Watchdoggie!

It's a conspiracy! Right-wingers tout family values and left-wingers decry inequality toward females, yet both groups often agree on one thing: errant males are the enemy. Males start wars and are responsible for most of the carnage throughout history. More specifically, male hormones are the culprit and must be contained and constantly monitored. The way to save humanity from itself is to stop those hormones from ruining our men and boys, who in turn are ruining our world.

These radical groups advocate making grassroots changes right in their own communities, schools, churches and homes. They see the problem at its worst in young boys approaching or in the early stages of puberty, many of whom have difficulty controlling their actions because they cannot handle the hormones surging throughout their bodies. And if such boys aren't kept in check, they risk becoming abusive, disgusting and worthless members of society. The way to cure them, these radical groups maintain, is to subdue them with a good dose of panty and petticoat discipline. Therefore, males who can't conduct themselves in a proper manner are forced into fancy dresses and frilly lingerie. Such clothing shocks them out of their selfish, destructive thinking and makes them receptive to learning how to act properly. Lessons that, the leaders of this movement insist, will serve the boys throughout their lifetime.

Watchdoggie! underwent petticoat punishment at the hands of nuns and the girls in his fifth grade Catholic school during the 1950s. He still vividly recalls every aspect of that punishment, a thoroughly humiliating experience that forever changed him. Yet that experience also taught him that our society looks down on females and considers them inferior to males; that is why petticoat punishment is so effective in humiliating young boys. Radical groups bent upon destroying the male world circulate propaganda to their followers. Watchdoggie! monitors these groups and his mock JC Penney catalog above is a protracted materialization of the horrors he suffered at the hands of feminizing girls and nuns. He wages an ongoing battle to bring attention to these clandestine groups, who are working to destroy present-day society! After almost 50 years, Watchdoggie! is still haunted by the pain and anguish he suffered undergoing petticoat punishment. As a form of therapy, he makes pictures like the one above to help alleviate the pain and horror he suffered.

Carole Jean

Carole Jean, a good friend and popular author of forced crossdressing stories, has given us permission to make variations to, colorize and publish each month a select drawing from one her various publications. All of Carole Jean's stories focus upon the humiliation of the poor protagonists as they are coerced into wearing sissified outfits and girls' clothes and then forced to appear in public so shamefully outfitted. Every other page of Carole Jean's booklets is illustrated with a beautiful drawing by the famous Spanish artist Juan Sole, a.k.a. Juan Puyal.

This month we feature a drawing from volume #1 of "Schooled with Girls." At this point in the story Peter, a group of girls question him about attending an all-girls' school, and he imagines all the indignities he will be forced to endure.

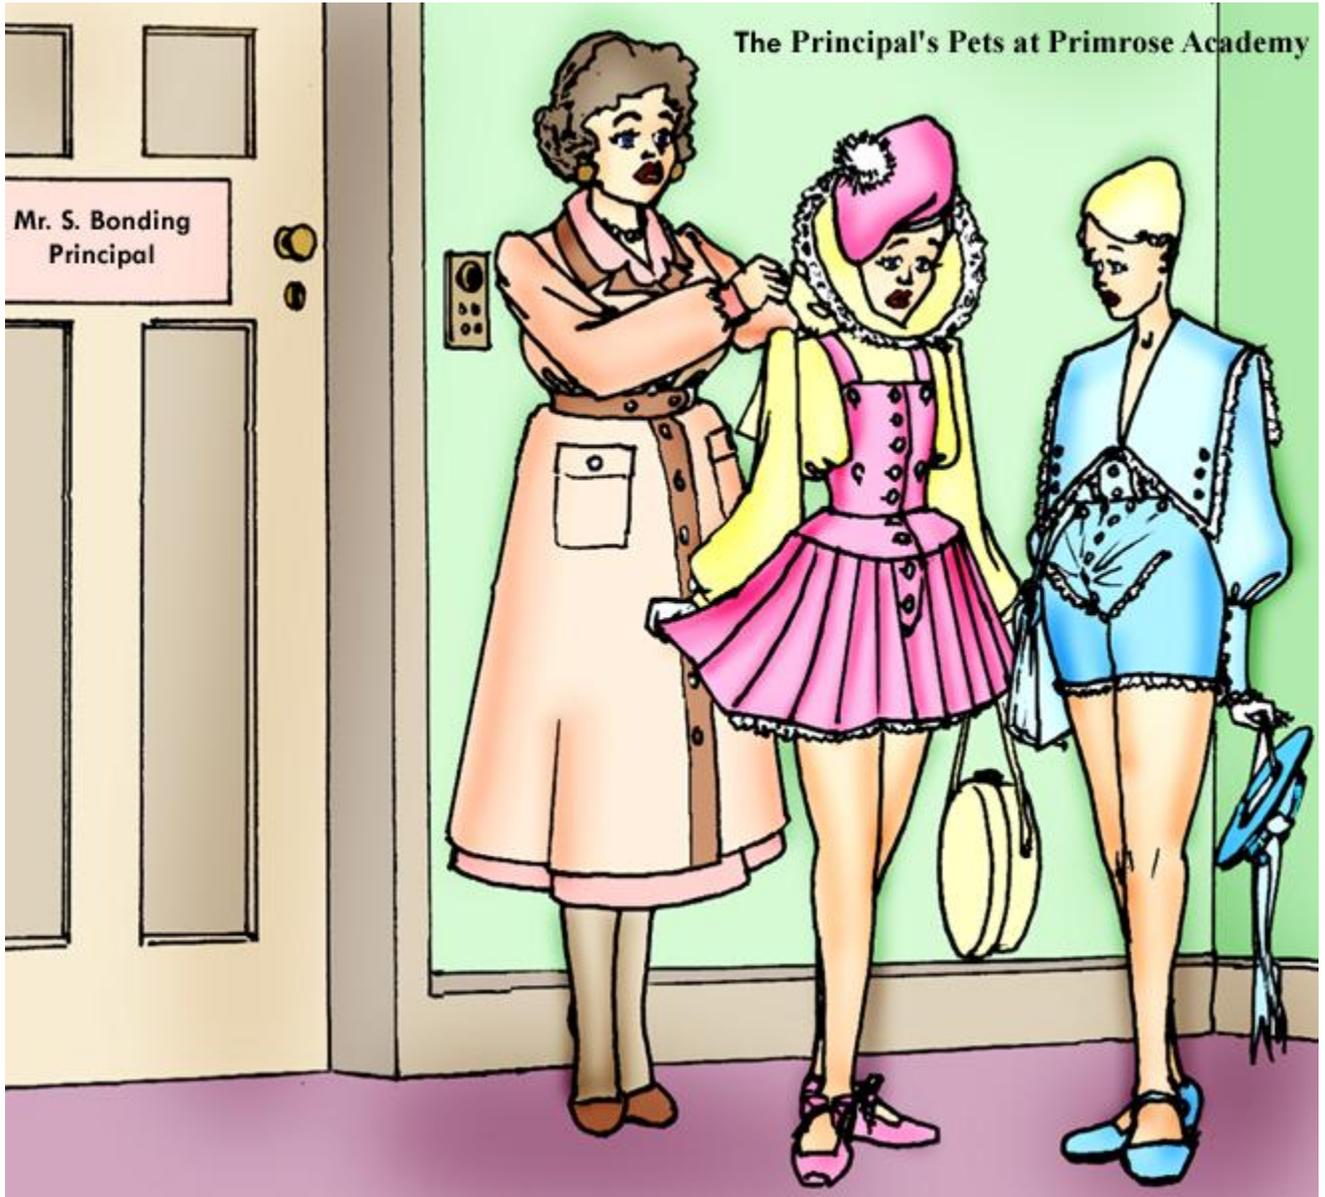

In addition to "Schooled with Girls," Carole Jean has published books both under her own name and under the name "Bill." Those books include "Bill's Humiliation in Panties"; "Henry's Vacation in Panties"; "Darwin's Womanhood"; "Jeff's Humiliation"; and her most recent, "Beautified Bullies." Boy with a Bra

Prim's Erotic Petticoat Punishment Art

The Principal's Pets at Primrose Academy

Leslie becomes upset when it's his turn to be the principal's pet, mainly because Mr. Bonding likes Leslie to be in a pretty back-buttoning blouse with a lacy collar and his hair held up with a yellow ribbon in crystal satin. Mr. Bonding admires Leslie's long, smooth legs enormously, and so he has the boy in lacy panties and wide-legged pants, which fall in folds to resemble a skirt. Today, Leslie is dressed in a set of pale pink taffeta button-on pants, with shoulder suspenders and sharp pleats, so that his pants can be spread open and his smooth skin admired right up to the lacy edge of his panties.

Leslie's homework is an essay on silk collars that can be buttoned up over the head, and he will read it while sitting in the hammock chair in Mr. Bonding's study with his pleated pants turned completely back, so the principal can admire his long legs and the lacy frills on his pink satin panties.

Kurt is dressed in a dainty blouse and pants set in pale blue satin, with smooth pearl buttons in pale blue. His blouse is buttoned to his pants at the front and back of the waist. Two rows of these pretty blouse buttons run across the oversized, square sailor collar from side to side. Kurt's homework focused on fancy blouses for boys, and while he is reading his essay, he will be sitting on Mr. Bonding's knee so the principal can delicately fondle and fuss with the boy's wide collar and make him feel sweet. Kurt will continue to sit on the Master's knee while Leslie reads his piece, so that Mr. Bonding will be able to slip his hands through the lace-trimmed access slots in his satin pants to fondle the boy's satin encased penis and continually adjust Kurt's silky panties, while the boy watches and listens to his friend's report.

During their visit, both pet boys will have the seat of their pants inspected by the principal. For their inspection they will take turns lying face down across Mr. Bonding's knee, so their blouse collars slide forward to cover their head and hair. The principal likes the boys to lie in this attitude so he can examine the fit of their slippery pants and sissy panties and gently probe their genitals and bottoms to instill in them an appreciation for the importance of being properly attired.

For years during the 1980s, an artist by the name of Prim created delightful petticoat punishment drawings, which he often produced in a series, telling a complete and detailed story. However, in the mid 1990s, he got married and retired from the scene. He stopped creating his drawings and trading with other PP enthusiasts and sent everything he had produced to that point to other collectors. Since then, he and his art have been greatly missed, and therefore, it is with great joy for us to announce that we have established contact with Prim and will be able to bring you some of his delightful artistic creations in the coming months. The first drawing we present is above, and it will give you a sample of his skill and style if you are not already familiar with his work.

His drawings always center on the humiliation of petticoat punishment and carefully depict the horrors and embarrassment of undergoing such treatment. His style is immediately recognizable. As the scene above shows, the clothes themselves tend to be excruciatingly humiliating for the boys being femininely trained and/or punished. The clothing is often old-fashioned in style and babyish in design, and with the distinctive feature of extremely oversized collars, which can be pulled up and closed to envelop a boy's entire head. His figures often have short torsos, and his boys usually have bare, very long legs and tear-stained, horrorstricken expressions on their faces.

Prim now signs his work as "Rose" and wishes to become known by that name. If you are familiar with Rose, please contact us with any comments or messages you would like us to relay to him. Also if you have any of his old drawings (several of which appeared in old issues of Madames and other TV and fetish magazines), please send us a copy by email or to our postal address. We'll reward you for taking the time to share them with us.

No harm in toddler dressing up as a girl

Q: We've always made all manner of toys available to our twin 3-year-olds, a boy and a girl. Nevertheless, our son tends to play with trucks and toy soldiers, while our daughter plays with dolls. Over the last few months, they have begun to enjoy playing dress-up, which we have encouraged.

The problem, if it's a problem, is that they always dress up in female clothes — both of them. Now we're thinking we've let this go on too long. The other day, they appeared before us, both dressed like girls, and our son proudly announced, "We're girls." Where do we go from here?

A: I would suggest you go to your libation locker, pour your favorite spirit, and calm down. How marvelous, actually. What wonderful imaginations. And what a blessing to you that they are able to occupy themselves so creatively and harmlessly. Consider the alternative.

Nothing in a young child's world is more fun than playing dress-up.

Typically, play of this sort emerges late in the third year of life or early in the fourth. Prior to this, the child's curiosity-driven explorations have been limited to material things and places. During this first exploratory phase, the child develops a reputation for "getting into everything."

Evidence is rapidly accumulating to the effect that the child's brain development profits greatly from having a good amount of freedom in this area — when, in other words, his explorations are not overly hindered or punished.

Imagination begins to flower in late toddlerhood, at which point the typical child's play expands to encompass the exploration of roles and relationships.

Formerly, the child played only "with" things. Now, he begins playing "at" things. Oh, the miracle of it all. Please understand that a 3-year-old has no internal censor where such things are concerned, no inner voice telling him that while it's all right to dress up as a clown, it's not all right to dress up as the opposite gender.

Those inner voices don't start talking for a few years, in fact, and when they do, some of what they say is completely unnecessary.

Now, while it's a bit strange and certainly inappropriate in most social circles for a 30-year-old man to dress in women's clothing, there is nothing strange or inappropriate about a 3-year-old boy doing so. It's as harmless as dressing up like a clown.

If your son enjoyed dressing in a clown outfit and one day announced that he was a clown, you wouldn't worry that he was going to want to wear nothing but clown suits when he was 12, would you? And even if your son develops a life-long predilection for dressing in women's clothing, it may interest you to know that most cross-dressing males are heterosexual.

The bottom line: This is nothing to worry about. Announcing that he is a girl is no more significant than our daughter Amy announcing at age 3 that she was Jennifer. Within a year, Amy was again telling people her name was Amy, and within a reasonably short time your son will let go of the "I'm a girl" thing.

In the meantime, relax and go with the enjoyable, precious flow of this. If you just can't stop being bugged by it, then tell the kids to play dress-up in their room only. Then, please, leave 'em alone.

Panties are being stolen from laundry room

I have lots of nice panties, and I'm losing them to some pervert in the laundry room on my floor. It's amazing! I noticed a couple pair missing a few weeks ago so I

Stash discovered by police in a raid on a panty thief's home.

made a special effort to get to the washer before the cycle ended. I knew I had 3 thong panties in that load and when I transferred them to the dryer, there was only one pair left... I thought I was losing my mind but realized there must be some pervert who has nothing to do but sit around and wait to look at EVERY load of laundry in 20 minute cycles...

Does anybody have any advice on how to deal with this kind of a situation or has it happened to you? I told my management office, but they said they couldn't do anything. Unbelievable.

I would either stay with my laundry through the whole cycle or start taking it to a laundromat. Or start doing your laundry at really off times.

LOL!!! Sorry, I don't mean to laugh, but what a bizarre situation. I would say don't confront or wait for this person alone, maybe get a friend to wait with you and see what happens if you see him (uh...or her, I suppose). I can't believe management said they couldn't do anything, how typical.

This beats what happened at one of my previous apartments. People would break into our laundry room and steal the coins out of the machines, making them unavailable for days.

Are you sure someone is stealing them? When I was in college, the washing machines were so old, they would "eat" socks. The bottom or sides of the agitator might be so loose that your panties gets sucked up and out with the dirty water.

I heard something on the news about a pervert stalking girls in his apartment building and stealing their panties then hanging them on their doorknobs. Tell the Resident Manager for sure you never know what kind of creep is living there.

This used to happen to me in the '80s. There are sickos out there who get off on used women's underwear. In my situation, it turned out to be the security guard who was stealing our panties. When it first started happening, I used to think that I was going nuts. I would think that I'd somehow dropped them on the way back to my apartment. I used to tell myself that the "laundry god" was demanding some kind of tribute. Eventually, I had a conversation with another woman who was in the laundry room, looking for her undies just like me. It didn't take long for us to realize that we both couldn't be missing our underwear and have it be a coincidence. Once we started asking other women in the complex if they'd lost their undies, it turns out that all of us were!!!

The guard that was doing this was also doing other strange behaviours, some of which were very frightening. Eventually, he was fired. But I did change my door lock before then, and I didn't give the manager the key, because I was afraid of the guard. I didn't want him to have unfettered access to me or my apartment.

Tell the manager! And chat up some of your female neighbors. See if they're experiencing the same theft.

I wash mine by hand, in my sink, with woolite(tm) or similar detergent.

Sometimes I wonder if it's really pervs, or just women who can't face shopping for their own underwear.

Practical Parenting 2000 Advice Archive

I'm having a very hard time with my son. Jeffrey is 4 1/2 and sometimes I cannot control him. He is often in a bad, pouting mood and has horrible tantrums. During these tantrums he will throw things, bang on walls, scream forever, kick furniture and slam doors. He's very abusive to his two sisters, six-year-old Mary and three-year-old Sara, both of whom are very sweet and gentle, so I don't know where he gets this. If I try to reason with him and tell him how bad he makes me feel when he acts up, he just ignores me, and if I yell at him or try to discipline him with typical methods like time-outs and taking away television, he only becomes more defiant.

As a single, full-time working mother, my time with my children is limited, so I try to make it quality time. But spending time with my son is always a trying time since it is usually spent punishing or yelling at him for his inappropriate behavior. I work Monday through Friday and after spending all day Saturday and Sunday with my son, I am sorry to say I look forward to work on Monday.

His daycare center is a very good one and run by our church, and one of his teachers suggested spanking him when he misbehaves. Despite what liberal "experts" say, she says there is a place for spanking children and Jeffrey is probably one of those who would benefit from it. I'm thinking about that and have even bought a ruler with that in mind, but I don't know if I have the guts to be a spanking mother. And I fear getting so angry that I might unintentionally hurt him.

That same teacher said that another solution might be to dress Jeffrey like his sisters because he has singled out girls as his victims both at home and at school. She said he needs to be tamed as well as trained and explained it has worked wonders on many little boys she has had to deal with. She said that many parents have given her the OK to use both spanking and girls' clothes on boys at the center when other disciplines don't work.

It kind of freaked me out. I admit I laughed to myself when I thought about Jeffrey in a fancy dress and panties, and he's a cute blonde-haired blue-eyed boy, so I know he'd look real sweet. But I wonder if doing something like that would make him a homosexual. I don't want to turn him into a girl, but I do want him to be a sweet little boy and learn how to play nice. I really love my son and want to be the best mom I can be. So here I sit staring at my ruler and a stack of Mary's outgrown clothes that I had sorted out (the fanciest ones I could get together as his teacher recommended) and wondering what's the right thing to do. I'm ready to try anything because he is becoming so abusive at his daycare center, and the school is threatening to expel him, so please help me with some advice.

Allison P. (Member #DF0930)

Practical Parenting's Dr. Matagen replies:

Dear Allison:

Your son is showing signs of stress. I recommend you examine sources of his stress at home and in his daycare situation. If he seems to be focusing upon girls to unleash his anger, he may be feeling inadequate or threatened by them. Dressing him as a girl may do some good and teach him respect for females and help him get along with them, but it is a radical approach that may foster other problems. For example, other children and even many adults can be very abusive toward a crossdressed boy. The resulting teasing and humiliation may do more harm than good. This is a type of punishment not to be considered lightly.

No, he will not turn homosexual if you dress him in a dress and panties. The medical community pretty well agrees that we are all born with our sexual orientation. But depending how you handle such dressing, you may introduce him to transvestism or fetishism. As a feminist, I am not alarmed by such conditions as much as some of my less liberal colleges since most transvestites and female clothing fetishists I have encountered are very decent and lovable human beings. Their propensity for such activities almost universally began in childhood, especially around the age of your son, and one benefit of such a proclivity may be the tendency to turn such individuals away from aggressive and abusive forms of behavior, a benefit you desire.

You say you are a single mother. I am wondering if your separation or divorce from his father could have contributed to his stress and perhaps his anger at you and other females. This does not mean that you need to feel guilty, but it is important to understand that your son is suffering from an overload of stress. I am only guessing at the possible causes. You who know him best can probably figure out what stresses there are in his life. Try to see things from his point of view, do what you can to reduce stress, and recognize his need to express anger.

I strongly urge you to use only methods of punishment that directly address his problems. Withdrawal of your attention time-outs, and yelling (which you said don't work anyway) will only further contribute to his stress and make the situation worse. Your son is trying to be heard and understood. He needs your love and reassurance that his anger will not cause you to reject him. Crying and raging are important healing mechanisms that help children release stress. These behaviors should never be stopped but understood and then channeled into more acceptable behavior. And after a child acts up and releases his stress, he must know that an appropriate punishment will follow for any harm he caused others.

By the way, forcing a naughty boy to dress in girls' clothing is commonly called "petticoat punishment," and its peak of popularity was during the late 1800s and early 1900s. It probably fell out of favor because it made fathers extremely uncomfortable (threatening their own masculinity or causing them to be embarrassed when others saw their sons so punished since an important part of the punishment is to be seen by others). Another reason: perhaps parents feared it was too humiliating of a punishment for a boy going through the fragile process of developing his masculinity (and possibly leading to homosexuality as you yourself have wondered -- which we now know it does not do). But I say: isn't punishment supposed to be extremely unpleasant for the recipient? Maybe it is time for petticoat punishment to make a return as a way of disciplining young boys, especially those abusive to females? The funny part about it is that it's a punishment only to boys who think females are inferior. Boys who love females and female things enjoy exploring the feminine side of their personality. Such boys tend to be sweet and loving and seldom need punishment of any sort. Therefore if a boy is genuinely horrified at the idea of being dressed in female clothes, he probably has a low opinion of females, and it just might be a good punishment for him. Incidentally, what would your ex-husband think of you dressing your son like his sisters?

It's important for you to let your son know he's loved when he has temper tantrums. Pay attention to him, reflect back his feelings. For example say, "I see that you are very angry right now. You must have had something bad happen to you, but I want you to know that I love you even when you are acting like this. I know you love me (your sisters, friends, etc.) and want to be nice, but something is upsetting you so please tell me about it and let me help you." Reassure him of your love. Children need to feel loved no matter how they are feeling. This is not going to be easy, but he needs your love and compassion more than anything else at those times. If he persists, maybe you would want to bring out his pretty dress and tell him that it is a privilege to be a boy, but if he can't be a good boy, you want him to be a nice little girl for a while.

Since he is only 4 1/2, you may not encounter too much resistance putting him into a dress, at least the first time. The punishment will come when his sisters and others see him so dressed and tease him. Then he will probably be humiliated and want to get out of those clothes. If he resists putting on or keeping on the dress (lingerie and all the appropriate accessories are important additions), you may have to resort to spanking. I am in favor of spanking in rare circumstances, and this is a good example. It should be done only rarely and never in anger. But it is important for a child to know that spanking is an option.

Let your son feel you are really listening to him and understanding how he is feeling. But let him know you have needs too and they include having him act in acceptable ways, and make sure he understands that appropriate punishment will follow if he does not behave. He will probably continue to cry angrily for a while, even when threatened with punishment, and that is important for him to do. The goal is NOT to stop him from crying, but to let him feel safe enough so that he can cry without feeling the need to be destructive. After he has had a good cry with your loving attention, let him know that you will not let him off the hook and he will have to be punished according to the rules you have established in your household, and that he was fully made aware of before he decided to misbehave.

2/7/00 Well, my son's perfect little life must be nothing but one big stress! He has been a tantrum thrower since he was old enough to have em. We have tried all approaches except girls' clothes (are you serious!) including time-outs, spanking, ignoring (not necessarily in that order). He is now 7 years old and has maybe toned it down just a few decibels, but not much! We are at our wits' end and are thinking military school. None of what I have read in the books or learned from child psychologists has worked on this boy. We are only just holding our own for the most part. This does sound pretty dire, but it's been bad off and on since he was 2. If anyone has any advice for me, I would appreciate your time and attention. My heart goes out to the single mother mentioned, she is to be looked up to for her strength. I still can't believe the good doctor had anything good to say about putting that boy in a dress! Becky (beckywilt@swbell.net)

2/7/00 When I grew up, I was raised by my single mother and grandmother. Petticoat punishment was used in addition to spanking. It started from the age of 5 and until I was 13. Skirts, dresses and petticoats (those big, beautiful bouffant styles were in vogue then) were used as well as stockings and incredibly frilly panties that my grandmother sewed on tons of lace and ribbons. All very girly things. I had to wear them when at home, never at school but had to change as soon as I got home, and then bend over my bed and wait to be paddled before spending the rest of the day in my dress, cancan petticoat and other frillies. [See photo left.] I can assure you that it was very effective on my behavior. I can agree with others that petticoat punishment is very effective. Claus

2/7/00 I do think that this child needs to be listened to and spent plenty of time with, as does any child. I have always felt that giving attention to a child having a huge fit is only going to increase the chances of another big fit. Ignoring what we don't want to flourish is better. If my son were having a fit and a half and I stood there saying, "You sound angry," he would be thinking, "Duh!" And if I was stupid enough to say, "You must have had a bad day." He is smart enough to use it the next time he feels like throwing stuff around the room. If he said, "Sorry, mom, I had a tough day," I would spank myself for being so stupid!

I would rather wait until the anger is expelled and then tell him and show him acceptable ways to express anger: beating a pillow, running outside, screaming with your face in a pillow. Not hitting, throwing things or saying bad stuff. This is real life. Everyone gets mad, and everyone needs to find ways he can express himself without being rude, hurtful, or a bully. I would rather spend my time teaching him that than coddle him during a tantrum, a time when I am not feeling too warm and fuzzy about him. I like the petticoat punishment bit. I could use a little maid around the house! Giselle T (another1@noc.com)

2/7/00 I found this question interesting and the answer WONDERFUL! If my boys weren't good, I'd make them into "repentant little girls," but I want to treat them with respect and have them give me the same respect. And I understand we are all humans, and will make mistakes. And if any of my boys want to prance around in lace panties, it wouldn't bother me. Of course my husband would have a fit! Penny Parker

2/7/00 If my boys ever gave girls problems, I won't hesitate to put them in girls' clothes. I think it's a super idea. I've talked with other mothers. After they got over laughing, they all agreed it was a great idea too. Boys need to be taken down a notch. Almost all of them would benefit if they spent some time finding out what it is like to be a girl. Yes, we all make mistakes, but why do boys make so many more mistakes than girls? Maybe we should raise them like we raise girls. Teach them how to be nurturing, sharing and sweet. Teach them about beauty, personal care and give them an appreciation for pretty clothes.

Mrs. Bellworth

2/7/00 I believe that respect STARTS with understanding a child's stresses and need for emotional release. After several years of parenting, a constant "truth" that has emerged for me is that acting-out (hurtful, inappropriate or destructive) behavior is stress and/or emotion needing to come out. Usually, acting-out behavior is a red flag for me to slow down and give my child focused attention. Without too much encouragement, the emotion/feelings start to flow, and then comes a very "centered" calm. At this time, my children and I start to discuss solutions, alternatives, and plans for changed behavior or circumstances. I have found this approach SO much easier and less stressful for me than punishment or withdrawal of love/attention. And it really does work. I have two children (boy and a girl) who are living proof. Lynne

2/7/00 I had a similar problem with my son. Nothing seemed to work. I was getting so angry I felt guilty about my disgust in how he was turning out. One day I decided to come in the house with a smile. No matter what, I was going to change MY attitude even if he did not change his. He was surprised when I had control over my feelings and when he would have his screaming fits I held him tight and told him how much I missed him that day and I would love to take a walk with him (or whatever activity I could think of). Getting outdoors helped immensely! There were no distractions (such as telephone or TV) to take me from him. It took about 2 weeks -- I think he wanted to make sure I was serious about the changes in my attitude. I think I reassured him of how secure he is with me and that he can always look to me for guidance and as an example; after all, he is the most precious thing in my life, and I owe him every effort to improve his world. Needless to say, he no longer screams and we've since started hitting pillows together when we're frustrated. When I told him about your letter and using girls' clothes as a punishment, he asked me if he could dress up as a girl even if he wasn't bad! Robyn (chrirs@conet.com)

2/8/00 I find this advice completely ludicrous. At what point is it okay to treat your child like a human, one that cohabits the world with other people, in a world that doesn't necessarily revolve around him? Isn't the goal to help children grow up self-sufficient, aware, and somewhat free from narcissism? Doesn't that imply giving the adult some space to interact normally with the child, and not treat him as a specimen under glass, untouchable? Somehow I doubt this child will turn into a repentant little angel, as predicted, if his mother suddenly starts "really listening" to him. It's clear she cares and has done plenty of listening already. It's also clear he has the upper hand. I don't have the answer for her, but I think these exhortations to "just try harder to understand" are best applied to stick figures, not families. Maybe dresses and panties will work. I wear them everyday, and I think I'm OK! Moira (moirac@galgroup.com)

2/8/00 Take the boy away from his stupid, abusive, feminizing mother and give him to his loving father!!!! (sam134@melmail.com)

2/8/00 The trick is to take your 4 and 1/2-year-old son, put him across your knee with his pants (or panties WOW!) pulled down, and soundly spank his bare backside for him with a strap. I'll give you odds he'll get the message. That's what my father frequently did to me while I was growing up. Cora

2/8/00 I'm a dad of 2 boys 6 and 9 years old. I use spankings regularly and I can say that it works well. I use a plastic ruler on their bare bottoms. For the older one, I also use a belt for serious offenses. My younger one is quite a naughty boy, so he gets spanked a few times a week. 8-12 good strokes with a ruler make him behave much better for a while. If my wife put girls' clothes on my boys, I'd spank her! Andrew
(flameay@niname.com)

2/8/00 This is my second time posting. This board gives a lot of bad ideas to parents. Spanking is OK but only like 1-3 times. When you do it more than that you're not teaching them a thing. You're taking out your anger on them. When I was a boy, petticoat punishment drove my best friend to shoot himself because his parents took pictures of him [See photo right], paraded him around in public and made him go to school one time like that. I was not there that day but when he got home his mom started to insult him and threatened to do it again the next day and he snapped. He walked up to his parents' room, grabbed his father's pistol, marched right out in front of his mother and shot himself. He missed killing himself, but the mom faced charges, and it forever screwed up their entire family. PP is some form of medieval torture.

2/8/00 Okay here is the situation: My son will be four in July. He hits me if I do not give him what he wants. He screams very loud so our neighbors can hear him. He knows that I do not want him to do this; I told him not to. He continues anyway. As of right now I am so upset; my in-laws are coming over for a weekend cook out. The weather is so pretty. I have been trying for two days to get my house clean. He tells me, "Mommy I don't want you to clean the house. I want you to hold me." I explain to him as nicely as possible, "Mommy needs to clean the house so grandma and granddaddy can come over." My husband believes in spanking him. I find that kind of harsh. I will sometimes, when I feel that what he has done is bad enough. Maybe I'll try putting him in a dress and little girl panties. I'm sure I could borrow some from my neighbor. Granddaddy would go berserk, not to mention my husband's reaction. But what do I care if I get results. The men in this family are a bunch of macho jerks. If a little bit of lace and frills on the boy throws them for a loop, great! Maybe that's just what they need. If they make too big of a fuss, I'll get some of my clothes out for them, dress them up too and have them join our son in the corner with panties down and bottoms well blistered! Thanks -- you helped me! VA, LOL

2/8/00 I think you are wrong to use petticoat punishment on any child. We have three children under the age of 11 and find the leather strap given on their little bare bottoms to be very effective. We have used it for potty training, playing with matches, being rude and getting in trouble at school. That's just to say a few. The pants are removed; the strap is applied. The child howls, pants put back on and then it's all over. Then both of you get on with what you would like to do. June (babsincan@rowhoo.com)

2/9/00 I have a son and a daughter. I have tried everything except this petticoat punishment. What type of instance should I look for to use this method of discipline? And how long should I keep them in their outfit? Betty

2/9/00 Hi: I have four children. My 9-year-old son likes being naked. I caught him with his 9-year-old friend at our beach swimming naked. I asked him why and he said he swims faster. I told his friend to put his bathing suit back on and go home. I then turned my son over my knee and spanked his bottom real good, and he howled all the way home. It seems I'm always telling him to put something on in the house. His dad said I'm just over reacting. I don't have the answers. Someone give me some advice. Is this normal for a 9-year-old boy to go naked? His older brother never did to my knowledge. Do you think that because he gets spankings this is what is making him do it? Maybe I should make him wear girls' lacy panties if he insists on going around naked. I bet he'd put clothes on real quick then. Please help me. June (babsincan@yahoo.com)

2/9/00 June: You did the right thing by giving your 9-year-old a good spanking and sending him home howling from the beach. If more parents were like you and used the strap on their children's bare bottoms, I'm sure we would not have the crime we have today. I know when I was growing up, I received the strap from my father on my bare bottom at least once a month. I remember getting it twice in one day. It made me think about right and wrong. My father always gave it to us, so we remembered the strapping very well. I got just as hard strappings as my two brothers did. If we were very bad, we had to wear special punishment underwear, which consisted of a girls' chemise and panties decorated with huge tiers of handmade lace. [See photo left] This shame underwear was made of real silk, and between the silk and ticklish lace, you were constantly aware that you were wearing it. We had to wear it before and during the spanking as well as days afterward until we be allowed to go back to our regular underwear, get our bare bottoms strapped and then about six on each hand as well. I'm for the use of the strap for children. I have children of my own and the strap is used for all correction. Adding lacy panties to your punishment sessions will surely make it more embarrassing for your son.

Joe (joeniet1960@yahoo.com)

2/9/00 Joe, if the strappings from your father were so effective in making you think about right and wrong and all of the stuff about behaving as you ought to, why did you require at least one bare bottom strapping each month? It doesn't say much for your ability to remember the lessons you were supposedly learning, does it? Nope. Billy

2/10/00 I HAVE A 4-YEAR-OLD DAUGHTER AND A THREE-YEAR-OLD SON AND MY SON KEEPS ON HITTING HIS SISTER WHILE AT PRESCHOOL AND MY WIFE HAS TALKED TO HIM ABOUT IT. ALLISON, AFTER READING YOUR LETTER WE PUT SOME OF CAROL'S BLUE LACE PANTIES ON TOMMY AND SENT THEM TO PRESCHOOL. WHEN MY WIFE ARRIVED TO PICK UP THE KIDS, MISS STOLE SAID TOMMY WAS REAL NICE ALL DAY, BUT THEN CAROL TOLD EVERYBODY THAT HE WAS WEARING HER BLUE PANTIES BECAUSE HE WAS ALWAYS SO BAD. ALL THE OTHER KIDS AND EVEN HIS TEACHER LAUGHED AT HIM AND MADE HIM SHOW EVERYBODY. HE GOT VERY MAD AND STARTED HITTING EVERYBODY. WHEN THEY GOT HOME THAT DAY, MY WIFE PULLED DOWN HIS PANTS AND PANTIES AND SPANKED HIM REAL HARD WITH HER HAND AND MADE HIM STAND IN THE CORNER WITH HIS PANTIES DOWN. WHEN I GOT HOME I GAVE HIM ANOTHER SPANKING ON HIS BARE BOTTOM BUT THIS TIME WITH A BELT. THEN WE PULLED UP HIS PANTIES AND SENT HIM TO BED IN ONE OF HIS SISTER'S BARBIE NIGHTGOWNS. THAT WAS LAST NIGHT. I WONDER WHAT IT'S GOING TO BE LIKE WHEN I GET HOME FROM WORK TODAY. CRAIG

2/10/00 I am the mother of a 4 1/2- (boy) and 2 3/4-year-old (girl). For my family, the most effective approach has been that when they misbehave, they are given a few words of explanation. Example: "Your yelling hurts Mommy's ears. Please stop!" Then if they don't, I tell them simply that I will count to 3, and if they don't stop then, I will take away the toy they are fighting over and/or sentence them to an immediate time-out in the nearest corner. At the end of the time out, I sit down to talk with my son or daughter one-on-one, face-to-face, and he or she is told to give an apology without crying (because I cannot understand them through the crying), telling me what he or she believes they did wrong, and then they give me a hug and kiss (or their sibling if they were disrespectful to them). I do not believe in hitting. I was not hit as a child, and I think that it runs counter to the goal of their growing up to respect without fear. I think violence is the easy answer, and has negatively impacted our children. I do not want my child to be in school sitting next to a child who was not provided the tools to work through their anger and instead opted for that easy answer of a gun. Do you? If your spouse hit you when angry, what would that teach you except resentment? Why should the message learned be different to a child who does not even have a fraction of the level of understanding as the adult? The petticoat punishment thing could be an interesting solution in some situations for my son. I know he'd make a sweet-looking little girl, but what would be a comparable punishment for his little sister when she gets into trouble? All girls aren't little angels you know. Pam S.

2/10/00 I also have been having much of the same problems with my 5-year-old son. He doesn't kick me or spit on me or anything, but he gets in these moods where he pouts and just acts angry at everything. The look on his face just chills me. His school calls me because he has been calling kids names and acting angry towards them and they want me to talk to him over the phone. I feel like they are accusing me of doing something because they tell me there must be a reason why he's acting like this and they are just trying to figure out what it is. Twice now I've called him at his preschool to give him a message, and he burst into tears as soon as I said hello to him. I don't know what to do; I'm at my wits end as well. I have been separated from his father since he was one, so I don't think that's it. I also want to say that I do believe in spanking (only as a last resort). However, you insane people who are talking about spanking your little kids with straps and paddles, I don't like to hear. A hand spanking is severe enough for a child under six. If the tables were turned, I'd probably act up too. Maybe someone should take you and strip you of your clothes and beat you 30 times on your butt with a wooden paddle! How would that feel to you? I can't imagine anyone would actually suggest that and I'm hoping maybe they were kidding, that or just plain ignorant. The other suggestion about putting a boy in girls' fancy clothes made sense to me. I might try that. I still have all my old clothes from growing up in the 1970s. I could fix him up real cute. Dressed up like that, he'd make a good playmate for the little handicapped girl next door. That would be good punishment for him. Many of the ideas here are very enlightening. It's nice to know you're not alone.

Sangi

2/11/00 YOU PEOPLE WHO BEAT YOUR CHILDREN ARE EVIL AND NEED TO GROW UP. HOW WOULD YOU LIKE IT IF I CAME TO YOU WHEN YOU'RE MAKING A FOOL OF YOURSELF AND BEAT THE HELL OUT OF YOU!!!! LOVE YOUR KIDS (12raple1@aol.com)

2/11/00 Discipline works. But when I hear about people humiliating their children on purpose I get very pissed off. One example is Dr. (???) Matagen and her crazy ideas of petticoat punishment are incredibly disconcerting. Does she treat her own children like that, if she has any? I feel anyone that uses this "PETTICOAT PUNISHMENT" should be shot right their on the spot. Why would anyone do this to his or her children? I think we should frown upon this dumb doctor's ideas. David

2/12/00 I HAVE A 5-YR-OLD-SON. HE CAN BE SO LOVING AND SWEET, AND THEN HE IS LIKE THE DEVIL HIMSELF!! I DON'T ENJOY TAKING HIM OUT IN PUBLIC ANYMORE BECAUSE OF HIS BEHAVIOR. HIS FATHER LEFT US LAST MARCH, AND I WAS FORCED TO TAKE A DISCHARGE FROM THE NAVY DUE TO HIS ABSENCE. I THOUGHT THAT WE HAD ADJUSTED WELL. I GUESS I WAS WRONG. I AM AT MY WITS END ABOUT THIS SITUATION. I HAVE ALWAYS THOUGHT OF BRUCE AS THE LOVE OF MY LIFE, BUT HOW MANY SACRIFICES CAN A MOM MAKE? IT HAS JUST BEEN SO UNBEARABLE TO BE AROUND HIM THAT I TRIED THE PETTICOAT PUNISHMENT. MY GIRLFRIEND KATHY (I'VE BEEN A LESBIAN FOR YEARS BEFORE MY HUSBAND LEFT) AND I PUT HIM IN A PAIR OF HER PINK PANTIES (SHE'S VERY SMALL AND THEY FIT HIM NICELY) AND THEN TOOK HIM SHOPPING FOR A DRESS. AFTER A LOT OF ARGUING AND FIGHTING WITH HIM THAT CAUSED QUITE A STIR IN THE DEPARTMENT STORE, WE HAD HIM TRYING ON DRESSES OVER HIS PANTIES. WE SETTLED ON A NICE THIN COTTON DRESS IN A FLOWERED PATTERN. [See photo below] KATHY DISCREETLY TOOK PHOTOS WHEN HE WASN'T LOOKING BECAUSE WE KNOW HE'D PUT UP AN EVEN BIGGER FUSS IF HE KNEW WE WERE TAKING HIS PICTURE, BUT WE DID WANT TO PERMANENTLY RECORD HIS FIRST TIME IN A DRESS! THE BEST FEATURE OF THE DRESS WE BOUGHT WAS A NET PANEL THAT WENT ALL THE WAY AROUND THE DRESS LOW ON HIS

HIPS, AND THROUGH THE NET PANEL YOU COULD SEE HIS PINK PANTIES! [See photo] WE MADE HIM WEAR THE DRESS HOME, WHICH CAUSED HIM A LOT OF EMBARRASSMENT BECAUSE BOYS WHISTLED AND PEOPLE OPENLY LAUGHED AND POINTED AT HIS EXPOSED PANTIES. THAT NIGHT WE TOOK HIM TO ONE OF OUR GENDER SOCIETY MEETINGS. EVERYONE LOVED HIM AS A GIRL, AND I THINK HE'S STARTING TO LIKE IT TOO. I KEEP HIM IN PANTIES ALL THE TIME NOW AS WELL AS A TINY SATIN TRAINING BRA AND MINIATURE GARTER BELT AND BLACK NYLONS WE BOUGHT A SUPPLY OF IN MEXICO, AND HE HAS IMPROVED 1000%, BUT I'M CONSTANTLY FINDING HIM WITH HIS HAND DOWN HIS PANTS PLAYING WITH HIS PENIS IN HIS SILKY PANTIES. WE TELL HIM NOT TO DO IT, BUT HE KEEPS ON DOING IT. WHAT DO I DO ABOUT THAT? KATHY SAYS LET HIM MASTURBATE HIMSELF SILLY. I THINK I'D LIKE HIM TO ACT LIKE A LITTLE LADY. T. STEWART

2/12/00 Hi! I can't understand how hitting a child will help the child to understand. Spanking is the most stupid thing a parent can do with maybe the exception of putting a dress on a boy. How do you help a child or anyone else by inflicting pain? YOU DON'T! Use your brains, not your hands and dumb punishments! Angel (Angelbb@forol.com)

2/12/00 Children need to be spanked when they are naughty. It needs to sting and the bottom needs to be a deep color of red. I advise a wooden paddle administered 3 times for every year of life. Therefore the 4 and a half-year-old should get 12-14 hard spanks on the bare. Make it memorable and that should get his attention. You are obviously not spanking hard enough for him to mind you. Discipline now and be grateful later. Cindy. (bobcindy2@fahof.com)

2/12/00 To spank or not to spank? I might be old-fashioned, but I see nothing wrong with giving a child a good spanking if needed. I have found that a spanking given on a child's bare bottom has a high percentage of correction. The spanking must sting good to be effective. If you make it sting good, you will not have to do it very often. To make it sting and not leave marks on their bottoms, I suggest using baby oil on their bottoms. The bare hand or a small strap is the best. The rule of thumb I have is a spank on each side of the bottom for each year of age, e.g. five year old gets five spanks on each side. Take your time and give 15 to 20 seconds between each spank. Don't give less spanks because the child cries hard. When the spanking is over that should end the punishment. Forget this girls' clothes stuff for boys. Dr. Lott (doctorlotts@ggoo.com)

2/12/00 I have always been a believer in across-the-knee, bare-bottom spanking. You say that you are afraid of spanking this child. My answer is: You are not leaving your child with something to remember when you're done. You need to spank that child until he is crying from the sting of your hand or paddle. I'm not saying to beat him senseless, but until you have left a nice pink glow on that little bottom that stays there for a few hours, he will not believe you mean business. There is a certain amount of fear that each child should have of its parents when it comes to discipline. Do not be afraid to put a nice glow on your son's behind. If putting sissy panties on the boy humiliates him further (I can't see why it wouldn't, especially if you show him off to the neighbors or others), do it! It will help. If you are really having problems with a 4 1/2-year-old boy being unruly, it's your fault for not taking care of business, as you should. Steve Thannen (stet@nrak.net)

2/13/00 Spanking and more spanking! You betcha. Kids don't run the show, grown-ups do. A simple spanking on the bare bottom, administered in private and not in anger but rather as a deserved penalty for misbehavior — it's worked for generations, and you don't need to bother fixing something that ain't broke. Grace S.

2/13/00 I agree with those for petticoat punishment. For me one time was enough! Try it once, you will not believe the change. Like turning on a light. If spankings do not work, then rather than beat your child half to death, petticoat discipline him. I'm a guy's guy and have no interest in girls' stuff but when my wife and I couldn't handle our boy anymore, she told me about petticoat discipline that she read about in a women's magazine. Even though the article said it should not be done for a lot of reasons, it did say that it could be effective. Well, we tried it. Jan (my wife) got Jason a secondhand First Communion dress with all the lacy lingerie, petticoats and panties and stuff. I held him down while she dressed him. We made him stay that way for two days, even making him wear some of my wife's panties when he accidentally dirtied his. We also made him put on one of Jan's nighties for bedtime. After two days, we let him out of the clothes just before his grandparents came for a visit. He promised he'd be good forever if we let him out of the dress and things and didn't let his grandparents see him like that. It's amazing. Ever since he's been so good! Nothing else could have done it. When my sister-in-law's daughter started acting up, my wife loaned her the First Communion dress and panties and stuff. My niece is a wild little tomboy. Petticoat punishment worked even better on her after she was threatened to be shown off to the wild gang of boys she palled around with! Parents if you have problems with your boys (and even with you daughters) put them into a cute little dress and some nice girly panties, and they'll straighten right out! Dennis (ssdennis@yexorope.net)

2/13/00 Dear single mother, I am a schoolteacher in St. Louis. I teach 5th graders in a private school. We can use the paddle with parent's permission and I do use it a lot! I have found that it is effective if used in the right way. Set up clear consequences for misbehavior: #1-warning #2-time-out #3-paddling. I recommend a short little wooden paddle and bare bottom. I think that will get the little fellow's attention. My rule of thumb is: if you can't get attention out of one end, then go to the other end :)). I never think a child should be punished without knowing the "whys". Set clear standards, but don't be afraid to use the paddle. A little sting now and then might help a 5th grade teacher down the line have a good classroom. Panties for boys? That sounds like a good idea to me too! Thanks. Michelle (TEng3960@ccc.com)

2/13/00 I have a 3-year-old daughter who is out of control. She yells at me on a daily basis, she screams at me, tells me what to do and is simply nasty. She is very bossy to just about everyone. She has a younger brother who is 9 months. She can be sweet as pie to him or very nasty. In public she runs every situation. If I tell her "no" or try to stop her from misbehaving, she yells and swings her hand at me. I hate public attention. How do I discipline her so she will obey me? She even gets nasty with kids her age if I tell her to say "hi" to them. What am I doing wrong and what should I do? I feel like I am always yelling at her and spanking her or sending her to her room. Then I feel guilty. I wish she were a boy and I could use some petticoat punishment ideas, but she's a girly-girly so that wouldn't work. Maybe I'll get to use it on my son when he gets a little older. ANY ADVICE? (ARMison@boxit.com)

2/13/00 Petticoat punishment is a proper response to unruly children. Dress up the misbehaving child in pretty colored dresses with frills of lace, ribbons, and bows. This will soon stop their bad behavior. P.S. Make them go to school like this also! Mich (BBBwo@Zero422.net)

2/13/00 Your child is crying out for boundaries and discipline. That first bit of advice you got from that quack woman doctor is an unfortunate pile of useless, no— harmful— New Age nonsense. Boys are boys and girls are girls -- don't confuse a boy with this gender punishment crap. Your child needs a parent who is in control in a loving way. Look for a Growing Kids God's Way class near you. It will change your life — and his! A joyful relationship with your child IS attainable! Don (2hallmark2@aol.com)

2/13/00 I am in need of some assistance. It is my granddaughter. She is going to be 2 in December. But whenever my daughter goes anywhere she throws a tantrum, screaming and hollering and kicking. Then my daughter cries when she gets home. I have tried to baby-sit so she can spend time with her son, he is 7 and real nice, but I cannot baby-sit all the time. He's what you would call a "sissy." I've caught him trying on his mother's clothes dozens of times. I used to get mad at him, but now I accept it. He is sweet and loving that is for sure. I just found out that he now wears girls' panties all the time, real lacy and silky ones. My daughter bought them for him because he insisted on it. When I learned about it, I asked him what he would do and wouldn't he get embarrassed if the kids at school and in his neighborhood found out about the panties. He shocked me when he said they all know already and don't give him any trouble about it. He said a couple of the boys have asked him about wearing girls' panties, how they feel and what they are like to wear, etc. I walked in his room one day and he was showing one of the neighbor boys all the panties he has stacked up in his drawer. My grandson was holding up several pairs of panties and encouraging the other boy to touch the nylon and lacy frills. When I coughed and made my presence known, the boy got so embarrassed, he blushed and ran home. My grandson just leisurely stood there admiring his panties, lovingly folding them up and putting them back in his drawer. I guess I'm getting old. Boys in my day would never do anything like that. But I get tired and I am now most worried about his mother. She cannot seem to keep her cool. At times, she grabs the baby and screams at her. I have advised her to leave her alone, but she says she cannot handle her anymore with the constant crying and attention she needs. Any advice? Please answer as soon as you can. She is worrying me. My daughter says she just cannot take it anymore. Gloria (Member BigG0203)

2/13/00 Hi Everyone! Boy, I thought I was the only one that had problems with a 4-and-a-half-year-old son. But mine is a little different. I hadn't seen my son for 2 years because of my ex's actions, but I finally got him back this May, and let me tell you I am running out of options. I noticed that he was abused from his grandmother when my ex took him and dumped him of at his mother's door. I had to teach him that in my house there is no hitting. Although this one went pretty good, my son does not want to listen. He will get in trouble just to get attention. I also have a 19-month-old baby girl. My son abuses his little sister, teases her until she cries and pinches her up on her neck, feet and arms, leaving bruises on her little body. My son also does not want to eat. Don't give me wrong. He loves to eat when I have something he wants. Then he eats it in seconds, but if he doesn't like it, it takes him forever. Even depriving him of snacks doesn't improve that much. Well now we make him sit until it's gone. And it is working because he is trying to come up with every excuse that there is to get up from the table before all his food is gone. But that isn't all. He doesn't listen and is always getting into trouble. I am running out of options. Is everyone stressed as well? I am stressed down to my teeth. I hope we can all find a solution to make things easy. I bought some lace panties for him after reading some emails here, but haven't gotten up the nerve yet to make him wear them. Just after I bought them, I showed them to him and told him that they would be punishment panties. He looked at me real funny, but he has been almost tolerable since I put those panties in his dresser drawer. He keeps getting a bit wilder each day. I think he's trying my limits and wants to see how far he can go before I jump on him and panty the little monster. Thanks for reading my story. P.S I am going to try these new panties training things and see if that will work. I sure need to figure something out. LOL Telke (Munchy99@qualol.com)

2/13/00 Spanking is the answer. You threaten a bare bottom spanking, and if the naughtiness continues, you administer exactly that punishment! Works like a charm!
Michael

2/13/00 My 4-year-old is also in a tantrum phase. I warn with a time-out, but after 3 warnings, if he doesn't respond positively, off go his pants and underwear and I put him over my knee and give him a good 3 swats. Then I hug him and tell him the spanking was out of love and that I'll never hit him out of anger or stress. It works like a charm. Maybe I'll get him girls' panties too just for good measure. Sue Ranks (licken1971@yahoo.com)

2/13/00 I am also a single Mom with a six year old. Just in the past month we have had some things happen that has made my son act out something terrible. We have recently had to change schools and daycares. We just found out we have to move out of our house. All of these things combined have stressed me out. I can only imagine what it is doing to him. Spanking, time-outs, and grounding have not worked. I'm ready to quit and don't know what to do. I have thought about counseling. I don't think girls' clothes will work with him. I might ask a counselor's opinion of that. I really need some help and advice. If anyone has any suggestions, please. Let me know. Thanks. Dana (dforpeace@tge.net)

2/13/00 I can perfectly understand what the lady is going through who has the 4½ year-old who acts out. I pretty much am having the same problem with my 5½-year-old son. He never wants to listen to me anymore. He does not pick up his toys after repeatedly being begged, asked and then yelled at. When someone stops by to see me, he does not let me talk to the person. He will do something bad to get attention. I am recently separated from my husband of 7 years, as of 4 months ago. I wanted to move my child to a better environment without the drinking, mental and physical abuse that I was experiencing with my no good husband. I thought my David's behavior would get better, but it actually got much worse. I am heavily stressed about this situation. I work two jobs at home, both mental jobs and he does not or will not understand what pressure I am under. I have a baby-sitter who keeps him out of my hair while I'm working. She told me about petticoat punishment before I read your letters and emails about it. I guess there's a lot to it. I never really even heard of it before, but I'm ready to try it. I think I'll tell his sitter to get together what she needs in the way of punishment clothes and give it a try. I've got nothing to lose -- except his repulsive little Napoleon attitude! Yeah, she can handle him pretty good. I'll have her give it a go and break him in. Then maybe on my days off, I take my little David in a dress to different activities, regardless of how embarrassed he might be. I am frustrated and unwilling to put up with anymore of his nastiness. All advice appreciated! DAWN (1DIDIS@AOL.COM)

2/13/00 It must be a 4 1/2 yr old thing. My son is also behaving in the same way. There is no getting through to him when he is behaving like that. These episodes are becoming more frequent and I am becoming less patient. Up to this point he has been a well-behaved child. Now everything feels like it is coming undone. There is a problem. I just don't know what it is. It bothers me. Is it chemical? Is it something or someone he is exposed to when I am not there? Am I to blame? Is it his disposition? Is it temporary? Why can't he just tell me what's wrong? It is totally ridiculous to assume that the tantrums are a result of some "ex-marital stress." And as for the single mother thing, that is a fact of who you are. It doesn't have to be a label you give to yourself. It just makes situations, especially motherhood more burdensome.

The fact is that this behavior is normal. It is not easy, it is not perfect, it is not the way we would like it. Many families that are "well-adjusted" have these same problems. I know because I am a teacher at an "elite" preschool. Parents all over have these problems. It does help to talk about it. Over the years I've had a half dozen boys who were subjected to petticoat punishment at home and a few of them were even made to come to our preschool in dresses and usually with baby diapers or frilly panties on underneath those dresses. I never considered doing that to my own son, but reading about it here brings back those memories -- all of those boys were very well behaved, usually embarrassed and sometimes crying -- but always well behaved. I should give it a try with my naughty little one. Marie

2/13/00 I have twin 4-year-old boys. I am experienced with panty training. It's like petticoat punishment except I just use panties most of the time. However, occasionally, I put my boys in dresses too that I buy just for them because I want them to know they each have their own punishment clothes and not just dresses passed down from their older sister -- much more humiliating that way. When they are in dresses, I also insist they wear long, frilly slips that they have to keep sticking out well below their skirt hems so they constantly see the lacy lingerie that they have on underneath their dresses. [See photo left] I always keep one of their dresses hung on the back of their bedroom door, so they see it whenever the door is closed. It is the last thing they see at night before going to sleep and the first thing they see in the morning. I used to spend hours and hours with temper tantrums, which included spitting, hitting, kicking, screaming, throwing things and hurting their sister. I tried the doctor's time-outs, standing against the wall, locking them in their room, taking away toys, talking and spanking, but nothing did a lot of good. The spankings worked for a little while, but as soon as their asses cooled off, they'd be in trouble again. We are military and while my husband was away on a long mission, the fits got worse and worse. They threw toys and things at their sister and me. One even stabbed his sister with a pen and the other pulled her hair out by the handful. When he went to daycare or stayed with his grandparents everyone complained about how bad they acted. Yet their twin sister is so caring and well behaved. I tried not to compare them, but one has to wonder why my girl was so good and the twins so bad. So I started petticoat punishment and first thing began calling each of my sons by a girl's name: "Roberta" for "Robert" and "Mary" for "Mark." That got them mad.

Then I started with the panties. I bought them some of their own, some very pretty ones in pastel colors with embroidery and lace, since I didn't want them wearing ones belonging to their sister. I got the idea for all this after we had problems with a panty raider stealing panties off our clotheslines. People said the raider was a pervert who wore the panties he stole and did dirty sex things in them. I thought it was funny and teased the boys about wanting to be like that pervert. I told them that what they really wanted was to be a little girls because they were always picking on their sister and therefore must be jealous of her and all the pretty clothes she got to wear. That, I said, must be the reason, so I was going to help them. They became very quiet when I brought out the panties and very self-conscious when I made them put them on. Instantly, the panties tamed them him down. They still do every time I put them in panties. Now, the dress and other clothes are rarely necessary. I get what I want with just the fancy underwear. And they know they'll get a good licking if they dare to take them off without permission.

Hey, ladies, the panties really do work, you can skip the dress; you just have to watch a boy under panty training so he doesn't secretly take them off. He'll try to do that until he gets used to them. And some boys actually get to like the panties and then start playing with themselves while wearing them. My boys are in that stage right now. So now I'm dreaming up punishments to fit such naughtiness. One time I put fingernail polish on their penises and another time I put tampons up their bums. Be ready to punish a boy for such disgusting behavior like masturbation. Another thing I like to do is make the boys model their panties and masturbate through their panties (since they like doing it so much!) in front of their sister and her friends, who are quick to laugh at them and call them names. Panty training and petticoat punishment will make your life a lot easier if you have a problem boy for a son.

By the way, when my husband came home after that mission and saw our sons in panties, he didn't give me any grief about it. He knew our boys were a handful and that I had to do whatever I had to do to maintain a civil household. I'm having the boys' girly names embroidered on all their panties right now. When their panties are ready, I'm going to take them with me to meet the nice Mexican lady who is doing the embroidery. I told her all about my training, and she wanted to show them off to her son, who has been giving her a lot of problems. Arial Lee McD.

2/13/00 I am so glad that I am not alone with this. My four-year-old has me scared and confused with his uncontrollable behavior over these past few months! His tantrums are becoming more and more violent each day it seems. I really feel that I cannot handle much more of it. Last week, after work, I went to pick him up from his baby-sitter's house, (he went to a daycare for a short time, but they couldn't handle him.) He saw me drive up to the house. His face changed from smiling and laughing to mad and upset almost instantly. He turned and ran into the house and hid under a sheet on the living room floor. He refused to come out, screaming at me the whole time that he didn't want to go home! I finally got him out of her house and into my truck, buckled in, which took a lot to accomplish with him kicking and screaming the entire time. All the way home, he got louder with each scream. I had been reading your postings and so I threatened him, saying that I was going to pull into the shopping center by our house and take him to the Little Bo Peep Shoppe and start dressing him like a girl. The kid went quiet on the spot. He just stared at me in horror! It's amazing that a four-year-old would already have developed such an adverse sensitivity to anything female. He has been pretty good since (that was two days ago). But I wonder how long it is going to last. But if I have to resort to the petticoat punishment thing, I know it will work. Or maybe just the threat of doing it will keep him from being bad. Well, he is still having the "tantrums" but they are very short lived, just a reminder about putting him in girls' clothes makes him stop. Still it is troubling that he has such low regard for females. That must be the case because he is so afraid when I tell him I'm going to dress him like one. I did make him think that I'd even cut off his dickie and make him like a girl "down there" that scared the living hell out of him; he cried one whole day. I don't know where this is leading to, but I'd rather have him living in fear of losing his penis than have him carrying on like a maniac 24/7. I had been feeling so alone until I came across this site. Thank you! Rita (Blackhound971@aol.com)

2/13/00 Yes! Petticoat him! Then if he refuses to put on his pretty clothes, you may consider spanking at least initially to get him to put them on. Here's another tip: That very first time you dress him up, TAKE PICTURES! They'll be great as blackmail to make him dress up again in the future and to get him to mind you. Then future spankings to make him dress up will probably not be necessary because you can threaten him with his girly photos, which you have ever ready to show his friends and neighbors. You can also threaten him by saying you will give his teacher permission to dress him like a girl when he misbehaves at the daycare center. When his punishment time is over, lovingly let him out of his pretty clothes and hang them in his room where he can see they are always ready for future use. Soon, you will probably find that you have a much relieved little boy who loves you dearly, and who may even at times willingly don his girly clothes in hopes of gaining more of your love and acceptance.
