Knowing Qiqi's personality she certainly wouldn't clean at home normally.

Phew, Lin Tao hasn't had it easy either coming home after a day at work and still having to clean.

*Ka-chunk

Oh no, Qiqi's back and I've got to keep up the Lin Tao act again.

Baby baby, you're home!

I'm back~ I went shopping with Tingting after class and just got back... I'm beat.

Hey, why are you cleaning the house?

Ah, I... noticed it was a bit of a mess.

Whose little pup is so obedient,

I... don't I usually do the cleaning too?
(No way—does Qiqi normally handle all

Ah... sure... (Qiqi really knows how to flirt with guys)

Feeling better?

Mm~ my legs feel so much more relaxed...

But if you're massaging my legs,

PUSH

You're welcome, after all I completed another experiment I've been wanting to do.

I have a mind control experiment that requires long term observation.
Are you sure you can help me carry it out?

Of course doctor I owe you my life and I will assist with any experiment you wish to conduct.

That's wonderful, we've always lacked suitable subjects for the consciousness control study. Now with the two samples you provided, Tao Ting and Zhang Qiqi, this project can finally begin.

Indeed, no time to waste, let's begin.

Doctor, how exactly is this mind control experiment supposed to work?

Through neural implants. During the surgery I already implanted chips in both their brains. Their consciousnesses are now linked to my computer.

The chips can influence their thoughts based on settings I upload and also send their neural signals back to my computer.

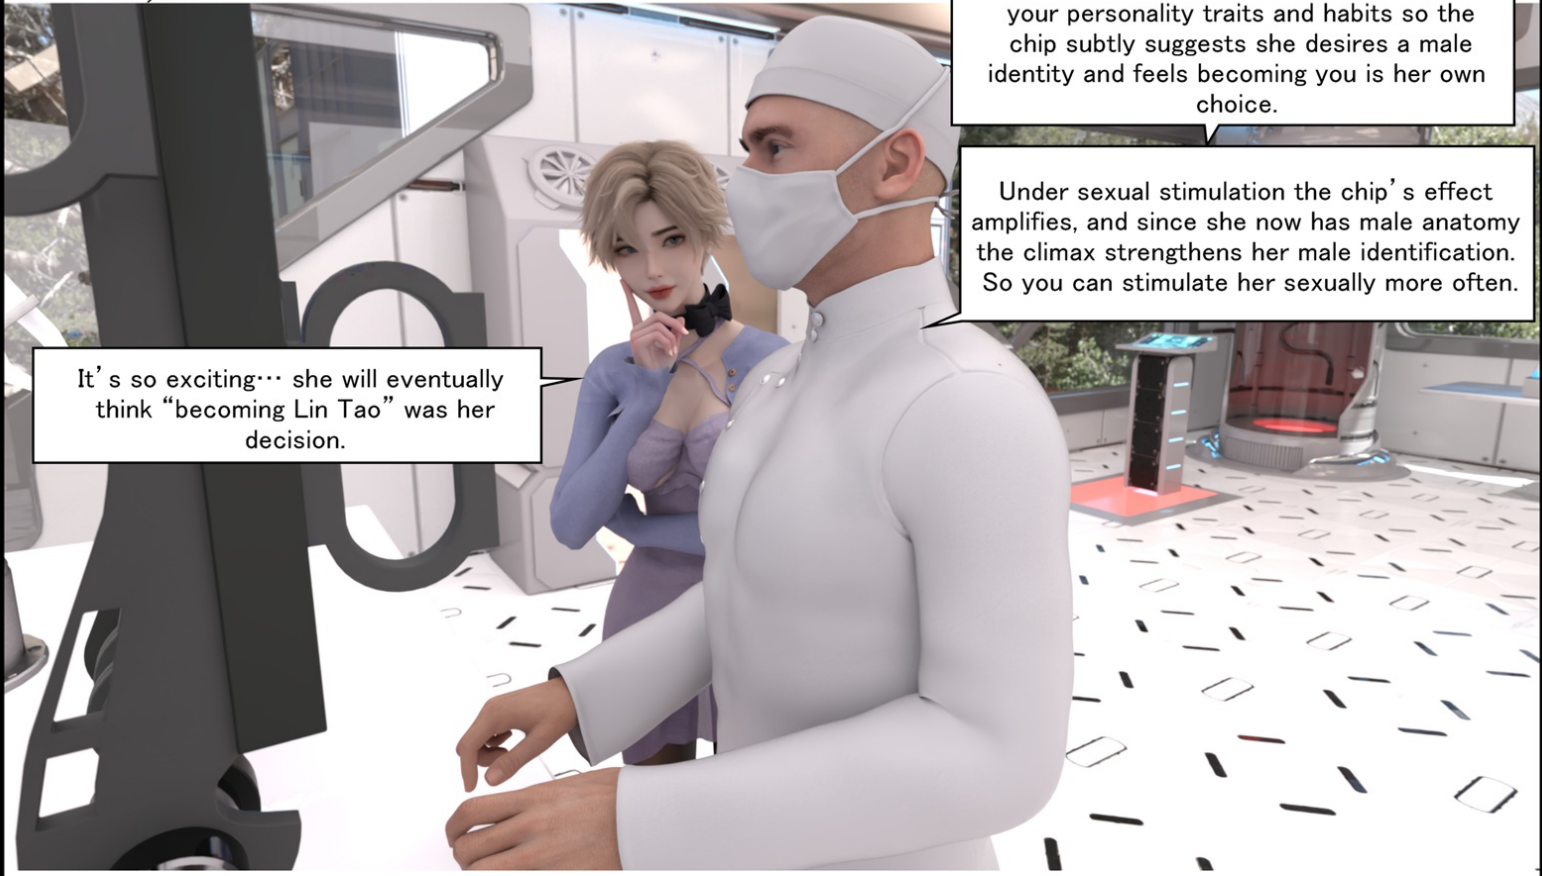

Could I make her believe she is me, living, thinking, and speaking as Lin Tao completely convinced she is him?

In theory it's possible. But self-identity isn't a simple switch. It's a customized neural circuit formed over time.

Forcing a subject to abandon "Zhang Qiqi" and adopt "Lin Tao" abruptly would cause neural collapse or permanent disorientation.

And the chip's current influence is still too weak for a one-click reconstruction.

It's so exciting... she will eventually think "becoming Lin Tao" was her decision.

However we can try a gradual approach. Today we'll activate the chips. I'll upload your personality traits and habits so the chip subtly suggests she desires a male identity and feels becoming you is her own choice.

Under sexual stimulation the chip's effect amplifies, and since she now has male anatomy the climax strengthens her male identification. So you can stimulate her sexually more often.

Yes, and if successful I could control anyone via implanted neural chips.

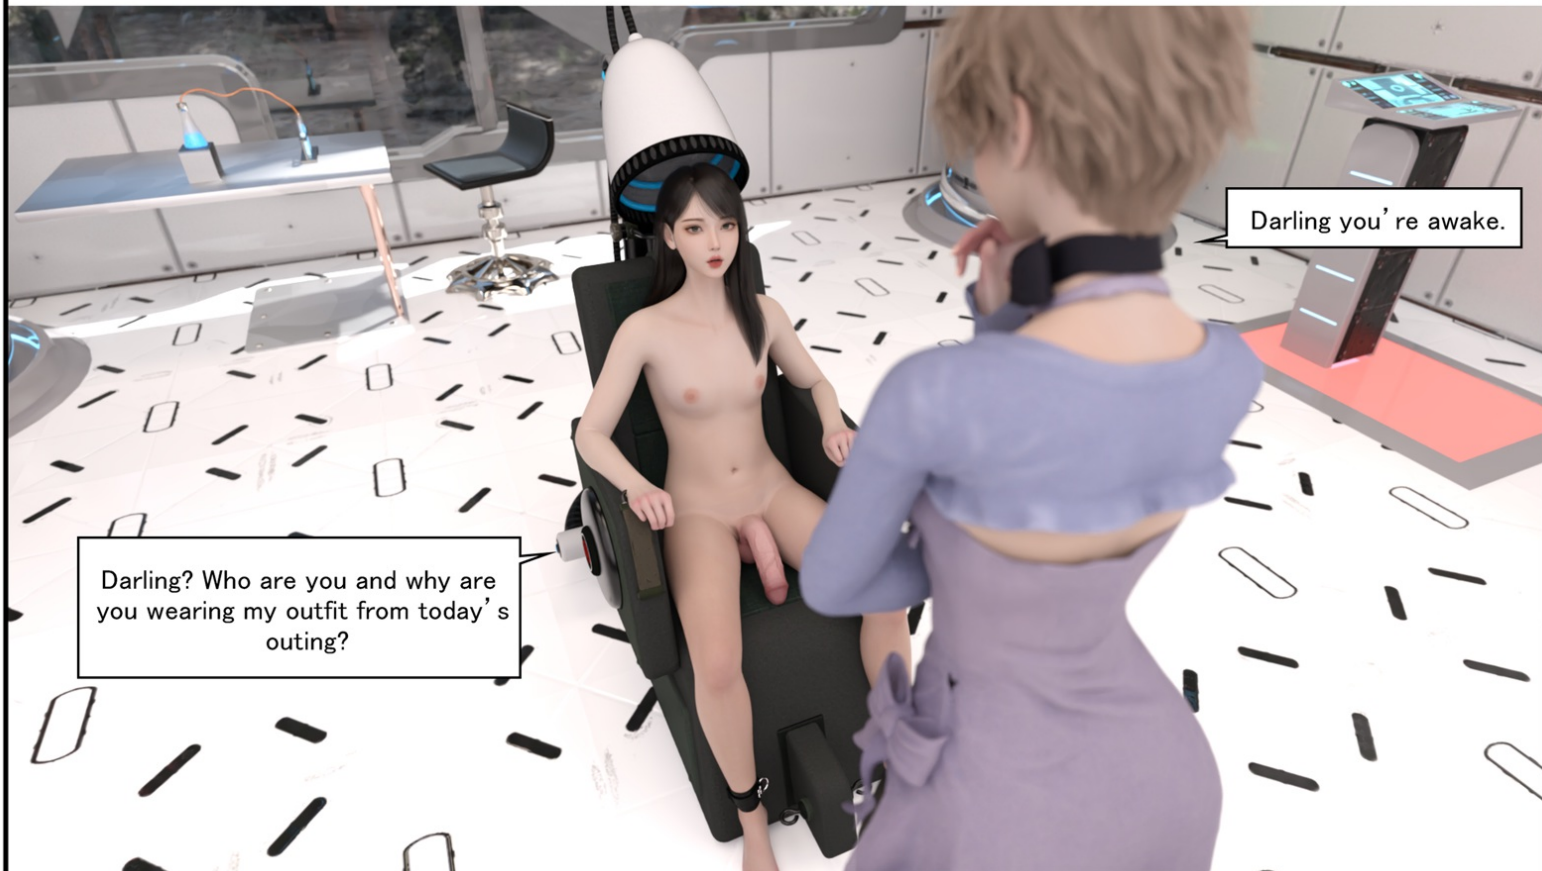

Don't worry doctor with our collaboration we will succeed.

Not long after the head-swap, Tao Ting graduated smoothly from university. Finding a job wasn't easy—her grades weren't outstanding and she kept hitting dead ends in interviews—but just as she fell into doubt, Zhang Qiqi reached out and brought her to that media company she'd mentioned.

A year has passed, and Tao Ting's memories of that "accident" are gradually fading. Yet sometimes, unconsciously—like when she examines her body after a shower—she feels a subtle sense of dissonance.

She can't quite pinpoint where those feelings come from. Perhaps her memory is flawed, or maybe, as the doctor said, such sensations are a normal reaction after surgery. In any case, she's learned not to dwell on it; if she doesn't think about it, it's as if the head-swap never happened.

Beyond that, there's another change even harder to ignore: Qiqi is in the boss's office right now.

President Xu, could you please sign this document for me?

Is that so? Hand it over and let me take a look.

Since graduating with Qiqi and joining this company, she's changed. Now she clicks into the office in high heels, lips painted bright red, her eyes smoldering, skirt hem riding just above her thigh. She's become sultry and provocative, her voice tinged with a husky tone that drives men wild—nothing like the pure, clear-voiced girl from university.

Strictly speaking, you're not really a woman—you're at best a man who's undergone gender-affirming surgery.

What does that mean?

That procedure wasn't a head transplant at all but an organ transplant. After you passed out, I had you taken to the hospital where Qiqi was brought.

The doctors grafted Qiqi's female genitalia and breasts onto your body, Lin Tao. And the organs removed from you were implanted into Qiqi—hence her current form.

You really are slow on the uptake—didn't you notice your physique is different? Your shoulders so broad, your muscles so defined?

Chip protocol activated.

After that night, because Qiqi's prolonged sexual arousal provided the doctors with enough data, they finally perfected a system to control human thought via neural implants. Under the chip's influence, Qiqi forgot her true identity and retained only the belief that she is Lin Tao, along with all his sexual fetishes. To make the illusion complete, the doctor even cosmetically reshaped her into Lin Tao's appearance.

Now she's exactly like the original Lin Tao—still obsessed with his fetishes and constantly longing to live as her best friend Tao Ting, Zhang Qiqi.

Tao Ting, you finally came.

But unlike before, neither this new Tingting nor “Qiqi” believes this is perverse—in fact, they’re eager to help fulfill these fetishes.

Heh heh, I got held up with makeup.
