don't we just start all over again. A fresh start, as if we just met.."

He shrugged. "Yeah, I guess I can do that..." Theatrically, he assumed an overly polite expression. "It was a pleasure meeting you, Miss Lindstrom. I hope to see you around."

"It was my pleasure, believe me.." Jan said, with a giggle, doing up her pants as she rose. She escorted him to the door, feeling another pang of regret as she closed it firmly behind him, fighting the urge to call him back and pick up where they'd left off...

"Get a grip, girl..." Jan muttered to herself. "So he's handsome, intelligent and kind. So he's practically the ideal man. So your body's crying out for it. You're not going to be female long enough to form any relationships.. and imagine how people's memories are going to have to change to match what you do know, once you're a guy again. You have sex with a guy now, and when you make the wish everybody'll probably remember you as being gay or something..." the thought brought her up short for a second... because, in her current condition, she didn't think she could define 'gay'. After all, intellectually she found women attractive - hell, she found herself attractive. But there was no sexual interest. On the other hand, she definitely had sexual interest in guys now, which was an uncomfortable thought... but which was 'straight' for this body. If she forced herself to go against her body's desires, then she'd be a 'lesbian'...

"Well - so I stay celibate until I'm male again." She sighed. "Damn, Alesha.. where the hell did you go to, anyway?"

Shaking her head, she walked down the hall to the bathroom, turning on the water and adjusting the temperature for a shower. She was embarrassed to admit that her body had become aroused - very aroused - from Doug's kiss and fondling, and even more so for the mere thought of what might have happened, had she not stopped him. Her crotch was warm and moist, and a nice cold shower should help... the thought of cold water sluicing over her skin, made her shiver, and she thought about it as she looked around the bathroom. When she'd changed into a woman, the apartment's contents had also altered to match her new identity, just as her clothes had... and Jan's eyes fell on a half-full container of bubble-bath.

"Well.. why the hell not?" She asked herself. Dropping the stopper into the drain, she adjusted the water temperature to a nice, warm temperature, and added a dollop of the bubble-bath to the water, watching the thick white foam form at the bottom of the tap's deluge.

Straightening, Jan walked over to the small cupboard to ensure there was some towels there.. and was mildly surprised to find her old, ratty towels had been replaced by huge, thick white ones that were fluffy and soft. Dropping one on top of the toilet lid, which was next to the tub, she quickly undressed.

Naked, she paused and looked her nude body over in the mirror, finding little fault with it.

"God, I am cute, aren't I?" She asked herself, with a wry grin. "No wonder why Doug was so eager to take a chance. Being 'just friends' with me like he remembers must be a strain on his male urges."

Scrunching up her nose, she stuck her tongue out at her reflection, then turned away from the mirror and stepped into the tub, settling down into the warm, foamy water with a sigh of contentment.

"okay, so I'm giving into my feminine side..." She sighed. "Can I help it if it just feels so damned nice..."

She lay back in the tub, eyes closed, letting her hand slid over her flat stomach, enjoying the way she felt at that moment. She felt nearly perfect... except for the nagging 'urge' that she hadn't dared give into, of course...

Her hands paused, and she bit her lower lip in sudden thought... then slowly let her hand glide southward, down past her navel, over the slit rise beneath.. and hesitated, fingers lightly stroking the soft down of her pubic hair.

After a moment, she began to slide her hand, flat, over her mons, feeling the pressure stimulate nerves beneath. She sighed, and pressed harder with her hand, increasing the pleasure the touch created, finding it warm and comfortable, less... insistent than anything she'd felt as a man, but somehow more... all-encompassing.

She began to put more and more pressure on her ring finger, the one aligned with the smooth, soft folds of her new womanhood, transferring more pressure to where it created the most pleasure, the finger gliding firmly over her anticipation-swollen clit, causing her to bit her lower lip again and let out a moan, her body like the sounding box of a guitar as she plucked the string of pleasure...

...before she'd consciously decided to do so, her finger dipped on its next pass.. and for the first time, she felt something inside of her.

The sudden surge of pleasure made her gasp. The pressure across her clit had lessened, slightly, but added to that was the way it felt to be.. penetrated. To feel the soft walls of her new vagina touched in a way that was new and wondrous of its own accord.

She began to stroke herself with more vigor, her head lolling to the side as she gasped out her pleasure at her own touch, her finger working the nub of her clit while gliding within the silken walls of her cunt. There was one moment when she gasped as she pushed in the wrong direction, grazing the wall of her wet, warm womanhood with a nail.. but she didn't make that mistake again,. And the pain was quickly forgotten in the swelling tide of pleasure as she worked herself toward ecstasy...

She had no way of judging, of course, having no frame of reference that applied... but her first female orgasm was a pretty damned good one, her original arousal, supplied by Doug, allowing her to reach a higher plateau, negating her inexperience in pleasuring herself. All she knew was that it felt like she'd been hit between the eyes with a hammer... made of the softest down. It was painless, but the sharp pressure between her eyes flared as white sparkles danced behind her eyelids, caused by the fact she'd inadvertently clamped her eyes as tightly closed as physically possible as her body shuddered in the grip of the orgasm that burned up the nerve networks from her crotch to her brain, leaving her momentarily breathless.

"Well.." She sighed, heart thundering from pleasure as she withdrew her hand. "I guess being a woman could be an educational experience all it's own... Still, I'm looking forward to putting this new knowledge to good use, as a man. Alesha, honey, my darling subservient genie.. where are you...?"

* * * * *

"Okay..." Dr. Fingeld said, nodding at the nurse who held the syringe. Nodding, the nurse squeezed the plunger, injected a stimulant into the IV tube running into the arm of the dusky, beautiful 'Jane Doe'.

When she'd collapsed, the medical staff had rushed to her side, and by-passed the usual administrative procedures to get her treated. She'd had no identification to verify her claim that her name was 'Alesha Hawrey', so she was officially 'Jane Doe 010224-2 (Alesha Hawrey)' on the admit form.

Dr. Fingeld had never seen somebody in quite this condition. She seemed to be suffering from severe exhaustion, yet that wasn't quitter it. It closely resembled the state a habitual drug user could get into, especially coke, crack and heroin users. A blood test, however, showed no trace of drug use at all... but a startling imbalance of electrolytes, mineral deficiencies, and other oddities that just didn't add up.

Dr. Fingeld had sedated her, allowing her body to rest as her chemical and hormonal balances were corrected. Now, all the blood work was back into the normal range, and he hoped she could answer some of the questions...

The patient moaned softly, then blinked up at the ceiling in obvious confusion.

"Where am I...?" Alesha wondered, briefly, feeling absolutely fine now that her blood work had been corrected... and for no particular reason that she knew of, the third sentence Jan had written down on the sheet of paper...

I wish I was better looking, better educated, had a better income, was a better lover - and much better endowed...

Gasping, Alesha felt another 'fit' grip her body, draining her new-gained strength and energy, leaving her limp on the bed, head swimming...

"Nurse!" Fingeld shouted, startled at the new seizure. "Sedative, quickly! She's reacting..."

Seconds later, Alesha's world once more went dark, and the last thought she had as she fell into the darkness wasn't heartening... 'Oh, my God.. I think I'm dying...'

* * * * *

Jan was just toweling off, enjoying the feel of the big, fluffy towel next to her soft skin, when the entire world seemed to shudder.

Jan gasped as a.. a ripple seemed to move through the room - and her. Her equilibrium was thrown off, and she stumbled forward, arms going out instinctively and bracing her on the edge of the cabinetry around the sink...

It took a second for her to realize what was odd about that - because, a second ago, the sink had been one of those free-standing designs, white porcelain supported by a matching 'swan-neck' column. Now, the sink was larger, and gold-toned fixtures gleamed brightly, the entire sink surrounded by what looked - but didn't feel - like a marble counter-top.

However, that was of secondary interest to Jan as she gazed at her altered reflection in the larger, more 'stylish' mirror that had replaced the standard 'medicine cabinet with mirror' above the sink.

"Well, at least I know Alesha is okay..." She told herself, hearing her slightly altered voice for the first time. It was still a contralto, but now it warmed, richer, smokier.. a singer's voice, she thought to herself.

However, it was far from the only change made to her body. After a second look, she'd notice that her still platinum-blond hair hung down to her shoulders in a soft, silken flow. Shoulders that were slimmer and more delicate. She'd also notice that the fall of hair surrounded a face that was no-longer just 'cute', but beautiful, without being 'idealized'. Instead, it was a very lovely, intelligent, individual face. Her jaw still came to a slight point, but now the curve of her jaw-line was smoother and more graceful, matching cheek- bones that had become higher and finer, pulling the 'shape' of her face into a sort of stylized triangle shape, in much the way Tyra Bank's face was shaped.

However, that was the only resemblance between her new face and that of Tyra - because Jan's complexion was smooth and creamy, not too pale, but very light and fine. Her nose was narrower, with a well-defined bridge and a slight upturn at the end. Flanking that nose was a pair of bright blue eyes that looked intelligent and cheerful, a very fine network of laugh-lines almost invisible, but curving the very corners of her eyes into the slightest look of a permanent knowing grin.

Such a grin would look perfectly at home on her lips. They were fuller, but not ridiculously so, and they also seemed to be in a faint, permanent grin, as if she were enjoying herself even at rest.

All in all, it was a beautiful face that was neither a 'cool' or 'classical' beauty, but more friendly and accessible, a somehow very Scandinavian face.

She was also somewhat taller than she'd been a moment ago. Since, as a male, she'd been of average height, her first transition had left her a little taller than average from women.. now she was quite tall and slender, and her long, shapely legs seemed even longer by comparison, leading up to an ass that had become damned-near spectacular on hips that, while still on the somewhat slender side were far indeed from 'boyish'.

Her waist had become considerably slimmer.. and the belly-button flawless, one of those 'added' touches that was part of near- perfection, like the way her new toes and fingers were perfectly proportioned for her graceful, feminine hands and feet. Even her ankles were slender and shapely, nicely formed.

All of this, however, only came after she'd gotten past something else... "Damn!" Jan said, eyes widening. "I'm huge...!"

Her new breasts were definitely worthy of comment - because they were much, much larger then they'd been originally. In fact, each breast was roughly the size of a regulation volleyball.

The were also remarkably firm... yet not so much that they could be immediately pegged as 'fake'. Indeed, they had a near-perfect shape, full and firm and round themselves, but hanging a bit to pull the flesh above into a smooth contour before rounding back into the chest underneath, forming a sort of 'teardrop' shape. Her nipples matched the scale of her new endowments, being large and a very warm pink color, as ideally flawless as the rest of her body without being 'artificial' looking.

Indeed, her 'near perfection' was more utterly breathtaking then true physical perfection would have been, her tiny flaws making her look more human, more accessible, then the stylized 'goddesses' that some fashion models seemed to be, or women with extensive plastic surgery to achieve their own sort of man-made 'perfection'. Tall and slender and supple, she was nevertheless somehow to project a sort of 'girl next door' aura, as if she weren't completely aware of just how stunningly beautiful she was.

When she'd completely survey her body, though, her comment was different, spoken in a tone of awe... "God... I'm gorgeous..."

She was, too. Her body was long and lithe and supple, a dancer's body. It reminded her of an old Swedish actress... 'Dagmar' was her name, a woman who was the 'beauty' in several old comedy movies. Buxom, beautiful, yet 'real' rather then contrived.

Jan just stared at her new reflection in the mirror for a few moments before the shock and stunned amazement at her sheer attractiveness began to fade... then slowly looked around the bathroom.

It was still the same bathroom - that is to say, it was the same room, in the same apartment, in the same building. However, aside from the gross physical dimensions and rough layout of the facilities, there was little resemblance between this bathroom and the one she'd occupied just a few minutes ago.

The inexpensive vinyl flooring had been replaced with genuine tile. The walls were painted a dappled pale-blue-and-white that went well with the tiles, and with the white 'marble' countertop around the sink, all offset by Golden Oak woodwork in the cabinetry.

The place was much nicer... as befitting somebody with a better income, as specified in the wish. It was the only part of the wish that could be construed as being what Jan had wanted. Oh, sure, she was definitely more attractive and better endowed... but since she'd mistakenly thought she'd be male at the time, the result isn't exactly what she'd been hoping for.

Hanging on the back of the bathroom door was a bathrobe, a big, fuzzy white one, like the ones you saw in movies but rarely in real life. Still somewhat numb from her latest change, Jan pulled the garment on, feeling it's thick, soft fabric on her smooth new skin as she opened the door and stepped out into the rest of the apartment... and found she was moving with a more innately graceful stride than before, her body moving almost as if she were dancing, smooth and supple.

The entire apartment was nicer, better decorated and revealing more money than before. The second bedroom was even furnished, though in the somehow impersonal manner that signified a designated 'guest room'.

"Whoa... I must have a pretty damned nice job..." Jan muttered to herself, looking around. "I just wish I knew what it was..."

Well, her three wishes had been granted, and this might just be the perfect life, once she'd converted it back into the male version. To do that, she'd have to make at least one more wish... which meant she had to find Alesha. The Djinni's continued absence worried her. After all, she was 'a stranger in a strange land', despite her magically acquired knowledge of the culture.

Jan decided she'd have to go look for Alesha. She'd been waiting in the apartment, hoping Alesha would return... but what if, for some reason, she couldn't? The fact that the wishes were continuing to be granted meant that Alesha was still relatively all right, but Jan knew how much granting the wishes took out of her, and the fact might be that she was too exhausted to get home on her own. As far as Jan knew, Alesha didn't have money, and while she was beautiful enough she could probably wheedle a ride out of most men, the thought still didn't sit well with Jan.

Turning away from the very nicely - and feminine - decorated living room, Jan went to her altered bedroom and opened the closet to find something to wear.

Apparently, in this version of her history, Jan liked clothes that were more feminine than unisex, even if they weren't particularly 'girly'. Biting her lower lip in thought, Jan began to sort through her dresser and closet, picking out the first - and, hopefully, only - outfit she'd be wearing in this body.

First, she started with the basics - a bra and panties. The new version of her was obviously quite fashion-savvy, as she had almost five times as many clothes as she'd had as a man, and thus a wide range to choose from, even in the underwear department. She looked at the plain white cotton bra-and-panty set in the corner...

...then shrugged and picked out another set, less utilitarian. After all, she was in an absolutely gorgeous new body, and it wasn't like anybody was going to be able to see the underwear she chose, so why not pick something she thought looked good on this body. She didn't have to dress down for herself, did she?

She picked a pale blue satin set that went well with her new body's coloration, especially with the white lace trim on the panties and bra. The gleaming highlights the smooth material created increased the effect of her top-heavy hourglass figure and her firm, spectacular ass, and she had to admit it looked damned good. Standing in front of the full-length mirror that her room now boasted, she turned this way and that.

"Damn - that does look good on me, doesn't it?" She asked herself. With a male-memory-mind, altered emotions or not, she was able to truly appreciate just how stunningly gorgeous she was, even if she no longer experienced any sexual desire for this fantastic body she was inhabiting.

In fact... she looked so damned good in the pale-blue satin lingerie that she blushed slightly as she thought about what else had been with the set in the drawer. Something she'd left where it was, not planning to wear it... but now that she saw how damned good this looked on her body...

"Well... it's not like anybody would know, right?" She asked her reflection, blushing even brighter... and then she turned and looked in the drawer again.

At the matching corset with it's garters. Also pale blue satin, it was brocaded with a pattern, trimmed in white lace, and designed more to be a very fancy garter-belt than a 'real' corset, since it wasn't 'boned' to real constrict the waist more than a little.

"No.. No, I couldn't..." Jan told herself... unconvinced. "...could I...?"

The answer turned out to be - she could. She blushed fiercely as she did so, but she pulled the garment out and pulled it on, finding her slender, long-nailed new hands seemed to know what they were doing as they laced the back of the garment tighter before pulling it around her slender waist, positioning the molded scallop-shaped top of the garment directly under her large, spherical breasts, now supported into near-perfect spheres by the matching bra. Once the corset was where it was supposed to go, she folded her left arm across her stomach to hold it in place while her right hand did up the nifty little 'pull-and-clasp' fasteners on the side, which reminded her of the metal ones used on most tool-boxes.

"Huh.. so that's how it works..." She muttered to herself as she looked at herself in the mirror again. Though she was still blushing at having chosen to wear such a... 'unnecessary' feminine garment, she had to admit it looked pretty damned good. Between the panties, bra and corset, her body was as covered as it would be in a one-piece bathing suit, but somehow looked more... more 'elegantly sexy', more beautiful than it would have in a bathing suit.

"Well... I can't have those garters just flopping around..." She told herself. "I guess I'd better put on some nylons..."

Rooting in the dresser once more, she found a pair of stockings that would look good with what she was wearing so far. They were white, and soft and smooth, and when she sat on the edge of the bed and let her newly-skilled hands pull them on, she found they created a very interesting sensation on her smooth, shapely new legs. Not just the sensation of having them on, but the fact that they actually seemed to increase the sensation of the air moving over her legs.

She clipped the nylons in place with the six garter straps, three on each side, then stood and walked around the room a bit, getting used to the way the air felt moving over her legs... and blushing furiously. Somehow, the nylons made her legs feel more naked than they had when they were bare, which was a weird new sensation for Jan, to say the least.

Next, Jan stepped into a white leather skirt and slid it into place around her trim-yet-feminine new hips, slipping it up behind her and smoothing it over her thighs and hips. It hung to just above her cute new knees and clung tightly to her hips and fantastic new ass before flaring out slightly at its hem.

Jan then pulled on a powder-blue short-sleeved mock-turtleneck sweater that clung tightly to her figure, outlining her slender waist and showing off her firm, full bust-line. It practically seemed natural to step into a pair of matching powder-blue leather pumps with a six-inch heel, lifting her already tall body even higher and adding more definition to legs that scarcely needed it. She found she could move easily atop the heels as she glided smoothly over to the mirror to look at the outfit.

"Wow.. I look stunning...!" She told herself with a bright smile. "I need to do something with my hair, fix my face, but I'm absolutely... what the hell am I doing?"

She stopped dead and looked herself over again, realizing that she had, indeed, just dressed in a way that enhanced her already amazing beauty. She shook her head in shock as realization slowly filtered through.

Part of it was her new emotions. Any woman who looked good would feel better about herself if she didn't have to 'ugly herself up'. No matter what her original male viewpoint thought, she was female now, and her habits, instinct and emotions were just as feminine, and she'd let herself go along with them... because the male portion of her mind was interested to see just how damned good she could look, if she tried. Though the male portion of her mind felt decidedly uncomfortable being this gorgeous woman, it wasn't actively fighting it, which is why she'd let her female thought-patterns 'sneak up' on her like this.

"No, no way I'm going out dressed like this." She told her reflection. "I mean, I'd have guys hitting on me left and right..>!"

She closed her eyes and took a deep breath at the warm tingle the thought caused, forcing herself to remember that it wasn't a good thing to be desirable to men, no matter what her body, emotions, and at least half her mind thought...

"No. I'm going to put on those plain white panties and bra, some jeans, and a baggy sweater. Something less.. less 'enhancing...' She told her reflection, firmly.. then paused. "But.. since I've gone this far, I might as well see what I'd look like fully made up and with my hair done before I change..."

Turning away from the mirror, she headed toward the bathroom, already mulling over what make-up and hairstyle would look best...

"So.. I'm not dying...?" Alesha asked the doctor, thankfully.

The doctor shook his head with a smile. "No, Alesha.. you're going to be fine. You had us worried for a while there, and we're still not sure of the root cause of your condition, much less the amnesia, but we know how to treat the.. 'seizures' now." He held up a couple of pill bottles, showing them to her. "Here we have a quick-release multivitamin and mineral complex, and in this other bottle is a stimulant. We've found that the two of them take about five minutes to kick in.. and then you're almost as good as new. Since whatever this condition you have isn't life-threatening, closely resembling simple exhaustion, this would allow you to live a full and rich lifestyle, your affliction only being a minor annoyance."

"That's great!" Alesha said, still worried about the unexplained amnesia and the unknown cause of her 'fits', but happy to know that there was something of a solution.

The doctor, however, didn't hand her the bottles. "the problem is.. without any valid identification, I can't proscribe the stimulant to you..." HE shrugged. "Either you'll have to bring in some identification, or every time you have another seizure, you'll have to return to the ER for a pill to be administered."

Alesha frowned. "Well, that's no good. Why don't I call my friend and have her bring my purse down. Would that work?" "Of course." Dr. Fingeld said, gesturing at the phone on the table next to the bed Alesha was sitting on.

* * * * *

"Damn.. that does look great..." Jan told herself, looking at the final effect of what she'd done.

She'd gone light on the make-up, using mostly 'cool' shades, including a very light, pale blue eye-shadow, only the faintest hint of blush, and a very light, pastel pink lipstick. Her hair had been brushed out, then pulled back from her face with small white plastic clips, then allowed to tumble freely to the side and down her back.

Part of her regretted that she was going to change into something less 'becoming'... and she was amazed to find the part of her that was relieved at the thought was quite small...

Then the phone rang. Winking at her reflection, Jan moved quickly - but gracefully - to her bedroom. Originally, she'd only had one phone in the apartment, but now there was an extension in the bedroom, a white-and-gold 'Princess' phone. She lifted the handset.

"Hello?"

'Jan, It's Alesha...' relief flooded Jan. "Alesha! Where did you get to?"

'I'm in the hospital...' Alesha said - and Jan's heart seemed to skip a beat. 'I'm okay, more or less. Not in any sort of danger.. but I need my ID to get a prescription. Can you bring it down to the hospital? You should also talk to the doctor about my condition.'

Jan blinked, worried, confused and shocked. In the emotional whirl, she replied without any real thought; "Geez, Alesha - I wish you had a legal identity to have ID for..."

* * * * *

Alesha suddenly stiffened, feeling the onset of another 'seizure', one that left her feeling weaker and tired.. but not as much so as earlier seizures. This one seemed a lot less intense.

"here.." Dr. Fingeld said, giving her a pill from each of the bottles, taking the phone out of her hand. "What's your friend's name...?"

* * * * *

"Alesha? Alesha...?" Jan said into the phone, worried by the half-heard sounds at the other end as she realized what she'd just done.

'Excuse me - Jan, is it?' An unfamiliar voice at the other end said. 'I'm Dr. Fingeld. I'm treating Alesha. Your friend seems to be afflicted with some sort of... well, she has seizures of some sort, leaving her weary and weaker. We're treating her with vitamins and stimulants. She's also suffering from a form of diffuse amnesia, and...'

"Amnesia!" Jan said, stunned - how could that have happened? Well.. at least it explained why she was in the hospital. If she didn't remember being a Djinni, then the 'seizures' granting wishes caused would certainly be frightening. "Look, Dr.. Uh.. Finegold...?"

'Fingeld.'

"Right. Anyway, Doctor, I already know about the, uh.. 'seizures'. She's had them as long as I've known her, and if she just rests for awhile, they go away. The amnesia... do you know how it happened?"

'No. She doesn't seem to have any head injury.' The doctor said. 'I'm actually relieved to hear that the seizures aren't a new condition. At least it means that it's an inherited condition, and not life-threatening, even though she probably should have been treated for it long before now. It's a pretty simple treatment.'

"It's the amnesia, Doctor..." Jan said, thinking up the lie on the fly. "If she had her memory, she'd never have come to see you. She's had a very.. uh, strange upbringing. She's.. or, she was... deathly afraid of doctors and hospitals."

'Well - then the amnesia might be a blessing in disguise, if it clears. Look, can you bring down her identification?'

"Sure.." Jan agreed, wondering where it would have appeared after her wish. She traded a bit of information with the doctor about how long she'd be, then hung up, still stunned by the news that Alesha didn't remember her own past.

She walked out of the bedroom... and found herself staring at the room across the hall - the 'guest room'.

Only, now it wasn't impersonal. It was definable an inhabited room... and, judging from some of the photos, it was inhabited by Alesha.

Sitting on the bed was a black leather purse.

Grabbing the purse, Jan looked inside. Sure enough, it was filled with the typical clutter of any woman's purse.. including ID.

Still trying to deal with the strange twists of her life, Jan was already at the front door, swinging her own white-leather purse over her shoulder, before she realized she was still dressed in the 'overly attractive' outfit. She paused...

"The hell with it. I haven't got time for this." Jan muttered to herself. Holding Alesha's purse in her hand, she stepped out the door and shut it behind her, heading down the stairs with the staccato accompaniment of her heels. Reaching the ground floor, she pushed open the door and stepped out into the parking lot...

...and stopped dead, staring at the silver 1963 Corvette sitting in the parking spot assigned to her, if she'd had a car. A Corvette... just like the one she'd always wanted to own.

A little numb, she dug her keys out of her purse and found a car key. A key that opened the door to the Corvette.

Slipping behind the wheel of the car, she felt a moment's hesitation. As a man, she'd never gotten her license. Apparently, as a woman, she had... but would she know how to drive?

Remembering how adept she'd done things like her make-up, Jan decided to give it a shot, sliding the key into the ignition and bringing the car to life. Sure enough, she had no trouble dropping the standard transmission into reverse and backing out of the parking spot, then shifting into gear and heading for the parking lot's exit. With new-found skill, she aimed the hood of the silver sports-car at the road and stepped own on the gas with one high-heeled foot, shifting easily through the gears as she drove the short distance between her apartment and the hospital.

Parking the car, she shut it off and slid out, gripping both her purse and Alesha's. Locking up the car, she grinned wistfully, thinking about the good and the bad of the twists and turns her life had taken since meeting Alesha... then she hurried into the hospital.

She was quickly directed to the right room, and she found Alesha sitting on the bed, looking good, with a doctor she assumed was Fingeld sitting in the armchair in the corner of the room. When she walked in, Alesha smiled at her... and Dr. Fingeld's face registered surprise, which in turn surprised her.

"Oh, I'm sorry, Miss Lindstrom." He said, rising quickly to his feet. "I can't believe I didn't recognize your voice on the phone - god knows I've heard you sing enough times!"

"Uh - that's all right..." Jan managed, surprised. She was a singer? "It's, uh, nice to meet a fan, Doctor. Alesha.. here's your purse."

"Oh - everybody in town's a fan of yours, Miss Lindstrom." Finegeld said, grinning boyishly. "Even people who haven't been lucky enough to hear one of your rare performances loves you for the way you run Rick's."

This time, it was a struggle to keep the pure shock off of her face. Thankfully, Alesha busied the doctor with her identification, leaving her free to get her spinning emotions under control.

Rick's American Cafe, inspired by the movie Casablanca, had been her parents dream. They'd sunk all their money into it, converting an old warehouse on the edge of town into a spitting-image replica of the famous bar from the silver screen. It had been their dream, their life... until they'd gone bankrupt. They'd bet everything they had that they could run the business with minimal staff until Jan graduated from college and took over... except Jan had never managed to get the courses he'd needed to fulfill his parents hope, and the club had gone belly up.

At least - in the original history. Now.. Now it seemed that revised history had changed all that. As this female Jan, she'd graduated... but it was more than that. It didn't take much to see how a gorgeous woman, who also apparently had a terrific singing talent, could keep a business afloat when it would have gone under otherwise.

She'd have to keep that in mind when she made her wish to be male again - find a way to make sure the shift let her keep her parent's dream alive...

"Ready to go...?" Alesha asked Jan, breaking into her reverie. "I am if you are." Jan replied, grinning a bit.

Alesha sighed. "They wanted to keep me in for observation, because of the amnesia. but Dr. Fingeld admitted that they can't cure it, and all we can do is wait and hope my memory returns. Given that, it's probably best that I be back home, rather than here." "Yeah, sure..." Jan said, a bit uncomfortably. She led Alesha towards the car, mind spinning.

It would probably be easy to use a wish to give Alesha her memory back... but did she want to do that? Alesha, now, had no memory of being enslaved. As far as she was concerned, she was an average - if beautiful - young woman, and those thousands of years of emotional pain were gone from her mind and personality. Would it really be fair to give these back to her, especially when Jan was planning to free her completely once her final series of wishes were granted? It didn't seem right, not to Jan's way of thinking. yet denying Alesha her own memories seemed wrong, too. She'd have to think about it before she acted - after all, nothing was permanent until she'd made the wishes to get the life she wanted, then she'd have to decide what to do when she freed Alesha. She might give her back her real memories - or might wish her a new set of memories, ones that would match her apparent new identity, allowing her to live the rest of her mortal life without any problems with a past that she'd no longer remember.

It was a thorny problem, with each prospective answer feeling wrong on one level or another, and she mulled it over as she drove...

"What's with the long face, girl?" Alesha asked, breaking into Jan's thoughts. "You haven't said a dozen words since getting to the hospital."

Jan grinned faintly. "Oh - just worried about you, hon. Amnesia isn't exactly something you can laugh off."

Alesha smiled radiantly, a brighter expression than Jan had seen before on the Djinni's face. "Hey, no biggie. The Doc says there's an equal chance it'll all come back to me, suddenly - and, until then, I've got you to fill in the gaps."

"Yeah..." Jan managed to keep her voice even. "I suppose so. I'm still worried, though. "

'No shit...' Jan thought to herself. With the altered history, she wasn't even up to speed on her own life, and she was supposed to fill in the gaps of a fictional life for Alesha, too...?

"Well, here we are..." Jan said, wheeling the Corvette into the parking lot of their building. The two girls slid out of the car and headed upstairs...

...where Jan got yet another surprise, finding Doug and a guy she didn't know waiting for them in front of the apartment door, holding a big bouquet of flowers each.

"What the...?" Jan said, surprised, stopping just on the top step, Alesha a step behind her and lower.

"Look, Alesha..." The guys Jan didn't know started, "...I don't know what I did, but if you'll just tell me what I did wrong..."

"Yeah." Doug chimed in, to Jan, his face reflecting a mixture of dismay and hope. "I know I've screwed up badly, honey, and I'm sorry for whatever I said or did wrong..."

"Whoa, whoa...!" Jan said, holding up her hands. "What are you talking about?"

The two guys shared a look, and a puzzled frown creased Doug's face as she spoke. "Uh... you said you'd meet us down at Rick's? You never showed... and since it was just this morning, we didn't think you could have forgotten, so.. well... aren't you mad at us for something? Isn't that why you didn't come down, didn't answer your phone?"

'Now Doug's my boyfriend...?' Jan thought, incredulously... but her mouth was already working, explaining the reason why they'd stood the guys up...

"Look, guys.... I didn't forget, but Alesha did. She's got amnesia..."

"What!" the two guys exclaimed, startled, looking from one girl to the other as if waiting for the punch-line of a really bad joke. "No - really." Alesha said, stepping past Jan. "I hate to tell you this... but I don't remember either of you guys."

"You don't remember me?" the other guy said, stunned. "Honey, it's me - Steve. The guy you've been dating for the past two months?" "I'm sorry - I don't remember you." Alesha said, sadly.

An idea hit Jan, one that might save her some trouble - and keep her from having to reveal that she had about as much idea of the supposed past as Alesha did.

"Look..." Jan said, unlocking the door to the apartment. "Steve, why don't you take Alesha inside and talk to her, tell her how you met, everything you can remember about her. Maybe you'll spark her memory, and it'll all come back to her."

"Yeah.. okay... If that's okay with Alesha, I mean..." Steve said, obviously still trying to wrap his mind around the fact that his girlfriend didn't remember him at all.

"If it might spark my memory, I'm more than willing." Alesha said, soberly... then grinned, brightly "Besides... you're cute!" Steve laughed and went into the apartment with Alesha.

"So... what about us" Doug asked from behind Jan. She turned and smiled slightly at him, even though her stomach was churning at the idea of spending time alone with somebody who had memories of them being very close, probably even lovers already.

Her stomach wasn't churning from disgust - but from the fear she'd do something wrong, would give in to what she felt.. because she found herself very, very attracted to Doug.

She couldn't find any polite way to get rid of him, though - and a very large part of her didn't want to. The best thing to do was probably go somewhere with a lot of people, where she'd be able to control herself by behaving in a socially appropriate manner. She already knew being alone with Doug represented an almost overwhelming temptation.

"Why don't we head down to Rick's?" She suggested, and he agreed, suggesting they take his car. Jan didn't argue - her mind and emotions were whirling to much for her to be sure of her driving ability, and her body was rapidly signaling the fact that she was very close to a very attractive man who would probably be more than willing to...

Chopping the thought off, she struggled to maintain her composure as they headed down to 'her' bar, Doug respecting her silence. When they reached the bar, Doug pulled into the parking lot... and looked over at her.

"Look, Jan... I can tell that Alesha's amnesia is really bothering you. I'm glad to know you're not mad at me for something... but it hurts me to see you upset."

She grinned at him, weakly. "Thanks, Doug - it means a lot to me that you care so much." It did, too - and that's part of what bothered her.

He cocked his head. "So... should I tell Louis to set up for you?" he blinked at him, and he smiled, kindly. "Come on, Jan - I know you well enough to know that whenever you're really down, you come here and sing. That's why I wasn't the least bit surprised when you suggested we come here - I knew what you were thinking."

Jan opened her mouth to demur.. then paused, mind spinning.

Obviously, it was the sort of thing Jan 'usually' did, so it would seem odd if she didn't. More than that... she might actually enjoy it. After all, she apparently felt better after singing, in this altered history, so maybe it worked for her.

Most of all, though, she was thinking that she could get on stage... and separate herself from Doug a bit. She was getting entirely too attracted - and aroused - by the handsome young man. It was becoming a struggle to remind herself that she was going to be male again soon, and she couldn't let herself give in to these feminine emotions and desires...

"Yeah - have Louis set up for a set..." She said, hoping her singing ability would be as natural to her as doing her make-up or driving a car.

Louis turned out to be her manager, running the bar day-to-day, keeping her informed of everything that went on... including the precarious balance of the bar's finances. He was very polite, and obviously liked her, a lot... but that didn't keep him from pointing out that if she'd just announce when she was going to sing, ahead of time, they could use it to bring in more cash.

She didn't know Louis, even though she was supposed to be a good friend, and known him for years... but, thankfully, her ignorance didn't show, because Doug was there to fight her half of the discussion, pointing out that she only sang when she was very emotional - sad songs when she was worried or upset, upbeat songs when she was very happy. How could she know, ahead of time, whether she was going to be either? If she sang when she was just feeling 'okay', then the music would be nice... but it wouldn't have the intense feeling that made her so well known...

Even as this discussion was going on, they were setting up... and Jan winced as she realized that the bar would be technically closed while she sang. Not the building, but the actual bar - because Rick's only had three employees, who were also her band when she sang, meaning there was no bartender while she was singing. By listening, Jan discovered that she usually sang four songs, with a break in the middle to allow Jason, the bartender, and Matt, the waiter, to fill people's drink orders. There was also a short wait after setting up for the same reason, to make sure everybody had a drink before they started.

While all this was going on, Jan was back-stage, telling herself it was way too late to back out now. Though not packed tight, the bar was pretty full, and all those people out there were waiting for her to sing... and her heart was pounding so hard she thought she might pass out before she got a single note out.

Then Louis, on piano, played a quick riff while announcing her, and she stepped gracefully through the curtain, into the light trained on the stage...

...and the crowd applauded, people calling out her name. It wasn't the feel of a crowd of strangers, but as if she had a hundred friends, all here to see her do something she did well.

The thought hit her like a hammer... because that was more or less the case. Everybody in this room knew her, even if she didn't know them. They remembered her from here at the bar, and from out on the street. She was a local legend, the most popular person in town...

She was so stunned by the realization, she barely heard the opening lead-in to her first song... and was nearly shocked to find herself singing, her singing ability kicking in automatically, allowing her to sing without much conscious effort, her voice rich and beautiful as she found herself gliding around the stage with an easy grace, the stride of a long-time performer, her eyes roaming the crowd and picking out people with a glance, making them feel 'included' as the lyrics poured from between her full lips, warm and rich and lovely...

Jan was having the time of her life. This was the most exciting, wonderful thing she could remember doing for the longest time - in public, at least. She'd gone from a fat nobody to the towns most beautiful, popular woman, eagerly awaited whenever she announced she was going to sing, and watched with near adoration by her fans.

Steve sat in the chair in the living room, as Alesha showered and changed into something more comfortable. In truth, she was just trying to look her best for him, which Steve knew because this was how she'd acted when they'd first started dating... and, since Alesha had no memory of it, it was as if they'd just started again, as far as she was concerned.

Idly, Steve picked up the odd metal object on the coffee-table, turning it over and looking at it's delicate workmanship. "Huh... funny looking gravy boat..." He muttered to himself, moving to set it down...

...and pausing at the sight of the visible dull spots where his fingers had held the gleaming sides of the vessel. Holding it by it's intricately carved handle, whose whirls and whorls wouldn't show the effects of his touch, he used his shirt to polish it back to mirror brightness before setting it down on the table once more.

He'd just barely done that.. when Alesha came into the room, dressed in a bathrobe, her hair damp and unbrushed, no make-up on her face... and a strange light in her eyes.

"Alesha...?" Steve said, stunned.

"I think I'm remembering you or something!" She said, eagerly. "I mean... I still don't remember anything about you, or us... but I was I was in the middle of drying off, and suddenly this weird sensation came over me. It was like.. it was like, all the sudden, I knew that I'd be willing to do anything at all that you asked me! Steve... I think I love you!"

Steve's stunned expression slowly slid from his face, replaced by a wide grin.

"Alesha, honey - I love you too..." Steve said, standing and sweeping her into a tight embrace. From there, it only seemed natural to find themselves heading towards her bedroom...

"Wait, wait..." Steve said, stopping. "I know I'm going to hate myself for this, later... but are sure about this?" Alesha blinked up at him, then giggled. "You're trying to talk me out of this?"

Steve shrugged. "Well, I know you don't remember... but we've never, actually, uh... done it. Both you and Jan say you want to make sure that it's 'right'..." HE smiled. "I mean, we've respected your wishes... but both Doug and I have been going a little nuts. Here we are, dating the most gorgeous women in town, everybody thinks we're, uh... 'doing the deed'... and we're going home every night and visiting Ma thumb and her four daughters, if you know what I mean."

Alesha giggled. "Well - not tonight, big boy. I don't know about what I did or didn't do... but right now, more than anything, I want to make you as happy as I possibly can, in or out of bed. So, hell yeas, I'm ready."

Steve's grin widened.. and then he blinked. "Uh... are you on the pill?"

She blinked, too. "I.. don't know. I think I saw a container in the bathroom... but I don't know whether their mine of Jan's. Even if they are mine, I don't know when I took one last. I mean, if I've been putting this off, I might not have... Have you got a condom?"

"No." Steve said, frustrated. "I mean, it didn't seem like it was going to happen any time soon, and. "

She grinned, and then slowly ran a hand across his bulging crotch. When she spoke, it was in an incredibly sexy voice.

"Tell you what, stud..." She said, huskily. "You go down to the store at the corner.. and when you get back, I'll be wearing the sexiest little nothing you've ever seen, ready to make your every wish come true. How's that sound. ?"

"Oh, God - like heaven itself..." Steve said, kissing her quickly and passionately. "I hope I don't explode in the meantime."

"Just hurry - or I might start without you..." She said, with a wicked grin, while Steve reluctantly let her lush, dusky body go, grabbing his coat and heading for the door. As he reached the door, he called out, whimsically.

"When I tell Doug, he might just kill us out of sheer frustration. As much as I love Jan and Doug both, it's gotten to the point that I wish they were a couple right out of a porn movie..."

Then he was out the door, not knowing as Alesha gasped and staggered unsteadily towards the bathroom to take her medication.

* * * * *

Jan had finished her last song, heart thudding with pure joy that the singing had brought, feeling more wanted and part of the community than she'd known was possible.

She'd also felt her bladder signaling for attention. She was in the washroom, washing her hands after using the toilet...

...when everything changed.

Everything.

One instant, she was in a brightly-lit, clean, well-cared for bathroom. and then the world seemed to shift, and everything went dark.

Well, not completely - there was still dim daylight filtering in thorough the window high on the wall. But the change from bright to dark was so quick that it took her brain a second to realize that she wasn't standing in pure darkness. Her brain needed that time, not her eyes - her eyes didn't 'flare' as they should have, given the situation. Instead, it was as if her eyes were already dark-adapted, as if they'd been in this dim light for a while now. She was also aware of the fact that the sound of the still-filling toilet had gone from a quite, efficient 'shhh. ' sound to a horrible banging and clanging racket.

However, all of this was only dimly realized as she had other things on her mind.

With her eyes already adjusted to the darkness, she could see her reflection in the cracked and dusty mirror on the wall - and the person reflected back in the dusty glass was like a bad parody of the gorgeous woman Jan had been just seconds before.

Her face was heavily made up, almost to the point of caricature, her huge, full lips covered in a bright, gloss-red lipstick. Her nose was not nearly as fine, and her jaw-line less shapely... but that was had to notice, since the eye would be taken in by the long, artificially full lashes, the too-much blush, or the purple eye shadow. That was assuming, of course, that the eye wasn't already distracted by the huge, thick, frizzy mane of hair that was obviously bottle-bleached to platinum blonde.

Of course, all of this assumed you got as high as the face...

If the hypothetically onlooker had started at the bottom, the would have seen a pair of white platform pumps, with a two-inch inward- sloping platform and a eight-inch stiletto heel supporting the patent-leather uppers. Then the eyes would have naturally moved upward, across the black fishnet stockings that enclosed long legs that were only middlin' sexy, but definitely nice enough. They seemed even longer then they were, partly because of how short her tiny white leather mini-skirt was, barely covering her crotch even when she stood upright. Her crotch, not her panties - because she wasn't wearing any. She was bare beneath the skin-tight skirt that clung to her wide hips and almost too-full ass.

Her waist was just that a waist. Nothing at all remarkable about it, which was easy to tell since her stomach was bare...

...and it lay in the shadow of her enormous, obviously 'scientifically enhanced' bust. Stuffed into a too-small blue spandex crop-top, her gigantic tits were each as big and round as basketballs, tipped with proportionally smaller nipples, further verifying their artificial nature even as the massive orbs struggled to burst free from the little fabric that enclosed them.

However, it wasn't even this that Jan was focusing on. She was aware of the sudden change her body had undergone, was aware of her freakishly huge tits on a now cheap-looking body, aware of her 'cheap and easy' outfit, designed for easy access...

...but all of this was still secondary. Because she was overwhelmed by the most intense, undeniable, uncontrollable need she'd ever felt. Pure, carnal desire for a man - any man. To perform any and all sexual acts with and upon and to get in return. Pure, mindless, undifferentiated lust ruled her body, her barely-covered cunt already hot and wet with pure erotic need.

She was so horny that it actually hurt.

"What.. the... hell...?" She ground out in a voice not nearly as melodic as it had been. "I.. didn't make.. a wish..!"

She had to fight to keep her hands from pleasuring herself or fondling her outrageously proportioned new body. Head swimming with sexual needs and thoughts, she yanked open the screeching, dusty door to the now dilapidated bathroom, and stepped out, her high heels clattering on the worn and dirty linoleum floor as she returned to what had been her private office before, where she'd left Doug...

...and where he still was - or, at least, the man Doug had become.

He still was identifiable as to who he was.. but he'd become bulkier, some of his boyish charm lost in a harder look.. and he was wearing a pair of pants that bulged in an almost unbelievable fashion. The mere sight of that bulge almost broke her will, almost drove her to surrender to the carnal desire flooding her body...

"Jan..!" Doug said, his voice rougher, less pleasant. "What.. what the hell happened? Everybody just.. disappeared.. and we.. we changed..."

"I.. You.." Jan said, wondering how to answer the question. She, herself, didn't know 'why'.. but she knew 'how'. Somehow, Alesha had done this, though Jan didn't understand how it happened without her making a wish.

Instead of answering Doug's question, she found herself giving voice to her 'complaint'. "Oh, God, Doug... I'm just so fucking horny...!"

"So am I..." Doug agreed, in a voice that sounded pitifully needful. "It.. it's all I can do to keep from just..." He cut himself off, sharply, as if he knew that to say it would be to do it. "I.. I think... I'd better leave..."

You could see it in his eyes. Though not as expressive as his real eyes, there was no mistaking the pain in his expression. Somehow, he - like she - had become a person designed to have meaningless sex on the spur of the moment, somebody who existed for sexual reasons and nothing else. Having been an herself Jan had lived most of her life in the sort of purgatory that only a true outcast could feel. No matter how aroused he'd become, there's only been himself, no woman willing to ease the pain of the fat little freak.

Doug was in an agony of desire, just as she was... and he was willing to walk away, rather than do something 'wrong'.

In that instant, Jan made a final decision, one that had been floating in the back of her mind for awhile now. She'd ignored it, not wanting to admit it's existence, much less give into it. She'd been holding off, quoting her vestigial male memory as the reason... but she wasn't a man, not here and now. She was a woman. A horny woman. A very, very horny woman.. with a man she cared about, equally aroused, only a few feet away...

Slowly, she approached Doug, a smile slowly blossoming on her face as she drew nearer.

"I don't think you could run very fast with that monster in the way..." She said, huskily, as she reached him. "If you tried to leave, I'd just catch you, anyway..."

She stood in front of him, smiling seductively... then slowly, she sank to her knees, hands reaching out to unzip his pants. She yanked them and his boxers down around his ankles, revealing his huge, throbbing cock. It was enormous, almost ridiculously so, it's head a dark purple from the blood that thundered through it, leaving it throbbing in time with the beat of his heart.

Smiling up at Doug, Jan peeled off the too-tight crop-top, setting her huge, fake tits free.

"You like my big boobies, Doug...?" She asked... as if by rote, Like the singing, she hadn't realized she was going to say it until the words popped out of her mouth, in a simpering little voice. She rose up slightly, pushing her huge, fake tits against his crotch, teasing the head of his erect cock with her vast cleavage.

"Yeah, baby, they..." Doug said in a odd tone of voice, poorly emotional.. then stopped. "Actually, I think they're too big, to fake. I don't know why i.. oh, damn, that feels good..."

Yeah, well I bet this'll feel better, babe..." Jan found herself cooing in that same, insipid voice, as she shifted position.. and wrapped her hands around the base of his cock, licking the head of his cock with a tongue that was long, supple and skilled.

Jan, male or female, had never considered sucking cock before... but now it seemed like she need to. Her body burned with desire, and she knew a good, hard fucking would be more pleasurable to her.. but for some reason, this seemed more inherently 'right', no matter what part of her mind was screaming at her. The odd thing was... that part of her mind was the last hold-out from her body and desires.. and even it had to admit that this wasn't actually terrible. In fact... licking a cock didn't feel unpleasant at all. It wasn't terribly exciting, but it was.. kinda nice. No more, no less... and when she took the head of his cock into her mouth and began to slurp at it noisily, her head bobbing back and forth while her hands worked his huge, thick shaft, she found that it wasn't any worse - if anything, the warm, thick cock filling her mouth was sort of like a very unusual French kiss, and.. and...

...actually kinda fun.

She slurped and sucked noisily at the organ, as if she'd done this a thousand times before. In the back of her mind, she realized that this was going on for a lot longer then it should have - he was already hard as a rock when she'd started, he should have blown his load before now. But it seemed like forever she'd been slurping away at it, mindlessly content with his huge dick in her hands and mouth, tongue lips and fingers working like and expert.

Then, somehow, she knew it was time.. and found herself pulling her head back, the cock leaving her mouth with a wet slurping sound as she looked up at him, mouth wide open, hands still wrapped around his massive organ, giving it the final little 'oomph'...

And he came. And came. And came. It seemed impossible for one human to contain that much warm, gooey cum as he gushed over her face, mostly her wide-open mouth and lower jaw, plenty of the warm cum splattering onto the tops of her enormous, round tits, trickling down the massive fake orbs.

He finally stopped gushing as she swallowed the mouth-full of jizz. It was... different. Salty, musky, sort of unpleasant - but not utterly disgusting. Like drinking Pepsi when you preferred Coke. Not something she'd go out of her way to get, but no enough to make her throw up.

From the way she found herself acting, though, somebody would get the idea that his cum was the most wonderful thing she'd ever tasted - she even scooped some of it off her chin with her fingers, licking her long-nailed fingers free of the goo as if tasting the finest ambrosia. Still smiling up at Doug, she found her hands massaging the cum into her huge tits, leaving them finely coated in a glistened layer.

"Oh, man..." Doug said, huskily... and his cock, which had flagged just a little, was rapidly hardening again. It shouldn't have been possible, so soon - but there it was.

"Baby, I wanna get fucked long and hard by your monster." Jan said. The desire was hers, the words not so much. Still she found herself rising and pushing Doug backwards, until he was seated on a couch that should have been as filthy as the rest of the dilapidated office, but (though worn) was somehow fairly clean.

Quickly, Jan stripped out of her skirt, revealing a smoothly-shaven crotch. Her cunt was hot, wet and ready. Clad only in elastic-topped fishnet stockings and heels, she straddles Doug's lap, positioning her glistening, pungent womanhood above his huge, thick cock...

* * * * *

"Alesha...?" Steve said, stripping out of his coat and desperately hoping she hadn't changed her mind in his absence. Wondering if she should pull off his shirt or not, he hurried to the bedroom, hoping and fearing...

Opening the door to the bedroom, he felt his breath catch in his throat.

Alesha was laying back on the bed, dressed in a lacy black 'Merry Widow' ensemble, her face carefully made up and her hair dried and spread out behind her gorgeous face like a fan of the finest silk.

"God.. you are gorgeous..." Steve said, huskily, his half-erect cock growing harder in an instant. She grinned at him, cattily. "You think so? I was afraid it wasn't 'porn movie' enough for you..." Steve sighed, holding his hands up. "Okay, okay - I wish I could take that back..."

His eyes widened as she suddenly gasped, twitching...

* * * * *

She was just about to thrust her hot, wet cunt down on his massive cock.. when the world shuddered again.

Doug, once more the man he'd been earlier, gazed up at Jan in surprise as whatever had happened.. reversed itself. His sea-green eyes took in the sight of her nearly-nude body, poised above him.

She was still wearing high-heeled shoes, but they were now the same white pumps from earlier, and her nylons were also the elegant white ones she'd put on after her shower. Her bra and panties were in the pile of her other clothes, but she was wearing a blue corset that supported the nylons by garters.. and it looked absolutely stunning on her slender, beautiful body, much better than the 'porn star' body could ever be.

They stared at each other for along second, reality setting in as their uncontrollable lust faded back to normal levels.

"Oh, Jan, I..." Doug started to say apologetically, a flush rushing to his face as his hands moved to cover his crotch in shame.

Jan stared down at him from her dominant position, seeing the man who was kind, considerate, handsome, thoughtful.. and, in this version of the world, her boyfriend.

"Shut up, Doug." She instructed him, softly, guaranteeing he'd obey.. by leaning forward and pressing her lips firmly against his in a long, passionate kiss...

...which she ended by easing herself down on his still-hard cock, the kiss breaking as she gasped at the pure and utter pleasure of being completely filled. His cock had returned to its original size, no longer an outlandish monster... but it felt like it filled every contour of her damp womanhood, without stretching her.

"Mmm..." She said, just sitting there for a moment, enjoying the sensation as she gave herself over to her new life. Who cared if she was a woman? After all, no life could possibly be better than this one, male or female, and what were the odds she'd ever find somebody who was a female version of Doug...?

Doug also sighed from having her warm vagina embrace his cock.. then grinned, reaching out to lightly caress her firm, round breasts.

"I don't know what the hell just happened..." He said, tenderly. "But I'm glad we changed back. This is the woman I've fallen in love with, not some outrageous sex fantasy..."

Jan pouted, theatrically. "what, you mean you didn't like my big boobies, stud?" Then, before he could even think of answering, she lifted herself up, and thrust...

+ + + +

..into her, gently but firmly, dawning a gasp from her as the pleasure flooded her body. It was intense, and if she'd ever felt the sensation before she couldn't remember it.

"Oh, God, yes...!" Alesha Hawrie, Mortal, cried in pleasure as her lover thrust again, creating another wave of the wonderful new pleasure she couldn't remember having ever felt...

+ + + +

...before in her life. Masturbation, as man or woman, held no candle to the pleasure that thundered through her body as she rode atop Doug, her position allowing her to maximize the pleasure by adjusting the angle and length of the stroke to create the most wonderful, erotic, ecstatic pleasure.

"Oh, yes, yes..." Jan whispered, mentally kicking her own ass to have let some silly homophobic reaction keep her from the wonderful ecstasy that run through her body. It was a struggle to keep from screaming with abandon at the pleasure she felt, but there was an entire bar full of people who would hear her if she did, so she had to strain to keep from screaming...

...out in ecstasy as Steve used every skill; and technique he'd ever learned to make this the most pleasurable sexual encounter of her life.

Maybe she couldn't remember any other sexual encounters.. but she was willing to bet that Steve was making sure this would be in the top ten, at the very least. Before he'd left, she'd been utterly willing to do anything to pleasure him, her own sexual gratification somehow not nearly as important as making sure he was satisfied. Now, that initial rush of.. servitude? Had passed.. and she was inordinately guilt-free about the fact, especially since Steve seemed determined to make her as happy as she'd wanted to make him.

That was fine - she'd be happy to return the favor, and was moving in rhythm with him to increase not just her own pleasure, but his too, even as the pleasure built...

+ + + + +

...towards orgasm. It was like thundering waves of pleasure at each thrust, with each wave rising higher than the one before. She was shaking now, lower lip gripped in her teeth to keep her from screaming as the ecstasy built and built...

...and then, like a painless explosion of pure light and pleasure...

Alesha/Steve/Jan/Doug came. Separated by miles, two couples hit simultaneous orgasm in the same earth-shattering instant, body twitching rhythmically as the pure, mind-numbing pleasure took control of their nerves and minds, leaving them as puppets while their conscious mind was carried in the pure orgasmic ecstasy that lasted and eternal instant that quickly faded into a pleasant after-glow...

...in which four voices, in the same instant, said 'I love you...'

* * * * *

The shopkeeper looked at the woman for a long moment after she'd finished speaking, then down at the gleaming brass lamp. He regarded it silently for a moment longer - then glanced towards the cafe, where the dark-haired woman was laughing with her new husband.

"She has no memory of her existence before meeting you?" He asked, quietly.

"No - she remembers nothing." The woman said, softly - then her eyes flickered and looked straight into his. "Perhaps you think it unfair that she escaped the punishment you laid upon her, but I won't apologize for it."

The owner of the shop started... then his age-creased face smoothed back into its placid expression. "How did you know it was, I?" HE asked, softly.

"the workmanship on the necklace is the same as on the lamp..." She replied softly. "Truly, you must be powerful to have lived so many, many years."

"A burden that I may soon lay down." The man said, softly, looking back at where the dusky-skinned woman sat with her friend and her husband. "I did what I needed to do, but I am not a heartless monster. For centuries, I have remained vigilant, should somebody turn the powers of the Djinn to a cause to evil to bear. That, then, would have been my fault, for harnessing that power to be used. Now, she is the last, and I shall be free to surrender this life before long."

The woman smiled, softly. "Perhaps. Perhaps you should think about it. I'm sure you could find joy in life once more, now that your burden is gone."

He smiled, with a weariness that showed his great age. "I have lived longer than any man should have to. All whom I loved are gone, through the years. I have no-one, and nothing, except this rude little business, and powers that I will not use."

The woman cocked her head - and laughed, a warm, trilling sound.

"Oh, but I'm sure that if you were to use just a little bit of your power, you could... 'fudge' some records." She said, softly. "She has no memories of parents or upbringing, and you did recognize her... wouldn't it be fitting if she were to 'discover' that you are her father?"

Perhaps your 'wife' ran away with her to America, and you've never known where she was, but her resemblance to her mother is why you recognized her...?"

Again, he looked startled - then sad. "What right would I have to intrude into her life now?" He asked. "She may not know what it is that I have done to her... but I will remember."

"I think you can lay down the burden of guilt, too." The woman said, softly. "You say that you have no loved ones... yet you can, if you wish. More - you can give her a family that you denied her all those many years ago... and her child can have a grandfather."

The man looked wistful. "Perhaps... perhaps I do not need to be alone, any longer." He paused. "Perhaps, though, I need to find new joy in life, as you have. Perhaps she does not need a father she does not remember."

The woman blinked. "Oh"

The old man smiled. "I think, perhaps, if I am to give up my powers and become mortal until my life does end, I might as well discover the joys you have. Do you think she would be upset, upon returning to America, to find out that she has a younger sister? One that would like to stay with her for awhile?" the blonde looked startled - then she laughed again.

"Give yourself a good singing voice, and I'll hire you on at the bar." She winked. "With three gorgeous women working there, I think we'll show enough profit to keep you on the payroll..." taking the elaborately carved pendant necklace from the old man, she kissed him lightly on one withered cheek and strolled back to where her husband waited, humming happily to herself...

"Where'd you get the necklace?" Doug asked in surprise.

"What?" Jan asked, startled. "I got it from..." She turned to point.. and found her finger gesturing at an empty spot along the wall. The spot where the small booth sat was completely bare... except for a small object, half buried in the sand, that glittered a reddish-gold hue in the moonlight and promised plain, old material wealth to anyone lucky enough to find it and sell it.

She stared for a moment - then her grin widened as he turned back to her friends and family, the people most important to her in the world... and knowing it was soon going to be an even larger circle.

"I'll explain it all later..." She thought, too happy to give time to the lie as she ordered a cup of the strong, thick local coffee with absolute contentment.

The End

BACK TO FUN ZONE

SUMMARY: After returning to his small farming town, one tough guy is confronted by a group of women, who are out to transform his town and him over the weekend of the 4th.

Porn On The 4th Of July

By Gunslinger

Part One

THWOCK

Above, the summer sky was flawless, not a cloud to break the eye-watering brightness of the cornflower bowl that stretched from horizon to horizon. The sun's light, muted and diffuse as it was by its passage through the Earth's atmosphere, nevertheless reigned supreme, neither to be diminished nor ignored.

THWOCK

Below that arching bowl of sky, the land lay like a verdant carpet in swells and vales. The power of the sun, briefly blunted by breeze and shadow, still brought mid-morning temperatures in the high seventies across the rich, rolling Kentucky landscape.

THWOCK

In the steadily growing heat, rivulets of sweat ran over the taut muscles that flexed and relaxed in ages-old rhythms. With each swing, a eye-searing bright flash of light was pulled from the sharpened edge of the axe, before the muscles moved into a downward swing that was amplified by the three-foot-per-second acceleration of gravity.

THUNK

With a sigh of relief, Billy split the last of the firewood, feeling the heat of the summer sun worming its way through his muscular body to heat him right to the bone. He'd hoped to finish the job in the relative cool of the morning, but it had taken considerably longer than he'd planned - or would have liked to admit.

As he let the axe swing easily by his denim-clad thigh, he rolled his broad, bare shoulders, wincing slightly - more than some of his tone and stamina had been leeched from him by the time spent away from the farm. Though he'd tried hard to stay in shape while away at college, at the moment the biggest concern was going to be the sunburn he was sure to suffer, having lost his 'base tan' while away.

With a sigh, the muscular, shaven-headed man in his mid-twenties unclipped the canteen from his belt and brought it up to his goateed face. Squinting his eyes against the glare of the mid-morning sun, he leaned his head back and drank a few grateful swallows of water that, although warmed by the sun, were nevertheless refreshing.

Nevertheless, standing amongst a flurry of woodchips, his nostrils filled with the scent of fresh-split wood and fields baking under the summer sun, with undertones of diesel and manure, Billy Hunter was completely and utterly content.

He was home.

More than that... he was home in time for the Fourth of July.

For anybody from Brantsford County, that was no small thing - out here, people took the Fourth seriously.

Grabbing an old 'wife-beater' undershirt, faded to a light gray by years of use, he decided to head over to the nearest neighboring farm and find out what the current plans for the 4th were.

Tugging on the comfortable old shirt, he struck off across the field towards the path leading through the small patch of woods that separated the two farmsteads.

He'd been away for some time, and his return was anything but 'expected' - in fact, he'd just gotten home the night before, and as his little farm was just outside town, he hadn't passed through town on his way in. So far, nobody knew he was home, which meant that if he wanted to be part of the festivities for the Fourth as other than a 'mere' participant, he'd have to get up to speed PDQ.

In that, his neighbor was the perfect candidate.

Not that Billy got along particularly well with Tommy Jackson, who was a hard-working, hard-drinking man - and, when drinking, he tended to be a hard-hitting son-of-a-bitch as well, the type of guy who liked to stir up trouble, if anybody was foolish enough to provide an excuse.

Like Billy, he was a 'bachelor farmer' - but, Billy mused as he entered the cool shade of the woods and sauntered along the path, it was for completely different reasons. Until a couple of years ago, Tommy had been married, and his now ex-wife, Jenny, still lived in the area... but though no charges had ever been filed, just about everybody in town had assumed that he'd been as mean a drunk with Jenny as with anybody else.

On the other hand, Tommy Jackson was also the type of guy who insisted on being 'in' on everything, and people tended to let him hang around the edges rather than argue and risk a fight. Tommy would know, and be peripherally involved with, all the plans for the 4th - and, to be fair to Tommy, he worked his ass off, at least when he was sober, which was kind of a hit-or-miss sort of thing.

Blinking as he emerged from the shaded woods into the bright sun, Billy headed off towards the house surrounded by sun-drenched fields.

Because he was approaching from the woods, rather than from the road, he had to walk around the barn to get to the house itself. As he walked the length of the weathered wooden structure, he was somewhat bemused to hear music coming from within.

It wasn't the fact of the music that got to him - it was the type of music that was so bemusing. Tommy wasn't usually the sort to listen to 'pop country', but that was exactly what a somewhat static-marred AM radio was playing.

More out of a mildly bemused interest than anything else, Billy paused at the man-sized door near the front corner of the long side of the barn. He glanced towards the house, barely visible around the corner of the huge, if somewhat dilapidated structure - and then, curiosity getting the best of him, he swung open the door.

As he noted with some surprise the fact that the hinges seemed to have been freshly oiled, he stepped into the hot, hay-smelling interior. Stepping across the threshold, he glanced instinctively towards the source of the music...

...and stopped dead, unaware of the comic picture he presented halted in mid-stride, as he stared at the figure sprawled across some bales of hay.

The unarguably female figure.

One foot, clad in a white leather cowboy-style ankle boot, was planted on the floor, it's twin on a bale of hay. This left the long, toned legs spread apart, their smooth, sweat-slicked length bare up to the hem of the faded denim mini-skirt.

A slender-fingered hand was shaded by the hem of that tiny jean skirt, all but two of the fingers curled as the hand moved rhythmically beneath the skirt, two extended fingers gently stroking the center of the dimly-seen strip of short chestnut hair neatly trimmed around a moist womanhood.

Gaping, Billy found his eyes drawn up the masturbating woman's arm, past the tight, well-defined muscles of her abdomen, up to the where her other hand was also busy.

Encased in a 'stars and bars' pattern bikini top, her fill, firm breasts were magnificent - huge, rounded masses of mammary magnificence, tanned and sweat-dewed under the hand that slid sensuously over them, squeezing and fondling them lovingly.

Above that amazing bust-line, the woman's face was framed by long, chestnut hair that spilled from her straw cowboy hat. Full, dark-red lips were parted, soft sounds of pleasure, almost drowned by the music, issuing from her long, slender throat. Her dark, long-lashed eyes were half- closed, a heavy-lidded look of lust as she stared out...

...at Billy.

With a start, Billy realized the woman fingering herself in the Jackson barn was staring at him. Blushing, he took a half-step backwards, hands coming up as he began to stammer and incoherent apology for disturbing this unknown woman's, er... 'pleasure'....

"Mmmm... Hey there, Billy " The buxom brunette purred, complete unselfconscious as she removed her finger from her sopping twat and shifted into a sitting position. She smiled sensuously at him, licking her ripe, red lips hungrily. "I'm so very glad you're back. "

"...sorry, I didn't know..." Billy babbled - then blinked. "You... You know who I am. ?"

"Of course I do, silly " The sexy, well-endowed woman said in a sultry bedroom voice. Pushing herself up from the bale, she began to saunter towards him with a sensual, seductive sway in her step.

Managing to be simultaneously confused and aroused, Billy watched as the woman slowly drew closer, every swaying step a symphony in sexuality.

"Look, er, miss..." Billy said, finding the air somewhat... hotter... then it had been minutes before. The 'Alpha Male' portion of his mind was insisting something that his more rational mind insisted only went on in pornos, and he strove for something like normalcy in his tone - and failed, his lust and desire for the sensuously smiling woman evident in his husky tone.

"Call me Tammi..." She purred, her long-fingered hands lightly caressing her big, round boobs through the thin material of her patriot bikini top. "Jenny says that's much more appropriate... now..."

Billy frowned in confusion, wondering what the Ex-Missus-Jackson had to do with it - and then his brain briefly shut down as, with a chuckle, Tammi peeled off her top, setting her magnificent globes free. Her large, dark nipples were already fully erect, and there was no denying her intent as she walked up to him and very seductively trailed one finger down his chest, then curled her hand around to cup his swelling manhood through the fabric of his jeans.

Part of Billy accepted this completely as his due, as what the obvious 'stud' like him deserved, nay, expected whenever a gorgeous babe like this buxom brunette was met...

...whereas the more rational part of his suddenly not-quite-as-functional brain did the speaking for the whole:

"Er, um... wha...?"

"I'm so very, very glad you're back..." She breathed - and then, hungrily, locked her luscious lips to his and kissed him, fast and hard.

"There are so few men around these days..." She purred as she broke the kiss, "...and I've been craving it so very badly ever since..."

The hand still fondling his now rock-hard cock unzipped his jeans, and she slowly began to sink to her knees, leaning forward to drag the firm flesh of her huge boobs across his body as she slid downwards.

"Cuh... Craving..." Billy parroted, his stunned - and, given the need for the flow elsewhere at the moment, currently somewhat 'blood deprived' - brain struggling to keep up with impossible, if certainly not unwelcome, events.

"Cum, silly..." Tammi chuckled, freeing his cock and giving it's swollen purple head a lick, sending shivers through his body. "I just haven't been able to get enough of it, since the Change..."

"The... Change..." Billy wondered aloud... There was no reply.

Tammi must have been raised not to talk with her mouth full...

Moaning, Billy slumped back against the door-post, scarcely able to believe any of this was really happening as the gorgeous brunette, on first meeting, hungrily sucked his cock. Tongue, lips and hands worked in glorious, erotic concert, creating incredible sensations that thrummed through Billy's muscular, sweaty body.

It wasn't at all surprising, given the circumstances, that he failed to notice the other person enter the barn until a sharp, derisive laugh drew his attention to the newcomer.

"Well - isn't this just... deliciously ironic, in so many ways..." The arrogant female voice chortled, and Billy's eyes flew open. "Jenny..." Billy gasped - not entirely certain himself.

The woman certainly looked like Jenny Jackson... if Jenny had lost ten pounds, toned up, and completely changed her personality... and wardrobe. The mousy, somewhat nervous woman Billy remembered would never have dressed in a tight-fitting white leather-and-denim ensemble like that, nor given him a look of such mocking arrogance.

"Mistress Jennifer, if you please, Mr. Hunter..." She said, mockingly, watching as the buxom brunette kneeling before Billy worked his cock with uncaring dedication to what was happening - which meant that not all of Billy's mind was on the conversation, either.

"We weren't expecting you back so soon..." Jenny - Mistress Jennifer - said, smiling evilly. "In fact, you'll probably wish you hadn't come back at all. I can't think of any offense, offhand, you'll be charged with - but I doubt, on general principles, that the Council of Matriarchs put you on the Approved Males list..."

"Approved mailing list...?" Billy moaned, the conversation aiding the illusion that Tammi was, in fact, 'sucking his brains out' - God, he'd never gotten a blow-job so... intense! It was as if she not only knew exactly what a man liked, but how no other desires in mind but to give him exactly that, with no regard to her own desires.

"More like 'femaling list', for you..." Mistress Jennifer chuckled, seeing both the inordinate pleasure and subordinate confusion of the muscular, all-too-'masculine'-to-safe man's face. "I'm sure you'll enjoy some time 'servicing' some of the Changed - almost all men do. After that, I'm afraid... it'll be your turn. Like our lovely new Tommy here..."

Billy's brain was still trying to wrap itself around the very odd pronunciation of 'Tammi', much less anything else the self-proclaimed 'Mistress Jennifer' had said... when his thought processes took a time-out.

With a helpless shout of pleasure, he came - came long and hard, his cum gushing forth in a what, for a briefest eternity, felt like a never-ending flood.

The busty brunet cow-girl hungrily gulped it all down, swallowing his hot man-seed eagerly. As he gasped and shuddered, the last of his cum dribbling into her waiting mouth, Billy looked down and watched as she licked his slowly softening cock free, a look of utter bliss on her lovely face.

So, he was looking right at her when that look of bliss began to change.

It slid, first, towards good-natured bemusement, then into one of utter confusion. She looked around, shock and worry suddenly stamped on her features...

...and then, suddenly, she scuttle backwards, disgust and horror writ large as she gave a short, sharp scream. "Oh, God - no!" She shouted, spitting. "Not again! Not.. oh God, I don't..."

Mistress Jennifer began to laugh.

"What's wrong, Tommy...?" She taunted the horrified-looking woman. "You were always so eager for blow-jobs when we were married. Demanding them every day, in fact."

"No, I don't... I didn't..." The brunette sobbed - and then she looked at Billy, a look of revulsion mixed with anger coming over her face. "Billy Hunter! You BASTARD! How could you do this to me...?" She shrieked.

"I.. You..." Billy stammered, physically recoiling from her look of pure vengeance.

"Oh, don't mind her." Mistress Jennifer chuckled. "It's always like this when they're new. Once the implanted cravings are satisfied, they mentally revert... until full Change has been done, at least."

Reaching into the reasonably well-filled bodice of her white leather corset top, the toned, platinum-blond who looked like a much fitter, more dominant version of Tommy Jackson's ex-wife withdrew and odd-looking pressure injector pen.

"Time for your next dose, Darling Tommy..." She cooed, evilly.

"God, no - please, Jenny, I'm so sorry for all I done to you...!" Tammi screamed, trying to recoil... even as, manifestly against her will, she began to move towards Jennifer, helplessly offering herself towards the injector.

His limp cock hanging out, his mind whirling, Billy desperately tried to make sense of the situation - and failed miserably when the pieces refused to fit.

...or, rather, when he refused to let the pieces fit where they seemed to want to go, because that.. well, it was literally unthinkable.

...wasn't it?

"Look...!" Billy said, irritably, as he stepped between the two women, self-consciously tucking himself away as he did so. "Just what the hell is going on...?"

"You let me suck you fuckin' cock, you sick bastard!" Tammi screamed, now behind him as he faced a very annoyed-looking 'Mistress Jennifer'...

...which meant he didn't see her suddenly uncurl from the floor, hearing only her scream of "...see how YOU like it!"

He suddenly found himself shoved forward by her flying weight - and heard a sudden his as he impacted on the pressure-injector pen, causing it to discharge into his system.

"No!" Mistress Jennifer shouted, more annoyed than angry or afraid. "What the...?" Billy stammered, staggering back.

"Wait here..." Mistress Jennifer commanded him, imperiously. "You haven't gotten the prep shots - you'll need care if you're to make it through the Change alive... if the Council decides to let you, that is."

She gave him a thoughtful look, then turned her attention to Tammi.

"As for you... you've been a very naughty cum-slut. Punish yourself until I come back with another dose."

"I'm sorry...!" Tammi shouted, suddenly contrite. Helplessly, clearly fighting every motion, the brunette turned and started towards the wall - a wall, Billy's stunned and now somewhat foggy mind noted, contained a shelf with a rather startling array of dildos, vibrators, and other euphemistically-called 'marital aids'.

Somewhat numbly, Billy watched her fight herself over to the wall, and, with a despairing moan, select a large and rather wicked-looking dildo from the selection... and then dragged his attention back to Jennifer, who was imperiously striding past him to the door.

"Wha.. What's goin'.. on...?" He managed, feeling flushed and feverish. "Wha' was in tha' in.. in.. needle..?"

"Gynomaxia Mutatus serum." Jennifer said, shortly, knocking his grasping and steadily more painful grasp from her arm. "Just lay down and stay as relaxed while I call the council, and you might just get treatment soon enough to survive the Change..."

As throbbing aches began to blossom throughout his body, accompanied by a rising fever, Billy considered her words, and they way they fit into the utterly impossible, almost literally unthinkable pattern his mind kept trying to force them data into...

...and then, clawing at the clothing covering his aching, sweating, fever-racked body, bolted from the barn.

Mistress Jennifer made and abortive attempt to grab him as he darted away - and then gave a shrug as she watched him move across the field in a shambling run.

"Probably for the best - I doubt we had a program ready for him..." She mused to herself - and then decided to contact the Council of Matriarchs and inform them, anyway. Though a Novice in the new Order of Womanhood herself, if she were to be found negligent in this matter, her fate could be...

Glancing almost involuntarily at the sobbing, squealing, sweat-slicked woman helplessly fucking herself with the over-sized dildo, Mistress Jennifer considered the consequences of being involved in anything that might derail Her Royal Mistress' plan - and, with a shudder, decided to contact the council right away.

It felt as if he were burning up. Beneath skin that felt as if it were melting, muscles twitched and spasmed uncontrollably, throwing what was meant to be a head-long run into a shambling, pseudo-drunken stumble. Beneath rebelling muscles, his bones felt as if they'd somehow caught fire - and, much worse, as if they were somehow expanding and contracting with the heat, growing or shrinking in some strange, arcane way...

...except, to his fevered brain's horror, Billy could not help but notice a growing - and hideously recognizable - pattern to the 'arcane' way his skeletal, muscular, and epidermal changes were occurring. The painful expansion of his hips, the itchy-crawly sensation on the top of his head, the shift and shudder of muscle and fat just beneath the surface of his skin - it all added up to something Billy's whirling mind desperately tried not to accept.

Hard as he tried to deny it, however, what had been 'merely' horrifying, the knowledge that his body was somehow, impossibly, changing... was made even more terrible by the growing certainty of what it was changing into.

Gasping, Billy continued tearing at his clothes, not content to just open them - he had to be rid of them, and in a desperate attempt to cool his burning body, shed them behind him in a ragged trail as he stumbled through the marginally cooler, and considerably more humid depths of the woods. Brambles and branches grabbed at him, and stones and roots clawed as his feet, but the minor pain of these encounters was nothing compared to the one that wracked him from the soles of his feet to the now-stubbed crown of his head.

The serum that ran through Billy's body was burning him up, from the inside out. As it forced cells to change, muscles and tissue and sinew to grow with a new template, it did so at a literally feverish pace, rapidly increasing his body temperature. Trapped within the confines of it's painfully re-shaping skull, his brain was coming dangerously close to a temperature that would lead to delirium, followed by death.

His whirling, horrified mind under assault by pain and his rising fever, the shambling, changing figure of what had once been a man named William John Hunter could well have died. What saved Billy was nothing more than shear, blind luck.

He stumbled upon the glade by pure chance - he had not known it was there, and even if he had, his fevered mind was in no shape to have guided his traitorous body to it. Nevertheless, he stumbled into the little clearing, whimpering and sobbing, his mind overwhelmed with pain and horror...

...and his changing eyes fell upon the small, spring-fed pond in the center of the glade.

He was pretty far gone - but given his tortured brain's desperate desire for relief, he - or that what had once been a 'he' - recognized salvation. The shambling figure, now naked, stumbled towards the small pool of clear, cool water.

Steadily lengthening hair brushed across the back of a neck that was slimmer, softer and smoother than it had been before. Growing mounds of fatty tissue and other forms of flesh jiggled on a still-broad chest that was nevertheless steadily drawing inwards upon itself. With each step, and conspicuous lack of movement came from the nether regions that had not to long ago shifted and bounced with every unrestrained step, but was now smooth and flat - and part of the tortured brain recorded these sensations, and even understood the horrifying implications of the new sensations. All of it paled, however, in the desire for the relief that calm pool of water represented, and with single-minded purpose the changing figure forced itself forward until it could literally collapse in the cooling embrace of the clear, still water.

For an interminable time, it seemed if death was still the fate that awaited that which had been Billy - as fevered muscles locked under the blissfully icy assault of the water, trapping that which had been a 'him' below the water for eternal moments, hovering on the edge of drowning...

...and then with a primal, if much to high-pitched, scream, Billy broke the surface of the water in a long, arching, quivering, muscle-pulling stretch, now shoulder-length mane of silky, reddish hair plastered to the altered curvature of the skull as the still-mutating figure, well on it's way to womanhood, unconsciously chose life over the proverbial 'fate worse than death'.

His-becoming-her body twitching and thrashing as it continued to change in the life-saving environs of the cool water, the person who until so recently had been an 'Alpha Male' known as Billy Hunter struggled to get a feverish mind to work - and work it did, albeit sluggish and confused.

There was no denying what was happening to the body that was containing that mind, no denying the evidence that made all the 'unbelievable' information garnered during the course of that amazing blow-job at the barn all too painfully believable. Somehow, Billy had unwittingly ended up stuck in the middle of something, some strange plot run by some sort of cabal in town - what 'Mistress Jennifer' had called.. what was it? ...oh, yes - the 'Council of Matriarchs'.

There was no knowing what or how, not with the information now available - but these were answers that had to be found...

...with the most nagging question in the befogged and befuddled brain of the still-changing figure being the question of stopping or reversing the inevitable transformation to womanhood she was now experiencing...

SUMMARY: After returning to his small farming town, one tough guy is confronted by a group of women, who are out to transform his town and him over the weekend of the 4th.

Part Two

The naked woman staggered into the dilapidate old farmhouse.

Her body, recently immersed in water, was still damp - but most of that was from the sweat wrung out of her by both fear and the powerful summer sun that had already partially dried the rusty-red mane of silken hair that hung nearly to the taut, firm globes of her trim, heart-shaped ass.

Her face, while lovely enough in repose, now alternated between a blank look of numbed shock, and a twisted expression of horror, obscuring it's natural, strong-jawed beauty.

It wasn't all that strange - considering that the lovely face topping the lean, tautly trim female body belonged to somebody who, not an hour before, had been a broad-shouldered muscular man named Billy Hunter...

She staggered across the living room, and into her bedroom, shutting the door behind her as if, somehow, it could keep the feminine fate that had already enveloped her at bay. Gasping for breath, she gazed around in wide-eyed horror, not knowing what to do...

...and then her eyes fell on the full-length mirror nailed up to the closet door. She took in the sight of her new body.

She looked over her smooth, slender new arms, now attached to shoulders that would never be described as either 'broad' or 'muscular'.

She eyed her trim, undeniably feminine waist.

She gazed upon the firm, rounded buttocks that had replaced the hard, flat ones she'd used to have.

She saw the sight of her taut, pert breasts, neither too large nor too small, shifting slightly on her chest with each breath. She eyed the moist slit that had replaced her once-proud manhood.

She... went a little nuts.

Twenty minutes of alternating screaming and sobbing later, then newly-made woman managed to drag herself back under control. Taking a long, deep breath, she glanced briefly at the shattered mirror, whose fractured surface gave back only a vaguely recognizable reflection of the tortured face now surrounded by hair crudely shortened - practically hacked to shoulder length - with a pair of kitchen scissors.

"Shit..." She sighed, wincing at the warm, feminine contralto the word emerged in. Shaking her head, glad that she'd gotten rid of the ass-length mane at least, she decided to finish the job by heading over to the bathroom. The pair of electric clippers she used for her usual male 'cue ball' look were in a drawer in the cabinet, and she tried - very hard - to convince herself it wasn't 'wired' for her to see her head, as a woman, when it had seemed so natural, as a guy.

She dug out an old pair of pants that, if uncomfortably tight across her fuller, tauter fundament, were at least closer to the length of her shapely new legs, then quickly pulled an old dress-shirt on over her slimmer new shoulders. Swinging open the door to the bedroom, she stepped into the living-room...

...and stopped dead, staring in shock at the man sitting in her battered leather executive chair in front of the desk she used for her laptop.

"Dave...!" The woman gasped - then, suddenly realizing that she looked nothing at all like the broad-shouldered, shaven-scalped muscular young man Dave knew as Billy, began to splutter.

"Hello, Billie Jean..." The rangy, sandy-haired man about her own age said, in a strangely dead tone of voice - one she'd never heard from him before, which she would have denied as being flatly impossible, considering that Dave MacIntyre was Billy Hunter's boyhood chum and best friend.

However, despite seeming to recognize her new form, Dave hadn't called her 'Billy...', exactly... "What... What did you call me?" She stammered, freshly confused.

"Billie Jean... Like in the song..." Dave replied, in that same, defeated tone of voice. "That's what High Mistress Amanda decided your name will now be... Billie Jean."

The newly-christened 'Billie Jean' blinked, beleaguered brain spinning.

"Mistress Amanda...? You mean Amanda Verklempt, the shrink at the new medical center you told me about in that last e-mail...?"

"High Mistress Amanda supervises the Re- Assignment and Re- Education Center for the Betterment of all Womankind, yes..." Dave replied. "She re-introduces that latent Mistress in all women, pacifies all those chosen as Approved Males, and of course decides the appropriate Implanted Persona for each of the Changed. As a Changed-Deferred, I have been assigned by the High Mistress as your personal Male Companion until your Change is complete. I will Serve you while you learn to Service me, and then I will be assigned a Companion for my own Change."

For a long moment, Billie Jean simply gaped at her old friend, mind full of dozen of questions, until one of the swirling inquiries managed to break from the pack and make it to her lips...

" 'Service'...?" She demanded.

Dave's dead-eyed gaze fell from her face - to where, suddenly blushing, she realized her shirt had been hanging open, exposing the creamy inner swell of her taut, pale breasts.

"Hell, no!" She asserted, forcefully, grabbing the shirt and pulling it closed - while uttering what had to be high on the list of 'Top 10 Things I Would Never Say': "...and, dammit, stop staring at my tits, Dave!"

"I can't help it, Billie Jean!" Dave replied, and now there WAS emotion in his voice - anguish. "...anymore than I can help by calling you by your new name, or doing what any of the Mistresses have commanded of me! Don't you understand...?!"

"NO!" Billie Jean shouted back. "I don't!"

Dave took a deep breath, and pitched his voice lower, deadly earnest.

"I can remember, perfectly clear, how horrified and disgusted I felt an hour ago when High Mistress Amanda explained to me who I was going to Companion, and what Persona you were to receive." He said. "I don't - can't! - feel that way now. Instead, I feel privileged and excited - and, yes, damn it, turned on - by being granted the honor of turning my life-long best friend into a perfect, perennially happy Southern Housewife! The worst part of it is, I don't WANT to do it... and yet, at the same time, I'm not only EAGER to do it, but I know that, God help me, I'll ENJOY doing it..!"

Billie Jean gaped at him for a long second - and then, without a word, bolted for the front door.

Dave had been expecting it. No matter his memories of his best friend, no matter what he knew he 'should' do or not, he was fully committed to the assignment he'd been given. There was no hesitation at all in his actions as he sprang up and intercepted her a few feet shy of the door - and pressed a pressure-injector against her neck, injecting her with the mind-altering serum that, under the guise of 'flu shots', had been used to completely pacify the small, sleepy southern town being used by a demented cabal of women as a testing ground for their plans to free women from the enslavement of male-dominant society.

Not that Billie Jeans' concerns included anything as grandiose as the causes of the situation, the process by which any of this was happening, or the fate of the world as she knew it - when she felt the cool and now familiar feel of the injection, her horrified concern was all about what it was going to do to her.

"I'm sorry, Billie Jean..." Dave said, releasing her - but it was a pacifying lie, for he was completely unable to feel sorrow for doing a work he was unwilling dedicated to now. "It will all begin to be easier for you to accept, from now on - especially if you don't fight it. That just drags it out, but it won't change how it ends..."

"You BASTARD!" Billie Jean growled through gritted teeth, eyeing her 'old friend' where he stood between her and the door. The brief tussle had revealed just how shockingly weak her new, feminine body was compared to her heavily muscled old male one - there was no chance of overpowering him.

She waited, almost hyperventilating... and begin to feel some faint stirrings of hope when she realized she didn't feel any different. Perhaps the drug hadn't worked...?

"Now, why don't you change into the clothes I brought for you, and we'll head into town?" Dave said, sounding oddly reasonable to her.

"What?!" She demanded, almost involuntarily glancing over to the plastic bag leaning against the chair he'd been sitting in - and then doing an almost classic double-take when she noticed that the familiar logo of the only women's clothing store in town, Becky's Boutique, now read 'Bimbo's Boutique'.

"You want to look pretty, don't you?" Dave asked.

"Hell, no!" She replied - while, for some reason, 'you want to look pretty' seemed to bounce around in her head for a moment.

"Oh? Well... You want to go into town and see what's happening, don't you? You're not going out dressed like that, are you?" He asked.

'I want to go into town...' Billie Jean found herself thinking - without realizing that WAS what she was thinking, instead considering that, if there were any way to reverse this, it certainly wasn't here - perhaps the answer was in town...

...and then, almost involuntarily, she looked down at the poorly-fitting pants she was wearing, and the old shirt she was practically only half-wearing, it having once again swung open during the tussle.

Her gaze slipped, almost on it's own, back to the plastic bag....

* * * * *

Sitting in the passenger's side of Dave's classic '48 'Woody' Station wagon, Billie Jean tried to convince herself that she'd down the right thing changing into the clothes Dave had brought. If nothing else, they fit a lot better, and she hadn't had ANY footwear that would have fit her smaller feet, much less as well as the white canvas deck-shoes that had been in the bag.

Beside, it was just jeans and a striped tank-top, practically the same thing she'd worn as a man, right? Only, as Dave had infuriatingly insisted on pointing out, 'much prettier'.

'I feel much better now that I'm properly dressed. ' her mind parroted back the actual phrase he'd used to her - only it was much more personal, much more self-directed.. and barely noticed, at least by her conscious brain.

The car, rumbling over the rutted dirt road, suddenly pulled to a stop as it reached the crest of the ridge before falling off into the valley in which the town lay nestled. Startled by the deceleration, Billie Jean glanced out the windshield...

...and then, without conscious decision to do so, found herself climbing out of the car to stare down at the town. Dimly, she was aware of Dave opening the door on his own side and getting out.

Sleepy little Boone's Hollow was anything by sleepy...

"What the. ?" Billie Jean heard a feminine voice gasp, and was dimly surprised to realize it was her own.

It was as if the little town had been invaded. A tent city had sprung up at either end of Main Street, practically doubling the size of the town - and the place was PACKED. Cars, RV's, camper trailers news vans, pedestrians... it looked like Times Square at noon-hour.

"The county decided to hold a very special 4th of July celebration right here this year... after the Council of Matriarchs visited them and 'convinced' them, of course." Dave said, gently easing her back into the car - she hadn't even noticed him walking around to her side. Now, stunned at the implications, she had to wait until he'd walked back around the long, red hood of the car and slipped behind the wheel before he continued.

"The pilot project went so well here in town - less yourself, of course, at least until now - that they've decided to go ahead..." Dave said, putting the car into gear and starting down towards the barely controlled chaos below. "A good chunk of the county will end up coming through here this weekend, what the with prices set so low, and so many special events... and, hey, the county is even running a free health-care clinic for all of them..."

As the big old car eased itself deeper towards the heart of the town, Billie Jean was aware of the fact that she should be horrified by the implications of that statement... but, instead, found herself idly eyeing the women thronging the streets.

Not that it was an uncommon pastime... but, without even noticing it, she felt a small thrill of pride every time she found herself looking at a woman less attractive than her new self.. and a small fission of disappointment every time she caught Dave looking at one that might be considered as attractive as her.

For some reason, it didn't occur to her that she now seemed constitutionally incapable of thinking of any woman as being MORE attractive to Dave than herself... so it never occurred to her to worry about it.

The car pulled up in front of the township building, and Dave, smiling, hurried around the car to open the door for her and hand her out - a sight that many of the people passing by noticed.

What they saw was a handsome young man happily helping his pretty girlfriend out of a car...

Which would have really, really worried Billie Jean had she realized that her expression and motions were perfectly in keeping with that particular scenario. It never even occurred to her to notice that she was moving with a much more feminine grace - at least, in term of her conscious mind.

Unlike her subconscious, which remembering a particular remark Dave had made about the way a woman passing by on the street had walked 'so prettily', was doing it's damndest to better the graceful motions.

"Well, well... If it ain't Billy Hun... Jean." A feminine voice boomed with mock cheerfulness - and a strange sort of moist sibillance to it, somewhere between a mumble and a lisp.

Billie Jean looked up - and stared at the muscular, dark-haired woman standing in the doorway of the Sheriff's department, a rifle cocked against one toned, but well-rounded hip.

"C'mon in, honey!" The woman invited, a strange smile playing around her rich, red lips. "The Shoot-Off jus' done finished, and I'se ain't got nothing planned for the rest o' the day... 'ceptin' fer you, o'course."

Billie Jean stared at the unfamiliar woman with the strangely familiar sub-literate speech pattern. If it weren't for the strange speech impediment and it's decidedly feminine nature, it would have sounded almost exactly like...

"Deputy Lubitsch...?" Billie blurted.. sweetly and demurely, although she didn't realize it.

The woman - who, aside from the hair, looked almost nothing like scrawny, 'damn-'em-all-to-hell' Tom Lubitsch - laughed with a strange slurping sound.

"Sheriff, honey buns - I'se the sheriff in these parts..."

She glanced around at the many strangers walking down the nearby sidewalk, and leaned conspiratorially forward, pitching her voice for Billie Jean's ears alone.

"..and I'll accept that 'Lubitsch' mis'pn'ounciation from all these outta- towners, but you call me like a true local do - Lezbitch. Sheriff Tuff Lezbitch. Now get you pale ass inside, pussy, 'forin I have it drugged in real mean-like..."

Numbly, Billie Jean let ex-male, Ex-Deputy Tom Lubitsch - known apparently reveling in the name Tuff Lezbitch - lead her into the police station...

...and a pair of muscular female deputies grabbed her practically the instant she cleared the doorway and was out of sight of any random passer-by.

With quick, efficient motions, the two muscular women followed Lezbitch's instructions, and stripped her naked.

'Oh, dear, my pretty new clothes...' she thought, without thinking about it - and felt somehow both vaguely grateful and simultaneously disappointed that Dave hadn't followed them inside, where he could have seen her now-naked body...

Her trim, undeniably attractive female figure now exposed for all the leering staff of the Sheriff's department to ogle, Billie Jean struggled in utter futility as she was forced backwards into the cell.

The two deputies forced her naked body backwards, until the back of her knees hit the edge of the combination bench/bunk. Helplessly, she sat down suddenly and hard on what was little more than a thinly-padded shelf secured to the wall by chains.

So, she too was secured to the wall by chains - specifically, padded velvet handcuffs that the deputies produced.

One went on each wrist, securing a writs to each of the chains supporting the bunk. A second, larger pair of padded cuffs was used to similarly secure her angles to shackles on the floor - wide-spread shackles. Though she fought, it was to no avail, and soon enough she was helplessly locked into place, spread-eagled and naked.

"Brace yourself, sweet-thang..." Sheriff Lezbitch lisped. "...I'se gonna lick you senselessly..." Lezbitch smiled - and then, Billie Jean discovered the source of the Sheriff's 'speech impediment'...

Giving off a little - and damnable 'week, feminine' sounding - scream, Billie Jean watched with wide-eyed horror as Lezbitch slowly and sensuously licked her own lips...

...with a tongue that, as it slipped through her smirking lips, reveled itself to be amazingly... LONG. Long and THICK.

Long, thick, and MUSCULAR.

"You're gonna love this..." The transformed law-officer promised, with a wicked grin. "...whether you want to or not!" 'I'm going to love it...' Billie Jean's mind whispered to itself, unnoticed. 'I'm going to love it...'

Then Lezbitch's long, thick, muscular tongue slammed deep into Billie Jean's mouth.

You couldn't call it a kiss, not really - it more was like a form of oral rape, the big, muscular tongue forcibly writing and thrusting in Billie Jean's mouth...

...which was why she was so disturbed to find that she was... kind of liking it.

"You love a little tongue-action, don'tcha, cunt?" One of the on-looking deputies chortled - with malice aforethought, for the self-same thought zipped across her subconscious mind a second later, seeming to join the circling litany of such thoughts already in a holding pattern just below the surface of her mind.

Then Lezbitch began moving downwards, her lapping and licking tongue not so much teasing the firm handfuls of Billie's new breast as sort of torturing her with wet, warm-then-cold pleasure-then-pain - her tongue, so supple and so strong, could actually grab and squeeze Billie's nipples.

"Getting your tits played with really turns you on, don't it honey...?" The second deputy chuckled.

'Oh, God - I am getting horny...!' Billie Jean thought in horror - but a very mild horror, which would have worried her, if not for the fact that her attention was trying to concentrate on both the tongue roaming her torso and the growing warm wetness between her helplessly spread legs.

Worse, as Lezbitch continued to tease her, the fiery wetness in her new womanhood continued to grow.. and Billie Jean found herself actually wanted release.

The thought disgusted her, and she tried to push it away... but the two deputies were continuing to 'banter between themselves', and she found herself too painfully aware of her own growing arousal to ignore the thoughts of all the satisfaction that tongue could give her...

...and Lezbitch, true to her name, held them off long past the point of agony, until Billie was writhing and gasping and moaning...

...and, to her own horror, begging for Lezbitch to use that 'magnificent tongue' - ('She really wants a tongue to satisfy her, don't she?' 'Yup, but only 'cause she can't get the cock that she's really craving to satisfy...' bantered the deputies) - crying out for a long-overdue release.

Lezbitch finally gave it to her...

...again, and again, and AGAIN...

It had been no idle boast - as Billie writhed and twisted in helplessly pleasure, her cries eventually turned to begging for a release form release, but orgasm after orgasm continued to wrack her new body, and she helplessly heard herself scream out in ecstasy with each orgasm, disgusted by enjoying it...

...but slightly less so with each repletion and she was tongue-fucked literally into unconsciousness, her body rapidly becoming exhausted under the seeming never-ending series of orgasms.

...and, just as the swirling darkness reached out to grab her, Billie Jean felt the now-familiar sensation as a deputy pressed a pressure-injector against her arm.

PORN ON THE 4th OF JULY:

Part 3

By Gunslinger

Billy Hunter groaned softly, and blearily let his eyes flutter open, his sluggish mind wondering what the hell was going on. Slowly, it began to dawn on him that ceiling over head looked vaguely familiar.

He was in the Boone Hollow jail.

Shit - had he gone on a bender, stirred up some trouble? That might explain why he felt so... strange.

For one thing, his cock felt REALLY strange - well, his crotch, since his cock felt strangely numb. Maybe somebody had kicked him in the balls during a fight, or something - there was a low, persistent throbbing in his crotch, a kind of.. well, weird as it was, a pleasurable sort of pain.

He reached down, sliding a hand into the open fly of a pair of jeans that seemed to be hastily pulled on his body while it was limp - (had he run around naked and drunk...?) - and a hand that felt really strange to him groped in the pants for his...

Billie Jean let out a little shriek, eyes flying wide open as realization came - and with it, a flood of memories that had all-too-briefly been blessedly repressed.

As the memory of the events of the day, and the realization that she was now a woman - a woman who had just been well and truly 'tongue-fucked' by Sheriff Lezbitch - flooded Billie's shocked and horrified mind, she had the dubious 'enjoyment' of re-experiencing her fate anew, almost as if it were happening for the first time, but in one terrible instant, rather than the morning-long experience it had actually been. She gave another breathless, undeniably feminine-sounding little shriek, and sat bolt upright on the bench...

No breathless little shriek this time - it was a full-fledged scream as she rocketed up off the bench, hands flying to her chest in horror as sight and sensation registered the undeniable truth indelibly on her mind...

"My TITS!"

She screamed, in her somewhat higher- pitched - and more sweetly 'Southern Belle' accented - voice. "My tits are... bigger!"

"They're... huge...!" She gasped, her dainty new hands squeezing her newly oversized endowments.

"Huge... and really, really... mmm... sensitive..." She moaned softly to herself, hands going from 'shocked grasping' to 'sexy caressing' without any input at all from her still stunned - and, still utterly unrecognized by Billy Jean, slowly changing - mind.

"Well, well - look who's up..." One of the deputies snorted, sauntering over to the front of the cell. "Look at you, playin' with your new tits - you must really love having big boobs, babe..."

Billie, blushing, rather reluctantly yanked her hands down, intending an angry denial even as the phrase 'I must love having big boobs' chased around her mind - but before she could speak, the deputy continued:

"You'll love it even more when your man plays with them, though." She quite deliberately said. "Yup, that's what your big ol' boobies are for: making your man happy."

"I don't have 'a man'..." Billie Jean protested - weakly, rather than angrily, as she'd planned. She frowned slightly, wondering why she felt a strange sensation of... unhappiness.

"Yeah, sure..." The deputy sneered, unlocking the cell. "Woman like you - you just don't feel whole, less you got yourself a man to please."

"That's bull-shit...!" Billie angrily stated - while feeling, somehow... incomplete.

"Here's your shirt back - you want to cover those babies up to keep from being ogled, 'least, except for your man of course. You like it when HE ogles them... makes you feel so damned good... so damned HORNY, matter a' fact..."

Struggling to fit her newly swollen breasts into the now too-tight top, Billie Jean declined to answer...

...and besides, she was too distracted by her nipples, larger and at the moment almost painfully swollen into tautly erect indicators of how much the sensation of her manipulating her breasts in the shirt was giving her unintended pleasure.

"You 'bin out for 'bout an hour." The deputy said, jerking her head towards the door. "Y'all can go now, sweet-cheeks."

Blushing, Billie Jean walked out of the cell - unable to stop noticing how much her fuller, rounder breasts jiggled and swayed within the straining confines of her multi-hued tank top...

...or how good it felt.

With the shirt on, Billie stepped out of the cell, brushing past the deputy...

...who suddenly grabbed her, spinning her around and shoving her hard up against the wall beside the cell. Grinning wickedly, the muscular woman reached out and began to squeeze and fondle Billie Jean's new tights roughly through the thin fabric of her shirt.

"You like this, doncha?" The deputy demanded, practically panting. "Your big, sensitive boobies being used as pleasure play-things, gets you all hot and horny, all wet and ready, doesn't it...?"

"Stop it!" Billie Jean demanded, squirming and blushing... and, helplessly, against her will, making small moans and gasps of pleasure as she helplessly enjoyed the sensations that came with the mauling of her new tits. "Stop it - these aren't for YOU to play with...!"

'Now, why did I say THAT...?' Billie Jean wondered, in confusion, as the laughing deputy spun her away from the wall, giving her a muscular shove towards the door.

"Go on, then - go look for your man, the one who you WANT to play with your titties...!" The deputy taunted, as the still-blushing Billie hurried towards the door. "Go let your MAN get you all hot and horny, ripe and ready for being fucked by his hard cock - you KNOW that's what you want!"

Ignoring the taunting, the once-male, newly busty woman fled from the dim, cool interior of the jail into the bright, hot sunlight of a summer afternoon.

Taking a deep breath, Billie Jean felt the blush slowly fading from her face as she looked around, squinting slightly in the bright sunlight.

Almost immediately, she had to shift her position - the sidewalk was crowded with people who'd come in response to the Council's July 4th celebration plans. Seeded in among these were locals, and as she looked at the people swirling around her, filling the streets with noise and humanity, Billie Jean realized with a sinking sensation that she had no idea what to do.

Who could she trust? If her very best friend in the whole world couldn't help her, could actually be turned against her, who could she hope to help her? There was no way of knowing who had already been 'co-opted' by the crazed cabal of women in town... and, from what Dave had said, many more in the county were already 'adjusted' in attitude, if not necessarily in body yet.

Also...

She was feeling extremely self-conscious, painfully aware of the way her newly enlarged breasts strained the thin fabric of her shirt. She couldn't help notice the way people notice her new endowments - and she didn't want them to ogle her new boobs.

'I don't want THEM to ogle my big, sensitive new boobies...' Was the actual thought that crossed her mind - and she noticed not a thing unusual about that fact, nor the fact that the 'thought' came across in a honey-rich Southern drawl...

Rather aimless, Billie Jean began to wander down the street, feeling a faint blush tingle her cheeks as she tried to avoid noticing the men looking at her new figure. It wasn't right and proper for them to be eyeing her new tits this way...!

...but she was also feeling guilty because she wasn't supposed to be 'flaunting' her new tits this way. It wasn't right for her to have them on display where just any man could enjoy the sight of them jiggling and swaying as she gracefully and femininely swayed down the street in a perky, 'innocently sexy' feminine gait.

She wandered a bit, 'aimlessly' - only to find that her steps had brought her to the door of 'Bimbo's Boutique'.

Caught in indecision, Billie Jean paused in front of the store, completely unaware of the delightfully feminine vision of uncertainty she was presenting to the world at large.

She didn't want to go into a woman's clothing store. She didn't want to buy more clothing that was feminine, much less clothing that more feminine...

...at least, she was fairly certain she didn't.

But she felt so... uncomfortable, dressed as she was. She tried to picture herself wearing baggy jeans and an even baggier sweatshirt, like she could pick up at the second-hand store, but for reasons she couldn't quite place her mental finger on, the thoughts just felt so... so WRONG.

She couldn't make herself feel comfortable with the clothing she was wearing, and, try as she might, she couldn't picture herself wearing less female-specific clothing.

Finally, she sighed, conceding that she 'had' to buy feminine clothing.. and then, pulling open the door, stepped into the air- conditioned comfort of the shop, unaware how strange it was that she was 'happy' to have come to the 'obvious conclusion' that she 'just had to' buy women's clothing from now on...

Billie Jean looked around the store - and then her gaze fell on the woman behind the counter.

As the slender blonde noticed Billie's entrance, she wiggled, jiggled and swayed out from behind the counter to come greet her, and Billie could do nothing but stare at the outrageous figure that filled the tiny little, heart-shaped patriotic-patterned bikini outfit.

'Gee - and I thought MY tits were big...!' Billie found herself thinking... without wondering all at the slight edge of envy tainting her thoughts as she gazed at the stupendous, melon-like breasts of the pig-tailed Blonde now smiling brightly, if rather vapidly, at her.

"Like, tee-hee, hi!" The bodacious blonde breathed bubbly. "I'm tee-hee Bimbo!"

"Hi, uh, Bimbo..." Billie muttered, blushing, as she managed to tear her eyes off the bubbly blonde's bust. "I'm Billie Jean. I, er... need some new clothes..."

"Like, fer'sure!"
Bimbo agreed, happily.
"C'mon, let's get you all measured up an' stuff! Tee-hee!"

Billie Jean quickly learned a few new things - like the fact that her new measurements were 36-26-36, with a rather impressive EEE- cup size.

That particular lesson took a bit of time to learn... for, without any malice whatsoever, Bimbo had rather mindlessly begun playing with Billie Jean's boobs while measuring her up. That had made
Billie feel uncomfortable, even guilty... but Bimbo had also artlessly asked
Billie to play with her own, massive endowments while she played with Billie's...

Though she didn't realize that she'd been brainwashed to be uncomfortable with having anybody but 'her man' playing with her tits, Billie's basic original 'male' mind-set towards OTHER women's breasts hadn't been touched... and, guilty as it made her feel, Billie found herself indulging in a fondle-fest with the huge-breasted blonde. Two slender, dainty, FEMININE pairs of hands slid over, caressed and squeezed two pairs of big, bouncy, sexy tits - one pair significantly bigger than the other, but both pairs with enhanced pleasure-sensitivity far beyond any 'real' woman's breasts, causing the mutual groping to be extremely pleasure for both men- turned-female...

...and while Bimbo was so completely brainwashed that she thought nothing about it, enough of Billy remained in Billie Jean to be more than a little disconcerted by just how much she was enjoying - and just how willing she was to have - her big new boobs played with. She tried to tell herself that she wasn't doing it to enjoy getting fondled, but so that she could enjoy fondling Bimbo's big 'uns...

...but that in no way diminished the amount of pleasure she was getting from being fondled and groped.

Nor did it in any way lessen the impact of the implanted thoughts in her slowly altering mind that insisted that having her tits played with should make her horny.

Between the commands and the physical pleasure, it was no wonder at all that her panties were soon damp evidence to her growing arousal.

Bimbo had once been middle aged, pot-bellied, and balding - the husband of the boutique owner, whose enterprise hadn't interested him at all. Unfortunately, what had interested him was pornos, specifically movies containing what his wife had thought of as 'huge boobed bimbos'...

...and it was her interpretation of these on-screen porn-movie characters that she basically used as a template for the new woman. This meant, among anything, that she'd radically reduced the man's previously average intelligence.

Much more accurately - he-now-she had been programmed not to USE his/her intelligence...

...except in two instances.

One was the store. She was to be 'dumb-acting by capable enough to get by' in her role as a saleswoman, an obvious necessity.

The other area in which Bimbo's mind could still be fully engaged was, unsurprisingly, the pursuit of sex - and, since she was based on the way women in porn movies acted, she was now completely bisexual - or, rather, OMNIsexual - whether she wanted to be or not.

It wasn't long before a thoroughly bemused Billie Jean found herself laying on the floor, Bimbo's blonde head bobbing and writhing between Billie's pale, silken thighs...

'Oh, God, that feels so good...!' Billie Jean thought guiltily to herself. "Not as good as Lezbitch's tongue did, at first, maybe... but then again, Lezbitch's tongue, amazing as it is, wasn't nearly as satisfying a hard cock would be...'

Moaning and writhing under Bimbo's eager - and, honestly, quite talented - ministrations, it took a second for what Billie Jean had just thought to hit her conscious mind.

'Oh, shit - that's not good! I shouldn't thinking about how much more I'd enjoy having a man's hard, throbbing cock fucking my hot, wet cunt right now!' She thought. 'I shouldn't even be squealing in unfeigned delight at getting licked out - I'm only doing it because my wonderful big titties got me all hot and horny! I knew I shouldn't have let Bimbo play with my sensitive new boobs - letting anybody else but my man play with them makes me feel all guilty... and horny...!'

Then Bimbo's tongue brought Billie Jean to writhing, screaming orgasm... but, yet, somehow, it was an UNSATISFYING orgasm...

'Shit...!' She thought, panting. 'I knew letting her get me all hot and horny enough to lick me out was wrong... it would take pleasuring my man's wonderfully hard, ready cock to REALLY get me off!'

She blinked in mild confusion.

'Not that I'd ever let my... let a man do that, of course. I just LOOK like a sexy, big-titted babe who would love to pleasure my man any way he wanted, that's all. Thank god they have tied me up and tried to beat me or torture me or do any of that stuff you must have to do to brainwash somebody!' the person who now unquestioningly thought of herself as 'Billie Jean' thought, gratefully, as she got up from the floor, enjoying the pleasurable sensation from the jiggle of her big new boobies, and followed Bimbo off to get the new, feminine clothes she NEEDED to wear...

"Okay, let's, like, get you all the stuff you, tee-hee, need!" Bimbo said, quickly pulling on the tiny heart-bikini that, in retrospect, had obviously been chosen as much for it's ease of access as it was it's display of her charms. "Now, you're soooo gonna need..."

Oddly enough, it soon dawned on Billie Jean that Bimbo had a less immediately noticeable 'verbal habit' every bit as omnipresent as her endless supply of giggles - the big titted, self-proclaimed (and named) bimbo was so utterly upbeat that EVERYTHING was present in an excited, positive light.

It was all 'you're going to LOVE...!' this, and 'You'll just HAVE to have...' that, and Billie Jean struggled to tune out the peppy, tirelessly enthusiastic voice as she was shown just about everything the shop had to offer...

...without it once occurring to her that what should be worrying about was finding a way to tune the words out of her SUBCONSCIOUS mind...

* * * * *

Something was wrong.

She wasn't sure what it was, but there was no doubt in Billie Jean's mind that it was true. She felt so.. strange. So... unsettled. Like something was missing - something she really, really NEEDED.

She just didn't know what it was.

Perhaps they HAD messed with her mind, somehow, she thought to herself. Ever since the delivery van had dropped her - and her purchases - off at the house, she hadn't been able to relax, not even slightly. She felt like there was something she should be doing... but what?

Well, she HAD been 'unconscious' for about an hour. It couldn't have been long enough for them to do anything major to her mind, and she certainly hadn't noticed herself ACTING 'weird' or 'strange' in any way, so, thankfully, her mind must still be nearly intact... except for this nagging sensation.

Well, she thought to herself, if an hour obviously wasn't enough to put anything INTO her head, perhaps it had been just long enough to take something OUT - that is, to 'program' her not to think of a specific thing.

Like, maybe, how to get out of this mess.

'That would make sense...' She thought to herself - and then gave a cute little pout, even as she unconsciously squeezed on full, fat nipple. 'At least, I THINK it makes sense, but I'm just a girl now, and us girls aren't good at thinking about anything other than how to dress and act in the right ways to please guys.'

She'd just completed that thought when she'd reached the end of the 'lane' she'd been pacing. She started to turn... and spotted the hastily-scribble words on a piece of paper she'd taped to the wall as soon as she'd become suspicious that something was wrong:

'Question EVERYTHING'; it read.

So, heeding her own advice, she reviewed the last thought that had passed through unfortunately girlish head, seeing if there was anything obviously wrong with it.

Well, of course, girls HAD to use more of their brain keeping track of all that 'girly' stuff, like make-up and fashion and what have you. So, OBVIOUSLY, that left less brain power for other things, like important thinking. That's why important thoughts were left for men to make.

Also, as a guy, she had just stomped around any old way she wanted, whereas now, she spent all that time having to make sure she was walking daintily and gracefully. She KNEW that was right, because she'd continued pacing while double-checking her own thoughts for signs of any tampering, and look how she was oh-so-carefully making her motions smooth and graceful and, well...

FEMININE. That was the operative word, really. It was sort of built-in, when you thought about it logically, as she was burning up what little brain-power her girlish brain could spare for the task.

She was now, undeniably, FEMALE, and even the quickest glance to 'question everything' would verify THAT. Still, because she couldn't trust her own mind anymore, she'd even looked it up in a dictionary to make sure she was right:

1. Feminine – adjective pertaining to a woman or girl: feminine beauty; feminine dress. having qualities traditionally ascribed to women, as sensitivity or gentleness. effeminate; womanish: a feminine walk. belonging to the female sex; female: feminine staff members.

Yup, unfortunately, on this point her brain was clearly working at one hundred, unaltered percent - just like the dictionary said, since she was now undeniably 'belonging to the female sex', she was therefore, automatically and by definition, feminine - which, also like the dictionary said, meant that she now had absolutely no choice but to have the other parts of being 'feminine', like worrying about beauty, and dresses, and sensitivity, and gentleness... all the things that were clearly part and parcel of being a female.

She sighed, wishing it were otherwise, so that she could concentrate more on the maybe-missing-answer, but it was just wishful thinking - even the dictionary agreed it was utterly impossible. If you were female, you HAD to be thinking about all these feminine things. It was utterly inescapable.

So - she'd once more proven to herself that her mind had in absolutely no way been CHANGED... so that brought her back to the thought she'd been double-checking (for the fourth time), that something must have been HIDDEN.

But what...?

It had to be something important. Something she very much wanted to know, but they very much didn't want her to.

Though the afternoon was growing late, she once again checked her chain of conclusions, and once more agreed that it made sense.

So - they'd somehow hidden the answer from her on how to escape this feminine fate. It was the only thing vitally important enough to both sides to be on the top of the list.

The thing was, she'd also, quite laboriously, (forcing her helplessly girlish mind to have to work around all those feminine concerns unfortunately 'hard wired' into the brain of anybody female, however they'd gotten that way), come to the conclusion that the thought she MOST wanted to think had somehow been changed to one that she LEAST wanted to think.

It was, she had concluded, the only logical way to 'hide' it in her mind, making it unlikely for her to find it.

"Oh, Pooh...!" She frowned, (prettily, she was very careful to make sure, what with her being 'feminine' and all now), then sighed. "They've gone and hidden the answer in a thought I'd NEVER really think, like eagerly making myself MORE girly, or something like..."

She stopped dead, a (very pretty) look of surprise coming to her face. Could that be it? Could that be the answer.

No - of course not. There was no way that, somehow, being as girly as possible could lead to her being LESS girly. She immediately pushed the ludicrous thought away...

...and her eye happened to once more fall on the hastily scrawled sign. QUESTION EVERYTHING.

Well, it was silly, but she sighed (cutely) and forced her feminine-filled mind to consider the thought...

Wait. Wait just a second. Wouldn't the very fact that she was so READY to dismiss it mean something. After all, that would be exactly what they wanted!

But how could that be? After all, it was completely... silly! Her, 'willingly' being all girly? 'Happily' embracing her new body? Acting like...

...like...

...LIKE EVERY OTHER 'NEW' WOMAN IN TOWN!

She gasped at the obvious simplicity of it - and that, in and of itself, PROVED that the thought must have been hidden from her, for how could she not have seen it before? Those women, all 'safely' brainwashed by whatever long and torturous method had been used to make them decide to willingly be all girly, moved around without anybody keeping an eye on them!

Yes! That was the answer!

'But... how do I do that?' She wondered, wandering into the bedroom where all the stuff Bimbo had talked her into taking had been delivered. Billie Jean let her eye roam over practically one of everything the store had stocked in her sizes, while trying to figure out how somebody could possibly act all happy and girly and sweet and stuff.

'They got brainwashed to actually LIKE that, poor things...' She thought, morosely. 'In my case, though, the more girly I'd look or act, the LESS I'd like it...'

Then she blinked - and gave a happy little cry of joyful realization.

It would be EASY to pretend she'd been brainwashed to love being all girly! Because she hadn't actually been brainwashed, she hated the thought - and so the less happy she was with what she did, the more she must be doing it right!

The answer was so wonderfully simple!

She just had to make sure she was absolutely miserable, and she could be utterly certain she was doing it right!

Overjoyed with this realization, Billie Jean began going through the pile of purchases like a happy little hurricane, crowing gleefully every time she found something so utterly feminine that she would be utterly DISGUSTED to be wearing or using it...

'Ha! Thought they could keep me from figuring it out!' Billie Jean thought gleefully to herself, as she considered which of the two perfumes she held she would be most horrified to be caught wearing.

'They obviously underestimated me!' She thought, smiling victoriously to herself as she picked the most dazzlingly sweet-yet- seductive scent. She pulled out the stopper, and dabbed a little bit behind each ear...

...and, then, because she hated the thought of putting more of a scent that was almost painfully girlish on, dabbed some between the breasts that strained the against the disgustingly girlish bustier top she'd chosen. It was just so less comfortable than any of the lest decorative support garments available for her oversized breasts that she'd known right away it was the only choice for her to wear.

Dabbing some more perfume on the inside of her elbows and wrists, then a dab behind each of her knees, she put the perfume bottle aside and, smiling happily, considered the matter of footwear.

She, of course, REALLY wanted something comfortable, something easy to walk in, and fashion be damned... so, of course, she began to search for the cutest, most restrictive, highest heeled, most 'absolutely guaranteed to make you use a 'I LIKE being a woman' type of walk' kind of shoes she could find...

BACK TO FUN ZONE

SUMMARY: After returning to his small farming town, one tough guy is confronted by a group of women, who are out to transform his town and him over the weekend of the 4th.

Part 4

Under a slowly sinking sun that stained the slowly cooling summer evening in shades of red and orange, a dilapidated old farmhouse stood.

Within the weathered building was a person who was quite consciously doing everything possible to be as utterly unlike anybody who might be named 'Billy Hunter' as possible...

'Okay, keep smiling - sweetly, sweetly! - and make sure your hips have that nice little sway to them...' Billie Jean thought to herself, concentrating hard. '...and, turn, smoothly... cock the hip a little bit... play with the hair for a second... and now, walk back the other way... good, good...'

Smoothing the pretty earth-toned plaid dress, (which she'd chosen as the one she'd least like to wear), over her trim and undeniably feminine figure, Billie Jean concentrated on keeping her sweet, sweet smile fixed firmly on her newly lipstick-clad lips as she practiced walking atop the high, slender heels of the classic black pumps she'd finally settled on.

According to her 'question everything' mentality, everything was going utterly swimmingly for Billie Jean, because she was completely and utterly miserable...

...or, at least, that was what she kept telling herself.

That lovely reflection in the mirror, so prettily dressed, her hair 'just so'? She hated seeing it, disgusted and horrified by the oh-so-feminine vision reflected back at her. She was sure of this fact, because she was 'certain' that her mind hadn't been in any way tampered with, and she was 'really' a man. A man would hate being all feminine and pretty and desirable, and so, she must hate what she was seeing.

Simple logic, right?

The smile, the playful little flip of the hair, the throbbing touch of excited pride at just how beautiful she'd made herself - play-acting, that's all it was.

That was, well... so painfully obvious that you didn't HAVE to lump it in with the 'everything' your were questioning.

A man, transformed against his will into a woman, wouldn't possibly enjoy it. So, she couldn't be enjoying any of this. A transformed woman who had been brainwashed WOULD be enjoying this, and since she'd already established that she wasn't enjoying this, there was no way she could have been brain washed!

Common sense, really. Q.E.D.

So, when Billie Jean heard the sound of a very familiar engine pulling up outside the house, that strange, tingling sensation running through her body, the quickness of breath and the accelerated heart-beat... it was all just anxiety at the fact that she was about to 'put to the test' her ability to pretend - merely PRETEND, mind you - to be happy and excited about being 'all pretty' for 'her man'.

Moving smoothly and gracefully, she headed for the door atop her slender heels, (hating, of course, the way she moved as a result of all that hated practice she'd been doing), her trim, womanly hips swaying in a manner that caused the hem of her pretty, feminine dress to twitch fetchingly back and forth.

Of course, she was noting the details just to make sure she had them all right for her ACT. She was just ACTING like she was happy and excited to be a pretty, sexy young woman.

Throwing open the door to the old farmhouse, she stood on the threshold, gilded in the light of the setting sun as she watched Dave climb from the Woody.

She certainly DIDN'T feel tremors of excitement and pleasurable anxiety as she watched Dave look across the yard at her newly 'girlie-up' figure, and she certainly WASN'T finding Dave's rangy, denim-and-cotton clad figure the least bit... attractive. No, she was merely ACTING like the sort of woman who WOULD, that was all...

...and, if her acting was particularly good, almost perfectly convincing in every, tiny little detail, well... that was a good thing, now wasn't it?

"Welcome back, my darling...!" She trilled with a rich, throbbing tone of affection in her voice - faked, of course, as was the delight with which she trotted daintily across the yard. Pausing in front of him, she feigned a delightful anxiety as she pirouetted for him, pretending to 'show off' her new look.

"Wow..." Dave breathed, smiling. "You look fantastic, Billie Jean!"

"Do you really think so...?" She asked, faking a breathless, pleasure-filled excitement at his compliment. "You bet!" He agreed, eyeing her openly.

"Oh, you are just SOOO sweet!" She sang in her sweet Southern accent - and then, with a force of will to overcome her completely natural, masculine hesitation, (so well that it might well have been completely unnoticeable to anybody else, in fact), she threw her girlish, slender arms around his neck, and somehow managed to force herself to give him what could be mistaken by somebody not knowing how utterly disgusted she was by the very thought, a warm and loving kiss...

It was absolutely, utterly disgusting, off course - having to give a man a long, lingering kiss that was, too all appearances, not only loving, but ripe with just-barely- restrained desire....

Well, it would be obvious to anybody with half a brain that such a thing would HAVE to be utterly disgusting to a man unwillingly transformed into a woman.

It would be completely different, Billie Jean mused to herself, if she'd been brainwashed like those other poor unfortunates. Then, of course, she would have been altered to, well. horror of horrors! to ACTUALLY enjoy pressing her body firmly against him as she pretended to passionately, perhaps even hungrily, kiss him.

Such a poor, unfortunate transformee would undoubtedly be getting aroused right now. Billie Jean, of course, felt no such thing - no, she was merely feeling her stomach twist in disgust over what she was doing. A sensation in her gut - well, very low in her gut - of twisting and churning.. well, a warm, wet sort of churning. and, of course, it was outrage rather than excitement that had her sensitive new nipples all swollen to near-painful tautness, anger rather than attraction that was leaving her feel breathless and weak- kneed...

Thank God she hadn't been brainwashed into helplessly being forced into ENJOYING the long, deep, passionate kiss! Instead, she got to be properly horrified and disgusted by what she was forcing herself to do as she 'reluctantly' broke the kiss, pretending like every fiber of her feminine new body was crying out to please him in any and every way he could possibly desire...

So, since she CLEARLY wasn't the least bit aroused, and she was CERTAINLY in no way whatsoever attracted to Dave, it was nothing but acting made so convincing by a supreme act of will when she smiled warmly up at him and made an offer she OBVIOUSLY would nearly rather die than actually make...

"Mmmm..." She faked a warm, sultry moan. "Why don't we go inside, darling, and... pick this up where we left off...?"

She did a remarkably good impersonation of a throaty, desire-filled chuckle as she somehow found the force of will to teasingly run her fingers over the crotch of his jeans...

...and, she was shocked to realize his cock was only barely stirring.

Oh - delighted, absolutely delighted, by the fact, of course - so nearly ecstatic at his marginal sexual arousal that the world seemed to swim before her, and her heart began to pound almost painfully with the hard-edge, nearly painful force of her joy.

Still... shocked, considering how effectively she had - unwillingly, riddled with disgust - forced herself to act all 'delightfully' feminine and desirable.

"I'm sorry, Billie Jean - but, as much as I find you very attractive, I'm afraid I've been... programmed... not to be able to find you sexually desirable." Dave said.

A huge, yawning pit of the deepest, darkest joy swept over Billie Jean as she realized that she wasn't going to have to fake cheerfully pleasuring Dave sexually. As the black happiness swept through her, she fought back her tears of absolute joy at the rejection.

She was so happy she could just... die.

Reaching into the pocket of his jeans, Dave extracted one of the injector-pens.

"This is a new formulation they were working on." He explained, forming each word carefully as he watched her closely, his expression intent and searching. "It was designed as a rapid breast-growth serum. There was a problem with it, however - it radically and permanently alters the hormone balance. The simplest way to explain it would be to say that the person injected with this wouldn't only get bigger, more sensitive breasts - but would turn into a literal nymphomaniac. A real one, not just somebody who likes sex - in fact, it wouldn't matter whether she liked sex, or not - she would desperately crave it, all the time."

Lost in her own world of soul-destroying, mind-numbing bliss, his words seemed to come to her from a great distance, but Billie Jean sensed something coming, and managed to drag her attention to Dave.

"The problem with that is, she could never, ever be satisfied. Even in the middle of an orgasm, it wouldn't be enough, she'd still be craving more. As much as that might sound like a good thing, a woman who literally could not stop trying to fuck every waking moment is no good... so, what they did, was add a huge dose of the mind-control serum to it. A 'broad base' dose. It would leave any woman hit with it completely, utterly, helplessly obedient for the rest of her life. No will of her own any more - just sheer, slave-like obedience to commands..." Dave explained, still watching her very, very intently, "...and then they went and programmed me so that I can only get turned on by a woman who had even bigger breasts than you do right now."

Time stopped.

'Thank God I'm not brainwashed!' Billie Jean mused to herself, the super-slow molasses of pause-time surrounding her, letting her experience the agonizing slowness with which she seemed to be moving, and arm beginning to reach outwards in glacial slow-motion. 'If I had been, I would actually WANT to inject myself with that...!'

'Then again...' She thought to herself, indifferently watching her arm 'lashing' outwards through the molasses, 'I'm PRETENDING that I AM brainwashed, and so I would almost HAVE to 'pretend' to want that injection, regardless of the cost, now wouldn't I?'

'I suppose I would...' She concluded, with deep regret, as she watched her hand wrap around the injector and yank it from Dave's hand in slow-motion. 'Not to do it would reveal my mind is still my own, and if I slipped, they would correct the oversight and erase any chance of escape I'd ever have.'

'I guess I HAVE to do it...' She regretfully concluded, as she pressed the end of the injector against the bare skin at the nape of her neck.

'It's the only way for me to keep from being brainwashed and turned into some sort of... sex slave...' She finished the clear and obvious summation of the situation, feeling the drug rushing through her system and into her, thankfully, still completely inviolate and...

Dave, watching intently, saw the personality drain from the woman's eyes, to be replaced with a completely blank look, devoid of any personal desires, attributes, or interests - a complete lack of any sort of conscious, self-directed thought whatsoever.

Indifferently, Dave let his eyes slip downwards. The neckline of her dress, chosen to tantalizingly yet demurely hint at the creamy cleavage of her full breasts, was beginning to push outwards, more and more creamy flesh pushed upwards and outwards as the breasts below them grew somewhat larger.

Dave had, as per instructions, lied about what he'd been programmed to find arousing. He watched without any prurient interest at all as her breasts went from merely 'big' to 'huge', more interested in the mental changes that were supposed to be signified by the visible physical change.

The formulation was, in fact, 'experimental' - but, then again, all the final-stage ones were, since each was tailored for a specific purpose and individual. This one was representative of the Council's annoyance at Billy Hunter's theoretical possibility of upsetting their carefully crafted plans. He hadn't managed to do so, of course, but still...

Dave licked his lips. His voice hoarse, he spoke a name... "Billy Hunter." Dave said.

The blank look flickered - and then a personality was looking out through the eyes.

A pause, not even a second long, as a mind stripped of everything but its original 'base' personality struggled to catch up...

...and then the newly over-endowed woman screamed.

The first one was wordless, one of pain and horror and outrage and anger. Then, one hand flew to the neckline of the now much-too-tight dress and began heaving at the painfully restrictive material cutting into her huge new tits...

...while the other hand flew down to her crotch, desperately seeking some way of coping with a level of desperate sexual arousal that was, quite literally, painful in its demanding intensity.

"Son of a bitch!" Billy Hunter screamed in Billie Jean's voice. "You bastard!"

Dave moaned, his cock rapidly growing hard at the sight of his suffering, feminized friend. Billy, through Billie's eyes, saw this - and the look of mixed horror and lust on her face only made Dave's erection painfully hard.

Wordlessly, Dave walked over to the car. On its gleaming red hood, he placed the keys. Next to the keys went a fat roll of bills, easily a few thousand dollars worth.

"God, the thought of fucking my unwillingly feminized friend gets me horny..." Dave moaned, to no-one in particular...

...and then, not even looking as his writhing, desperately horny victim, Dave walked across the yard and into the house. Pulling out a chair at the kitchen table, he sat down.

He listened.

After a moment, the sound of the car door opening, then closing. A moment after that, the throaty roar of the engine. The sound of the gears being shifted...

A moment passed, a moment when the engine roared and softened, roared and softened...

..and then the engine died.

Dave, breathing even more ragged, smiled tightly to himself.

A moment later, Billy Hunter, trapped in the hugely buxom body of Billie Jean, almost literally burst into the room. Slender, pale hands, so dainty and refined, were pulling frantically at her pretty, girlish clothing. Her face, so pretty in repose, was a mask of hate, self-loathing, and lust.

"You sick, fucking bastard!" Billy screamed in Billie's voice - and almost literally threw herself at him.

This wasn't Billie's 'I want to please you' kiss. This one was hard and demanding.. and self loathing, ripped somehow both willingly and unwillingly from a woman who didn't in the least WANT, but desperately NEEDED, sex.

Her hands yanked and tugged on both their clothing - but though the slender hands were Billie Jean's, it was Billy Hunter's mind that was, against it's own will, stripping them down for what his horrified brain couldn't deny her body so desperately needed.

Then, finally, Billy said it:

"Fuck me, you bastard!" Billy sobbed in angry desire. "Fuck me!"

Smiling, Dave grabbed Billie's body and lifted it up so that she was sitting on the kitchen counter...

...but while it was Billie's wet, ready cunt Dave's hard, throbbing cock slid into, it was Billy Hunter Dave was fucking.

That was the new desire Dave had been given, and it was, in it's own way, as overriding an imperative as Billie/Billy had been given. Just as, given the change to escape, she had come back to get fucked, so Dave HAD to fuck his friend.

The major difference was the fact that Dave had been so changed that he was allowed to enjoy the act. Billy/Billie wasn't...

"Fuck!" Billy screamed through Billie's lips, and it was both a curse and a demand as Dave slammed his cock into her, hard and fast. "Oh, fuck, no... yes... no...!"

Conflicted mind, conflicted emotions, one single physical desire - Billie wanted it and Billy hated it but needed it, and now he/she/they were getting it, and they/she/he loved it and hated it...

It felt... fantastic.

The body was designed for this, designed to receive fantastic amounts of pleasure from sex, and so Billy had to deal with the humiliation of enjoying being fucked hard and fast as a woman. To feel unwanted pleasure as a cock invaded her unwanted womanhood.

Her face writhed in interesting expressions that should never really be mixed, some hateful, some enjoyable, some simply confused, but all stamped with a sort of self-hatred over her inability to stop what she was doing, which was WILLINGLY having sex with a man, even if it were an enforced willingness.

Worse - it FELT wonderful, pleasure thundering through her body... but it wasn't quite wonderful ENOUGH.

She was a nymphomaniac, now - or, at least, her body was. She craved this sex, needed this sex... but it wasn't enough to satisfy her. Even in the midst of getting fucked, she still craved more, and always would, for nothing could ever satisfy her...

...and yet, even knowing that, she couldn't force herself to stop, and that only made it the more humiliating as she begged and demanded to be fucked harder, faster, longer, better...

...and the humiliation only deepened and grew when hard-fucking Dave blew his own load.

There was nothing subtle, nothing refined, in it. It wasn't 'making love', it wasn't 'having sex' - it was fucking, pure, animal rutting, fast and dirty... and as Dave went through the mind-blowing orgasm he was programmed to feel over fucking Billy, Billie's body was denied any sort of release at all, and Billy knew that she never would...

...and that, despite this, she would nevertheless still keep demanding the attempt for satisfaction that she would forever more be denied.

"Oh, you fucking bastard..!" Billy half- screamed, half-sobbed - and her dainty hand wrapped itself around the haft of a knife, knowing that there was only one way out of her torment, and at least she could take Dave with her...

...and then Billie Jean blinked, smiled uncertainly, and looked down in mild confusion at the knife she was holding.

"Darling...?" She asked, confused, oh-so-eager to please 'her man', yet confused by the 'blank spot' in her memory...

"Yeah - sex like that DOES work up an appetite." Dave 'agreed' with her. "Go ahead and make me something to eat."

"Of course, dear!" Billie Jean agreed, smiling hugely...

...while that feminine persona, the one that WANTED to have sex with Dave, was horrified to realize that she apparently just had, without being to remember any part of the act that she so much wanted to experience.

Still, she smiled sweetly as she set about making dinner, completely unaware that HER fate was to never be the one experiencing the sexual pleasure she wanted to feel... while the only moments when Billy Hunter would ever exist were those during which she was getting fucked...

"Whoa... Can you believe this...?" Jeff Winterbourne said, eyes shining.

"What's that...?" Mark Washington asked in a distracted tone of voice, idly flipping through a copy of 'Easy Rider' magazine.

"Free tickets to meet the models at some sort of 4th of July blowout!" The other young man crowed, holding out the adult magazine he'd picked up from the newsstand.

"Hey!" The owner of the convenience store called from behind the counter. "You gonna buy that magazine, or what? You want it, grab it now - been selling like hotcakes!"

"C'mon, man - we GOTTA buy these!" Jeff said, gesturing at the copies of "American Women" magazine. "Have you seen these babes? Man, this'll ROCK!"

Sighing, Mark looked at the magazine Jeff held, the natural cynic in him skeptical. "Boone Hollow?" Jeff snorted, derisively... but, he had to admit, the offer looked legit...

...and the babes DID look hot.

"Sure." He finally agreed, picking out a copy of the magazine for himself.

"After all..." He shrugged, paying for it. "...what could possibly be the downside...?"

SUMMARY: CONTEST WINNER!!

This is the first, in our continuing, reader request stories!!! This story was written from the following request sent in from one of our readers.

"I like have more to do with forced feminization with lots of humiliation thrown in for good measure.

Eg: Smart aleck guy harrasses or rapes women for the fun of it and he is trapped and turned into a women and forced outside to fend for himself. Of course only after he is made into a walking advertisement for SEXUAL RELIEF. Like being taken to a rough trade bar, biker hangout, or to the office xmas party and the word put out "she" is a party girl hired by the company and anything goes. "

And now...

On to the story...

Price Of Fame

by Gunslinger

"You've got to be kidding me." Karen exclaimed. She eyed her (until now) fiancée with mingled anger and hurt. "You're really going to break off our engagement and go to Hollywood?"

Although Jason was tall and muscular, (not to mention devilishly handsome), he shied away from his enraged, petite girlfriend as if she was about to attack him. "Look, Karen, I know it's not what you wanted to hear." He said soothingly. "But, you know I've always wanted to be an actor. Winning that hundred and fifty thou from the lottery finally gives me my chance." He sighed. "And, I'm not planning to break off our engagement. Just... put it on hold for awhile. If you're just willing to wait until I get back..."

Karen's eyes flashed. "Well, I guess I now know what's REALLY important to you!" she retorted. She pulled the engagement ring from her finger and threw it at him. It bounced off his chest and hit the floor with a metallic tinkle. "Find yourself some other girl, buster!" She said, spinning on her heel and stalking out, her flaming mane of hair swirling about her shoulders. "A louse like you isn't worth waiting for."

The door slammed behind her. Jason took two angry steps towards the door, planning to get the final word in - then stopped, fists clenched, and bent down and retrieved the ring. He looked at it angrily, then dropped it into his pocket. As a red-head, Karen sure lived up the myth about their temper. But he knew he was doing the right thing. Not everyone got a chance to fulfill a life-long dream. Besides, it wasn't like they would have made a great couple anyway. They shared too much in common. Like their short and explosive tempers.

The often fought furiously for a short while, then their thankfully quick tantrums would be over and they'd make up - until the next time.

And, regardless of his talent, Jason had the right 'look' for Hollywood. He was tall and muscular, with a strong-featured face and a full head of thick, sandy hair cut stylishly. The way he generally put it was 'the body of Arnie and the face of Cruise, with Sorbo's hair.' And, at 24, he was in the prime of his life.

He'd known that Karen wouldn't react well to the news, so he'd waited until he'd had everything packed and ready before he'd called her over to 'discuss something important.' Now, pleased with his foresight, he took one last look around the small Loft apartment that he'd called his home for the past four years. Shutting off the lights for the last time, he stepped into the hall and locked the door behind him.

Riding the creaking, open cage elevator down to the parking lot, he looked around to make sure that Karen had left already. Reassured that the coast was clear, he walked to the place where his aging, but well maintained Hyundai sat, and slipped behind the wheel. The four-cylinder engine caught on the first crank, more or less whining to life, rather than roaring.

Slipping the car into gear, Jason mentally said his final farewells to Chicago, Karen, and his dead-end job at the mall, and wheeled out of the garage, pointing the little car westward.

Jason blinked blearily, and cranked down the window, letting fresh air stream into the rented Buick. His headlights broke the darkness ahead of him, reveling the almost hypnotic play of light from the asphalt rolling beneath his wheels. Ever since his once-faithful little car had decided to wheeze to a final, traitorous stop in Kansas City, he'd been pushing himself hard to get to L.A., just looking to put this whole trip behind him and get on with his new life. The news that Karen had immediately gone from him to his once-best friend Steve did little to improve his disposition.

Between his sour mood, exhaustion, and the darkness, he almost flashed by the stranded vehicle before he saw it's hazard lights flashing in the darkness. He barely caught a brief, hart-stopping glimpse at the driver, standing half on the pavement and trying to wave him down, before the person threw themselves out of the way of his hurtling vehicle.

Horried, Jason stood on the brakes, the rear tires screaming as the car shuddered into a long, four-wheeled skid, coming to rest sideways across the deserted highway. Shaking, it took a second for Jason to compose himself enough to guide the car onto the shoulder and climb out. Frightened by what he might have done, he jogged back towards the stalled vehicle, hoping to find the driver uninjured by his inattention. His heart pounded in his chest, the adrenaline clearing the last of the fatigue from his mind.

He found the driver slowing pulling herself upright, wiping gravel from her hands and knees. For an instant, Jason was taken by pure shock, seeing Karen in the short, slender woman.

The illusion passed as the woman rounded on Jason, flushed with anger. Despite a similarity in builds, this woman had close copped dark hair above a face that was stronger than Karen's own pixie-ish visage. She might have been considered cute in other circumstances, but now her face was mottled with rage.

"Are you all right?" he asked, trying to help her up. "I didn't even see you until... " he began to apologize.

With surprising strength for someone of her stature, she shoved him away. "What the fuck do you think you're doing?" she shouted at him. "You almost killed me!"

Taken aback, Jason gaped at the woman, who was dressed in loose jeans, now torn at the knees, and a baggy, shapeless gray sweatshirt, also the worse for wear with it's encounter with the gravel.

Rather then backing off, the furious woman jammed a short-nailed finger painfully into his sternum. "Just another muscle-bound idiot in a big car," she said, jabbing him again. "Men like you get off on going so damn fast, you don't care who gets hurt."

Jason, already on the edge of his patience, flushed with his own rising anger. "Look, Miss, I already said I was ... "

She shoved him - hard - against the side of her car. "Damn it, it's Miz, not Miss. I don't need any of you macho chauvinist apologies, you dumb fuck. I want your name and you license. I'm going to make sure you pay for you little stunt."

The tiny feminist's threat broke his tenuous hold on his temper. "Look, you dumb bitch." He growled. "I don't care what you do or don't want. For all I care you can go straight to hell." He turned and began walking angrily back to his car.

Her blow came as a complete surprise. The tire iron glanced off his right shoulder, sending flashes of pain up and down his arm. He spun around as she raised the length of metal again. He lashed out, one hand grasping the tire iron as the other, clenched into a fist, took her on her out-thrust jaw. She stumbled back, somehow staying on her feet, but releasing the tire iron. He tattered sweatshirt tore, revealing her firm, pointed breasts, unencumbered by a bra.

She spat, catching him in the face. "Fuck you!"

All his frustration, all his anger, and the fact she reminded him a little of his ex-fiancée at crashed down on him. "No, fuck you." he snarled, grabbing her wrist painfully.

She struggled like a wildcat as he pushed her down into the long crab-grass along the roadside. Pining her with his body weight, he tore at the front of her jeans, yanking the heavy materiel down around her knees, and literally tearing off her cotton briefs. Ignoring her free hand, angrily gouging at his arm, he undid his own jeans and quickly freed his engorged cock.

Holding her wrists, he raised his hips and thrust into her with a sharp, painful stroke. As she screamed at him and tried vainly to bite him, he used hard powerful thrusts as he rode her angrily.

Like always, his explosive temper was short lived. As he came, it was almost as if his anger was draining out of him along with his gushing flow of semen. Disgusted with himself, he rolled of the woman and quickly straightened his clothing as he headed for his car, leaving her by the side of the road.

He'd only gotten a few steps when he was stopped dead by the sudden wash of headlights over him. Jason's stomach sank when it was followed by a brief warble of a siren, with the red-and-blue flash of dome lights. The door to the police cruiser opened, and a tall, heavily muscled female officer stepped out, her gun drawn but pointed at the ground. "Hold it right there." The female cop called. "Keep your hands in the open, please."

The petite woman painfully stood, half naked. "Shoot the bastard!" she yelled, pulling her jeans up. A short pause, then - "Lori? Is that you?"

Jason's stomach hit the ground as he realized just how deep the shit he was in actually was.

The short woman came stalking towards them. "Sandy, this damn bastard nearly killed me! But that wasn't good enough for him. Oh no, he had to rape me too!"

The female cop's face darken. The gun came up, the muzzle centering on Jason's chest. "All right" she barked. "Kneel down on the ground, hands on you head!"

Sighing, Jason slid to his knees and clasped his hands behind his head. The gravel under her feet crunched as the muscular cop came over, and roughly pulled his hands behind his back, handcuffing him. Yanking him painfully to his feet, she leaned him over the hood of her cruiser as she began patting him down.

Finding his wallet, she opened it and checked his I.D.

"Chicago, huh?" She grunted. "Well, welcome to California, Mr. Reese."

Then her baton came down on the back of his head, and everything went black.

Jason groaned as he slowly swam back towards consciousness. His head felt like it was ready to split in two. He opened his eyes, the gasped and shut them again as a bright white light seemed to spear directly into his brain.

"Good. I see our subject is awake" a voice - female - said. Slowly, he opened his eyes and looked around, blinking.

He found himself in an operating room of some kind. White and antiseptic, a variety of unidentifiable medical equipment and machines, all in white and stainless steel, were laid in precise places around the severe black leather chair he was securely immobilized in. He was also completely naked. He tugged at the wide leather straps as he regarded the other occupant of the room.

Tall and shapely, in a strong, domineering way, she was dressed in the familiar white lab coat of doctor's everywhere. Her breasts, staining at the fabric, would have been very large on any other woman, but only appeared slightly oversized on her frame, off set by her broad shoulders and strong legs. Likewise, her waist would appear thick on a less imposing woman, but remained femininely slender with her wide hips and her imposing height. Her square-jawed face was saved from looking too masculine by her full lips, sparkling green eyes, and massive mane of raven-black hair. She was regarding him clinically.

"Where am I?" he asked, giving up on the immovable restraints at his wrists and ankles.

"A private clinic in Beverly Hills, Mr. Reuse." She replied. Again, she was clinical, not conversational in her tone. "Perhaps I should just call you Jason, as we are going to be spending quite a bit of time together." She continued in the same tone. "My name is Doctor Theresa Brody. You may call me Dr. Brody."

Jason carefully stretched his head to either side, little bullets of pain shooting down his neck. "What do you mean, we're going to be spending a lot of time together?" he asked, half angry and half frightened.

"Jason, you made a large mistake when you raped the local spokeswomen for the Feminists of America party." She informed him, as she used her penlight to check his pupils. "Fortunately - for us - the officer who arrived was also a member. Rather than turn you over to an over worked and chauvinistically inclined justice system, we have a chance to resolve this matter ourselves."

"What? You can't do this" Jason said indignantly.

"Actually, we can." Dr. Brody replied calmly. "Sandra - the officer - has reported that you tried to run by diving into a nearby river. Since that particular river is not only famous for it's class-5 rapids, but by the fact that bodies of drowned white-water rafters quite often never show up, or show up months later in the Gulf, there is absolutely no question in anybody's mind that you are dead." She snapped off her penlight. "So, now you are available to me. I, and fellow feminist physicians and psychologists, have developed a series of experiments that lacked only a test subject. Now, in you, we have one."

Jason gaped. "You cant be " He words died on his lips as he looked at her clinical, intelligent expression, and realized that she was, indeed, completely serious.

His anger won out over his fear. "You CAN'T do this." He shouted. "I'm not going to be some sort of guinea pig for you sick little HEY, get away from me with that!" Fear made a sudden comeback as she calmly filled a hypodermic syringe.

"Your not sticking me with that thing!" he shouted jerking frantically in his bonds. Her strong hand gripped his forearm and she coolly slid the needle into a vein, depressing the plunger. "Stop it. Get away from me you damn... Leave me alone " his voice slowly died as the room seemed to spin - and he once more dropped into blackness.

He awoke slowly, the last traces of the sedative still coursing through his veins. He shook his head to clear it, and was rewarded by a burst of pain that cleared his mind quickly. Experimentally, he moved his arms, and wasn't surprised to find himself still restrained.

This time, the leather chair had been rotated so that he leaned forward helplessly, staring at his feet. With a low clicking sound, a pair of large, but feminine feet, clad in white pumps with a 1/2 inch heel, came into his restricted field of view. He felt Dr. Brody's hands grasp his head, and large leather straps tightened in place around his fore-head, holding his head firmly in place.

"Hey! What are you doing?" he asked, helplessly watching her shoes move around. His only answer was the pick of a needle in the base of his neck. Numbness soon spread up his neck and through his head, leaving him without any sensation above his shoulders.

"Waa ahh oo oin o ee " He cursed mentally as his numb lips and tongue refused to work, rendering his demands for information unintelligible.

Dr. Brody seemed to sense what he was saying. "Well, Jason." She replied as she worked somewhere behind him. "I'm going to use a laser to open a small hole in your skull."

If it were possible, his eyes would have widened. As it was, he could only grunt helplessly.

"Don't worry." She said, still out of sight. "I'm going to be implanting a small micro-chip/transceiver into the base of your brain."

A low humming sound came to life, and Jason realized the woman was actually cutting into his head with a laser - yet he still felt nothing. The sound died a few minutes later, and was followed by less identifiable sounds.

Long minutes passed, then once more Dr. Brody's shoes reappeared in front of him. He watched the view change as the chair was rotated, and he could once more see her composed face looking down at him. She stripped off her rubber gloves.

"All done, Jason." She informed him. "The local will wear off in a few minutes. So you know, I have attached a tiny unit inside your brain. It is even now sending and receiving signals from a powerful computer in this building. We will store and analyze the information in your brain, and be able to make rough correlation between specific synapse functions, and the though processes they indicate. A primitive form of mind-reading, if you will. The implant will also allow us to input simulations of real sensations to your brain, but not actual thoughts, I'm afraid."

"Hooo...How ca.. you do dis do me? do dis TO me?" he managed to ask as the sensations slowly returned.

She blinked. "It's an experiment in behavior modification" she informed him. "It's quite simple. Let me explain how it works."

She reached into a pocket and pulled out a small plastic vial, containing a tiny electronic object about the size of a pen tip. "This is a chip identical to the one now in your head." She explained. "It runs off your brains own electrical current. Right now, your specific thought patterns are a mystery. But, as we observe you, we can start to catalogue them. For instance, the first time you get angry, we will record the patterns your brain produces at the time. Then, we give the chip a command - anytime it senses those same brain patterns, stimulate your pain center."

"Look, I don't know why you're doing this. Maybe to scare me, I don't know. But that's a load of sci-fi bullshit." Jason said, his face flushing. "There's no way you can really put some tiny gizmo in my head and control my thoughts...AHHHHH!" He screamed and jerked in his chair as incredible pain thundered through him. Finally, after what seemed an eternity, but was only an instant, the pain tapered off.

Calmly, Dr. Brody looked upwards and spoke to whatever hidden microphone was placed. "Linda, lower the pain threshold by forty percent. We don't want to fry his brain." She turned back to Jason, who was staring, dazed, at her.

"You're right." She said. "We can't actually CHANGE your thoughts. However, as you just saw, we can give you ample reason to change your attitude yourself." For the first time, a trace of emotion entered her face, in the form of a tiny grin. "From now on, I'd suggest you keep better control of your temper."

"Why you no good..." Again, the words were cut short by a burst of pain, not as severe as the first, but still excruciating. Jason gasped, and settled for merely glaring at her.

To his surprise, she calmly undid his restraints, and helped him to his feet. He eyed her warily, then spun and dashed for the door to the room.

He got all of two steps before another blast of agony knocked him off his feet. This one lasted for several seconds, as he writhed and jerked on the floor.

Almost daintily, Dr. Brody crouched beside him until it ended, then helped the dazed young man to his feet.

"Oh yes." She said, the same small smile on her lips. "You get punished severely for any display of defiance or escape."

Jason looked at the woman who now held every card in the deck. Slowly, he straitened his shoulders. "You won't break me so easily." He exclaimed, expecting - and receiving - another agonizing second from the chip. Somehow, he kept his feet.

To his surprise, the tinge grin became a full-fledged smile. "Good. Otherwise, where would the fun be?" Laughing at his stricken expression, she took his wrist and led him towards the door.

He gently tugged back. "Hey?" He protested, careful to keep his tone level. "I can't go out there. I'm naked."

She looked at him. "Fair enough. In the bathroom..." she said, pointing to a second door, "... you'll find some clothing. Put it on. All of it."

He shrugged and crossed the room, pulling the door open. Inside, he frowned at the pile of clothing stacked neatly on the lowered toiled lid. He stuck his head out the door.

"Hey, these are women's clothes." He said angrily - then stiffened in pain.

This time, it was long, low pulses of pain that cycled through. Forcing a grin, he gasped "I think your implant isn't working right." He gritted his teeth against the waves of pain.

Dr. Brody shook her head. "No. The pain will not only continue, it'll slowly get stronger, until you get dressed. You have to put on ALL of the clothes." She crossed her arms and watched him, as he swayed slightly, in sync with the pain.

To both of their surprise, he lasted nearly three minutes before he let out a mingled shout of pain and frustration, and began to frantically pull on clothing in a need to end the torture.

Immediately, the pain lessened, and his face flushed in shame as the tall doctor helped him dress.

First, heavy wool stockings in dark blue were pulled up his legs, matching the simple - but feminine - black cotton briefs. A cupless, plain black training bra was wrapped around his torso, and covered with a white cotton blouse. A pair of black patent leather 'Mary Jane's' with a half-inch heel were the final touch. From the fit, Jason knew the 'school-girl' outfit was for him, and only him. He gritted his teeth in shame and anger - but wasn't quite ready to handle another bout of pain.

"Perfect" Dr. Brody said with a smile. "Come on, we have to get going."

Face burning, Jason meekly followed her, the identical clacking of their heels chasing after them as they left the room.

His embarrassment tripled as he entered the hall, and was greeted by a startled look from a older man in a hospital gown who was following a nurse down the hall. Jason was even more startled when he realized the other man was a VERY well known Hollywood director.

Dr. Brody looked at him. "Our little clinic is VERY exclusive, Jason." She said proudly. She leaned closer and lowered her voice. "Now, since we're more or less in public, if you try ANYTHING, we'll hit you with more agony than you knew existed. I want you to be a good boy, and pretend this is how you WANT to be dressed." She smirked. "We actually get quite a few stars in here to see or psychiatrist about such...tastes."

"You're crazy if..." the pain was but a instant's worth, a mere nano second - but Jason's body spasmed it electrocuted. "... yes, Dr. Brody." He finished, gasping. She had been right - he'd never known such agony could exist.

Shamed, he kept his eyes downcast as he followed the tall doctor through the hallways. He caught little of the expensive decor or elaborate security, but he knew they were there. Deep inside, his shame was rivaled by a terrible anger, but he kept it firmly suppressed, for his own sake.

Finally, she guided him into a long, elegant dining room. Many of the occupants were staff, but Jason recognized quite a few famous faces in the mix as he followed Dr. Brody to a table - thankfully, somewhat secluded, but still visible to about a quarter of the room.

"So, Jason, a nice lunch will be in order, won't it?" Dr. Brody asked brightly, smiling. Jason blinked in surprise at her sudden shift in attitude.

"Uh, yes, it would, Dr. Brody." He replied warily.

Her hand patted his lightly. "Come now, no need to be so formal. Call me Teri, like you do when you're not meeting me at work." Her eye dipped in a wink.

Realizing she was 'playing the room', in a sort of elaborate joke on him, angered Jason - but he swallowed his pride and forced a smile. "Okay, Teri. I'm just a little nervous." He said, his voice falsely cheerful.

She patted his hand again. "I told you, dear, it's all right to dress 'en femme' here. We understand." She turned in her seat, and addressed the next table. "Don't we, Patrick?"

The other diner turned and nodded. "Sure do."

In shock, Jason placed the 'woman' at the other table. Tall, with hair so red it had to be fake, he'd mostly ignored the 'woman' dressed in a long velvet gown. Now, having a good look, he recognized the actor. Usually a 'tough guy' in movies, a couple of years ago, he'd starred in a film about three transvestites - and now, here he was, done up as a woman, eating lunch in a clinic without getting any odd looks.

'She' smiled at Jason. "It's okay. I thought I was going crazy, after I played a CD, then found I liked it. But once you accept it, other people will too. And the staff at the clinic here are great." 'She' paused for a bite of salad, then threw Jason a wink. "By the way, I just love the schoolgirl look. I should try it some time."

Teri smiled at Jason. "Yeas. I think it does look good on you." she said cheerfully. "So, how about a nice salad?"

Lunch was spent in what, to a casual onlooker, would have been pleasant, friendly conversation. Jason forced himself to act through the charade, and his one rebellion - and subsequent pain - was quickly passed off as a choking fit from something 'going down the wrong way' - as Dr. Brody explained to onlookers.

Finally, the seemingly endless ordeal was over, and Jason sighed as they rose from the chair. His relief was short lived, however. Dr. Brody stopped a second to whisper something to the other 'woman' and got a smile and a nod in return. As the doctor led Jason from the dining room, he wondered what ill that smile and nod boded for him.

He found out shortly after. Dr. Brody led Jason into a bathroom, and handed him an unmarked bottle.

"This is a dilapidory" she explained with a smile. "It removes all hair, and hair follicles - permanently." She grinned wider at his expression. "Use it on every inch of your body below the eyebrows - except for a cute little patch around you crotch."

He shook his head violently. "No way." he said firmly, then braced himself for the pain.

Teri laughed. "The implants been in long enough to garner quite a bit of data on your brain. We can be more...selective about what you feel."

Suddenly, he could feel every single follicle of hair on his body from the brows down, itching worse than the one time he had poison ivy when he was ten. Frantically, he began to scratch at his skin, burrowing under the feminine clothes draped ludicrously on his muscular body.

Dr. Brody laughed. "You can scratch until you have no skin left. The implant is feeding the sensation directly to your brain. To stop, smear the stuff on your body, then wait fifteen minutes and rinse off."

Hating himself for doing it, but being driven insane by the itching, Jason literally tore his clothes off and began to apply the cream. Almost immediately, the feeling soothed on every inch he smeared the cream on, but remained an annoying, background sensation until he'd showered fifteen minutes later, all his hair washing down the drain. He stepped, damp and completely smooth, from the stall.

"I hope you're happy." he growled - and his body stiffened as pain wracked him. It faded quickly.

"That's another thing - your attitude." Teri said smugly. "From now on, you'll be in pain whenever your not chipper, cheerful, and happy. And, as a little bonus..."

Jason felt a deep, sharp pain at the corners of his mouth. He scowled at Dr. Brody for an instant, braving the wave of pain, the forced his lips into a smile, ending the pain. Dr. Brody smiled back.

The next month was a steady steam of embarrassments, and capitulation, for Jason, as that damned implant meted out more and more refined pain, and after a while, pleasure, as a method of 'behavior modification. It was little things, perfectly used, that slowly remade him. It was uncomfortable for him to walk or sit in a non-feminine manner, and mildly pleasant to move and sit femininely. Almost unconsciously, he started moving in more lady-like ways, his traitorous brain trying to spare itself from pain, and claim the pleasure.

Almost like training a dog, the two opposites slowly transformed his actions.

Every day, he was forced to dress in a slightly more feminine manner. The height of the heels he wore slowly climbed, as the implant made it impossibly painful to wear anything shorted. Likewise, judicious use of pain forced him to wear only feminine clothing - any male attire caused tremendous itching.

At the same time, Dr. Brody's experiments worked on his body. Special sprays slowly - and permanently - raised the pitch of his voice, slightly higher each day. An experimental diet drug slowly pulled weight from his body, much faster from his waist than elsewhere. Other special drugs slowly depleted his hard-won muscle mass.

And, no matter what anger, shame, hate and fear he kept bottled inside, he quickly learned to present a public persona that was unfailingly cheerful. He had no choice in that matter either.

On the thirty-first day of his new training, Jason slowly came awake, dressed in a pink, silk nighty over his softer, smoother skin, to find not just Dr. Brody watching him, but the short, slender woman who had started this nightmare.

Dr. Brody waved towards the petite woman. "Jason, I'm sure you remember Lori. She's here to observe a very special day in your life."

Jason's throat went dry, and anger and fear danced equally in his eyes, but he produced his false smile that, by now, looked completely genuine. He stretch out a hand. "Oh, Lori, it's so good to see you again." He gushed in his high, breathy voice.

Lori laughed gleefully, and turned to Dr. Brody. "Oh, Teri, I can't believe what you've done in only a month' she said.

Dr. Brody lightly touched Lori's shoulder. "Just wait until you see what happens today" she said, and Jason's stomach dropped like a rock.

For the first time in a month, he wasn't dressed in ornately female clothes - he was handed a hospital gown. For the first time in nearly a week, he was hit by tremendous pain as he tried to refuse, his last vestiges of defiance surfaced. The two women just watched, unemotional, as he writhed on the floor. Knowing this might be his last chance, he refused to give up, and after five and a half minutes of unending agony, his over-loaded brain shut down, and he passed out.

He awoke in that fateful operating room where he'd started, but this time he was hanging, spread-eagle, from an elaborate upright framework that held him in place. Aside from Lori and Dr. Brody, a small group of about a dozen women sat in a make-shift gallery, watching the proceedings with interest. A mirror had been hung so that Jason would be sure to see what was happening to him.

"Oh, Jason, it's time for the final day of your stay here at our happy little clinic." Dr. Brody said, almost sadly. "Just a few, final changes, and you'll be allowed to leave. Now she grinned wickedly. "However, since Jason Reese is dead, you'll have to leave as somebody else."

Jason was willing to take the pain for his last chance at speaking his mind to the woman who had caused all the humiliations he had endured - but even that was robbed from him. His whole body was numb, limp and unresponsive as he hung from the X-frame.

"First, a demonstration of a wonderful new accelerant." Dr. Brody announced, producing a vial. "It allows any wound to close and heal, without a scar, in about twelve hours."

With that, her and three assistants set to work on Jason. He watched, horrified and helpless, as they irrevocably transformed his body.

First, they cut open his shoulders. Carefully, using small surgical saws, they cut a piece from each shoulder, making them slimmer, then butted the cut ends together, and closed a harness over his shoulders to hold them in place as the accelerant worked.

The pieces of bone taken from his shoulders were used to expand his hips. At the same time, his legs were broken and expanded in three places, giving his already shapely legs an incredibly sexy line as they became proportionately longer, almost like a Barbie Doll's.

Their next act was delicate work on his hands and feet, making them slender and much more feminine. They then performed work on his face, raising his cheekbones, narrowing his jaw, and making his nose smaller, more pert.

Jason was horrified as the work expanded farther afield. With definite glee, Dr. Brody extracted his cock, balls, and associated inner organs, to be replaced by a fully functional female womb and vagina from a fresh cadaver. His male glands were replaced by those from the same woman - who, before her suicide death, had been medically declared a bona fide 'nymphomaniac.'

Injection of a new destabilized fat was used to make his lips fuller, and pouty. The same technique was used on his ass, rounding it out into a firm, delectable tear-drop shape.

The final act was the attachment to his chest of a wide rubber device that would shape his new breasts. As the machine began to hum and cause expansion, Dr. Brody approached Jason with a wicked smile.

"Nighty night, sweet princess. Just to give you something to dream on, try this name on for size - Sindi." Then, a needle slid into his arm, and everything went black.

Slowly, Jason climbed out of his - or, more appropriately - her drug induced darkness into the deep, quite California night. She was laying on a hard surface, the cool night breeze whispering over her.

Carefully, Jason, no, Sindi sat up - and almost fell over as a tremendous weight on her chest almost pulled her off balance. Carefully, she struggled to her new, daintier feet, not helped by the heels that felt impossibly tall. It seemed that she rose forever before standing upright.

Looking down, she was greeted by an unbelievable expanse of creamy cleavage. Forcing her eyes away from the awesome display, she looked around.

She identified the spot immediately - it was the roadside where the whole thing had begun. Standing on the side of the road, looking absurd in the surroundings, was a full-length mirror. Slowly, she approached it, and viewed her new self.

She was a walking advertisement for sex. At his original height of 6' 3", he would have been remarkably tall for a woman. The extension of her legs raised her to 6' 5". Her small, dainty feet were enclosed in black leather pumps with an ankle strap, and silver spike heels that were 6 inches tall, raising her to 6' 11" above the ground. The extreme height of the heels accented ever sensuous curve of her incredibly long, sexy legs, all the way to the hem of her mini-micro black PVC skirt with a V- front that revealed her flat, smooth stomach. It also clung to her unbelievably firm, ripe ass.

She also wore a matching PVC jacket. It started well above her belly button, showcasing her amazing 16 inch waist. A built in belt cinched the bottom of her jacket just below the sudden, and awe-inspiring, swell of her enormous, round tits. The sharp, plunging neckline displayed what seemed to be miles of the smooth, creamy globe. The skintight PVC clung to the little it did cover.

Gold jewelry accented her fabulous body - several bangles on each wrist, and a gold accented black choker around her neck. Large hoop earrings dangled from her ears beside a face so blatantly sexual it could give the pope an erection. Her firm, full lips were permanently locked in a bewitching, if somewhat mindless, smile. Her sandy blonde hair curled around her face, and over her slender shoulders. Not bound by reality, her tormentors had used their every ability to transform Jason Reese into the most utterly sexual creature to ever walk the face of the planet. Every curve, every silky inch, every golden strand of hair was calculatingly created to inspire lust.

"I'm a fox" she chirped cheerfully. It wasn't what she really felt - not by a long shot - but it was the best that her conditioned brain would let come from her soft, red-glossed lips.

Hanging from the side of the mirror was a small, black leather purse. She lifted it from its perch, and her long, red fingernails undid the clasp. Inside, she found about a hundred bucks, plus various I.D. made out to 'Sindi Elvira Xavier.' Closing the clasped, she found herself looking at 'her' initials, in small silver letters, on the clasp - S.E.X.

She headed down the verge of the highway, not even sure where she was going, or what she was going to do. Mentally, she cursed her erotic sway, and the way her enormous, round tits bounced and swayed invitingly with every step. Thankfully, she didn't realize what the movement was doing to her ass.

After twenty minutes, she was relieved to see a puddle of light spilling out over the concrete. Thankfully, she jiggled past a row of motorcycles, and stepped inside.

The smell of stale cigarettes, male sweat, and beer greeted her like a physical blow. To her internal horror, she found her hormone-laden body reacted 'favorably' the musky smell of men, her new, large nipple springing to life, and a new - and though she hated to admit it, pleasant - warmth was flooding her new womanhood.

Every one of the dozen or so bikers in the bar stopped dead at the unbelievably tall, buxom, leggy blonde sex goddess in their midst. Their eyes tried to find one spot on her body to rest. Usually, a woman had one feature that drew all men's eyes, but Sindi's created body was so perfect in every detail, their lustful gazes tried to take all of her in, before coming to rest on what ever feature that particular individual had a deep-down affinity for.

Immediately, she realized she'd made a mistake. She had to force herself to swivel sensuously, and ankle towards the door, ass and tits swaying invitingly.

Before she could make her escape, the door opened and a woman entered. From Sindi's new height, and the leather clothing the newcomer wore, it took a second to identify Sandy, the officer that had 'arrested' her that fateful night.

"Sindi! You made it!" Sandy boomed, giving her a quick hug. Bolt of pleasure shot through Sindi's unbelievably new endowments as they were crushed against Sandy's not inconsiderable bust line. Sandy guided the new woman to the bar, and ordered to beers.

"I shoulda known" a voice growled from a murky corner of the room. "She's a dyke too."

Sandy spun in her stool. "Nah, Sindi here goes both ways. She's just so damn horny, being able to fuck only half the planet can't satisfy her." The leather clad off duty cop winked at the blonde bombshell - hell, blonde MIRV - and smiled at the suddenly re-energized men in the room.

Sindi tried to deny it - but before she could even open her inviting new lips, waves of pain speared through her body. Thanks to her training, no sign of her agony broke through her smiling facade, and to her despair, she knew the only way to end the pain was to say something like...

"I believe a hard man is good to find." She giggled - GIGGLED - in her high, bimboish voice. Inside, she cursed and screamed as she smiled at the crowd of male hormones. Instantly, a terrible itching flooded her massive tits, and she let out a long, slow - and incredibly erotic - moan. Desperately, she tried to ignore the sensation that was driving her insane.

"He, Sindi, what's the prob?" the nearest leering biker asked.

"Uh. . oh. . It's, it's...my tits..." she gasped helplessly, the unendurable itch driver her nuts. Her slender hands began to squeeze her massive globes, seeking relief.

A slow smile spread of the biker's bearded face. "Well, damn girl! I can help. . " He said, and stood. His thick fingers quickly undid the belt and zipper holding her top on, and he pulled it open.

Her enormous tits were revealed in all their glory. With their size and weight, and unsupported by clothing or bra, they should have sagged - but, aside from one fetching bounce, they hung round, and defiantly proud, as perfect globes from her chest. Her long, engorged nipple poked invitingly from their apex.

The bike wasted no time. His hands, then his mouth, quickly set to work, squeezing, licking and sucking across her vast globes and erect nipples. Helplessly, a moan of womanly pleasure escaped Sindi's throat as the itch was replaced with bolts of pleasure shuddering through her hormone laden body.

Suddenly, the terrible itch was back - in her hands, lips and tongue. She squirmed and tried to ignore the mind-blowing itch his male ego screaming defiantly, successfully resisting what she knew would be the cure.

For all of seven seconds.

Then helplessly, almost mindlessly, she shoved the surprised biker away from her magnificent orbs - and dropped to her shapely knees and practically tore his pants off.

His massive, rock hard cock exploded from confinement. Her dainty hands, seemingly of their own volition, wrapped around his throbbing man-meat, and her hot moth engulfed his engorged cock.

There was no finesse to what she did next, no mind-blowing technique. She wasn't even really performing a sexual act. Despite her male disgust, horror and sickness at what she was doing, she desperately needed relief, and knowing what would provide it, performed single-mindedly to achieve it, her hands, lips and tongue mercilessly working to bring this unknown man to the quickest orgasm she could get from him.

In no time, his jerked once as a spray of hot, salty cum flooded her eager mouth. She gulped hungrily, desperate for the relief flooding her tortured body. No longer driven by her need, Sindi realized what had just happened. If she could, she would have thrown up. As it was, the same smile remained fixed on her face as she rose to her feet. Shame and humiliation burned in her brain like a furnace, but no trace showed in her face or movements.

Then, she was grabbed from behind and spun around. A second biker literally tore her skirt away, and he pushed her back on the pool table. His throbbing cock was already bare, and he wasted no time straddling her, and shoving his cock between her silken thighs and deep within her sopping cunt.

There was no tenderness as he thrust heavily into her. There was no attempt to bring her pleasure in her first fuck as a woman - he just drove into her until he came into her pussy, then quickly withdrew, not caring that Sindi hadn't even come close to orgasm. Horror and shock filled her as she realized that she'd been raped, much like she, as Jason, had raped Lori. But unlike Lori, she'd offered no resistance, smiling mindlessly through the humiliating experience.

"All right, all right, leave some for me." Sandy said, laughing, as she helped the tall, gloriously nude sex goddess up. Still laughing, she used her muscular build to forge a path through the lustful men, guiding the new woman outside, and into her car.

"I would have loved to leave you in there, and watch them fuck your brains out." Sandy told Sindi as they pulled away. "But, you've got a big day tomorrow. The clinic is having a little get together, and your invited."

Sindi was silent as she drove to Sandy's place. Tears of shame and rage trickled down her soft, silky cheeks, belying her ever-present smile. With Sandy's help, she showered - and to her continued debasement, the muscular cop insisted in giving Sindi a lesson in how to pleasure a woman. As they stood beneath the warm spray of water, Sandy guided her through her first lesbian experience, ignoring Sindi's pleasure and pushing the blonde's head firmly into her cunt, and forcing her to learn as she went. Later, she bedded the blonde down on the short, uncomfortable couch, and padded to her own Queen-sized bed.

The next morning, Sandy helped Sindi prepare for the party. Sindi sat and let the woman apply a more understated make-up scheme than she'd worn the night before, then struggled into a shining gold gown of crushed velvet, slit up the side to expose her mind-boggling legs with every step. Matching velvet pumps, with a more 'reasonable' five-inch heel adorned her feet, and the earrings were more sedate pearls chased in gold. Unlike the slutty, cheap, cum-hungry bimbo from the night before, Sindi now looked like an elegant, sophisticated - cum hungry bimbo.

Laughing, Sandy donned her own clothing, a femininely cut tux that did more on her muscular frame than a gown would. She led Sindi down to the car, and for the first time, Sindi found herself seeing the outside of the clinic as they passed through the extensive security and up to the front doors.

The valet who opened her door openly drooled over Sindi's immense, firm tits as he helped her out of the car. With her now unavoidable strut, she wiggled and jiggled through the doors and followed Sandy down the hallway, to the large ballroom, crowded with people.

Conversation dropped to a hush as men eyed the incredibly endowed blonde, whose legs seemed to go on forever. Dr. Brody smiled at the sight of her creation, and greeted Sindi at the door.

"Sindi, I'm so glad you could make it!" She enthused loudly. Taking the blonde's hand, she pulled her deeper into the room. "I'm so glad to be here." Sindi replied helplessly.

The 'good doctor' leaned close and whispered into her ear. "You know, SOMEHOW a rumor got started that your a patient of mine, seeing me about your rampant nymphomania." The doctor sighed theatrically. "I've already had several men ask me if it was true. Sadly, I had to confirm your 'incurable' condition."

Anger seethed in Sindi's mind as she helplessly felt her body come alive with certain sensations that demanded very specific - and demeaning - cures. Unlike last night, these weren't so strong as to be mind-numbing. No, this time, she'd have to make a conscious decision to take action - and she knew the longer she left it, the worse it would get.

She felt a tap on the shoulder, and she found herself turning to meet a handsome, slender man. He held out a drink to her. "Hi." He said, smiling rakishly. "I'm Steve. I thought you could use a martini."

"Oh, thank you Steve. I'm Sindi." She replied, taking the drink. She found herself wondering whether a kiss would be enough to quell the sensations in her lips and tongue - and decided that it would be better than the alternative. She forced herself to 'thank' him for the drink.

Wrapping one long, slender arm around his neck, she pulled him closer, her body pressing firmly against his as their lips met. She found that the kiss, and the closeness of their bodies temporarily lessened the cravings - and when he fondled her magnificent ass, that helped too.

With a strange mixture of regret and relief, she finished the kiss and pulled away. In one smooth, graceful motion, she swallowed the martini and put the glass down on the tray of a passing waiter.

To her horror, she found that the instant her hand was empty, it moved to Steve's crotch and began to stroke his stirring member. Before anyone could see this, he gently grasped her hand in his own.

"Come on, we'll go somewhere more...private." He whispered, pulling her along. She tried to refuse - but a blast of pain elected an 'I'd love to' in her high, bimboish voice.

He led her to an empty room, and pulled her inside. Humiliated without any inward humiliation, Sindi's mind churned as she fought to decide which sexual act would be least unwelcome, before he suggested something, and her programming would force her to go through with it.

"I want a tit fuck." She told him, sliding the straps of her gown from her shoulders, and literally peeling it free from her enormous tits. Steve was in no mood to argue.

Finding a jar of Vaseline in the bathroom, she handed it to Steve, and moaned in pleasure as he worked it into her firm, huge tits. Then, laying back on the bed, she pushed her enormous globes together, and helplessly smiled up at him as he mounted her, sliding his cock between her mountainous mammories. He began to work back and forth, in no hurry to build himself to a tremendous climax. Still, he could only hold on so long before he came, splattering her face with cum. Helplessly, she found herself scooping it up with her fingers and licking it off.

"You know, I produce porn movies" he said, watching her erotic feast. "You care for a job? Good pay, and...fringe benefits." Helplessly, Sindi agreed.

ONE YEAR LATER

Cum literally dripping off of her, Sindi smiled as number 81 rolled off of her. She promptly rolled to her hands and knees as 82 came up, and shoved his throbbing cock inside her tight ass. She watched over her shoulder for a second, then turned her attention to sucking 83's waiting cock.

Steve watched the newest, most famous porn star do her thing as they shot for a new world record - 201 men in one tape. From every indication, Sindi would do it with no real problem. He turned to his visitor, Dr. Brody.

"I'm damn glad that condition is incurable." He said, smiling. "I'm making a fortune off of her." His expression changed at the look on her face, and he held out his hands. "Look, I know you don't approve of my 'exploiting' women. But come on, look at her. She really, really enjoys this line of work. Everybody should be as happy in their job as she is."

Teri Brody looked at him, one eyebrow raised. Slowly, a small smile formed on her lips. "You've got me all wrong. If a woman 'enjoys' fucking so much, I approve of it." She pursed her lips, and looked Steve up and down. "I was just thinking there might be a new woman on the porn circuit soon. Really short, but with a fabulous body, and the longest tongue in the world. She's an incredible cock-sucker."

Steve looked intrigued. "Oh? I'd be interested in seeing that."

Dr. Brody's wicked grin widened. "Why don't you drop by the clinic soon? I not only guarantee that you'll be the very first director to meet her. But I'm sure you'll get a much more...personal understanding of just HOW much Sindi enjoys her work." She laughed. "I guarantee, it's an experience that will...make a whole new person out of you."

SUMMARY: Awakening in a prison, one guy quickly realizes that he is being punished for a past transgression, with the plan being that he will be transformed into a stripper.

Prisoner

By Gunslinger

Hawk shivered in his sleep.

It was a very shallow sleep – the sort where he was dimly aware of his surroundings, his mind conscious enough to incorporate sounds or sensations into chaotic, half-formed dreams. In some vague way, he was aware of the rough texture of the fabric beneath his shivering body, of the cool air that moved unimpeded across his bare skin – but he was not yet nearly awake enough for him to understand the cause of what he was experiencing.

Jeffery Robert Hawkings – 'Hawk', as he was known, both due to his last name and for the intricate chest- spanning tattoo of a hawk he'd gotten while in prison – unconsciously shifted his position on the thin, cold mattress, searching futilely for a more comfortable position, his clouded mind desperately desiring to sink completely into the comforting blackness of sleep. Half-curved into a fetal position, he mumbled incoherently to himself, struggling to fight off the discomfort that gripped him.

It was an effort that was ultimately in vain.

Though he might have successfully dozed back into a deeper slumber for a short period of time, briefly ignoring the chill air and rough mattress, there was no way his half-roused senses could ignore the bright light that suddenly flooded over him as a timer activated the bare hundred-watt bulb mounted within the protective wire-mesh cage above his bunk. The bright light was accompanied by a sharp crackling sound – the rough static hiss of a audio-tape duped from an original vinyl record – and then, a second later, 'Reveille' blared brassily from the battered metal PA speaker mounted just a short distance down the hallway. With no solid door to block the sound, it rang sharp and clear, echoing off the concrete walls with an eerie reverberation.

The first half-second of the song was lost in Hawk's dream-like state, as his half-bemused mind tried to fit it into a strange dream about being on a beach in the spring with two young women and a talking cat... and then the sharp-ringing notes forcefully pierced the blessed haze of sleep, seeming to yank him physically upright with the sharp-honed instincts that prison had perforce taught him. Struggling to clear his mind, he jerked upright on the bunk, eyes darting about him as he struggled to take in his situation, alert for any sign of threat.

What he saw offered no threat to him, physically – but plenty of confusion, mentally. "What the fuck...?"

Heavy brows lowered over intense eyes as his head jerked back and forth, taking in a strange-yet-familiar sight. It was familiar in form and function – the concrete walls, painted in worn institution colors, the stinking tankless toilet attached to the wall, the metal bunk likewise suspended by steel bracing from the cold concrete... and, of course, the rusting, yet solid iron bars forming the front and door of the cell in which he found himself.

That was what was familiar about the place, for it was, without a doubt, a prison cell – but the exact cell was unfamiliar to Hawk, for he had no memory of being in this particular cell before.

Which was all the more confusing and worrisome, as his last clear memory was of going to bed at the 'half- way house' he'd been released to on parole just last week.

"Goddamnit!" Hawk shouted as the last brassy notes bounced from the long concrete hallway. "Jailer! Hey, jailer, I need to talk to you!"

While waiting for a response, he glanced around the small, green-and-white walled cell, looking for the inevitable orange jumpsuit and paper sandals issued new inmates... and then frowned when he discovered it wasn't inevitable to find them, after all. He even glanced under the bunk, hanging over it rather than put bare feet on the cold concrete floor, but there wasn't so much as a stitch of clothing to be found in the tiny cell – nor a blanket, for that matter.

"Yo! Keys! Where is you?" He shouted from the marginally more comfortable bunk. Growing angrier – and, loathe to admit it, even to himself, more frightened – by the second, he finally swung his muscular legs over the bunk, wincing as the floor proved as cold to his bare feet as he had feared. Padding to the bar-blocked cell wall, he peered down the dimly-lit hallway...

...and anger was suddenly eclipsed by his still unacknowledged fear as he realized that the hallway, as far as he could see, was bare.

No other cell door interrupted the expanse of the walls in the hallway. No stenciled lettering was painted on the roughened surface, indicating cell-block and direction. The floor, though familiar to any institution, lacked the heavy wear pattern that such an aging cell should have boasted from the numerous feet treading it's path on a long-regimented schedule.

It was a prison, of that there was no doubt, for it was designed to imprison a person – yet Hawk's new shiver was hardly from the chill air alone as he realized that it wasn't a 'real' prison, run by local, state or federal government.

He was in somebody's own, personal 'Prison' – a cell in a building originally designed for another purpose, and retrofitted for it's current use.

"Oh... shit." He muttered to himself, looking past the bars at the hallway that was so fundamentally wrong in so many ways. His eyes flicked from one detail to the next, quickly adding up facts that told him that his 'cell' had originally been a dead-end corridor, with the barred wall added about ten feet from the original end to form the cell in which he now found himself. As to the original purpose of the long and otherwise featureless corridor, he could only guess for the moment – but figuring that particular fact out was the least of his worried.

Without much in the way of hope, he reached out and tried the cell door, and remained unsurprised – but even more deeply afraid – when it refused to open. What use a cell when it didn't lock, after all?

Nevertheless, it was quickly becoming clear to Hawk that he was well and truly trapped, in a cell that had a sink and toilet, but no blanket, no clothes, no food... and from the lack of response, no jailer.

Had he been brought here to slowly starve to death, cold and alone...?

If the rather nasty suspicion about who was behind this was true, Hawk very much feared that would be the case.

On feet that felt like leaden blocks of ice, Hawk returned to the bunk and perched on it cross-legged, tucking chilled feet under his warmer thighs as he considered the situation.

She'd been a stripper.

Her stage name had been Sue Sweet, though he'd later learned she'd been born Susan Mailer. Like many strippers, she wouldn't have been anything to write home about, in street clothes and in good light – but in the dim and multi-colored environs of a strip club, gyrating on the stage, she'd looked damned good to Hawk. Almost as tall as he was – slightly taller in her 'ankle breakers', as a matter of fact – and with a toned body boasting a great pair of dome-like D-cup implants, the bottle-blond babe had really gotten Hawk's motor running – especially since it had been a quite night, and she'd decided to pick him out of the small crowd and 'flirt' with him while she danced. Afterwards, she'd come by and had a few drinks as she'd tried to entice him into a private dance – and with a good number of beers under his belt, he'd let himself be convinced that the last of his paycheck would be better in her pocket – or, rather, G-string – than anywhere else.

That private dance had really gotten him turned on – and when Sue had informed him she was done for the night, while, to his mind, she'd been telling him something, especially with that sweet smile she'd given him.

Oh, at the trial, evidence had been brought forward 'proving' that the persona was practically standard-issue at strip clubs – that flirtation was what brought in the money. That she hadn't meant anything personal by it, any more than a bank teller smiling at you and wishing you a good day meant they wanted to be your best friend in the whole world. They called what Hawk had done 'rape', no matter how obvious it was that she'd wanted it. After all, when you got right down to it, all women were whores, now weren't they? Sure 'good girls' pretended they weren't, and society at large went with the lie... but you spent money on the 'good girls', too, didn't you? Not as a straight-up cash transaction, perhaps, but you bought them stuff, and it was money out of your pocket to get them into bed, right?

Stripper – well, they didn't even play the 'good girl' game now, did they? They took some money just to dance for you and show you their bodies. Private dances got you more – and cost you more...

...and he had left her money after he'd finished with her, just like with any other whore. Hell – she hadn't even said 'no' to the money – in fact, she hadn't said anything once he'd penetrated her, just laying there, staring blankly up at the sky, wordless... motionless...

Hawk didn't believe a word from the psychiatrist the prosecutors had brought in – bought and paid for, of course. Even if Susan really was 'locking herself away' in her apartment, it wasn't because she was 'traumatized' and 'unable to work' – she just knew a gravy train when she saw it, like any other gold-digging whore. (Which meant all women, of course.) She'd known what side her bread was buttered on – stay at home for a few weeks, make up the words the shrinks had told her the court wanted to hear for this scam, and now he was on the hook for 'lost income' and 'damages' as well. Bad enough he was going away for some more hard time – though he was used to that, and could handle it. The cash, though – that had been another matter.

He hadn't had that sort of money, of course – and he hadn't liked the arrangement the whore's mother had worked out, either. Some rich-bitch cunt, she was the one who'd arranged that his stay in prison itself be fairly short, with a proportionately long parole during which he would work to pay off the cash settlement the court had come up with for the whore. That had just proved his point – if it wasn't about money, the rich-bitch would have wanted him in prison 'till he rotted, not released early. But, hey – she'd gotten her money from inheriting her older-and-now-dead husband's research company, hadn't she? Clearly a case of mama gold- digger teaching 'the family business' to daughter.

Now, though... now Hawk wasn't so sure. Maybe Mama Mailer thought prison was too soft... maybe she really did want him dead-in-prison, but on a shorter time-frame... maybe she'd arranged this to get the revenge for what she really and truly believed had been 'rape'. Maybe he'd been wrong about...

'Good morning, Jeffery...' A cold female voice – Mama Mailer – came over the PA speaker, using that first name Hawk hated so passionately. 'I hope you are ready and willing – you have a debt to pay, now don't you?'

With those words, Hawk's certainty about how the world really worked came back in a rush – it was about the money, and Mama Mailer just didn't want to risk him taking off until she'd gotten every cent her whore- daughter had tricked the courts into giving her.

"Fine, fine!" Hawk snapped back, assuming there was a microphone somewhere nearby. "Just tell me what I've got to do to get this shit over with, 'kay?'"

There was a pause, one that felt almost 'surprised' – as if the woman at the other end of the PA had been expecting something different. Perhaps she'd been expecting him to rage, to argue, maybe even to plead...?

Then she didn't know Hawk Hawkings at all – for he knew how the world worked. If you were a woman, you were a whore. If you were a man... well, that was different but the same. You were either The Man, or you weren't. Sometimes you could be The Man and still be beholden to The Man, like in prison – on his cell block, the toughest guy had been 'The Man'... but a little 'The Man', still answering to the 'Big Man', in the person of guards, the warden, and anybody else that ran the system.

Hawk's view of the world, if you were male, could be summed up in a common prison saying: "It's your world, Boss – I'm just living in it."

Whatever he might think about the situation he was in, hawk knew he wasn't 'The Man' here. Neither was Rich Bitch, either, of course... but there had to be a man running things for her, letting her think she was in charge, and it was this unknown guy who was really The Man right now.

It was The Man's world – and now Hawk just had to try and live in it.

With muffled 'ka-chunk', the lock on the cell door was remotely released, and it silently swung open. 'Walk to the end of the corridor and turn right.'

With a shrug, Hawk did as he was told – he knew better than to fight The Man. The Man controlled the locks, as had just been graphically demonstrated. The Man was In Charge – and Hawk wasn't, so he went along to get along, following the instructions sullenly but compliantly, mentally cursing the freezing floor but refusing to complain about it, lest he make a bad situation worse by doing so.

Obedying the instructions over the PA, Hawk soon found himself in a room that seemed to be an old store- room or something – it started him thinking that he was probably in the basement of an old factory or industrial building of some sort. From a heavily barred but unglazed window, he could hear the sounds of traffic, and he assumed he was in a populated area, perhaps an industrial park abandoned in the late nineties – there were quite a few of them around these days. Still, the thought of trying to break out or call for help didn't really occur to him – those bars were too thick and solid for him to escape through, and since he would have simply ignored any shouts for help, he immediately assumed everybody else would, too. In his world, it was every man for himself, and without giving it any real consideration, he simply assumed that was the way it was for the rest of the world. Without having to contemplate the assumption, he believed the best he could hope for by calling for help was further victimization, given his currently-helplessly situation.

None of this 'went through' his head – it was such a 'given' in his world view that it was already in his head. From an observers point of view, he walked into the room and glanced incuriously around, eyes flitting briefly to the window and then away without any particular sense of interest.

"Okay, what now?"

His query again seemed to take the amplified voice off-guard, as did his actions. There was a pause before Mama Mailer responded, instructing him to walk over to the only real item of note in the bare-walled room.

To Hawk's eyes, it looked like a pink spandex body-suit – and he wasn't at all surprised when he was instructed to put it on.

In fact, to him it made 'perfect sense' without – again – having to give it any real thought. Humiliation, after all, was a way of life with him. You humiliated people to put them in place, to gain power over them – to become 'The Man' in that relationship.

After all, in prison, he'd done the same thing to be 'The Man' in a relationship with other prisoners... and, of course, there had been the times that it had been done to him, 'breaking' him to be 'the Bitch' in those relations. Of course, you didn't really break – that's one of the ways he knew Susan was lying whore-bitch, because hadn't he been there himself? You played along, to keep your 'pride' – which was another lie, or at best, a euphemism. (Not that Hawk thought of it precisely that way – he didn't even know the word 'euphemism'...)

In Hawk's world, 'pride' was just another bargaining chip – something you could 'demand' a price be paid in exchange for giving it up...

Hawk had been in and out of 'prison' practically his entire life – whether it be 'detention', 'juvie', jail, or real prison. That's where his world-view had come from – and in prison, sometimes you were 'The Bitch', the male equivalent of a woman on the outside – and on the inside, when you were 'The Bitch', you were as much a whore as women were in 'real life'. You sold your 'pride' – or other 'services' – in exchange for things like protection, or even smokes. Each person could determine their own price, and what they were willing to hold out for. Hawk considered himself 'middle of the road'. He would take light beatings, but never did anything that put him at any real risk of life and limb- you went along to get along, and that's all there was to it.

This stupid pink suit was just The Bitch's way of making him 'The Bitch', here-and-now, and it was better than some of the other things Hawk had done in prison already. She wanted him to wear a girly-suit? Fine, no biggy...

...but, of course, since it was a bargaining position, you couldn't act like it wasn't anything.

"You want me to wear... that?" Hawk demanded, putting just the right tone of both disgust and disdain in his voice. "No fuckin' way! You ain't getting me to wear that! I don't care what you say!"

Standard 'opening position' on the bargain, and you'd expect back some sort of hard-case threat as the opposing 'opening position'...

'Trust me, Jeffery – as many good reasons as there are for not wearing that suit, there's one very, very good reason to do so...' The amplified voice informed him smugly – a pretty wimpy establishing position, really, but probably what you'd expect from somebody 'civilized', who'd never seen the reality of life when the veneer was stripped away, like you did on the inside.

"Oh, yeah...?" Hawk sneered – again, a standard move for drawing the other person out, begin to get a feel for the real 'worth' of what was being offered and/or threatened...

'There's no food at all in the building, and you aren't walking out until you've worn that.' Mama Mailer informed him. 'The longer you put it off, the hungrier you get... and I have no compunction at all about letting you starve to death.'

Okay – there was the 'threat' – though you never believed it, not as stated. Guys – or even bitches – always made worse-case threats, but you knew better. They were getting off on playing you. Unless there were plenty of 'players' to work with – rare, even in prison, because of cell-block segregation – you didn't want to 'waste' a player. Still, well within the usual routine, which meant...

"Fuck you!" Hawk shouted – then 'sullenly' shuffled back to the cell upon instruction.

Laying on the bunk, Hawk wondered how long to drag this out for, to 'give a good show' – it was hard to tell without knowing the player whether it would improve his bargaining position, or piss the other person off and worsen it.

Well, he figured, when his tummy rumbled was as good a milestone as any – and if the microphone was good enough to pick the sound up, so much the better, his hunger 'forcing' him to do this 'humiliating thing'...

* * * * *

"Okay, okay – I'm putting the damned thing on, aren't I?" Hawk snapped at the unseen microphone, as he quite literally struggled to get the 'bodysuit' on.

Whatever it was, it wasn't spandex – that much was clear. It was a real pain to get on, the resilient-but-tough material, quite a bit thicker than he'd assumed from a casual glance, almost seeming to fight him.

Finally, however, the young man got the strange 'suit' on.

"There – you happy?" He demanded. "You gonna give me something to..."

His demand for food was suddenly cut off – as a very strange feeling ran through his body. He frowned, idly running one blunt-fingered hand over his smooth-shaved scalp as he wondered what the hell that had been, almost like a mild electric shock or something...

Then he suddenly cried out in pain, clutching at his gut and curling around his crossed arms. His stomach hadn't been a happy camper at all to begin with – not he cried out again as it felt as if he'd been thrown into a car compactor and was being crushed.

"What the fuck is going on...?" he shouted, feeling betrayed – this wasn't the way the 'bargain' was supposed to work!

'Oh – this is the best part...' Mama Mailer chuckled. 'That's a very special suit, you see...'

"What the fuck are you talking about..." Hawk grunted – and then glanced down at himself, and let out a completely different shriek as he saw what the suit was doing to his body.

"Oh, fuck – I... I'm turning..." Hawk gasped, barely noticing the itching sensation from the sudden growth of fine, downy hair that had sprouted so impossibly quickly on his head – he was much too focused on the 'strange' – and hideously familiar – new contours his body was taking on under the suit.

'..into a woman.' Mama Mailer finished the sentence for him, with an evil chuckle. 'A most amazing piece of technology, Jeffery – it literally cost millions. I spent all that time and money, even broke a few laws, to get that made – just for you, Jeffery, just for you. Don't you feel honored?'

Not really – but he couldn't have said so, even if he'd wanted to, for he was writhing on the floor, screaming in pain as his body was reshaped under the strange material of the suit. His chest bulged slowly but steadily outwards, a very strange sensation as weight was added to his chest – but barely the most important of the sensations, for it was only mildly uncomfortable in the physical sense. The emotional sense didn't matter, as he was much too busy with the sheer pain that came from having his cock 'sucked' back into his body – of the sensation of his hips being widened, his shoulders and waist being narrowed... of his overall bone structure being 'refined'. Compared to that, the impossibly rapid growth of his hair, the swelling of breasts on his once-male chest, paled into near insignificance, at least for the moment...

It was horrifying and horrible, agonizing and literally emasculating – but, unfortunately, at no time was it ever enough to push him over into the welcoming embrace of unconsciousness. Instead, he had to ensure the entire ordeal, to experience every sensation over the next three-quarters of an hour as his body was pushed and pulled and warped into a new and utterly humiliating form, made all the worse for the fact that he was aware of exactly what was going on and what he was becoming.

During the transformation, something else was happening, as well – the suit almost seemed to be 'melting', becoming thinner as it slowly expanded over his body. Its color and texture changed as it did so, as well – by the end of the process, it had gone from a suit that fit like a second skin to a literal second skin – or perhaps 'first skin', as its fine-pored and hairless surface had supplanted his original epidermis, replacing it with a pale, smooth, and utterly feminine skin.

A skin that matched his new body... HER new body.

'How do you like it... Jessica?' The PA taunted.

Thoroughly shaken, emotionally and mentally, the new woman who Mama Mailer had called 'Jessica' inspected her altered and very much unwanted new body.

A shock of soft, ebony hair now fell over her forehead – the same color as the hair he'd sheaved away long before, but of much softer, silkier texture than his lank, greasy old hair. The forehead it lay across was smoother, with a porcelain-like texture – a 'new skin', flawless and pale, a sort of complexion most women would have died for, and which the new woman almost would have died to get rid of.

Likewise her fine, toned figure of a body – a decidedly feminine body, with nicely rounded hips and a trim waist, shapely legs and a taut ass... full, firm breasts, and that ultimate decider of womanhood, a vagina.

Yes, indeed, she was a fine figure of a woman, attractive and healthy... except for the shell-shocked expression on her fine-featured new face, of course.

'It's a nice start, isn't it, Jessica?' The PA taunted. 'I've made sure you'll never rape a woman again – indeed, with a body like that, it's a fear you'll now have to deal with. Since there will still be some residual changes before you achieve your 'full' state of femininity, it's something you'll have to consider...'

The amplified chuckle that followed rolled through the room with an evil echo.

'Now, if you go across the hall, you'll find a collection of clothes...' The voice then continued... only to trail off as the person on the microphone registered what the hidden camera near the ceiling was showing her:

'Jessica' wasn't paying the least bit of attention. Shoulders slumped, hands almost absently touching her new figure repeatedly, flinching away from what they found each time, the new woman stared off into the far distance with sightless eyes, unheeding.

'This is your punishment, you don't...' Mrs. Mailer tried to inform the new woman – but, again, 'Jessica' didn't hear her – the words went into her finely-formed new ears, but failed completely to register on her shocked mind.

This certainly wasn't going to plan. No screams, no threats, no demands to be returned to 'her' masculine state; the new woman simply stood there for several minutes, swaying slightly in place, hands still touching- and-flinching.

Then, after those long minutes, the woman finally moved – with the slow, unsteady stride of the sheep- shocked. Shambling, staring at nothing, she slowly made her way out of the room – heading back towards the cell she'd first awoken in, heedless of the voice trying to inform her of her new freedom.

Numbly, feeling little and thinking less, the woman had been Hawk returned to the cell. Not even seeing the bunk, she shambled over to the corner. Slowly, heedless of the chill long-embedded in the walls and floor, she sank down into the corner – and commenced to slowly rock back and forth, staring blankly at the floor and muttering to herself much, much too softly for the microphone to make out her repeated mantra:

"Always The Bitch, never The man... Always The Bitch, never The Man..."

Afterward, 'Jessica' would never know how long it was before the voice over the PA finally registered. Cold, stiff, sore and hungry, she knew she'd drifted off into sleep a few times, her nightmares keeping the reality of the situation alive even in her semi-conscious state of sleep so there was never any escape from her femininity – and no 'horribly realization' upon awakening, either. It just... was. A state of reality that influenced her mind and her emotions in a constant, wearing stream.

It, like anything else, was impossible to sustain indefinitely, however. She couldn't stay in that state forever, and if familiarity certainly hadn't bred contempt, it had bred something else during that fugue of undeterminable length.

Not 'acceptance', and certainly not 'enjoyment' of her new state – but something else, a sense of... well, perhaps 'belief' would be closest, knowing that this was 'really' her new life. It was only when she'd reached this state that she could cope, well or poorly, with it – and so, hungry and stiff, she slowly forced her unwanted new body upright.

Vaguely, she had been aware of her body continuing to change as she's sat there, even if she hadn't consciously focused on the continued transformation. So, she wasn't 'surprised' to find herself even more feminine than before, her curves exaggerated, her hair longer, her face more lovely...

As she rose, her larger breasts swayed and jiggled, their melon-like masses heavy-yet-firm, and undeniable. It was a sensation she'd never experienced as a man, and only vaguely 'experienced' right after the major portion of her transformation – the sensations had been there, but the like the words over the PA, they had flitted across her mind without embedding themselves in her thoughts or memory. Now, no matter how hard she tried to pretend they weren't there, those sensations insisted on being 'felt', and no mental trick could wish them away.

The feel of cool air moving over smoother skin – the silken tickle of her longer hair against the nape of her neck, the strange yet disturbingly 'natural' sensation from her new crotch, where nothing hung or bounced or had to be adjusted. All these sensations, and infinitely more, insisted on registering on her mind – and the part that bothered her the most was not how 'real' it all felt, but how 'normal'. Different than what she was used to, yes, and definitely unwanted... but, somehow, in the part of her male mind she'd never bothered to examine carefully, she'd somehow assumed that it must be...

What? Even as she made her way slowly down the hallway, she couldn't quite figure that out. Vaguely, she knew she had a notion that being feminine should have felt somehow... less than feeling male. Yet each mental variation she now tried on that scenario neither fit her current situation, nor made any sort of sense. Did she think then women walked around in constant agony from the cock and balls they were 'missing', as if they'd been amputated? That they must somehow, physically, feel 'empty'? She didn't know, and she felt none of these things herself... but she didn't feel 'manly' either, even though she couldn't put her finger on what it was that, as a man, might have made her feel that way. It wasn't a physical sensation that had a name, that could be pointed to...

...but whatever it had been, she no longer had it. Perhaps it was simple chemistry, nothing more than the lack of testosterone in her bloodstream, the way somebody used to nicotine or another drug might feel different if it were missing – she didn't know.

What she did know was that she'd lost that something when she'd become female – and that, no matter how much she wished she could deny it, was what she now was.

A woman.

A 'Bitch', forever and always. As a man in prison, she had sometimes been The Bitch to somebody who was The Man – but, at least then, there had always been the hope of being 'The Man' to somebody else.

No longer. She was 'The Bitch', ever and always, Bitchiness without end, Amen...

...and since she'd been a 'practical' man, and now a 'practical' woman who knew how the world worked, that meant she'd have to go along to get along. If she was The Bitch, then she had to learn to live life by the rules any other Bitch had to, as well, and whether she wanted to or not, whether she liked it or not, didn't enter into her thoughts at all.

Every step she took reminded the new woman of the basic facts of life – the jiggle and sway of her oversized new bust, the wider swivel-swing of her broadened hips, the tug and pull of a gluteus maximus both firmer and yet softer than one she was used to having – she hated all of these sensations, yet at the same time, they drove home the fact of who and what she had become, and with her mindset all-but-hardwired, she couldn't help but allow these two facts to determine what was to be done with her re-defined life.

Which is why she walked into the room at the end of the hall, opposite from the one she'd endured her transformation in, and began going through the pile of clothing there.

She did so sullenly, without verve or spark or even much interest – but she did it, because that's what she had to do. With her outlook on life, she could do no other – yet her 'male' view made decisions for her that neither her 'male' mind nor her 'feminine state' particularly enjoyed.

In the case of clothing, it was a pair of jeans and battered leather corset-style bustier top.

The jeans were... well, jeans, pretty much a standard unisex item, in this day and age, and chosen for just that reason. Still, that was scant comfort as she pulled them on, for while the pants themselves were familiar, the body they were enclosing was not.

The bustier top, however – there were other tops that would actually have done a heck of a lot more to hide her oversized new endowments than that top did, but that wasn't a factor in her thinking. Sure, she hated having her tits practically ready to pop out of the garment that was never designed for a 'rack' as impressive as the one she now boasted – but it was leather, and battered, seeming more 'utilitarian' to her mind than the frillier, lacier, more 'feminine' tops available that would have actually covered her better.

To her current mind-set, having her tits practically ready to burst free of the bustier was 'bad luck'... whereas deliberately putting on a 'girly' top would have been a matter of conscious decision to 'look pretty'.

So, it was with one hand holding up the top straining over her firm, rounded new boobs that she went to meet her feminine fate...

...the entire time completely ignoring the voice that was still squawking over the PA, trying to impose what it wanted.

Indeed, her last thought as she walked from the room, looking for the door out of the 'prison', was a snide consideration, wondering what on earth Mama Mailer had been thinking by 'blowing her wad' right at the beginning. It was obvious she had some sort of 'big plan' for the new woman, but what could she possibly do to enforce it – threaten to turn her into a woman...?

* * * * *

Digging her long, gloss-red fingernails deeper into the upholstery of the passenger's seat, Jezebel Juggs increased the frenetic rhythm with which she rode the groaning man's cock. Her huge tits jiggled and bounced as she gave him 'the standard package' of moans, grunts, and words of encouragement – and then, she felt his own rhythm fall into orgasmic spasms, faked her way through an orgasm before slumping sweatily against him and giving him a perfunctory kiss.

"Thanks, babe – you were fantastic..." She sighed, as per her usual script?

"Good enough for a discount...?" The man asked – but she didn't even tense up at the query, as he was already counting out money.

"Nobody's that good, honey..." She told him with a throaty chuckle – just what she knew he wanted to hear, stroking his ego with the lie that, if she did discount for anybody, it would have been him...

Climbing out of the car, she quickly double-counted the money before adjusting her clothing – what there was of it, as it was designed with 'easy access' in mind, for a variety of reasons. Her high heels tapping on the cracked pavement of the parking lot, she hurried over to the heavy steel door let into the back of the brick building, and quickly banged on it in a particular rhythm.

A moment later, it opened to reveal a muscular black man with a shaven head, wearing a black T-shirt with the word 'Staff' on it on both sides.

"Jeez, Jez – you're already being announced...!" The bouncer hissed as she squeezed past him.

"Don't worry, Bruiser – got it timed down to the second.." She assured him in a bored voice, handing him the cash. "Take your cut and tuck the rest away in my locker, would you?"

"Sure thing, Juggs..." Bruiser agreed – as she hurried down the hall, and through the curtain...

"... Jezebel Juggs!" The DJ announced, right as she planned. Smiling, still sweating from the between- routines sex, she strutted, wiggled and jiggled her way down the stage to the pole, which she began to grind her sweat-slicked body against.

The management wasn't really happy about her 'tricking' between sets, but had to admit her constantly 'just fucked' look really ramped up her routine on the strip-club stage – especially since,. Unlike the other girls, she wasn't just 'selling the illusion', but actually was available to Joe Average – assuming that he had the folding green in hand, of course.

Then again, none of them – not even Jezebel Jiggs herself – really understood that she didn't see any difference between what she did on stage or what she did out in the parking lot. After all, she had admitted to herself she was a woman – and she had never, ever questioned her belief that all women were whores, so she didn't even once stop to think that there might have been any other way for her new feminine life to play out.

Long before she'd been a prisoner of this feminine body, the woman who had been – and, in many ways, still mentally was – 'Hawk' Hawkings had been a prisoner of her own prejudices...

Promises To Keep

By Gunslinger

Henry was sitting back, his legs up on the edge of the coffee table, a cold beer in one fist, eyes glued to the 'actors' on TV when the phone rang. Without turning his eyes from the naked, writhing couple on the screen, the tall, skinny black man fumbled for the remote and turned down the cheesy, bass-heavy soundtrack of the porno film before picking up the phone.

"You talk, I'll listen." Henry said, distracted.

'Hey, Henry - it's Rick.' A familiar - and unwelcome - voice said in his ear. Closing his eyes and resisting the urge to sigh, Henry hit the button to shut off the VCR.

"Hey, Rick." Henry said, with a distinct lack of enthusiasm. "You're back early."

"Pamela and I had a bit of a falling out..." Rick said, cheerfully - and Henry winced, knowing that was the stock phrase the big, dark-haired young man used when he'd dumped his mademoiselle de jour. "So, buddy, I'm on the loose once again, and needing a to show a bit of flash..."

As Rick trailed off suggestively, Henry winced again. Rick was notorious for being a 'big spender' when he was 'on the prowl' for his next conquest. Tall, broad-shouldered and massively muscled, Rick wasn't exactly 'handsome' with dark, deep-set eyes, a too-large, much-broken nose and no apparent neck at all. He did, however, have a sort of easy charm, and he always dressed well and he drove an expensive car that he could - barely - afford. He had all the trappings of moderate wealth, despite the fact that his actual income was just enough to pay for his lifestyle and put a small amount away each month. He managed to stay ahead, financially, simply because all he cared about was his own pleasure... he might be a big spender when looking for a girl, but once he had her on the line, his spending on her would taper off... and, somehow, he'd end up mooching off the girl, pulling back more expenses than he'd laid out in the first place - and when she was no longer new and exciting, he found a way to have a 'falling out'.

The problem was... Henry had been low on cash last month, during a period when Rick's spending had been at the lowest. Hat in hand, Henry had practically begged Rick to lend him some cash, and the big guy had seen no problems in finding another way to 'hook' somebody else into his net. That was the way Rick worked, finding ways to get people to owe him something so that he could sponge off them later.

Henry had taken a gamble. He'd known he had some money coming in, and he'd bet that Rick wouldn't dump his current girl until then... but he'd guessed wrong, and Rick was looking to collect.

"Uh, look..." Henry said, hesitantly. "I know I owe you the money, I ain't saying I don't... but I ain't got it right now. It'll just be a couple o' weeks, and then..."

'Whoa, whoa, whoa...' Rick interrupted, his jovial tone laced with a hard edge. 'You said you'd pay me back as soon as I got back into town, and here I am. I lent you that money in good faith, Henry my man, and I expected you to pay it back like you said. You aren't trying to weasel out on the deal now, are you?'

The skinny, most definitely not athletically inclined, young man winced at the thought of what he'd look like if he truly pissed Rick off. That was the other danger of dealing with the muscular young man - not only was he a womanizer, a con-artist and a mooch, but he had a violent temper. As far as anybody knew, his one redeeming grace was that Rick hadn't ever so much as touched a woman in anger... but he had no compunctions about expressing his more violent emotions on other men.

"No, Rick - I admit I owe you the cash, man." Henry said, quickly. "If I had a car, I'd sell it today to pay you back - I owe you big time. If you hadn't loaned me the money, I'd be really screwed right now. It's just that I don't have the cash, and don't have any way of raising it. My TV and VCR are second-hand ten-year-old stuff and won't raise the money. I just need a couple of weeks until my checks come in, man."

'So..' Rick said, his tone even less friendly. 'What you're saying is you need an extension... and I'm the one who's supposed to suffer until then. Is that it?'

Henry swallowed, nervously. "Look, man - I agree that you did me a big favor, and giving me the extra time is another favor. I'll pay you, uh... say, another two hundred on top, to make up for it. How 'bout that?"

This time, Rick's voice was flat, unfriendly. 'Yeah, I'll take the extra two hundred... now. As a down payment. Maybe you don't have a life, but I don't plan to spend two weeks sitting on my ass. Two hundred will hold me until you pay me the original amount.'

Henry closed his eyes and took a deep breath. He didn't have two hundred dollars, and he doubted he could scrape that much together unless he sold every single thing he owned... which would have put him in the same position he'd been in when he'd needed the loan. "Look, Rick - I would if I could, man. I just don't have it. Isn't there any way I could make it up to you until the cash comes? I don't know... give you my TV and VCR as collateral, or something?"

It was a desperate attempt... because that was what Henry was, desperate. He'd gambled on Rick staying with Pamela two weeks longer... and he'd lost. Now he was screwed, and Rick was going to...

'You know... maybe there is something you can do to keep your ass out of a sling.' Rick said, his voice almost conversational again. Henry's eyes popped open in shock and hope flared in his chest.

"What's that, Rick...?" Henry asked, praying it was something he could manage.

'I bet you already know that the cash is to find a babe to, uh... keep me company.' The tone of voice Rick used made the metaphor practically unnecessary. 'I'll give you a choice. Either pay me a minimum of two hundred by tomorrow night... or talk a girl you know into hanging out with me for a couple of weeks. Find the girl.. and I'll not only forget the extra two hundred for the delay, but I'll knock another two hundred off the original loan.'

Henry's jaw dropped. Rick was suggesting that he somehow talk a female friend into... well, basically, into sleeping with Rick in exchange for an extension on the loan. It was clear what the incentive would have to be - the four hundred bucks Henry would be 'saving' on the deal.

Rick was asking Henry to pimp for him. It was the sleaziest, most immoral, disgusting thing anybody had ever asked of Henry...

...and he was sickened to find himself considering it. He was so desperate, he didn't know what else to do. "Well..." Henry said, temporizing. "I don't know if I can find somebody... but I'll try "

'You'd better.' Rick said, flatly. 'Let me make sure you understand. I want a girl who isn't going to expect me to 'act nice' for her. Since I don't have the cash, there'll be no dating, no gifts, no nothing. She's gonna have to be happy with hanging out at my pad, and I want to see her at least a couple of hours a day, maybe longer.'

Henry swallowed, sickened by Rick's callous reduction of women to nothing more than chattel, something to suit his whims.

'No dogs, either.' Rick continued. 'She doesn't have to be a beauty queen, but I don't want to have to put a bag over her head. I like my girls buxom, so she'd better be at least a D-cup, if not bigger. I don't care what skin color or hair color she is, and I don't give a shit how tall - but she's got to be willing to wear stuff that she looks good in, nothin' baggy or stuff. And, Henry ?'

"Yeah. ?"

'Don't think you can get away with sticking me with a tease, all show and no go. Maybe you can't find a babe who'll jump into the sack ten seconds after I meet her, but if I don't get action pretty quick, then I figure you're screwin' me - and I don't like that. Got it?'

"Yeah." Henry said, again, feeling dirty and slimy.

'So that's it, pal.' Rick said, his tone edged with the threat of violence. 'Midnight tomorrow, you'd better make damn sure that somebody has rung my doorbell - either you, with two hundred, or a buxom babe who's hot to trot. Midnight rolls around without either and you'll regret it. Clear?'

"Yeah. Crystal clear." Henry agreed, glumly. He heard the 'click' as Rick hung up, and he put the phone back in its cradle with a look of desperation.

He was disgusted by the thought... but he was already trying to figure out how the hell he was going to find a girl willing to do what Rick wanted...

* * * * *

"You can wait in here." The man said. The tone of voice he used indicated it wasn't so much a hospitable offer as an order. "Madame Tremaine will be in shortly."

Not trusting his voice, Henry bobbed his head in understanding and agreement as the short, broad-shouldered man's dark eyes watched without any visible emotional at all. Aside from being broad-shouldered and obviously fit, the tanned, bald-headed man with the neatly trimmed goatee was dressed in an expensive suit whose well-tailored line only almost hid the bulge under his right armpit.

Assured that Henry was too afraid to do anything but comply, the man turned and left the dark, ornately-furnished room, pulling the heavy door shut behind him. Nervously, Henry looked around, rubbing his sweaty palms on his jeans as he glanced at the clock on the wall, whose ticking seemed louder than thunder in the otherwise silent room.

Eleven-oh-eight. He was less than an hour away from Rick's deadline. Which is why he found himself where he was.

Henry had made several enemies today. Desperate, he'd thought of all the females he knew who might be the least bit willing to help, for a price, and he'd tried to ask them in as inoffensive way as possible - but there just was no inoffensive way to ask a woman to prostitute for you.

Needless to say, the women had been less than thrilled, and he knew that, no matter what happened, a very unsavory reputation was going to mar his attempts at romantic encounters from now on. Some women were more understanding than others, but Henry doubted whether he'd find a woman that understanding. The best he could hope for was somebody who didn't know about it.

As the hours had passed, his desperation had grown - and as night had fallen, he'd begun to walk the downtown streets, until he'd found a actual prostitute. He'd explained his problem - and she'd laughed in his face at the thought she'd work on a promissory note. So had the next two... but the fourth one he'd met had been a little more sympathetic, even if she was unwilling to take the risk herself. It was her advice that had led him here.

Henry had never known that the town had an actually brothel within its limits, a 'House of Ill Repute', a high-class establishment that somehow managed to remain out of sight to almost the entire population.

Now, his only hope was to convince the owner-operator of the 'establishment' to 'loan' him a girl for Rick, on the promise of full payment in two weeks. He was sure it would be considerably more expensive than four hundred, given the heavy elegance of the House, but perhaps he could still manage to come out slightly ahead of where he'd been before he'd asked Rick for a loan...

Even if he went back to being dead broke after paying off the Madame, at least he'd still have his health...

Henry began to pace nervously over the thick, forest-green carpet... when the door behind the big, Dark-Walnut desk swung open, and a woman emerged.

Henry had no idea what to expect from a Madame - but whatever preconceived notions he might have held, this woman didn't meet them.

She was tall, taller than Henry - indeed, probably taller than Rick, who was six-seven. The desk blocked the view of the woman's feet, but even assuming six-inch heels, she had to be at least six-nine.

She was also remarkably muscular - something that wasn't hard to see, since she was wearing a pair of black leather pants and a black leather vest, both garments clinging to her taut body like a second skin. Her arms were bare, and revealed musculature that was impressive.

Despite the fact she was tall and muscular, however, there was nothing 'masculine' about her in the least - indeed, she was gorgeous, in a very intimidating, threatening way. Her hips were full and womanly below a slender waist, and her breasts were full and firm, displaying an abundance of cleavage in the low 'V'-neck of the vest. She had full, sensual lips beneath a broad but lovely nose, and her dark eyes beneath their finely arched eyebrows were both alluring and intimidating. Her long, dark hair was pulled back from her head into a tight ponytail that was anything but 'girlish', her appearance, expression and moments showing somebody in complete control of themselves - and those around her. She was stunning, and frightening. She was... awesome.

"Uh... Madame Tremaine...?" Henry said, nervously. "I, uh... I'm Henry Taylor, and..."

"I know who you are, Mr. Taylor." She said in a cool, powerful voice as she sat down in the deep leather chair behind the desk. "I'm also aware of you... situation."

Henry blinked, surprised.

"Tell me, Mr. Taylor - since you are seeking help specifically because you cannot meet one obligation, why do you think I would willingly accept your word on repayment... if you could actually afford the services of one of my ladies, that is?"

Henry's mouth fluttered, but he couldn't think of an answer to the question. When she put it that way, it did seem like a completely ridiculous offer. He blushed in embarrassment.

"I see." She said, her voice flat and unfriendly. "Mr. Taylor, you willingly entered into the agreement with your friend, knowing quite well what would happen if you could not make repayment. Then you have the gall to compound your error by making an even worse agreement, one involving a third party. Quite frankly, Mr. Taylor - you disgust me."

Henry frowned. Given her line of work, where did she get off being 'disgusted' by him 'pimping'? Her eyes narrowed. "Yes? You wish to try and defend your actions, perhaps?"

Henry's jaw set as he held tight to his anger. Even stronger was his fear of what Rick would do to him, and there was still the slightest chance... "No."

Her eyebrow rose, slowly. "Don't assume to judge me, young man. Indeed, I do run an establishment where my staff caters to the sexual desires of our customers... but the circumstances are so utterly different that you could not possibly even begin to conceive of it. You have no idea of what goes on here, or how, or why. I would advise you to wipe that look off your face if you do not wish to make things worse for yourself than they already are."

Henry couldn't help but snort. "No offense, Madame Tremaine - but I'm broke, and facing the risk of having bones the same way. I doubt that anything could make the situation worse."

Her lips curved slightly in a smile that held absolutely no humor. "Oh, I assure you - it could. Much, much worse. By entering my House, you placed yourself in more danger than you could possibly understand. You should never have learned of its existence in the first place, much less have the unmitigated nerve to come ask a favor from me. The woman who directed you to me learned of my existence, second hand, from a client. She has no idea of the nature of my services, and though she erred in advising you to see me, it is not truly her fault. She will no longer advise anybody else to do so again, but I have not truly punished her in any significant way. The client stupid enough to have revealed the information to her, though... he will regret it at leisure."

Henry felt a cold shiver run through his spine at the cold finality of her tone. He began to realize that he might have made a horrendous mistake coming her, and he felt like squirming as her dark, unforgiving eyes looked him over as if her were a side of beef.

"The question before me now is: What to do about you." She said, coldly. "You should never have learned of my existence, or that of my establishment. I must decide the best way to ensure your complete and utter silence on the matter. I have many methods that will work, and must choose which one would be most... appropriate."

Henry thought of the emotionless man with the gun... and his heart seemed to stop as he realized that his situation could, indeed, get much, much worse. The man was probably waiting just outside the door, and there was no way Henry could overpower either him, or Madame Tremaine.

Unwillingly, he began to tremble, and the cruel half-smile that came to her lips at the sight of it made him feel sick and ashamed.

"I think I have the most appropriate solution." She said, and Henry found he had trouble breathing as she decided his fate. "To ensure that you remain silent... I will help you with your problem."

For a second, Henry was sure that his ears had deceived him. "Uh... excuse me?"

Her cruel grin widened. "If this... Rick wishes female companionship, then that is what he'll get."

Henry blew pent-up breath out in an explosive sigh of relief. "Oh, thank you Madame Tremaine. I'll be forever in your debt..." She laughed - and it's cold, cruel sound seemed to freeze the rest of the sentence in his throat, making hard to swallow.

"Oh - I assure you that you'll have no wish to thank me for this..." She laughed. She pushed a button recessed into her desk, and a third, hidden door into the room popped open, revealing a quartet of men.

The appeared to be quadruplets - four identical men, whose genetic heritage seemed to be a mix between 'Bull Shannon' of 'Night Court' fame, and 'The Incredible Hulk'. Tall, broad-shouldered and massively muscled, their identical bald heads gleamed in the dim lighting of the room. They were dressed in identical, quasi-medical white smocks over white trousers... and they were wheeling a gleaming, stainless-steel gurney between them.

"What...!" Henry shouted, backing unconsciously towards the door as they left the sides of the gurney and closed on him. "Get away from me...!"

He turned and tried to bolt for the door... but they easily grabbed him and subdued him, any one of them more than a match for him. In seconds, he felt the pin-prick of a needle in his ass... and seconds later, the world started to waver in and out of focus, and it just didn't seem important to struggle anymore. He went limp in their arms.

He felt oddly detached from his own body, as if he were an outside observer, watching the scene through a television with a fuzzy picture and dull, muffled soundtrack. The men released him, and he stood where he was, swaying slightly atop numb, unfeeling limbs as he gazed at the wall with a blank expression.

Madame Tremaine said something to him in a sharp, commanding tone. It seemed to much effort to work out the sounds, assign conscious meaning to them... but he must have understood them anyway, since he found himself shuffling numbly over to the desk and collapsing into one of the chairs in front of out.

He had no idea how long it was before he found a phone receiver being pressed into his hand while Madame Tremaine's muffled voice spoke to him. It couldn't have been more than a few seconds, yet it felt like an eternity. Numbly, he lifted the phone to his ear and heard what must be ringing at the other end. After another eternal second, it was replaced by a voice.

Henry found himself talking, though he couldn't hear his own words any better than the other's. The unheard conversation went on for a bit, then Henry found the receiver being taken out of his hand. Madame Tremaine said something else, but the muffled, distorted words didn't seem to cause a reaction in him, so they probably weren't directed at him.

He knew he should probably be worried. but, for some reason, it seemed just too much effort to worry. He felt heavy, leaden, and nothing going on around him was actually important enough for him to become emotionally or intellectually involved in. Even when he was lifted out of the chair and laid out on the gurney, fear refused to raise it's head.

He was so numb that he wasn't even aware of the prick of the second needle - but he was so utterly resigned and dazed, that he lacked the will to be even mildly surprised as the world faded and darkness swept in to carry him away.

* * * * *

Slowly, awareness returned. and this time, there was no drug in his system to fog the sharp knife-edge of panic that ran down his spine. Even as awareness of himself and his surroundings flared, Henry was jerking upright from his prone position...

...which only caused considerable discomfort as the straps that bound him bit into ankle, wrist, chest, neck and forehead. He tried to shout, but was unable to - there was something blocking his throat, rending him voiceless.

"Ah... our patient is awake, I see..." A voice said from nearby. There was a humming sound, and Henry's view of the world shifted as whatever he was on rotate upwards, achieving a perpendicular position.

"Enjoying yourself?" Madame Tremaine - a white lab coat covering her leather ensemble - asked with a cruel grin. Henry was incapable of answering - and now he knew why.

Mounted in front of him was a mirror - a very large mirror that showed his naked body strapped into position on a leather-surfaced 'table' mounted on parallel rings of steel that allowed it to be rotated by electric motor. IVs ran into each arm at the elbow, and a strange sort of respirator tube ran into his mouth.

"Doesn't look promising, does it?" Tremaine asked, laughing. "I'm sure you're thoroughly terrified. I certainly hope so, at least. We're about to begin a procedure on you - a procedure I'm sure you won't like. I developed it a few years ago, and it's utterly revolutionary - far beyond anything 'conventional' medical science can achieve. Rather than waste it by giving it to the medical community - to men - I've decided to put it to very good use indeed."

The sheer and unrelenting disgusted hatred she used in the word 'men' made Henry want to scream. With the pure venom that had dripped from her voice when she'd said that word, he knew that whatever was about to happen wasn't for his benefit. He was scared shitless...

"We're ready to begin, Doctor Tremaine..." A voice - a female voice - said somewhere out of Henry's line of sight.

She grinned. "Very well, let's begin. It is now..." She looked at her watch. "Eleven-thirty-nine. Total biogenetic resequencing of Alpha Form to Beta Form projected to run seventy-three minutes, plus or minus two minutes. Patient is being injected... now."

To his terrible mortification, as Henry felt the warm sensation of the drug being injected into him, he felt another sensation - as his bladder let loose.

He carried Madame... Doctor...? ...Tremaine's mocking laughter with him as he once more descended into darkness....

* * * * *

The next time the clouds of drug-induced darkness separated, Henry was once more in the grip of the strange lethargic, disconnected sensations, unable to feel any pain or concern. Images, barely seen and not at all understood by his conscious mind, flashed in front of his eyes as a voice, equally meaningless to his not-really-awake consciousness, droned in his ears. It seemed to last for an eternity, meaningless sound and color surrounding him completely, before he was once more swept up by darkness and everything ceased to exist.

* * * * *

Awareness flooded Henry's mind....

...even as his brain caught up to reality and informed him that something was definitely wrong.

He was sitting upright, staring straight ahead. Indeed - it was as if he'd been staring straight ahead even before coming 'awake', as if his body had been seated comfortably and normally, eyes open, this entire time.

What those eyes reported was the inside of a van. He was sitting in a back seat, staring out the windshield. The back of a woman in the driver's seat was at the left-hand side of Henry's vision, with familiar-looking streets visible through the windshield.

Even as Henry became aware of what he was seeing, he was also becoming aware of what he was feeling - and there was something wrong with that, too. From the floor, up;

His shoes seemed to be too tight, especially at the toes - and his feet were sitting at an odd angle. His legs seemed to be bare, perhaps in shorts... yet the air flow moving over them seemed. odd, somehow. More attenuated.

The... shorts?. he was wearing were pulled taut over his hips and ass - an ass that felt like it had a pillow under it, yet that wasn't quite right either. Oddly, whatever he was wearing felt tight across the outside of his thighs, but not across the inside - which might account for the fact that his cock didn't feel the least bit cramped, despite what felt like too-small 'tighty whities'.

There was a strange tightness across his waist, just shy of being painful - as if somebody were holding him in an embrace, yet covering his waist all the way around. Above that, there was an odd, pulling weight on his chest, 'complimented' with a tightness over his chest, as if he was wearing a too-tight shirt. Oddly, there was additional pressure across his shoulders and back.

There was also a strange 'tickling' sensation along his neck, one that seemed to shift in time with the bumps and sways of the vehicle - as if somebody had draped a silk scarf over his head, perhaps, hanging down across his neck.

In addition, the woman driving the vehicle must be a 'scent' fanatic, as all the usually-faint odors of perfume, makeup and styling products seemed stronger and more palatable to Henry.

All of this was strange and confusing - but not nearly so much as the fact that he couldn't seem to move, not so much as an inch. His instinctive reaction to these strange sensations was to look down, of course - but he couldn't do it. No matter how insistently his mind gave the orders, his body refused to obey.

What had started as the faintest prickle of fear up and down his spine had grown into a leaden ball in his gut as Henry wondered what the hell they'd done to him. He couldn't feel any restraints holding him immobile - yet he could not move so much as a muscle. He couldn't even move his eyes - not voluntarily, at least. He was occasionally blinking. And his chest continued to rise and fall with steady respiration, indicating that non-voluntary movement was possible - but he couldn't command his body to do anything. Desperately, he tried to speak, to get the driver's attention - but that was as impossible as looking down at himself. He just couldn't do it.

He could do nothing but watch...

...as the van pulled into a familiar-looking driveway.

Henry heaved a purely mental sigh of relief as the vehicle came to stop in Rick's driveway. Whatever had been done to him, apparently Madame Tremaine had been 'honest' in her statement that she was going to help him out. Given the fact that daylight was breaking, they were a few hours past the deadline - but this woman driving the van must be the girl for Rick - which just left the question of what they were doing to him, and what they had planned.

Then the female driver turned her head and spoke. "Okay, Honey - we're here."

With that, Henry felt a strange sensation run through him - except that it didn't run through him at all. It was a purely mental sensation that was only described in the sense of the physical due to a lack of other references to compare it to: To Henry, it felt like something had suddenly been released inside his head, a door opening - and even as the door opening allowed him to move, something else flowed out. It wasn't 'instructions', in the form of words - but it was a sudden sense of 'purpose'.

'I have to get my bag, get out of the van, and go to the door...' Henry found himself thinking with a strange certainty - just as he somehow knew that there was a small suitcase on the floor of the van beside his feet. He looked down, already reaching for the bag...

For an instant, his mind refused to accept what it was seeing, and he blinked three times in rapid succession, trying to clear the 'false image' from his mind... but it stubbornly refused to change.

In the 'distance', a mid-sized soft-sided suitcase. An arm reaching for it, one that vanished from his perspective on the upper left of his vision, too close to his body to see. It was the viewpoint of seeing his arm, one he'd seen many times before - but that couldn't be right, because what he was seeing wasn't his arm at all. No, this arm belonged to a white person - a white woman, since this arm was smooth and slender, lightly muscled beneath a sheath of soft, faintly tanned skin with a very fine layer of downy, pale hair. An arm that led down to a dainty, slender wrist - which supported an equally dainty, slender hand, whose long, slender fingers sported long, perfectly-kept fingernails painted a bright, glossy shade of hot pink.

In short, it was a woman's hand - almost defiantly so. It was a slender, shapely, youthfully feminine arm - and it perfectly matched the other odd sights Henry could see.

Like the expanse of white spandex stretched over a smoothly rounded curve of what could only be a breast. An extremely large breast, filling the fabric out to its limit, a milky curve of cleavage visible at the edge of his vision. A huge, firm, round breast that loomed outwards, almost hiding from view the shapely leg stretching down to the floor, clad in white nylons that gave added emphasis to the feminine contours of the shapely leg, leading the eye downwards - to the pair of glossy, hot-pink rounded-toe pumps with scalloped edges and six- or -seven inch high stiletto heels.

Strangely, the arm he was seeing seemed to be doing exactly what his mind was instructing his own arm and hand to do - reaching for the bag's handle. For that matter, various other sensations he was feeling could almost be construed as being...

Then the tenuous thread of stunned denial that was holding his mind back from reality snapped, and realization set in....

"No...!" She said in a strangled voice that was nevertheless easily identified as a completely feminine soprano. The denial was torn from her - but everything came together in a tremendous surge, slamming into the fore-front of her brain, and the denial was a wasted gesture - because she knew the truth. "I... I've been turned into... a woman!"

"You sure have, honey..." the woman at the wheel said, with a smirk. "And quite the looker, too - just the type of chick you think your buddy Rick would like, as a matter o'fact. So - why don't you get that cute ass of yours in gear?"

"I... I..." The new woman stammered...

It was like a sledge-hammer blow to her brain. The sense of purpose she felt suddenly became an overwhelming need - one so terribly strong that it was actually painful. It was like a rising pressure in her head, threatening to rip her skull apart.

Wrapping one slender new hand around the handle of the suitcase, Henry... or whatever her name was now... fumbled for the door handle with the other, desperately needing to get out of the van. Sliding the door open, she felt her new anatomy shift and twist as she slid out...

'I have to walk with a sexy, feminine sway...' She found herself thinking, a new urge as powerful as the last entering her mind. '...and I have to smile and look happy...'

Though smiling was the last thing she felt like doing, she felt her lips curve upwards anyway - she had to fix a smile on her face, because it felt like searing cattle-brands were shoved against the corners of her mouth until they curved upwards. She wanted to scream in emotional, pseudo-physical and mental pain - but whatever was put into her mind to control her wouldn't allow it. Instead, she found herself using one hand to smooth what turned out to be a hot-pink leather skirt over her fuller, more 'delightfully' curved hips - and heading towards the door, hips swaying and swiveling in an almost over-exaggerated feminine motion, her shapely new nylon-clad legs scissoring in vapid sensuality, air sliding over the nylon-encased skin with that strange new attenuation.

'My God... what's happening to me...!' Henry screamed silently in her head - but the answer was so self-evident that the question itself was unnecessary.

Somehow - incredibly - Henry had been turned into the woman for Rick. Which meant that...

'No!' She shouted to herself in horrified defiance. 'I... I'm not having sex with Rick. No matter what... I won't do it...!'

Behind her, she heard the van pull away - but she couldn't turn to look, a helpless need driving her forward, vapid smile on her new lips as she jiggled and swayed, feeling the weight and mass of her huge new tits inside the constriction of the bra she now knew she was wearing.

Reaching the front door, she lifted one hand and rung the doorbell with a smooth, graceful gesture - when she wanted to turn and run as fast as her high-heel-clad feet could carry her. She didn't want to do this - but that pressure inside her head demanded she do what she was instructed, and every time she tried to push against the 'instructions', to do something outside her 'programming', the pressure grew into intense pain that forced her back 'on track'.

There was a short pause - and then the door swung open, the doorway filled with trick's unlovely bulk. His narrow, threatening face lit in an unpleasant smile as he looked her up and down, eyes pausing on her chest...

...and, obeying a new 'need', Henry helplessly thrust her shoulders back, making her tits even more prominent in what was an obvious come-on move.

"Hi!" She said, unwillingly perky. "I'm Tammy!"

"Whoa, babe..." Rick said, practically drooling. "When Henry called and said you'd be late, but were worth the wait, he wasn't kidding. Come on in, gorgeous..."

"Gee, thanks!" Henry... Tammy... replied brightly - and then topped it off with a helpless giggle, swaying and jiggling through the doorway...

...and helplessly making sure she turned to press her huge new rack against Rick as she went by. Inside, she shuddered at the unwelcome pleasure the action caused, feeling the smoothly firm softness of her huge new mounds crushed 'delightfully' against his chest for a moment.

"Well..." Rick said, eyeing her lush body with a leer. "Welcome to my place, Tammy - what say we... 'get to know' one another better...?"

Driven by the programmed responses in her head, Tammy blinked blankly, frowning slightly - then smiled brightly. "Oh, gee - you mean 'lets fuck'!" She said, with a giggle. "Okay!"

She felt like vomiting as Rick grinned widely and shook his head.

"Damn - I didn't believe Henry when he told me you were a horny little bimbo - but damn, he was right." He laughed, not seeming to care what she thought of him calling her a 'bimbo' - which, Tammy thought sickly, was probably an accurate description of her, now. "Let's see if he was right when he promised me that once I had sex with you, I'd never wanna fuck another woman again..."

"Okay!" She agreed brightly - after a short pause, during which she'd winced and gasped. She'd tried to fight the mental need implanted in her - and had failed. Rick, for his part, didn't seem to care about the brief expression of pain that flitted across her vapid-looking face. Instead, he reached out and cupped her huge, round tits.

"Lets see these sweater-puppies..." He said, rudely, and proceeded to yank the white spandex top off of her without so much as a 'by your leave'. Not that it mattered - Tammy found herself incapable of resisting as he stripped the top off - revealing her huge tits crammed into a white lace bra, and the white leather corset that fit snug around her slender waist.

"Damn - you're big, baby..." Rick said, negligently tearing free the front-clasping bra, not caring that he'd ruined it as he let it fall to the floor, his eyes riveted on her huge mounds. Reaching out, he grabbed her tits - roughly.

She simply stood there and let him, not particularly helping, but not resisting either as he roughly squeezed and fondled her new, immense tits.

Inside, where she couldn't show it, Tammy was sickened and horrified by what was happening - but helpless to do anything about it. Then it got worse. Much worse.

"God - I want your full lips wrapped around my cock, baby..." Rick said, releasing her huge boobs to reach down and unzip his pants, hauling out his already-hard cock. "Get on your knees and suck me off, whore..." that was it, then - Rick had been told she was a whore. Which might be true, now, she thought in horror. Desperately, she struggled to disobey him, to turn away...

...and intense pain enveloped her, causing the world to go gray and vague.

When she finally stopped fighting, Tammy was horrified to find herself on her knees, staring directly at Rick's throbbing cock. While 'grayed out', her body had obeyed her programming without her. There wasn't even any escape that way - if she blacked out completely from trying to disobey, her body would probably go right ahead anyway.

Helplessly, she leaned forward - and her lips parted to accept the hard, throbbing cock into her till-thin virgin mouth.

Disgust and horror flooded her mind - but none of it showed as she wrapped her hands around the base of his cock and began to bob her head back and forth, lips gliding over his spittle-lubricated cock as her tongue slid along the bottom of the musty, not-too-clean organ...

...then Rick entwined his fingers in her long, golden-blond hair and began to buck his hips, face-fucking her roughly while she struggled to keep him from injuring her - all without slowing or resisting, despite what she was feeling deep inside. Helplessly, she accepted his rough treatment, slurping away at his man-meant until he tensed and blew his load deep into her throat. Helplessly, sickened, she swallowed every drop of the foul, salty liquid, wanting to curl up and die...

"Not bad, babe..." Rick said indifferently, pulling his cock from her mouth with a wet 'slurp'. "Why don't you go get me a beer - then you can start tidying up the house until I'm ready to go again." HE grinned, nastily. "I can't wait to see how tight your pussy is, bitch."

"Okay, Rick!" She helplessly agreed, brightly, rising back to her heels and turning away. As Rick went to slump comfortably on the couch, she helplessly jiggled and swayed into the kitchen, huge tits bouncing. She glanced at the knives on the wall-rack as she went by, her step faltering as she struggled to reach out and grab one, end her humiliation... and failed.

Instead, she went to the refrigerator and pulled out a beer, twisting off the top and tossing it aside...

...then, confused, she watched as she did something unexpected. From a hidden series of pouches in the waistband of her skirt she extracted a small pill and dropped it into the beer-bottle, where it fizzled for a few second before disappearing completely.

Wondering what the hell she was doing, obeying 'instructions' that had no explanations, she brought the beer to Rick, who merely grunted when she handed it to him - then turned away to start tidying up the place...

* * * * *

"She's delivered.' The driver of the van reported over the intercom. "Good... Good..." Madame Tremaine murmured, smugly.

For the next few weeks, Henry/Tammy would be Rick's helpless slave. That should be long enough to break her of even the slightest hesitations, making her utterly docile and compliant - just right for working here as 'just another whore'...

..and the drugs she'd been programmed to keep slipping Rick would have their effect too. She'd had a team sneak up to his house last night while Tammy was being prepared, and splice into his TV cable, telephone line and car stereo, as well as adding transducers in the corner of each window. With the hypnotic drug in his system and all sorts of subliminal messages bombarding him from all sides, Rick would slowly find himself becoming more and more obsessed with the idea of being a huge-breasted, cum-hungry domineering slut- bitch. By the time they went to pick up Tammy, the 'Mistress Rikki' persona would be fully employed in Rick's mind, and he'd literally demand Madame Tremaine use her abilities to make him into the slut-bitch he so 'wanted' to be.

Tremaine would, of course, agree - and not only gain herself another employee, but keep Henry's promise as well - Rick would never again wish to have sex with another woman....

Leaning back in her chair, Madame Tremaine began to laugh to herself.

SUMMARY: A young man ventures into a strange out-of-the-way book shop, buys an odd book, and finds that his reality starts to change as the powers of the book shop seek to make him pay for his lust thoughts.

Pure Escapism

By Gunslinger

Jeff was tooling around the back-streets of the downtown district when he found himself walking down a narrow, twisting back-alley that he'd never come across before. It happened because his attention had wandered briefly - as had his eyes, following the trim, shapely figure of the brunette as she climbed out of the cab and gone into the store, the short view of the attractive woman claiming enough of his attention that he'd turned left instead of right, not noticing that it wasn't really a street, as such, but a sort of alley-way that had been used for deliveries, once upon a time.

Even after the woman had vanished from sight, Jeff had been in a half-daze, his mind playing out a entertaining little fantasy in which a completely different scenario had just played out, where he was across the street, and...

"Where the hell am I?" Jeff asked himself, stopping dead as the locale registered on his mind, dissipating the pleasant daydream.

The somewhat short, mildly athletic young man looked around in surprise, his mind piecing together the data his eyes had gathered but he'd consciously ignored while he'd strolled down the dark passageway. The high walls of the narrow alley blocked most of the day's sunlight, leaving the narrow, musty-smelling alley in perpetual twilight, and Jeff pulled off the sunglasses he was wearing, his bright, blue eyes blinking in the gloom.

"Well.... I'll be damned..." Jeff muttered, shaking his head. His face crinkled into a broad smile, which it was well-suited for - following in his Irish descent, Jeff had inherited the long-standing O'Shannaghseys' looks, with a broad, open face and wide, rounded chin, along with the bright eyes and the mop of curly black hair. It was a face well suited to smiling, and even the surprised grin that surfaced now was bright and cheerful.

The cause of the startled amusement was what lay at the end of the dimly-lit alleyway. Surrounded by a run-down, slightly rancid atmosphere, the store-front looked decidedly out-of-place. All dark-stained oak and dulled brass trimmings, the storefront had an old-fashioned charm and grace about it that stood out like an aging empress walking through Harlem.

In raised brass letters, the name of the store filled the broad wooden face above the deeply inset door.

THE BARD'S REST

Bookseller and Literary Pub

Slipping his sunglasses in the pocket of his denim shirt, Jeff walked slowly towards the store, as if expecting it to vanish like Brigadoon. It didn't seem possible for any establishment to eke out an existence in this obscure location, with maybe the exception of a nightclub or the like. Even more unusual was the fact that the facade of the store was unmarred by graffiti or dirt, vandalism or theft - despite the fact that there was no sign of any security gate or other impediment that was such a common sight on other stores in the area.

Jeff was a certified bibliophile - a bookworm, to his friends and family. Though occasionally ragged on by his peers because of the time he spent curled up with a good book rather than the more 'normal' pastimes of TV, movies or clubbing, it was good-natured ribbing.

Being cheerful, out-going and fairly handsome was a pretty good defense against any serious ridicule - and the fact that his insatiable appetite for reading made him a sort of authority on everything, his head crammed full of all sorts of facts and interesting trivia, actually made him somewhat of a minor legend. If any of his friends ever needed to know something, they could always turn to Jeff, with a fairly good chance of finding out what they needed to know.

So it was almost inevitable that Jeff walk into any bookshop or library he happened across in his wanders throughout the city. Today was no exception, and the thought of not going into The Bard's rest never even occurred to the twenty-two year old man.

Pushing open the galls-inset wood-and-brass door caused a small bell to tinkle. Letting the door swing shut behind him, Jeff stood in the entranceway and looked around the shop, as if in a daze.

The shop itself wasn't very large, but somehow it managed to be 'cozy', rather than small. Floor-to-ceiling shelves lined three of the four walls, broken only by a door inset in the center of the back wall. The single wall not devoted over to shelving was on his right, where a long mahogany-and-oak desk took up half the wall, and a small, raised area surrounded by dark oak railing occupied the other half. Like the exterior, the room was decorated in dark woods and paneling, with a slightly lighter hard-wood floor.

The center of the room was a mixture of free-standing shelving units, and five clusters of reading chairs - high-backed reading chairs in a rich, dark Corinthian leather, that looked very comfortable indeed. Each cluster was similar, the chairs arranged around a small coffee- table and beside a brass floor-lamp that cast golden pools of light over each chair.

The raised area in the corner was similar, but in addition to two chairs, a long, matching sofa sat along the railed edge - and a broad, stone-hearth fireplace took up the wall itself, a low fire casting a golden glow from within it's soot-blackened stones.

The room's atmosphere was redolent with the smell of pipe-tobacco and well-aged firewood. From a hidden - and high-quality - sound- system, relaxing classic music played quietly.

"Um..." Jeff called, quietly, loath to break the quiet atmosphere of the elegant, comfortable room. "is anybody here?"

For several seconds, there was no response, and Jeff had just begun to turn to make sure that the little placard sign in the window was turned with its 'OPEN' face to the outside - when a door behind the long desk opened, and a man Jeff took to be the proprietor emerged, his round face wreathed in a warm smile.

"Ah, a visitor!" He said, warmly, his face carrying a faint-but-definite British accent. "Do come in, m'boy, do come in."

The greeting was so warm, Jeff couldn't help but smile in response as he walked a few steps deeper into the unusual shop.

The owner was a short, slightly pudgy man dressed in muted colors - a pair of dusty-colored trousers, a brown-and-old-gold vest, and a brown corduroy jacket with leather patched on the elbows. His hair was a sort of dirty brown, and receding, and his snub of a nose supported a pair of silver-rimmed glasses that magnified his watery brown eyes. All in all, the most inoffensive little man you could imagine, and he seemed genuinely enthusiastic about Jeff's appearance as he walked around the desk and came over to pump Jeff's hand energetically.

"Always glad to have a visitor." The owner said, cheerfully, as he released Jeff's hand and dug a briar pipe out of his coat pocket and began to fill it. "I'm Jules Ambrose, proprietor - and you would be?"

"Jeff O'Shannaghsey." Jeff replied, in a bemused voice. "If you don't mind me saying, Mr. Ambrose - I can't imagine you get a lot of customers, here. I wouldn't have found your store if it wasn't for sheer happenstance."

"Oh, that's always the case, Master Jeff - and please, call me Jules." With the stem of his pipe, he gestured to the chairs in front of the fireplace. "Why don't we have a seat, my young friend - unless you're in some hurry and need to run off?"

"Oh, no hurry at all - I'd like to stay for a bit." Jeff said, still trying to take the place in.

"Good, good..." Jules said. "Can I get you something to drink - an ale perhaps, or a cup of coffee? Oh - and do you smoke, perchance?" "Um... yes, I smoke.." Jeff said. "And coffee would be fine."

"Oh, 'fine' is all well and good.." Jules said, with good natured reproof. "But why settle for merely fine, when wonderful can be had so easily. Tell me, Master Jeff - do you perhaps enjoy a good cigar?"

Jeff blinked. "Well.. occasionally."

"I thought as much." Jules said, with a wink. "Make yourself comfortable, and place your trust in me."

"Uh.. sure." Jeff said. As Jules scurried off, puffing away at his pipe, Jeff walked up the three steps to the raised area and settled himself into a chair in front of the fire.

Jules returned a moment later, bearing with him a snifter full of an amber liquid, and a leather cigar case.

"Cognac..." Jules said, with a slight bow, as he handed Jeff the glass. "...and a hand-rolled Cuban cigar - Havana, to be precise." He opened the case, and a now very-bemused Jeff extracted one of the dark-brown tubes of prime tobacco.

Jules settled himself into the other chair, and beamed at Jeff as the young man lit up the cigar, puffing it into life and enjoying the rich, heady aroma of a fine cigar, chased down by a fiery sip of a fine liquor.

"This is wonderful..." Jeff said, settling deeper into the seat.

"Isn't it, though?" Jules said, puffing on his pipe. "Which is why I am situated in such an obscure location, my young friend. I run this establishment not to make money, of which I have quite enough already, but so that I can enjoy the company of the occasional client who walks in. I'm sure that you'd be the first to admit that nothing would spoil my little oasis then having hordes of 'browsers' strolling through."

Jeff blinked, but nodded. "So.. you really have a shop simply as an excuse to have the occasional visitor drop in?"

"Oh, dear me, yes." Jules agreed, cheerfully. "I do so enjoy meeting new people now and then, as well as getting visits from those who have been here before. On average, I get three or four visits a week from prior 'customers', and two or three new customers a month. Just enough to keep life entertaining, without being overbearing, wouldn't you say?"

Jeff had to admit that, for a more sedate person, such as Jules seemed to be, such a social life would be just about right, a balance of privacy and company.

"However, I have one simple rule..." Jules said, a little regretfully. "I hope you will not be upset to learn that I must perform a business transaction for every visit, or else find my conscious troubling me."

"Um..." Jeff said... suddenly very aware that he was halfway through a fifty-dollar cigar and an expensive glass of cognac.

Jules caught the look - and looked startled. "Oh, dear my, m'boy - no, no! I didn't mean to startle you so. I offered the drink and the cigar, and they're simply part of my job of being a good host. What I was referring to was my stock-in-trade..." He waved a hand around, indicating the shop. "I must ask you to buy a book before you leave, is what I meant."

Jeff relaxed. "Oh - well, that's fine." Jeff said, grinning. "To tell you the truth, I don't think I've ever walked out of a bookstore in my life without having bought something."

"Ah, yes - a man after my own heart." Jules said, warmly. "By the by - have you ever perused the works of Master Jonathan Grieg? Not my usual fare, I must say, but I have found that..."

Curling up on the couch in his apartment, Jeff hefted the Kraft-paper wrapped object he'd carried home, feeling the heft and weight of it again, and feeling the tingle of excitement he always got before immersing himself in a good book - as his father had once phrased it, 'before surrendering himself, body and soul, to pure escapism'.

He and Jules had ended up spending nearly three hours, chatting about books and authors, the time slipping past without being noticed. It turned out that Jules had a very eclectic selection of books indeed - no popular authors or best-selling novels, all of Jules' collection consisted of leather-bound books by artistic or literary authors, with a healthy mix of strange and intriguing occult and folklore books.

Though Jeff had never really had an interest in such books before, when he'd walked out of the Bard's rest, it had been with this book tucked under his arm.

Now, almost reverently, Jeff undid the twine holding the paper on, separating the brownish-beige paper from the warm leather covering of the large volume, putting paper and twine on the coffee table beside the couch, the large volume resting on his taut stomach.

The slightly recessed, old-gold lettering on the front cover glinted in the light of the lamp, intriguing him as much now as it had when he'd first seen it in the store.

Becoming.

An Erotic Anthology of Majick and Mayhem.

Oddly enough, Jules had been reluctant to sell this particular tome to Jeff, who couldn't understand the otherwise pleasant proprietor's reticence.

"I must sell you a book before you leave, master Jeff..." Jules had said, seeming almost pleading as he'd held this very volume in his pudgy hands, dismayed. "Please, I ask you to choose another, my friend. Anything else from my selection. There is a book here for everyone, and everyone for a book that is here - please, find another."

Jeff, moved by Jules' strange insistence, had perused the shelves again, but hadn't been able to find anything more intriguing to him than 'Becoming'. Jules, sighing, had smiled almost sadly and rung up the purchase, saying that the price of the book was the same as any other book in the store, for any other customer - $30. Jeff had paid, gladly, knowing the thick, heavy volume, bound in leather, must be worth more than that, despite the fact that it wasn't a Best-seller.

Now, Jeff opened up the cover of the book, feeling the crisp, heavy, slightly beige-toned paper beneath his fingers as he flipped past the title-page, to the table of contents.

Slowly, he ran a finger down the list of stories, wondering if he should start with the first one, or pick one that sounded more interesting. Finally, he decided to enjoy himself and tease himself with the unexpected surprise.

Closing his eyes, he flipped through the book with rapid fingers, picking a place at random. Opening his eyes briefly, he didn't read any of the words on the two pages facing him - except, at the very top, where the name of the story was.

'...The Enjoyment Of Others...' was the title. Quickly, without sneaking glances, Jeff flipped backwards through the volume until he found the first page of the story, then settled back to read.

Crystal's eyes burned with unshed tears as she watched Mark Langdon turn away, and she felt as if her heart would burst through her frail chest at the betrayal and insult of, once again, being denied. No matter how she tried, what lengths she would go to, it was as if she didn't exist in the eyes of men, as if she were a wraith whose narrow build and colorless hair were invisible in the yes of the male species.

Turning, Crystal fled the site of her most recent humiliation, blindly running from the singles bar which she'd ventured into in hopes of catching the eye of her long-time coworker. For five years, five long, constant years, she'd worked along side Mark, had heard him complain of his tribulations, had heard him boast of his victories, had shared - vicariously - in all aspects of his life. For five years, day in and day out, she'd sat but three feet away from him, had brought him coffee and doughnuts, and had become enamored with his easy charm and handsome body...

...only to walk up to him in the bar, heart pounding, and 'casually' feign surprise at bumping into him - and be greeted with a blank look of incomprehension, and those burning, horrible words:

'I'm sorry, Miss - Do I know you...?' He hadn't even recognized her...

Taking a sip of the beer he'd placed on the floor beside the couch, Jeff wiggled his butt a little more firmly into the soft cushions of the couch as he continued to read, following the story as crystal, sobbing, found her way into some sort of Beauty Parlor, which was dark and oddly decorated, with stark colors and odd designs, all presided over by a tall, pale woman with an angular, severe face and a mane of rich black hair...

The fore-shadowing was so obvious, it was almost painful. Obviously, no good was going to come from such a dark, disquieting locale, peopled by a staff that said odd, currently incomprehensible things full of dark, hidden meanings that would eventually become painfully obvious to the oblivious main character. Despite the fact that it was apparently set in the present, to Jeff it had the heavy hand of one of those old horror writers, especially the British ones...

Why is it, Jeff wondered angrily, Characters in horror novels always notice something weird is going on, but never react to it as sharply as they should? People weren't really that dense...

With a sigh, Jeff flipped through the book, wondering if all the stories were written in the same style. Since it was an anthology, with a different author for each story, he could hope for a variety of styles and techniques. Should he even bother trying to wade through the rest of this story, in hopes that it would improve?

Jeff read a little further into the story, finding it going into a completely predictable scene, where the staff of this strange, eerie Beauty Salon started making this Crystal girl over, making her hair appear longer and more silky-beautiful, makeup somehow making her face more stunning...

Somehow, Crystal managed to be amazed by how much the staff was doing, how much different she looked - without ever quite clueing into the fact that something funny was going on.

Sighing, Jeff stopped reading, and began to flip through the volume at random, reading passages and phrases here and there, just whatever happened to catch his eye or jump out at him...

Part of a story about a domineering man who's once subdued wife is possessed by the spirit of the Goddess of the Amazons...

...a section from the story where a flat-chested woman tries hypnosis to gain a cup size or two...

...the woman who wanted to be a dancer... the man who buys a 'potion' to make his wife a little less 'cold'... a woman who... a man that...

The book slipped out of his nerveless fingers and dropped to the floor beside the empty glass of beer as, bored, he unknowingly drifted off into sleep, aided by the beer, plus all the cognac he'd had at the shop. As he fell into a deep, heavy sleep, strange dreams and images began to course through his mind, based mainly on elements of the story fragments he'd been reading when he'd drifted off, as well as a few other things pulled out of his psyche.

* * * * *

The lost soul who had once been - and still referred to himself as - Jules Ambrose sipped moodily at the cognac in his glass, staring with regret into the fire, which was burning brighter and hotter than when the young man had been in, earlier.

"It's not fair..." Jules said, though no other human being was in the shop with him. "He was just a harmless boy, who wandered in here by chance. I should not have let this happen to him."

The voice that answered appeared to come from the fireplace, emerging from the dancing flames. Deep and thick and gutturally, it was somehow inhuman, at a very fundamental level - and evil.

"He, like the others, found your shop when in the act of a sin. He, like all the others, led himself to this, by his sinful thoughts." "It was just idle fantasy - unlike the thieves and sinners who I've dealt with before." Jules protested. "Jeff doesn't deserve this!"

"He will get what he chooses to take from the book he bought - the book you tried to dissuade him from, though you know the rules." The Voice said, a warning tone now evident. "Each customer chooses his own book, and thus the means to his own damnation.

Perhaps, if this arrangement does not suit you, you would prefer to give up the human shell we have provided you with, and be returned to your fiery pit for all eternity...?"

No matter how guilty he felt over what had - and would - happen to the unlucky lad, Jules wasn't willing to go anywhere near that far to argue the point. Jeff was 'merely' facing an earthly punishment from his unfortunate bad-luck at being 'out of grace' at the wrong moment. An earthly punishment based on whatever he took from the book that he, himself, had chosen. Unlike the eternal punishment

Jules would face, should he push too hard in defense of this one, unfortunate mortal. Wordlessly, he bowed his head in supplication to his unholy master, the matter closed.

* * * * *

Jeff woke from his nap on the couch, feeling musty and fuzzy-headed from the short sleep, on top of the booze. His eyes fluttered open...

...and he stared up at the ceiling in confusion. Slowly, he sat up and looked around his apartment, frowning. "What the...?" Jeff asked himself, confused.

The lamp at the end of the couch was still turned on - but the nature of it's light had been the first thing to confuse Jeff and cause him to sit up. The light had seemed dimmer then it should have been, and more of a reddish-brown glow then a golden yellow.

However, having sat up and taken a look around, Jeff knew that there was something stranger going on then just an unexplained black- out.

His apartment was as familiar to him as any room would be to a four-year resident of the locale. All the furniture, every item, was in the same place as when Jeff had fallen asleep...

...but now everything looked... old. Run down. Sort of grimy. In fact, the entire apartment had taken on that feel - the once crisply off- white walls now looked dingy and gray. The brass cover-plates for the light switches and electrical outlets were no longer gleaming with a mirror shine, but dull and dim, as if aged. The furnishings looked shake, musty, unused and second- or third-hand. Everything looked dusty, even though there was no film of dust anywhere.

All the light had that same quality as the lamp - dimmer, tending more to the red end of the spectrum. Somehow, there also seemed to be less diffusion of light through the atmosphere, with shaper definition between light and shadow, and the shadows seemed deeper, blacker then they should have been.

It was, quite simply, inexplicable - not a single explanation for how this could be came to Jeff's mind as he pushed himself up from the couch, walking slowly through his subtly altered apartment with a confused look on his normally cheerful face.

Aside from the strange appearance of things, there was the strange quality of the sound. Everything sounded flatter, as if unseen anechoic tiling was eating up all the reflective noise. Beyond that, it was also quieter than it should be, with what sound remained sounding... deeper. As if somebody had turned up the bass on the soundtrack of Jeff's life.

Very confused now, Jeff decided to call his friend, Scott, and see if anything strange had happened while he'd napped. Jeff walked over to the phone and picked it up - to find the instrument dead, without even a dial-tone to greet him.

Shaking his head in confused disbelief, Jeff hung up the phone, and looked around. He was at a loss to explain what was going on, or how he should react. For all he knew, it could be something wrong with him, with his vision and hearing.

Deciding he needed to see what was going on, to talk to somebody who could either confirm or deny what his own senses were telling him, Jeff jammed his feet into his worn pair of sneakers. Patting his pockets to make sure he had his keys, wallet and cash, Jeff left his apartment.

The hallway was as dingy and eerie as his apartment was, and that same, weird semi-silence reigned. Slowly, Jeff headed for the stairs, looking around with a puzzled - and now, slightly worried - look on his face.

"I think I'd better find somebody to talk to..." Jeff muttered to himself, clattering down the stairway and pushing through the door at the bottom.

The street outside was eerily quiet and deserted, even for it being late at night. The street-lights were giving off the same, dim, reddish shade of light as other lights were, adding deeper shadows to the stark, eerie scene. The few cars parked along the road were in reasonably good physical condition, though they seemed to have a grimy look to them, and somehow an air of abandonment.

Slowly, Jeff began to walk down the street, wondering what the hell was going on. Was there some sort of major storm approaching that he hadn't heard about? The few times he'd been through really heavy storms, the air before the storm had had a similar, eerie feel to it - but not quite the same. It didn't quite add up - it was just the best comparison that Jeff could make.

In any case - where was everybody...?

Continuing to walk along, Jeff began to notice something out of place...

This didn't, exactly, seem to be his street. Oh, his building was on it, and the general contours of the street itself were right, but there were buildings he couldn't remember ever having seen before.

Like this one - 'Frederico's Fine Footwear'.

"What the...?" Jeff said, frowning. "That name... I've heard it or read it somewhere, recently. Where did I see it...?"

He shook his head, but the memory just wouldn't form. Leaning closer to the window, he tried to make out whether or not there was anybody inside or not - but he just couldn't tell. On instinct, he tried the handle on the door - and was gratified when it opened under his hand. Stepping inside, Jeff looked around for an employee.

He couldn't see anybody at the counter, or among the display shelving. "Hello...?" Jeff called, walking forward. "Is anybody here...?"

"But of course..." A voice said, from behind him - and Jeff whirled, startled.

Standing behind him was a trim, sparse man. His narrow face was crowned by a large, high-bridge nose and narrow, watchful eyes that seemed to be dissecting Jeff from the inside out. Beneath a thin, almost painfully well-groomed mustache, his lips were spread in an oily grin that revealed his teeth - one of which was gold.

"Oh - am I glad to see you..." Jeff said with relief.

"I am happy to hear that..." The man said, slyly. "My name is Row-behr-toe. Please, have a seat here, and tell me what is troubling you." Sinking onto one of the chairs, Jeff felt some of the tension go out of his shoulders now that he could talk to somebody.

"I don't know what's going on - but there's something strange about the way all the lighting looks." Jeff told Roberto as the weasel-faced man knelt in front of him. Jeff lifted his foot to make it easier for Roberto to take his shoe off. "I mean - everything's dimmer and reddish, you know?"

"I am new in this location..." Roberto said, removing both of his shoes and placing them aside. "I do not know what the lighting would look like, before."

"Oh - I see." Jeff said - that explained why he hadn't noticed the store before. "Well - I still think there's something strange going on. I mean - not only the lights, either. The streets seem really quiet and empty, you know?"

"No - I'm afraid I don't..." Roberto said. "Go ahead - try those."

"Huh? Oh - sure." Jeff said, rising to his feet and pacing up and down the aisle in the shoes Roberto had put on him, trying to not let the 'click-clack' of the stiletto heels break his train of thought. "I mean - everything's kind of weird, and all, that's all. I thought maybe it was just me, so I wanted to see if you noticed anything strange."

"I cannot help you, I am afraid." Roberto said, with a shrug. "But - do you think it is you? Really?" Jeff waved a hand. "Not really - I mean, I feel just fine. Nothing at all wrong with me."

"Then perhaps you should seek out somebody else to talk to about this." Roberto said.

"Good idea. Thanks anyway." Jeff replied, heading for the door. As he got back outside, he noticed that nothing seemed to have changed while he was in the shop, with the weird lighting and eerie feel still pervading the atmosphere. Even the click of the six-inch spike heels on his black platform shoes had that muted, bass-enhanced quality, and...

"Wait a second..." Jeff stopped dead on the sidewalk, frowning. "Wasn't I wearing sneakers when I went into the store...?"

He tried to concentrate, visualize what he was wearing. A mental image flickered in and out of his head - a pair of scruffy, size ten sneakers, faded and dingy. Just that, a momentary flash of those shoes, with no reference as to where he'd seen them, or in what context.

Looking down at his tiny, dainty feet in the gloss-black heels, Jeff grinned wryly and snorted. "Well - those aren't my shoes - my feet would swim in shoes that big." He shrugged to himself. "I guess I just ran out of the apartment in such a hurry that I didn't notice which shoes I threw on..."

That made sense... but for some reason, something continued to nag at the back of Jeff's mind, and he couldn't quite shake the feeling something was strange about his shoes, and the way he was walking balanced gracefully atop the slender heels. For the life of him, though, he couldn't quite figure out why...

Continuing down the sidewalk, Jeff continued to survey his surroundings, trying to figure out where everybody was, what he should do next. Just going back to his apartment hardly seemed productive, and..

He heard the vehicle's roaring engine, but didn't really get to see it - it was traveling too fast. He started to spin at the sound behind him, but by the time he got his head to turn, it was already passing him, a bluish-colored blur without details. Then it was gone, and before he'd even started to turn his head, Jeff realized he had another work - the vehicle, whatever it was, had shot through a puddle, and he was soaked from the waist down in ice-cold water.

"Ah, shit!" Jeff swore, even as he wondered about the car. It had been blue-colored and moving really, really fast - could it have been a cop car, sirens and lights turned off? No cop car would travel that fast without sirens or lights - unless, of course, the driver knew that the road would be empty, like in the case of some sort of city-wide alert for everybody to stay in their homes.

"What the hell is going on...?" Jeff asked himself, shivering from the ice-cold water - then he noticed that he was standing across the street from a building whose sign proudly proclaimed it to be the 'CHANGE-O-MATIC Coin Operated Laundry.'

Shivering, Jeff hurried across the street and found the door to be unlocked, by the somehow brightly-dim fluorescent-lit interior to be empty. Jeff's calls of 'hello' didn't provoke any response.

"Well... at least being alone makes this a little easier.." Jeff muttered. Blushing, he kicked off his shoes. Quickly emptying the pockets of his pants and piling the money, loose change and wallet on a nearby washing machine, he stripped out of his jeans and underwear, pulling his shirt hem as low as he could.

Tossing the wet clothes into a dryer, he fed the machine some quarters and turned it on, then headed towards the back of the store, to the bathroom. On the way, he tried both the pay phone and the phone on the desk, and found neither had a dial-tone.

Turning on the light and entering the bathroom, he looked down at the water dripping from the leg-hairs and running down the surface of his legs. Shaking his head, Jeff began to pull paper towels from the dispenser and wiped at his soaked legs, hips and ass.

"Stupid driver..." Jeff muttered. "You better have been a cop, buddy - because, otherwise I'd be pissed at you..."

Tossing the now sodden paper towels into the garbage, Jeff ran one hand up his smooth, well-toned leg, around the full curve of his hip, and across his firm, full buttocks, assuring himself he was dry. Still shaking his head at the inconsiderate driver - as well as wondering what was going on with the city - Jeff returned to the main room, to find that the dryer had already stopped.

Opening the dryer, he pulled out his clothes. Quickly - eager to cover his nakedness, his cock feeling all-to-vulnerable hanging bare between his silken thighs - he pulled on his panties, settling the soft, lacy red silk garment around his wide hips and feeling the tiny strap of it ride up between his firm, round butt-cheeks. Awkwardly, he arranged his cock and balls as best he could in the tiny triangle of fabric that was the bulk of the g-string panties.

"Why they don't make these things roomier, I'll never know..." Jeff grouched. Once the panties were in place, he sat down on the chair and efficiently rolled his black fishnet stockings onto his smooth, sexy legs. Pulling on his tight black-leather mini-skirt, he stepped into his shoes as he tightened the big silver buckle of the skirt's waistband. Smoothing the skin-tight garment over his full ass and wide hips, he grabbed his purse off the machine where he'd left it, and headed back out on the street to see if he could find somebody who could explain to him what was going on.

As he stepped out of the Laundromat, a strange feeling came over him at the sight of his reflection in the door's glass. He stopped dead, and looked at himself, trying to pin it down.

Finally, annoyed, he decided the weird atmosphere was getting to him - after all, what the hell could be wrong with a pair of incredibly long, sexy legs covered in revealing fishnet stocking, and broadly curved hips and an incredibly firm, full ass crammed into a skin-tight skirt? Hell - they looked fantastic, especially balanced atop his high heel shoes... which he still had an odd feeling about...

Shaking his head, Jeff tried to clear the weird, chilled feeling the sight of his lower half brought to him. He had no idea why the sight was making his brain 'itch', as if there was something he should be remembering. It was nearly the same feeling as when you met somebody who you KNEW you'd been introduced to before, but couldn't quite remember their name... but Jeff couldn't figure out why he was feeling it now.

A puzzled, slightly frustrated look on his face, Jeff continued on his way.

A quarter of a block down the road, he noticed movement inside a shop - a beauty salon. Pulse quickening, Jeff hurried over and dashed inside.

At the sound of his entry, the woman inside - a tall, severe-looking woman with full, rich head of black hair - turned around. "Greetings..." The woman said, her voice as cool as her icy exterior.

"Yeah, hi..." Jeff said, vaguely. "Look, I know this will sound weird - but have you noticed anything strange?"

"Actually, I must say that I have." The woman said, lightly gripping his arm and leading him over to one of the chairs along the wall. "My shop has unusual hours, late hours, so I sleep throughout the day. I awoke but a short while ago - and found the lighting malfunctioning, and my usual staff nowhere to be seen."

"Yeah - that's what I mean!" Jeff said, laying down and putting his head back as she walked around the chair. "I mean - I woke up and everything was weird, too. Do you know what's going on?"

"No, I am afraid I haven't the faintest idea." The woman said, fiddling with his hair.

"Well - at least I'm glad to know it's not anything wrong with me." Jeff said, relieved. "Why, I was beginning to think..."

"Please, pucker..." the woman requested, and Jeff held his tongue and puckered his lips until the woman was finished. Then as she worked on the rest of his face, he continued.

"Anyway - I was beginning to worry that something was wrong with me. Well, I know I'm fine, at least, though it doesn't help explain what's happening."

"I'm sure that you're absolutely correct..." the woman said, working on his hands. "It must be just the situation that's strange, and you are just fine."

"Yeah..." Jeff said, rising from the chair. "Look, I'd love to stay and chat - but I still want to see if I can find somebody who can explain what's going on."

"I suppose you should." The woman said. "A shame, though - I do enjoy chatting with you, especially since you have such a lovely and beguiling voice, such a rich and smoky contralto..."

"Uh, yeah, thanks..." Jeff said, blinking - since she'd brought his attention to it, his voice suddenly seemed... 'off' to his own ears. Was it always so smooth and silky, so rich and husky-high?

Sure - it had always been this way. It was just the woman's complimenting him on it drew his attention to it more than he was usual, and the eerie atmosphere around here was getting him paranoid - that was it. Hell, that 'paranoid' feeling was so strong that even his reflection in the mirror seemed strange to him - but how could that be? After all, it was his face. Those were his dark, sultry eyes, surrounded by long, dark lashes. Those were his incredibly full, pouty, gloss-red-lips. His huge, thick, heavy mane of curly black hair was unchanged. Everything was just as it should be - despite the nagging suspicion he was feeling that something was wrong.

"Well, anyway..." Jeff said, vaguely, still trying to figure out all these weird 'paranoid' feelings he was getting. "I should get going." He licked his lips, nervously - then frowned at the odd taste that...

Oh, right - his lipstick. Geez, he must have tasted that at least.. um.. well, plenty of times, right? It was just...

Confused and slightly dazed, besieged by a plethora of odd, nagging sensations, Jeff headed out the door. He was beginning to worry that the unrelenting, inexplicable atmosphere was beginning to get to him, driving him around the bend.

As he walked more slowly down the street, Jeff took stock of the situation, trying to get a fresh look at what was going on. There was still the dim, reddish, and somehow stark lighting, the strangely flat, bass-enhanced sound, the eerie stillness... but there was more.

He was hyper-aware of the way the air felt, moving across his stocking-clad legs. Much to aware of the 'tip-toe' feeling of walking in high heels. The way his hips were moving with a strange, swiveling action, his full ass swaying from side-to-side. His long, silky mane of curly hair moved across his shoulders and the nape of his neck, and it was almost as if he was feeling it for the first time. His lips, his incredibly full, firmly-soft lips, felt swollen and sensitive...

Yet... all these things were intimately familiar to him... weren't they? After all, since he was dressed basically the same way he usually was, and his body hadn't changed much since puberty, then...

Then what? For the life of him, Jeff just couldn't actively recall feeling like this before - but neither could he bring to mind ever feeling another way. A dozen things about himself and the way he was dressed seemed to nagging at him - but not specifically enough to make him understand why he was feeling so... so strange.

Then his reverie was broken by the sight of a familiar figure standing on the street corner, dressed in a black spandex mini-skirt and a red spandex crop-top.

"Trixie!" Jeff shouted, crossing the street. The voluptuous blonde turned at the sound of her 'nom de rue', and waved.

Jeff had seen the buxom prostitute around, of course, but he'd only really gotten to 'know' her when he happened to bump into her in the convenience store. It had startled him to realize that he'd never really seen her as a person before, as a real human being with her own life, personality and reality. The funny thing was, the thing that had triggered this realization was the fact that they'd both been reaching for the same chocolate bar. It turned out that they shared that in common - they both had a sweet tooth. Now, whenever he happened to run into her when coming home later, he'd chat with her for a few minutes, and she'd usually share a chocolate bar or other sweet with him.

Now, she smiled as Jeff swayed up to her. "Hey there, J-Man!" She greeted him, using the nick-name she'd given him. "What's up?" "That's what I'm trying to figure out..." Jeff said, shaking his head. "There's something strange going on."

Trixie was a nice enough person - but not the brightest bulb in the box. She shrugged. "Okay - I haven't really noticed anything, other than the fact business had been really slow.. and I'm freezing!"

Looking at her skimpy outfit, Jeff could see why - and he blushed a bit at the thought of how she usually kept warm, dressed like that. "Here..." He said, gallantly, unbuttoning his denim shirt and wrapping it around her shoulders.

"Hey - now you'll be cold!" Trixie protested, knuckling him on his bare chest. "But you look kind cute without your shirt, Jayman." "Gee, thanks... and after you warm up a bit, I'll steal the shirt back." Jayman said, with a grin.

"Sounds fair.." Trixie grinned. "Hey - want some chocolate?"

"Sure!" Jayman agreed. Smiling, Trixie rummaged around in her purse and emerged with a chocolate... something.

She handed it to Jayman, who frowned slightly. The chocolate object was about nine inches long, and roughly cylindrical. One end flared out slightly before ending in a slightly elongated, rounded 'knob', while the other end flared out below into a sort of double- humped shape, like some sort of 'sac' or something.

It looked very familiar to Jayman, like something he'd seen quite often, but... shaking his head, Jayman realized that of course he'd seen it before - after all, Trixie was always giving him chocolate. Annoyed at himself for letting the eerie atmosphere get to him, Jayman puckered his full, sexy lips and slowly slid the rounded end of the chocolate between them, tongue swirling over the richly flavored end. Moaning with pleasure at the taste and feel of the chocolate, he continued to slowly slide it in and out of his mouth, licking and sucking hungrily at it, gulping down the thick, warm, sweet goo it left in his mouth...

"Wow - I love the way you really enjoy doing that, Jaymon..." Trixie said, with a giggle, as Jaymon finished it. "well, what can I say?" Jaymon said, with a grin. "I just love swallowing cocklate..."

He stopped and blinked while Trixie giggled.

"I mean..." He said, frowning in puzzlement. "I love sucking on a choc..." Trixie giggled harder. Annoyed, Jeff tried one more time.

"I mean... I love sucking cock!"

"About time you got it right, Jaymon..." Trixie giggled. "first day with a new tongue?"

Jaymon blinked - was that right? Was that what he was trying to say? He thought back, thinking about how much he'd love sucking and licking at the edible phallus... yup, that must be it. Shaking his head, Jaymon checked his slender, long-nailed fingers to make sure he'd gotten all the chocolate off of them. It wasn't easy to tell, what with his skin being nearly the same rich, brown, chocolatey shade of color.

Just then, Jaymon heard a sound - a sound that seemed as sweet as any sound he'd ever heard. A ringing phone.

"Wait right here!" Jaymon said to Trixie, then rushed around the corner to where the phone-booth was. The small, hooded pay-phone was mounted on a pole...

...and somebody had left a couple of helium tanks sitting on the sidewalk in front of it, in the way. Uttering a muffled curse at the unknown delivery man, Jaymon stepped right up to the two tanks and stretched to grab the phone, chest pressing against the valves at the top of the tanks, the nozzles pressing into his nipples.

"Hello?" Jaymon shouted into the phone.

A wave of crackling static and line-noise greeted him. Through it, he thought he could hear a voice, indistinct and unintelligible. Jaymon shouted into the receiver, trying to see if the person at the other end - if there was one - could hear him...

...but after several long, unresponsive moments, the line went dead, and Jaymon couldn't even get a dial tone.

Cursing, Jaymon dropped the handset. Carefully, he lifted his medicine-ball sized breasts off of the helium tanks she had to push them on to get the phone, mumbling curses and rubbing the tender spot where they'd pressed against the cold metal tanks. She loved her flawless ebony beauties, of course, but having JJJ-cup tits could really be a pain sometimes, and...

Jaymon stopped, an odd look crossing his face as he stared down at his chest. There were his tits, thrust defiantly from his chest, the smooth, richly brown skin flawless, each gigantic, amazingly firm tit tipped by a darker-hued, huge, thick, and currently erect nipple.

They were as huge and round and gorgeous as you could ever want...

...so why was there part of his mind that insisted there was something wrong with the massive orbs of dark tit-flesh?

Jaymon shook his head - it was just the annoyance at having to jam them against the helium tanks - that was all. Still... for some reason the very weight and heft of them seemed excessive, though he was well-accustomed to them... right?

Bemused at how aware he was of the way they swayed with each step he took, Jaymon went back to where Trixie was waiting. "So - who was it, Jaimonet?" Trixie asked.

"Oh - nobody..." Jaimonet said, frowning anew. For some reason, the way Trixie had pronounced his name seemed... weird. Puzzled, he rolled the pronunciation of it around in his head again... 'Jshay-MOW-nay', with it's New Orleans' Cajun origin coming through clearly, especial in the French sound to the 'J' and 'ET'...

Jaimonet shook his head - he was just so used to people mispronouncing it was all. Everybody who saw the name written out seemed to want to pronounce it 'American' style - 'Jay-mona' - and those who heard it said seemed to want to say 'Shaymonay', in one beat, rather than the rolling three-syllable Cajun way, with the accent on the second syllable.

That was why it sounded weird to him, that was all.

"Here - I think you need this back..." Trixie said, handing Jaimonet back his top.

"Thanks." Jaimonet said, taking the corsetlette bustier from her. He carefully wrapped the black leather garment around his torso, then began to buckle the row of silver-buckled straps running up the center. He started with the bottom one, drawing each strap as tight as possible, slightly compressing - and really showing off - his already tiny waist. The ten straps were perfect for his remarkably varied contours, since he could buckle the straps below his breasts nice and snug, making the garment skin-tight, then let the straps run longer as the garment struggled to enclose his massive tits. That way, the garment hugged every curve skin-tight, while the straps across his bust let the two sides of the garment spread aside. This allowed a phenomenal view of cleavage, both open at the top of the garment, which rose just barely past his nipples, and at the front, where the view was only partially obstructed by the straps that ran across in a leather 'ladder'.

"Looking great, as always..." Trixie told Jaimonet, with a grin. "god, you always get me hot. Since it's a slow night, why don't I just go ahead and give you a freebie...?"

"Well..." Jaimonet said, his rich, dark skin acquiring a faintly purple tone as he blushed. Trixie, however, wasn't waiting for him to accept or decline - she was already sliding down to her knees in front of him. Eagerly, her fingers undid the strap-and-buckle of his skirt, and she pulled it - and his underwear - down around his slender, well-turned ankles.

"Um..." Trixie moaned, licking her lips - Jaimonet was already as hard as a rock, and she quite eagerly wrapped her lips around his cock and began sucking and slurping away energetically...

"Oh... oh yeah..." Jaimonet moaned, eyes closed in pleasure. The feel of Trixie's tongue, diving over the shaft, lapping at the base, was incredible - and Trixie was just getting warmed up. She continued pushing herself further and further forward, tongue darting and sliding, moving over the flesh of the crotch with amazing ability, then sliding inward again, swirling in a circle, then darting inwards, lapping at the small creases of flesh before diving between them...

Jaimonet moaned even louder as Trixie's tongue found her clit and began to lap hungrily at it, her lips pressed against the outer lips of Jaimonet's cunt. Trixie's saliva mixed with Jaimonet's own vaginal juices, creating an erotic slurping sound as Trixie continued eating Jaimonet out.

Gasping, Jaimonet shuddered as she came. The orgasm wasn't all that intense - but it was an orgasm, and it did feel good, even if it was relatively weak.

"God, that felt good..." She told Trixie, as the hooker wiped her face with some Kleenex, then considerately cleaned Jaimonet's crotch for her.

"I just love licking you pussy, honey." Trixie replied with a grin, as Jaimonet rearranged herself and buckled her skirt into place.

"Well, as much as I'd love to hang around and chat, I think I'm going to head home." Jaimonet said. "I'm still trying to figure out what's going on. Maybe my phone's working by now, or maybe there'll be something on the news."

"Sure thing, babe - see you around." Trixie said, with a smile.

Jaimonet headed back towards her apartment, absently sliding her hands over the bared tops of her enormous, gorgeous tits, then sliding them down the glossy leather to slide over the crotch of her skirt. Though she'd enjoyed Trixie's attention, it had just made her hotter than ever, and she wanted to just get fucked and...

Jaimonet frowned a second, finding the thought troubling for some reason - but she dismissed the weird feeling almost immediately. After all, she was so hot and horny she felt ready to burst, so what else would she be thinking of but a nice, satisfying fuck? It was so obvious that it didn't bear thinking about.

Reaching her building, she hurried up the stairs and let herself into her apartment. Dropping her purse on the table, she looked around her apartment quickly, just to make sure nobody had managed to get past her triple-locked steel-core door or bar-covered windows.

Everything looked fine. Her apartment was just the way it should be - black, deep-pile carpeting, gloss-black walls, all accented by the mirrors everywhere and the black-and-chrome furniture.

Dropping her scrumptious ass onto the black leather couch, she picked up her phone, to find it was still as dead as before. When she tried her TV, she found that the cable must be out, as she didn't get anything but static.

Sighing, Jaimonet turned off the TV, then jiggled and swayed towards her bedroom.

Looking around the black-and-silver room, Jaimonet paused to admire herself in one of the mirror-lined walls. She turned this way and that, admiring her perfect body - her toned, firm young flesh, a rich shade of dark brown, so smooth and silky. Her long, luscious legs, and her huge, firm, sexy ass. She pulled her shoulders back, making her enormous, chocolatey orbs even more prominent, overshadowing her tint, supple waist.

Slowly licking her full, pouty lips, she threw herself a kiss, then headed over to her bed. Opening the drawer in the night-stand, she looked at her collection of dildos and vibrators, then selected a mid-sized dildo - black plastic, of course. Black, after all, was her color - which was why all her clothing was black, and mostly leather, latex or PVC...

Just as she sat on her bed and began to reach for the buckle on her skirt, she heard a knock at the front door. Carrying the dildo with her - and absently tonguing the end of the plastic phallus - she headed out to the front door and opened it.

His friend, Scott, was standing outside, looking concerned. When he saw Jaimonet, however, another look was added to his face... lust. "Hey, gorgeous..." He said, a visible bulge forming in his jeans. "I was worried about you, and with the phones dead I thought..." "Mmmm..." Jaimonet moaned, eyes sliding down to her best friend's growing erection. "Perfect timing, my sweet..."

Reaching out, she wrapped on long-nailed hand around his shirt's collar and pulled him inside. He pushed the door shut behind him as she dragged him towards the big, deep, wide leather couch.

"Oh - horny again, baby...?" Scott said, huskily.

"I'm always horny, babe..." Jaimonet replied, licking her lips.

Letting go of his shirt, she wrapped her arms around his neck and roughly yanked his head forward. Hungrily, she began to kiss him, her sexy lips pressed against his as her tongue aggressively dove into his mouth to dance with his. She pressed her body against his, hard, feeling the wonderful feeling of her huge bust crushed against his manly chest. Needing no prompting, Scott reached around and began to fondle her firm, full ass.

Breaking the kiss, Jaimonet stepped back slightly...

...then slapped Scott across the face, snapping his head to the side. "Well?" She demanded, huskily.

Scott looked annoyed - but answered swiftly enough. "I'm sorry, Goddess. Thank you for letting this unworthy worm touch your ebony perfection." Having corrected his screw-up of not giving her the respect that such an utterly perfect woman deserved when she answered the door, he could now relax, as long as he didn't let himself slip again. "Goddess Jaimonet, may I be of service to you?"

Smiling her seductive forgiveness, Jaimonet reached out and gently - and seductively - ran a hand over his face. "I forgive you, Scott - you're such a loyal subject, even if you sometimes forget. You may worship my perfect breasts now."

"Thank you, Goddess..." Scott said, eagerly - but reverently - reached out to unbuckle her top and put it carefully aside.

Just tossing it aside would result in punishment, and while some of Jaimonet's worshippers liked that sort of thing, Scott wasn't one of them.

Eagerly he began to fondle and suck her huge, round tits.

"yes, Scott!" Jaimonet said, forcefully. "Worship your Goddess' perfect breasts. Give her pleasure! Give it to me, slave, make it feel good!" She closed her eyes and entwined her fingers in his hair, demanding he bring her more pleasure, that he suck on her huge, perfect nipples.

He complied, quite energetically.

After a few more minutes, she pulled his head away from her magnificent bust.

"Who am I?" she asked, with a deceptive smile. There was no set answer to this question, but a demand to hear her subject's oath of devotion.

"you are Jaimonet, the Ebony Goddess." Scott said, sincerely. "You are the incarnation of female perfection, and entitled to be respected and worshipped and adored."

"Yes..." she said, softly, proudly, sensuously. "And, who are you...?"

"I am you devoted worshiper." Scott replied - honestly. "I live to fulfill your every need. What I do, I do not for me, but for you. My pleasure is merely the reward I receive for properly worshipping you and bringing you a life of eternal satisfaction."

"Very good, my loyal follower..." Jaimonet said, kissing him quickly. "Very well - you may pleasure me now..."

Dropping to his knees, Scott quickly but gently removed her skirt and panties, folding them and placing them on top of her bustier while she sensuously and languorously reclined on the couch. Swiftly, Scott stripped out of his clothes, feeling like his hard, throbbing cock was going to burst as he gazed upon her perfectly smooth, flawless ebony flesh, her incredible, more-than-hourglass figure, clad only in fishnet stocking and heels.

Climbing onto the couch, he made sure he didn't in any way inconvenience her as, trembling with desire, he slid his hands over the smooth, perfect flesh of her legs, hips and stomach as he positioned himself.

Then - firmly but gently - he rammed his cock deep into her hot, wet cunt, moaning at the feel of her amazing cunt enveloping his cock in its warm embrace.

"Yes, Scott..." She demanded in a husky half-moan. "Pleasure your Goddess as she deserves. Pleasure her now!"

"Yes, my Goddess!" Scott replied, having every intention of following her commands. He began to thrust into her, making sure to keep his weight off her perfect body, remembering the one time he'd slipped, and had been flogged badly for his transgression.

"harder, slave!" Jaimonet commanded through clenched teeth. "Harder and deeper!"

Scott complied, his dozens of sessions worshipping her making him adept at slamming his cock into her hard and deep, without ever putting his full weight behind it. The technique ensured that Jaimonet would never feel pain from being fucked, no matter how hard she was fucked...

...and the fact that it also increased the pleasure the man fucking her felt as her tight, incredibly soft and supple pussy sucked hungrily at his cock, was just a nice 'fringe benefit' for her worshippers.

"very... good.. slave..." Jaimonet gasped out between panting breaths. "Keep... going..."

Well, there was no way in hell Scott was stopping now. He continued to fuck her hard and deep, sweat pouring over his body...

...then Jaimonet showed one of the reasons why she really was a Goddess as far as her worshippers were concerned.

She began to move her hips in an incredible swiveling motion in perfect rhythm, causing her pussy to actually vibrate around his cock, massively increasing the pleasure each of them felt. Scott began to scream mindlessly as the incredible pleasure he'd only ever felt by fucking Jaimonet flooded through his cock - while she called out her own name at the mind-blowing waves of ecstasy that thrummed through her perfect body, her writhing form shuddering with sheer, unadulterated ecstasy.

The way her incredible, vibrating cunt wrapped around Scott's cock, driving the pleasure into unbelievable over-drive also clamped tightly around the base as his cock, acting like a living, supple 'cock-rink', constricting the tubes that would carry his seminal fluid - and keeping him from coming.

"Oh, Goddess - Yes, Jaimonet! He is worshipping you!!" Jaimonet screamed to herself. "now! Now, Goddess! Now!"

And, in response - she reached orgasm, an incredible thunder-burst of orgasmic ecstasy the completely erased the rest of the universe for her as she became the only thing in existence - a pure being created out of nothing put pure ecstasy as her mind and body became completely overwhelmed in pleasure...

...and in that instant, Jaimonet's perfect bodily control 'slipped as her hips strained upwards, no longer vibrating...

...and Scott screamed as he came like a fire-hose, the unbelievably intense orgasm that accompanied it almost wiping his mind clean.

It took every ounce of internal fortitude to avoid simply slumping down as the orgasm finished - collapsing atop his Goddess was definitely not a good idea...

"Thank you, Goddess..." Scott gasped. "Thank you for allowing me to service you..."

In the afterglow of the incredible orgasm, Jaimonet was a very benign goddess indeed. As usual, it was the only time when her long, slow, deep kiss was gentle rather than hard, a reward in and of itself as she gave a spent Scott her gift of the long, leisurely, and very, very pleasurable kiss.

"You have done well, my subject." She told Scott, approvingly. "in gratitude, I will allow you to take me to dinner tomorrow, then to a club where we may dance and allow other men gaze upon the perfection of your Goddess."

"Oh, thank you, my Goddess..." Scott said with mixed feelings, as he rolled off the couch and wearily began to dress, drained in more ways than one by the incredible experience. The truth was, he was wincing at her 'kind reward'. It would cost him most of his paycheck (again) to meet her demands. He'd have to rent a limousine, since she wouldn't ride in a mere cab, or his Corolla. She only ate at the finest restaurants in town - all of which had long ago realized that trying to enforce the usual dress-code on Jaimonet was a bad idea. Then, to top it all off, he was damned sure that he didn't have a chance to worship her again tomorrow - since she always gained a 'convert' or two at a club. Instead, he'd be instructing the converts on the correct way to address and deal with their new Goddess, before she spent the rest of the night with her.

On the other hand, if he was ever stupid enough to refuse one of her requests, for anything - then she'd simply no longer allow him to worship her.

The problem with that being - once you'd experienced the perfect sexual abilities of Jaimonet, every other woman, no matter how skilled, was a poor substitute, really only any good to satisfy you when Jaimonet was busy elsewhere. The thought of never again feeling her incredible skilled mouth or pussy on his cock was what made him - and every other worshipper - her helpless slave, willing to take whatever she cared to dish out.

"Very well, my Goddess - as always, I am your humble servant..." Scott agreed, wearily, as he bowed and backed towards the door, letting himself out.

Still enjoying the pleasant golden glow of sex - the only time when her raging, 'perfect' nymphomania was somewhat satiated - Jaimonet closed her eyes, and slowly drifted off to sleep...

* * * * *

Wakefulness came slowly, and it took a bit of time for the ceiling to come into sharp, crisp focus.

The ceiling that, while lit by the golden glow of morning, was a brightly and 'normally' lit as it should be, as well as accompanied by full, normal city background sounds from outside, wasn't quite 'right'.

It was smooth, and painted flat black, instead of white stucco - in fact it was exactly the way it had appeared in the 'dream'... gasping, the incredibly buxom black woman laying on the black leather couch sat bolt upright and stared in shock at the mirror wall across from her.

"Holy...!" She exclaimed in a stunned, disbelieving voice, slender, long-nailed hands slowly rising to cup her enormous, incredibly firm tits while her eyes took in the sight of her impossibly smooth, silky, hairless ebony flesh. "It.. it wasn't a dream! I.. I am a woman - a huge-breasted black... Goddess!"

Even now, the new woman called Jaimonet could feel the rising desire - no need - to be 'worshipped', to subject men to fulfill her slightest whim in exchange for the right to 'worship' her - long and hard.

"I... I don't believe..." She said, - but disbelief wasn't an option. "But... But... how..?"

Then the memory of what she'd thought was a dream connected with the book she'd been reading (as Jeff) - and everything fell into place.

Quickly - and unthinkingly sensuously - she dressed, feeling the sensations as she pulled the tight leather clothing over her incredible body. Snatching up her purse, she swayed and shimmied out of her altered apartment, one of only two 'human beings' (as far as she knew) who remembered there ever being a young man named Jeff O'Shannaghsey...

* * * * *

Jules was just settling into a chair near the fire when the door to his shop opened, and he turned to find Jaimonet striding across the store with a confident, sensual strut.

"Now, now...!" Jules said, rising to his feet again. "Before you even begin, it was your own lustful thoughts that condemned you to a life as..."

Then Jaimonet was on the raised platform with him, walking right up to him, arms reaching out...

..as she drew him roughly to her incredibly slim-and-stacked body and kissed him hard and long. "Wha...?" Was the best Jules could do when she released him.

"Condemned?" She asked, eyes gleaming. "I haven't been 'condemned' to anything - I've been granted my every fantasy!" "What?!"

This time, the surprised outburst didn't emerge just from Jules voice - it was mirrored by a gravely, inhuman voice from the fireplace, too.

"Oh - I see." Jaimonet said, looking at the flaring, sullen-red fire that now leapt in the hearth. "Well, I guess the appropriate thing to say would be 'It's been a hell of a night!'"

She tossed her gorgeous, sensual face, flinging her huge mane of hair back over her shoulders. "the whole reason I picked that particular book was that I hoped it would contain a god TG stories, like the ones I like reading on the Internet - and fantasizing about.

Instead, I find myself living out my fantasy!" "But.. but..." two voices said, in stereo.

The new sensual Goddess laughed at their incomprehension. "My 'sinful thoughts' about the woman I was looking at weren't Lust - it was Envy, at her good luck at being born female. Now, not only am I woman, but a sexual goddess who you have oh-so-conveniently arranged to not only have wonderful sex regularly, but to have her every whim met!" She took a deep breath, her huge tits threatening to overflow her top. "I just thought I'd drop by and say thanks... and see if perhaps Jules here would like to convert..." She licked her lips, slowly and hungrily, while Jules stood, stunned into silence - and, for the first time in a century, a surpassingly huge erection straining the crotch of his pants.

Meanwhile, the voice from the fireplace was grumbling, it's words not directed any either of the figures in the store.

"Sure.. You had to go ahead and give them free will, didn't You?" It groused. "Mere sentience wasn't enough for You - oh, no! You had to allow them to be able to make decisions on their own - and now You even have ones who don't like how You created them! You never see a horse or donkey upset because it was born this sex or that, do You? No!"

Jules, having regained his voice, even if it was unusual strained and squeaky, interrupted his Master's mumbled tirade, timidly. "uh, Master...?"

"What!"

"Well.." Jules said, nervously. "I've been working for you - and quite well - for quite some time, and... well, can I convert to worship Jaimonet? Oh - not forever, just.. well, maybe a week... or two?"

"Oh, sure, why not?" the Voice groused. "Go ahead, use your 'free will' to choose her..." The voice became thoughtful near the end, trailing off - then suddenly became commanding. "You! Mortal woman!"

"I don't think I'm a mere Mortal anymore.." Jaimonet said, loftily. "The living Incarnation of Lust and Pride, perhaps..."

"Don't bother putting on airs, just because you're incredibly skilled..." The voice started, then suddenly changed direction. "no - you're right. You're a Goddess. A Goddess of Lust for men, Envy for women. Go right ahead and convert as many followers as you want, Jaimonet... What I want to know - would most men find what happened to you horrific, if it happened to them...?"

"Oh, sure - except for transsexuals, like me..." Jaimonet said, with a shrug, string at the amazing bulge in Jules pants.

"Hmmm..." The Voice said, thoughtfully. "Jules, go ahead and take a couple of weeks with the new Goddess here. When you get back, we're going to make a couple of changes for the parameters of the 'trap' for the shop, as well as what you sell. "

Gary was skulking around the back-streets of the downtown district when he found himself walking down a narrow, twisting back-alley that he'd never come across before. It happened because his attention had wandered briefly - as had his eyes, following the spectacular, wiggling ass on the blonde, the short view of the bimbo claiming enough of his attention that he'd turned left instead of right, not noticing that it wasn't really a street, as such, but a sort of alley-way that had been used for deliveries, once upon a time.

"Where the fuck...?" Gary demanded the thin air around him. The he spotted the store at the end of the alley.

Glass-fronted, with big roll-down bars protecting the facade, the place fit right in with the atmosphere of the alleyway, the huge, garish neon sign lighting the place in a gaudy glow.

THE T&A SHOPPE

ADULT BOOKS, MAGAZINES AND NOVELTIES

We have something for every Fetish and Kink!!!

"Well, well, well..." Gary said, grinning to himself as he walked toward the sex shop, like a moth drawn to a flame...

Through the window, Jules watched the scruffy-looking youth approach, and sighed as he looked around the garish, sleazy interior that had replaced his comfortable old surrounding he'd enjoyed so much. Even worse was the new pace of his arrivals... this one would make the third one for today alone, and it wasn't even noon yet...

The Pursuit Of Happiness

By Gunslinger

The room was cramped and poorly lit, heated to over-warm temperatures by the crush of bodies that filled the room to something over capacity. Every cheap plastic and once-chromed steel chair bore a human form, and more lined the dingy walls or paced the worn linoleum. In defiance of the many signs dotting the rooms walls, many of the men and women who filled the labor hall were smoking, depleting their meager supply of cigarettes more out of boredom than any nicotine cravings. The plentiful, if rather second- rate, coffee dispensed from the urn in the corner near the door was also being consumed conspicuously by the murmuring crowd. In the coffee's case, however, it was out of equal parts necessity and boredom, both occasioned by the fact that most of the people had been crowding the room since six thirty in the morning.

One of the scarred and battered metal-and-frosted-plastic doors that lay at the far end of the room swung open, revealing a middle- aged man wearing a cheap and badly rumpled suit whose cut and quality proclaimed his civil-servant status as much as the bored, uncaring expression stamped on face gray and sagging from the years of ceaseless, and almost meaningless, toil in the public sector. With long-practiced perfection, the sallow-skinned man lifted his voice just as much as was necessary for it's stridently bored tones to carry over the constant drone of voices.

"Jean Roget...?" He called, staring unconcernedly at a fixed point in space about a foot over the throng's head. "Mr. Jean Roget...?" The response to the bored repetition of the name was immediate - and unmistakable.

The man who rose from his seat near the coffee machine and began walking towards the gray man immediately stood out from the men and women who surrounded him. Tall, with a toned, rangy physique, the man was not physically remarkable in the diverse mix of people who filled the room. His carriage and couture were another matter entirely.

He wore tan linen trousers with an equally light-weight white shirt, both not only clean, but well pressed. His shoes, hard leather rather than the work boots and sneakers that predominated the crowd's footwear, were shined to such a high gloss that it was only with some difficulty could anyone tell their underlying color was black. Draped over his left arm was his coat - an old, but obviously well-cared for buff-colored trench coat whose color perfectly matched the felt fedora carried in the same hand. His sandy-colored hair, though somewhat long and obviously in need of a barber's scissors, was nevertheless clean and carefully combed.

His bearing was as equally remarkable. In a room full of shoulders slouched under despair, disappointment or pain, his back and shoulders were straight, his stride long and firm. Though he was neither arrogant nor pushy, he somehow managed to maintain a small but well-defined clear space around him as he made his way across the entire length of the room, the sound of his hard-soled shoes ringing through the room.

As he walked, the dark eyes that flanked his hawk-like nose were fixed steadily on the civil servant - and, as he drew closer, there was no mistaking the carefully controlled anger stamped in those dark eyes and on the man's aquiline features.

"Mr. Roget...?" Somewhat taken aback by the man's evident anger, the civil servant nevertheless went into the same time-worn routine that was as much habit as anything. Holding out a hand, he continued speaking: "I'm David Garren. "

Roget ignored Garren's greeting completely, simply sweeping past him and into the office without a word. Startled, Garren turned and took a step into the office himself, pushing the door shut behind him.

"Mr. Roget, is there some sort of problem. ?" Garren asked, hesitantly, accustomed to having the upper hand, and not liking the unexpected reversal.

"It is not 'Gene Row-jet'." The angry man said, in the slow, distinct tones of a person speaking to a simpleton. "It is pronounced 'Zhawn Ro-zhay'. It is French. If you are completely incapable of pronouncing it in the French manner, I would - as a last resort - accepted the bastardized English version of 'John Rojay'. if that is the best you can manage."

Garren's face darkened, but he managed to keep a firm grip on his temper as he made his way to the desk and sat down. The desk, a battered metal monster identical to a thousand others produced by the inmates of the local correctional system, was neither grand nor new, yet Garren felt decidedly better - decidedly more 'in charge' - sitting down behind it's green felt covered expanse.

"I apologize if I mispronounced your name, Mr. Roget." Garren said in determinedly even tones. Trying to get the meeting back onto a less adversarial footing, he stated what seemed to be the obvious: "Judging from both your name and your accent, I assume you hail from New Orleans."

"Lafayette, Louisiana - which is only about two hundred miles distant from New Orleans." Roget said, pronouncing it 'Nuh'awlens'. ". and, to answer your earlier inquiry: You are damned right their is a problem, sir!"

"Oh. ?" Garren asked, tightly, not trusting himself with anything more then the monosyllabic response.

"I have been waiting hear since six-thirty in the morning, sir!" Roget said, in indignation. "I understood that this agency worked on a 'first come, first served' basis, and so I took great pains to be the first person in the door. What, may I ask, is the result of my diligent foresight and punctuality? Am I the first person this agency placed for employ? No, sir, I am not! Instead, I am forced to sit idly by, twiddling my thumbs as it were, while this government run labor agency handles a bunch of - and forgive my candor, sir, but I shall call a spade a spade - a bunch of women and Negroes! It is quite obvious, sir, that these... people.. have already received every available clerical and professional position available here today. I did not, I repeat, not, move to Chicago to work at a menial job like some common darkie field-hand, sir!"

Garren's face had pinched in on itself in his effort not to respond to Roget's shouted 'accusation' in kind. When, after a long pause, he finally did speak, his voice was tight and barely above a whisper.

"I do not now how things are done down in 'Lafayette, Louisiana', Mr. Roget, but here in the great state of Illinois, it is governmental policy to give certain positions to members of a visible minority - specifically so, I might add, that us 'damn Yankees' will never develop the idea that the 'common field-and' be assumed to be any given race." Leaning forward over the desk, Garren planted his knuckles on the surface and glared at Roget. "As for yourself, 'sir' - I don't much care for you, or your views. Nevertheless, you are currently a resident in the Greater Chicago area, and so I will do my job. If you will sit down, I will discuss with you what job opening we do have available to you - and, yes, they are, indeed, all 'manual labor' jobs."

"Not even a hint of self-disgust at the manifest unfairness of the system you propagate!" Roget said, angrily. "You, sir, are coming dangerously close to sounding like.. like some damned nigger lover!"

Garren stood bolt upright with such suddenness that the wheeled chair just behind his knees slammed back against the wall. "The State of Illinois might have to provide a employment service for you, Mister Row-jet - but that does not mean I have to be the one to provide it." David Peter Garren thundered in righteous anger. "Out! I want you out of my office, you racist son-of-a-bitch, and I want you out... right... this... second!"

Roget stood, stock still, his mouth working in anger...

...and then, as Garren began to take sharp, angry steps from out behind the desk, Jean-Baptiste Roget gathered up what tattered fragments of dignity he could manage, turned sharply...

* * * * *

"...tucked his tail between his legs, and fled like all the Demons of Hell where behind him." Garren finished recounting the day's tribulations and triumphs, with a rueful chuckle. Head bent, he was working on the highly-detailed scale village that surrounded and subsumed his sprawling model train tracks - his method of dealing with the stress and boredom of his job, no matter how 'juvenile' his wife might occasional mark it to be.

Not hearing a response from the small circle of light that marked his wife's own 'hobby spot' in their bungalow's spacious finished basement, David carefully finished placing the tiny model car on 'Main Street' and glanced up towards his wife's craft area.

She was sitting stock-still in her comfortable leather armchair, a half-finished wicker something-or-other clutched in one dainty hand as she stared at him in consternation.

"Honey ?" Garren asked, frowning at the unexpected reaction to his habitual nightly list of the day's events.

"Oh, dear " His wife said, in a ostensibly vexed tone of voice. "Do you mean to tell my that, all these years, I've been living with a nigger lover?"

Garren blinked - then shoved himself away from his model train set and began stalking towards his wife, his hands outstretched in front of him and flexing menacingly.

"Why, you..." Garren growled in what was supposed to be a menacing tone, his face twitching and working...

...and Belinda Garren broke out in laughter, her pearly white teeth a bright contract to the rich, chocolate color of her skin.

Joining in with his wife's laughter, David dropped the threatening act and came to sit on the arm of her chair, sliding one hand behind her back and gently cuddling her against his side.

"I guess our Mister Roget's charge was, technically true..." David said in a soft voice, burying his face in his wife's wealth of silky black curls. "I do, indeed, love you."

"Oh, my mama warned me about you velvet-tongued honkies..." Belinda said in a falsetto version of her usual rich contralto. Slowly - and suggestively - she slid on hand over his leg, working it steadily upwards. "Mama always said you boys could talk a good little girl like myself straight out of my panties and right into your sinful, sinful bed..."

"Mmm..." David moaned softly, eyes closed, as he smiled into his wife's vibrant mane. "Well, I certainly wouldn't want to contradict Mama Carlisle. "

"A Jug of Wine, a Loaf of Bread - and Thou. '" Belinda quoted, softly - a quote that, ever since a certain spring day of their youth, held a very special meaning for both of them.

He smiled, warmly at her - then, muffled a curse and winced.

"We finished off the last of the wine on Saturday when Mark and Tammy came over." David pointed out.

"That's all right, honey... The wine, strictly speaking, isn't necessary - neither is the bread for that matter " Belinda pointed out, suggestively.

"No, no - only the best for my beloved." David said, giving her a quick peck on the cheek. "Twenty minutes - I'll be back in twenty minutes, and I expect to find you, in the bedroom, waiting. "

"Where else would I be. ?" She asked, with a seductive smile, as she 'posed' slightly. Still smiling she watched her husband rush up the stairs. A moment later, she heard the front door slam, followed momentarily by the flash of lights through the basement window as he backed out of the garage...

...which meant that he was well departed on the hastily improvised errand she'd send him on to gain enough time to perform a little task of her own.

With quick, graceful movements, Belinda knelt down in front of her 'crafts' chest and hurriedly began extracting some items that he trusting husband believed were craft supplies.

Which, in fact, they were - but for *witch*craft...

"If our Mister Jean Roget insists on a job that they're only giving to 'nigger chicks'..." Belinda whispered softly as she began lighting the candles. "...then I guess I'll just have to see what I can do to help..."

* * * * * "Merde..."

The muffled curse barely coherent through the wide yawn that accompanied it, it barely carried past the edge of the clean, if faded, bed covers that swaddled and surrounded the figure sprawled on the bed.

With the slow, deliberate movements of the very ill - or very hung-over - the figure on the bed slowly and methodically wormed out of the entangling covers. The groping hands barely managed to differentiate between the fabric of the old-fashioned 'nightshirt' and the hotel's fresh-laundered sheets, but finally the half-awake individual managed the task.

Moaning softly, eyes barely open, Jean staggered towards the bathroom, deeply regretting the quantities of alcohol he'd drank at the hotel bar before staggering off to bed. Besides the hangover, the other inevitable result of his binge had been the same over-full bladder that had awoken him...

...more or less.

As if sleep walking, Jean slowly made it across the small room, relying more on the hand he dragged lightly against the wall for guidance than from the faint, orange-tinted light that seeped in through the shades.

Reaching the bathroom, Jean fumbled for the light-switch and flipped it on, then staggered over to the toilet. Heavy-lidded eyes still at less than half-mast, Jean fumbled at the hem of his old-fashioned sleep-wear reaching inside to extract his 'unit'...

It took several long minutes for him to realize that it was taking several long minutes for him to find something. Except, in this case, he wasn't finding it.

Blinking blearily, Jean lowered his head to look downward...

...and for several seconds simply stared at the slender, toned arm that disappeared under the hem of his nightshirt.

Slowly, Jean extracted the arm, and a similarly slender, dainty appendage appeared at its end, the long, oval nails on the end of each finger explaining the odd scratching sensation the 'search' had been producing.

Both hand and arm were not only slender - but sheathed in a skin that was a rich, dark shade of lightly red-tinged brown, a cinnamon- chocolate shade that, for incomprehensible reasons, was one of the many skin-tones people referred to as 'black'.

Still half asleep, Jean simply stared at the offending arm for a long, disbelieving moment...

...until his eyes were drawn to his nightshirt. Except it wasn't his nightshirt.

His nightshirt was an old-fashioned style, blue-and-white striped nightshirt that buttoned down the front.

This nightshirt... wasn't a nightshirt at all, but a 'nightgown', made of white silk, and trimmed at the neck with lace.

A lace-trimmed neckline that displayed quite a delightful amount of firm, round, dark flesh that formed a tantalizing display of cleavage. "No..." Jean muttered, slowly shaking his head in disbelief...

...except the denial came out in warm, feminine tones, and the movement of his head caused long, silky hair to brush over his shoulders.

Spinning around, Jean stared at the mirror over the sink.

Full, lovely lips gaped on the slender, somewhat pointed jaw that open in shock. Lovely, dark 'doe eyes' bulged in disbelief under long, fine lashes. A full wealth of dark auburn waves, mussed by sleep, framed the heart-shaped, fine-boned face that gaped back at him from the mirror, atop a slender, swan-like neck that lead down to that delightful display of feminine attributes.

'Looks to be a double-D cup...' Was the last, semi-coherent thought that zoomed across her mind as she stared in shock at the stunningly lovely black woman she'd become...

...and then she did what seemed the most reasonable thing conceivable, under the circumstances: She fainted dead away.

* * * * *

Cold tile pressing against the flesh of back and legs. Somewhat warmer air flowing over the front.

Bright, harsh light from somewhere above.

The smell of antiseptic cleaner, overlaying the faint - but ever-present - odor of human waste.

Consciousness returned slowly to the befogged mind, as if knowing something terrible awaited, out there in the waking world. Slowly, the dark veil parted, and the conscious, thinking mind that formed all that was - and would be - of the person who'd grown up as Jean-Claude Roget slowly returned to the world.

Her eyes opened.

For several minutes, she simply continued to lay on the cold, tile floor of the bathroom, mind moving in sluggish circles as she simply absorbed the sensations of her environment - and herself.

The quality and texture of the light entering the frosted-glass window over the chipped and faded tub indicated that several hours had passed, dawn having arrived within the past hour or so.

That time lapse explained the aches and twinges from a body in an awkward position on a hard, unforgiving surface - but those unpleasant physical sensations were subsumed in the other sensations she felt, ones that were emotionally and psychologically uncomfortable, rather than physical:

The flow of air over smooth legs, , failing to stir leg-hairs that no longer existed.

The silky fabric bunched over her hips, allowing the soft caress of the air over a crotch that simply felt.. different. Neither empty nor 'damaged', but simply... different, in a hundred-and-one ways that she could never describe, yet was undeniable aware of.

The feel of silky-smooth fabric brushing over the firm mounds and sensitive, chill-engorged nipples, softly brushing across the firmly soft flesh with every breath she took - breaths that, themselves, felt different, thanks to a slimmer chest and finer waist, changing the shape and volume of the lungs within.

A myriad of other sensations attested to the same fact. The same inexplicable, unbelievable, yet inescapable fact: She was a woman.

Slowly, with unsteady motions that had nothing to do with the alcohol consumed the night before, the new woman rose from the floor,

,holding onto the edge of the sink for support that was equal parts physical and emotional. Very slowly - almost unwillingly - she turned her head and looked at the mirror above the sink.

After a long, hard look, she turned her face away, tears trickling down the slopes of her high, well-defined new cheeks. "How...?" She asked the empty air.

There was no answer forthcoming, nor was there one for the more important question, the one she dared not utter: Why? She dared not utter it... because she was terribly afraid the answer might come, and in doing so, confirm her own worst fears. Still moving like some sort of recently re-animated zombie, the new woman turned and walked out of the bathroom...

...only to stop dead with a gasp of surprise.

Considering what had happened to her body, what she saw now should have been, at best, a second-rate surprise - after all, any force that completely and utterly transform her physical form would have no problem altering all her possessions, as well.

Despite that, the sight of the undeniably feminine apparel filling the now-matched luggage sitting on the stand near the bed hit the new woman like a physical blow. Whereas her own transformation might have been sheer insanity on her part, even insane inspiration wouldn't have allowed her to hallucinate all the feminine items she now saw, many of which she didn't even have a name for. With her mouth hanging open in shock, she slowly turned her head to stare at the dresser, whose previously pristine surface was now littered with the typical feminine clutter of make-up, hair-care products, and the more esoteric items women seemed to need near them at all times, right down to the nearly-inevitable pack of Kleenex.

Stumbling, she made her way over to where the well-worn leather purse sat on the nightstand, replacing the well-worn leather wallet that had been placed there the night before.

Long-nailed fingers trembling, she opened the purse - and, feeling oddly like a sneak-thief at rummaging through the collection of feminine personal effects that lay inside - extracted the leather wallet inside and flipped it open.

From the plastic-sheathed pouch at the one side of the change-purse section, her new face stared back from the driver's license that lay inside.

It was still a Louisiana driver's license - but that was the only thing this new identification had in common with her old one.

The license listed the holder as being one 'Shauna Rogers', aged twenty-one - a reduced age further confirmed by the Louisiana birth certificate she found in the wallet, which indicated that her new middle name was apparently 'Louise'.

As bad as finding her new identification was, it was somehow worse to find a matching set of 'wallet clutter' - to wit:

One credit card, issued by the Louisiana Bank of Commerce to S. Rogers, two ATM cards, a Social insurance card, two different video rental cards, and a library card.

All in 'her' name.

It was almost too perfect. If, somehow, this impossible transformation had 'merely' been some sort of bizarre, elaborate, incredibly intricate 'conspiracy', involving everything from full sexual reassignment surgery and extensive plastic surgery to forged documents,

,then there would have been some sort of 'lead' to chase down, some way to attempt, if not reversal, at least retribution...

...yet, from every bit of evidence laid out for her to see, this had been done by something considerably more powerful than any mundane agency. Every tiny detail had been matched up, right down to the fact that her blood-type, once a quite rare Wassermann Positive, had now become a more common O Negative.

Everything in the room matched the new gender and race she'd become.

To anybody who'd known the male her, the fact that 'Shauna' was finding the part about being black more upsetting than the part of being female wouldn't particularly surprised them - nor would the relative 'calm' with which she was dealing with the situation.

The truth was, she wasn't calm at all. Like a duck, which might be floating placidly on the surface while its little legs worked frantically, unseen below, her veneer of calmness covered a gibbering madness that lurked just below her conscious mind, held firmly in place through sheer force of will.

Male or female, black or white, she'd never been one to simply surrender to circumstance. She was still functioning in a reasonably coherent manner - because failing to do so would have been too much like surrendering.

Though horrified and shocked by what had happened, she was still alive, apparently in good health, and still capable of rational thought. That was why she wasn't reduced to complete incoherence by having been transformed into a woman.

A black woman, however...

As far as she was concerned, she was no longer quite human.

It bothered her to apply the term 'sub-human' to herself, of course - but she was now black, wasn't she? Blacks weren't really like white people, everybody knew that - it was genetic - and she now had the complete genetic make-up of 'sub-human', which made her just that. A 'thing', rather than a person...

Oddly enough, though, she didn't feel sub-human. She'd always 'charitably' assumed that black people pushed for equal status because they truly didn't realize they weren't fully human - after all, , they were born the way they were, and didn't have anything to compare it too, and with their lesser intellects, ,wouldn't see the obvious differences. Their so-called culture - gained only after exposure to true humans, of course - was almost literally a case of 'monkey see, monkey do'...

Yet, she'd been a true human not to long ago, and yet she didn't see any obvious difference in her mind set. Could that possibly mean...?

No. No, she wouldn't even consider that. Not necessarily because it would have meant that she'd been dead wrong all her life, but because it was obviously what her unknown opposition wanted her to think - and so, she'd refuse to even consider it.

"Stop it!" She told herself, aloud, shocked anew by the warm, feminine tones of her new voice. All these academic questions could wait until after she'd worked out a 'plan of attack' for dealing with the situation. Though short on some food stocks, she could nevertheless hole up here until she figured out a way of living her new life that would be as bearable as possible, and...

A knocking on the door interrupted her train of thought. Her mind, already teetering close to the edge of panic, nearly went of it's rail at the unexpected noise, causing her to emit a breathless shriek that was kept from being a full-blown scream only by virtue of the fact she'd been breathing in when the knock came, rather than out.

"Who is it!" She called - just barely below the threshold where it would have been called 'hysterical'. "It's the manager, Miss Rogers." A voice called through the door...

...and, even at the edge of panic, the tone of voice struck her like a load of bricks.

It was that strange, honey-toned voice people used when they wanted to sound apologetic - but when they were, in fact, completely unapologetic.

"What is it!" She called, grabbing a bathrobe (now a silky number, instead of the sensible terry-cloth one she'd owned as a man) as she neared the door.

"Miss, you still haven't paid for another night, and your credit card report says you're maxed out. You're going to have to leave, Miss Rogers."

She stopped, hand flying to her mouth as her eyes widened in horror at the thought of facing the world in this horrible - and horribly 'attractive' - new sub-human form.

"No!" She called, her voice having edged over the line into full hysterics. "No, I can't leave! I have nowhere to go. I can't..."

The manager's voice was remorseless: "Miss Rogers, ,if you're not out of the room in twenty minutes, I'm having you arrested." Two thoughts scampered across the new woman's mind at the threat.

The first was: 'If I was still a white man, this wouldn't be happening...'

Which was followed by the connected-yet-off-topic thought: 'I don't believe this timing...'

* * * * *

Belinda Garren's forehead was bathed in sweat.

Part of it came from effort. What she was doing wasn't easy, especially since she was actually doing three separate things at once.

Then other part of the sweat beading her forehead was from the sheer effort it took not to withdraw her own mind from the cesspool Roget/Rogers called a mind.

Naked, in her attic, Belinda was sitting crossed-legged in front of a scrying bowl, a large, shallow pewter dish filled with water, which reflected whatever she wanted to see - at this moment, it was the manager of the hotel the new woman was in. With Belinda reading the mind of the new woman, she was 'altering' events to force Shauna Rogers to start living her new life.

It was terribly draining, and Belinda would only be able to fiddle with the new woman's life for another couple of hours - but that should be enough to irrevocably set up Shauna's new life. After that, she'd simply 'peek in' on her, from time to time, to make sure things were going correctly.

In the scrying bowl, the manager had just extracted a promise from Shauna that's she'd vacate the premises within the time limit, and was turning to walk away...

* * * * *

She still dreaded the thought of leaving the anonymous safety of her hotel room - but having to walk the streets in her new form was considerably less horrifying than spending time in jail as a black woman.

Hurriedly, the new woman began to dig through 'her' clothes, looking for something to wear...

...and was appalled to find that 'Shauna Rogers' apparently didn't care for unisex clothing.

Dresses. Skirts. Blouses - not shirts, blouses! Lacy undergarments, nylons, four pairs of shoes with heels ranging in height from 3½ inches to 5½ inches - except for the single pair of black patent leather platforms with seven inch heels...

...and all heels were stiletto. Not a shaped, flared, or stacked heel in sight.

Shauna apparently liked 'girlie' clothes - completely impractical clothes, in other words, from the lacy black 36DD bra that lacked even underwire support, to it's matching French-cut panties, to the cotton/spandex 'sweetheart' dress with it's scalloped, lace-trimmed neckline and...

...and...

...and "Why the hell do I know what these things are called!"

Stunned, she slowly took another long, ,slow look around the room, shocked to realize that she could not only put a name to each and every item in the room - but that she knew exactly how to use it.

The short, stunned pause ended - simply because she had no time for shock. She had to get dressed and get out of the hotel before she ended up getting arrested.

Quickly picking out what she considered the 'least' feminine apparel - which wasn't an easy task - she quickly doffed the robe and nightshirt and began to dress.

First, she pulled on a pair of 'simple' panties - that is, a standard pair of white panty briefs. Even though the simple underwear was pretty 'basic', she still felt a shiver of disgust at voluntarily pulling on feminine undergarments...

...and, worse, a shiver of pleasure - because the soft cotton fabric not only felt wonderful as it slid across the smooth, supple surface of her long, slender legs, but it felt especially nice when she settled it tight over her slender-yet-feminine hips, the material all-but- caressing her firm, full buttocks and her strangely empty-but-not-empty crotch.

She simply refused to consider anything as decidedly feminine as a brassiere.

Besides - her DD-cup breasts were remarkably firm - a pair of gorgeous, dome-like breasts thrust proudly from her chest like twin halved melons. Not that any melon was as softly firm as delectably enticing as her full, wonderful breasts, ,each one tipped by a chocolate aureole whose large nipple had become fully engorged as she stood, head tilted slightly back, her long-nailed fingers lightly tracing the smooth, taut flesh of her fantastic breasts. Eyes heavy-lidded and half-closed, Shauna ran her tongue over her lips as her right hand abandoned her breast in favor of tracing down her firm, flat stomach and down under the waist band of her panties.

Murmuring softly to herself, , she let her eyes close the rest of the way as her palm began to rub back and forth across her mound, her other hand busy fondling her firm breast, teasing at the nipple as she thought how wonderful it would feel to have a man's larger, stronger hand doing that duty, and what the hell was she doing!

Horrified, she yanked her hands away from her body, dark eyes wide at the horrifying, disgusting - and disgustingly enjoyable - realization that, along with all the other changes that had been thrust upon her...

...she'd also been given a completely normal, 'heterosexual' female sex-drive.

She concentrated on thrusting aside those terrible, disgusting thoughts that had flooded her mind, the terribly, horrifyingly enticing thoughts - and, in a small corner of her mind, found herself grateful for some of the 'feminine skills' she'd been given, as her body finished the job of dressing and packing almost without conscious supervision, leaving her the rest of her conscious mind to dwell on one thing, and one thing alone: Baseball.

The age-old 'safe' line of thought, and she followed it steadily, dredging up every detail, statistic and memory of that game that she possibly could, while her hands were busy doing their work.

Well shy of the time limit, Shauna realized she was packed and ready to go, so she hurriedly grabbed her one suitcase, slung her purse over her shoulder, and hurried out of the hotel room.

She walked quickly, yet gracefully, the hem of her skirt rubbing lightly across her thighs as she ankled her way out of the hotel and onto the street atop her slender heels, enjoying the feel of the cool, crisp morning air moving over her nylon-clad legs, the gentle bounce and sway of her unrestrained breasts under the sheer black silk 'v-neck' blouse she wore. As the morning sun caressed her hair and body, , she glanced furtively about, feeling like some sort of tranny freak as she swayed pertly down the sidewalk.

Passing a group of men on the sidewalk, she wondered if somehow they could tell that she was 'really' a man in the strangest sort of drag. Glancing at their faces for any sign of disgust or revulsion, she nervously licked her full, gloss-coated lips as she lifted her chest out a little higher and tossed her hair lightly back over one shoulder, careful not to catch the dangling earring with her nail.

Front the men's reaction, she doubted they knew her true nature. Grateful for that, she gave the cute one a last, lingering smile before continuing on, with just a little added 'oomph' in the sway of her hips.

With no firm destination in mind, she continued aimlessly wandering, feeling like some sort of sick pervert as she pertly swayed down the sidewalk, horrified and disgusted to have to appear in public in this form. Still trying to cope with her new life, she turned the corner of a random street and began to head southward down the sidewalk, pausing only long enough to check on her hastily-applied make-up in the mirror-like surface of a display window and..

"Holy shit!"

The startled remark drew the stares of a few morning pedestrians, and Shuana quickly began to walk again, hoping the onlookers would loose interest as she left their immediate line-of-sight.

As she walked ,however, her mind spun in useless circles, digesting what she'd seen in the mirror. She was wearing make-up.

Jewelry.

A figure-flattering, temperature-appropriate outfit completely unlike the mismatched 'ensemble' she'd been planning to wear. "Oh, no..." She moaned to herself, eyes widening under their now mascara-clad lashes as she realized the implications of this: She was an 'unconscious woman'.

Whenever she wasn't consciously directing her every move, she'd go into a sort of 'automatic' mode - one that fit 'Shauna Rogers' to a 'T'.

It wasn't that she was being brainwashed or mind-controlled or anything. In fact, if she'd thought about it, it would have been obvious. Everybody had a million 'habits', big, small, good and bad. More than anything, it was these habits that controlled what you did - or,

,rather, how you did them...

...like walking.

She was - and had been - walking with an undeniably feminine stride in the five-and-a-half inch heels she was wearing. It was apparently her 'normal' stride, the one that she used without thinking about it - but she didn't have to use it. If she wanted to, she could 'waste' the energy it took to actually concentrate on walking, much the way you'd have to consciously control your steps if you were walking on a slippery surface.

It was something she would have much preferred...

...except that her conscious mind had no idea how to walk in high-heeled shoes.

She paused, ,seriously considering stopping, opening her suitcase, and digging out the shortest-heeled shoes, the one she'd planned to wear in the first place. However, she'd still have to let the 'unconscious' Shauna control her stride in the lower heels, so that she didn't fumble and grope along like a girl in her first pair of heels.

Emotionally, she would have preferred that - a display of obvious incompetence in heels would have made her feel better right now. However, it would have slowed her down, and she was already late for work...

Work?

Frowning, Shauna tilted her head, wondering why that thought had popped into her head - or, for that matter, why her body had seemed to be heading somewhere definitive while her mind had been so sure she had nowhere to go. It was obvious, somehow, that her body thought she had a job to be going to, but her conscious mind had no clue...

Blinking, Shauna came up with an idea.

Take a quick breath, she tried to clear her mind. Once her whirling mind was as settled as it would get, she simply began to speak: "I work at..." and with no conscious thought at all, she heard herself going on with: "...231 East Wabash, as a secretary for the Milland Insurance Company."

A secretary? She was a secretary...?

Well, on reflection, it beat the hell out of construction work... especially with her new body. After all, heavy lifting might break a nail or something.

Hideously aware of the addendum her mind had insisted on tacking on to the end of that thought, Shuana picked up her pace, hurrying off in a body she didn't want, towards a job she didn't want.

** * *

"Miss Rogers, we don't tolerate tardiness."

Shauna stared at the strange man in shock. Coming into the lobby of the insurance company, she'd found the man practically waiting in ambush, and now he was almost glaring at her.

"This is only your second day - and you feel it acceptable to come in to work ten minutes late." The man huffed. "...and what's that for? We don't allow personal belongings to be stored on company property, Miss Rogers."

He pointed to her suitcase, eyes narrowing with the look of a falcon who'd spotted his prey.

"I'm sorry..." She said - then, letting her mind slip into 'neutral', found herself supplying the name: "...Mr. Williams." She 'took over' again. "There was a problem with my hotel room."

"That's no excuse, Miss Rogers." Williams huffed. "I expect you'll be on time from now on?"

It took every inch of willpower she had not to lash out at her new boss. This was patently unfair - but what, really, could she do about it?

She could get herself fired, that's what - and as much as she wasn't looking forward to a secretarial position, she obviously needed the money - 'Shauna Rogers' was every bit as broke as 'Jean Roget' had been.

"Yes sir. I'm sorry sir." She finally managed, forcing a lid on her anger. "that's better..." William's said, almost gloating over her servile position...

...when another low-level employee came in the door, and Williams and him exchanged cordial greetings... while sharing a commiserating look that obviously referred to her.

She kept her mouth shut. After all, didn't she deserve the almost invisible level of abuse Williams was heaping on her? She was a poor employee - late, carrying unwanted luggage...

...and a sub-human black woman.

The thought that she'd simply have to accept this sort of treatment grated on her. Sure, she was a black woman, and therefore these superior white men had a right to act this way around her, like she was an object instead of a person - but she wasn't 'really' a black woman, or at least she hadn't been born one, and so she'd never learned to accept the treatment due her. Her white male background found this all extremely frustrating, not to mention infuriating. After all, what did it matter what body she was in, when her 'soul' was as human as they were, just like any other human being...

...but wouldn't that mean that 'naturally' black people were...?

'No, stop it.' She admonished herself. that was obviously 'Unconscious Shuana' trying to sway her true vision of reality with some sort of 'black equality' propaganda/perversity. Just because a black person might feel that way, might see themselves that way, might believe that they were a white person's equal with every fiber of their being simply meant...

Well, she wasn't sure what it meant. But she wouldn't entertain the idea that, as Jean Roget, she'd somehow been wrong.

After a few more barely-managed servile answers to Mr. Williams, she managed to get down to work. Stuffing the suitcase out of sight under the desk, she lowered herself gratefully onto the chair, feeling horribly exposed by all the windows the two-story lobby of the office boasted. Kicking off her shoes, she made herself as comfortable as possible, realizing with a start that the reason she'd been given this job at all was as an 'affirmative action' showcase, easily seen by anybody so much as passing by the office...

"Don't mind him." A voice said near her shoulder. With a muffled shriek, Shaun spun around, eyes wide.

"Oh - sorry..." the huge black man said, heavily muscled arms coming up in an apologetic gesture as he stepped back. "Didn't mean to startle you..."

Shauna didn't answer.

She was busy wrestling with an internal dichotomy.

A tall, broad shouldered, hugely-muscled black man with a shaved head and goatee should have scared the living daylights out of her. That was, it would have scared Jean Roget, who would have struggled not to show fear in the face of the prototypical 'big scary black man' - and so defenseless little 'Shauna Rogers' should have screamed and fainted...

...except she wasn't - she was feeling reassured...

...and aroused.

She suddenly became aware of several things.

The first - but least - was that she was smiling up at him.

She had also become incredibly aware of her own breasts, their rise and fall under the silk prison that rode so pleasantly over her suddenly erect nipples.

She was also very aware of damp heat that seemed to start in her stomach and spread outwards, as if she'd taken a slug of Southern Comfort - but it was much warmer, much more insidiously pleasant than drinking...

She tried to at least force the smile for her full lips - but it wasn't easy, since she was feeling as giddy as if she were a schoolgirl again...

Wait a second - what did she mean again?

She'd never been a schoolgirl. She'd been a school boy. A very serious, angry young man....

...too aware of his scrawny build...

...unable to build up his own self-image, and so always looking for ways to bring other people down...

What?!

No, that was 'Shauna Rogers' impression of 'Jean Roget'. It wasn't true. Sure, he'd been superior to all those dumb, swaggering jocks/handsome, athletic men and those bitches/poor, self-conscious girls too aware of being on the edge of womanhood and those nerds/young men striving to achieve intellectual acclaim in lieu of popularity and of course, far better than those niggers/people just like me...

"Stop it...!"

It was only by the stunned look on the big, handsome black man's face that Shauna became aware of how she must look, hunched over with her hands clasping the sides of her head, screaming at her own, traitorous mind to stop viewing all her memories through it's own, traitorous preconceptions.

"Are you... okay...?" The man asked, real concern in his head.

"I... I'm having a bad day..." Shauna said, the understatement of the year. "Kicked out of my hotel room, late for work - and a terrible migraine, to boot."

Damn it - she was smiling at him again! Just because he was obviously kind and concerned, in addition to being incredibly handsome, built, and endowed...

Horried, she tore his eyes from his crotch - which, since she was sitting and he was standing, had been at eye-level anyway. Pretending not to notice any of this, the man held out a hand: "By the way - I'm Bubba. Bubba Wilson."

"Bubba...?" Shauna asked, after giving her new name.

He blushed. "Actually, my name's Buford Beauregard Wilson - but I guess I look like a 'Bubba' or something, because that's what everybody calls me. It annoyed me, at first - but you get used to it."

"I see." She said, noncommittally. "Well, I really should get to work.." "Right." He said, backing away. "I guess I'll see you 'round, then. Bye." "Goodbye... Buford." She called - and wondered why she'd done that...

...and hoping that the startled - but very pleased - smile that Buford gave her in response hadn't been the reason. She was afraid it had been, though...

Trying to get Buford out of her mind, Shauna turned her attention to her work.

Shauna wanted to scream.

She wanted to cry.

She wanted to curl up on the floor and die.

Never before in her life had she ever felt so utterly humiliated, frustrated and despairing, much less all at the same time - and that included both her 'real' life and her 'remembered' life, for that matter.

The way people had looked at her as they'd come through the lobby - some with barely-hidden disgust, others with equally as obvious lust. Some had even tried to hit on her, leering at the horrible female figure she was forced to wear in this accursed situation.

Though a lowly menial task, degrading and mindless, she'd actually concentrated on the work, such as it was, because she needed the money - but, the way people had behaved around her...

Couldn't she see she was just trying to do her job? She, of course, hadn't wanted to wear the outfit she now was, but even if she had chosen it 'consciously', it didn't mean she wanted men to find her attractive in it. It was simply appropriate business wear...

...except part of her firmly believed that being leered at and hit upon and degraded was perfectly all right for a 'nigger bitch' like herself, so she shouldn't be feeling this way.

She was, though. She couldn't help it. She felt terrible... "Hey, Shauna - how'd your day go...?"

Shauna spun in her chair to watch as Buford walked over, having changed into his street clothes - and, at the sight of him, she became horrifically aware of her own femininity - and what it could be 'used for' with a man - at the sight of the broad shouldered man in his tight jeans and T-shirt.

"terrible..." She said...

...and was disgusted and horrified to find herself desperately fighting back tears at the thought of her day. She was not going to do something as weak and womanish as cry. She refused to...

"Oh, I'm sorry to hear that..." Buford said in obvious concern. "Hey, I usually go have a coupla beers to unwind after the day. You wanna come along? I'm buying...?"

She didn't want to spend any unnecessary time with this.. man. Especially not with the disgustingly feminine emotions he raised...

..but she was flat broke, and a drink - or two - was exactly what she needed...

"Oh...kay.." She agreed, slowly. Logging off her computer, she hesitantly rose, grabbed her bag, and let Buford pace her as they headed for the door. The stepped out into the fading afternoon sun...

...and Buford slapped his forehead and muttered a curse as three other people in a car started waving and shouting at him. Shauna blinked, realizing with a start that she hadn't automatically labeled the two women and the man in the car 'niggers'...

"I forgot..." Buford apologized sincerely, turning to face her. "Jerry and Lucinda are getting married in Vegas tonight. Booked a couple of hotel rooms and even saved up enough for a private plane."

"Sounds like something big - how'd you forget something like that...?" Shauna asked, without thinking, making small talk as she worried over the 'change' in thought process she seemed to be suffering.

The myth that black people didn't blush was just that - a myth. Even Buford's dark skin didn't hide the purplish cast it took on. "I was thinkin' about you, I guess..." He mumbled.

"Oh..." Was the best Shauna could come up with, struggling to deal with the unwanted rush of pleasure that emerged at hearing that.

"Hey, Bubba, who's your friend...?" The man said, as he and the two woman walked over from the car. He shot a look at the suitcase she was holding. "Hey, glad you can come, but Bubba shoulda told you it's just a one-nighter - we'll be back tomorrow..."

"Oh - This is Shauna." Buford introduced her. "She wasn't planning, I mean.. Never mind, I'll explain later. Shauna, this tall drink of water is Jerry, and the girl he's holding is his fiancée Lucinda. The lady with the bad dye job is the bridesmaid, Jessica."

"You shut up, Bubba - 'least I got hair..." Jessica said with a laugh, slapping Bubba's arm. "Hey, Shauna, we got plenty of room if you wanna come along. You can either share my room.. or Bubba's..."

"Oh, ,I'm sure she doesn't.." Buford said, showing that charming blush again...

'...did I just call something about this man 'charming'...?' She thought to herself, as she prepared to refuse...

...and then she remembered that she didn't have anyplace to go 'home' to. Suddenly, a hotel room with Jessica seemed like a heaven-sent gift. "Yeah - I'd like to come..." She said, ,hesitantly.

"Great! The more, the merrier!" Jerry said. "It'll be a blast - we even splurged to have the Jet fully stocked. The wedding's a midnight, so we'll be able to get a good three hours of gambling in before..."

Barely listening, trying not to notice Buford's warm presence at her side, Shauna nodded in all the right places as she followed the still-talking Jerry to the car.

* * * * "Shauna...?"

Blinking, she turned away from trying to focus on her cards, and stared up at the swirling face of the delectable black hunk standing in front of her.

"Hey, Buford..." She said, smiling - then frowned. "Is it okay if I think you're a real hunk, stud?" "Fine by me..." Buford said with a lopsided smile, swaying slightly from side to side. "Why?"

Shauna frowned, trying to put it into words. "Dunno. Just thought it might be wrong for some reason. Somethin' 'bout telling you how hot you are bothered me for some reason..."

"Maybe it's 'cause you're drunk..." Buford suggested.

She waved a hand dismissively, not even noticing the whisky that sloshed out of the glass she didn't remember she was holding. "Hell, Buford, I'm not as drunk as you think I am. I have more'n this all the time an' I'm fine."

Which was true - except that it didn't take into account her decreased mass and lowered tolerance to alcohol.

Royally drunk and blissfully unaware of the fact, Shauna gathered up her winnings from the black-jack table. Already fairly sloshed when she'd gotten here, she'd never the less managed to win on the first hand, with a chip Buford had given her from his small pile - and, as she'd kept playing, she'd kept drinking. Her pile of chips had gone up and down - but her alcohol level had only climbed.

"C'mon, Larry and Jucinda are getting married now.." Bubba said, trying to help her...

..which, considering he was pretty well spliffed as well, made for an amusing sight for the rest of the casino's patrons as the drunk couple staggered and swayed their way to the cashiers cages as if battling a force ten storm.

With her few hundred in winning in hand, Shauna concentrated following Buford, her eyes hungrily taking in his muscular form as the alcohol continued to blunt the 'logical' side of her mind - the one that would have given her a very long list of reasons why she shouldn't be admiring Buford's broad figure.

Staggering into the 'quickie' chapel across from the casino, they were met by the employee near the door.

"Customers or guests...?" He asked, brightly. "If you're customers, I've got great news - we've got a cancellation, and we can give you a one-quarter-off discount on the slot following the next wedding."

Buford frowned trying to follow the meaning of the man's cheerful words.

"Sound's like a hell'f a deal.." Shauna slurred, with a giggle. "Hey, han'some - wanna get married...?" "To who...?" Buford asked, making her laugh.

"To me, shilly..."

"Oh, yeah... sure.." Buford agreed, grinning dumbly.

"S'on me.." Shauna said, concentrating on counting out the bills crumpled in one clenched fist.

Concentrating so hard, in fact, that she could only barely notice the 'warning bells' screaming loudly in the back of her drunken mind.

* * * *

"I do..." Shauna said vaguely, a somewhat blank look on her face.

The response was more or less automatic, a part of her mind handling the task of responding to the 'preacher' as the rest of her slowly sobering brain struggled to piece together fractured memories and figure out why she felt like something was horribly wrong - while also feeling like something was fantastically right.

The strange, equally powerful disparity was driving her crazy.

"Then, by the power vested in me by the Nevada State Gambling Commission, I know pronounce you husband and wife." The 'preacher' intoned. "You may now kiss the bride..."

Only 'sort of' paying attention, Shauna didn't register the import as Buford gently took her face in his strong hands, turned it upwards to face his, and...

'Hey - I'm being kissed...' Shauna thought, startled out of her reverie by warm lips pressing against her own. Pressing very pleasantly against hers...

...bordering on 'pleasure'...

...and it would do considerable more than 'border' if she actually kissed back, so...

Mind temporarily shut completely off, she stopped simply accepting the kiss, and went with it, tongue playing a wonderful duet with Buford's as she leaned into his firm, taut body, feeling his arms slip around her...

Behind her, she heard cheering and clapping, and vaguely wondered what that was all about - but she was too busy kissing-and- being-kissed to give it much thought.

"Congr..hic...ulations.." Jessica, bride's maid to both weddings, said, as the kiss finally broke.

"Hmm...?" Shauna said, blankly, her mind still firmly stuck on the wonderful, pleasurable kiss the wonderfully handsome, strong man still holding her had just given.

"On being married..." Jessica pointed out, as he escorted both sets of well-lubricated 'happy couples' towards the door.

Arm in arm with her new husband, Shauna allowed herself to be led into the hotel and up to a room, once again back to trying to sort out two diametrically opposed - yet equally powerful - feelings.

"Hey, B'ford.." She said, as they stepped into the room and he closed the door behind them. "Why would I feel both incredibly happy and incredibly, uh.. scared, I guess..., all at the same time...?"

Buford stopped, his face carved in a theatrically thoughtful expression as his booze-befuddled mind tried to work through the problem.

"I dunno..." He said, staggering. "What, 'sactly, is making you happy...?"

Shauna thought about it, trying to pin it down - then felt a blush rising as her eyes locked on Buford's body, and she giggled. "The thought of having sex with you, handsome..."

"Oh, that's good... honey." Buford said, smiling back. "Okay, now what's scarin' you...?"

'Scared' wasn't exactly the right word, but she couldn't come any closer, so she didn't bother correcting it as she tracked down the feeling - and frowned, more confused then ever. "Havin' sex with you..."

Buford blinked. "Huh. You feel this way with all th'other guys you slept with...?"

"I've never slept with any other guys...!" She said, startled, wondering why Buford would assume she had...

...and then, at Buford's startled looking, wondered why she'd been so positive about that, so quickly. She hadn't even really thought about it - which was good, since thinking was so difficult at the moment. Still...

"Oh..." Buford said, taking her hand and leading her towards the bed. "I din't know it's gonna be your firs' time. S'okay, I promise I'll be gentle..."

"okay.." Shauna agreed - then frowned. "I still feel like I both wanna and don' wanna ado this, Buford. Am I 'spossed to feel that way?"

"It's normal for your first time.." He assured her...

...and before she could think about it further, ,he was kissing her...

..and, almost instinctively, she kissed back, enjoying the sensation.

His hands were sliding across her body, and it only seemed fair that she caress him too - and more than fair, since touching him felt almost as good as his touch on her felt.

When his hands began fumbling at the fastenings on her clothing, she reciprocated, not thinking, just doing, the wonderful damp heat rising in her belly and the pleasure in her lips precluding what little thought her booze-besotted brain was capable of.

The fumbling seemed to go on forever - but it also seemed only an instant until their bodies were naked, hot flesh pressed hard against hot flesh.

'This feels so wonderful..' Shauna thought, dreamily, as she pressed her firm, erect nipples harder into Buford's hard chest, her head swimming with the flush of hormones that nearly matched the booze for mind-numbing power. His strong hands were on her firm, taut derrière, and that, too, was wonderful.

Part of her was screaming that this wrong, so very, horribly wrong...

...but how could anything that felt so good possibly be wrong?

It was a thought she didn't even want to consider. Quite firmly shutting off that part of her brain, she let Buford guide her onto the bed, losing herself in the tender, wonderfully gentle touch of the dark giant.

A giant he was, too - for, when he gently eased her knees apart and positioned himself, she saw that - in his case - the myths about black men were sometimes true...

'Once you've gone black, you'll never go back...' She thought vaguely to herself, wondering at the strange welter of emotions and images it called forth...

...but before she could possibly try and track any of them down, he gently eased himself forward, hard meeting yielding, throbbing meeting soaking - and she gasped, arching her back as the moist, wonderful pleasure began to fill her at the slow invasion of her womanhood.

"Yes..." She moaned, wondering why she couldn't remember ever having felt this much pleasure, never having felt this fulfilled. It was so utterly satisfying, physically and emotionally, that she wondered how she could have possibly denied herself this her whole life...

...and then she frowned.

Part of her had immediately answered that it hadn't been her whole life.

Part of her 'remembered' doing this before, though the sensations all remained wonderful new and pleasing...

...while another part of her 'remember' that this should be horrifying, disgusting, perverted and sickening...

...but it wasn't. that part of her was just flat wrong. This was... wonderful.

Silencing the screaming trying to break through the alcoholic vapors of her mind, Shauna once again surrendered herself to the fantastic pleasure filling her body as. Gentle yet firm, and wonderfully competent, Buford began increasing the power and depth of his thrusts, generating more and more of that incredible pleasure.

Pleasure that only continued to build in growing waves, now over lapping, merging into one another as they built...

...and built...

"Oh, yes, Buford, my gorgeous black stallion.." She gasped, the words flowing unbidden from her lips, barely heard in her own ears as the pleasure stole her mind. "Harder, my love - harder!"

He complied - and the pleasure, already more than she'd ever experienced - redoubled.

'It was always so.. external, before...' She thought to herself, ,numbly, as pleasure ran through every nerve in her body. 'Who knew sex for a woman felt so more 'real', so more 'fulfilling', so much more than just physical...'

She realized, suddenly, that it was an exceedingly strange though to have - but, again, it wasn't worth 'thinking', not when she could be so busy 'feeling'.

In fact - she felt as if she were hollow, that her entire torso was a tight sheath for an organ of matching dimension. Though untrue, it was the illusion created by sensations that originated, not on an appendage outside her body, but deep within.

'Poor Buford..' She thought as she screamed out to God again and again, '...he'll never know how much better sex is for a woman than a man...'

Then, ,even before it could occur to her to wonder how she knew that, her orgasm hit.

She gave up thought for mindless white pleasure, ,and coherency for shrieks of the purest ecstasy...

...dimly, through her post-orgasmic haze, she was aware of Buford having climbed off of her, and having brought her a couple of aspirin to swallow, along with some apple juice. She wanted to thank him for the wonderful orgasm he'd given her, but her muddled mind couldn't seem to work her lips, not with fading pleasure being replaced with growing exhaustion.

As she fell off to sleep, her last, conscious thought was how lucky she was to have such a wonderful, caring husband...

* * * * *

At Shauna's strangled, breathless shriek, Buford sat bolt upright.

It was the wrong thing to do, despite the precautions he'd taken to minimize the hangover he was sure to have. Moving slowly to keep from aggravating the throbbing in his temples, Buford turned his head...

...to find Shauna, naked, beside him in bed...

...staring at him wide-eyed. "Shauna...?" He said, confused...

...and then fragmented memory returned, and he realized it was his wife staring at him like that...

"Honey...?" Buford said, now feeling he had a handle on what caused the shocked look, wondering himself just how drunk they'd had to be to get married like that.

"We.. I.. You.." Shauna stammered. "We.. we had sex. !"

Buford winced - it was even worse than he'd thought. The spur-of-the-moment wedding was certainly something that could be regrettable, but he'd sort of hoped that her 'willingness' last night hadn't made him some sort of statutory rapist. Thoroughly chagrined at his own weakness, the weakness that let him take advantage of this poor woman, he started to apologize...

". and I loved it!" She continued, her voice a near shriek.

Hmm...

"...and we're married. I'm married to.. to a man!"

The phrasing certainly took Buford by surprise. "Shauna.. what's wrong. ?"

Even as he said it, Buford mentally kicked himself for the stupid question.

"What's wrong...?" She shrieked. "What's wrong. ? I had sex with my 'husband' last night, and loved it, and woke up and, without even thinking, was thinking about how lucky I was to be married to a. a man like you, just because you're kind and gentle and thoughtful and. "

Slowly, her hysterical voice trailed off, and she simply stared at him for a long moment. "Honey ?"

"What's wrong. ?" She repeated, no longer in a shriek, but in an odd, thoughtful tone.

"What's wrong...?" She said, again - in yet another tone, a questioning tone. "I got married to a kind, gentle man, who just happens to be black, and he was gentle and thoughtful as he gave me the most pleasure I've ever felt in my life, and he was even thoughtful enough that, even drunk, he took care of me... What's wrong with that...?"

Slowly, as if in a daze, she slid from the bed, and a thoroughly confused Buford watched as she slowly paced back and forth, holding a discussion with herself that he couldn't even begin to follow.

"It would be wrong if I were still.. but I'm not.. and it would never have happened if I were... and, knowing how good it felt, do I even really want to go back, if I could.. especially since I was such an asshole... how could I have ever been that near-sighted...?"

She stopped and stood stock still for a moment, lost deep in thought...

...and then she turned to him, and the smile was like the rising of the dawn. "What's wrong...?" She asked, again. "Not a damned thing... husband."

Then, somewhat hesitantly, but still smiling, she returned to bed, snuggled up against him, and lifted her face for a kiss. Buford, thoroughly bemused, hesitated, wondering what the hell was in his new wife's mind...

...then mentally shrugged, bent his head, and kissed her.

* * * * * "Hey!"

Spotting Jessica's wave, Shauna returned the gesture, threading her way through the tables of the bar to where Jessica and Lucinda awaited her.

"Damn, you are looking fine, girl..." Lucinda complemented Shauna.

She flushed, part of her still barely able to believe she'd knowingly and willingly picked out the form-fitting 'little black dress' to wear - but Jerry and, more importantly, her own husband were going to be joining them shortly, and she knew he liked the way she looked in it...

...and for that matter, she liked the way she looked in it, too.

Still, there were still moments that she felt as if she were in some sort of daze. Only the fact that the past two months had been unarguably the happiest of either of her 'past lives', the 'real' one as a bigoted, sexist man, or the 'remembered' one as a woman, made it all somewhat easier to accept.

"So - how'd work go today...?" Lucinda asked.

"Oh - had another run in with Mr. Williams." Shauna said, making a face. "I was five minutes late for work today - again." "What happened...?" Jessica asked.

Shauna shrugged. "Oh, I haven't been feeling well lately. The flu or something, I guess."

"Oh - I didn't know." Jessica said, blinking. "Hey, if you don't feel well, you shoulda canceled..."

"No, no - I feel fine, now." Shauna said, waving a hand. "It's been the same thing for the past week. I feel awful when I first get up, even throwing up, but it only lasts a while..."

Lucinda and Jessica shared a look.

"Uh, Shauna, honey..." Lucinda said, very gently. "Are you, you know... late?"

"What do you mean, 'late'...?" Shauna asked, confused by the strange question, and the emphasis put on the word...

...and then her eyes widened, and she slowly began shaking her head. "No. Oh, no. No, no, no, no no no no. Hell no. No, no. No. "

"Shauna...?" Jessica said, concerned, as the wide-eyed woman continued repeating the negative, over and over again....

* * * * *

"Buford, you bastard, this is all your fault. !" Shauna screamed, between pants. "You did this to me!"

"Easy now, Mrs. Wilson - you're almost there. " The doctor said.

"This shouldn't be happening to me!" She told him in a shriek. "This isn't right! I was never supposed to be doing this!" The doctor and nurse shared a brief look, amused - as always - at some of the things women in labor called out.

Standing at her side - but carefully out of reach of her nails - Buford looked on, a trifle green, as his wife panted, then pushed again. "Okay, there's the head.. just relax, Mrs. Wilson. " the doctor said.

"You relax!" She shrieked at him. "Oh, God, it isn't fair. I'm supposed to be standing where that big black lug is, watching some other woman go through this. !"

"Um... of course.." the doctor said, shrugging at the nurse. "Okay now, Mrs. Wilson, one last push. "

Shrieking, Shauna pushed...

"There you are, Mrs. Wilson - a healthy baby boy..." The doctor said, handing a squirming, noisy bundle to a sweat-soaked woman. Blinking, physically and emotionally exhausted, Shauna looked down at the squirming infant.

"A boy...?" She said, numbly. "I.. I gave birth to a boy. I have a son...?" "We have a son..." Buford agreed, risking hand on his wife's shoulder.

Shaun looked down at the new life she had created, then up at the wonderful man who'd helped her create it. "Buford - we have a son..." She said.

"I know, honey. You did great.." Buford said, ,kissing her forehead. "A son.." She repeated, in wonder.

"We're gonna have to think of something to name the little tyke..." Buford said, as the nurse stood patiently by to take the newborn. "John." Shauna said, firmly, eyes shining. "John Roger Wilson, that's his name."

Buford blinked - but smiled. "Okay, honey, if that's the way you want it."

Reluctantly giving up the child, Shauna sank back in her bed. "It... It's sort of a family name." She explained, sleepily. "Okay, that's fine." Buford said to the slowly drowsing woman as they began wheeling her out.

"Bufor'..?" She said, almost asleep. "Yes, honey...?" He replied.

"I love you."

It was something that, oddly enough, Shauna had always had trouble saying - but this time, it came out as easily as could be. "Love you too, honey.." Buford whispered to the now sleeping woman.

SUMMARY: After angering a group of cat loving witches, one man discovers that they have a suitable punishment in mind.

Puss Puss By Millie Roentgen

Okay man, wait a sec here, I know that look - you're mad at me already, which means you must have been talking to the girls out front, while I kept you waiting for me, huh?

Sorry 'bout that, this friggin' mane of silky hair that I've got now, just would not seem to dry properly for me today. I know, why should you care? It's my job to just look pretty for you, not to talk about it, right? Whatever crazy girl-stuff it takes, so long as you're pleased and horny when you see me, I get it, I've heard that before. Honestly? I've probably said it to a girl myself.

But it will all seem worth the wait - I will please you nicely buddy, I promise I will, really, I'm way better at it than you probably think, even if it has only been a few weeks, since they started training me. But that sour expression on your face isn't going to make a very good start for our night together, is it?

Please don't let anything that those mean girls might have said to you about me, convince you that I don't like cats, okay? That's a load of crap. I actually love them, cats I mean. Those girls just have it out for me.

Granted, it is true that I got caught saying something aloud in mixed company, that I'd have to admit was somewhat indiscreet - but the idea that it is now some kind of terrible blasphemy to joke-around a little bit about animals is pretty crazy, right?

Or are you another one of them?

Look, it's okay by me whatever you believe, I promise I'll do you really nice and juicy, either way. I'm just saying, if you are, please do me one little favor and don't believe everything you've heard already. Give me a chance to explain myself to you first. I absolutely do like cats just fine, but I'm really not that fond of the cat 'o nine tails.

No I'm not asking for it, really, asshole - I didn't hang the stupid thing there above my bed, that was the girls' idea of appropriate decoration for my room.

Why don't we try and have a soft tender sexy evening, instead of a spiteful one? The bed does have some really great silk sheets. I bet you'll think I look terrific, when I'm all naked and wrapped-up in them. Doesn't everyone enjoy a little bit of a tease?

My unbelievable pinup-bimbo appearance? Well yeah, it was also chosen for me - by those same ridiculous girls, and they meant it as a punishment. But you can't take the fact that they changed me into this, as any proof of my guilt - they were over-reacting.

They said I had to sign that confession they drew up for me, though I'm pretty sure that I laughed about it, when I first read it - the whole situation seemed so ridiculous at first - a bunch of cat-ladies all ganging-up on me like that.

No, I don't mean anything derogatory by that at all. Let me rephrase - let's say, a gathering of people with special affinity for our feline friends - is that better? Anyhow, I thought their kangaroo court was just designed to embarrass me - and entertain the nasty bitches at my expense.

There really was no way I could have known that they were also a coven of witches.

I gave them a good fight - argument, I mean - just to get some personal satisfaction, despite the fact that I was vastly outnumbered by them - and out-powered by their hostility. I poked holes in their logic and chuckled a lot, simply so we'd all know that I wasn't about to make it easy for anyone to push-me-around.

It was only after that great debate, when I felt I'd been difficult-enough, and I finally got bored with listening-to all of their horrified shrieking, that I said I would think about signing the girls' very wordy and overdone confession. Mostly so they'd stop blocking the doors and let me leave.

I resented all of the extra stuff that they made-up and added to my confession, extrapolating contemptuously, just from my one comment - as if it was the most important revelatory truth of my whole life.

I know I might still be a bit biased, what with all this still being so fresh and all, but from where I was looking, those girls seemed to think they could judge everyone they saw - and always be right about it. They informed me in no uncertain terms that they were going to make me sign that confession, saying that I was a horrible sexist pig and that I showed very low-respect for women and other helpless creatures.

They even made the confession say that I was only there, to heartlessly exploit a helpless animal, in order to try to take advantage of emotionally vulnerable females.

That's the part that makes everyone around here seem to think I hate cats - even though I promise you, it's really not so. I don't even own a stupid cat - so I wasn't ever exploiting an actual animal. All I did was joke to my friend that a guy around that cat clinic, could really use a pussy, to get himself a whole lot of pussy.

Surely, ten-thousand guys have had the very same thought by now.

Cat-girls really like cat-guys. They seem to think they're more sensitive, intelligent and thoughtful than other guys. Or at least, that's what they say they think. Sometimes I think what they really mean is that such men are extra bossable, suggestible, obedient and considerate (quiet), but anyhow, those cat-girls look for that stuff.

That's a lot of pussy, looking for one particular set of character-traits - which is all my comment was ever supposed to mean. I guess I was just humorously trying to identify a woefully under-served market.

Yeah, I do know that the dumb-part was that I was in the waiting room of the actual cat-clinic when I said all that. But still, I didn't have a cat of my own in the race, it was our buddy Karlheinz who had his mangy tom booked-in there, for his shots and a checkup.

So anyhow, I promised I would read their confession when I got home, then sign-it and mail it back to them. I gave them what they wanted - their stupid confession - which meant they were finally going to let me free, right? Apparently not.

Right-away a whole bunch of those bitchy cat ladies, sorry - distressed feline friends, were all over me about how offensive my joke was. They just expressed themselves vocally at first, then they came closer and finally physically closed around me from every direction, yelling vitriol at me from just a few inches away.

Much as my mischievous id kept recommending the obvious fun of it, I just couldn't let my stressed-impulses run free - I know it would have been very wrong if I had hit-out at any one of them, even lightly - they were all girls, and none of them were hitting me - just screeching.

But I felt so wound-up from all that pressure that I was close to a pretty good scream of my own. I was trembling and sweating, I think I almost fainted at one point. They still weren't letting me go - and now I had no idea what I could do, that might make them.

That was when the big-girl finally came striding into the room to take charge of the mob. No, I don't mean a fat chick walked in, you know who I mean - their leader lady, what's her name? Right, Krystal.

So, Krystal cut right through the crowd and then she came up to me and grabbed my arm and twisted it around, then she dragged me up from the sofa, only to push me back down to lie back on the rather dirty floor.

Man, I'll tell you, the way those fucking... umm, ladies, were cheering-her, you would have thought there was a sudden discount at the shoe-store. Sorry, I'm just saying.

Anyhow, Krystal stood there over me smiling, holding her foot hovering right over the center of my chest, in such a way that I knew I'd never be able to sit-up until she let me. Even if I went to grab her leg and push it away, I was sure that that would only give the other girls an excuse to join the fun - help their leader out by restraining me - and they'd win, just with their numbers. More than two girls per limb? Yeah, I was trapped.

Krystal had the crowd, she had all the leverage on me - and her entire weight was ready to force me down again, if I so much as twitched in a way she didn't like.

I felt very odd about the way this whole incident was developing, but even nervous and confused, I still like to try to have some fun wherever I can - make the most of every circumstance. So I couldn't help appreciating the low-perspective visuals on offer.

Krystal's smile was ice-cold, even her blouse-scratching pointed nipples looked angry, but underneath her skirt she was dressed-up like she was a high-class tart. She had on a pair of the loveliest lacy red panties - so thin that I could clearly see the shadow of her bush, and even the pink of her slightly splayed labia, directly above me.

I had the thought that it would probably be a very bad time for me to pop a boner, but when has that thought ever influenced whether or not a guy actually gets some wood?

Even looking-away from Krystal's panties didn't help that much. There were so many other girls standing there next to me - many in hosiery and skirts, that she was only one of the many teasingly erotic visual treats available to me, from my spot on the floor.

I'm going to have to go on the record here, stick my neck out and insist that girl-mobs really are better than guy-mobs - by that one simple measure.

Anyhow, like I said, my first mistake with that crowd of hormonal animalists was making that crack about scoring pussy with pussy, in front of so many people who obviously thought of that stuff as sacred. Pussy and pussy, probably.

But the second big mistake I made, was when I jokingly mentioned how much I liked those sexy lacy red panties that Krystal was wearing - and the trimmed bush beneath.

Actually, it may be that that was the biggest mistake I've ever made in my entire life - I can't tell for sure - no one around here ever gives me a straight answer about anything.

But anyhow, when I gave my best innocent charming smile, beaming it up to the gloriously angry alpha-lady, and told her that I thought she had really fabulous taste in lingerie, she brought that high-heeled foot down to rest on me lightly. Still not quite an attack, just a sharper threat.

I was becoming a little bit scared that Krystal could do me serious harm if she stepped-down with any power on her heel. But she didn't seem out of control, so I figured as long as I didn't escalate her anger any further than I had, I'd be safe from harm.

Don't laugh - no one bargains-on running into a bunch of fucking witches.

Okay, maybe the really enlightened and elaborately-paranoid psychic guys are watchful at cat hospitals - but I certainly didn't get that tip in time.

And yeah, before you bother asking, if I'd known what was coming, I definitely would have fought back - though it might have cost me a broken rib or two. I would have struggled more, I swear - even though there were so many of them against me, that I would have been drowned in skirts in seconds, weighed-down with plushy thighs and soft asses - applied to my body in contempt and anger.

And even if Krystal herself was svelte, some of those cat-girls were pretty big. My ribs weren't the only things in danger, I might have got a broken arm or leg, just from those furious harpies hard plump-down restraint.

Anyhow, that was the moment they chose to stick the confession in my face again and told me that I'd better just sign-it for them - it would all be so much better for me if I did.

When I'd read the document over originally, I assumed that it was just some standard form-letter that they'd prepared in advance, then plugged my name into. It could have all been an elaborate 'let's fuck-with stupid men' gag, or perhaps I was the victim of some form of guerilla political theatre.

In any case, all I'd done was offend a few women with my words. So I was certain that that had to guarantee that their allowable responses to me, couldn't go far beyond words either.

And technically, I guess you could actually say that they didn't go beyond words.

For all of the degrading and exhausting things that those women have done to me in these last few weeks, they did all the real serious damage using nothing but words.

Mind you, I wouldn't want to have to bet any money on what language they were using. It was nothing I'd ever heard spoken before. I was certain of that. So strange? I would have noticed and listened. It had ferocity and fear, authority and horror.

It even seemed to take them an almost painful level of effort to say those words they used - whatever they were.

But what has happened to me as a result of their spells, sure has gone a long way past anything that mere mortal's words could do - don't you think?

Of course I'm cuter than I should be, for a girl who was a guy a few weeks ago - that was those naughty bitchy girls' whole point, stupid.

The way they made me, all sexy and horny all the time, I think I'm supposed to be so hot and cute, that I constantly get a ton of attention from all the most irritating persistent and disrespectful pickup-guys.

But those angry cat-chicks screwed-up on their big kinky revenge-plan somewhat. I'm absolutely sure I wasn't supposed to actually enjoy this so much as I do.

I know, sounds crazy huh? Weird enough to be one, but who would have thought that I'd ever actually get-off-on being a female person? Think of asking me about it a few months ago - never in a million years, right? I was just a totally normal dude. I could have been you, or Karlheinz for that matter.

But look at me now, huh? Not just my body, either, man. Check out how naturally I'm behaving. Look at the way my hand-gestures are all so smooth and flirty and pretty.

You're right - my ignorance about womanhood was totally massive - at first, it was like I was going to swishy college. Even basic moves were baffling. Heck, I had a hard time just learning how to walk in heels, keep my skirt down, smile and say hello - all in the right, ladylike ways.

I never knew every move a girl made was political, before I had a womb to defend.

No way, that's a step too-far man. I really truly totally absolutely for-sure don't want to ever end-up pregnant. Okay, I do fantasize about it sometimes, but that's just fantasy.

What I really do want to do, is to figure-out some way to make these crazy cat-girls happy enough with their vengeance, that they'll finally forgive me. Or at least get bored with playing with me, find another 'project' and let me go free of this place.

Yeah, I know I left something out. But actually, I'm not so sure about that part anymore.

I was at first, of course I was. I was all totally gung-ho to be a guy again just as quickly as humanly possible. But after all these weeks of being in their little domestic brothel, well, I guess now I'm starting to think I'd rather just be a free woman, than go back to being the man I used to be.

What if I had to choose between being a totally free but boring man again, or continue being the woman I am now, trapped here against my will, locked into a long-term contract with a very strict madam? Are you serious?

So, what if I actually had to choose between being boring again, or living here by choice? Would I stay in this frilly little room and continue to entertain rude and horny bastards like you, for years and years - just to be able to keep experiencing femininity?

Just so I could stay a girl, keep my sweet and sensitive cunt - and keep right on getting fucked silly, by an unending line-up of pent-up perverts, all in a great big rush to get themselves off inside me?

I dunno, that's pretty hard to say, man. Tough call. I'd sure hate to give up the girl-sex.

Fuck you, it shouldn't be hard. That's really easy for you to say, you big jerk. You've never felt a guy pushing himself into your cunt, wanting you, taking you, claiming you - and then driving every part of your whole body up and over into multiple orgasms - so I say you should just shut your judgmental mouth.

No way, I'm definitely not asking you for a rough-night after all - not unless that's what you want, of course. I'm only saying that it's just not a simple or easy decision - to be a slut or a schlub. Actually, nothing is that simple for me anymore.

I never would have guessed it, but I've found that being a pretty, flirty and extremely sexual girl is a lot more complicated than any guy would think - so I'd like it if you could be a little bit considerate of that, okay?

Thank you. Now, shall I go on? Yes yes, I'll strip for you in a minute. Just let me finish the rest of the story first, okay? Man, you really never have had any patience - not in all these years we've known each other.

Okay fine, then I'll do both at once. Shall I get rid of my blouse and bra first, buddy? You want to see these big warm firm sweet smooth boobies that the girls gave me?

Yeah, of course I know that it's fucked-up that I have them at all, but that doesn't mean that I'm not allowed to notice that they're fabulous, does it?

I'm not being vain, honey - you'll agree with me. You'll like them too. Just give me a second to get this stupid bra undone, then I bet you'll instantly say that they're the nicest set you've seen in ages - or touched, anyhow.

Am I wet? What sort of a question is that to ask a girl?

Alright then, what sort of a question is that to ask a whore? Better? -prick-

You are being a prick, you know. Taking advantage of my situation this way. It doesn't really shame-me anymore, to sleep with the regular customers. They're all strangers.

But you were supposed to be my friend, my pal - I was sure I could trust you. They only gave me a chance to make two picks, you know? Two character-references, that might help them see me as a decent person, instead of a creep, who deserves their worst.

When they phoned that number, you were supposed to say nice things about me. Talk-me-up, get them to see me from your close friend-perspective. That obviously didn't happen. What the hell did you say about me when they called you, anyhow?

They asked you if you thought I would fuck a whore, if someone else was paying? What kind of a fucked-up question is that? So, what did you say back?

Yes? You told them that I'd probably take the whore home and fuck her for a week, if someone else was paying-for her bill? Shit man, I'm pretty sure that joke of yours, really did not help my case at all.

Who else did I tell them to call? What do you mean, were you my first pick?

You don't really want to know that, do you, man? I like you, and in case you haven't noticed, I'm trying really hard here, to establish some kind of rapport with you as a friend of mine - no matter how different I may look and act, from my old self.

Let's just go with that and be nice to each other for a while, huh?

Don't be stupid, my nipples aren't always this hard. I'd go crazy if they were this sensitive, all goddamned day long. No, they don't even get this hard for every guy. Sometimes I have to pinch-them myself, so it looks more like I'm into it.

Yeah, I already said I like you. Fine, yes, I am very wet. Satisfied?

He he he, sure, I bet you do want to see for yourself, you naughty boy. But I was trying to finish my story, so I could explain about how this was all a big mistake. I want you to see the whole thing from my angle, so maybe, if you feel like earning the eternal gratitude of someone as pretty as me, you might consider helping me out a little.

I didn't change the subject, you did when you asked me about my nipples.

Okay fine, if you insist. It was Karlheinz, okay? The other name I gave them was Karlheinz, that's a pretty good guy to be on my top- two-list with, isn't it?

Did I call him first? Gee buddy, of course I didn't. I always liked you better than him. You know what he's like, so picky and precise about everything. Always going-on about his stupid house and his stupid job and his stupid car and his stupid flexo-gym.

No way, I prefer good humor and intelligence, friendliness, good company - your buddy-virtues way-outscore all of his stupid success-trophies, any day of the week.

These nipples don't lie, buddy. They really do seem to like you as much as I do.

Karlheinz's watch sitting over there on my night-stand? Is it? Are you absolutely sure that it's not someone else's watch, that just looks a lot like it?

Custom wrist-band that you bought him yourself? Hmm.

Okay, sorry, I guess I should have told you the truth right-away. I just didn't want to wreck any of the evening's romantic potential for you. I was only trying to spare your feelings, man. I meant what I said, I really do like you better. I just had them call him first, 'cause I figured that with all his money, he'd have the easiest time helping me get out of this cum-soaked trap.

Fuck you, that is not thinking like a whore. I'm still me, I'm just more fuckable.

I will admit that I did sleep with Karlheinz - he even stayed here the whole night, which was kind of sweet - it made it feel a lot more affectionate than the usual Joes do.

What did I do for him? You don't really want to hear all the perverted details, do you? Aren't we supposed to be getting back to my innocence-story?

No no, god no, put the phone down man, please don't call them to complain about the service - they take every little complaint way too seriously. I'm not insisting, here. Sorry if I was getting too pushy about my story.

It's okay, really pal, I do know my job. I guess I just thought that all our years of friendship would buy me a little more leeway with you. How about if I take off my skirt and panties now, so you can see everything, okay?

You can see how wet I am that way. You can even taste it, if you like.

Hey, low-blow, if you keep being mean and rude like that, I'm going to start thinking that you don't like me at all. I'm not just some mannequin in a store window, to be propped-up in a funny pose for your amusement, pal.

And for your information, lots of guys the guys who've come by to see me, seem to like to lick my whore's pussy just fine - so long as they know they're my first customers of the night, and I washed myself really thoroughly before. Fresh juice is sweet.

Of course you don't have to touch me - and yes, I'll suck you anyhow - you are the customer here, even more than you are my pal. I think you've made that clear. But you're still in for a surprise or two, believe me, man. I'm going to suck you better than you've ever had it from any other broad, buddy. They say I'm like a total virtuoso on the skin-flute now. You'll come so hard that you start barking.

But please, can I do a little more of my story, first?

Tell you about what I did to Karlheinz? Come-on buddy, can't I just say pretty-much everything, and let you fill-in all the answers yourself? Oh geez, I get-it, you're actually turned-on by the thought of him fucking-around with me in my new body, aren't you?

My fault for calling such a jerk, first? Oh fine, maybe you're right. Karlheinz is a jerk, too - you're absolutely right about that part at least. But I wasn't too sure about him either way, for the first few hours. He was acting pretty friendly, while we were first making-out.

No, he wasn't any more patient than you. Less actually. Even though the girls had explained to him what happened to me, he still made me strip completely nude for him, before I was able to even start my tale.

He wanted to be a thousand-percent sure that my new curves weren't just produced by some stupid costume. That there wasn't any scary shocking surprise about my form, coming his way later, after he was already steamed-up to go.

After Karlheinz got a couple of his fingers stuck up my cunt and wiggled them around for a minute, he was finally convinced that I was the real thing. But by that point, my story didn't matter to him at all. He just wanted to feel-me-up, rub his cock all over between my tits, stick it in my mouth for a little while, then, of course fuck the living hell out of my tight little cunny.

More detail? You fucking perv. Fine. He made me diddle myself for a while first - give him a show of all my 'bits'. He explained that he was simply too tired to have to do all the necessary chores down there between my legs, to make me ready to fuck him.

He waited until he could tell I wasn't faking - I stared getting confused about my story, repeating lines, losing my place. Then he must have known that I was very ready to feel some hard cock inside me.

I spread my legs, just as soon as he came over to me. But he laughed and told me to open my mouth, instead. Then he squirted a half a bottle full of oil onto my boobs, and started massaging it around, really squeezing those puppies hard - as if they were toys, instead of bruisable parts of my body.

I almost got around to telling him to stop-it ('cause it was almost more irritating, than arousing) when he got bored, pushed me down and laid his dick between my tits. He even made me move my boobs around with my hands to cradle and stroke him - he told me I had nice big floppy titties, so I shouldn't be shy about 'em.

Yeah, that's exactly what I'm saying. I fuck-milked Karlheinz's cock as hard as I could - with my own tits. I did the heavy-lifting myself, and all that grinning putz had to do, was be there. I didn't even wait for him to ask me to lick the tip, when it poked-up from the top of my cleavage. It was obviously the next good thing to add, so I added-it.

I was even prepared to deal-with the consequences of my lip-pressure. I've been told before that I have the softest and most delicate-feeling lips. So I figured that Karlheinz would lose-control, come like crazy, filling my mouth, I'd swallow - and then maybe we'd finally have a little chance for some intelligent conversation.

Naw, forget what you've heard - the taste isn't so bad at all, once you get used to it. And it's certainly way better than trying to get all of the stray drops out of any stainable fabrics you might be wearing, or even a nice time-consuming hairstyle.

Oh yeah, fucking Charlie had to do both. My mouth wasn't enough for his tastes.

I was naked already, greased-up for his slippery fun - and still he had to push me further into depravity. The bastard only let me swallow exactly one nice long hot creamy shot, then he pulled his fuck-stick out of my mouth and spurt-drizzled his jizz all over my face and into my hair.

He even managed to nail my suede skirt, lying on the far side of the bedspread. A fancy and rather pricey garment which I had thought I was carefully protecting, by not just throwing-it onto the floor.

Enough details about me and Karlheinz? Oh, thank you, man, really. I know it might not sound like it to you, but I don't really like to talk about the time I spend with my men. It feels unprofessional.

Hey, you're pretty hard, aren't you? You want me to suck that for you? It really looks delicious, I gotta tell you. I never would have thought that you were so much bigger than Karlheinz. No bullshit man, way bigger. I'm not even sure if you're going to fit inside me, without some stretching. We're going to have to take it slow.

You want to come in my cunt - and you think it's going to be soon? That's dear, man. Okay, so then why don't you just come on up here and show me what you have for me, big-fella.

That's not whore-talk. I've just been picking-up a few bad habits from the other girls. Anyhow, I am sorry for trying to bitch at you about all of my troubles, before I took care of that painful-looking swelling of yours. You're a sweet-heart, man. For you, nothing but my very best.

Do you want me to tighten-up for you, before you even start? You like that new-girl feeling? Or would you rather I relax, so you can slip right in all the way on the first stroke, then I can squeeze you tight afterwards?

Of course you really are big - that thing is almost scary to me. Think about it, man. Having a huge spear of some guy's hot and throbbing flesh pushed into your body - that's a pretty intimidating thing for a girl sometimes.

Well okay, I guess I have had a couple that were bigger. One guy in particular, who was fucking crazy-huge, but you are a very healthy size, trust me - I've seen a few.

Of course it means something, I am not a lying whore. I'm a nice whore, you jerk. All I was ever doing with my embellishments was just trying to spare your feelings. Why? Because I like you, you stupid asshole, that's why. Though I'm starting to wonder if I should like you as much as I do.

Ahh, there, yeah, that's it, just ease it into me - ohh, yeah, that feels so good, doesn't it?

Are you horny just because of the amazing body that I've got now? Or are you horny because you know who I was, before they did this to me? Or are you horny because I told you about what I did with our friend Karlheinz? Or do you just like fucking cute horny girls with big tits?

What do you say, man? I'm really curious about this. Am I as sexy as a normal girl? Or am I extra exciting to you, because you know the whole thing is so seriously wrong?

Mmm, you really do have a nice cock, it fills me up wonderfully. It's pretty hard to believe that you're actually fucking your old pal's cunt, isn't it? Still freaks me out, too. No matter how many of the old gang Karlheinz sends over here to check me out, I still get all nervous with them, every time.

Yeah, quite a few, really. Most of the guys from the sports-bar, and a lot of the guys from the old soccer-club too. That schmoozy fucker Karlheinz really seems to keep in touch with people. I guess me giving those girls his number, turned into a word-of-mouth chain that ultimately generated a whole lot of different 'references' for me.

But not in any way that met my goals - unless you count showing my men a good time - which is really more of a philosophy, than a goal.

The girls would always ask them that same question. The one they asked you about. How did they think I'd react, if I was offered a free hooker? Then, after gathering all of the rude and ribald responses, they'd offer the guys a night with a hooker - for free - as an introductory special for their new place.

Why they had to tell every one of those guys who I really was - and then make me confirm it for them, I'll never know. I think it would have been easier on everyone, if they'd just let the guys think they were getting some free pussy.

I could have been more uninhibited with them - or at least blushed a lot less, when they realized that I'd do anything they wanted - no matter who I used to be. A few of them were almost as embarrassed as I was about it. A couple of guys actually wanted to leave, without doing anything to me.

But I knew the girls would be furious with me if I let that happen. And you know? for all their principled talk, even the sweetest of the guys weren't really that hard to convince. All I had to do was take off enough of my clothes for my boobs to pop out at them.

Tits like these aren't offered free every day you know?

Most of them stayed for hours, going down the list of all the things they'd always been too embarrassed to ask a girl to do before.

I know, you'd think that knowing I was a former guy, would have made them feel more inhibited, wouldn't you? I guess it was all about my attitude. They have trained me pretty well, don't you think?

You do like my pussy, don't you? I'm not the only one enjoying this, am I, man?

What about the guys who weren't so gentle? Were there any guys who really seemed to like seeing me brought-low like this? You are a fucking perv. I know I squeezed when I said that, perv is good sometimes, when you have a nice big cock in-you.

Okay okay, yeah, there were definitely a few guys who thought the whole thing was hilarious. Apparently, Karlheinz had an instinct about that. Some of our old friends, only got a story about a brothel offering free sex with a hottie, as a first-time special.

But some of our old pals - most of the really twisted and demented ones, now that I think about it, showed up here with a lot more information. Karlheinz told them the free hooker part, but then he added that she had been a man. Then, before they could get grossed-out, he'd assure them that the girl was as hot as could be.

Then, when they were wondering if they could forget that the free hooker had been a guy, he'd add the final detail - that the guy the girl had been, was me.

Those bastards showed up here all keyed up about it in advance. The girls got a real kick out of them, too. They liked seeing me laughed-at and humiliated. We could even hear them listening at the door to my room when we were fucking later.

The guys loved knowing they had an audience. They would start talking dirtier and dirtier to me - all to impress the giggling eavesdroppers. They made me make more noises too - so the girls would know how very good they were.

They even told me to come, over and over for them. To worship their cocks, to beg them to shoot their come all over me - and I found that I was naturally drawn to do as they said. They could even make me get wet, or make my nipples stand up, just by commanding it.

Not that I'm sure the opposite commands would have worked - if anyone had ever made them.

My willing malleability was the thing the nasty boys liked best. My obedience, the way I actually seemed to like every dirty thing they did to me. I got called every rude name that a girl can get called - and all by people who I used to buy drinks for, you know?

The girls? Yeah, they're probably listening to us, right now. Kinky-feeling, isn't it?

You want to fuck me a little harder there, buddy? You tired or something? Oh yeah, sorry, you're just trying to last a minute or two longer, aren't you? That's okay, you don't have to move around for me to enjoy your cock. I didn't mean to complain.

Yeah, I even come a little bit for the guys that don't do anything for me. The girls little spell really did a nice job on my nerve-endings. But it's true that I come even harder, when the guy that's fucking me is someone I used to know.

Me, get-off on the humiliation? That's crap, it's the hope that turns me on. The hope that I might find a guy with enough balls to help me out - even if it means going against a few girls, who will try to stop them.

No, I don't know precisely how their spell-casting works, but I'm sure you could run out of the room quickly, if they started chanting anything. Besides, you'd only have to take a big chance one little time - and think of what you'd get in return.

Just help me get me out of this place and into your apartment. They'll never come after us there - we'll be safe and together - and you can have me all to yourself.

Trust me? Of course you can trust me. I wouldn't set you up, or double-cross you. Even just holding your big shaft inside me like this, you're still one of the best fucks I've ever had, man. Don't you feel the same way?

Almost there, aren't you? It's okay man. You don't have to hold back on my account.

I like it when a guy comes inside me, it feels so amazing - all that pressure and warmth and primal energy. The connection, the possibility - the way he makes me think about what sort of a baby he'd give me, if I slipped-up and let him. That's all great.

Make me come? See? I knew you were the nicest guy out of all my friends. You are so right, I should have called you first. I could have saved myself a lot of very personal embarrassment - and about a thousand filthy rumors - if I hadn't gone for Karlheinz's money first.

It's easy, man. All you have to do is tell me to come. I'll do it, just as easily as I'd lick your balls, or drink your load. You can tell me to pant, or beg, or scream or shake - and I'll do it for you, sure as anything.

You want me to what? Fuck man, don't say that. No one's said that yet. I don't have any idea what could happen, how bad it could be for me. Please take it back.

I dunno. Maybe you can command me to be deeply and passionately in love with you. But do you really want to win my love that way, man?

Why not? Well, my love, you have to think about it from my perspective for a second. What if I didn't really want to adore you? What if I didn't think you were amazing and handsome and intelligent and charming?

If I wasn't already completely dedicated to making you my man, then it would be taking unfair advantage of me, to use the commands to play-with my feelings like that. Good thing for you that you don't have to.

Why do I love you? I haven't really considered that, man. How long has it been since I knew? Gee, maybe only a few minutes, I guess.

You want me to come, every-time I even think about your name? Ahh fuck, oooooo god, shit man, you fucking... wow. That was a very dirty thing for you to do, darling.

Of course I like it when you make me come. Of course I want to turn-you-on. If you like seeing me come for you, I'll be sure to do a lot of that - any way you tell me to.

But you are going to get me out of here, aren't you? You kinda promised, by making me fall in love with you, didn't you?

Fuck off, just because I know what's happening on one level, that doesn't mean that I can do anything about those commands. I'm not a slut, I'm just whatever each guy wants me to be. If I found a guy that wanted me to be a supreme court justice, I'm pretty sure I'd be in Washington, within a week or two.

If I'm a filthy little sex-mad bimbo, addicted to you and completely and hopelessly in love with you - then that's all your fault, man. A reflection of your weak character.

Now what about it - when do you think we should make our big break from here?

Leave me? Let them feed me? No, man, no. You can't do that to me. You're like my very last hope. They already said no more numbers, no more references. If you don't bust me out of here I'll be stuck in this bed till I'm stretched-out and ugly.

Hey, how come you're trembling. You are supposed to be the nice guy. You can't come just hearing the news that I'm a trapped, horny bimbo cocksucking slut, who is deeply in love with you, can you?

Ohhhhh, man - that is so fucking rude.

You should listen to the girls - a pussy needs some care and attention. Loving and tender, gentle and patient.

Oh, fine - you're right, I don't need it personally. I did probably come about seven or eight times there - but that was only because I couldn't get your name out of my head as you fucked me. Your stupid commands are going to be really embarrassing, especially if anyone ever pages you in a public mall, when I'm there, don't you think?

No that is really not a fabulous idea - man, you try and be nice to people, and look where it gets you.

Okay, I was rude about the pussy. But love? You're going to make me lovesick for you, you're going to make me beg the girls to let me have a boyfriend, and some outings? You're going to let the whole thing seem like my idea? Why not show some balls - I bet if you yelled at the girls a bit, they'd scatter.

You like it this way better?

Oh fine. I suppose you do have a point.

I'd rather have me mad at me than them too.

Unless you've secretly been a frustrated whore inside your mind - all this time, just waiting for the right opportunity to bust-out. Hey wait - don't be so sure - think about it for a second. It's not impossible.

And believe me buddy - it ain't half-bad to be a cream-addicted pussy. end

SUMMARY: Beware of diet pills that you find in your bathroom! One man tries an experimental weight loss product which transforms his body....and this product is still being distributed. It can happen to you too!

Quick Fix

By Gunslinger

Dave found the bottle shoved deep into the back of the top drawer, the decaying remains of Mac-Tac drawer liner holding it in place.

"What the...?" Dave muttered to himself, pausing to wipe the sheen of sweat off of his forehead with one meaty hand. Sitting back on his (ample) haunches, he held the newly-discovered bottle in his other hand and looked at it quizzically.

"Well, well, well... what do we have here...?" He asked himself, quietly, turning the white plastic bottle over in his hands several times, then shaking it lightly and hearing the unmusical rattle of small, hard objects inside.

This was an unexpected 'bonus' - or could be, depending what it was.

Aside from being a five-foot two, two hundred and twenty-pound Caucasian male, David Randolph Seaton was single. and unattractive. The last most definitely had something to do with former, and had done so for as long as Dave cared to remember. From his pasty skin to his lank, greasy blonde hair, Dave was a prime example of 'nerd'. Not even one of those 'techie' nerds who were at least good at computers. No, Dave was a book-worm, pale and heavy-set from hours spent reading - and almost inevitable, snacking. His skin was bad, his sandy hair was lifeless, and his body flabby and rotund.

Part of this came from the fact that Dave was very uncomfortable around other people. Rather than subject himself to the whims and dangers of social interaction, he had started 'drowning' himself in a book as a sort of defense mechanism - if nothing else, most people left you alone when your nose was buried in a book.

The problem was, over the years his initial, hormonally over-blown teenage anxiety had weakened. Not vanished, but settled enough that he thought, now, maybe he was ready to be 'sociable'. except that the years of neglecting his body made him ashamed of himself, pushing his anxiety higher once more.

Dave had decided to try and get in shape - but he was on a very low income, and couldn't afford a gym membership. He also found that exercising for exercises' sake seemed frustratingly boring - and so he'd picked up several hobbies that required at least some measure of physical activity.

Like refinishing furniture. Dave lived in a tiny little bungalow that had been willed to him by a maiden aunt - and it had been furnished in 'Spinster neo-Modern'. Revamping his image - and saving money - Dave had decided to buy 'new' furniture at garage sales, cheap, and then refinish them with hand-tools only, getting some exercise. Which is why he was in his backyard sanding down a dresser he'd just bought for all of five dollars.

Now, looking at the bottle he'd found in the top drawer, Dave leaned back for better light as he tried to puzzle out the torn, faded remnants of the label.

The front label was torn on a diagonal, leaving almost all the top of the label intact, but tapering to the left down the label. The name of the product - 'SHIFT-SLIM' - was clearly visible, but less and less writing remained below it, leaving Dave only with steadily decreasing fragments.

"A revolutionary new weight-lo..." He read the first line. He figured that it said 'weight LOSS...' but there was still room for two or three words after that, on the missing portion of the label. He jumped down and read the next paragraph, as best he could.

" 'A revolutionary new product design'... torn there, uh... 'to take inches off the wais...' uh huh... '...one muscles and increase...' Shit."

There was more after that, but the fragments were useless. Having some idea what he was holding - a container of old diet pills - Dave turned it over and tried to decipher the usage instructions on the back.

"Take ten pills, five times a... blank spot ...aximum of.... torn away... ...results in just..."

He frowned, shaking his head at the mess that followed, then looked at the bottle itself thoughtfully.

Having trouble losing weight, he'd priced out some diet aids at a local pharmacy, and had winced at the prices. Now, he held in his hand what felt o be a nearly-full bottle... even if it was a little old.

"Hell... they're just vitamins and crap..." Dave muttered. "What can it hurt?"

Unscrewing the lid, he dumped a handful of little pink oval pills in his hand and separated out ten of them, wondering why the 'dosage' was so high for each time... then figured that the ability to 'concentrate' whatever was in the pills hadn't been as advanced as it was today - and a pill ten times as big would have been impossible to swallow.

Using the bottle of Sprite sitting next to him, Dave swallowed the diet pills, one at a time, then reminded himself to take more in three hours before going back to work on the dresser....

* * * * *

'Well...' Dave reflected wryly, twelve hours later, '...I certainly don't feel like eating anything...' Which was true - because he felt genuinely awful.

The first nibbling had come half an hour after the first batch of pills... he'd felt warm and slightly 'anxious', his body 'running hot'. Besides that, he felt slightly 'bloated' - and not at all hungry. He'd ignored it, figuring it was the pills speeding up his metabolism - and he'd gone right on popping the pills.

Then, about twenty minutes ago, it had really hit him. A great wave of thick, sluggish weariness had stolen over him, and it had felt as if all his muscles had turned to water. His stomach had begun to rumble and heave slightly, and his body had begun to itch - not unbearably (yet), but annoyingly nonetheless.

He felt awful - and scared. What if the pills were bad, spoiled - whatever happened to 'old' pills. He thought about calling the hospital or pharmacy... but didn't want to look like an idiot if this should turn out to be normal for diet pills.

Then a thought struck him, and he slowly, painfully levered his heavy body off the chair he'd collapsed in. Bracing himself against the wall, he swayed slowly towards the computer across the room. It seemed to take forever to get there, and at least twice Dave had been sure he was about to pass out. Finally, he dropped heavily into the wooden seat in front of the old, battered desk. Jiggling his mouse heavily, he cleared the screen-save on the system, then logged onto the Internet, finding it just hard to think, let alone move. Finally, he'd typed the name of the diet pills into a search engine, then clicked on one of the more promising-looking links. His brain feeling thick and sluggish, he forced himself to read the words that seemed to float, in and out of focus, on the screen in front of him.

SHIFT-SLIM, a women's 'Beauty Aid' that was first test-marketed in June of 1972, never made it to the shelves - and thankfully so.

One of the early attempts at marketing now-banned genetically-altered pharmaceutical compounds, SHIFT-SLIM promised women slimmer, more buxom figures, partially through the shifting of existing weight, and partially through synthetic hormone production. It was also designed to provide smoother skin and other 'beauty enhancing' effects, mostly through hormone therapy. Indeed, SHIFT-SLIM did what it promised... more or less.

Quite often, 'more'. SHIFT-SLIM's promoted effects were unpredictable, varying widely from woman to woman. Many experienced rapid - even painful - loss of waist diameter, only to find the relocated masses of fat poorly positioned. Other women found problems with the hormonal side of it. In almost every case, the result was 'unbalanced', the weight shifting too much in one place or another.

Even worse was the side effects, which ranged greatly - both physically and psychologically. Not previously realized to be psychoactive, SHIFT-SLIM caused varying mental, emotional and personality effects, as well as less clearly defined changes from the hormonal imbalances.

Aside from it's unpredictable, quickly-occurring and wide-ranging side-effects, SHIFT-SLIM would probably have failed, commercially, simply from the fact that the usage method required the woman to take ten pills, five times a year, for up to two years...

Dave blanched, eyes widening in shock as he realized he'd just taken a massive over-dose of a banned, unpredictable woman's beauty aid.

"Oh, shit..." He muttered, thickly, in anxiety. His head seeming to weigh a hundred pounds all by itself, he forced himself to look at the table near the couch - the table that held the telephone. Irrelevantly, he remembered the fifteen-minutes of pride he'd felt at moving the phone away from the computer, making him get up to use it, and thus get some exercise. Now, he cursed himself as he struggled out of the chair and staggered towards the phone...

This time, he did faint. The world narrowed into a tunnel of thick gray, then darkened and vanished completely, his body collapsing on the living room floor like a marionette with it's strings cut.

* * * * *

Dave awoke the next morning feeling oddly thick-witted and detached. For several seconds, he stared upwards, thoughts swirling and streaming apart like smoke in the wind, before it occurred to him that he was laying on his back in the middle of the living room. He was sure he knew the reason why he was laying on the floor, but it escaped him at the moment - and didn't really seem important at the moment, anyway.

Indeed, the first thick, semi-coherent thought that formed in his mind was 'Huh, morning... the paper should be here...'

Brushing long stands of sandy-blond hair off his face nearly cost him an eye, though he barely reacted to the near-miss, simply - almost instinctively - being more careful about his long nails. Struggling to his feet was exceedingly awkward, but he failed to notice it in more than a passing, rapidly lost thought as he headed towards the front door of his house. He realized there was something wrong with the shoes still on his bare feet, so he simply stepped out of them and continued on, unlocking the front door and stepping out into the cool, early-morning air.

Having to concentrate to recall what he was doing, Dave focused on the newspaper sitting near the end of the walk, and slowly made his way towards it, on peripherally aware of his odd stride and balance.

It took a second for Dave to register the man laying on the sidewalk, a few feet away. Slowly, his mind backed up and replied what his eyes had 'seen' but not consciously noticed - the man doing an almost classic double-take of Dave, then tripped over his own feet.

'Huh... that's strange...' Dave thought, thickly, looking down at himself in thick-witted confusion. Slowly, a thought formed. 'Oh - he was reacting to my huge tits. That makes sense...'

He started to bend over for the paper - and then the thought's true import managed to break through, and he stood bolt upright and stared down at himself again, mouth dropping open.

His once-baggy, paint-smudged white T-shirt was now strained to the limit. Strained outwards over what was most definitely a huge, firm, round pair of tits, whose creamy, smooth flesh and dark cleavage could be easily observed through the severely-stretched neckline of the shirt, and whose long, thick nipples were clearly visible through the thin material, fully engorged in the cool air.

"Ahhhh!!!" Dave screamed in shocked horror - then did it again as the high-pitched, crystalline tones of a feminine voice registered. His hands flew up to hove in useless denial in front of his massive new 'rack'... and the sight of the slender, dainty feminine hands, with their long nails, prompted yet another shriek. Looking up at the man staring at him - her? - from the sidewalk in awed confusion, Dave screamed at him in a clear, feminine soprano.

"I've got tits!" She screamed at the now-very-confused man... then turned and fled towards the house, feeling his.. here... huge new 'assets' jiggle, bounce and jump heavily as she ran, threatening to tear her off balance, especially with the added 'rotational' motion of her wider hips, which she was now-too-aware of by the way they - and her full, firm ass - filled out the material of her cutoff jean shorts.

"This... this can't be happening...!" She gasped as she slammed the front door of the house behind her and slumped back against it. Even as she said it, though, her feminine new voice gave lie to the denial - and she had the horrible feeling that it wasn't just most of her that was feminine now. Now, those diet-pills she'd OD'ed on last night had definitely had an effect on her...

Staggering both from the unfamiliar weight distribution of her new body, and the emotional instability her new body caused, Dave stumbled into the bathroom and flicked on the light, staring in horror at what the mirror revealed...

...a huge-breasted, blonde haired woman.

She was no ravishing beauty - but nor was she ugly. Instead, she had on of those 'pleasant' faces, the sort associated with friendly, open-faced farm girls. Her body was firmly toned and slender, if a little pale, with skin that was silky-smooth and feminine. Her legs and ass were nice, but not spectacular, and her hands and feet, while feminine, weren't 'china doll' dainty. In other words, she looked like an 'average' girl... except for the fact that almost all of Dave's excess weight, as a guy, had taken up residence on her chest - as an enormous pair of firm, round tits that seemed to weigh a ton, each.

Dave stared at the mirror in slack-jawed shock, trying to take in the cute, huge-breasted blonde in the mirror. The one that was her, now. Slowly, with stunned, stiff movements, she undid the shorts she was wearing and forced them and her tight white briefs down over her womanly new hips...

...revealing a fully-formed vagina nestled in the patch of pubic hair between her milky new thighs.

Making a sort of coughing, cocking sound in the back of her altered throat, the new woman staggered back from the mirror... and bumped against the door-frame, her unfamiliar weight sending her tumbling to her more firmly padded new ass as the world spun around her.

Her mind still felt as if it were working in molasses, making it even harder to deal with what was happening to her. Awkwardly, she forced herself to her smaller new feet and staggered into the living room, braced against the wall for balance. Now her thick, cotton-filled mind was focused on one thought - getting help. Illogically, it seemed to her that just talking to somebody would somehow undo what had been done to her, as if the calm, learned tones of some sort of medical professional wear a magical cure all by themselves.

Cursing her new, longer nails, she punched out her doctor's phone number on the phone...

...or thought she did, any way.

* * * * *

Susan Delgaro wanted to be the next 'Doctor Ruth'. However, the dark-haired, fire-eyed Hispanic Sex therapist was far from that particular level of achievement. Instead, she was relegated to this lousy time-slot at a tiny radio station in a nowhere town. The place was so low-budget that she didn't even have a producer - as the calls came in, they came directly to her desk without anybody to screen them, meaning she quite often had to take boring, rambling, uninteresting people, something 'professional' radio therapists didn't have to deal with.

It also meant she sometimes had 'dead air', and she practically pounded the 'link' button for the phone line when it lit up, having 'stretched' since the last commercial, three endless minutes ago.

"Doctor Delgaro, your source of professional help." She said, quickly and professionally - but making a face as she did so. She still hadn't come up with a good 'tag line' for herself, and that was pretty bad.

"Doctor - you have to help me!" The soprano voice on the other end of the phone was nervous - as many first time callers were. The fact that she hadn't offered her name was also a common occurrence.

"Well, that's what I'm here for..." Delgaro said, calmly. "Now, why don't we call you.... 'Tina'. How's that?"

* * * * *

At the other end of the line, the new woman's eyes went unfocused for a second, her whirling, barely coherent thoughts seeming to shatter...

...then reform. Not hearing herself, her face blank and her mind numb, she said. "Yes. Yes - I am Tina. Okay."

* * * * *

Delgaro rolled her eyes at the leaden response. This one was going to be... annoying. Well, at least she hadn't argued the random name Susan had pulled out of thin air.

"Okay, Tina, what's your problem...?"

* * * * *

Tina blinked, snapping out of the daze - without being aware it had even happened. Indeed, she didn't even notice the fact that 'the Doctor' had called her Tina. If she'd gone back in her mind and replayed it, she would notice - but it seemed to her confused mind that 'Tina' was right, as natural as it had felt to be called 'Dave' before, and it slipped right past her sluggish thoughts without triggering any alarm. Instead, she was focused on the conversation she was having with the Doctor.

"I've got tits, Doctor!" She explained, awkwardly, having a hard time forming the thoughts and explanations coherently. "I mean - really big, huge tits!"

Delgaro blinked - maybe this was going to be at least a little interesting, after all.

"I take it that these, uh... 'endowments' are a recent event, and not your original size?" Delgaro asked, making sure she was understanding where this was going.

There was a confused pause. "Uh - yeah, that's right."

"I see." Delgaro said, nodding to herself. "And you aren't happy having such large breasts, now?"

The voice still sounded confused - or maybe this 'Tina' just wasn't all that bright. "Well, doctor, I... It's just that, you know, I never expected..."

She was obviously searching for words - and stammering, confused 'self-conversation' to explain things was bad for radio. Delgaro pushed her onward.

"Did somebody convince you to get bigger breasts? Or did you do it yourself, without any... 'prompting'?"

* * * * *

"Well, I did it to myself..." Tina tried to explain, deciding the doctor didn't realize the whole story. Pausing, she backed up and tried to make it all make sense for the doctor. "You see, I didn't like the way I looked, and so..."

"I understand." The doctor interrupted. "You were unhappy with the way you looked, and thought this would help. Well, I have to ask - do you think you're a more physically and sexually attractive woman now then you were before?"

That one gave Tina's mind a bit of trouble, and she responded with the 'truth', trying to explain. "Well, yeah - a lot more. See, it's not just my tits, it's my hair, and my face, and my nails, and... I mean, I've changed completely, you know what I mean?"

In her confusion, she thought that made it all clear - she'd been a man, and now was a huge-breasted woman.

Though Tina couldn't see it, Delgaro was nodding to herself again, having come to a 'logical' - but completely erroneous - conclusion. "Let me guess - you're not all that active, sexually, right?" Delgaro asked.

"Well... no, I'm not..." Tina agreed, confused.

"...and the way guys look at you now, with your new.. 'look', makes you uncomfortable? Nervous? Unsure?" Remembering the guy outside, Tina answered honestly. "Yeah."

* * * * *

This was the part the listener's loved - racy advice. Part psychology, part pornography - something to help the listener and excite the audience...

"Listen, Tine - it's natural to feel that way. It doesn't mean you have to act that way, though. You have a whole new image, Tina, and it's because you needed one - now go out and live the image. Go ahead and be the sexual, exciting woman you've made yourself into.

Even if you feel afraid, nervous and unsure, don't let anybody see that - walk proud and sexy. Let people think you know you're sexy, and comfortable with. Just be the woman you've made yourself look like, and let things go along their own course. Don't fight it - live it."

* * * * *

At the other end of the phone, Tina's face was blank again. "Yes. I'll be the woman I've become." She agreed, woodenly. "I will act proud and comfortable with my new body."

* * * * *

Susan rolled her eyes - 'Tina' was agreeing with her, but woodenly. Obviously, she was just saying what Susan wanted to hear. She tried again.

"It's more than okay to be a sexy, large-breasted woman, Tina. Don't let your fears stop you - go ahead and indulge in all the new aspects your altered look can give your life. Go ahead and enjoy the new body - and the attention it brings you. If guys find you sexy and want you to have sexual intercourse with you, that's a good thing. Go ahead - become as sexually active as a woman with your new body should be!"

* * * * *

"Yes. I will do that." Tina agreed, numbly, then hung up the phone after the doctor sighed and told her that it was all the time they had for today's calls...

Tina blinked, then shook her head, trying to clear it. Slowly, some of the 'mists' cleared from her brain, and she began to think semi-coherently.

Oddly, she didn't feel panicked anymore. Though she couldn't seem to clearly remember what, exactly, the doctor had said, it must have been good news of some sort - though nervous, frightened and confused, she didn't feel pure horrified shock anymore.

Slowly, she straightened - not aware of the fact that she made a conscious effort to do so smoothly and 'easily'... as if she were completely 'comfortable' in her new body. Indeed, she was aware of all the odd weights and balances of her new body, and they 'bothered' her - but she didn't realize she was actively using the information to 'adapt' her movements to her new 'look'.

Likewise, she was completely unaware of the actual struggle she made to give her stride a smooth, feminine glide, even though she was aware of the new and strange sensations it created as she nearly-gracefully walked towards the bedroom. Not the master bedroom, which she was using, but the 'spare' bedroom, where she'd stored all her aunt's old stuff until she could decide what to do with it. Now, she let herself into the musty-smelling room without being consciously aware of the reason she was there - her mind, still somewhat befogged, was 'consciously' focused on the thought that she was going to have to do something, but what exactly it was she would do about the fact that she'd been turned into a huge-breasted woman overnight was a bit of a stumper. She couldn't even recall whether the doctor had told her to come in, or go see a specialist, or... but for some reason, it didn't seem important enough to worry about. Instead, Tina found her body almost moving on its own, as if she were half-asleep and doing something out of habit.

"What am I going to do?" She wondered to herself, more-or-less ignoring what her body was doing as she considered her situation. 'I've been turned into a woman - and one with a huge, heavy pair of tits, at that. How am I going to change back to being myself? What am I going to tell people? How should I act...? Dear God! I'm going to have to go out in public like... like this! People will see me!'

While her mind churned over the horror of going out in public as a woman, her hands absently smoothed the pair of white cotton briefs she had just pulled on, after having absently removed the shorts and the men's briefs she'd been wearing. They were a little tight, but pretty close in size - though she didn't notice that fact.

Just as she didn't notice pulling on one of his aunt's long, beige skirts and cinching it around her slender new waist with a white leather belt. Nor was she consciously aware of pulling on a ruffled white cotton blouse over her still-T-shirt-clad new bust, buttoning the blouse in such a way that the two layers of fabric were enough to make her look 'presentable', but the undone buttons on the blouse and the stretched neckline of the shirt beneath still provided quite the eyeful of delightfully contained breast-flesh.

In fact, Tina remained completely unaware - consciously, at least - of what her body was up to, until she shook her head and realized she was just finishing applying eyeshadow.

"What the...?" Tina asked herself, stunned, staring at the reflection in the bathroom mirror. "What the hell am I doing?"

That was actually quite obvious from the results - which were surprisingly good for a novice to the skills of applying make-up and dressing as a woman. It had taken many tries to get everything looking acceptable, by the effect after the work was 'worth it'.

A pale pink lipstick coated her lips, making them look fuller and more desirable. Faint areas of blush graced her cheek, making her soft, milky skin look alive and excited, vibrant. The faintest layers of taupe eye-shadow served to enhance and high-light her eyes - while being subtle enough to appear as if she'd done nothing at all. Mascara graced her long, light new lashes.

She was also wearing a pair of gold clip-on earrings on her dainty new ear-lobes, and she became aware of the clothing she was wearing for the first time, from the skirt-and-blouse combination to the nearly knee-high beige suede boots with the four-inch tapered block heels.

So, it wasn't the 'what' that was in question, since the net effect made her look like a very attractive, somewhat 'Romantic' young woman, in the literary sense of the word. It was the 'why' that was really being questioned...

...and there was no way that the ex-man could possibly know that there was a sort of schism in her brain, caused by the psychoactive drug and the 'advice' Susan Delgaro had given her. Indeed, in a form of 'self-protection', her brain couldn't let her know that there was a logical gap between two portions of her brain. Instead, it desperately worked to provide her conscious mind with 'sane' thoughts... which meant that it would quite happily insist that '2+2' equaled 'Chartreuse', if that's what she 'needed' to hear.

Which is why she relaxed as she 'realized' what she was doing.

"Of course..." She told herself with a small smile. "I was worrying about going out in public and being seen as some sort of freak, like a guy 'hiding' in a woman's body - but all dressed up like this, nobody will be able to figure out I'm really a guy..."

Smiling at herself in the mirror for her 'stroke of genius', she turned away and headed down the hall, consciously aware of her efforts to walk smoothly and gracefully in her thankfully sturdy heels mostly hidden beneath the skirt - but she thought it was an effort to continue the 'disguise' she'd 'chosen', unaware of the fact that she couldn't have stopped walking as gracefully as she could if her life depended on it - it was an 'imperative' in her split mind, one that she wouldn't be able to circumvent at all.

Likewise, she wasn't allowed to find it odd to realize she had a near-desperate urge to go 'somewhere'... without knowing where that 'somewhere' was.

Grabbing a brown suede purse, Tina strode out of the house with as feminine step as she could manage, closing and locking the door behind her. Struggling to make her battle to walk in heels look easy and natural, she headed towards her car, parked in the carport.

Though an older Hyundai, her recent 'self-improvement' kick had given her reason to fill, sand and repaint the car herself, leaving it looking shiny and almost new. She slid behind the wheel...

...and gasped, quickly reaching down to release the catch under the seat and slide it back a bit to make room for her massive new endowments. She was wide enough to extend the shoulder-harness on the belt, but even then it was decidedly uncomfortable when she did it up, pressing across her massive new tits.

The new woman was operating in a strange near-daze, her mind occupied with the minute-to-minute tasks she was performing, without giving any real thought to why she was doing them, or where they were taking her. Though, outwardly, she appeared calm, even comfortable, inside she was a swirl of conflicting emotions, though muted by her odd sense of disassociation with her new condition.

Anxiety, disbelief and confusion were all held at bay, though nibbling at the edge of her conscious mind as she continued to perform actions without being able to question the reason she was doing them.

Starting the car, she put it into gear and carefully backed out of the driveway, trying to ignore the all-new sensations from her new body, from the way her fuller, firmer ass felt in the seat to the way her huge new tits vibrated slightly in sympathetic rhythm with the under-powered engine.

Without any conscious thought, she guided the little red car through the slowly-filling morning streets of the small city, finally pulling into the parking lot of a local mall, which - it being Saturday - was filling fairly rapidly with weekend shoppers.

The 'distant' anxiety Tina felt increased as she shut off the engine and prepared to climb out of the car, and doubts began to assault her. What was she doing here? Why was she going out in public like this? Not only as a woman, something she didn't want to be - but all 'dolloed up'...?

Fear began to rise, edging towards panic, her heart rate increasing as her breathing became shallow and rapid. The confusion and horror she felt at being turned into a woman overnight - and one with grotesquely huge breasts, at that - began to gather again, her mind sharpening from it's daze, moving towards clear, sharp thought and strong, 'real' emotions...

...and her subconscious mind couldn't let it happen. In many ways, it was like shock, where the mind fought to deny what it was seeing and feeling, dismissing it as 'impossible'... or finding another, 'logical' reason for what it was perceiving or doing. Her brain whirled and spun, and Tina slumped forward slightly as the world seemed to swim around her...

...then her mind once more sunk into the thick-witted state of shock, as she found herself irrationally convinced that she was doing something to rectify this situation, the one she wasn't 'really' worried about.

"The doctor must have told me to come here..." She said aloud, too brightly, her tensed muscles relaxing. "I'll find the cure to this at the mall..."

Illogically, she was in the mind-set where this was a simple 'condition' one that would be cleared up fairly easily - it was the only way her brain would look at the situation.

From one perspective, she was insane. Tina had a split from reality, because her current reality was simply too much to deal with - but the gap wasn't all that wide, so she wasn't a raving lunatic, unable to 'interface' with the reality everybody else was dealing with. In psychiatric terms, the new woman was 'Mildly Delusional, with minor schizophrenic errata' - in other words, her brain was 'lying' to her, keeping her 'happy' with 'bent' views of reality, while a semi-formed second 'persona' was overlaid it all to keep it coherent - a persona created, unwittingly, by Dr. Susan Delgaro.

Once more 'calmed', Tina slid from the car and locked it, moving towards the glass doors to the mall with that deceptively confident, easy stride that took almost all her concentration to maintain.

So much concentration, in fact, that despite the fact she seemed to be bright-eyed and aware, she didn't notice the looks she was getting from other shoppers as she made it to the glass doors and walked inside. and she was only peripherally aware of the guy who'd jumped forward to open those doors for her. Just as she was only faintly aware of her muttered 'thank you' and pleasant smile of gratitude in response.

Indeed - she was consciously aware of very little, other than her own - mostly unrealized - efforts to match actions and 'persona' to the body she now wore.

Her mind, however, was recording everything, even if it didn't parade through her consciousness first. Subconsciously, she was aware of the sensations of her altered body as she walked with easy-appearing feminine grace that was struggle to maintain. It was aware of the looks she was getting.... and it was causing her, unawares, to respond appropriately to the different looks. Some of them she turned her nose up at, slightly, indicating a matching disdain for the mostly-female looks of doubt, disdain or disgust. For startled looks and double-takes, she gave a small smile and a tiny shrug. but enough of a shrug to cause her huge new tits to jiggle and ripple in a very interesting way.

For looks of open appraisal or raw sexual innuendo, she reserved a small frown or a quick, haughty turn of her head, all done without her conscious knowledge.

For shy-yet-interested, politely attracted looks. she gave a small, thoughtful smile, perhaps even with a slow, semi-joking wink that usually caused the guy to flush...

This all happened well below the threshold of her conscious mind, by-play that she 'missed' completely as she concentrated on maintaining her feminine persona - and wondered what it was she was looking for in the mall as she wandered aimlessly around, appearing to be your average window shopper with an anything-BUT-average bust-line.

So, at first, she had no idea what was happening at the 'below the threshold' level...

The mall boasted a small, four-screen movie theater, and the two guys had paused to look at the posters outside the closed cinema. About her own age, there was nothing remarkable about them at all. One of them was about average height, with dark-brown hair and beard, and carrying some extra weight, though not enough to him to really be called 'fat'. His companion was taller, and almost painfully skinny in a whipcord-lean sort of way, his face narrow, intense, and faintly marred with old acne scars below a long man of black hair. It was the shorter of the two who first spotted her, doing a nearly classic double-take, then nudging his friend and asking a question...

From their position and hers, they weren't getting a very good look at her - or rather, at her chest. Though still consciously unaware of the guys at all, her subconscious mind watched the entire by-play in the reflection of the glass, and realized that the guys were wondering if they were really seeing what they thought they were...

Consciously, Tina thought it was because her feet were a little sore from standing in one position too long, despite how 'easy and comfortable' she was making herself look. So, she didn't really think anything at all about shifting her position, putting her weight on the other foot and rotating her body to the side...

...which ended any doubts the two guys might have had as their eyes went wide as the sheer size of her immense breasts were verified.

The guys realized they were staring and quickly yanked their eyes away, blushing, and headed towards a nearby set of doors, digging packs of cigarettes from the appropriate pocket with less skill than usual, as they were continuously - almost helplessly - grabbing the occasion, guilt glance at her.

A moment later, Tina felt an urge to head out the same doors, unaware of what was 'really' driving her as she swayed gracefully to the exit and stepped out into the rapidly growing heat of the day.

When she spotted the two guys sitting on a nearby bench, smoking, she 'rationalized' the sudden urge she felt with the thought that this might be why she came here. Maybe what it was she was supposed to do to help cure her was smoke - though it didn't make much sense, it was enough for her confused mind to accept as 'valid'...

So, she walked over to the two guys and asked for a cigarette. She was consciously aware of doing this - but HOW she did it went right past her conscious mind. The fact that she'd clasped her hands together and pressed them between her knees as she leaned forward was lost on her - as was the fact that it caused her upper arms to push into her breasts, lifting them 'up-and-out'.. as she bent over and displayed an awe-inspiring view of milky cleavage to the guys.

She was also unaware of the breathy tone as she asked for the cigarette. or the way she let her hand linger on the bearded one's hand for an eternal moment as she accepted.

Or the way she smiled at the taller one for a second before accepting the light he offered.

Taking a quick drag of the cigarette, she coughed slightly. She'd used to smoke, but that had been a couple of years ago, in a sort of subconscious bid to gain acceptance with her then-peers. Still, the habit came back to damned easy...

"Thanks..." She said, holding out a hand. "I'm Tina, by the way>"

"Uh.... Grant. Grant, uh... Stevens." The bearded one managed to stammer. The taller one was a little more articulate in giving his name as 'Jeff'. but he, unlike Grant, didn't make any effort to look her in the eyes as he did so, instead staring directly at the vast curve of her bust as he spoke.

Tina shifted slightly, thinking the warmth she felt was a blush at having her tits stared at, though she didn't say anything to Jeff about it.

She was completely unaware of the fact that she actually arched her back a bit, to make her already unmistakable bust even more prominent. especially since her huge, thick nipples were now fully engorged and easily visible through the fabric of the blouse.

She was also unaware of the reason she'd shifted her weight - the warm, damp feeling emanating in her crotch.

So, she thought she was merely making conversation as she took another drag of her cigarette and 'causally' asked: "So, what are you two guys up to today?"

She was completely unaware of the long, heavy-lidded side-ways glance she gave them while asking. or the way she very slowly licked her lips as her gaze dropped downwards for a few, noticeable, seconds.

"Well, we..." Grant started, awkwardly - but Jeff interrupted with; "Nothing. Nothing at all."

"Really?" She said, not hearing the breathy interest she put into the question. She also thought she was merely providing some 'useless information' when she continued. "I'm just about to head back to my place."

Jeff all-but-leered. "Oh, really?"

She was aware of that look, of the way he was staring at her tits, of his obvious reactions....

..and, amazingly, she was aware and conscious of what she did next. In fact, it was a very conscious discussion that let her do it, based on a very clear memory.

Though she didn't realize she'd been 'prompting' the guys responses, especially Jeff's, she had been aware of some of the results - and of the difference in the way the two acted.

Which struck her as very familiar indeed - which brought back the memory. It was from a few years ago, when she - as a guy - had found herself in a semi-friendship with somebody who wasn't quite 'Mr. Popular', but still closer to the 'center' of social acceptance. She hadn't particularly liked the guy... but had been desperate enough for friendship, and unsure enough about himself, to go along with it...

Which was why, with calm deliberation, she gave Jeff a long, hard, cold stare...

...then turned to Grant and smiled warmly.

"Would you like to join me?" She asked, sweetly, quite consciously adding sexual innuendo to her every movement as she leaned forward, pulling her shoulders back a bit to emphasize her chest even more. "I'd really enjoy spending some time with..."

She let her voice grow suddenly cool, turning her head to favor Jeff with another cold glance. "... a rea/gentleman..."

...then the warm honey crept back into her voice as she faced Grant again. "...who knows how to behave around a lady." She could practically hear each of the guy's jaws hit the ground.

She knew exactly how Grant was feeling right now - unsure, excited and hesitant, heart racing a million miles an hour as he was filled with a mixture of hope and self-doubt...

It was exactly the way Tina would have felt as a man, if faced with this situation.

So she didn't let his doubts stop him. Reaching out, she took his hand gently in her own and tugged, getting him to his feet and favoring him with a long, slow smile. Throwing one, last cold glance over her shoulder at Jeff, she wrapped an arm around Grant's waist and began to walk towards her car, feeling his warm body snuggled - a little stiffly - against her side.

She led him to her car and smiled at him as she let him in, then slid behind the wheel and started up the car, putting it into gear and pulling out of the spot while Grant's mind struggled to catch up with the impossible, fantasy-like events occurring to him...

For her part, Tina's mind was also otherwise occupied.

'What the hell am I doing?' She asked herself, her face not showing any of the confusion or shock running around in her mind. 'Sure, I just boosted Grant's ego so high that he might actually gain some self-respect... but he thinks I want to have sex with him...!'

Then her mind calmly informed her of the sensations of her body. Of her rock-hard nipples. Of the not-unpleasant warmth thrumming through her body. Of the very pleasant warm wetness between her thighs...

'Oh... My... GOD! I do want to have sex with him!' She thought with disgust... which faded quite a bit as she realized something else. 'But... it's not just this female body that's excited, though that's the main 'sexual' part. God... I'm horny...! But... but Grant seem like a nice guy. An awful lot like the guy I was...'

Her mind whirling, she found herself actually considering having sex with grant. After all, she was going to find a cure for this 'condition', and nobody would ever know that she'd not only been female, but had had sex as one. It would be her own guilty little secret... and not only would it be a fantasy-come-true for Grant, but it would ease the sexual desires she was feeling. Besides, it had been ages since she'd gotten laid, as a guy... should she really turn down this chance for what would definitely be pleasurable sex? She was smart enough to know that sex was good for women, too, even if it was different...

On the other hand... it just felt so wrong...

She was trying to deal with the unexpected confusion, when Grant cleared his throat nervously and spoke...

"Uh, Tina...." He said awkwardly, hands fluttering nervously at his lap in a vain attempt to his the way his pants were bulging. "I, uh... really appreciate what you did back there. Thanks. It was... very kind of you. You, uh... you can just drop me off, uh.. anywhere along here..."

She looked at him - nervous-but-excited, obviously very aroused... yet trying to give her an 'out'. Partly as gentlemanly behavior... but mainly because he couldn't bring himself to believe that a woman like her was really attracted to him, sexually.

That seemed to spear down into her soul and stab her right through the heart - and Tina knew exactly what she was going to do. For the first time since her change, she was thinking with all of her brain, feeling all of her emotions - and she wasn't 'going crazy' with the disparity between feminine body and male mind. No, the fact that she was a woman was less-important-but-integral to the fact that the person beside her was in a very real sort of pain...

...and, thanks to this body that she'd never wanted, there was something she could do about it, even if the thought gave her some misgivings.

Looking around, she guided the little car off the street and into the entrance of the Park Drive. While Grant unbuckled his belt, obviously thinking she was simply pulling over to let him out, she let the car continue down the tree-lined road until she found a packed-dirt parking spot screened almost completely by bushes. She eased the car into the little hidey-hole and looked over at Grant, who was looking around in mild confusion as she turned off the engine.

"What... what's going on...?" He asked in confusion - and it was painfully obvious to Tina that he still couldn't bring himself to believe that...

"Do you think I'm... unattractive, Grant?" Tina asked, quietly, kindly.

Grant looked shocked. "Good Lord, No!" He said, forcefully - then blushed, retreating back into his unassuming persona. "I, uh... I mean, I think you're very beautiful..."

"Oh - I'm beautiful..." She said, softly. "Just not... 'sexy', perhaps. Maybe it's my tits." She undid her own seat belt and lightly hefted her huge tits, feeling the pleasure of her own hands on her massive, round, medicine-ball-sized breasts. "That's it, I guess - you think they're freakishly huge..."

"No!" Grant said, then blushed deeper. "I mean, I... I think you are very sexy, Tina... and, I, uh... I really like your, uh.. you... size..."

"Are you sure...?" She asked, gently... and as he stared, wide eyes, slowly undid the buttons on her blouse and slipped it off, then peeled the straining T-shirt off over her head.

Her huge, incredibly firm tits bounced twice, then shimmied to a stop, riding proud and firm on her slender ribcage, pink nipples standing proudly erect from her large, domed aureole.

"Do you still think they're sexy, Grant...?" She asked, turning sideways in the driver's seat and presenting him a full-on view of her massive globes of tit-flesh.

"Yuh... Yeah..." Grant said, thickly, eyes blinking rapidly.

"Then why aren't you touching them?" She asked, softly. "I've done everything but beg you... but I'll do that, too, if that's what it takes. Grant, you are a cute, intelligent guy... and you're not a rude, lust-driven jerk like so many guys are. I like that - really like that. But... but you have to know when to stop being too polite. Grant... I want you. Please... don't turn me away..."

"I... I..." Grant stammered, beet red... then he managed a small, nervous grin.

"I have no idea what to say right now..." He admitted, nervously. "I, uh.. I'm not really too good at this..." "So, don't say anything...." Tina whispered, leaning even further forward...

Taking a deep breath, Grant hesitantly reached out... and lightly cupped her huge, firm tits with shaking hands.

"Yes..." Tina sighed, letting her eyes slip closed. His touch was... nice. Hesitant and unsure, and not terribly exciting - but not unpleasant either, and she was doing this as much - or more - for him then she was for herself.

However, her reaction was just right. With a little more confidence, he began to massage her massive new tits... and now the pleasure started to rise.

Then his warm lips touched one thick, sensitive nipple, and he alternated sucking and licking the engorged nub - and this time her soft moan was completely genuine.

He might be 'awkward' about this... but he was gaining confidence quickly, and she found herself wrapping her hands around his head as his touch became more sure... and more pleasurable.

She felt a brief moment of worry when his mouth left her nipples, opening her eyes to see why he'd stopped... just in time to see his face near her own, his hands going around her waist and pulling her tightly - but not roughly - against him as their lips met...

She closed her eyes and just went along with the kiss. She felt a momentary hesitation inside herself - but a kiss was a kiss, and there was one guy and one girl sharing it, and who cared that the woman used to be a guy herself - that didn't make the kiss any less pleasurable.

She threw herself into the kiss. It wasn't a hard, passionate kiss, but a slow, tender one... but very, very pleasurable, and Tina enjoyed it immensely.

Reaching down between their bodies, she began to unzip Grant's fly - and she felt him stiffen, still not positive...

His hands one more uncertain, she hesitantly reached for the clasp on her side-closing skirt, undoing it and hesitantly reaching for her panties...

...which were sopping wet with her desire, convincing him at last.

"Now, Grant..." She moaned, letting herself give into her body's desires with only a faint pang of 'disgust' as she shifted around...

The Hyundai was a small car. There wasn't much room, and certainly not built for what they wanted to do. But 'where there's a will there's a way', and there was a hell of a lot of will-power involved in the moment. With the seat pushed all the way back and the passenger's side door opened, there was enough room - and Tina sighed in pleasure as, for the first time, she felt a hard, throbbing cock fill her wet new womanhood.

'God, that feels so... satisfying...!' She thought, stunned with the emotional pleasure being filled brought, as well as physical.

Then she realized something... and giggled slightly before she could stop herself. Her eyes popped open, horrified what that inadvertent giggle, caused by a wayward thought, might have done to Grant's fragile ego...

...only to find him grinning at her, as best he could with the lower half of his face obscured in her massive cleavage.

"Like a glove..." He gasped, and she had a second of emotional pleasure at the fact he got the same 'joke' as her. Not only was her tight new cunt and his average-sized cock a perfect fit for each other... but it was as if their individual height and build had been tailored for each other. His small, firm gut was just enough to press warmly against her belly, while her huge tits fit the rounded indentation above, from chest to shin. Almost every square inch of the front of their bodies was touching the other...

Then thought was given over to instinct as they both began to move, slowly and carefully at first, pleasure thrumming through their bodies as they felt each other out for rhythm and positions...

"Oh..." Tina moaned, pleasure building as they found the right rhythm, bodies moving faster and more powerful, with more assurance. The pace increased, and so did the pleasure, causing her to moan lower, longer and with more primal pleasure - a sound matched by Grant's own sounds of pleasure.

Still, the pleasure continued to build as they had sex in the passenger's seat of the little car, sweat starting to coat their bodies from the oh-so-pleasurable exertions, wonderful friction occurring not only in each of their genitalia, but across the whole front of their bodies as they writhed in incredible rhythm.

Each was focusing on bringing the other pleasure, and that combined effort was making what they were doing more than just a 'quickie', no matter how it might look to any stunned passerby who might happen upon the scene. The pleasure each felt continued to rise, building and rebuilding - in a steadily growing curve for Grant, in slow, redoubled waves of pleasure for the new woman who writhed atop him.

Then the pleasure reached a crescendo and, a bare instant apart, then came.

Tina screamed out, stunned at the pure, pervasive, all-body pleasure that thundered through her at climax, centered in her crotch but spreading out to claim her entire body. She writhed atop Grant, control of her muscles lost in the orgasmic pleasure she was feeling...

...and she didn't notice as her leg hit the aging, slipping gear-shift, knocking the car into gear.

Indeed, it took them a second to realize the car was moving as they collapsed, spent, into each other's arms. Entangled, they realized the vehicle was gathering speed, moving through the screen of bushes and down the slope behind them...

"Hey...!" Grant managed to get out, as they struggle in post-orgasmic exhaustion to untangle themselves...

They didn't have a chance. The impact of the front bumper against the tree half-way down the slope was fairly mild, all things considered - but the position they were in was more than enough for the quick halt to snap Tina's head back, slamming it into the slight curve of the roof near the windshield...

...and for the new woman, the world ceased to exist as unconsciousness claimed her.

ONE YEAR LATER

The doorbell chimed just as Tina took her first bite of salad, sitting in front of the TV.

Putting the bowl of leafy green aside, she glanced down at the expanse of her custom-made cream-colored silk blouse to ensure she hadn't dribbled any vinaigrette dressing on herself from the involuntary movement her hand had made at the unexpected sound.

Reassured, she rose gracefully from the chair and smoothed her knee-length black shirt over her nylon-clad legs before gliding gracefully towards the front door, the black pumps with their five-inch heels keeping an-oh-so-feminine tempo on the hardwood floor. She knew wearing heels in the house was hard on the flooring... but for some reason she just loved the sound they made, not to mention the way they enhanced her legs and gave her a lovely, swaying stride. Her fiancée, Grant, sometimes joked that, given the way she was practically obsessed with the way she dressed, moved and appeared, it was almost like she had some sort of inner need to 'reassure' herself of her femininity. Which, of course, was utterly ridiculous - nobody who so much as glanced at her could ever doubt her femininity, what with her carefully-maintained trim figure and huge, firm bust that she was oh-so-proud-of, despite the current 'feminist' thinking on the matter, thank-you-very-much.

Reaching the front door, she paused for a quick glance in the mirror hanging there. There were a hell of a lot of mirrors in her and Grant's house, and she was always looking in them. Part of it was to check that everything was 'just right', like she was doing now, lightly patting her carefully-styled hair and checking her flawlessly applied make-up.

The other part of it was the fact that she just loved admiring herself. Maybe some women - 'Femi-Nazis', she called them - would be disgusted by the fact that she just loved everything about herself, including her magnificent breasts, but that didn't stop the surge of pleasure that she got every time she saw her abundant femininity in the mirror. The fact that the love of her life also thought she was the most gorgeous woman in the world was an added bonus...

Reassured of her appearance, she opened the front door with the same, conscious grace she applied to her every waking movement.

The woman standing on the doorstep looked Tina up and down, quickly - while Tina returned the gesture, not without a twinge of the old Green-Eyed Monster.

The woman on the doorstep was, quite simply, stunning. Taller than Tina, she had a trim, slightly athletic build that was definitely - almost defiantly - feminine. Her nylon-clad legs were long and remarkably shapely under the hem of the stylish suede skirt she wore, more perfectly contoured than Tina's own legs were, even after the endless hours of precise exercise Tina had used to get them pretty damned sexy in their own right. The other woman's waist was about as slender as Tina's own, carefully maintained-and-corseted waist... but at least the bust under the white cotton blouse was nowhere as impressive as Tina's own, though this woman would be considered 'buxom' by most people, with her EEE-cup endowments.

It was scant consolation for Tina, however, given the fact that this tall, lithe woman had the face of a Countess. It was the first analogy that sprang to Tina's mind as she gazed with envy at the woman's proud-yet-gorgeous features, with her slender nose, full-yet-firm lips and rich, green eyes... all surrounded by a carefully styled mane of rich, red hair. Tina wished she could believe it was a dye-job... but no company had ever managed to quite capture that particular shade...

The woman's eyes, as lovely as they were, showed Tina a hint of anxiety, as well as other less identifiable emotions. Then the woman spoke - in a rich contralto, damn it - and said, "Tina? Tina... Seaton?"

Tina blinked. "Uh... Tina Smith, actually..." She grinned. "But only until July, when it becomes Tina Stevens."

"Smith?" The woman inquired, a doubtful look in her eyes - which was easy to see, as she was staring directly into Tina's own, as if searching for something in there... which made Tina nervous, more so than she would have thought.

"Well, that's what is says on my ID..." She said, nearly stammering, while part of her wondered why she was explaining this to a complete stranger. "I, uh.. was in an accident. I had - still have, I guess - amnesia..."

The woman looked startled, then stared closer at Tina's face... and sighed softly, her body relaxing. "Oh, I see. I'm sorry to hear that. It must be hard on you..."

Tina relaxed, herself. "Oh - not really. Sure, not having a past can be a little awkward, especially at cocktail parties... but I like the present I'm living in. Love it, actually. Aside from the short legal hassles that came from being in the car belonging to some guy who apparently vanished, the past year has been pure heaven - and since that legal hassle was dropped due to any evidence whatsoever, it's not even annoying."

"I see..." The woman said, nodding. "Well, congratulations on your impending nuptials... and I'm sorry to have bothered you." The gorgeous red-head started to turn away, and Tina held out a hand in confusion. "Hold on - what is it you wanted?"

The woman's small smile was very odd indeed. "I wanted to thank somebody... but I guess I've got the wrong person. I'm sorry to have bothered you."

"Oh - well, I hope you find this other Tina you're looking for." Tina replied. Shutting the door, she didn't hear the red-head's response.

* * * * *

"Somehow, I don't think I ever will..." Pam said, softly, with a faint hint of sorrow as she glided towards her car, parked at the curb.

Sliding behind the wheel of her new Jag, Pam paused and looked down at what rested on the other tan leather seat. Softly, almost reverently, she ran her long-nailed fingers over the white plastic curve of the pill-bottle.

The pill bottle that she'd been given by her boss at the Estate Sale company, after she'd complained about the weight she'd gained after her Las Vegas vacation, with all its 'all-you-can-eat' buffets.

Her boss had been happy to give them to her. After all, that was the kind of boss he was. Hell - if he hadn't been an easy-going, friendly man, she'd never have been working there in the first place.

It wasn't every boss who was willing to work with a pre-op transsexual trying to earn enough money for the final step.

It wasn't every pre-op transsexual that had heaven drop into her lap, either. So what if those few who knew her 'real' history thought the surgeons had done an exceptionally good job? She alone knew that, somehow, it was the pills that had made her fondest wish come true.

It seemed a shame that she was the only one that knew about the pills. She'd thought maybe the previous owner had used them and then 'hidden' herself with the amnesia story - but, looking into Tina's eyes had shown no sign of deceit.

Looking at Tina's bust had also convinced Pam that the woman had been female all the way through. Perhaps less attractive before, which would explain those ridiculously huge tits and her obvious obsession with maximizing her beauty in every way possible - but what guy, even a TS, would be willing to lug those monsters around?

Still and all, to Pam's way of thinking it was almost a sin that some pills had been 'wasted' on a woman who could have had surgery to get what she wanted, when these pills could give a TS what medical science could only emulate...

...which, of course, brought her back to the question that had been nagging at her since her own transformation. She still had enough pills for one more 'make-over'.... Who was she going to give them to...?

Mind still churning that one over, the once-male woman put the car into gear and pulled away from the curb.

Radiant

By Gunslinger

"Well, well, well - what do we have here...?"

At the sound of the deep, darkly amused voice, an involuntary squeak of fear was torn from Gary Richards' throat. His heart, already pounding from unexpected physical exertion, began to thunder so hard and so fast that it seemed as if there were a jackhammer attempting to break free of his ribcage.

Leaning forward over the hole he'd just finished digging, Gary felt his grip on the worn wooden handle of the shovel tighten, feeling the solid heft of the implement that he was suddenly very aware could double as quite a serviceable weapon. For a long second, the dusty, tired twenty-two-year old considered just swinging away - and then he took a deep breath and let go of the shovel's handle.

Clenching his teeth together in a mixture of anger and resigned, familiar fear, the gangly, sunburned young man turned to face his tormentor.

Leaning against a tree, his thickly muscled arms crossed over his deep, barrel chest, Rocco 'Rocky' Franzetti smirked at the sight of the dirt covering his tall, angular prey. Short, but broad-shouldered and so heavily muscled that he was nearly as wide as he was tall, Rocky had to tilt his head back to look up at Gary's tight-lipped face - but despite the disparity in height, there was no mistaking who held the upper hand. There was more shear muscle packed in Rocky's five feet, seven inches of height than on Gary's sparse six- foot two frame.

"Rocky." Gary greeted his nemesis with a sort of tight formality. "This is private property, you know."

"What'cha gonna do?" Rocky wanted to know. "Call the cops? Well, go right ahead. I think I saw a pay at the gas station down the road."

Rocky smiled nastily, teeth gleaming against a naturally dusky skin-tone made a deep bronze by his tan. Uncrossing his arms, he jerked on thick thumb in the direction of the nearest phone - down the narrow game-trail that he was currently blocking.

"What do you want, Rocky?" Gary asked, refusing to be baited.

"Well, gee, just satisfyin' my curiosity is all. See, I was on a date with Cindy, that cute babe from the county registrar's office, and when she told me what you did, I said to myself, 'Now why would stick-boy want to buy forty square feet of the most worthless land within a hundred miles?'"

Pasting an exaggerated expression of confusion onto his face, Rocky over-acted quizzically scratching at his thick, slightly curly mop of ebony hair.

"So, I just hadda come down here and find out what you was up to." Rocky said, dropping the act and approaching the hole Gary had just finished digging. With every step, the deep-bronzed slabs of muscle layering his body shifted and tensed, well displayed by the white T-shirt and cut-off denim shorts he wore. For a long, tense second, Gary held his ground against the approaching juggernaut of America-Italian muscle... and then, grudgingly, he backed away from the hole, and the just uncovered object laying in the bottom of the irregular crater.

"Well, lookee here..." Rocky said, grinning down at the small, cylindrical 'chest' laying in the bottom of the pit. Reaching down, he grabbed the handles at either end of the tubular stainless-steel casing and hefted it, grunting.

"Damn, it's heavy for it's size." Rocky said, muscles bulging - and grinning like a mad-man. "Heavy enough to be packed full of gold. Is that it, stick-boy? Gold?"

"I don't know what's in it." Gary admitted, tightly. "I found a fragment of a memo in the archives. It just said something was buried out here, but not what or why. It was real curiosity that made me come out here and dig it up."

"Sure, and you're such a law-abiding citizen that you bought the land just to keep from trespassing. The thought that owning the land made anything you dug up legally yours never crossed your mind, right?" Rocky chuckled. "Let's see what's in here."

Curiosity piqued despite the annoyance of having Rocky 'do the honors', Gary leaned forward...

...and Rocky cradled the strange casing in one arm, clasping it close to his chest as he undid the clasp and flipped the curved lid open with his other hand.

"What?" Gary demanded, trying to peer over the broad shoulder as Rocky kept turning to keep his back to the taller man. "What is it?"

"Some damned ball of metal." Rocky said, disgusted. "The rest of the thing's taken up by this dark gray metal, and this kinda bluish 'ball-bearing' is sitting in it, and... hey! This ball-bearing is warm!"

Alarms began to go off in Gary's head.

"Close the lid!" Gary shouted, forgetting his enmity for the muscular man in the heat of the moment. "Close it, quick!" "Huh?" Rocky said, startled by the raw fear in the other young man's voice.

"Radiation!" Gary shouted. "That's a lead-lined case, and that 'ball-bearing' is plutonium, or uranium, or something!"

Rocky slammed the case shut, the spring-loaded latch snapping shut automatically as he thrust the casing away from him. It thudded to the ground, rolling down the slope until it came to rest with the 'underside', unseen until that very instant, resting face-up...

...and displaying the unmistakable tri-foil symbol for radiation engraved into the metal surface.

"Oh, shit - I need to get..." Rocky started to say, urgently - and then he groaned, suddenly shivering, as a chill ran up and down his spine.

A chill followed almost immediately by a flush of heat that seemed to burn through his body even as another bout of chilled shivers shook his body.

"Something's.. happening..." He gasped, teeth chattering. "How.. can anything... be happening... so soon...?"

Wide-eyed, Gary took two half-steps backward, shaking his head numbly as his mouth worked, unable to bring himself to voice his knowledge that, if entering the bloodstream from a cut, plutonium could kill within minutes.

"Hurts..." Rocky gasped, face contorted as a cold sweat dripped down his dark golden brow. "Bones.. aching..."

He began rubbing his arms in an effort to warm himself - and Gary watched in horror as the hair under the big, meaty hands sloughed off, one of the signs of radiation poisoning.

"Gary..." Rocky pleaded, stumbling a few tottering steps towards his old target. "Help.. me..."

Then, with a few feet still separating him from Gary, Rocky stopped dead, throwing his head back and letting out a strangled scream as his body shook...

...and began to grow.

As Rocky writhed and moaned, his bones began to lengthen. Deep beneath sinew and flesh, they began to stretch like taffy. They retained the same mass as they always had, thinning as they grew longer, the muscles and ligaments being pulled into new configurations under skin that was stretching and warping.

"What's... happening... to me?" Rocky begged to know in a nearly animalistic groan of pain - that rose steadily in pitch with every word, as his ribcage stretched and lengthened, pulling it slimmer and finer.

His legs stretched ever upward, the bone structure becoming finer under once-slab-like muscle now being pulled tighter and smoother as they were forced to trade density for distance coverage.

"Help me Gary - help me!" The writhing, changing figure in front of the angular young man pleaded in a rising voice - but even if there had been anything Gary could have done, it wouldn't have mattered, for he was paralyzed in shock, staring at his old arch-nemesis' shifting form.

With muffled popping sounds, Rocky's spine grew longer - but as it lengthened, it also began pushing outwards at the base, curving outward and upward, pushing his ass back and upwards inside the jean shorts that were being pulled tight against Rocky's crotch.

A crotch that presented no visible bulge to Gary's stunned eyes.

Slowly, Gary's stunned mind began to accept the fact that there was something more going on her than simple radiation positioning - an inexplicable conclusion reinforced by the continuing changes going on before his stunned eyes.

The ass being pushed up and back was filling out, acquiring a certain - and noticeable - shape, one rarely associated with men.

The legs, now no longer bulky and slab-sided, were acquiring a thicker layer of fat that smoothed the hairless skin over the athletic musculature that was left.

The hands and feet, slimmer now, were also proportionally smaller given the still-increasing height of the steadily slimmer body...

...a body that was also steadily becoming more feminine with every passing second.

A fact that Rocky belatedly began to clue in on. Caught up in the pain of the transformation, Rocky hadn't registered his cock and balls retracting back into his body to form an unmistakably feminine cleft under the tight caress of the now-taut jean shorts - but he couldn't possibly miss what was happening to his chest, as the t-shirt began to push outwards from his denuded ribcage, driven by twin mounds of firm flesh swelling on his chest.

"I.. I.. I'm growing... tits!" Rocky screamed - and the higher pitch from the stretched vocal cords registered, as did other now- unmistakable 'symptoms' of her new condition: "I'm turning into a woman!"

Pulled steadily higher on her slimming waist as her torso lengthened, her t-shirt now began to ride up faster - as fabric was taken up to tent over the perky, conical shapes filling it out.

Shapes that were unmistakable for what they were - breasts.

Her still-firming ass was continuing to push out and up, becoming more prominent, as the muscles failed to keep up with the bone growth, causing the curvature...

...but that was only the first example of this effect, as it began to show up in other places.

The still-changing new woman gasped and shudder-stepped out of her now ill-fitting new shoes, slim new feet rising steadily higher as the curvature of her arches increased, forcing her to stand tip-toe.

"Make it tthtop!" She begged, helplessly, teetering on tip-toe - then she blinker, her dark eyes - which were looking bigger by the second as her face stretched and thinning - almost comically cross as she peered down past her slimming nose.

Her tongue naked out between her plumping lips - and kept snaking out. It was getting longer, too...

"Whattht happening to me?" She lisped, though the answer was self evident - as the 'bowing' effect hit shoulders that weren't nearly as broad in proportion to her body anymore. Her shoulders were forced backward, forcing her chest forward and upwards, making her swelling tits all the more prominent on the steadily less-adequate shirt...

...tits that were no longer taut cones, but firm domes... and rapidly pushing outwards into spheres.

"Help..." She whimpered as the changes wound down to a stop - leaving Gary to stare in shock at an individual who, aside from the rich bronze tan and somewhat curly mop of deep black hair topping her off, bore no noticeable resemblance to Rocky Franzetti.

The new recipe of her body was two equally large doses of cute and sexy, stirred well and seasoned with a dash of exotic before being poured into six-foot-four-inches of pure woman.

The denim shorts now rode low on her slim, supple hips, molded skin-tight to a mouth-watering ass and the feminine mound between her taut thighs. The long, bronzed, coltishly-sexy legs seemed to run endless down to the dainty feet curved to pull her shapely heels nearly five inches higher than the cute toes she was precariously balanced on.

Above the hip-riding waistband of the taut shorts lay a toned, slender waist well revealed by a t-shirt now straining over a pair of melon-sized breasts - and prize-winning melons at that, full and firm beneath a shirt barely long enough to cover clearly-defined nipples that were of 'average' length for her big-as-volleyball breasts, but remarkably thick.

Those breasts were mounted on a slim ribcage with now femininely-scaled shoulders pulled back as if she were trying to show off her spherical new endowments, and those shoulders smoothly led to a long, slender neck upon which perched a slender, fine-boned face boasting big, dark eyes and pouting cupid's-bow lips.

Gary gaped at the bronzed vision of femininity before him, stunned by the transformation wrought over the past few minutes - and more than just a bit aroused by the tall, supple woman who was, quite frankly, the sexiest woman the confirmed 'tits-and-ass man' had ever seen, ex-male notwithstanding. Almost despite himself, Gary found himself slowly getting an erection at the sight of the stunned woman staring back at him...

..and then the new woman lost her precarious balance, and pitched forward.

Quickly, Gary stepped forward and grabbed at her - and suddenly found himself with an armful of very warm, supple woman. Her huge, firm tits pressed hard into his chest as she slumped against him, and Gary's encircling hands, almost of their own accord, found themselves cupping the most tautly delectable ass-cheeks it had even been his pleasure to feel.

"Stop feeling up my ass, you pervert...!" The new woman said, the anger in her voice severely cut by the effort it took to remain coherent with her long, supple new tongue. She pushed herself off of Gary...

...and staggered, spinning around, and only Gary's quick grab kept her from sprawling in the dirt.

This time, he found himself holding her with her mouth-watering ass grinning against his now hard cock, and his hands 'supporting' her by virtue of her tautly soft tits.

"You faggot!" She said, pulling herself away from Gary again, disgusted to realize that 'Stick Boy' was turned on by her hatefully feminine and definitely unwanted new form. Oh-so-carefully she found her balance, tottering on tip-toe between the top-heavy drag of her damnably sensitive new chest-melons, and the counterweight of her round, outthrust new ass. Carefully, forced to you dainty little steps, she turned to face a man she now had to look down at slightly to see eye-to-eye. "For god's sake, Gary, you touch me again, and I'll..."

"I'm sorry..." Gary started, automatically contrite - and then he paused, a speculative look coming to his eyes as he slowly started to smile.

"Hmmm. " He mused, quite openly eyeing the new woman's long, lean, buxom figure. "You know, Rocky, you're much more arousing than threatening, now."

"What's that supposed to mean?" She demanded, angrily.

Gary, with the shoe finally on the other foot after nearly fifteen years of psychological torture at Rocky's hands, pretended not to hear. "Rocky Doesn't seem to suit you any more." He 'mused', striking a thoughtful pose. "You know, I think 'Sandy' would be much more appropriate - no, wait, 'Sandi' with an 'I'. Yes, that's much better. Don't you think so. Sandi?"

"What?" She demanded, incredulously. "Why you little. "

She hurled herself at him in a deep rage, the shock and fear of what had been done to her finding an outlet in anger, and she put everything she had into the vicious right cross...

...that almost literally bounced harmlessly off the angular young man as she went sprawling in the dirt at his feet. "Oh, I guess you don't like that name." Gary laughed.

"Get out of here, you bastard!" The new woman screamed. Gary looked down at her - and shrugged.

"Okay."

She watched through narrowed eyes as he did just that, turning and starting to head back down the path. Confused, wondering what was going on, she started to get to her feet...

...and couldn't.

Inexperienced with her radically altered center of gravity, her once-powerful muscles uncoordinated and much weaker, she just couldn't work out the sequence of movements necessary to get back on her feet.

At the thought that she might be trapped here, helpless, unable to even stand, her heart began to pound between her round new tits - and after a long, disgusted moment, she forced herself to swallow her pride.

"Gary...?" She called, hating the needy tone in her feminine voice - hating the feminine voice itself. "Gary.. I. I need you help.

Please."

From a fair distance down the path, Gary's voice filtered back to her: "I'm sorry - is somebody calling for me?"

"Yes, damn it!" She shouted. "It's me, Rocky - I can't get up, damn you! Now get your skinny ass back here and help me, you perverted little. "

"Rocky? What happened to your voice? You almost sound like a girl!" Gary shouted back, laughing. "After more than a decade of torture, I absolutely refuse to help Rocky in any way."

Helplessly, the new woman ground her teeth and clenched her fists, waiting to hear whatever it was he wanted...

...and went cold when, instead, she heard the clatter of rock-on rock coming from the steep hill half-way down the trail to where the cars were parked.

"Gary...!" She screamed, now near panic. "Gary, you. "

She caught herself, just barely. After a life-time of saying or doing whatever he wanted because he could back it up with swift and brutal violence died hard - but, sick to her stomach, she knew that she no longer had that ability.

Ashamed to feel the hot dampness of 'womanish' tears standing in her big, dark eyes, disgusted at what she'd been reduced to, she forced the words out through clenched teeth.

"Gary?" She called, bitterness flowing through her feminine new body. "Can you come help me, please? It's... It's.. Sandi."

Several minutes past, during which she simply couldn't bring herself to say anything more - and more demeaning. Finally, Gary appeared and, without a word, helped her carefully to her feet while she held her rage and humiliated self-disgust behind clenched teeth.

Once she was once again precariously upright, Gary turned and began to head down the path again, still without speaking a word. Carefully, step by step, she began following his retreating back...

...and found that the best she could do was take short little steps, hips swaying outrageously to counterbalance her swaying, bouncing tits. Legs already aching from the strain of walking tip-toe, she contemplated the slow, agonizing walk it was going to be to get to her car...

...and then stopped, cold knot reforming in her stomach as she realized that there was no way she could navigate the steep down-slope at the mid-point of the trail.

"Gary." She called, sharply, to his almost vanished back. "Yes, Sandi?" He replied, politely, turning to face her.

She bit back her immediate response, hating to have to answer to that insipid name.

"Please... help me..." She managed to force out of a throat tightened by humiliation and anger. "I.. I can't walk to my car by myself." Gary looked her over, slowly and methodically - and then met her eye with a level stare.

"What's in it for me?" He asked. "What!" She shrieked. "You fuc..."

She clamped her teeth gently down on the tip of her incredibly long, supple tongue, the fact that she had to speak so slowly and carefully with the lengthened organ the only thing that let her cut herself off in time.

"What do you want?" She asked, tightly - and gaped, stunned, at the answer:

"A kiss."

"A kiss?" She repeated, disgusted. "Why you sick little faggot, I would never..." "You don't have to - Sandi." Gary cut her off. "Enjoy the walk..."

She watched him begin to walk away from her again - and she knew he'd do it.

After all, she'd given him every reason to, treating him like she had while a man. As much as she hated to admit it, even to herself, Gary was fully entitled to some payback - and, even if she found the thought of doing anything the least bit sexual with a man sickening in a very homosexual way, it was obvious that Gary didn't, so it would be both payback and pleasure as far as he was concerned.

It was just before he vanished from sight that she managed to force herself to say it, to agree to such a sick, disgusting, horrible thing: "Okay."

Gary turned and began walking slowly back, eyebrow raised questioningly. "I'm sorry, Sandi - what did you say?"

"I said... Okay. I... I'll give you a kiss if you help me to my car." She said, immediately wanting to rinse her own mouth out with soap.

"After the way you talked to me, the price has gone up." Gary stated, calmly. "Two kisses, one now, one at the cars - and I mean real, tongue-action, 'gonna-give-you-a-hard-on' kisses, not little granny-pecks."

"What? I ought to..."

"The golden rule, sweet cheeks." Gary overrode her, not without a streak of satisfaction. "If you want me to be nice to you, you'd better be nice to me."

She glared at him, full new lips curled into a snarl.. and then, slowly, almost against her will, she nodded.

"Okay." She whispered, slowly and awkward unclenching her fists and opening her arms in a bad parody of invitation. "Okay, you... nice man."

Smiling, Gary stepped towards her, sliding his arms around her slender new waist and leaning into her - and, as his lips met hers and his tongue slipped into her uncooperative mouth, she had to resist the urge to bite down.

Worse, much worse - she had to force herself to reciprocate. She had to use her full new lips and long, supple new tongue to kiss a man...

...and the most disgusting part of it all was that it wasn't all disgusting. In fact, physically, it felt... good.

That only made it worse. She didn't want to enjoy any part of this kiss. Even as she forced herself to kiss him more 'passionately' - or, at least, a barely passable simulation of passion - she felt her body unwillingly responding, her thick, fat nipples hardening under her skin-tight shirt, her new womanhood warming and moistening under her equally tight shorts.

After a disgusting - and disgustingly pleasant - eternity, Gary finally broke the kiss with a soft sigh that indicated he had, indeed, enjoyed the 'perverted' act.

"Okay." He said, grinning. "Let's get you to the cars - so I can get the second half of my payment."

It took twenty tortuous minutes, especially difficult on the slope with the slow, awkward 'sissy-walk' she was forced to use, but finally they reached the two cars parked in the dusty little turn-around at the side of the road. Smiling, Gary turned her towards him for the second kiss...

...and she slapped him across the face with all the depleted strength in her arm, while kneeing him in the groin.

"Forget it, you fucking sick pervert!" She shouted, swaying and teetering as quickly as she could to her car. "You sick bastard! You fucking asshole! Forget it! I'm not kissing you again!"

Yanking open the door to her car, she climbed inside.

"I only did it because you blackmailed me into it!" She shouted as she brought the car to life. "Well, you can't do that anymore, because I don't need you any more! In fact, once I'm a guy again, I'm going to make you pay for this, you fucking bastard!"

Throwing the car into reverse, she backed out onto the street.

"I hope you enjoyed it, you faggot!" She cried, slamming the car into gear and preparing to peel rubber to the hospital. "You're gonna pay for it, stick-boy. Gonna pay big time for making me do something like that - but you have no hold over me anymore, because I don't need you for anything!"

Then she slammed her high-arched new foot down on the gas, and sped away down the road.

* * * * *

When the door swung open and she saw Gary's spindly body framed in the entry, she wanted to reach out, wrap her damnably slender fingers around his thin neck, and strangle the living daylights out of him.

In fact, for one eternal instant, she considered it, weighing the pleasure of it against the fate that would be hers if she did so...

...and the only thing that kept her from following her enraged instincts was the even worse fate that would await her if she gave in.

So, instead, well aware of the white-coated attendant from the mental institution standing close by, she forced a smile to her full, light- pink-coated lips.

"Oh, honey - I'm so glad to see you!" She forced herself to say in what she hated hoping was a passable 'happy' voice - and then she wrapped her arms around his neck, not to choke him, but to pull him close as she bent her face to his and proceeded to kiss the living daylights out of him.

She really had no choice.

She needed him - for everything.

Finally, after a disgustingly long time for a 'suitable' kiss, she was able to release him, hating the way her body responded to being held tight and kissed by a man.

"It's good to have you home, Sandi." Gary told her. "I was so worried about you!"

Taking her arm, Gary waved to the attendant as he eased 'Sandra Ciccione' inside and closed the door.

Her blood boiled and her humiliated anger rose and fell in tidal waves of disgust - but she forced the smile to remain on her lips as she walked into 'their' house, swaying atop the six-inch heels of the classic pumps the institute had given her after finding out that she could walk and balance as easily in the extreme heels as she had once been able to do barefoot as a man.

As she walked, the lace-trimmed hem of the floral-print summer dress she wore swirled around her thighs as her hips swayed sensuously, and under the straining fabric covering her bust, the huge breasts the institute hadn't been able to find a bra big enough to support wiggled and jiggled with each step.

"It's so nice to get away from that dam... um, darn mental institution." She said, looking over her arched-back shoulder as Gary followed her into the living room, carrying the two suitcases of feminine clothing and 'necessities' that the institute had bought her as part of her 'cure'. "You wouldn't happen to have the report from Dr. Gorman, would you... honey?"

She forced herself to push the 'affectionate' appellation through the clench teeth behind the smile.

"Why, as it happens, I do." Gary said. "Why don't you sit down and read it while I put your bags in... our room?"

"Okay... dear." She managed to say, taking the file folder and dropping to the couch - and, at the last moment, jerking herself into a straight-back, graceful position with her ankles crossed instead of splayed.

As Gary headed off upstairs, she opened the file folder containing the details of her 'delusion' and treatment - and once again considered the joys of murder.

It was even worse than she thought.

When she'd gone to get help, they'd believed she was crazy, and she'd been committed to the state mental institution, where she'd been evaluated and treated by Dr. Gorman.

As they tried to cure her of being a man, she'd called Gary, disgusted but desperate...

...and he'd refused to help her.

Well, actually, he'd refused to help 'Rocky'. He'd be open and honest, explaining that he was much happier in life with Rocky gone, and wouldn't do a damned thing to help bring him back, so she could forget about him corroborating her story.

Three days of intense 'treatment' later, she'd called him back - and begged him to help get 'Sandi' out of the nuthouse.

Even then, he hadn't been all that interested, not after the way she'd treated him, and she'd gone another two days before finally breaking down and begging him for help - indirectly, by 'remembering herself' and begging Dr. Gorman to find her 'boyfriend' Gary, now that she was starting to realize that she wasn't 'really' a man...

It was Doctor Gorman who'd talked Gary into giving his 'delusion girlfriend' another chance, now that she was well on the way to being cured...

...but Gary had been adamant about the fact that he wouldn't lie for her in the frequent updates he'd be giving Dr. Gorman during the six-month probationary period. If she showed any signs of a 'relapse', back into the institute she'd go.

So, her only choice was to spend the next six months with Gary, living up to the 'cured' woman she was supposed to be - which would have been really difficult without the report she was holding, since she had no idea of what type of woman she 'really' was.

What she read in the report made her want to scream in anger and disgust.

According to Dr. Gorman's crack-pot theory, 'Sandi' had gone over the edge trying to 'Butch up' after being berated with the feminist view of her 'real' personality...

...which was that of a completely uncomplicated, happy-to-be-female woman who enjoyed pleasing the men her life, cooking and cleaning and caring for them - and letting them enjoy her completely uninhibited sexuality.

This was the type of woman she was expected to play the part of for the next six months.

It was disgusting, horrifying, sickening - but the option was an even lengthier stay in a mental institution, where she'd have nothing, until she was 'cured' and acted like this mythical Sandi anyway. As much as it sickened her to admit it, being Sandi, on the outside and with Gary, would allow her freedom, and money, and a chance at a life after the probationary period, where she could hope to find a cure for what the radiation did to her.

In other words, to ever have a hope of becoming male again, she had to spend the next six months being exceedingly - disgustingly - female.

Which was why, when Gary came back downstairs, she forced that smile back onto her lips, and used pure force of will to approach him and speak in Sandi's sweet, loving voice.

"Oh, thank you for taking my bags upstairs, honey-bunny." She cooed, sickened by what she was being forced by fate to do. "Now why don't you just sit down, make yourself comfortable, and I'll go get you a beer?"

"Well, the sitting down sounds nice, but I'm not thirsty." Gary said, eyes glittering as she wrapped a hand around her slender waist and pulled her down onto his lap as he dropped on the couch. "I'd rather sit her with my best girl."

She quivered in rage, wanting to kill him for taking advantage of the situation like this...

...but not only was that something Sandi would do, but going to prison for murder was even worse than the mental institution.

So she forced herself to pretend that she liked the attention she was getting - and leaned her face down for another long kiss, forcing herself to do her best to make it enjoyable for the perverted bastard - who responded by sliding a hand up the smooth skin of her long leg to cup on full buttock under the hem of the dress, while his other hand rose to begin caressing her big, round tit through the cloth.

She hesitated as she felt his questing hand on her body - then forced herself to continue kissing him, reminding herself over and over again in a mental mantra that, whatever happened, she must not get angry, must remain sweet and eager-to-please, telling herself that, no matter what happened, she would not break this kiss first.

As disgusting and horrifying as this all was, it was the best - the only - route back to being male.

It got even harder when his fingers began to undo the white buttons running down the straining front of the dress - and even more difficult when his hand began squeezing and caressing her bared breasts.

When he finally broke the kiss, it was because he was slipping her dress off of her, his intentions obvious. No - no, she just couldn't think of letting him have sex with her...

...and, because letting him treat her like the 'uninhibited' woman she was supposed to be was the only way to regain her manhood, she didn't resist, didn't stop the unthinkable.

Instead, she became unthinking, shutting her mind away from what was happening to her.

Not that she could block out the physical sensations as she helped her to stand, leaning forward and carrying her top-heavy weight by bracing her arms on the back of the couch while he circled around her, the sound of his zipper being lowered seemingly incredibly loud. She couldn't stop feeling, or experiencing, but she didn't think. She let him do whatever it was he wanted, while she let her body respond - but she forced all her conscious thoughts into a sharply-focused beam aimed at a dark back corner of her mind, shutting off the meaning of what was happening, concentrating only on the second-by-second sensations without thinking of what they were or what they represented.

She didn't think about what was causing that pleasure as his hard cock slipped deep into the cunt dampened by the unwanted pleasure he'd given her by kissing and fondling her.

She didn't think about how sick and perverted it was to have a man thrusting in and out of her - or how disgustingly humiliating it was to enjoy the sensation of being fucked as woman.

She didn't think about how horrible it was that fate had brought her to a place where she could be bent over, huge tits swaying and bouncing from the rhythmic fucking she was getting as she stood perched atop a pair of high-heeled shoes, wordless sounds of pleasure yanked out of her throat as her body shuddered and shivered in the pleasure of sexual activity.

She didn't dwell on how horrible it was that the man she'd once tormented was now fucking her good and hard - and she had no choice but to accept it, now and whenever he wanted, for the next six months.

She didn't think about anything at all - she just screamed loud and long and hard as her body rocked with the unimaginable ecstasy as his hard thrusting brought her to mind-blowing orgasm.

Only after he'd finished fucking her did she let her mind resume operation - and even then, it kept skittering around, thinking almost random thoughts as she didn't let it come back to what she'd just done - what she'd just let herself do - as she turned, smiled, and gave Gary a long, 'loving' kiss of thanks for treating her like a woman before she pulled her dress back on and, trying hard not to think about what she was doing, headed off to cook 'her man' some dinner like the uncomplicated, uninhibited woman she needed to make herself be.

* * * * *

Completely unaware of the fact that she was humming happily, gloss-red lips curved up into a wide smile, Sandi sensuously ankled across the living room in her black platform shoes, hips packed into the tight black-leather skirt swaying sensuously as her long, nylon-clad legs scissored seductively.

The big, dark eyes framed by long, mascara-clad lashes were blank as she began dusting the sideboard table, body working completely out of habit as she worked, the long-nailed fingers of one hand unconsciously caressing the full, round tit encased in the tight white silk blouse.

Her dusting carried her past a mirror, and she was consciously unaware of her actions as she looked into the mirror, one hand rising to lightly pat at the elaborately style up-do of hair piled on top of her head. Subconsciously content that the hair that had taken an hour to style each morning was as utterly perfectly coiffed and that her makeup was still flawless, she wiggled and her jiggled her way on to the next room on her ceaseless circuit of cleaning, the 'default' duty she performed while waiting for anything else Gary might want to have her do.

Every motion, every move, every action was done in an unconsciously conscious manner to be as sexy and feminine as possible. Every pose and posture was guaranteed to please and excite Gary should he happen to see her at that instant, and her every step was perfectly smooth and graceful...

...and unthinking.

Over time, as she'd had to acquire more and more feminine habits and chores and actions, it had become increasingly easier to focus only on learning how to do each one perfectly without thinking about what she was doing, or why - and once learned, it could be done by rote, without any thought at all.

Now, every skill had been honed and ingrained, and she spent day after day in a sort of mindless daze, operating more on 'preprogrammed' habits than on thought.

She wasn't even aware of the fact that she was the talk of the town. Lost in her own little daze where she didn't have to think about anything that was going on, she didn't know the cute, sexy, flawless and cheerful woman that everybody saw when they saw her.

She also didn't know that, sometime in the first two weeks of her feminine routine, she'd quietly and inconspicuously gone insane. Not stark, raving mad - no, hers was a small, quiet insanity.

The core of her, the part of her that was 'Rocky' knew that everything about him was all wrong for what 'Sandi' needed to do - and so she'd gotten into a nearly unthinking habit of inverting every thought, instinct and desire to make this work.

Every time she found herself thinking how awful it was to be perched atop high heels, she immediately went to her closet and picked out a higher pair and made herself walk extra-sexy until the incident passed and she fell back into her still-sexy 'habitual' stride.
