Sissy Maid Quarterly

n u m b e r t w o

Here it is, the first magazine devoted entirely to the needs of male sissy maids and their employers! Years in development, every article and feature was carefully written and edited specifically for the growing world of sissy-male-based domestic service. And every illustration was produced exclusively for this, the second edition of Sissy Maid Quarterly.

SMQ is published by Sandy Thomas, in conjunction with Rose Productions, the leader in literature and information for and about sissy maids and their employers. Professionally written and designed, and fully illustrated, this second edition of SMQ is bound to become a collector's item. INSIDE: (in addition to the articles listed on front cover) An interview with a gorgeous Texas girl on life with her sissy maid; A report on the proper handling of "hand wash only" lingerie; How to (ugh!) wash dishes; A discussion of just "how high" heels should be for sissies doing housework. And much more!

Be informed. Be enlightened. Be BOLD. But whatever you do, be sure to get Sissy Maid Quarterly, Number ONE. It's the first magazine that is specifically for and about sissy maids and their employers. Fashion, housework, social concerns, discipline, lingerie. . . SMQ is the magazine that covers it all -- and covers it from both the sissy's perspective, and the employer's.

No one knows more about the lifestyle, fashions, and concerns of sissy maids and their employers than Debra Rose, the Editor and Art Director of Sissy Maid Quarterly. And no one has a more consistent reputation for quality publishing in this field than Sandy Thomas, SMQ's publisher.

Each issue of SMQ, (including issue Number ONE) is professionally written, edited, and designed. And each issue includes lots of ORIGINAL illustrations, created exclusively for Sissy Maid Quarterly. (No "clip art", poorly written articles, or old material in SMQ.)

SMQ Number One includes: A fully-illustrated, captioned Spring Fashion Review. Thoughtful articles on Housework Scheduling, Sissy Schools, Entertaining, and How sissies can handle their employer's inevitable Boyfriend. Interviews with two employers who are more than satisfied with their sissy maids. A look at the absolute lingerie "basic" for sissy maids, the Gaff. A report on how to properly decorate a Maid's Room for a sissy servant, including a full layout of the "ideal" quarters. And features such as "In The Kitchen" and "Report from the Laundry Room", offering real information to help sissies do their jobs more professionally.

Sissy Maid Quarterly

2 EDITORIAL - Debra Rose, the author of "Domestic Bliss", makes a case for more public sissy maids in this issue's Editorial: "It's Time to Bring Sissy Maids Out into the Open." With more people aware of the fact of sissy servants, and with sissies themselves more accepting of their own "third gender" identity and asexual nature, SMQ thinks it's time for sissy domestics to be out and about more.

6 SUMMER FASHION - A full, illustrated preview of the best looks for sissy maids for Summer. This time there are even a few "play" outfits for those day's off. And we cover the wildly-popular new "uniform" for sissy maids, rompers!

11 SISSY SERVANTS AND BOY-FRIENDS - How best to mix the two "males" in your life, even though they are entirely different, of course. And how to minimize the pouting your sissy maid will undoubtedly do when you first begin sleeping with your new lover.

16 "A SISSY'S WORLD" - Our new column, written by a full-time sissy maid, examines both the lifestyle and feelings of today's sissy domestics. By: Sissy Jennie.

27 The MAID'S ROOM - In this special edition of our regular column, we test Rubber Sheets. Read all about our "exhaustive" testing, and find out which rubber sheets are best for sissies' little beds.

44 "HOW HIGH IS TOO HIGH?"
We take a short look at a tall subject -- the sky-high heels many employers want their maids to wear, even for day! And we offer a compromise.

E D I T O R I A L

It's Time to Bring Sissy Maids Out into the Open. . .

While sissy-male-based domestic service has been a growing phenomenon for at least ten years, most sissy maids still spend the vast majority of their time and do most of their work inside their employer's homes. In short, sissy maids have not really been "public" servants. But, fortunately, this is slowly beginning to change as employers begin to take their servants out shopping with them, or even send them out alone to run errands.

In light of this recent trend, some of our women readers have written to ask what the public reaction to their sissy servant is likely to be. The answer, if you live in a large city, is that any "reaction" you may get will be rather small. And I'll try to explain why this is so in this issue's Editorial.

Until twenty years ago it was seen as entirely normal for a woman to be a professional man's assistant. Fetching coffee in the office, acting charming and respectful towards her boss' clients and associates, and dressing in a professional "uniform" that was often as alluring as it was practical, were all seen as integral to the job for literally thousands of secretaries and "girl Fridays."

Indeed, running out to buy the boss' wife or girlfriend a "nice anniversary present" or picking up "my suit at the cleaners" were often an expected part of a female assistant's "job description."

Nowadays, of course, the shoe (high-heeled?) is on the other foot, at least as far as sissies are concerned. Confident young women are now quite used to ordering their sissy servants around at home. A snap of the fingers or a quick "smack" on his little fanny often accompanies a casually-stated order to a sissy. And, just as employers are used to ordering their sissy servant around, sissies seem to be quite used to being ordered around!

Confident young women are now quite used to ordering their sissy servants around at home.

At home, a sissy maid's employer fully expects immediate and complete obedience. This same immediate obedience to one's wishes should be just as expected outside the home as it is inside. And feeling free to take your sissy servant out with you, or send him out on his own, will add greatly to his overall usefulness. The list of things a "public" sissy can help you with is only limited by your own needs and imagination.

The sight of an appropriately-dressed sissy meekly following behind his employer, his arms filled with her packages, (and perhaps even her purse slung over his shoulder!) is already beginning to become a common sight in cities such as Los Angeles and New York. In the years to come, even medium-sized cities in "middle America" will see the phenomenon of sissy servants grow.

Most people now know that it is relatively common for a young woman to employ a sissy as her domestic servant. The very success of this magazine attests to the wide public knowledge of this phenomenon. So no one on the street should be very surprised or "shocked" to see you with a sissy servant in tow.

While men tend to sometimes be a little reserved when it comes to the subject of sissy servants, (perhaps a case of "there but for the grace of God go I"?) most women are in strong support of the social change sissy maids represent. After all, why should it always be females who do menial, thankless, and socially-demeaning chores? And why should it always be women who have to look and act "cute" and submissive?

Fortunately sissies are beginning to take on many of the roles women have had foisted on them for ages. And this change has occurred just in time, too, since women have slowly extricated themselves from the mundane-but-needed roles of housekeeper, laundress, and family waitress. Nowadays sissy males perform most of these tasks in many progressive households.

All this explanation hopefully illustrates the fact that there is no reason why your sissy servant cannot become a much more public part of your life. By becoming a "public servant" your sissy can begin to assist you during shopping excursions and other outings -- or even go on vacation with you to provide the same level of personal service as he does at home.

When in public, sissy "maids" are naturally dressed in less flamboyant clothing than we might prefer them in at home. A sissy dressed in a little "French Maid's" uniform, with it's very short skirt and fluffy petticoats, would cause quite a stir swishing and wiggling down Main Street! So the style of uniforms must be toned down a bit.

But this "toning down" does not mean that your sissy can't dress in something appropriate to what he truly is: a sissy and a servant. His clothing should exhibit a non-masculine, effeminate style that clearly exhibits his sissy sexual identity. And the selected outfit should also have a slight subservient look that is fitting for his "station" as your servant. After all, you certainly don't want anyone to think the little sissy following behind you is your boyfriend, do you?

An excellent choice for "bottoms" is clingy Lycra tights in a pastel color. Or if it is warm, perhaps a brief pair of short-shorts. (The back zipper of the new short-shorts will certainly make it very clear the wearer is a sissy!) On top, a little ribbed cotton "tee" in an effeminate "French" cut is nice on warm days. Or a soft, pastel sweater might be worn for cooler outings.

Closely-tailored, short little "bell-hop" jackets in light wool or even satin are nice for a more "dressed" look. And cute little rubber sandals or patent "Mary Janes" with a bit of a heel are appropriate for a sissy to wear when going out.

No apron is required, of course, and would be inappropriate while out on the street anyway. But rest assured, with the outfits listed above, (and with you snapping your fingers and issuing obvious, non-stop orders!) that everyone you meet will know exactly who and what your little "companion" really is!

So, go ahead, girls and bring your sissy out in the open. There's nothing for you to be ashamed of. And little "Cissy" will just have to get used to having the public know his true identity and social position. He might get a bit red in the face at first, but with each passing month he'll likely be seeing more and more of his "kind" out with their employers too!

COVER STORY

Miami Girl Says She's Always "Rubbed the Right Way" by Her Devoted Sissy Servant, Sandy

After a long, hard day of work, or even after a long, hard day of play, there is nothing better than a refreshing bath or shower followed by a relaxing massage. And this is especially true if your hard day of work or play is going to slip right into a nice evening out with your friends or that "special someone."

Meet Miss Julie Consalio, our relaxed and (except for the towel!) quite nude cover model. She lives a very nice life in Miami, just north of Coconut Grove. And a big part of her very nice life is standing behind her on our cover, dressed in a darling little maid's dress and pinafore apron. He's Sandy, Miss Julie's sissy maid of only five months.

You see, Julie regularly practices the advice above. She is massaged almost daily by Sandy, and always gets "rubbed the right way" before she goes out on a date.

"It just relaxes me, and makes me feel better. I've always been partial to getting massages, so when I hired a maid I made sure he knew what he was doing with his hands!" Julie reports.

And her little maid, Sandy, certainly knows what he's doing with his hands. He's a full graduate of a year-long extensive course in personal massage. And he received excellent grades, too!

". . . so when I hired a maid I made sure he knew what he was doing with his hands!"

Miss Julie is only 25, but she has a successful life as the owner of three health and fitness clubs, (she's one of those fortunate girls who got married, and divorced, from a wealthy gentleman at a very young age!)

"I work about four days each week, meeting with my staff and making sure I'm seen by the members. And I'm now making money and paying off the loans I got with my settlement as collateral.

Anyway, about six months ago I decided to "treat" myself and hire a full time maid. And, like I said, I wanted someone who could give me nice massages as well.

I interviewed some girls, but they were all older than I am and sort of out of shape.

"I didn't know what she was really talking about at first, until she said, "You know -- sissies."

Somehow these women just didn't feel right.

Then this girl I know who works for a modeling agency down here told me that some of the models had "male maids." I didn't know what she was really talking about at first, until she said, "You know -- sissies."

I'd heard of sissy maids, so I figured I'd at least interview one. One of the models at my friend's agency told me about Sandy. He'd been a maid for awhile for a model, but the model moved to Europe and decided to not take him along with her. Her loss was my gain, so to speak!"

Sandy enjoys working for his new mistress. And he doesn't mind the "extra duty" of massaging her one bit, of course.

"Yes, I must admit, I like giving Miss Julie her massages. I mean, look at her body -- it's perfect!" the cute blonde maid told us.

"I sort of got excited a little at first, and my gaff would get uncomfortable, you know?" the maid reported while his cheeks blushed as pink as the darling cotton gingham uniform dress he was wearing.

"But now it's O.K. I still really like massaging Miss Julie, but I can handle it better. . .because of the hormones, I guess."

Like many (but certainly not all) sissy maids these days, Sandy takes regular but mild doses of female hormones. With most sissies' naturally low levels of offsetting male hormones, these doses serve to almost eliminate any overt sexual drive, (and indeed, bring on total impotence to many sissy domestics.)

"And I also don't really mind doing Miss Julie's housework and things. It's my job, and I'm pretty good at it," the maid said.

"Sandy gives me a massage after I get home from work -- or sometimes before I go to bed. And I always take time to have a nice bath or shower followed by long, all-over massage before I go out on a date," Julie told us as she was being made up for our cover shot.

Miss Julie lives the very nice lifestyle of most of the employers of sissy maids we interview -- no housework, no laundry, no ironing, no cooking, and no cleaning the kitchen or bathrooms or floors. Increasingly such tasks are simply seen as "sissy's work" by sophisticated young women, and they would no more think of doing them than they would of greasing a Mack truck!

Little Sandy, on the other hand, knows where his place in life is. After being "deserted" by his former employer, he is completely and entirely devoted to his new "mistress", (a word he himself frequently uses when referring to his employer.)

"If Miss Julie wants it done, I do it. It's that simple! I know I am here to serve her, and that doesn't really bother me. I know some sissies have trouble with that, but I don't. And I never get mad when she dates, because before her date gets his hands on her, I know I'll have my hands on her first!"

Sounds like the perfect relationship to us!

Miss Julie poses for our photographer with nothing on except the thick terry towel spun around her wet hair! (She was wearing panties, at least!) A glance at this picture is all it takes to know why Julie frequently dates some of the most eligible men in Miami. And why Sandy, her sissy maid, seems to so enjoy his "work" with his employer on the massage table!

In Fashion . . .

HOT SUMMER FASHION

OUT BY THE POOL, OR IN WHERE IT'S COOL, SISSY MAIDS HAVE IT MADE IN THE SHADE THIS SEASON!

Summer time. . . and the dressing is easy! The fashion choices for sissy maids for summer are more colorful and playful even than this spring's clothes. And while most outfits are for housework and other domestic duties, there are a few fun "play" clothes for sissies too.

Elegant serving uniforms for evenings, skimpy swimwear for serving out by the pool, playful rompers, and even something for the "maid's day off" are all represented in SMQ's Summer Fashion Review.

Since sissy fashion follows the more forceful currents of women's fashion, a quick review of today's feminine style is in order. Women's fashion is turning away from the deconstructed look of recent seasons and returning to an elegant, feminine approach. Skirts are still generally super-short, though other lengths are also shown. For summer, shorts are hot; the tinier the better. And swimwear puts it's emphasis on cut and design, more than on bareness. (Though the minimal string bikini made a tiny comeback.)

Tops are being worn undersized this season, after years of oversized, sloppy looks. The best tops are tiny, and cut like those an infant might wear. Some models, dressed in tiny, soft "baby tees", look like they should have pacifiers dangling around their necks!

And finally, fashion moves forward by using hi-tech, glossy, industrial fabrics. While it is odd to see in summer, fashion mavens are stressing designers' use of rubber. Stretchy latex T-shirts, worn in layers for opacity, showed up in every fashion magazine this season. And a bright yellow rubber halter top was prominently featured in two leading fashion "rags."

These same trends are effecting fashion for sissy maids as well. The "tiny top" look is interpreted for sissies in their own "baby tees." And continuing the childlike theme, rompers offer perhaps the biggest news on the sissy fashion front. Practical, as well as juvenile and effeminate, rompers are a perfect style solution for busy sissy maids. And short-shorts for sissies continue to be very popular.

While there's lots of fun and bright color for day, the simple elegance of black uniforms with white aprons has returned for evening. Some of these uniforms look toward fall, and those first few cool cocktail parties of the city social season. In these pretty dresses, sissies will be ready to not only serve, but add classic ambiance as well.

Sleepwear and sportswear for sissies is more girlish and feminine than ever. This is in keeping with the general trend in sissy fashions of acknowledging the asexual gender identity more and more sissies are feeling comfortable exposing in public. Even sissies themselves are finally agreeing with what women have been saying for some time -- sissies should dress as what they are -- sissies!

Sissy maids work hard. And some are beginning to play a little also, as they become more public. This summer's fashions for the "third gender" reflect their lifestyles. And their sweet, submissive personalities, too! →

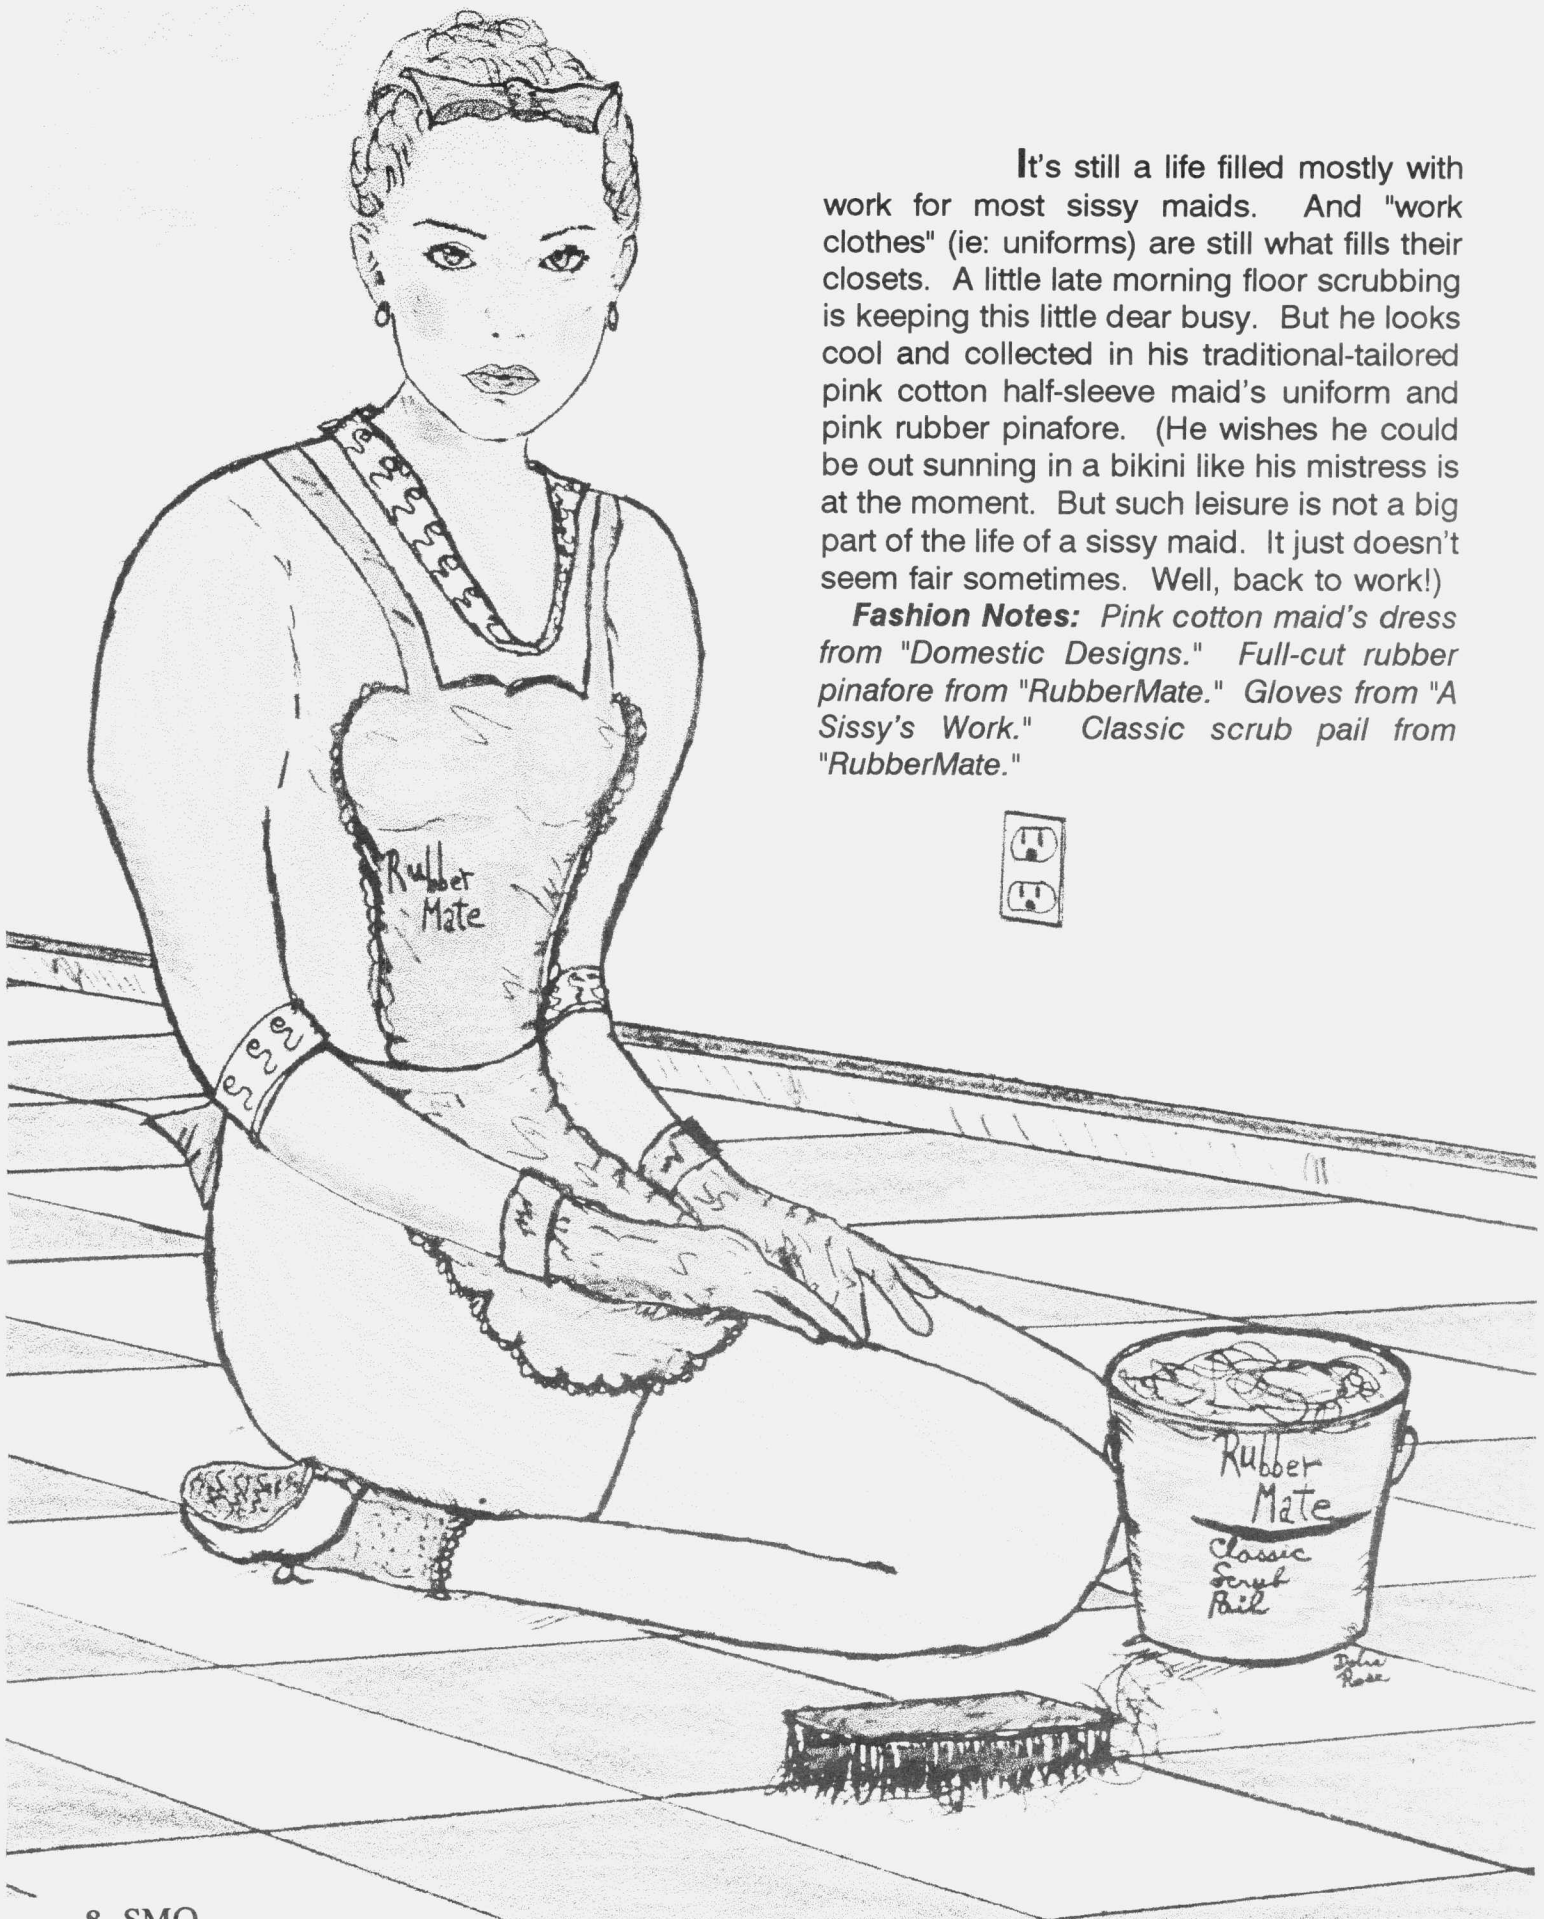

This outfit is not only cute, it's versatile as well. Crop top and panty can be used for sunning, sleeping, or aerobics. Not all of a sissy maid's clothing consists of maid's uniforms, after all!

This bright yellow top and panty set is a good example of how sissy fashion is beginning to be more forward and open about the neutral sexuality of the wearer. This "open" movement is pulling sissy fashion in an effeminate direction, with even the last tiny vestiges of boyishness removed.

Fashion Notes: His bright yellow nylon/Lycra crop top, with bow at the bodice and an elasticized bottom band decorated with hearts is worn here with matching yellow high-waisted panties. Panties have an elastic waistband emblazoned with the "Neverlast" logo. (This new sportswear company uses a name that plays upon the masculinity of boxer's shorts, and also perhaps on the non-existent sexual prowess of the sissy males these clothes are marketed to!)

Crop top and panties, both from "NEVERLAST", sportswear for sissies. Sissy's powernet gaff from "Fashion Fantasy."

It's still a life filled mostly with work for most sissy maids. And "work clothes" (ie: uniforms) are still what fills their closets. A little late morning floor scrubbing is keeping this little dear busy. But he looks cool and collected in his traditional-tailored pink cotton half-sleeve maid's uniform and pink rubber pinafore. (He wishes he could be out sunning in a bikini like his mistress is at the moment. But such leisure is not a big part of the life of a sissy maid. It just doesn't seem fair sometimes. Well, back to work!)

"Whaaaaaahh!" What a cry baby! All that fuss and all those tears over a silly broken feather duster. What a Sissy.

Well, he's certainly dressed like a sissy, anyway, so at least his clothes fit his personality!

Rompers are here for sissy maids in a big way. They have all the advantages: one-piece practicality; a fit that allows great freedom of movement; and an effeminate, juvenile look that is just perfect for sissies!

For daytime housework and casual serving, you'll be seeing more and more sissies in rompers this summer and fall. In fact, rompers may well take over from the Lycra "bike shorts and top" look that's been the mainstay of a sissy maid's daytime wardrobe. Just slip them on, reach back and zip (or button) them up, tie on an apron, and a sissy maid is all set. Over bare legs with little anklets, (as shown here) or over pantyhose or thin tights for fall and winter, rompers are simply the way to go.

And the new "Mary Jane" shoes that are everywhere now go just great with them, too!

Fashion Notes: His red nylon/poly rompers with peter pan collar, puffed sleeves, and bloomer bottoms, from "Romper Time". Sissy's pale pink nylon apron, with "SISSY maid" embroidery, from "At Your Service." Pink nylon anklets with lace tops, from "Sissy Sox" boutique. His red patent leather "Mary Jane" shoes, from "Step Lightly" for sissies. Red satin hair ribbon from the Accessory Place.

(Studio Note: This sissy's tears were actually from an onion cut in the studio for the photo. We were a bit concerned about how our model would react to this outfit and our planned picture of it. But he took it all in stride. As we tied the big "Sissy Maid" apron on him, he just smiled, looked down at the apron's words, and shyly said, "That's what I am, I guess."

Sissies are finally beginning to accept being dressed as what they are. And what a refreshing fashion event that is!

Swimwear for sissies is actually servicing wear for sissies, since they often work pool-side serving at their employer's summer parties. But it's still fun if the suits look as if he could swim a lap or two in them. And while sissies have traditionally been dressed in sleek Lycra maillots for poolside serving, there has been a recent turn to two-piece suits for sissies.

This navy blue bikini with criss-cross bra straps is perfect for hot summer afternoon serving. He can fetch drinks, and deliver your favorite sun protection lotion, (or even rub it on your back for you) all while keeping up a cute appearance as the sissy and servant he is.

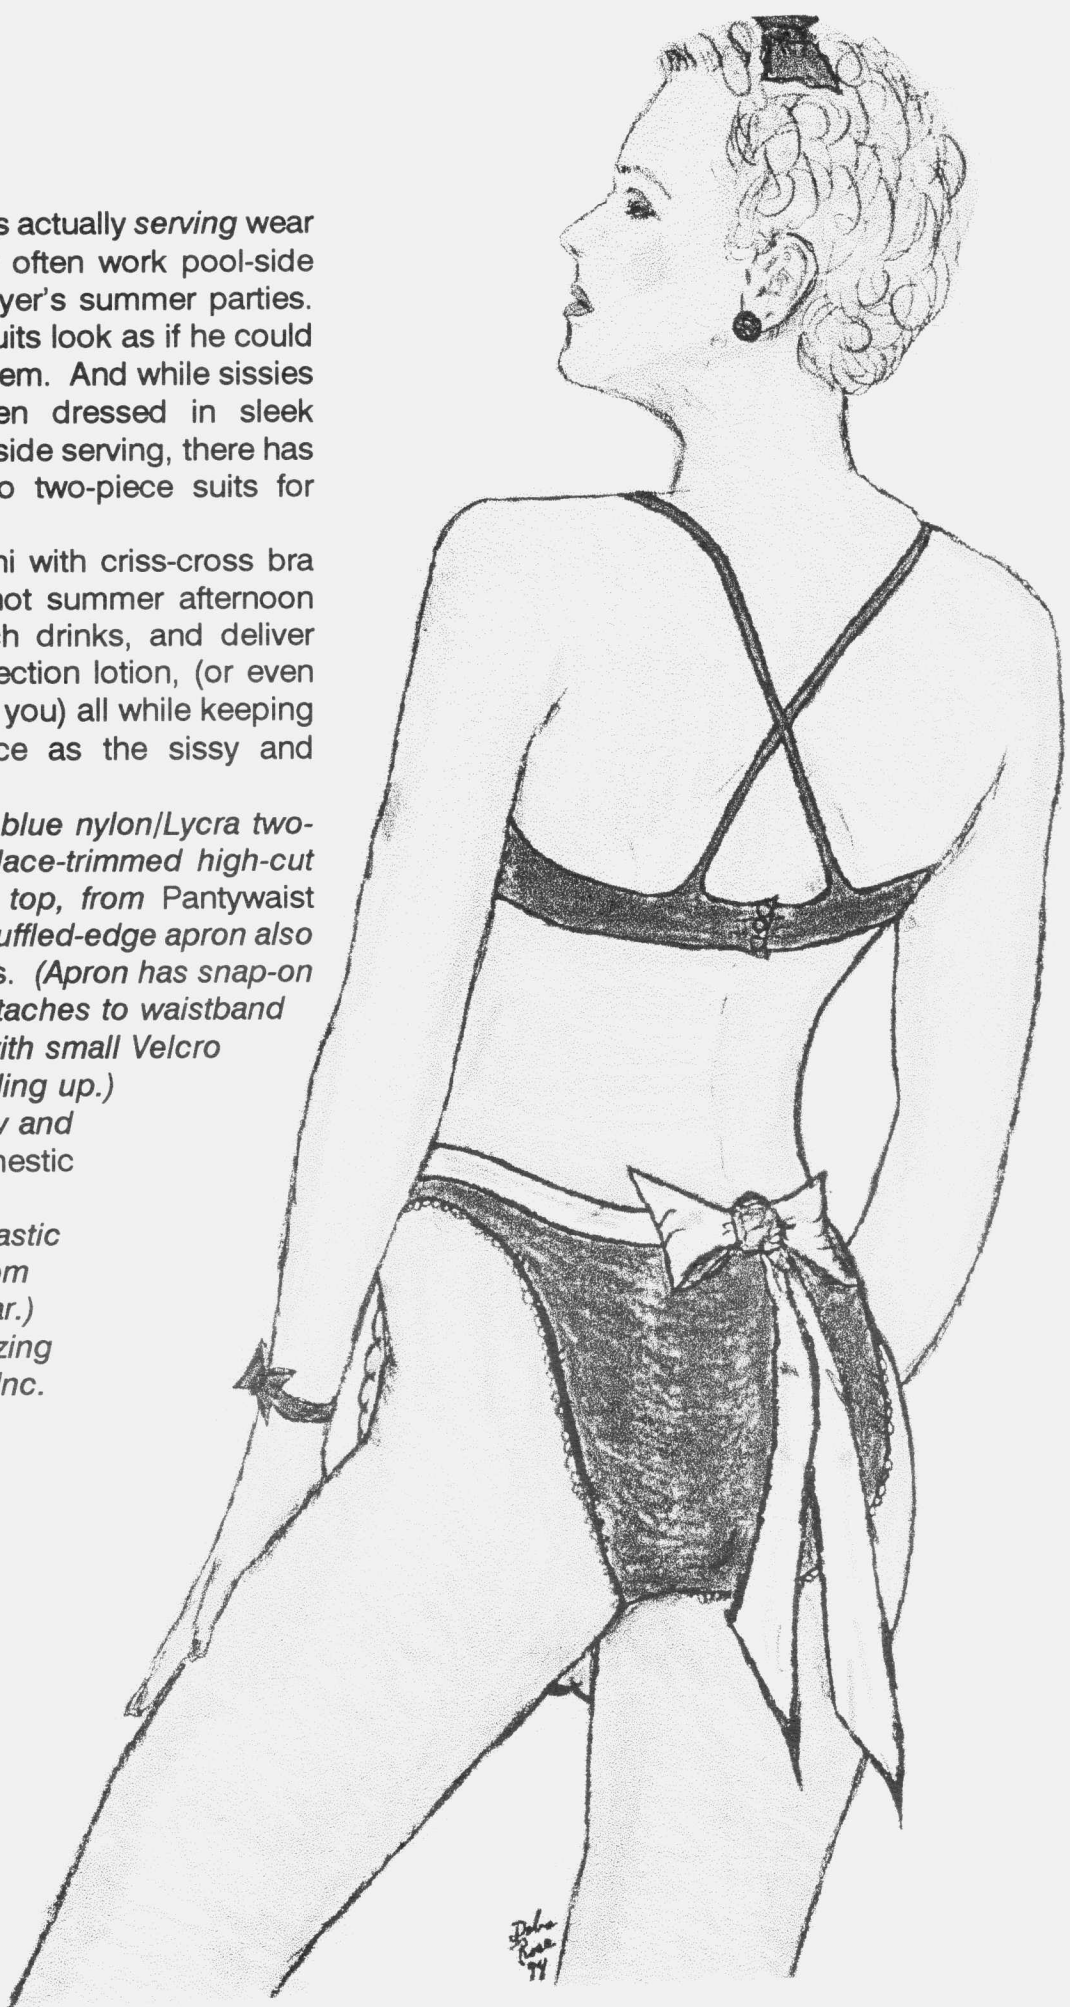

Fashion Notes: Navy blue nylon/Lycra two-piece swimsuit, with lace-trimmed high-cut legs and button-back top, from Pantywaist Sports. White nylon ruffled-edge apron also from Pantywaist Sports. (Apron has snap-on bow in back. Strap attaches to waistband of swimsuit bottoms with small Velcro patches, to prevent riding up.)

Red plastic hair bow and wrist cufflet from Domestic Designs.

Sissy Servants and Boyfriends. . .

A MIX MADE IN HEAVEN

Introduction

With live-in sissy maids now a relatively common phenomenon in young women's households, it is only a matter of time before "the sissy" and "the boyfriend" have to interact. Obviously there are many benefits in terms of convenience and leisure that a live-in sissy servant can offer a busy young woman, and perhaps especially for the woman with a live-in boyfriend. But one must be careful not to let the many benefits be burdened by pesky, unnecessary social problems.

The attractive, successful young women who most often have full-time sissies working for them also have no problem gaining considerable attention from regular males. And these attentions are often returned and result in serious and enjoyable intimate relationships. These intimate relationships will eventually require that a woman's sissy servant get along with and wait on her lover.

But one must be careful not to let the many benefits be burdened by pesky, unnecessary social problems.

While there are no real concerns about hierarchy, a young woman with a sissy servant must be very clear about everyone's role in her household. She must make it clear that she is the mistress of the house, but also allow that her lover is the man of the house. The sissy, of course, is neither; and will answer to the "master and mistress" equally, always showing them both the utmost respect and complete obedience.

A woman's boyfriend should begin to feel entirely comfortable in her home. Also, he should feel comfortable ordering the sissy to run errands for him or perform any other little chores he might require.

Living Arrangements

Of course, a woman's lover will be sleeping with her in the Master Bedroom. While this goes without saying, it is important that the sissy in the house understands this inevitability. Silly, misguided jealousy should be nipped in the bud as quickly and clearly as possible.

Sissies in service are always quartered in some sort of suitable "Maid's Room." This is generally a small bedroom with inexpensive, effeminate furnishings, often located just down the hall from the Master Bedroom. Ideally, the Maid's Room will have it's own small, adjoining bath. To save space, a little single bed is all that is required in the Maid's Room. This not only is practical, but also serves a subtle psychological function as well. The use of the single bed makes it clear that sissies always sleep alone, and simply have no need for a double bed. (Ed. Note: For more about the specific layout of a proper Maid's Room for the sissy servant, see SMQ, issue Number One.)

Once a woman's boyfriend becomes a frequent overnight guest, a sissy servant must learn to be discreet. The sissy must learn to always knock on any closed doors before entering, because it is entirely possible his mistress and her boyfriend will be making love or be engaged in other intimate activities.

Duties

A sissy's duties will not change appreciably when a woman's lover moves in with her on a more or less regular basis. There will be a few added responsibilities, but nothing that a full-time sissy servant shouldn't be able to handle.

Boyfriends, as most women unfortunately know, almost always come with piles of dirty laundry as "standard equipment." Of course, it will be your sissy's responsibility to do your boyfriend's laundry, in addition to your own. Also, he will likely have to spend a few extra hours every week at the ironing board, pressing your lover's shirts and other clothing.

Remember that your bathrooms might require additional attention when your man is staying over frequently, or is living with you. Another resident simply means the facilities are used more often, and the presence of a male in the house (obviously) changes how the facilities are used. Men can, unfortunately, "miss", an occurrence that is infrequent with females (or sissies) since we sit when we go. For this reason, your sissy servant should check the Master Bath frequently, especially after the new "Mr." of the house uses it.

Some women have their sissy servants spend one day per week at their boyfriend's place doing his housework for him.

. . . you can spend some quiet time at home with your lover without the annoyance of having "the help" always underfoot.

This is a good arrangement for several reasons, not the least of which is to get little "Sissy-Pants" out of your home for a bit. This way, you can spend some quiet time at home with your lover without the annoyance of having "the help" always under foot.

Also, this arrangement obviously results in a much cleaner and better organized home for your boyfriend -- an advantage that you will certainly appreciate on those nights you will be spending at his place.

. . . these very same duties are perfectly appropriate and fitting for a sissy to do.

In addition to these practical benefits, having your sissy do your boyfriend's housework offers some subtle psychological benefits as well. First, a woman doesn't really like to think of her "macho" lover having to do housework. After all, attending to household chores is not exactly the epitome of masculinity. But of course these very same duties are perfectly appropriate and fitting for a sissy to do. Most women (and especially those with sissy maids) firmly believe it is only right that sissies be tied into frilly aprons doing domestic chores. We all know now that is it simply what the meek little dears are best at!

Dressing

While sissies working for young women are always uniformed in an appropriately effeminate fashion, this tradition becomes even more important when a woman's lover is in the picture. A sissy's obviously effeminate and "sissified" uniforming reinforces his natural asexuality. Tight gaffing, girlish panties and briefs, unconstructed little tops, and frilly aprons all tend to make any "threat" a sissy may pose to a man's dominance in the household immediately look rather silly.

A sissy's obviously effeminate and "sissified" uniforming reinforces his natural asexuality.

It is also prudent if a woman makes it clear that her sissy's "sex life" is entirely restricted to solitary activities. An open, yet discreet, discussion with your boyfriend about this fact is suggested. Perhaps a passing mention of the special rubber sheets used in the Maid's Room might open this discussion, since the purpose for such impervious bedlinens is easily guessed.

Psychological Concerns

Sissies can get jealous, just like any other person. While their jealousy may seem silly and unfounded, it is there nonetheless.

Sissy maids feel particularly close with their employers for several reasons. First, sissy males do not usually have a plethora of friends and close relatives. Second, the type of young woman who most often employs a sissy maid is likely the only woman who has shown any interest at all in the sissy for some time. And often his employer is also a sissy's most constant and closest friend.

When you bring a male lover into this scenario, jealous sparks are bound to fly. But these sparks needn't turn into a blaze of hurt feelings if you handle this transition properly. First, remember that since your maid is a sissy, his hurt feelings and jealousy are of a less volatile and strong nature than another male's would be. The sissy is mostly jealous of the time and attention you are paying your new boyfriend, not the physical relationship the two of you will enjoy.

Yes, there will be a little inevitable "pouting" at first. This pouting stage will actually begin even as you date your new boyfriend and begin to go out many evenings.

(A second stage will occur when you begin to openly sleep with your boyfriend.)

Many sissy maids will say they have to "talk to you" during this "first" stage of pouting. They'll stridently say that the housework needs discussing -- or there are some laundry problems they need to tell you about. Actually, the sissy maid is just trying to get your attention, and distract you from your new (male) interest.

You should reserve a few minutes in the morning or some other neutral time to "talk about the housework" or whatever else your servant says needs discussing. But do not let him "hijack" your attentions right before you go out on a date. If your sissy attempts to do this, (and he will, believe me!) be firm and tell him you will speak with him tomorrow about whatever is bothering him. Make it clear that right now you are getting ready to go out with your boyfriend, and that your date is simply more important at the moment than any housework or laundry concern, (short of anything that might cause an explosion or something!)

Take it a little slow at first. Try (depending upon the circumstance) to date for two months or so before staying over at your boyfriend's the first time. Of course, you can be having sex with your new lover once you get to know him and feel romantic towards him. But just put off the first "overnight stay" for awhile. This will serve to let your sissy maid get used to the idea of you having a steady boyfriend.

It is a good idea (contrary to some reports) to talk about your boyfriend with your maid. Do it casually, and drop your new love's name in conversations frequently. But don't try to "build him up" too much in front of your sissy. This is simply to reinforce your sissy's acceptance that you have someone else in your life.

And also take this opportunity to praise your sissy on his housework and laundry and so forth. This helps your sissy adjust, and also tends to make it clear that you have a sissy in your life for certain reasons (housework, laundry, serving) and a man in your life for others, (love and companionship.) Make it clear that your new man will not replace your sissy maid, since your boyfriend will not be cooking or cleaning or doing laundry. Making little comments like "men certainly don't know anything about laundry" (or fashion, or cooking, or cleaning) in subtle reference to your boyfriend will help. This makes it clear that there are, indeed, some areas where your sissy is more skilled and "knowledgeable" than your new man is. (The fact that all these areas are related to the effeminate interests of

Make sure your sissy maid knows that his contribution to the household is important.

a sissy domestic will hopefully get lost in the shuffle of emotions.)

Make sure your sissy maid knows that his contribution to the household is important. (And it is -- how many of us with sissy maids want to go back to doing our own domestic chores!)

For some of your dates near the time you plan to sleep overnight with your lover, have your sissy maid help you dress. And make sure the sissy realizes that your boyfriend will be seeing (and feeling) your lingerie. As your sissy helps you with your bra, you can comment, "Steve will certainly like these panties, don't you think -- they're so tiny and silky!"

Many sissy maids will blush or stammer something out. It doesn't matter, however. The point is to make sure your sissy maid knows that there is something physical going on between you and your boyfriend. Some sissy maids pretend for the longest time that their employer has a male "friend", framing the relationship in the most platonic of terms.

You need not announce when you are going to stay over at your boyfriend's the first time. In fact, it's better if you don't. Tell your maid you'll be out "quite late", and leave it at that. This way the sissy will fall asleep thinking you are going to come in at two or three or whenever. The next morning, when he knocks and eventually discovers your bed untouched, it will be over with.

When you do arrive home the next day, your sissy maid will likely say he was "worried sick" and "didn't know where you were." Actually, he knows exactly where you were, of course, and what you were doing!

Be very casual and tell your servant you "stayed over with Steve." And make it clear that you'll be staying over at his place now and then from now on.

Yes, your sissy will probably pout a little, and act "hurt." But he'll get over it. And it is best to just ignore a few pitiful sighs and reddened eyes. If it lasts more than a couple of days, you may have to talk with your servant and tell him firmly and without any hesitation to "snap out of it -- and put your mind back on your housework!"

About a week or so before you are going to have your new lover stay over at your place for the first time, let your sissy know of your plans. You can announce that "Steve is coming to dinner next Friday" and begin to discuss the menu. After you get to dessert, just say something like, "and we'll want something nice for breakfast, too." No reason to stress this little sentence -- your sissy has been listening like a hawk, and will pick up on the significance of "breakfast."

. . . and will pick up on the significance of "breakfast."

This is a tricky time, and a few sissy maids with misplaced feelings have even been known to quit! But this is actually rather rare, so don't worry about it. Your sissy maid will likely have a tougher week leading up to "the big event" than he will have accepting it at the end. After all, once your boyfriend is there the sissy has to think about all his duties and what your new boyfriend thinks of him.

One word of caution. At this first dinner with your boyfriend make sure your interaction with your sissy maid is of the most formal and "cool" sort. It should be made very clear to everyone present (including you) that you are the boss and he is the servant!

When bedtime comes, don't make a big deal out of it. Simply retire to the Master Bedroom with your boyfriend and say "goodnight" to your maid, closing the door behind you. While it is fine to have your servant turn down the bed and perhaps lay out a nightie for you (if he generally performs this service) don't have him serve wine or be put in a situation where he actually is presented with the sight of you in bed with your boyfriend.

You should also let your maid know in advance about what time you and your new lover might want breakfast. But tell your maid that you will inform him when you are up and about. "No knocking or noise!" should be your maid's policy for weekend mornings when your lover is sleeping with you.

"No knocking or noise!" should be your maid's policy for weekend mornings when your lover is sleeping with you!

Your maid may not sleep well during your lover's first night over. This is especially true if the Maid's Room is close enough to the Master Bedroom where the sissy might hear (or think he hears!) your boyfriend making love to you. This is something most sissy maids also get used to, however. Though some are known to wear earplugs or play a little tape recorder to "drown out" any passionate sounds coming from their mistress' bed!

As for your boyfriend's reaction to you sissy maid, that is usually not much of a concern. Most men, if they are secure at all, have no trouble with a sissy servant being around. In fact, many men rather like the fact that their girlfriend doesn't have to bother with housework or other domestic things. After all, having a maid leaves a girl with more energy to devote to her lover!

. . . many men rather like the fact that their girlfriend doesn't have to bother with housework

Conclusion

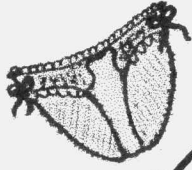

This article began with the statement that boyfriends and sissy maids are a "mix made in heaven." And this "heavenly" mix is possible if you are careful and thoughtful.

A maid to do all your housework and laundry, (and often your boyfriend's, too!) and a nice, strong male lover to satisfy you in bed at night. What could be better?

Certainly, a little "training" of your maid's feelings is required. But it not only can be done -- it has been done by many young women with sissy maids. These lucky women have two "males" in their home lives, though the two males couldn't be more different, of course.

Imagine that first late, sunny weekend morning when your sissy maid serves you and your lover a gourmet breakfast in bed. In one of his cutest uniforms, he'll dutifully bend and place you and your lover's bed trays over your laps. Then he'll straighten up and drop into a nice, respectful curtsy, saying, "Goodmorning, Miss. Good morning, Sir. I trust you both had a pleasant time in bed last night. If there's anything I can do for either of you, please let me know. If it's O.K., I'll be in the laundry room pressing Mr. Steve's shirts. Just ring when you wish your bed trays to be taken away."

Yes, that girls, is truly the good life! ♦

A Sissy's World

By Sissy Jennie

Editor's Note: With this issue, SMQ is beginning a new column. Written by a sissy who works full-time as a live-in maid, "A Sissy's World" will explore the daily life, aspirations, and personal feelings of a "typical" sissy in domestic service. We hope you enjoy this new column.

My name is Jennie, and I am a sissy. While not perhaps the ideal life, am honored to be able to live with and work for my mistress. I am also grateful she has allowed me to take time from my busy domestic schedule to contribute to my new favorite magazine, Sissy Maid Quarterly! I only hope my contributions to SMQ might assist other sissy domestics adjust to their unique lifestyle. And I hope this column also encourages enlightened young women to consider employing sissy males in the profession which best suits us: that of household servant and maid.

To help introduce myself and give SMQ readers a "snapshot" of my lifestyle, I will describe in this first column my present living and working arrangements. Hopefully this will serve as a sort of introduction to "A Sissy's World", and will also help you get to know me a little.

While my mistress' home is fairly large and quite luxurious, I live in a small "maid's room" simply furnished with a little single canopy bed, a small desk, dressing table, and bureau. The color and decor of my room are both quite distinctly feminine, even to the point of being prissy and girlish. The wallpaper is pink and decorated with a fancy floral pattern. The plush carpet and glossy trim are a soft ivory. My bedspread is quilted pink satin and is embellished with eyelet lace at the edges. And under the bedspread are stretched the pink rubber sheets that I, like many sissy maids, must sleep on every night.

The drawers of my bureau are filled nearly to overflowing with panties and bras and waist cinchers and pantyhose and other effeminate lingerie. My walk-in closet is filled with blouses and skirts and dresses -- all in the appropriate styles and colors for a sissy in full-time domestic service. On my closet floor sit many pairs of patent and leather pumps, with heels from 3" to a full 6" high.

The only items of clothing I own which could in any way be considered "boyish" are a number of "menswear" blouses, women's slacks, and flat-soled shoes. These items are worn whenever I must go out to run some of the many, many errands my mistress assigns to me.

As I write this at my desk, I can hear the voices of my mistress and her boyfriend

. . . I can hear the voices of my mistress and her boyfriend drift through the house. . .

(and lover) drift through the house. Their evening was a pleasant one, in part due to my own work and efforts. I spent hours carefully preparing their gourmet dinner, and served it to them in the dining room. After they dined, I dutifully cleared the table and attended to the dishes while they relaxed.

Sissy Jennie, in his silky black afternoon uniform and white nylon "waitress"-style apron. This is an outfit he frequently wears while serving his former "wife", (or while doing the housework.) Like any sissy maid, he must now accept a lifestyle where there is a lot more work than play. SMQ is very fortunate, however, to have him as a columnist. His insight into the daily life of the sissy male domestic will be valuable to others new to this growing lifestyle.

Also, the elegant black dress and pearls I helped my mistress into before dinner have seemed to meet with the distinct approval of the new "man of the house", her boyfriend. Soon, they'll retire to the Master Bedroom and likely make love before blissfully falling asleep in each other's arms.

Since tomorrow is Saturday, I will be summoned to their room around mid-morning to straighten up. And, like most weekend mornings, they will probably take their breakfast in bed. After breakfast, while they shower together, I will take their bed trays to the kitchen and wash the dishes.

Unlike many sissies who did not always know their employer before she hired them, mine is an unusual case. You see, I am actually my mistress' husband, at least in name. I am no longer actually recognized as her husband, of course, and I no longer am even supposed to refer to her as my "wife."

Since I am now really just her sissy servant, our relationship is that of mistress and maid. Any "husbandly" duties I may have feebly (and mostly unsuccessfully) attempted to fulfill during our first months of marriage are now entirely fulfilled by much more masculine suitors, such as my former wife's new boyfriend.

The fact that my former wife now openly dates, flirts with, and goes to bed with men right in front of me is still a source of considerable personal embarrassment and jealousy. But I fully realize I am a sissy, and (unfortunately) simply not suited to the duties required of a vital young woman's bedmate. I do find some tiny bit of pride, however, in the fact that I can make her bed perfectly!

As I sit here in my small room, I am wearing a slim, above-the-knee black skirt and a matching black top with white ruffled collar and cuffs. Though my apron is now laying on my bed, my outfit is still recognizable as that of a maid. Beneath my skirt lies a very lovely garter belt, it's taut straps gently sliding against my soft, hairless thighs as they tug at the tops of my sheer black hose. My delicate bikini panties, trimmed with touches of lace at the waistband and legs, are certainly the exact opposite of "masculine" underwear. But, like most sissies, I enjoy the feeling of silky panties on my bottom. Underneath my cute little panties I wear a firm and very tight gaff, which I now wear nearly 24 hours a day, seven days a week.

. . . like most sissies, I enjoy the feeling of silky panties on my bottom. . .

I should report that I once considered myself a male. For the first 25 years of my life I vainly attempted to live the life of a man, both socially and professionally. My name was Peter before my mistress thought it more appropriate to refer to me "Jennie", the name I now answer to.

While a sissy does not spring from the womb fully formed, the seeds of a sissy's true nature are, I believe, inborn. But I have found it takes time and self-awareness for a sissy like me to discover and accept his sissy nature.

I suspect women (and indeed, even girls from my school days) were often aware of my effeminate nature. They undoubtedly perceived my lack of normal male aggressiveness, and my uncertainty and passivity in social and sexual interactions. While I had many girls as "friends" during my younger years, I was never able to convert them to "dates" as high school came and went.

The same girls I talked with, studied with, and even "hung around" with always seemed to find some other, more masculine boys to take them to the movies, or to the Prom. In fact, while I spent many hours helping two girls shop for their Prom dresses, neither of them were interested in me as their date. Like many other pitiful sissies, I spent both my Junior and Senior Prom nights at home, alone.

In junior college my "luck with the ladies" unfortunately remained the same. Again I had many girl "friends", but very few dates. It was during this period of my life that my subservient nature (and usefulness) apparently became obvious to the girls I knew. More than once I was "asked" to help a girl with her homework, write a theme paper, or even clean up her dorm room while she prepared herself for a night out with her boyfriend. One girl in particular pretty much treated me as her servant on a regular basis. I often cleaned her room, did her homework, and even trotted down to the laundry room with her clothes. And these somewhat domestic tasks were often done while she was out on dates with her boyfriend! Why I put up with this treatment, I do not know. But I must admit that I did.

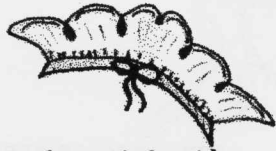

After school, at my first job, I met an enlightened professional woman several years my senior who took an interest in me. We dated, which made me quite happy at first. But it did not take long for me to realize I was totally incapable of meeting her sexual needs.

For some reason, she decided to marry me, and she became my wife. But she made it clear from the beginning that ours was not to be a "conventional" marriage in any regard.

During the first year and a half of my marriage, I was "sort of" my wife's husband. I must say that I was quite "henpecked", and it became obvious after only six months that my wife was gaining sexual satisfaction outside of our relationship. She would frequently stay out until very late at night, and would occasionally even stay out all night.

Meanwhile, I became more and more wrapped up in my own narcissistic pleasures. I experimented with wearing women's underthings, and immediately found them to be comfortable and also comforting. In addition to these personal feelings, I was also beginning to act more and more "domestic" at home. While I had always done more than my share of the housework, laundry, and cooking, my wife soon made it clear that these mundane and menial tasks were to become my responsibility alone. She would no longer perform any of these duties, leaving them all to her "new maid."

At this same time she suggested I move out of her bedroom and begin sleeping alone in the small guest room down the hall. She explained this by saying it was "living a lie" to have me share her bed, since I was apparently incapable of sharing meaningful physical relations with her. This was both a sad and embarrassing move for me to make, but I guess I had seen it coming.

In rather short order my new little room was decorated as it is now, and was even officially labeled the "Maid's Room" with the addition of a small sign on the door. Aprons and other maid's apparel started showing up in my room, with notes suggesting I wear them "the next time you do

My sheets were replaced with rubber ones about this time. . .

the dishes." My sheets were replaced with rubber ones about this time -- my mistress explained that these unusual bedlinens would be more "practical for a sissy like you."

It was still a shock, for some reason, when I heard a man come in with my wife late one night. I had already gone to bed, but was not totally asleep. I heard my wife "sshhhhhh" the man, but she was giggling and in good spirits as well. Since my room is so close to the Master Bedroom I had to suffer the indignity of hearing the man passionately make love to my wife while I laid alone in my small sissy's bed.

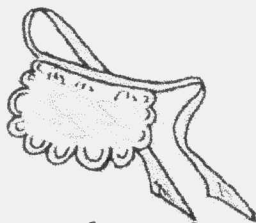

The man was gone the next morning, but my wife carried a satisfied smile on her face all day. She relaxed and read while I did the housework and (of course) changed the sheets on the King-sized bed where she had so recently had relations with her new lover.

From this time on I have basically been my former wife's "sissy maid." My body has grown softer and more effeminate. All of my bodyhair is now kept shaved smoothly off, including the patch around my pubic region. This shaved appearance provides me with a distinctly unmanly, juvenile appearance which only helps support my obvious lack of sexual desirability to women.

I was quickly compelled to adopt a much more feminine style of dress, including wearing a maid's dress on occasion. This new style of dress, combined with my increasingly effeminate mannerisms and speech, helped clearly display my sissyish nature to anyone I met, including my "wife's" girlfriends.

I have learned a great deal about myself and my relationship to women in the three years since I've been "married." By virtue of my very nature I tend to accept that I am not quite my wife's (or any non-sissy's) "equal." I also now fully realize that women simply do not find me to be an object of sexual interest. My sexual needs are not an area of concern to women, who view any "sexuality" I might exhibit as "cute" and as little more than a joke. Male but not a man, very effeminate but not female, I am perceived with absolute sexual indifference, even by the young woman I know best, and presently serve. I am instead valued mostly in terms of how my hard work can and does make her life more luxurious and leisurely.

In a sense I have been completely "sissified." But in another sense I really know that I was always a sissy, down deep. In either case, I have begun working at becoming the best sissy I can be. I exercise daily, always mindful of specific physical goals -- the whittling of my waist, the shaping of my legs, and the maintenance of a smallish and quite weak upper body. My effeminate attire has become entirely comfortable to me, and I suspect I would feel out of sorts if I ever donned more "boyish" attire again.

My effeminate attire has become entirely comfortable to me. . .

My image of myself has become one of a mild, weak, and rather passive person. My wife's income supports me totally, and my small salary (more like an "allowance") is the only cash reward for many, many hours of tedious and boring housework. I am entirely dependant upon her financially and socially, which causes me to pay great attention to her desires and obey her as best I can.

I have become increasingly estranged from what could be termed adult male sexual behavior and social recognition. Due partially to the total lack of even the possibility of a partner, my sexuality has turned increasingly inward. Any pleasure I gain is of a quite juvenile and solitary sort.

. . . young women naturally desire and deserve the companionship of a strong, masculine and independant male.

I do understand, however, that young women naturally desire and deserve the companionship of a strong, masculine, and independent male. A weak and rather dependant sissy like myself, who is entirely incapable of meeting a woman's physical and emotional needs need not apply! Unable to compete successfully with men or women in modern society, my goals no longer extend much further than those of a skilled and obedient housemaid.

I endure a life of apparent contradiction in which pride arises from a dignified acceptance of what others would view as shame. Incapable of succeeding as a man, or even as a competent, independent adult, my life is now devoted to the task of becoming an outstanding and obedient sissy.

I have also come to understand that the expression "sissy" is much more than just a term to describe one's sexual inadequacies and nature. It is also a term that describes what can only be viewed as a somewhat subordinate "third gender." As the existence of this magazine plainly shows, this "third gender" has a new and useful place in modern life. It is perhaps the "destiny" of many sissy males to become what they are best suited to: a busy woman's servant and maid.

Now that I know myself much better,

As the existence of this magazine plainly shows, this "third gender" has a new and useful place in modern life.

and understand my true "place" in the social scheme, I am happier than I was as a confused and inadequate "man." Yet, I realize the acceptance of my sissiness demands numerous serious sacrifices: to never be seen by a woman as an equal partner; to only achieve sexual pleasure in a juvenile and solitary manner, in the privacy (and loneliness) of my little rubber-sheeted single bed; and to be viewed by both women and men as someone whose place in life is as a servant: -- fit mostly to keep their house, do their laundry, wash their dishes, and pick up after them.

I am now totally free of the social, professional, and sexual expectations I was so now a gentle, soft, and scented one in which my duties are perfectly and strictly defined. And I am proud of my growing abilities as cook, seamstress, housekeeper, and personal maid-servant. The approval of my mistress means much to me now, and I bask in any small compliment or favor she bestows upon me.

Fortunately for us all, Sissy Maid Quarterly now covers "our world" -- the world of sissy domestic servants. While we are still "put down" as a group, we at least now have our own magazine -- and that is a start.

Although this first column has been quite long, and a little "heavy", I felt I had to get these feelings off my chest. In future editions of "A Sissy's World" I hope to cover more immediate (and perhaps more light-

I only hope my experiences will be informative and instructive to many SMQ readers. And I hope this column can assist sissy males in fulfilling what is, after all, our true and simple destiny -- being a sissy.

I also hope this column will be read by young women too, so they may better understand the pains and pleasures of those members of the "third gender" who toil so long and hard as their servants!

So, until next time, fellow sissies. . .

Elegance is making a very welcome comeback, both in women's fashion and in sissy clothing. Sissy maids never look better than when they're uniformed in the traditional, classic black dress with white collar and cuffs (and apron) of their trade.

Here's a "preview" of the one of the best designs of the up-coming fall season. A scoop-neck, cap-sleeve dress is paired here with a unique white silk apron. The apron's shoulder straps actually become the white "collar" of the dress, and exactly echo the width and style of the white cuffs on the sleeves.

Undersized maid's cap adds a "dressy" touch without overpowering the rest of the uniform's design.

Large, rounded white plastic earrings and wrist cuffs provid almost "architectural" structure to the whole.

American Gothic, with a broom instead of a pitchfork! This breezy sissy maid's dress, in light sky blue, is just the thing for summer afternoon serving and light housework. Puffed sleeves, "sailorboy" collar, and swingy skirt are style details that add femininity to work-a-day fashion.

Well, off to sweep the kitchen floor, and the patio too. A busy little maid's work is never done, it seems!

Fashion Notes: Sky-blue poly/cotton summer maid's dress, designed by Debra Rose for "A Sissy's Work." Nylon knit apron also from "A Sissy's Work." Single-layer nylon chiffon petticoat, with lacy hem, from "Underthings, Inc." Blue satin hair ribbon from The Fabric Factory.

It's bed-i-bye time for a sleepy sissy, tired from a full day of housework and errand-running. But fashion never sleeps, as this sissy maid's oh-so-cute little nightie attests!

Many sissies, (and especially those as completely effeminate as our girlish model here) love wearing sheer, lacy, prissy little pink confections to bed. It is one of a hard-working sissy maid's few pleasures in life.

Nighties this short require pretty matching panties, since they boldly show. Lace-ruffled party here has a girlish cut that shows more than a little of this sissy's bottom.

And we bet this little sissy is not only wearing lace-ruffled pink panties, he's probably dreaming of them as well!

Fashion Notes: Short pink nylon chiffon "baby-doll" nightie, with matching pink chiffon lace-ruffled high-cut, high-waisted panty, from Pantywaist Nightwear. Soft woolen pink sleep anklets from "Sissy Sox."

(And under his prissy nightie panties, this sissy wears a flesh-toned latex night gaff from Fashion Fantasy.)

Glossy pink rubber bed sheets, and pillow case, from "RubberTex."

Maid's day off! Yes, even sissy maids get a day off now and then. What to wear? Well, how about this hot little outfit for summer!

Who wears short-shorts? Sissies do, of course. And there are no short-shorts tighter, briefer, or sleeker than the bright, neon yellow ones shown here. Snug back zipper sets the style, and makes dressing easy. And red plastic button at the rear of the waistband keeps everything secure.

T-shirts are great for summer too. And here's one that clings to the body, with tiny cuffed sleeves and a rolled neck, (and it's back zippered, of course!)

This sissy doesn't seem to care who sees him out and about. He just wants that big ice cream cone he's waiting for, so he can cool off! (NOTE: You better watch your dresser drawers closely, sissies. This stuff's so cute, your mistress may try to borrow it from you for her days off!)

(Lycra short-shorts like these require perfect grooming. A bikini wax is the solution most sissy maids are opting for.

And you'll need a small, very tight gaff, too. Worn here, the new "Barely There" super-tight, latex gaff from Pantywaist BASICS. It comes in six sizes, and in seven skin tones, for a near-perfect match. Because pantylines are such a problem with short-shorts like these, most sissies just wear them over their gaffs.)

Right: Black taffeta dresses, with petticoats underneath, are a mainstay for cocktail party service. This one, for summer or early fall, has a halter neck and key-hole back. With a tightly-cinched waist and high-heels, it's a fashion no-brainer -- of course it will look great!

We Test Rubber Sheets

Most employers now simply insist on rubber sheets for the Maid's Room bed, since they are so much more practical for sissies than standard cotton bedlinens. Rubber sheets save greatly on laundry, and are more hygienic, too. But which ones are best? In this special edition of our regular department, "The MAID'S ROOM", we test the three major brands to find out.

Rubber sheets are now almost universally used on sissy maid's beds. The advantages of using rubber bedlinens in the Maid's Room far outweigh any disadvantages, so most employers now simply insist upon them. But very little testing has ever been done to determine which brands and styles are best. The Sissy Maid Quarterly testing board, composed in part from volunteer sissy maids and their employers, was recently organized to test products, garments, cleaning products, and appliances that are of particular use to maids in general, and sissy maids in particular. And their very first official assignment was to assist our professional staff in evaluating rubber bedlinens.

Three primary categories were initially selected as being essential to a good, serviceable rubber sheet -- stain resistance, gloss and color retention, and how "sticky" they might feel in humid conditions. To these three initial categories, however, we had to add a fourth -- resistance to static charge.

We only discovered the importance of this fourth category when we were informed that some of our sissy test subject's bottoms were getting "zapped" with static charges whenever they rolled over at night! This problem in no way posed any danger or real discomfort to the sissies, but it was mildly annoying. While it was determined that the static charges only built up in particularly dry conditions, we decided to include this category in our overall tests.

The primary reason rubber sheets are so practical when used on sissy maid's beds is because of sissy males' well-known propensity for "playing with themselves" at night. Unfortunately, this rather juvenile little weakness is no less popular with sissies in domestic service than it is for sissies elsewhere.

The little messes this childish activity result in invariably leave cotton bedlinens horribly spotted and stained. The simple solution, of course, is the use of rubber sheets, which are impervious to a sissy's frequent little nighttime emissions.

Young women with sissy maids know that no matter how sweet and obedient their little servants are during the day, they will frequently fall into temptation at night, and be "naughty." But this nighttime naughtiness is actually understandable, and should be forgiven; as long as it doesn't get out of hand. (No pun intended!)

But this nighttime naughtiness is actually understandable, and should be forgiven.

Remember that sissy males simply have no outlet for their pent-up physical feelings other than their own hand. After all, it's certainly not like sissies are "ladies' men"! We know that women just aren't interested in sissies in a romantic sense. And generally, the only reason most of us are interested in sissies at all is because of their close association with domestic service, and relieving us of household chores. (Though many of us do become friendly with our little maids after a time.)

Because of the sissy male's lack of any sexual partners, you might say that rubber sheets are sort of a sissy's "best friend." For that reason, and for practical considerations as well, it is important that only good-quality, completely impervious rubber sheets be chosen for the Maid's Room.

The Test

The three leading brands of rubber sheets were tested -- J.K Perfect Personal Products' "RubberTex" sheets; Bed-I-Bye's "Security" sheets and A Sissy's Work's new "Sleeping Single" sheets and matching pillow cases. While there are a few other rubber sheets on the market, these three brands represent well over 85% of the market for sissy maid usage.

All of the sheets were purchased anonymously at standard retailers. We purchased

All of the sheets were purchased anonymously at standard retailers. . .

11 sets of each brand: one set to be used as a "control", and the remaining ten sets to be sent out to our ten selected "testers." While offered in other colors, we only chose sets in either pastel pink or in white. These colors, (especially the pink, of course) are so often selected by employers over any others that it made the most sense to test these two tones.

Each of our volunteer "testers" was sent three sets of sheets - one set of each of the three brands. The two color selections were randomly distributed. We had to check to make sure our testers slept on single beds, since rubber sheets are only available in single sizes, of course. Fortunately, only one maid's employer informed us that her servant slept in a double bed. The other employers we contacted all informed us that their sissy maids slept in single beds, and indeed acted as if the question itself was a little silly!

Along with the sheets, (which our volunteers got to keep after the testing period as a reward for their record-keeping) was sent a full set of instructions, and an extensive form to fill out for each set of sheets. Each set was to be used for a full 7-day week. And every morning notes were to be taken, marking the sheet's performance in several categories. Comfort, ease of cleaning, color and gloss retention, static charge build-up, how well they stayed on the bed, and "overall impression" were the major attributes our testers had to judge.

Our testers were instructed to try to use the sheets in as "normal" a fashion as possible. We wanted them to feel comfortable and as "at home" with each test set as possible.

The test took nearly five weeks to complete, since we had to allow for shipping the sheets out and for the tester's responses to come back to us.

The maids' employers assisted in the testing by marking down their own "overall impression" of each set of sheets. But other than this general comment all of our field-test information came to us directly from the sissies themselves. After all, it is they who must sleep, night after night, in rubber-sheeted beds. (Employers, of course, prefer Pratesi linens, or silk or satin sheets.)

After all, it is they who must sleep, night after night, in rubber-sheeted beds. . .

In addition to the field testing, we performed a few small "control" tests ourselves in the SMQ testing laboratory. Each test set was cleaned using various detergents to see how well they would hold up. And wear-resistance was determined with an abrasion test.

The Results

The test results were gathered from our field "staff" and combined with the findings we compiled in our own laboratory. While informative, some of the sissies' comments were humorous to read, primarily because of all the vague euphemisms and stammerings that surrounded any discussion of their masturbatory activities. Of course sissies' reluctance to talk more freely about these activities is ironic, since it is so well known by nearly everyone that they play with themselves!

In the first important category, stain resistance, all the sheets scored well. This is not surprising since rubber sheets are specifically used on sissies' beds for this very reason. We found in our own laboratory testing that it is difficult to permanently stain a rubber sheet.

We found in our laboratory testing that it is difficult to permanently stain a rubber sheet. . .

But in a closely related attribute, color fastness, there were some differences. The "RubberTex" sheets scored well, but the "Security" and "Sleeping Single" sheets exhibited some minor color spotting. Most of our sissy test staff indicated that these spots were lighter in color than the original tint of the sheets. Fortunately, these spots also disappeared when the sheets were thoroughly cleaned, dried, and buffed with a towel.

As far as ease of cleaning, this is another attribute at which all rubber sheets generally excel. However, our sissy test staff was almost universal in its praise of the "Security" brand sheets in this regard.

Because of the Security's shiny, glossy finish, the sissies noted that a quick swipe with a damp sponge and a quick buffing with a towel and the Security sheets were as clean as a whistle. The other two brands scored about equally in this regard, with the "Sleeping Single" sheets perhaps the most difficult (but still easy) to clean.

. . . a quick swipe with a damp sponge and a quick buffing with a towel and the Security sheets were as clean as a whistle.

All the sissies testing the sheets were unanimous in their praise of the "Sleeping Single" sheets in regard to their almost total lack of stickiness. Rubber sheets, due to the fact they are not only impervious to staining, but also to air, often allow moisture to build up where skin touches them, causing a "sticky" feeling. But A Sissy's Work's "Sleeping Single" sheets have apparently gone a long way towards solving this little problem.

The Sleeping Single sheets are relatively new, and were developed especially for sissies working as live-in domestics. While not as glossy as the other sheets we tested, Sleeping Single sheets have a special textured finish that somehow lets air circulate across their surface. This circulation, as slight as it is, apparently almost eliminates stickiness.

Many of our test staff reported that the Sleeping Single sheets were very flexible and had an almost silky feel to them that was pleasant. "Almost more comfortable to sleep in than regular sheets!" one sissy exclaimed.

. . . were by far the most likely to "zap" some poor sissy's bottom in the middle of the night!

The final test category, static build-up, offered rather clear results. The RubberTex sheets were by far the most likely to "zap" some poor sissy's bottom in the middle of the night. The Security and Sleeping Single sheets also were guilty of a few stray "zaps" of static electricity, but only under the very driest of conditions. So the RubberTex sheets lost points in this regard.

Conclusion

All three of these leading brands proved to be more than serviceable for use in the Maid's Room. Any of these sheet sets will eliminate the problems of spotting and staining for which they are specifically designed. But the "Sleeping Single" sheets from A Sissy's Work seem to be the sissies' favorite. The reason is simply that they are more comfortable to sleep in. The fact that Sleeping Single sheets also come with a matching pillow case is also a plus. While staining pillow cases is not very likely, it has happened. And, with the Sleeping Single sheet and pillow case set, an employer would simply not have to worry about such things.

Of course, "Sleeping Single" was not a name that most sissies immediately liked, even though it is entirely descriptive of how they live in the Maid's Room. There was more than one comment, at the end of a list of praises of the sheet's performance, that stated, "But I'd like for them to be called something else!" Names aside, however, the "Sleeping Single" sheets from A Sissy's Work, are a very good choice for little single Maid's Room beds.

"Sleeping Single" sheets, from A Sissy's Work, are a very good choice for little single Maid's Room beds.

Remember that it is simply true that "sissies will be sissies". So, to protect against the inevitable, SMQ firmly recommends that rubber sheets always be used on sissy maid's beds.

While sometimes difficult to get used to, most sissies soon resign themselves to the fact that rubber bedlinens will be a regular part of their lives as domestic servants. And besides, pink rubber sheets are sort of cute on sissies' little beds! Somehow rubber sheets just seem to suit sissies, almost regardless of the obvious practical benefits they offer in the Maid's Room.

And good luck with selecting your sissy maid's next set of rubber sheets. We hope this "special edition" of "The MAID'S ROOM" has helped! ♦ the Employer's Side...

From time to time, SMQ interviews employers to get their side of the story. This issue we travel to Texas to interview a young woman who says she "couldn't imagine" living without her little sissy "helper."

Miss Cynthia Rogerson lives outside Dallas, and is one of those beautiful Texas women who have made this Texas city as fashionable as any city on either coast. While she has a busy and high-powered career as a lawyer specializing in corporate concerns in the oil business, she also can "shop till she drops" and "lunch with the girls" with the best of the socialites and debutantes.

Like more and more young professional women, Miss Cynthia has discovered a secret -- the secret that sissy males are as good as or better at performing domestic chores as female servants are. And they are a whole lot less expensive to employ on a full-time, live-in basis than a female maid, too!

Our interviewer spoke with Cynthia at her average-sized but quite luxurious home outside Dallas. Miss Rogerson is so attractive she is almost stunning. Not many corporate lawyers look like she does. But from all reports she knows her way around big-time corporate law as well as she does through the pages of VOGUE, or the couture section of Nieman-Marcus.

Unfortunately, Bobbi, her maid, was off the day we scheduled the interview. But since most of our questions were for Cynthia, we plunged ahead anyway.

SMQ: "Have you seen our new magazine?"

MISS C: "Yes. Bobbi showed it to me a few months ago. I thought it was cute. And he loves it, of course!"

SMQ: "We're trying to publish something that is useful for both sissies in domestic service and employers like yourself. Of course, young women and sissies have quite different interests, so it's not always easy."

MISS C: "I read some of the articles in the magazine, and they were interesting. But I have so few problems with Bobbi that I'm not sure I really need all that much advice."

SMQ: "How long has Bobbi worked for you -- and where did you find him?"

MISS C: "Bobbi has been living in with me for about a year and a half, I guess. And he worked part time on a sort of "trial basis" for about four months before that.

I didn't really find him, exactly. He had been a maid before, actually. And when I advertised for help, he applied."

SMQ: "Did you think it was strange that a sissy applied for a job as a domestic?"

MISS C: "Well, I'd heard of "sissy maids" before. But I guess I still thought it was a little odd. We just have such ingrained notions that domestic servants and maids should be women, for some reason. But I think that is changing. Sissies are perfectly suited to domestic work, as you know.

Of course, most people still think big business attorneys are men, and I'm certainly not a man! So Bobbi and I are both breaking some gender barriers, I guess."

SMQ: "No, you're certainly not a man, Cynthia. In fact, you could almost be an actress, you're so pretty!"

MISS C: "Well. . . . thanks. .. (blushing)"

SMQ: "Can you give us a list of the things Bobbi is responsible for in your home? And also what kinds of services he provides for you personally?"

MISS C: "Wow, I don't know where to begin. He does everything! I mean really. . . just everything!"

He does all the housework, of course -- the dusting and polishing, vacuuming, cleaning up and stuff. He scrubs the kitchen floor and cleans the bathrooms and shampoos the carpets and makes my bed and all that. And he also does all my laundry, too. And my ironing, too, which is just great to have someone else do for you!

He cooks when I'm going to be home. Usually, though, that's only a few nights during the week; and breakfast most mornings. Maybe lunch on the weekend now and then. And he does the dishes and cleans up the kitchen, of course.

I have to eat out pretty often, though, because of my business schedule. And I date, so I'm not in on weekend nights much.

When I'm hanging out at home, I often have Bobbi bring me snacks or drinks while I do my reading for the next day. And he helps me get dressed in the morning, too."

I tell you, I'm so busy with work and friends and dating, that I can't even imagine living without Bobbi anymore!"

SMQ: "Well, it certainly sounds like he helps out a lot. You mentioned that he helps you get dressed. Is it the same as having a female maid help you with your clothes?"

MISS C: "I don't know. I've never had a female maid! It's no big deal, though. Bobbi is a sissy, of course, so there's really no tension there or anything. It was a little odd at first, but I don't think it had anything to do with the fact that he's a sissy maid. You just have to get used to having a servant do things for you, that's all. I'm entirely comfortable with it now, though. And it's a great help in the morning to have someone lay out your clothes and help you when you're in a hurry.

I mean, as far as it being strange -- it's not like I lay around nude all the time! I guess Bobbi sees me topless, but I usually have my panties on, at least."

SMQ: "Does he help you in your bath, or anything like that?"

MISS C: "Well, he certainly draws my bath -- or my shower, most days. And he lays out my clothes and helps me get undressed and brings me towels and things. But I like to lie in the tub and think -- so I don't want much company, really. I just like to soak now and then, you know?"

SMQ: "Yes, I like to soak now and then too! What about entertaining? Is Bobbi a help in that regard?"

MISS C: "I really don't do that much entertaining. But when I have, Bobbi helps out. He plays "bartender" and serves the drinks. And if it's a dinner he'll cook something nice and serve it.

I haven't really thought about it that much. But it is nice to have someone help you entertain. Just last week I had two girls I know well at the firm over for dinner. And it was nice to get to relax and talk with them and not have to worry about what was going on in the kitchen. We sat down in the dining room and Bobbi served. The girls loved it, and they didn't seem to think it was odd that my servant is a sissy. After all, Dallas is a little more sophisticated than you coastal types give us credit for!"

SMQ: "We know you're sophisticated -- it's just that disarming accent you-all have down here!"

Anyway, it sounds like Bobbi's a big help with parties. I hate having to clean up after I have a party. I think about the mess so much, I can't enjoy the party half the time!"

MISS C: "Well, I certainly don't worry about that stuff anymore. I just relax and go off to bed and leave the mess to Bobbi. After all, that's his job now.

Oh, and I have to tell you that he looked awfully cute in his maid's uniform, too. It was one I bought him that has a short, flared skirt and several frothy petticoats underneath. He's really a sissy, so I think he actually enjoys getting all dressed up and prancing around in high-heels. Sissies are sort of prissy like that sometimes, don't you think?"

SMQ: "Yes, they are. Some of them try to hide it, but they usually like wearing cute little panties and petticoats and high-heels -- the more effeminate the better for most of them."

MISS C: "The best part about a dinner party with a sissy maid comes after dinner, though. I love just shooing him off to the kitchen to do the dishes. Sometimes I even give his bottom a quick "SMACK!", like he's some little cocktail waitress or something!"

SMQ: "That sounds like fun. And it's about time not only women got such treatment, too.

What about your dating life? Does Bobbi interfere with that at all?"

MISS C: "No, he doesn't. In fact, since Bobbi's here to do all my housework and laundry and everything, I have more time to go out. And more energy, too.

The sissy sometimes gets a little sad when I'm getting ready to go out on a date, though. It means he'll be here alone all evening with nothing to do but his domestic work. And I guess maybe he's somehow a little jealous of the men I date. Sissies sometimes get jealous, even though it's silly since they really aren't "men" in that sense."

SMQ: "We get a lot of reports of that. In fact, in the issue this interview is planned for, we're running an article that deals with how to "mix" boyfriends and sissy maids -- you know; how to handle the pouting and all that. That's not a big problem for you, though, is it?"

MISS C: "Oh no, not really. Bobbi gets a hurt look on his face when he's helping me dress for a date. And if I'm dressing in something nice and sexy, he seems to get more upset. His eyes even teared up a little once when he was helping me into a really sexy dress, with my tiniest silk panties on underneath.

I try to be kind and not talk about the man I'm going out with too much. And I'll thank Bobbi for his work on my clothes, maybe. Anything just to be friendly. That seems to help."

SMQ: "Do you bring your dates home with you? Or is anyone special staying over with you on the weekends presently?"

MISS C: "Not right now -- unfortunately. I don't have anyone special. But I do go out a lot -- and I sometimes stay out 'til two or three in the morning if I'm having a particularly good time."

SMQ: "How do you think Bobbi will react when you meet someone and start bringing him home and having him sleep with you and everything?"

MISS C: "I think it will be O.K. I mean, Bobbi must know someone as young as I am -- and single, too -- will have a boyfriend.

Actually I don't think sissies really care that much about the physical part of a relationship. I don't think that's what really makes them act jealous, since sissies sort of take care of themselves in that regard.

But the romantic intimacy and the attention and time a man will take up might make Bobbi jealous for awhile. But he'll accept it. If he can accept doing all my housework and cleaning up all my messes, I figure he can handle me sleeping with a guy!"

SMQ: "Most employers we've talked to agree with that, Cynthia. Sissy maids seem to pout a little at first, but they often become almost friends with their employer's male lover after they get used to the idea."

MISS C: "Sissies are sissies and men are men. I can't see why they get jealous at all. But I guess even sissies have some little bit of silly "male" pride in them."

SMQ: "That's one way to put it. Either that, or just some old-fashioned girlish jealousy over someone taking their "friend" away from them. Speaking of friends, do you see Bobbi as a friend at all -- or just as your servant?"

MISS C: "It's hard not to be a little close to someone who lives with you and helps you so much. But there is also a certain social "distance" there too. Bobbi is my friend, but there is a separation there because of our different social -- what should I call it? . . . "stations", I guess."

SMQ: "What days off does Bobbi get? And what does he do with them?"

MISS C: "He gets every other Sunday off. And every other Wednesday. It alternates, so he's not off two days in one week, of course."

He used to just hang out here, mostly. But lately he's been going out. I think he's getting more comfortable with the fact that he's a sissy.

At first, he borrowed some of my clothes. You know, some of my jeans and T-shirts and anything that looked "masculine" to him. He still borrows some of my things, but not as much as before.

We went just a couple months ago and bought some clothes for him to wear when he's off work -- or when he's out running errands. There's some nice things out there for sissies now -- little short-shorts and tight little ribbed Tees and cute "Mary Jane"-style shoes and things. If the stuff gets much cuter, I'll be borrowing some things from him soon!"

SMQ: "Shops for sissies are much more common than in the past. We'd like to think that "Sissy Maid Quarterly" has had something to do with that, of course, since we've hopefully made sissy maids more known by everybody."

MISS C: "I guess you have. All I know is that Bobbi has some bright yellow cotton back-zip short-shorts that I'd like to wiggle my butt into on one of these hot Texas days!"

SMQ: "I'm sure you'd look absolutely fabulous in them, too! And thanks for the interview, Cynthia." ●

Miss Cynthia, with that "big" Texas blonde hair and sky-blue eyes. She's the picture of the modern professional Dallas girl at leisure, (and with Bobbi doing all her housework and laundry, she has much more leisure time than most girls!

Top Drawer

Most sissies, (like most girls) keep their panties and other lingerie in the top drawers of their dressers. "Top Drawer" offers timely information and advice to sissy maids on lingerie and foundation garments. This issue, "Top Drawer" examines that mysterious garment, the bra!

For many sissies new to domestic service, the bra is a confusing and mysterious garment. Since bras are usually worn by girls and women (and sissies have had very little experience with women, of course!) the bra is an entirely new and unfamiliar garment for most sissy maids.

Of course, for those sissy maids who were actually active transvestites before coming into domestic service, bras are completely familiar items. Many transvestite sissies have worn bras often from a very early age. But for the rest of the "domestic crew" out there, this edition of "Top Drawer" will help unravel some of the mysteries of these distinctly feminine undergarments.

On women, of course, bras help support and cradle their breasts. For sissies, wearing a bra is more of a fashion requirement and symbolic gesture than it is a real physical need. However, some sissies who are on hormones do have budding, tender breasts that feel most comfortable within the silky confines of bra cups.

Along with his gaff, a bra is perhaps a sissy's most restrictive undergarment. Only the tight waist cinchers worn by some male maids under their formal serving uniforms are tighter and more confining.

Like wearing a gaff, wearing a bra does much to define and confirm a male maid's sissy nature. After all, regular males don't wear bras, of course -- so just the fact that sissies do wear them removes them from any kind of masculinity.

A sissy's bra goes very nicely with his other underwear "basic", his panties. In fact, the phrase "bra and panties" trips off the tongue so smoothly due to the fact that we are used to seeing these two silky, lacy undergarments worn almost as a "set." Indeed, a sissy's bra and panties should match, if at all possible.

Like wearing a gaff, wearing a bra does much to define and confirm a male maid's sissy nature.

There is, unfortunately, no real "trick" to getting used to wearing a bra. The only tried and true method is to just wear one all day long, every day, and eventually you'll get used to it. Some employers have their male maids wear their bras at night as well. This 24-hour approach serves to quickly get the sissy used to being in a bra, and is usually a successful method.

In time most sissies get as used to wearing a bra as they do to wearing a gaff. It just becomes part of their daily routine. In fact, some sissy maids who have been in service for a considerable length of time actually feel "undressed" without a bra.

As women know, wearing a bra is a little like being "harnessed" at times. The bra straps and stretchy elastic and little clips constantly seem to remind one of the bra's presence. But this is really O.K., since this feeling serves to further remind sissies of exactly who (and what) they are. This "harnessed" feeling is something sissies just have to get used to.

Bras come in a very wide array of styles and types -- halter, front closure, underwire, criss-cross, and seamless cup are just a few of the many choices. Bras for sissies, however, are most often underwire designs. This is because most sissies wear some type of silicone breast forms with their bras, and these are best held in place by underwire styles. And a back-closing bra also is usually best, since the clip is more secure.

In time most sissies get used to wearing a bra. . .

To put on a bra, it is always better (with back-closing designs, anyway) to slip the bra around your waist with the clip at your tummy. This way you can more easily secure the tight "hook-and-eye" clips most bras employ. The elastic or stretch nylon of the bra will allow you to slip it up over your breast forms after it has been "spun around". The final step is to snake your arms through the straps, and do any little final adjustments that are needed. Women dress in their bras this same way, (when they are not being assisted in their dressing by their sissy maid, that is) and it is simply the best way to do it.

Make sure that the bra straps are not twisted, however, because you will certainly want them all to lie flat and true when wearing the bra. Twisted bra straps are quite annoying to the wearer, whether he is a sissy, or she is a girl.

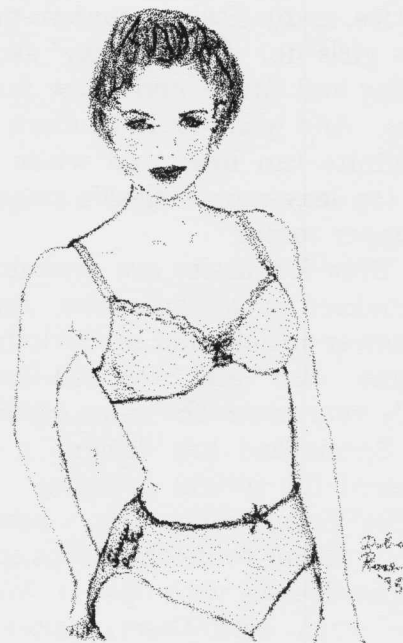

By the way, breast forms offer sissy maids an advantage that female maids do not have -- the option of having different sized bustlines for different uniforms and duties. For formal service at cocktail parties, many employers have their sissy maids don large breast forms for a "busty", sexy appearance under their flirty "French Maid"-style uniforms. But, for more mundane daytime housework, sissies can easily revert to a more practical, "mousy" flat-chested look with A-cup forms.

Bras come in so many colors and fabrics that the choices are a little daunting to most fledgling sissy domestics. A male maid may need help from his employer in choosing his first few bras. Pink, white, ivory, and "nude" are the most common color choices for sissies' bras. But some employers also choose black (with matching black panties) for some formal occasions, and girlish pastels for more casual times.

A sissy in his bra and panties, ready to get dressed in his maid's uniform. Nylon and lace bra and matching high-waisted panty, with little front bow, both from "Sissy Pants" lingerie.

Like his gaff and his panties, a sissy's bra becomes yet another badge of his gender identity and his "neutral" sexuality. Even when a sissy may not technically require a bra, (as when he may be out running errands in an outfit not requiring breast forms) most sissies eventually wear them anyway. For these times, the bra cups are often of a "training" variety, and are little more than flat triangles of silky nylon or satin. Strange as bras may seem to him at first, many sissies eventually feel more comfortable in a bra than they do without one.

One other advantage of wearing a bra is that it gets sissies used to wearing two-piece swimsuits. On their rare days off, and when serving at pool parties or other summery festivities, many sissies wear two-piece bikinis, just as girls do. These "sexy" swimsuits are revealing and fun -- and allow for maximum tanning. And what could be more "sissy" than the definite tan lines and white triangles a bikini top leaves on a sissy's smooth, slightly built upper torso?

Bras for sissies are available from the same makers as women's bras. And there are some newer outlets that are strictly for sissies, of course. But "his" bras and "her" bras are actually very much the same garment.

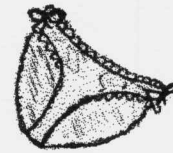

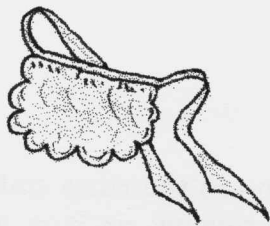

Specialized bra designs must also be considered for special dressing. There are "backless" bras, (which aren't actually "backless", but rather route the straps so low on the back that dresses with open or low-cut backs can be worn with them) halter-neck bras, "push-up" bras, seamless cup designs (for wearing under especially cling-y tops) and padded bras. All of these designs might find their way into a sissy's "top drawer", since some of the newest and most stylish maid's uniforms often require them. In time, some sissies' top drawers become so jammed with panties, gaffs, and bras that the second-to-top dresser drawer is taken over as well!

So, it seems these days that a sissy and his bras are not soon to be separated. This is good news for the bra industry, who now will have many more regular customers than before. And for sissy maids the only problem is making sure you don't confuse your bras with your employer's expensive silk and hand-done lace ones! ♥

A sissy in pigtails proudly displays his new padded bra. Smooth-cup satin bras like this one are often worn under maid's dresses and uniform "separates". Wide-set bra straps help maids feel comfortable in their bras through long days of housework. Padded satin bra from "A Sissy's Secret." Flirty, short "skater's" skirt from "A Sissy's Work."

Report from... The Laundry Room

Since sissy maids spend so much time in the Laundry Room, they might as well know what they're doing! This time: How to properly hand-laundry your employer's panties and other lingerie, including her super-expensive and super-delicate European underthings.

Rich girls, such as some of us work for, wear some of the most expensive, luxurious, and exotic underthings on the planet. Fine silks, light-as-air chiffon, and hand-done Belgian lace are just a few of the more common fabrics these delicacies are made from. Hand care is absolutely essential for such items, of course. And careful handling from Master Bedroom floor, to laundry room, to dresser drawer is also mandatory.

But even if the young woman you happen to work for is not a "rich bitch," she still likely wears silk panties and elegant nightwear on a regular basis. So all sissy maids must know what to do when faced with the bold "Hand Wash Only!" warning tag.

While our well-off employer may casually toss a tiny pair of panties that cost more than our full week's salary on her bedroom floor, we must be more careful! The first step in proper lingerie care is setting up a place to put the to-be-laundried items when we pick up after our employers. A satin-lined basket is one traditional choice as a "lingerie hamper." But if you use one of these make sure there is no way any of the weaving can ever "catch" your mistress' favorite silk panties, or you might not be able to sit very comfortably for awhile!

The best solution for this problem is to line a soft, rounded plastic container or basket with white satin or well-washed white cotton sheeting. No colors should ever be used for the lining, since there is always the slight chance of running.

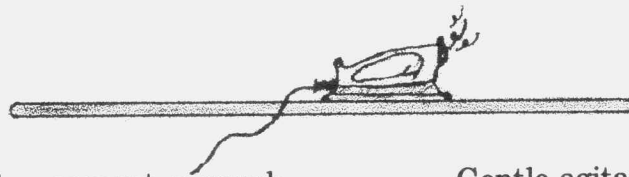

After we help our mistress undress (or she undresses herself and throws everything everywhere!) we should carefully place any "hand-wash" lingerie items in the lined container. It is also good practice to never place any item of lingerie that is damp or wet in the "hamper", again because of running. If something is damp or wet, it should be immediately taken to the laundry room and placed on a drying rack to dry.

Once the items are in the laundry room and you're ready to launder them, the real work begins. You really do not need to separate colors. Lingerie items of the caliber we are discussing here are always washed separately -- they are never mixed.

As far as you what you should wear to hand-laundry lingerie, you need only two items besides the uniform you happen to be in. First, you must wear a pair of rubber gloves -- preferably of the thin "surgical" variety.

Wearing these gloves helps prevent a rough nail or even overly-rough skin from catching any fine, gossamer-thin threads and ruining some expensive item your employer loves. Second, it's a good idea to tie on a light weight rubber apron, since it is likely there will be a few sudsy splashes from the laundry sink.

Once you are equipped and ready, fill the laundry sink with warm (not hot!) water. As for soap, there are commercial brands specifically formulated for lingerie. Another option is to use a little baby shampoo. Do not use too much soap, since it will simply make the items more difficult to rinse. Just use enough to soften the water and create a layer of soft suds on the surface.

Start first with the white or light colored items. This way you may be able to wash several items in the same water. But be careful. If you have any doubt about the water, change it! (A good test is to scoop some up in a drinking glass -- if it doesn't look nearly clear enough to drink, consider changing the water.)

Remember, the two most common

Gentle agitation in the rinse sink is all that is required for rinsing. . .

"disasters" that befall fine lingerie while it is being cared for are runs, (or catches) and color-bleeding, so pay close attention to these areas.

Gently agitate the wash water and let the items soak a few moments, but not for more than ten minutes.. You may also gently squeeze some of the suds through the fabric of the panties, bra, or other lingerie item.

When you feel the items are clean, carefully place them in the rinse sink, which should be filled with clear, luke-warm water.

Gentle agitation in the rinse sink is all that is required for rinsing, as long as you change the rinse water constantly. Changing the rinse water not only ensures proper rinsing, but also helps prevent running or bleeding of colors.

Treat the lingerie gently, and do not try to hurry. Accept the fact that a week's worth of fine lingerie will likely take at least four hours to wash, rinse, and properly hang to dry. It is exactly this time-consuming care that prevents women without maids from wearing fine lingerie regularly. (And why women with maids do wear it regularly, since they don't have to care for it themselves!)

Although it may seem awfully tedious at times, standing at the laundry sink carefully hand-laundering lingerie is a part of our job as our employer's maid. This is precisely the type of little "chore" she hired us for in the first place. So, while it seems (and frankly is) quite a menial task, remember that just such assignments are what keep us employed!

Once the garments are thoroughly rinsed, carefully remove them one at a time and gently shake some of the water out of them. Heed this strict advice, though: Do not wring, twist, or stretch fine lingerie! Only a gentle shaking or perhaps a slight "slap" or two against your apron (another good reason to don a nice rubber one for this work!) is all that should be done to "hurry along" the drying process.

Drying racks made of smooth plastic are essential for lingerie care, and no doubt your employer has provided these in the laundry room. Bras, camisoles, and teddies may all be hung up carefully by the straps. And panties, tap pants, and briefs should be hung using small plastic lingerie clips from the waistband.

. . . since all but the softest waters tend to "stiffen" fine silk and delicate lace. . .

After the items are thoroughly dry, (which may take anywhere from 4 to 18 hours) you must gently shake them out, since all but the softest waters tend to "stiffen" fine silk and delicate lace. Check carefully to see if any of the items require pressing. Most will need at least a quick "touch up" with a warm, dry iron.

Most will need at least a quick "touch up" with a warm, dry iron. . .

Once again, this step will be tedious, and will take time. But you just have to accept that fact, and get busy at the ironing board.

After the lingerie is washed, rinsed, dried, and pressed, it is time to put it away where it belongs -- in your employer's dresser. While this step is relatively easy, you must know your employer's wishes. Does she prefer her panties to lie flat in her drawer, or to be neatly folded? Where does she like her bras kept -- and her sleepwear? These are preferences it is your job to know, so check with your employer and find out precisely how she likes things done, (if you don't already know.)

It is best to actually fold the lingerie in the Master Bedroom just before it is placed in your employer's dresser drawers. Folding these silky, slippery items in the laundry room is pretty much a waste of time, since they will "unfold" themselves in your laundry basket before you get them to the Master Bedroom!

. . . fold the lingerie in the Master Bedroom just before it is placed in your employer's dresser drawers.

This article covers only the basics of lingerie care. You must "study up" and become familiar with all the different fabrics lingerie is made from, and learn the proper washing, rinsing, drying, and pressing techniques for each. Books covering this subject are available from larger libraries, and from the Home Economics extension service of many state universities. And don't forget to always carefully read and follow the care directions on the garment tag! (Note: Some lingerie items do not carry these labels due to the tiny size of the garments, and the often sheer fabrics they are made from. This is especially true of fine European items.)

Remember also that lingerie is not the only "delicate" item on your employer's laundry list. There are pantyhose and stockings, swimwear, and aerobics outfits to consider as well. Many of these items require much the same hand care as fine lingerie.

Rest assured it will all be enough to keep you quite busy in the laundry room! ●

This sissy scurries off to the laundry room after picking up his mistress' casually discarded tiny pink silk camisole off the Master Bedroom floor. Lingerie of this high quality requires careful, time-consuming care.

In The Kitchen. . .

Cooking, serving, and dish washing all start in the kitchen. "In The Kitchen" covers all aspects of kitchen duties, from the fun and creative, to the dull and dirty. This time, (unfortunately) we discuss dish washing.

Washing dishes is simply something maids must deal with on a daily basis, and this is certainly no less true for sissy maids than it is for other housekeepers. Like housework, laundry, and serving, it is an integral part of a maid's job. And while certainly not a complex or technical task, there is a proper method of dealing with dirty dishes that will help produce spotlessly clean results without undue effort.

Most of today's kitchens come equipped with automatic dishwashers. But for various reasons most sissy maids do not utilize these machines much. First, when our employers are home, they rarely enjoy having to hear the whine and rumble of the machines. Also, many maid's employers dine off fine china that cannot be machine washed anyway.

All this leaves sissy maids standing at the kitchen sink, dealing with the mess by hand.

Washing dishes and scrubbing pots and pans is a job that has not changed in a hundred years. It is basically the same job scullery maids hated to tackle in Victorian times. But when performed properly (and with a few modern "tricks" thrown in!) it is not as much drudgery as it sounds.

First, as with most housework, proper preparation is key. The kitchen counters and sink need to be clear and clean before you begin to clear the dining room table. After all, you will need someplace to put the dishes when you carry them into the kitchen!

Clear the table carefully and efficiently by placing silverware from each place on the dish. Carry only two place settings to the kitchen at one time. While this method may require taking one or two extra trips, carrying only what you can handle is proper etiquette, and will also help prevent breakage. (More on proper deportment while clearing the table in future issues of SMQ.)

Once the dishes are in the kitchen, you must prepare yourself. Dish washing is one job that absolutely requires the use of a full-cut, waterproof rubber apron and substantial rubber gloves. The best aprons for the job are pinafore styles, with ample coverage both at the skirt and bodice. You can't do a good job washing dishes and diving into greasy pots and pans if you're worried about getting your uniform messy!

Rubber gloves are also essential for two related reasons. First, they protect your hands from hot dish water, strong detergents, and rough scouring pads. Just as important, wearing gloves also allows for the use of the hottest possible washing and rinsing water, ensuring sparkling results.

Some sissy maids rebel a little at the notion that they have to stand at the sink in a rubber apron and gloves to do the dishes. The image this outfit and duty present is admittedly very domestic, and also perhaps somewhat subservient.

But this "rebellion" is ultimately a little silly, considering the already-known position of a sissy maid within the household. Face it; everyone already knows you are a household servant whose duties include many overtly "domestic" and menial tasks.

Now that you are properly dressed and prepared for the job, here's how to do it.

First clean off the plates of any scraps. Then rinse them quickly under hot water. At this point you can stack them all neatly as high as is required, with the silverware stacked separately.

Once everything is rinsed, it's time to fill up the sink. Use the hottest water possible, and use a relatively strong dish washing liquid, but use it sparingly-- you don't want to waste time searching for dishes and silverware through mountains of meaningless bubbles!

Ideally, the dishwater should be so hot that it actually steams a little. Talk to your employer about having the hot water heater set to a higher temperature if you cannot get water this hot out of the tap.

Ideally, the dishwater should be so hot that it actually steams a little.

Now, it's time to "dive in." Wash the delicate items first, and also those that are the cleanest. Save the "nasty" things for last. Placing the silverware in a plastic open-weave basket of some variety and letting these items soak is another good idea.

Carefully wash dish after dish and glass after glass, stacking them neatly as you do. Don't worry about rinsing for now. Any soap will be thoroughly rinsed off by the method we will describe shortly.

Washing stacks of dishes is something that will take a little time. And be prepared after dinner parties to be interrupted to serve drinks to your employer's guests in the living room. (NOTE: For formal affairs, you must change into a proper serving apron and take off your rubber gloves to serve.

. . . most guests will fully understand that a servant must be properly dressed for his duties.

For more casual events, you need not remove your rubber apron, but you still must take off the gloves.

Some maids do not like to be "seen" in their kitchen aprons, but most guests will fully understand that a servant must be dressed properly for his often-messy duties.)

Once the dishes and glasses are washed, it is time to tackle the greasy mess of the pots and pans. If you're a smart "scullery" maid, you will have at least put hot water and a squirt of detergent into the dirtiest pots and pans while you were serving dinner or waiting for your mistress and her guests to finish their meals.

With very hot dishwater, strong detergent, a good scouring pad, and a nice rubber apron and gloves, a sissy maid shouldn't be afraid of even the nastiest pots and pans.

. . . a sissy maid shouldn't be afraid of even the nastiest pots and pans.

Make sure your gloves are long enough so that there is no danger of plunging in too deep and having hot water pour into them. A recent trend is to wear gloves that extend nearly to the elbows for heavy kitchen duties. This is an excellent idea, and could only be improved upon if an enterprising glove maker also included snug elastic cuffs to hold them up!

Scour the pots and pans thoroughly, inside and out. (Of course, it will be at this moment your mistress' prettiest girlfriend will walk into the kitchen to see you toiling away with wilted hair, and messy dishwater dribbling down your pink apron. Not exactly an image that is going to make her leave her boyfriend for you!)

. . . it will be at this moment that your mistress' prettiest girlfriend will walk into the kitchen to see you toiling away.

After everything is washed, drain the sink and rinse it out. Now you may begin rinsing everything. Again, make sure to use the hottest possible water. With water this hot, a thorough rinsing should eliminate any soap, including any that has perhaps dried a little.

Rinse the pots and pans first, and set them on racks to dry. Then rinse the dishes and glassware and dry them quickly.

Once everything is "squared away", you will still have to thoroughly wipe the counter tops, stove, and other surfaces.

A brief check in the mirror, and a quick apron change, and you're ready to go!

How high is too high?

Sissy maids wear high heels when they serve at parties and other functions. But is it fair to have them mincing about in sky-high heels for daily housework? Many employers tell us they have worn high heels to the office for years; "so why shouldn't my sissy have to wear them to vacuum in?" But sissy maids complain that it is difficult to complete their many household responsibilities effectively when handicapped with spike heels five and six inches high. We try to come up with a fair solution to this high-altitude problem.

High heels lengthen and trim the leg, and produce a gait that is universally noted for its appealing look and rhythm. While such benefits are usually associated with women's legs, the shaved-smooth, girlish legs of most sissy maids also benefit greatly from a good pair of spike-heeled pumps.

Most employers like seeing their maids in high heels, especially if they are dressed up in a short little petticoated dress for formal serving. The sight of a sissy maid swishing through the living room in very high heels with his little serving tray adds much to the elegant atmosphere of many employer's festive cocktail parties.

But are these same sky-scraper heels really necessary for daytime housework? Most sissy maids emphatically say "NO", while a good number of employers think otherwise. These employers believe that a sissy walks much nicer in his heels at night if he has spent day after day in them as well. "Practice makes perfect" is a quick summation of their feelings. There is also a little bit of "retribution" in some employer's insistence on heels for their maids. In a way it may be some women's way of getting back at a male-dominated society to at least have sissy males (if not real males) mincing around gingerly on uncomfortable spike heels all day.

Sissy maids, on the other hand, say that they have too much to do during the day to worry so much about looking "pretty" and "prancing about in high heels."

"I have to get a ton of housework and laundry and other things done everyday before my mistress gets home from work," says Sissy "J", from Atlanta. "And I really can't effectively do it all when I'm struggling to walk correctly in heels so high a ballerina would trip over them!"

SMQ cannot arbitrate this problem to everyone's satisfaction. But we can attempt to explain the pros and cons of high heels for daytime, and perhaps offer some possible compromises.

First, let's all agree (both sissy domestics and employers) that high heels on . . .high heels on maids for evening serving is both expected and entirely acceptable. . .

maids for evening serving is both expected and entirely acceptable. Sissy maids have no real leg to stand on in complaining about heels for evening. After all, walking a few feet and standing around looking pretty while you offer guests drinks is not that difficult to do, even in the highest of heels.

But daytime is, admittedly, a different kettle of fish. First, the maid's employer is not generally there to even see the servant in his heels. On weekdays, at least, a maid's real job is housework, not putting forth a particularly pretty appearance. (Weekend days are in a different category, since many maids are properly uniformed for casual serving, as well as light housework.)

On weekdays, at least, a maid's real job is housework. . .

There is no "perfect" solution to the problem of high heels for sissy maids. There are just to many varying (and passionate) opinions.

It is to an employer's advantage if a her maid works efficiently during the day. With the housework done, a woman's maid can devote more of the evening hours to waiting on her, running errands, and otherwise assisting her in many small ways. And if she prefers to have her maid in three or four-inch heels and a trim little uniform dress at night, so be it.

So the best compromise seems to be having maids wear super-high spike heels for serving at parties, relatively high "business-like" pumps for some evening and weekend service, and more practical "flats" for daytime housework.

There are two things both maids and employers should remember, however. Just because shoes are "flats" doesn't mean they can't be entirely effeminate in design. Just look at the popular "Mary Jane" style of patent leather shoes many sissy maids are wearing recently. While certainly "flats", Mary Janes are as far from "masculine" as one can imagine, and are perhaps even more "sissy" in appearance than high heels. Also, just because a sissy maid does not have to wear his high heels all the time does not mean he can let his skill in walking in them waver! Practice does make perfect, so the old "skyscrapers" need to be dragged out of the closet now and then for a spin around the floor.

Just because shoes are "flats" doesn't mean they can't be entirely effeminate in design. . .

When mistress' next party rolls around, he will still be expected to prance about in even the highest of heels like a debutante!

Maids and high heels just go together. In fact, some standard five-inch black patent numbers are even called "maid's pumps" by many salesgirls. But little flat canvas "tennis" shoes and effeminate, juvenile Mary Janes are also just "made" for sissy servants too. So let's please all calm down now -- and get some housework done! ▲

Next Issue

FALL FASHION - We track the trends, and cover the changes in the accelerating world of sissy fashion. Rompers should continue their campaign to become the dominant sissy maid uniform for day. Skirts will likely come in all lengths and shapes, from thigh-skimming, flared minis, to slim, tight ankle lengths. Leggings and tights are expected to arrive in unexpected colors and styles. And we'll have a few surprises, too!

THE PERSONAL TOUCH - Many sissy maids are becoming skilled personal servants as well as all around housekeepers. But a fine "lady's maid" needs to know how to help a woman dress and undress, and must perform these somewhat intimate services with discretion and calm. SMQ interviewed several employers to get their views on how best sissy servants can be utilized in the boudoir.

DISCIPLINE - Sissy maids are generally obedient almost to a fault. But there are times when things just "don't go right" in your household. Just how should an employer deal with these situations? It's all rather tricky, but we'll try to come up with some good answers to some age-old questions. Is spanking still the "best medicine" for maids who are not performing up to standard? Or are other forms of discipline more effective?

PANTIES - Are panties just panties, or are the new sissy versions actually different from the girl's panties our sissies have worn for years? We discover the "narrow" difference.

PLUS, OUR SMQ DEPARTMENTS - -
The Employer's Side - A Sissy's World - The Maid's Room - Top Drawer - Report from the Laundry Room - In the Kitchen. And Much More!

Sissy Maid Quarterly is a Sandy Thomas Publication, produced in conjunction with Rose Productions. The magazine's editorial mission is to inform readers about all aspects of sissy-male-based domestic service in an appropriate and intelligent fashion. The Editor and Art Director of Sissy Maid Quarterly is Debra Rose.

Sandy Thomas publications are well regarded for their consistent quality and high standards. Rose Productions is the acknowledged leader in literature for and about sissy maids and their employers.

The Debra Rose novel, "Domestic Bliss - Life As A Fashion Model's Maid" quickly became "must reading" for sissy male domestics and progressive young women in 1990. Other publications by Ms. Rose include "Learning to Serve", "Where the Sissies Come From" and "My Year at the Academy." "Domestic Bliss" is available from Sandy Thomas as "Maid-In-Form - A, B, & C". "My Year at the Academy" is available from Sandy Thomas as "The Sissy Maid Academy, Vol. 1 & 2."

We encourage thoughtful questions, comments, and article suggestions from interested readers on any topic of concern to male maids and/or their employers. Authors: Submissions of manuscripts or artwork should include self-addressed return envelope and postage. SMQ is not responsible for unsolicited submissions. Send questions, comments, or submissions to: Sandy Thomas Advertising, Dept. SMQ, P.O. Box 2309, Capistrano Beach, CA 92624.

While based on true experiences, situations, and maid's fashions, Sissy Maid Quarterly is primarily a work of fiction.
