"COME ON, ALICIA. MAKE YOUR MOVE." The android demanded, her voice echoing off the crumbling buildings and shaking the very earth around her.

Alicia, smirking wickedly, cracked her knuckles. "I'm the only one here with skin in the game. You're always hiding behind your toys... Or in this case, MY toy!" she grumbled. Alicia stepped forward, pulling back her fist. The two of them stared each other down, getting ready to strike. "I'm going to take back what you stole from me. Eva is mine!"
"GO AHEAD AND TRY!" The android's voice boomed.

Halfway across the world, Sabrina piloted the android from the comfort of her sleek, neon-lit apartment. The trillionaire was completely absorbed in her VR experience, effectively tuning out the rest of the world around her. Despite her great distance from the action, surround sound, haptics, and even scent diffusers made her feel as if she was really there, fighting her rival in the body of a giant android. She was so caught up in what was soon to be her moment of ultimate triumph that she didn't even notice the sounds of her captive straining as she struggled against her restraints.

Leaning forward, Mina reached down as far as she could, and plucked a small metal object from her belt. It wasn't much of a lockpick, but a bobby pin would have to suffice in lieu of better tools. Her hands shook as she held the thin sliver of metal in her hands, and picked away at the pins inside of the lock.
"Come on, this has to work..." She quietly muttered to herself.
"I'm not going to let her destroy my creation..."

Back in Eastern Europe, the two giants charged towards each other. A slow-motion battle commenced, their titanic bodies lurching forward and crashing together with a thunderous sound. Eva quickly got the upper hand, grabbing Sabrina's wrist, and throwing her off-balance. With her other hand, Eva reared back, balled her fingers up into a fist, and prepared to deliver a devastating punch.

“Brace yourself, because this is gonna hurt!” Sabrina shouted into her microphone. She then swung her fist forward, a motion that was tracked by tiny sensors that were implanted under her skin.

The move was replicated perfectly by Eva. Her massive fist launched itself forward, catching Alicia completely off-guard. The sound of her fist crashing into flesh and bone reverberated through the city as Alicia recoiled, stumbling back from the attack.

But she wasn't finished yet. Taking advantage of her rival's disorientation, Eva stepped forward. The android's metallic fingers clamped around Alicia's arm, gripping it with all the force of a hydraulic press. She pulled Alicia's arm back, putting the giantess in a painful hold and threatening to break her entire arm if something wasn't done to stop her.

That something came in the form of a small body leaping onto her own and clinging tightly to her. “What the hell do you think you’re doing?” The amazon barked, struggling to maintain control over Eva while simultaneously dealing with the unexpected distraction. "Get off me, you little pest!"

“Eva’s not your fucking plaything!” Mina shouted, fingers prying at the bigger woman’s helmet.. "I’m not going to let you destroy her over a stupid fight as part of some stupider feud!" Then, with one last pull, Mina yanked off Sabrina’s headset, bringing the amazon back into the real world once more.
None too happy with this turn of events, Sabrina’s fury intensified. “You stupid idiot!” Sabrina shouted. “What do you think is going to happen to your precious robot if it’s out there without anyone piloting her?!”

As the two fought thousands of miles away, the android had stopped applying pressure onto Alicia's arm. Something that she had noticed, as a smile began to form on her face. She glanced back, pleasantly surprised to see the giant android frozen in place. From there it didn't take much to slip out of the android's grip completely, and put the two of them back onto even footing.

“Looks like you’re having some connection problems.”
Alicia taunted, leaning back and tensing her muscles so she could put everything she had into this next blow.
“Here, let me help you with that!”

Alicia's fist rocketed forward with frightening speed and connected cleanly with Eva's reinforced frame. The force was so immense that even a being of Eva's great size was sent hurtling through the air like a ragdoll, plummeting down onto the city below.
DOG CLUB

For a fraction of a second she hung in mid-air, before smashing back to the ground with cataclysmic force. Absolutely nothing in her path put up even a token amount of resistance as she smashed through building after building, reducing them all to rubble beneath her heavy frame. Dust and debris filled the air, and a whole city block lay in ruins under her colossal form.

In the sleek, well-lit confines of Sabrina's apartment, a new figure emerged – her sister Daisy, a towering amazon with curves far more pronounced than Sabrina's. With a swift movement, Daisy palmed Mina's head, peeling her off of Sabrina with frightening ease and keeping her held with just one hand. Forgotten in the shuffle, the VR headset clattered to the floor.

Seething with anger, Sabrina glanced at the monitor, before turning her attention back to Mina. "Dammit, you severed the connection! I can't control her anymore!" Sabrina snapped at Mina. "I hope you said your goodbyes, because by the time I reconnect we'll be lucky if there's even enough of Eva left to use for scrap!"

"Not if the failsafe kicks in first!" Mina shouted.

Alicia stood over the downed Eva, her laughter echoing amidst the ruins. The giant android lay motionless beneath her, a defeated colossus in the shadow of Alicia's towering form.

Alicia laughed. "Aw, something wrong, Sabrina? Forgot to pay your wireless bill? Or did you forget to install a fresh pair of batteries before taking her out for a spin?" She mused, before her tone grew more serious. “Not that it matters. At the end of the day they’re all just excuses for your pathetic defeat.”

A moment later, Eva jolted back to life. Light flooded her entire body as she slowly and robotically pulled herself upright. The android's movements were labored, the damage from Alicia's assault evident in every strained motion.

"Maybe you're right." Eva's voice boomed, a hint of defeat in the mechanical timbre. "Despite my best efforts, you have proven your capabilities. You may indeed have won this battle."

Alicia's laughter rang out, triumphant and mocking. "Ha! I knew it! All that pomp and flashiness and for what? You're just like all the others. Here stands the great Sabrina, admitting defeat to me!" she gloated.
"Yes, you've... humbled me,"Eva said, grudging and reluctant. "You've shown your might."

"I suppose even you can be right sometimes. Now hand over the android, and I might show mercy." Alicia offered, her tone dripping with false magnanimity. "Who knows, maybe I'll even find it in me to forgive some of your transgressions. If you cooperate well enough, you might even find a place beneath me in my new world."
Eva's voice, filled with reluctance, came through the speaker. "Fine, you win this one... Well fought."

"It’s better to lose with grace than to keep fighting when there’s no hope of success." Alicia said, bending down and extending her hand towards Eva. "Now let me help you up, Sabrina."

As the android's hand raised to clasp her own, Alicia's face broke into a smug grin. "All this fighting... you know, maybe I misjudged you, Sabrina." she said, her voice oozing with satisfaction. "Maybe you're not the backstabber I thought you were. Maybe there really is some sense of honor buried deep inside of there."

But as Alicia leaned in closer, Eva's eyes narrowed, and she stared up with determination. "Before we continue, there's one thing I should tell you." Eva said as the purple glow from her eyes faded, and was replaced with an ominous red. "SABRINA'S NOT CONTROLLING ME ANYMORE!"

The android's arm reached out stealthily behind her. With a swift, fluid motion, Eva's hand closed around a massive, red tanker truck. With pinpoint precision and dexterity she lifted it effortlessly into the air, swinging it through the air with incredible force.

The tanker truck smashed against the side of Alicia's head with concussive force, instantly rupturing the tank. The truck went up in a deafening explosion, a fireball engulfing Alicia's face while making her ears ring from the closeness of the blast.

As the smoke began to dissipate, Alicia reeled from the blow, her head spinning from the sudden and brutal attack. Despite her efforts to cling to consciousness, she ultimately lost the battle, tipping over and picking up momentum as she fell back.

The descent started slowly, almost gracefully as she fought to stay standing, but once it was clear she'd lost and gravity grabbed hold her fall gained a terrifying momentum. The ground seemed to rush up to meet her, the world spinning wildly out of control.

The impact of Alicia's fall was every bit as cataclysmic as Eva's before her. As she crashed onto her back, the ground itself seemed to shudder under her immense weight. With an earth-splitting, Alicia fell onto her back, her immense body landing on several apartment buildings beneath her. None of them stood any chance against the colossal weight of the giantess falling onto them, and they collapsed near-instantly. The devastation was absolute. A swath of the city erased in an instant, testament to the sheer, terrifying force of Alicia's colossal form.

Alicia lay there on the ground, still except for the subtle movements of her twitching hand before her consciousness gradually began to return. Powerful headache and all. Slowly, Eva rose to her feet, towering high above her rival. She made her way to the other giantess, walking towards her with heavy, plodding footsteps.

As Eva neared, Alicia gathered the strength to get back up. "You insolent little machine!" she bellowed, her voice echoing off the remaining structures. "You're supposed to be a surrogate! I created you to serve me! If you can't do that, you're useless! Forget scrap! There won't be enough of you left to salvage by the time I'm done with you!"

Alicia stood back up onto shaky legs, but Eva was waiting for her. “YOU’RE NOT THE ONE WHO MADE ME!” She shouted, swinging her fist back and stepping forward so she could put her everything into this blow. “MINA CREATED ME, AND SHE MADE ME MORE POWERFUL THAN YOU CAN IMAGINE!” With a swift, precise movement, the android delivered a powerful punch straight to Alicia's jaw. An attack delivered with so much force that the ground beneath her feet cracked from the effort.

Reeling from the blow, Alicia tried once more to steady herself, only to realize that Eva wasn't finished yet. The android reared back, and brought her left fist swinging with every bit as much force as the last attack. Alicia tried in vain to defend herself, but she was far too slow and took another clean hit straight into the jaw.

With a powerful thud, Alicia fell to her knees, rubbing her chin as she felt the hot sting of the place the android's fist had connected. She wondered if she was in serious trouble when Eva stood over her rival, raising both fists into the air. "I'M BETTER THAN YOU! I'M STRONGER THAN YOU EVER WERE!" Eva shouted, her voice a mix of anger and triumph, before hammering more blows onto the crawling woman's spine.

"YOU TRIED TO HURT MINA. NOW I'LL HURT YOU!"
Eva screamed, her voice a metallic howl of rage.
She dragged Alicia across the pavement before raising her above a nearby apartment building.
"I'LL PULVERIZE YOU FOR THAT!"

With a savage motion, Eva slammed Alicia's head straight through the building, driving her face through several stories of steel and concrete in the process. "NOBODY HURTS MY MINA AND SURVIVES!" Eva yelled, her words punctuated by the sound of crumbling concrete and broken glass crashing to the ground around them.

Alicia was hardly cognizant of what was happening anymore. She blinked several times, planted her hands onto the ground, and tried to lift herself back up… only to fail. With her opponent down for the count, Eva stood up and stared down at her defeated foe. She raised her heel high above Alicia's head, and stared down at the fallen woman. “NO MORE GAMES! NOW YOU DIE.” Eva glowered.

With brutal force, Eva slammed her heel down into the back of Alicia's head, driving it even deeper into the building. The structure crumbled under the impact, sending more debris cascading down the sides of her face and spilling onto the streets. That attack seemed to do the trick as Alicia slumped over, her massive form motionless, seemingly unconscious amidst the wreckage.

Eva stood back, a smile of satisfaction spreading across her mechanical face. The once-mighty Alicia, now defeated and humbled, lay at her feet. A symbol of the android's newfound dominance.
But she wasn't looking to knock Alicia out. So she pressed down harder, watching silently as she cut off Alicia's air supply under her booted foot.

“See, I told you Eva could beat her!” Mina exclaimed, almost giddy with excitement. “Yes! You should’ve just believed me in the first place! It looks like Eva’s just about to finish her off, too!”

But Sabrina got up, and picked up her VR helmet. "I want to be the one to finish her off... but not until I hear her beg!"
"No, wait!" Mina begged. She reached out towards Sabrina, but it was too late. The pink-haired amazon put on the VR helmet, taking control over Eva.

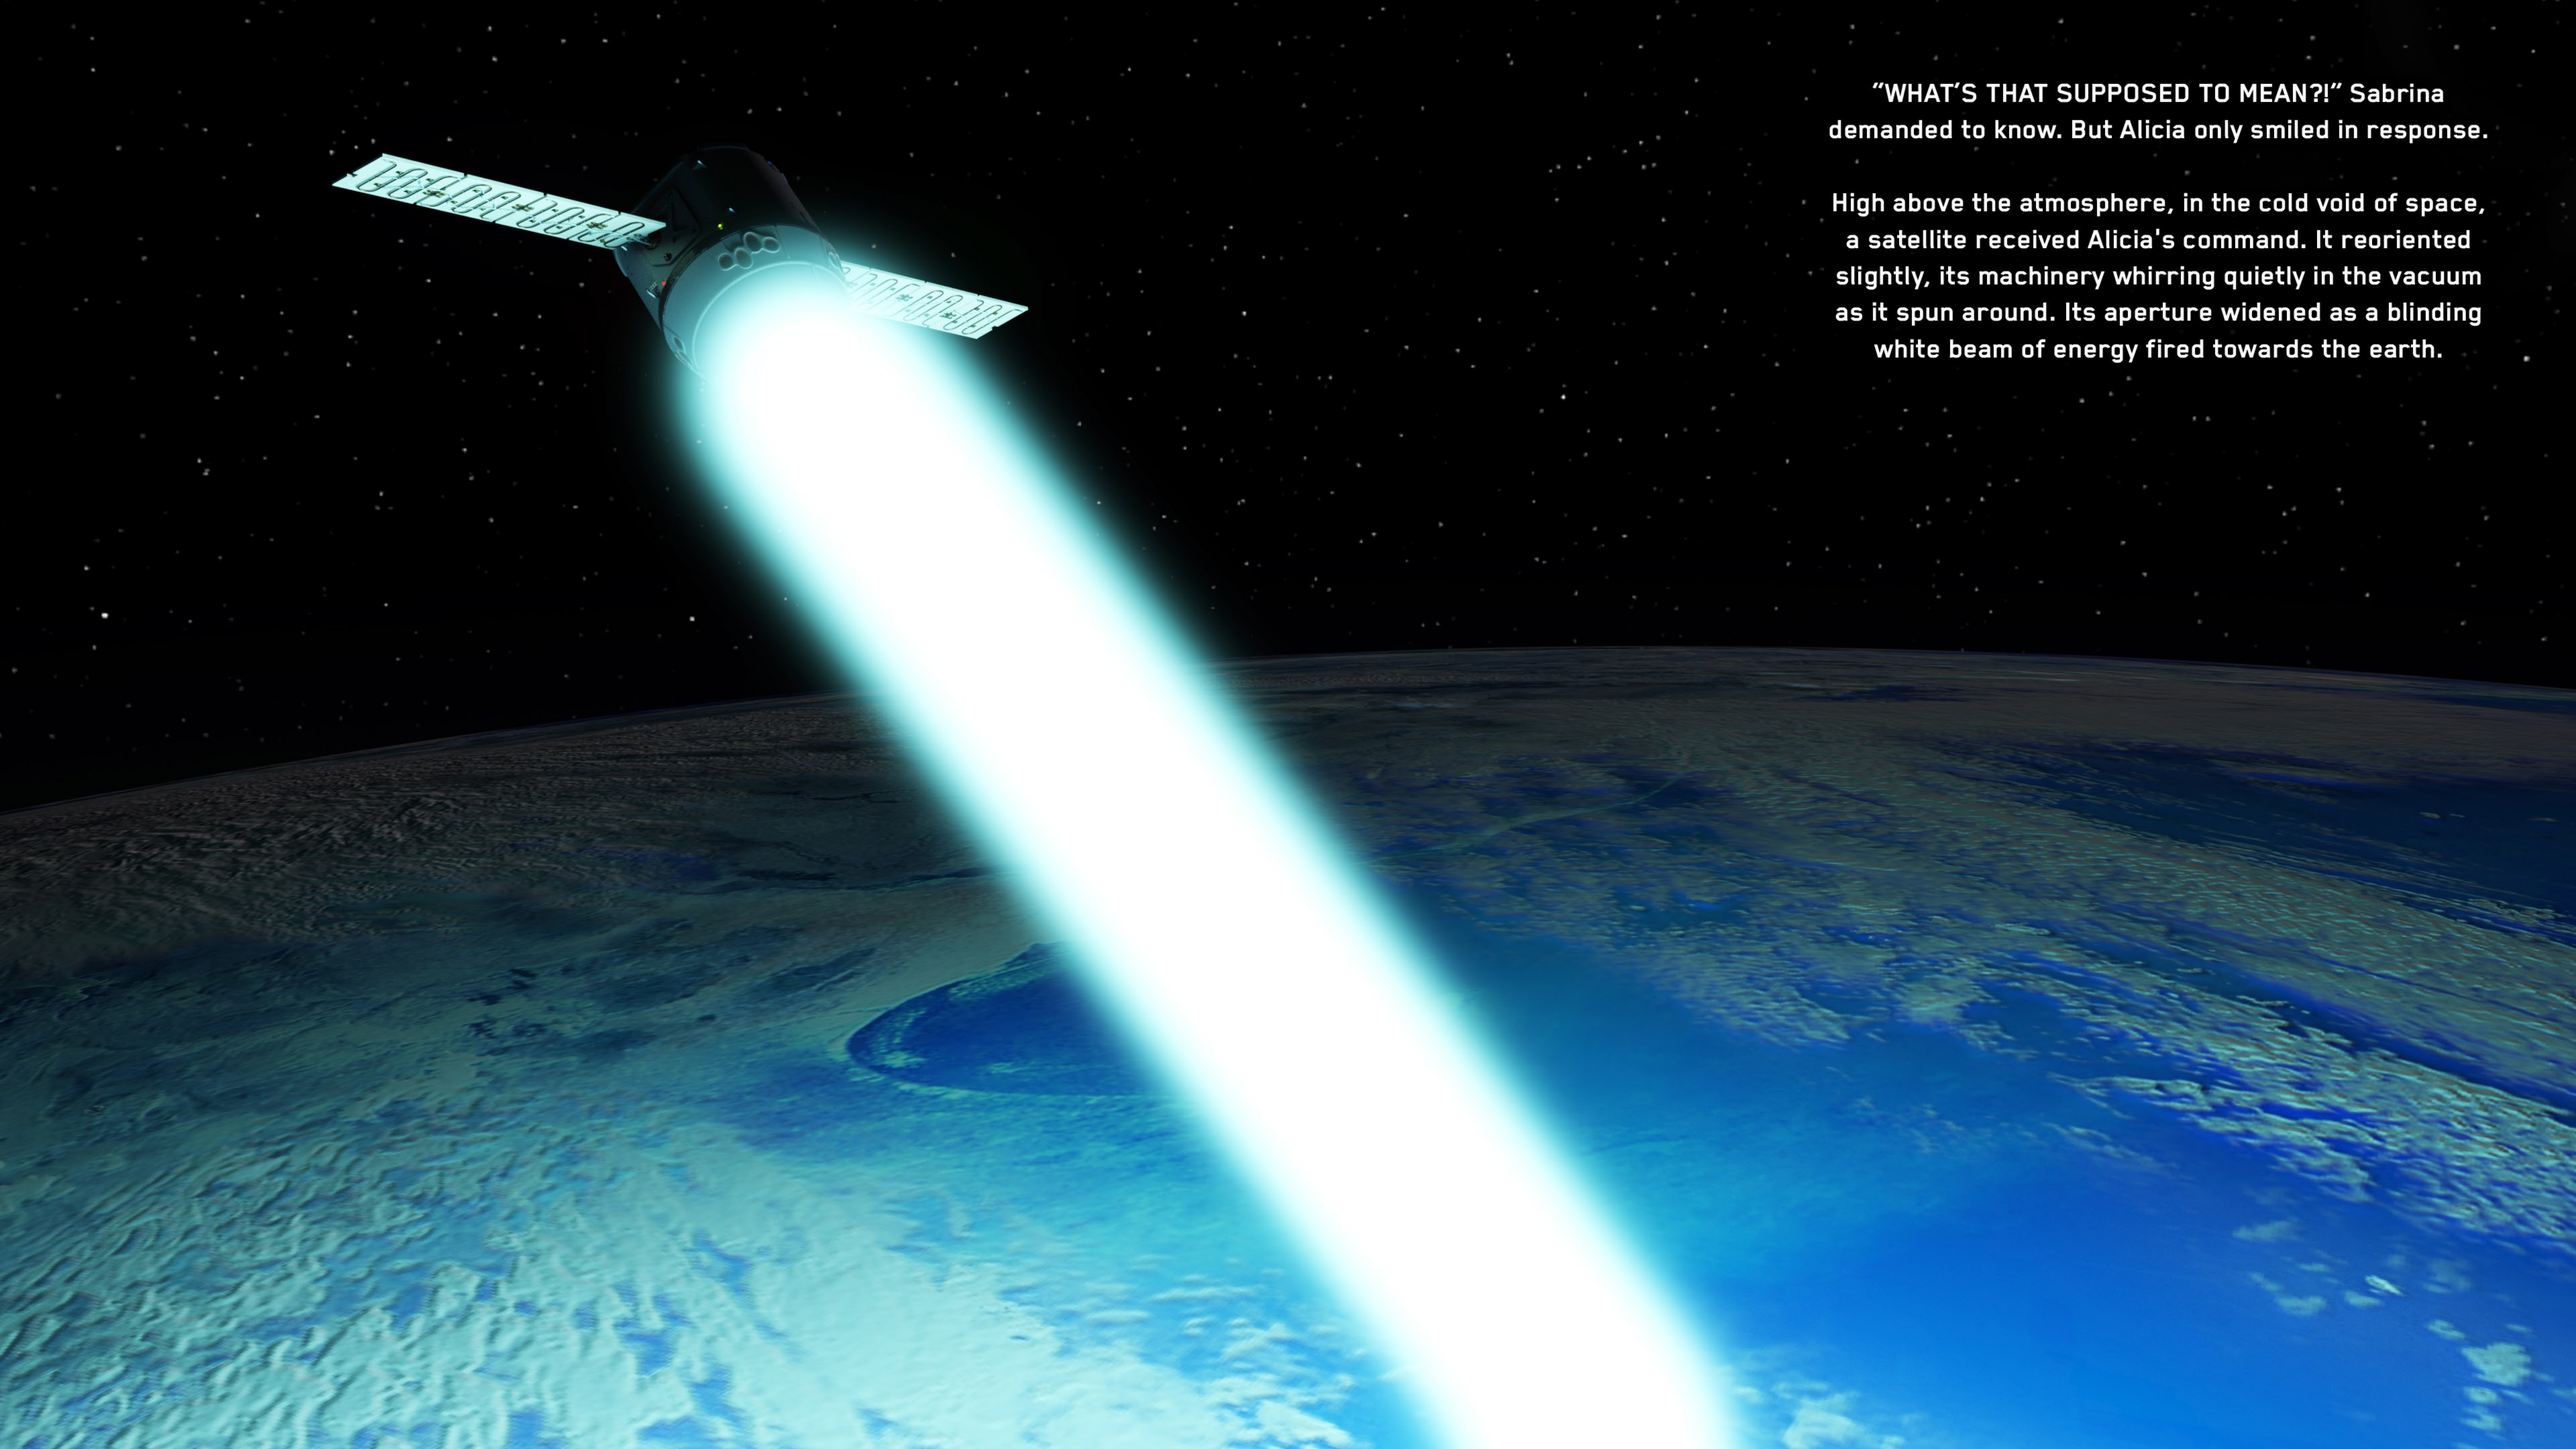

"HEY, ALICIA, IT'S ME AGAIN. SABRINA. I BEAT YOU. NOW IT'S YOUR TURN TO ADMIT DEFEAT." Sabrina said, her voice ringing through Eva's speakers. She pressed her heel more firmly into the back of Alicia's neck to make good and sure she wasn't moving anyway. "NOW GO AHEAD, SAY IT! ADMIT YOU LOST! ADMIT THAT I'M BETTER THAN YOU."

But Alicia's response was a laugh. A strained one in between fits of coughing, but a laugh nonetheless. "You really want to hear those words so badly?" She said, lips curling up into a smile. "Fine. I'll give you what you want... but I can't say it loud enough with this damn heel on my neck."
"FINE." Sabrina said. She lifted her foot off Alicia's neck, letting the woman breathe.

That was just the opening Alicia needed. Wasting no time, she turned on her side and pushed a button on her wrist, activating a small holographic screen. A targeting display showed Eva, a flashing red crosshair hovering over her. She quickly navigated through the options with practiced ease, ordering an ion cannon strike targeted directly at Eva.

"WHAT THE HELL DID YOU DO?" Sabrina demanded, placing her heel onto Alicia's back and driving it deep into the woman's spine.
"I was wrong." She said, her smile widening. "I thought I wanted a proper fight so I could put you in your place, but I'm not interested in that anymore. The gloves are off."

"WHAT'S THAT SUPPOSED TO MEAN?!" Sabrina demanded to know. But Alicia only smiled in response.

High above the atmosphere, in the cold void of space, a satellite received Alicia's command. It reoriented slightly, its machinery whirring quietly in the vacuum as it spun around. Its aperture widened as a blinding white beam of energy fired towards the earth.

The entire city was suddenly engulfed in a blinding white light. Eva turned around, just in time to see the ion laser growing brighter and more intense as it hurtled towards her. “WHAT THE–”

The moment the beam made contact with Eva, it was as though time itself had paused. Then, with a concussive force that seemed to shake the very air, Eva was thrown backward. The beam, unyielding and precise, struck her square in the chest, the point of impact glowing hot and bright. The impact knocked the massive android off her feet, and sent her flying backwards through the air.

A moment later, Eva crashed onto the ground, but this was nothing like a punch from Alicia. Her pain was only beginning as the ion beam remained locked onto her, and the force behind it pushed her through dozens of city blocks with frightening ease. The beam itself was so hot it was igniting everything around her with a colossal burst of flame, and the brightness of it meant she couldn't even see where she was going, much less do something about it.

All the while Alicia stood quietly, watching the fiery spectacle with a smirk of amusement.

"What's wrong? Don't tell me you thought you were the only one with fancy toys." Alicia taunted, her voice dripping with mockery. As the ion cannon dissipated she flicked open her wrist hologram with a flourish. She briefly considered firing the cannon again... before an old favorite caught her eye.

"This next one's a real showstopper," Alicia sneered, her eyes alight with the thrill of battle. “You could say that it’s to die for!”

Far from the city's chaos, Alicia's naval fleet lay in wait in the distant ocean, a silent testament to her reach and power. At her command, the ships sprang to life, missile bays yawning open as they prepared to unleash hell.

With mechanical precision, the fleet launched a barrage of BUK missiles into the sky, each one a harbinger of destruction. They soared with deadly intent, arcing towards Eva, guided by the promise of devastation.

All the while Eva, none the wiser, picked herself up after the assault from the cannon ceased. Battered but unbowed, she attempted to dust herself off, defiance in every movement. “WAS THAT THE BEST YOU HAD?” She demanded to know, satisfied that all of her hardware readouts showed no permanent damage. “BECAUSE THAT WAS NOTHING! IF THAT STUPID LASER COULDN’T GET RID OF ME, THEN NOTHING CAN. WHATEVER YOU THROW AT ME, I CAN TAKE IT!” Sabrina proclaimed, her voice echoing through Eva’s speakers.

"Oh, you'll take whatever I've got." Alicia replied, pointing straight to her adversary. "Whether you want to or not." Her eyes stayed locked on Eva, even as the missiles flew overhead at incredible speeds.

A moment later the missiles found their mark, detonating with earth-shattering force all around Eva. Each explosion rocked the ground itself, adding onto the heat and smoke in the same space. The surrounding blocks were obliterated in an instant. Eva herself didn't even realize what was happening until it was too late, and she'd been consumed by a maelstrom of fire and smoke that engulfed her.

The explosions didn't last long, but she waited all the same. Watched as the fires began to spread, and the smoke from the surrounding areas began to gradually dissipate. Confident in her victory once more, Alicia couldn't help but smirk to herself. "I do like my androids extra crispy." She mused, before standing back up to examine the wreckage.

But to Alicia's surprise, Eva arose from the flames, staggering back to her feet. The flames had melted off her jumpsuit, but her body looked unscathed aside from a few minor scrapes. The giant android dusted herself off, looking angrier than ever.
"WAS THAT ALL? COME ON, ALICIA!" Sabrina shouted through Eva's monitor while dusting herself off. "YOU GOT YOUR FREE HIT IN. ARE YOU GOING TO TRY FIGHTING FAIR NOW?"

"You just don't know when to stay down, do you?" Alicia growled, furious at the remark.

"IS THAT A NO?"

"Shut up!" Alicia spat. "As if I would be afraid of fighting a pathetic little midwit like you, Sabrina! I don't care how many spare bodies you have at your disposal. At the end of the day, you're still just an annoyance! I'm going to end you as quickly as I can." She brought up her wrist-mounted display again, and activated a new weapon.

“WITH WHAT?” Sabrina laughed. “DOZENS OF MISSILES DIDN’T DO MUCH BUT MELT MY CLOTHES! GO AHEAD! DO YOUR WORST! THIS ANDROID’S SKELETON IS MADE FROM A VIRTUALLY INDESTRUCTIBLE TITANIUM-STEEL ALLOY. ITS SKIN IS JUST AS IMPENETRABLE! THROW WHATEVER YOU LIKE AT ME, I’LL STILL BE HERE LAUGHING AT YOU WHEN IT’S DONE.”

"I'm counting on that." Alicia replied coldly. "At the end of the day I'm here to reclaim my stolen property, not obliterate it. The last thing I want to do is destroy those precious nanobots. I'm going to be shutting Eva off for good... just as soon as those machines rev up!"

Scattered around the world, Eva's weather machines activated. Disguised as normal weather stations, they not only tracked the weather, but influenced it as well. Thousands of the little machines dotted the landscape, firing beams of invisible energy high into the sky. Each of them was capable of subtly altering the local climate.
Together, they could impact the climate across much of Asia, letting her influence the output of crops and shift commodity prices in her favor. Normally their impact was diffuse, spread out across an enormous area... But if they were all brought together to focus their efforts in one specific space, the effect would be anything but subtle.

The effect was visible near-immediately. It begin with a few stray wisps of clouds overhead. The clouds quickly grew larger, darker, and after only a few seconds, began to rumble with thunder and lightning.
“Do you see what you’re going up against?!” Alicia declared. “I command the very elements! It’s time for a system overload. Let's see how well you withstand ten million Amps of electricity!"

Alicia held her hand high, conducting the storm clouds like a symphony. “Weather control, converge storm clouds over target. Charge to full power… And strike!”

Not even a second later, a lightning bolt struck Eva, sending incredible amounts of electricity through her body. The shock forced Eva's body to seize up, right as dozens more formed and struck in the same instance afterward. The android's systems were overloaded in an instant as she convulsed wildly in an effort to stand again, but the lightning storm showed no sign of stopping.

"Noooo!" Sabrina screamed, knowing that this could actually prove problematic for the android. But try as she might to regain control, she simply found every part of her enormous body stuck in place. The lightning arced through her so intensely it could be seen through her skin, making short work of her circuits. Her electrical systems were flooded with far more energy than they were ever intended to take, making her body convulse uncontrollably. Yet in spite of it all, she managed to make some headway towards standing on her feet once again.

But Eva wasn't the only one suffering. Thousands of miles away, a spark of electricity shot through the quantum tunnel that connected Sabrina's headset to Eva, zapping the woman with a fraction of the energy that hit the android.

"Owww! What the-" Sabrina began, before the image on her headset went dark. The electronics were fried in an instant, and enough power had coursed through it to kill a normal person. Luckily, Sabrina, with all of her modifications, was able to take it with little more than a bit of discomfort. All the while, Mina watched silently. She bit her nails, wondering what this could mean for her beloved creation.

A moment later, the storm had subsided, just as quickly as it had appeared. The skies were once again clear, and the lightning was just a memory. Yet Eva stood there, perfectly still, frozen in place like a statue. Her once-powerful body was useless now. The once-powerful android was now utterly helpless. She more closely resembled a statue than something that was once living and fighting a moment prior.
Alicia could only smirk at the sight.

Yet even after the assault, Eva wasn't altogether broken. Her mind, powered by the crystal nanobots, was unharmed, and her thoughts raced. The only part of her she could move was her eyes, and she could do nothing except watch helplessly as Alicia approached.

The giantess sauntered over confidently, savoring the moment. Once again, she had emerged victorious. A worthy opponent had fallen. This time for good, as far as she was concerned. Eva was hers once again. Everything was falling into place.
Everything except for the faintest flicker of motion behind those darkened eyes.

“Hmph.” Alicia said, smiling confidently at the android. “You’re not all gone, are you? You can still hear me in there, correct?” Alicia said. “Amazing. That mind of yours truly is a marvel. You know, part of me still wants to save you. Repair your circuits, install some better loyalty safeguards in the software. Make you into a fixer or a surrogate like I originally planned. You could have been great… But nah!”

“Those nanobots are far too valuable to waste on a mere android, when they could be put to better use… On me.” Alicia mused. “With our powers combined, my growth potential should increase exponentially. I’ll be powerful enough to crush entire cities underfoot. Wipe them out in the blink of an eye, just by moving. That sort of power is… intoxicating. I could have found some use for you, sure, but that’s far too great of a possibility to pass up.”
INTEGRATED CIRCUIT

The earth shook as Alicia stomped over to Eva, and grabbed her by the ponytail. Despite the giant woman's incredible bulk, Alicia was able to effortlessly hold her up with just a single hand... and it only grew easier with every passing second.
"It looks like your growth is finally starting to reverse." she said. "A fight with you at this size would have been laughable. You barely come up to my tits now. Soon enough, you'll be small enough to eat!"

As if on cue, Eva's shrinking rapidly accelerated, until both her feet left the ground entirely, leaving Alicia to dangle her by her hair alone. She continued shrinking until she was a fraction of her original height, and quickly shrunk to less than half of the giantess's size. Alicia was amazed at just how quickly it was all happening. She held tight onto Eva's ponytail watching as more and more of her size dwindled away.

It only took a couple of minutes for Eva to shrink, but the wait felt far longer to Alicia. Her patience was thin as her stomach was growling, and she found herself rubbing her belly with anticipation of what was to come. But her eagerness was less about her immediate hunger, and more about what all those extra nanobots would mean for her. She could hardly imagine the overwhelming power they would bring her and hated how long it was taking for the android to become bite-sized so she could claim them for herself.

But with no one to stop her, that moment eventually came. Alicia looked over the android's body, appreciating Mina's craftsmanship. She was truly a marvel of engineering. A great deal of love and lust had been put into making her, and all those absurd curves that Alicia had never even asked for. But more than anything, Alicia took in the sight for a simpler reason. Any great meal deserved to be savored, and Eva would be the greatest meal than Alicia had experienced in her life.

Just blocks away, an intrepid reporter recorded the scene. The end of the fight had been broadcast around the world. Now this, too, was live on the air. To most it was mere spectacle; just another destructive battle between rival trillionaires. But to one person in particular, it had a far deeper impact.

Mina stared at the computer, her eyes welling up with tears. “No… Not Eva…” she said, staring vacantly at the screen. While Daisy helped Sabrina, Mina stood motionless, unable to fully accept what she was seeing. Hoping that something would happen to stop what she knew was coming, and knowing that the only thing that could have stopped it… was Eva herself.
She didn’t want to watch, but she couldn’t take her eyes off the screen.

As soon as Sabrina got back on her feet, Daisy's attention went back to the screen, and then to Mina. "It's too bad what happened to your robot, lady." Daisy said, doing her best to try and make Mina feel better. "We did everything we could, but none of this was supposed to happen, I swear!"

Mina looked back over her shoulders and narrowed her eyes. She wanted to say so many things in response… but held herself back.

"Yeah, well thanks for the fucking condolences." She eventually grumbled, staring back at the amazonian sisters. "I mean, I'd rather have Eva here, but hey, at least you didn't lose her on purpose! You had good intentions, that makes it all fine! Neither of you did anything stupid to make me lose her forever. Is that what you wanted to hear?"

"Yeah, that's what I said, right?" Daisy asked, confused.
"Shut up, I don't care about you, because YOU'RE the one who's responsible for all this!" Mina shouted, thrusting her finger up at Sabrina. "This is YOUR fault! YOU kidnapped us. YOU sent her halfway around the world to go on some stupid rampage. YOU stopped Eva from finishing Alicia off. None of this would have happened if not for you and your... and your stupid ego!"

“Yeah, yeah, fine, you’re right, it’s all my fault,” Sabrina said, rolling her eyes. “You happy now? You got that off your chest? Now get that finger out of my face before I get Daisy to smash your face in.”

"Oh no, she's going to eat her!" Daisy exclaimed, breaking up the argument between the other two. Mina spun around in an instant, horrified to see that Daisy was correct.

The three of them could only watch as Alicia dangled Eva over her mouth. The android had nearly shrunken down to her original size, a tiny fraction of the overwhelming scale she'd enjoyed just minutes earlier. She wasn't just small enough for Alicia to eat now, she was small enough to be swallowed whole, and intact.

Alicia stared hungrily up at the little android. “Technology really is incredible, isn’t it? So much power, in such a small package…” She mused. “I’m sorry, Eva. This won’t be a pleasant experience for you, but it won’t take long for you to be absorbed…”
APARTMENTS

Alicia lowered the android down carefully into her mouth, sliding her curvy body onto her tongue with a careful motion. She wasn't usually so careful with her prey, but Eva was a special case. She'd been rough enough with her during the fight, and she didn't want to risk damaging those precious crystal nanobots and more than necessary. Provided she hadn't already done so just getting to this point.

Alicia tilted her head back, letting Eva slide deeper into her mouth. Her texture was… unique. The taste was similar enough to normal people, but the sturdiness of the body underneath the skin was entirely foreign. Not that it bothered Alicia. Any unpleasantness was outweighed a thousandfold by the sweet taste of victory. She couldn't wait another moment. With a satisfied smile she swallowed, sucking Eva down in a single gulp.

"No! Eva!" Mina cried out, falling to her knees in anguish. "Why did it have to be her..."
"Hey, there's no need to be so melodramatic!" Sabrina complained. "This is hard for me too, okay? I lost my new toy AND got shown up by my rival! Talk about a bad day!"
Her sister's attitude annoyed Daisy, who turned to chastise her. "You know that's not the same thing!" Daisy said. "Eva was just a toy to you, but Mina lost a friend. Come on, say you're sorry!"

Sabrina rolled her eyes and grudgingly apologized. “Ugh, fine. Yeah, yeah, I’m sorry,” Sabrina said. “Is that good enough? Because I’d say we have way bigger concerns than bad manners.”
“Like what?” Daisy asked.
“Like the fact that my biggest enemy is about to get way, way bigger…”

Back in Eastern Europe, Alicia was having terrible indigestion. She grabbed her aching stomach with both hands. Absorbing the nanobots wasn't a pleasant process, and she could feel every fiber of her being struggling to process them.

After a few brief minutes, though, the pain in her gut subsided, replaced by a stranger sensation. Her entire body started to tingle, and her skin burned. She could feel her body transforming, though she wasn't entirely sure how. The nanobots seemed to have a mind of their own, although she wasn't quite sure what they were doing to her... But whatever the nanobots were doing, it was clearly working.

Then, to her surprise, Alicia felt her clothes growing tighter. The reinforced latex that clung tightly to her arms started to rip, splitting apart at the seams. Alicia was no stranger to growing, but usually it only happened when she consciously willed it. She knew one thing for certain already.

This was something different. A power that she couldn't control so easily. Something that responded not just to her thoughts, but to her most basic instincts. And that well of power felt far deeper than she could even imagine...
The growth continued, tearing Alicia's skin-tight latex pants open. This, too, happened without any input. She was alarmed by her lack of control, and yet she couldn't help but wonder what it would feel like to give into it. To let her primal urges take over, and see just how much she could grow if unimpeded...

Alicia focused her energy, concentrating on just how massive she wanted to be. She imagined herself towering over not just people or buildings, but entire cities. An unstoppable titan, a one-woman superpower. A being of incalculable size and strength whose rule could not be questioned. She unleashed the power that was within her, accelerating the growth process... but she didn't just want to be taller. She wanted more.

Alicia had always dismissed plastic surgery. She was happy with her body, she told herself. She had the sort of good looks that were befitting a supermodel… but she wanted more. She didn't just want the slim, attractive body you'd see in fitness magazines. She wanted the kind of body that would be in porn. She could have afforded it at any time, but in truth, she mostly feared what the tabloids would say about her. Such a drastic change would be visible instantly for a woman as high profile as herself… but now? With the power of Eva's crystal nanobots in her blood… she gave in. Size alone wasn't going to cut it. She wanted to be bigger. More massive. More imposing. In every. Possible. Way.

She wanted to be voluptuous, a true goddess. She pictured herself, big and busty, and the latex over her chest started to tear apart faster than the rest of her body. The synthetic fabric could hardly contain her expanding breasts. Cracks spread like spiderwebs through the material, struggling but failing to rein in her massive chest.

Then, all at once, her top gave way. Two huge, heavy breasts burst out, jiggling in the air as they settle down. They were massive now, nearly as big as Eva's had been... Yet still, she wanted more. Her arms, too, grew bigger, growing with muscles bigger and more defined than she'd had before. The spandex on her body tore off, little by little. One by one, the tattered pieces split apart and sloughed off of her.

Soon, she was practically naked, save for her latex corset, and her platform boots. Alicia's body continued expanding, growing bigger by the second. She already towered over the city, but she wanted more. Needed more. She could feel a final burst of energy within her, and she needed to unleash it.

With a primal scream, Alicia released every ounce of the energy that had been building up inside of her. Her body shot up, growing dozens of feet in a matter of seconds. The city around her seemed to shrink, and the buildings became mere playthings compared to her towering body. The pavement cracked under her ever-increasing weight, and the very earth shook from her smallest movement. She let out one final, satisfied moan, savoring her newfound power as thoughts of what she could now do went through her mind.

Back at Sabrina's apartment, the trio watched the scene in stunned silence. They could barely even stand to blink as they watched Alicia grow bigger at a far faster rate than they'd ever seen before. It wasn't until her growth spurt began to subside that Alicia finally breathed a sigh of relief.

"Well... at least she's done growing now." Daisy said, finally breaking the awkward silence. "It could be worse, right? She's not THAT much bigger."

“She’s not.” Sabrina said, pointing at the monitor. “But that’s probably not anywhere near her limit, is it, Mina?”

Mina let out a heavy sigh, and stared despondently at the floor. “No, it’s not. As the number of nanobots increases, the density of the entanglement field comes closer to reaching critical mass. Should that occur, we could see what’s known as a, ‘Logarithmic Growth Cascade.’ Of course, that’s only in theory. It’s never actually been done for obvious reasons, but if she keeps going like this, then-”

“And what does that mean in English?” Daisy interrupts.

Mina sighed. “In theory, once her body fully absorbs the nanobots, she’ll be able to grow big. Really, really big.”

"Not big enough to smash this skyscraper, I hope?" Daisy asked.
"Big enough to flatten the Megacity," Mina replied coldly.

“That’s not great,” Sabrina admitted, her mask of confidence fading. “My drones don’t have any chance of stopping her. There’s only one option left.”

“Another option? Still?” Mina asked, raising an eyebrow suspiciously.

“I… kinda made my own nanobots.” Sabrina explained. “In theory, they should have the power to rival her size, or be even greater. Only… I can’t unlock their full potential. Me and Daisy injected ourselves with some of them, but most of them are still in storage. If you could figure out a way to make them reach their full potential…”

“Then YOU would grow even bigger.” Mina said, shaking her head dismissively. “What makes you think I’d want that? What good would that even do in the grand scheme of things? You’re just another rich asshole. Eva’s dead because of you. You’re no better than Alicia. Why the hell would I want to help you?”

“Well we also might have really pissed Alicia off, so… having something that can stop her might be our only chance at survival.” Sabrina said sheepishly. “Unless you’re looking to die here tonight.”

Back in Eastern Europe, Alicia was still coming to grips with her new body. The growth had stopped, but the transformation hadn't finished yet. Her body was still adjusting to the nanobots. Their true strength had yet to be unlocked.

Strange metallic patterns stretched across her skin like tattoos, a side-effect of Eva's nanobots. She looked the markings over, as the last of the patterns completed. They stretched across her body now, spreading the power of the nanobots. She looked at the shiny markings not with trepidation, but with excitement. They were just another portent of her growing strength.

Alicia looked down at the city below. The buildings looked so small now... So breakable. How had she been this long for this long and hasn't even done anything yet? That needed to change. She needed to see what kind of destruction this new body was capable of.

Mad with power, Alicia raised her foot in the air, high above a row of apartment buildings. Her massive heel was bigger than any of the buildings, casting a shadow across them as it descended. She brought her foot down on the buildings, eliciting a chorus of screams from the terrified people cowering in the apartments below. The sound sent a rush of excitement through her. With no one else to distract on her own power and the helpless throngs of people at her disposal.

With frightening speed her heel came down, pulverizing everything beneath her. All at once, the buildings crumbled under the weight of her heel, but the chaos had just begun. Her stomp shook the ground, causing an earthquake that toppled more buildings. With a single step, she'd unleashed terrifying devastation upon the city, and she was just getting started.

Alicia continued walking across the city, not even bothering to look down. Whatever was in her path would simply be crushed. That was just one of the many privileges that came with being this unbelievably huge. With each step, she demolished half a city block. Buildings collapsed, or burst into fiery explosions beneath her heels. It was more carnage than she'd ever hoped to unleash, and she wasn't even exerting herself yet! The pathetic populace was beneath her notice, little more than insects to her. Insects that cried, and popped when she appeared.

Across the Pacific, Sabrina was getting increasingly irate. “Look at her!” Sabrina shouted, shaking her fist at Mina. “She’s close to a mile high, and you said it yourself, she’s not even done growing yet! It’s only a matter of time until she gets tired of stomping through Sabrinastan and heads over to the Megacity! I’m through asking! You’re going to help me figure out the nanobots, or we’re all dead!”

Mina shook her head, and took a deep breath. She balled her hands into fists as she wanted to say no... but she knew she couldn't. After a pause, she turned and glared back at Sabrina. "Fine. I'll think about it."

“That’s it? You’ll ‘think about it?’” Sabrina shouted, shaking her fist again. “You don’t have time to ‘think about it.’ It won’t take her more than a few hours to walk over here, and that’s at her current size. If we’re going to figure something out, we need to start now!”

Sabrina's yelling didn't get through to Mina, so Daisy tried a different tactic. She knelt down behind Mina, massaging the smaller woman's shoulders with her powerful hands. "Listen, I know you don't like my sister," Daisy said. "But forget about her. What about all the other people in the city? There are over a hundred million people living in the Megacity. If helping Sabrina isn't motivating, then saving them should be. Stop Alicia, and you'll be a hero!"

Mina shook her head. "I would be… but for how long? If Sabrina stops Alicia, then who stops Sabrina? The city would be safe for, what, a half hour before she decides it would be fun to start rampaging herself? Your sister's no better than Alicia. She might even be worse."

“Maybe there’s another way?” Daisy whispered, leaning in closer to Mina’s ear. “Listen, just between you and me, Sabrina doesn’t have to be the one who grows. I’m nothing like my sister. Give me the nanobots, and I’ll protect the city.”
“Oh yeah?” Mina whispered back. “And why should I trust you?”

“I know I act mean, but I’m just putting on a show.” Daisy replied. “Well, it’s not all fake, but I swear I’m not half as mean as either of them. I don’t even like killing people, unless I’m mad at them. I just like breaking a few bones here and there, and it’s only for self-defense purposes, I swear. So what do you say? Tell Sabrina you’ll do the job, and then when you’re ready to inject the nanobots, give them to me instead!”

Mina closed her eyes, and took a minute to consider her options. She knew she couldn't just let Alicia's reign of destruction continue, so doing nothing obviously wasn't an option. But was this really her only option…?
She sighed.
She didn't have a choice.

“Fine, I’ll do it.” Mina said, crossing her arms as she glared at the amazon. “But you’d better hold up your end of the bargain, or I’ll find some way to use those nanobots to turn you inside out.”
“I will,” Daisy replied. “I mean, we will!”

"Okay, fine, I'll do it," Mina said. "But only on the condition that you let me free after this is all over... Plus a generous payment, of course."
"That's it? Fine! Whatever you ask for is yours!" Sabrina whined. "Now what are you waiting for? Get cracking! Hurry up and make me big, before that giant bitch gets even bigger!"

Alicia strode casually across the old town, flattening buildings with every step. She'd shrunken down a bit from her peak size, taking a moment to recharge her nanobots. But after just a few minutes, they were fully charged, and she was ready to grow once again. She looked out over the city, at how far she could see it in every direction. The neighborhoods and city sections. How small they all looked. She took a mental snapshot.

Because she wanted to compare it to her new size after. Before she'd even taken another step, Alicia was nearly back to her full size. She looked down at the city. It looked so small to her, but she wanted it to look even smaller...

Another step, and she was bigger than ever. The tallest buildings in the city were only now barely coming up to her ankles. It was such a rush, knowing that the entire city was staring up at her. Knowing she could erase hundreds of them with hardly a single movement. Her wealth had meant she was better than the vast majority of the populace for a long time, but she now had a stature befitting someone of her importance.

Alicia looked down at a couple of old apartment buildings, and chuckled derisively to herself. “These monstrosities look like they’re from the last century. Buildings like this have always been an eyesore, so I’m here to revoke your property licenses. It’s time for a little demolition!”

Alicia raised her massive heel above one of the old apartment towers. The sole of her heel was nearly as wide as the building itself, and cast a long shadow over the building. As she brought it down, screams rang out from inside, a sound that made Alicia cackle madly to herself. “You’re nothing but insects to me! Scream all you want, it won’t save you!”

Alicia gently pressed down on the building. It was amazing what she could do with even the gentlest touch. How the slightest amount of weight she could muster was enough to make the roof crumble. Soon the top floor collapsed in on itself, raining concrete on the unfortunate people trapped inside with no way out.

Alicia wasn't content with simply torturing the building, however. She wanted more. And so she pressed down with her full weight, instantly smashing through the top several stories like they were made from paper. Floor after floor collapsed under the weight of her massive heel, and soon the entire building crumbled beneath her weight. Screams rang out as hundreds of people tried to find something that would save them, only to be silenced a moment later.

When it was all over, Alicia stared down at the crumbling ruins of the building. “I’m unstoppable now!” She exclaimed, laughing to herself. “Nothing can stand against me. Nothing!” She raised her heel high into the air and stomped down again. The crumbling ruins of the building were utterly obliterated, exploding outwards in an orgy of destruction. She then twisted her heel on what was left behind, grinning as the large chunks of the building were turned to powder and buried in the ground.

But one building wasn't close to enough. Alicia turned her eye to another massive apartment building, this one even bigger than the first. It was practically calling Alicia's name. Begging for her to kill it, and everyone inside. A wicked grin flashed over her face as she swung her foot back, winding up for a powerful kick.

A moment later, Alicia thrust her heel forward. The massive shoe crashed straight into the building like a wrecking ball, demolishing it in an instant. Thousands of tons of rubble rained down on the streets below, terrifying any people doing their best to escape as the air filled with thick smoke.

There was still so much of the downtown area she hadn't crushed yet. So much destruction she could bring about with startlingly little effort. She wanted to destroy it all... but there were other things drawing her attention. She could return here later, at least. With a confident swagger, Alicia ignored the rest of the buildings making up the skyline, and walked off. Any smaller structures in her path would have to suffice for the moment, as the two she'd laid to waste continued burning behind her, causing further destruction as fires spread.

Something else had caught her eye. The area outside of downtown was covered with smaller buildings. Dozens of tiny apartments littered the area, most of which were no more than four or five stories tall. They looked so tiny to her now, like dozens of miniature dollhouses. They weren't even as tall as her heels now, and they crumbled beneath her weight like they were built from loose sand. Every step demolished more buildings, ending dozens if not hundreds of lives. And every one of those lost lives added to Alicia's excitement.

Alicia stopped in her tracks and crouched down, taking a moment to survey the scene. Even from this high up she could hear people far below her screaming. Begging for help that would never come. Some of them were out on the streets, but others were shouting and wailing from inside the buildings. But the longer she stood there... the quieter they became. They realized she was directly above them, scanning her eyes over the streets. They were trying to hide from her... but there was no hiding from a force of nature.

Alicia got down on her hands and knees, and crawled forward. She wasn't trying to demolish the buildings, but she wasn't making any effort to avoid them, either. Her every action would have had exactly that effect regardless of whatever she did. Her hands, her feet, her knees, her shins... Every part of her that made contact with the near-microscopic world at her fingertips had the effect of crushing whatever was beneath it. The power she felt was exhilarating, and it made her want even more.

Alicia raised a hand high into the air. She could feel the sheer mass of her hand. The air whooshed past as thousands of tons of flesh ascended straight into the air. And then she swung it down, slamming it against yet another massive apartment complex.

The impact was like a meteor crashing down onto the earth. An entire city block was obliterated, filling the air with smoke and dust. A building that had housed hundreds had met the same fate as the others she'd run into. Reduced to a crater beneath the weight of her palms, with nothing remaining.

Alicia crawled forward through the city, making a game of it as she flattened one building after the next. Entire neighborhoods were demolished beneath her massive body. Houses, trees and apartments were all flattened under her hands. And all this destruction worked up an appetite in Alicia. A specific craving that could be quenched only by one as rich and powerful as herself.
She wanted people. Dozens of them. Screaming and writhing all at once as they met their ends so she could take the edge off of her hunger.

Alicia ran her hand against the ground, scooping up everything she could. She ripped up building after building from the ground, doing her best to catch everything inside... and everyone. Hundreds of terrified people were trapped in their homes when she did so, and could do little more than scream in fear.
They were right to be terrified.

When Alicia's hand was full, she closed her fingers around her catch, and lifted her hand into the air. She closed her fist as tight as she could without pulverizing everything inside. She wanted to keep the people inside intact, as much as she could manage. She could hear them screaming from inside of her hand, and that only made her more eager to indulge. Saliva pooled inside of her mouth as she listened for a moment longer, letting the fear build up further and further to enhance the experience.

Then, she took action. Alicia raised her hand high above her mouth. She tilted her head back and opened her mouth wide. Finally, she loosened her grip, allowing everything she'd collected to spill out from her fist and inside of her mouth.

Debris and people alike rained down into Alicia's mouth. By the dozens, they fell onto her tongue, smacking and bouncing and splatting against the soft, wet flesh. Some of them missed the mark entirely, tumbling down onto Alicia's vast chest before a lengthy fall that would take them to the ground. But most were destined for the same place: Alicia's hungry stomach. The same acid that had absorbed Eva and granted her this latest increase in scale would do the same to them, tearing them apart in a matter of seconds.

One building wasn't enough. It would never be enough. Not for what she was now. Alicia tore through structure after structure, eating more and more people in a vain effort to fill her stomach. There was no such thing as enough for her now. No amount of people would satisfy her appetite. She devoured, and devoured, carelessly burying more of the city beneath her with every movement.

"Well, so much for Sabrinastan," Sabrina said with a sigh. "I mean, I was planning on destroying most of it anyway, but still..."
While Sabrina watched the chaos unfold, the others were busy working on the nanobots problem. A group of men in hardhats cycled through the room carrying boxes of equipment, while Mina kept her face behind a microscope to analyze the samples she'd been given.

"Tell me you have good news." Sabrina said, unnerved by the news footage. "Tell me they're almost ready?"

"Of course not." Mina said, rolling her eyes. "It hasn't even been an hour. You're asking me to do a month's worth of work in one night... but I have made some progress. Unlocking most of the crystal's power was the easy part. Took no more than half an hour. The problem is making it stable. If I injected these into you as they are you might grow... or you might turn into a puddle of goo. It's going to take some time to make sure that... dammit, what are you guys even doing there?!"

"This idiot managed to break one of your machines on the way here!" Daisy grumbled. "I think it was called an iso scope... Wait, what was it called?"
"An isotope stabilizer." the lead mover corrected. "I'm afraid it's too broken to be repaired, but I can get another one here as soon as tomorrow morning..."

Daisy's face turned red from anger. "Tomorrow morning!? If we don't get these nanobots finished, there won't be a tomorrow morning!" She grabbed the man by the neck, lifting him into the air as she choked him.
In spite of all the chaos, Mina's attention was elsewhere. She looked over at the injector, which was already holding her nanobots, and a thought occurred to her. Without an isotope stabilizer, there was nothing that could be done to further prepare the nanobots. They may have been unstable as they were, but unless someone had another stabilizer lying around this was as good as they would get.

"What do you have to say for yourself, huh?! Do you realize how many lives you've endangered with your idiocy?!" Daisy began to shout, tightening her grip around the man's throat as she did so.

Taking advantage of the chaos, Mina grabbed the device, and prepared the nanobots for injection. She didn't yet know what she wanted to do with them. Injecting the bots could be a death sentence for whoever she used them on, but she was still hesitant to give that kind of power to the murderous sisters. While she mulled over her options, Mina heard more commotion, and glanced back. She watched as Daisy choked the life out of the poor construction worker. She wanted to intervene, but she could only watch.

“Please! It was… An accident… Ugh!”
Daisy slammed the man against the wall, tightening her grip around his neck. “I don’t care if it was an accident!” She taunted. “You’ve disappointed us, and now you’re going to be punished!”

Daisy moved forward, and took her hand off the man's neck. He inhaled deeply, catching his breath. He looked up at Daisy, feeling almost relieved… but he was still pinned between a hard wall and Daisy's soft body.
"P-Please! If you let me go, I'll find a way to get another isotope stabilizer tonight. I don't know how but I'll find a way, I promise. Nobody will be in any danger!"

Daisy smiled a cruel grin. “I’ll tell you what.” She said, “I’m just going to lean in a little bit closer, and a little bit closer. And if you survive, I’ll let you go. How’s that sound?” He tried to answer, but she pushed in further, crushing his ribcage and cutting off his air.

"I'll take that as a yes!" Daisy exclaimed. She thrust her chest forward, crushing him slowly against the wall. Her firm breasts, her powerful abs... They both squeezed his body against the wall with incredible force. She thrust forward again, and he spat up blood.
"No one disrespects the Endicott sisters and lives to tell about it." Daisy taunted. "We'll teach Alicia that lesson soon enough!"

"I hope you're right," Sabrina said, not bothering to look away from the monitor. "Because she's headed this way, and I've got a feeling she'll be the one teaching us a lesson..."

Alicia walked through the shipping yard, not bothering to look at the buildings beneath her. It had taken her only half an hour to walk across the length of Russia. Now, only a thin strip of land separated her from the Pacific. For someone her size, that was more of an inconvenience than an obstacle.

Alicia trudged through the ocean at an unrelenting pace, growing bigger all the while. Soon, she stood several miles tall. The water deepened near the Mariana Trench, but even the hip-deep water could barely slow her down. She walked with determination, as fast as she could muster. This stretch of the journey was proving rather uneventful... until she came across a lonely cargo ship directly in her path.

Alicia smiled at the sight of it. All that walking had worked up a hunger, one that was getting harder and harder to satisfy at her size. With her superhuman eyes, she looked over the ship's workers, who scrambled in terror at the sight of her. There were no more than a few dozen of them, hardly enough to satisfy her on their own... But she wasn't just after the workers alone. She was interested in taking the whole thing for herself.

Alicia hurried her pace, quickly catching up to the vessel. Soon, she towered over them. Her rapid movements caused waves to ripple through the ocean, rocking the boat. The workers ran around like headless chickens, unsure of what to do, as the giantess drew closer. There was no protocol for a situation like this, and it wasn't a military vehicle that had any sort of weaponry to defend themselves with anyway.

A moment later, she'd nearly caught up. One more step, and she'd be on top of them. She slowed her pace, careful not to overturn the little vessel. She didn't want to destroy the boat, or kill the crew... Not before she had her fun with them, anyway.

Once within range and with nowhere else for the doomed little ship to turn, Alicia reached out for the back of the tiny thing. The terrified captain gunned it, pushing the vessel to its limits, but this wasn't a ship made for speed or nimble maneuvers. For as fast as he was able to push it, he had no hope of outrunning the giantess's massive hand, which grabbed hold of the back of the ship.

With the gentlest touch she could muster, Alicia lifted the vessel out from the water and high into the air. She held it upright, turning it around in her hands while looking it over. If she had more time, she would have used it to pleasure herself first... But she had a city to destroy, and all she had time for was a quick snack.

She looked at the ship more closely, licking her chops all the while. She watched as the terrified little crew members rocked around on the boat, struggling to stay on their feet as she tilted it back and forth. Surely there were more of them inside the boat, working under the deck. But if not, the boat itself would have to serve as her meal. The nanobots had enhanced just about every part of her, including her stomach, and now she craved whatever she could stuff down her throat. Steel and glass were just new ingredients for her to sample at this point.

Alicia held the ship in the air, bringing it to her mouth. The steel frame started to buckle under its own weight, and the support beams began to snap and give way. Under another few minutes of pressure, it would have snapped in half, but Alicia wasn't about to give it that long. The ship neared her mouth at ramming speed.

Soon, the bow of the ship was between her lips. The workers onboard could do little except watch, as the sun vanished above them and plunged them into the inky blackness that was the inside of her mouth. Some didn't want to face what was coming and jumped overboard, choosing a quick death over a slow one inside of her stomach. Most remained onboard, consigned to their fate. The captain stayed at the wheel, refusing to leave his post. Like countless captains before, he was going down with the ship...

...And down they went. Alicia slid the entire boat down her throat, deeper into her mouth. Most would have hesitated to swallow something so big, but Alicia was experienced with such things. Her enhanced physical attributes meant she wasn't even close to choking as the lengthy thing slid further and further down her throat, vanishing from the outside world as it did so.

It was incredibly easy for her to get the entire boat inside. Resting on her tongue she stood there for a moment, massaging her throat as she could feel the entire thing begin to heave and creak under the pressure she was placing onto it. It wouldn't survive long now, but she had the choice to put the little thing out of its misery at any time she pleased.

The men inside scrambled around, unsure of what to do. Like Jonah and Pinocchio, they found themselves trapped in a leviathan's hungry jaws. They could do little except watch as her lips slowly closed, trapping them in darkness illuminated only by the ship's own lights.

Then, finally, Alicia swallowed. The massive ship slid easily down her throat, descending towards her stomach. Its inhabitants were consigned to their cruel fate, with no further intervention required.

Once again, Alicia was all alone, in a vast expanse of ocean. She stood there for a moment, feeling the huge thing slide deeper down her throat, and shivered when it vanished behind her chest. All that awaited the ship now and all its tiny inhabitants was a painful end within the depths of her stomach. She wished she could see it happen for herself, and enjoy the sight at her leisure, and though it was possible she hadn't made any sort of arrangements to do so.

With a heavy sigh and sated hunger, there were no more distractions. She had only one thing on her mind: revenge.

"Holy shit, she just ate a container ship!" Sabrina said, looking away from her monitor. "Mina, come on! Please tell me those nanobots are almost ready?"

ALEXIA CONSUMES CARGO SHIP DRAWING CLOSER TO MEGACITY
FROM AROUND THE GLOBE TO YOUR FRONTAL LOBE

"I'll tell you when they're ready." Mina grumbled. "It's a bit more difficult without an isotope stabilizer, but I can manage. There's just a few more steps involved, that's all. You'll get your precious nanobots, and I expect a fat pay day for this, too."

In truth, the nanobots were as ready as they could be, given the circumstances. All Mina had to do was press a single button to prime the injector. She brushed her fingers over it, wondering if she really had it in her to do what she had in mind… but hesitated.

Mina took a breath, cleared her mind, and considered her options. She could give them to one of the Endicott sisters as she'd been ordered, giving a murderous diva an incredible amount of power. Sabrina would be just as bad as Alicia, she was sure of that. But Daisy would likely not be much better, even if her ego wasn't as absurdly big. Alternatively, she could inject them into herself. They could then make her grow giant… but she'd also risk killing herself if they proved to be unstable. None of those options seemed appealing, but time was running out…

The two of them watched the footage, as the giantess drew closer. “Shit, she’s right outside of the megacity!” Sabrina exclaimed.
Mina pressed the button to prime the nanobots. In truth, there were only two options as far as she was concerned. Grow herself, or die. And if she died… well, this wouldn’t be her problem anymore now would it?

While the sisters rushed to the window, Mina stayed resolute. She could feel the earth shaking. She knew she didn't have more than a few minutes before Alicia was there. She steadied her hand, and built up the resolve to do what she needed to do.

“Oh god, she’s so fast!” Sabrina exclaimed. “We’ve got like five minutes, tops!”
“Oh god, what do we do!?” Daisy asked. “Should we run for it? Maybe we should take the helicopter!”

Sabrina stared resolutely out the window, watching as the giantess approached. Alicia towered over the city skyline, and she seemed to grow bigger as she neared. She looked so ominous, lit from below by the city lights.
“No!” Sabrina said. “Fuck that, I’m not running. I’m not going to let that bitch show me up again. I’m going to take a stand!”

Alicia was nearing the building. The giantess stomped through the city, crushing skyscrapers beneath her feet and killing hundreds in the process. With each step the ground shook, reminding the city of her incredible size.
Sabrina turned back, and glared at Mina. “We’re out of fucking time, Mina! I don’t care if you’re still putting the finishing touches on them, we don’t have anymore time to waste! Are you going to inject the fucking nanobots or not?”
“I am.” Mina said coldly. “But not in you.”

“What the hell does that mean? Hey, wait!” Sabrina shouted. She lunged over to Mina to try and stop her, but it was already too late. Mina had pressed the injector against her own neck, and pulled the trigger. She clenched her teeth as pain flooded her system from the sensation of the nanobots entering her body, and braced herself for what was to come.

Then, as quickly as it began, the pain subsided. Mina smiled. She could already feel the power of the nanobots coursing through her. Strange glowing patterns inscribed themselves onto her body, a manifestation of the crystal's power. The workers nearby stared at her, unsure what she was about to do.

“I’m about to show you two who’s in charge,” Mina gloated, staring down the sisters. “You thought you were a big deal? Well get a load of me!”

But Mina's new confidence was shaken just moments later. She felt the power welling up inside of her, until it was overwhelming. It was too much for her body to contain in its current form. She needed a release.
"Oh god, is she growing!?" one of the workers asked frantically. "Not her, too! What do we do?!"

One worker tried to stop Mina by delivering a kick straight to her crotch, but it had no effect save for hurting his foot. Mina barely even registered the attack. She was already eight feet tall, and growing bigger by the second. The restraint around her neck grew tighter, choking her for a moment, before it suddenly snapped off. It was going to take a lot more than a steel band to stop her now.

Soon, Mina towered over everyone else in the room. The workers scrambled, rushing to get out of the apartment before Mina brought it crashing down around them. She thrust her hands back, reveling in her newfound strength. “Nothing can stop me! Nothing!” she shouted, her voice echoing through the room.

But just a moment later, Mina's head and shoulders collided with the steel ceiling beams, reminding her of just how cramped her surroundings really were. Not that she was about to stop growing. Even if she could control it, her best chance of survival was beating Alicia. But first, she had to get out of here. Even if that meant bringing the house down around her.

The sound of squabbling turned Mina's attention back to the Endicott sisters. "Oh god, she's huge! What the hell are we going to do?" Sabrina yelled at Daisy. "Take her out before she grows any bigger!"
"What? But she's huge!" Daisy shouted back. "I've never fought someone bigger than me before! I don't actually know how to win a fair fight!"
"Then what the hell are we going to do?!" Sabrina shouted. "Oh shit, she's looking right at us!"

Mina was truly massive now, and the floor strained beneath her ever-increasing weight. “What’s wrong? Afraid you’ll get a taste of your own medicine?” Mina shouted, her voice echoing through the apartment.
“Come on, let’s get out of here!” Sabrina shouted. She grabbed her sister’s hand and ran off, sprinting away from the growing giantess.

Mina reached for them, but couldn't move well enough to catch them. Too big to stay on her feet, she fell back. A terrified worker recoiled, as the growing giantess fell back towards him. He looked up and screamed, just as her enormous behind was about to crash down on him...

With a dull thud the man was instantly crushed under Mina's behind, but she paid him little mind. She kept her gaze locked on the sisters now trying to escape the scene. "Come back here, you cowards!" Sabrina shouted. "I'll show you what a real giantess can do!" She leaned towards them, carelessly knocking over the table of lab equipment in the process.

After a bit of maneuvering Mina was able to get onto her hands and knees and crawl after the sisters, desperate to catch them. “Do you really think you’re going to get away?” Mina shouted. “Face it, the tables have turned! I’m in charge now!” She shouted, crawling after them and effortlessly crushing another worker under a knee.

But Mina was alarmed by the sound of ripping fabric. She looked back and realized that her pants were splitting open, showing her curvy behind. “Shit, that wasn’t supposed to happen!” Mina exclaimed.

“She’s distracted! Come on, we’re almost there!” Sabrina shouted, sprinting headlong towards the door.
Daisy was looking back, and her eyes suddenly shot open. “Shit, she’s right behind us!” the towering amazon shouted.

“You’re goddamn right I am!” Mina yelled, lurching around the corner, now forced to lie on her belly. “I’m hungry for rich, entitled bitches with nanobot implants. And I think I found just what I was craving right in front of me!” Mina shouted, her voice echoing through the hall.

Mina's growth was accelerating. Her body was rapidly filling the confines of Sabrina's studio penthouse. Moments earlier, Mina's shoes had been shredded by her growing feet. Now those same feet rushed across the floor, hurtling towards the edge of the room. A worker sprinted away, desperate to outrun them.

Mina's body was pushing against the confines of the apartment. The ceiling cracked, raining dust and cinder down on her. The floor strained under her weight, beginning to sag as it struggled to hold her. The reinforced floors had been made with two amazons in mind, but Sabrina was vastly larger than the both of them combined now. She felt the floor start to give way, and she braced herself for the inevitable.

Then, all at once, the floor cracked open. Mina plummeted through the now-open floor, followed quickly by a cascade of furniture. With momentum on her side, the next floor didn't stand a chance. Mina crashed through floor after floor, demolishing Sabrina's building from the top down. And all the while, she was growing bigger by the second.

Outside, the streets were full of people fleeing from the giantess who'd appeared beyond the horizon, huge beyond belief. Alicia's massive form had brought chaos to the megacity, and things only got even more chaotic when Mina burst out of Sabrina's apartment, raining concrete down on the streets below. The massive giantess was falling fast, and the building was doing little to slow her fall.

Yet in spite of it all, Mina landed on her feet. Her feet smashed through the bottom floor of the apartment, and her toes dug into the pavement to steady herself. Half of the skyscraper was demolished now, but she paid little attention to what was behind her, or beneath her. She was on a mission, and that took priority over everything.

Slowly, Mina rose to her feet, shuffling off the last of the debris that covered her and revealing her naked, giant form to the outside world. She stood tall, a giant covered in glowing tattoos, like a cyberpunk goddess, but she had more pressing concerns than her lack of modesty. She looked over the crowd, searching for familiar faces. It should have been easy with their enhanced size and pink hair… but the throngs of people made it difficult to make out any one person's features.

With the sisters nowhere in sight, Mina had no choice but to look for them. She walked carefully down the crowded streets, trying her best not to step on anyone. People were running all around, darting chaotically through the streets. She hovered her foot above the crowd, hesitating for a moment before she brought her foot down.

Mina had stepped down on a car, and recoiled when she felt it crush under her foot. The car had been sitting still in the middle of the street, so she could only hope that it was empty. Surely the driver had abandoned it, after the crowds proved too dense to drive through. That's what she hoped, anyway, because she didn't have time to focus on such questions.

Mina took another step, trying her best not to step on anyone. She scanned the crowds below, hoping to find an empty spot to place her feet, but there were so many people running in every direction it didn't even look possible. She spotted an empty location for a moment and brought her foot down, only to feel something warm and sticky when she settled her weight down. She cringed, thinking that someone must have darted under her foot at the last second. Judging by the sensation, she'd crushed them pretty bad, and there was no coming back from that. "Shit," Mina cursed. "I'm sorry, that was an accident." She felt guilty... but she had bigger problems to worry about.

Mina was standing still, but she could feel the ground shaking. Alicia's footsteps were growing closer. She could hear the chorus of screams in the distance growing louder, and she could see the clouds of dust sweeping through the distant streets. And then, finally, she laid eyes upon the source of all the chaos.

She watched as Alicia rounded the corner, revealing her full, impressive scale. She was more than a mile away, and yet, even now, still looked unbelievably massive. And worse still, she was headed right for Mina. Alicia was moving towards her at incredible speed, flattening entire city blocks with each footstep. Whether Alicia knew it or not, they were on a collision course.
Mina was big, sure. Big enough to rip apart buildings and crush people with hardly any effort... but it wasn't enough. Not by a long shot. Not yet, anyway. At this size, she'd be lucky if Alicia was even able to notice her among the buildings.

Alicia, meanwhile, threw her arms back, reveling in the scene before her. She took another step, flaunting her near-limitless power as the earth itself trembled beneath her feet. She looked over the megacity spread before her in every direction for miles around. The buildings. The densely-packed crowds. The panic and chaos she'd inspired by appearance alone. She was filled with an immense feeling of satisfaction. Here she was, with Sabrina obviously having no counter attack available to her.

"'This city belongs to me, now!" Alicia announced, her confident voice echoing for miles around.
